PREFACE

THE publication of the Aramaic papyri contained in the present work is due to the munificence of Mr. Robert Mond. In editing them I have to thank Mr. Seymour de Ricci and Professor Spiegelberg for the contributions to the work which they have been so good as to send me, and more especially Mr. Cowley, to whose keen sight and unwearied patience we owe the present satisfactory text of the documents, and who also undertook the laborious task of compiling the glossary of words. One of the papyri (A) was purchased by the Bodleian Library while the work was in progress, and there is reason to believe that other papyri from the same find are in existence. Any museum, library, or private person into whose possession they may have passed is earnestly requested to make the fact known. The Plates (with the exception of A, L, and the Ostraka) have been printed from photographs taken by Mr. Howard Carter, late Inspector of the Service of Antiquities in Egypt, who placed the publication of them in my hands.

NOTE

DURING my excavations at Thebes in the spring of 1904, I was informed that some Hebrew papyri had been found near Assuan, and I at once telegraphed that they should be kept for my inspection. On my arrival at Assuan, I acquired them with the intention of presenting them to the British Museum.

Mr. Howard Carter, then Inspector of Antiquities for Upper Egypt, had also seen the papyri, and having learnt that they were in my possession requested me to sell them to the Museum Department at Cairo, as they had no Aramaic papyri in the Cairo Museum, as these, on closer inspection, proved to be.

As this request was virtually a command, I presented the papyri to the Museum authorities, on condition that I should have the right of publication of the same and also of those acquired by Lady William Cecil, the fragmentary papyrus being a portion of one of mine. I must here express my best thanks to Lady William Cecil for her kind acquiescence in my proposal.

Mr. Howard Carter unrolled these papyri in my presence, and kindly undertook for me to superintend their reproduction by photography, which was carried out by Mr. Dittrich, Court Photographer at Cairo, whom I suggested for the work, with great skill and care, of which the plates bear evidence. Mr. Carter also undertook their reproduction in England and entrusted the work to Messrs. Hazell, Watson & Viney, Ltd.

I cannot sufficiently thank Professor Sayce, who had seen my papyri at Thebes, for kindly undertaking to edit them for me, and for interesting Mr. Cowley in the transliteration and translation of the Papyri, a difficult task which, to my gratification, Mr. Cowley accepted, and I trust that my gratification will be shared by all those who shall subsequently study the same.

I must also express my cordial thanks to Mr. Seymour de Ricci for the bibliography which he has prepared, and which he has kindly requested me to publish, and which will be found in Appendix II, and to my friend Professor Spiegelberg for his additional notes.

Further Papyri (Nos. A and L) have been acquired by the Bodleian Library, and I am grateful to the authorities for their permission for the publication of the same in this volume.

INTRODUCTION

ARAMAIC ostraca and fragmentary Aramaic papyri have from time to time been found in the mounds of the old city which stood at the southern end of the island of Elephantiné, opposite Assuan. In the winter of 1901, while I was there, I rescued a more than usually perfect roll of papyrus from the hands of the diggers for sebakh, as well as three ostraca, which were found along with it. As the ostraca were covered with Aramaic writing, it seemed probable that the papyrus also would be written in Aramaic, and such proved to be the case. The papyrus and ostraca are now in the Bodleian Library at Oxford, and have been edited by Mr. A. Cowley in the Proceedings of the Society of Biblical Archaeology for May, June, and November, 1903.

I mentioned their discovery to Professor Maspero, the Director-General of the Service of Antiquities, and urged that the mounds should be carefully guarded, and that excavations should be undertaken on the spot where they were found, in the hope of disinterring more. In the early spring of 1904, accordingly, some excavations were made by the Service of Antiquities, but they were not able to be continued long enough to yield more Aramaic papyri, though fragments of Greek and demotic papyri were discovered in considerable abundance.

Meanwhile, however, rolls of Aramaic papyri were being offered for sale by dealers at Assuan. Different accounts were given to Mr. Howard Carter, then Inspector-General of the Service of Antiquities, and myself as to the place of their discovery. On the one hand we were told that they had been found in the island of Elephantiné, and the actual spot from which they had come was pointed out to us; on the other hand we were assured that they had really been discovered in a wooden box by the workmen employed in making the new road which runs from the railway station at the southern end of Assuan to the English Church and Cataract Hotel on the top of the hill. That this latter was the true story seems to admit of little doubt, though, unfortunately, the papyri themselves do not settle the question. The whole of this locality is covered with the débris of the ancient Syéné, and the new road is due west of an old road that once ran from west to east to the gate of a temple, and on either side of which are three granite bases, with Latin inscriptions, discovered in 1895.

Four of the papyri (37107, 37108, 37109, 37110<sup>1</sup>) were bought by Lady William Cecil, six others (37106, 37110, 37111, 37112, 37113, 37114) by Mr. Robert Mond, who with great generosity gave them up to the Cairo Museum, while Mr. Mond added to his liberality by offering to publish them all in a complete and worthy form at his own expense. When the papyri were unrolled it was found that two of them which had been purchased separately by Lady William Cecil and Mr. Mond (37110) belonged to the same roll.

The find was such as had never been made before. The papyri were in a practically perfect condition; the very strings which had been tied round them were still intact, and the clay seals which fastened the strings to the papyri were unbroken. For the first time the Aramaic scholar has at his disposal a series of connected and fairly lengthy documents, clearly written and but little injured, and furnished with exact dates. A fresh light is thrown by them on the history and character of the Aramaic language as it was spoken and written in the western provinces of the Persian Empire in the fifth century B.C., new words and meanings are added to the Aramaic dictionary, and new forms or idioms to Aramaic grammar, while the origin of Biblical Chaldee is at length explained to us.

Perhaps one of the most remarkable results of the discovery is the proof it affords us that within a century after the death of Jeremiah a colony of Jews had found their way to Assuan, at the southern limit of Egypt, where they had acquired houses and other property and were engaged in trade as bankers or money-lenders (as may be gathered from the Bodleian papyrus L). One of them, we learn, had been a Persian official—'handiz in the citadel' (E 4)<sup>1</sup>, and a chapel or synagogue of Yahu stood by the side of the king's road at Elephantine (B 11, J 6, E 14). The members of the colony seem to have avoided intermarriage with their neighbours, and so to have preserved their nationality almost as jealously as the Jews of a mediaeval ghetto, though the second husband of Mibhtahyah, to whom most of the documents relate, was an Egyptian of the name of As-Hor, son of Teos. As, however, we find from a comparison of two of the deeds (H and J) that he subsequently changed his name to Nathan, we may presume that after his marriage he became a proselyte to the Jewish faith. At the same time it is interesting to note that after, as it would seem, her marriage to the Egyptian architect, Mibhtahyah swears, not by Yahu, but by the Egyptian goddess, Sati (E 5). The Jews of Syéné do not seem to have carried their exclusiveness so far as to refuse all recognition of their neighbours' gods, and one of the witnesses to a deed dated in B.C. 465 (B 17) is Hosea the son of Peti-Khnum, 'the gift of Khnum,' though here again it is possible that we may have to do with a proselyte. At all events there is clear evidence that the Jews at Syéné and Elephantine not only formed a separate and distinct class of the community, marrying in most cases among themselves, but also that they were worshippers of Yahveh and of no other deity. Their names are compounded with that of Yahveh quite as much as the names of the orthodox Jews who returned to Palestine from the Captivity; they swore by the name of Yahu, and a chapel or altar of Yahu stood near the houses of their settlement. They thus form a contrast to their grandfathers a century before, whom Jeremiah had rebuked for burning incense to 'the queen of heaven' and who are expressly stated to have been settled in Pathros or Upper Egypt (Jer. xliv. 1, 15).

In the deeds the Jews are called indifferently 'Jews' and 'Aramaean,' one of the scribes, Me'ozyah the son of Nathan, using both terms (H and J), while persons described as Aramaeans in one document appear as Jews in another; cf. A 2 with B 8, 9 (Qoniyah b. Zadok), and A 2, E 2, G 2, with B 3, C 2, D 2 (Mahseiah b. Yedoniah). This perhaps may have been partly due to the fact that they spoke Aramaic, but the main reason was that the whole population of the western half of the Persian Empire—Egypt and Asia Minor excluded—had come to be officially known as Aramaean. Aramaic, in fact, was here the official language of the government, which was accordingly used by it even in Asia Minor and Egypt themselves. The Jewish scribes accepted and employed the term just as readily as the scribes of any other nationality, evidently regarding their fellow-countrymen as merely a division of the Aramaean family (cp. Deut. xxvi, 5'). They were not citizens in the sense in which the native Egyptians were so. This results from the curious phrase לְבָנָה, found for the first time in these documents. It is always followed by a name which is invariably Persian, except in one instance, where it is Babylonian, and which we may therefore conclude denotes some Persian official. The phrase literally means 'attached to the foot,' 'in the following of,' and so suggests that the persons thus described were in a position similar to that of the clients at Rome. The suggestion is confirmed by our finding the לְבָנָה twice contrasted with the מִרְגֵּשׁ or 'city' (B 10, A 9), there being a ba'al regel as well as a ba'al qiryah or 'citizen.' The alien who settled in Egypt would thus have originally been under the protection of a recognized government official or full citizen, as was the case in the Egypt of the Mamluk period, and would have been represented by him in all public and official matters as by the wakil of to-day. If, however, this was the original meaning of the phrase, for reasons given in the note on C 2, it would seem to have acquired in time another sense, and to have come to signify, not clientship, but residence in a particular quarter of a town. In this way it would have corresponded with the hāra or 'quarter' of to-day. These 'quarters' were until recently enclosed within their own gates, and at the head of each there is still a sheikh who is responsible for the conduct of its inhabitants. In the case of those who were not citizens the sheikh could exercise a sort of consular protection. To have belonged to a לְבָנָה, therefore, may have meant not only that the alien held property in a particular 'quarter,' which had to be named for the purposes of registration and taxation, but also that he had a right to the protection of the representative of the quarter from which it derived its name.

It seems probable that the Egyptian rule of counting legitimacy of birth through the mother had to be followed by the alien. At all events, the sons of As-Hor, the Egyptian architect, are not Egyptians, but Jews, and as such not citizens, but clients and aliens. What renders the point uncertain, however, is that As-Hor must have become a proselyte, since he changed his name to Nathan, and in so doing he may have forfeited his own rights of citizenship.

There was no religious intolerance. The Jewish oath by Yahu was as valid in the courts of law as an oath by Sati. The chapel of Yahu, moreover, stood by the road-side like the chapel of an Egyptian god. And the case of As-Hor shows not only that the Egyptian was willing to marry a Jewess if she were rich enough, but also that no restriction was placed upon his becoming a Jew in religion himself.

The Jews had their own court—'the tribunal of the Hebrews'—which was recognized by the law quite as fully as any of the other courts of the country, Egyptian or Persian. Pi, who was not a Jew, had to appear before it, and it is not a little remarkable that it was here that the Jewess Mibhtalyah swore by the goddess Sati. The court probably included other Semites besides Jews: at all events, the names of the scribe and witnesses are none of them Jewish, but Syrian or Arab. Even in the days of the Assyrian Empire the Semitic countries west of the Euphrates had come to be known as Ebir-nāri, 'Beyond the river,' and it is therefore very possible that their inhabitants were grouped together under the general name of 'Hebrews.'

<sup>1</sup> It is, perhaps, not accidental that when the Jews of Elephantine are described as being of Syene, they are always called 'Arameans,' as if the specifically Jewish colony were confined to Elephantine, while in Syene they were merged in the general body of Western Semites.

INTRODUCTION

By the side of the 'tribunal of the Hebrews' we hear also of a 'tribunal of Napha,' presided over by a Persian official representing the commander of the forces at Syené. Here the process was the ordinary one of judicial investigation and decision, whereas the court of the Hebrews seems to have been satisfied with a simple oath of expurgation on the part of the parties who appeared before it.

The law under which the Jews of Elephantiné lived in common with their neighbours was that of Persia. Apart from 'the tribunal of the Hebrews' there is nothing to show that they were subject to any code of laws of their own or to the local laws of Egypt. The conveyance of property is couched in the technical terms of Babylonian law, from which the law of Western Asia derived its origin, and the deeds which relate to it are drawn up in the form made familiar to us by the legal documents of Babylonia. The penalties for the infringement of a legal obligation went back to the early days of Babylonian history, like the testamentary power possessed by the owner of property. He could will it to whom he would and determine the succession to it after his death. In this respect the woman was on an equal footing with the man; she, too, could hold property and leave it by will as she wished. The deeds relating to the disposition of Mahseiah's property are thus in exact accordance with the law of Babylonia, that is to say, of the Persian Empire.

They therefore throw a welcome light on the legal aspects of divorce, about which the evidence of the Neo-Babylonian documents is still scanty. We learn that the woman had the same right as the man to pronounce a sentence of divorce, but in each case it was only valid if pronounced in a public 'assembly.' That the right should have been given to the woman followed from the fact that she could hold and bequeath property. The penalty for demanding a divorce was the partial loss of the marriage settlement (the nedūnyā of the Mishna, but called the mohar in G 4, 27), if the husband divorced his wife, and the loss of the 'donatio' given by the bridegroom if the wife divorced her husband. The marriage settlement passed to the children of the divorced wife, if it was real estate on which the husband had erected buildings; on the other hand, if the wife was forced to leave her husband without an actual divorce taking place, half the property was left in the husband's hands.

The house property with which the papyri are concerned was in Elephantiné, though some of the deeds were drawn up and witnessed in Syené, and the owners of the property are described as Aramaeans of that city. The house bequeathed to Mibḥāyah was bounded on the west by that of the sailor Espemet, from which it was separated by a street (according to A), on the south by the house of Dargman, on the east by those of Jezaniah and Zechariah, and on the north by that of Qoniyah. The house of Zechariah extended to the north of it, forming a bay or angle with it at the north-east corner. The house of Jezaniah in its turn was bounded on the south by that of Hosea, and on the east by the king's road or street by the side of which was the chapel of Yahu. South of the latter came another house which had been purchased by Mahseiah from a certain Meshullam and was given by him to his daughter Mibḥāyah; its western boundary was the house of Hosea, while on the east it was bounded by the house of Gadol, and on the south by that of the son of Penulyah. The most curious point about the topography of these houses is that the scribe who drew up one of the deeds (B) has described it incorrectly, putting east and west for south and north, and north and south for east and west. That the mistake is on his side is shown by the fact that the description of Mibḥāyah's house elsewhere given (in D) agrees with the topography of J and E, while that given in B is wholly incompatible with it. As the Bodleian papyrus (L) and ostraca, to which I have already referred, were found in the north-west portion of the rubbish-mounds of the old city of Elephantine, immediately westward of the sites of the temple of Amon-hotep III and the citadel, we may conclude that the Jewish quarter was situated in this spot. Professor Maspero tells me that thus far nothing distinctively Jewish has to his knowledge been discovered in the mounds except a stamp with the seven-branched candlestick.

The mixture of names in the deeds is of considerable interest; like the legal documents of the Murasu firm at Nippur in Babylonia they show to what a great extent the nationalities of the oriental world were mingled together in the Persian epoch. Besides the Jewish names, which bear a strikingly exilic or post-exilic stamp, we have, as might be expected, Persian names like Widrang and Satibarzanes, Babylonian names like Sin-kasid and Hadad-nûri, Arabian names like 'Odnahar and Dûma, Egyptian names like Petisis and As-Hor, as well as strange names like Harshin. In some cases the father and son bear names belonging to different languages, which point to racial intermarriage. Thus Satibarzanes is the son of Athar-ili, a name which is itself Assyrianized Aramaean, and Bagdates—the Persian Baga-data—is the son of the Babylonian Nabu-kuduri-[uzur]. The Babylonians, indeed, seem to have been as numerous at Syêne as the Persians, and like them could hold official posts. One of the scribes who writes in Aramaic is the Babylonian Nabu-tukulti, the son of Nabu-zira-ibni, and a witness is specifically described as 'the Babylonian.'

That yet other nationalities were represented is made clear by some of the names which, like Barbati 'the Berber,' and Harshin, are not easy to explain. The Jewish names are all characteristic of the period, and resemble those found in the cuneiform records of the Murasu firm. They prove that there was as yet no superstitious reluctance among the Jewish community to pronounce the name of the national God or to incorporate it into their own names.

The same fact is witnessed by the oath taken in the name of Yahu (B 6), exactly as it was taken in the name of the Egyptian goddess Sati in the court of the Hebrews by the Jewess Mibhtahyah (F 5). No distinction is made between the two deities; Yahu is the god of the Hebrews just as Sati is the goddess of the Egyptians of Syêne or 'Athar the goddess of the Aramaeans. The existence of the chapel and altar of Yahu by the public highway points also in the same direction. The word used to denote it is that which is otherwise used to represent a heathen altar, and it is plain that no one as yet saw any harm in speaking about the altar of Yahu as he would have done about the altar of Khnum. That there should have been an altar and chapel at all is a remarkable fact. The Jews of Egypt at any rate did not consider that the altar of Yahveh could not stand anywhere else than at Jerusalem, and that outside Jerusalem synagogues only were permissible for public worship. We can now understand the feeling that led to the foundation of the temple of Onias near Heliopolis; the Egyptian Jew did not share the belief of his post-exilic brother in Palestine in regard to the worship of Yahveh, and he could claim that he had the prophet Isaiah on his side (Isa. xix. 19).

As for chronology, the Aramaean papyri of Assuan possess a unique importance owing to the duplicate dates which they contain. Not only can the exact year in which each was written be ascertained, but thanks to the double dating in Egyptian and Syrian months the exact date of the month ought also to be recoverable. I am, however, not sufficiently a mathematician to undertake the task of calculating the chronological equivalences which have thus been preserved to us, and Mahler's tables do not harmonize with them. I must therefore content myself with drawing attention to an equivalence which relates, not to the month, but to the year: one deed (B) was drawn up in the twentieth year of Xerxes I, which, it is added, was also the accession year of Artaxerxes I. The documents, it will be seen, cover a large part of the fifth century B.C., extending from B.C. 471, nine years only after the battle of Salamis, to B.C. 411. Twelve years later Egypt recovered its independence. And it was little more than a century before the first deed was drawn up that the grandfathers or great-grandfathers of the parties mentioned in it had fled into Egypt with Jeremiah.

INTRODUCTION

The transcription of the Jewish proper names is that made familiar to English readers by the Authorized Version of the Old Testament.

A. H. SAYCE.

LANGUAGE OF THE TEXTS

THE following general remarks on the language of the documents are put together here as a convenient summary and to avoid repetition in the notes. The references will be found in the Glossary.

The WRITING, as may be seen from the facsimiles, is the same as that of the papyri edited in the C/S. It has progressed from the form found in the lapidary inscriptions towards that of the ordinary 'square' character, but there are as yet no distinctive final forms. The נ, נ, נ always have the same (quasi-final) shape and the ב is also invariable. The ל practically always has the final shape, but there is a tendency in some hands to bend up the tail in the middle of words. The development is towards an essentially written, rather than a monumental, character, as shown by the curved lines (which are straight in inscriptions), by an almost cursive tendency sometimes to run the letters together, and by the occasional use of ligatures, e.g. מְ in E 17, 18 and perhaps on M. The letters ר and ר are practically indistinguishable from one another, and, when carelessly written, from ל. The difference seems to be that ר is rather smaller than ל, has the downstroke more bent, and rather more projection at the top. Of ר the down-stroke is straighter and longer, but the distinction is by no means consistently observed, with the result that there is the greatest uncertainty with regard to unfamiliar words. Occasionally too ו and ו are hardly distinguishable.

The hand is clearly a professional, scribal hand, not differing materially in the various documents throughout the sixty years which they cover, though of course some scribes are more skilful than others; cf. e.g. A and C with J. The case is quite different with the signatures, which constitute one of the difficulties of decipherment. Witnesses usually (but not in L) write their names themselves, and, as might be expected, often very unskillfully. As there is seldom any opportunity of comparison, the reading of these signatures is sometimes very doubtful, especially as the names may be either of Aramaic, Persian, Egyptian, Babylonian, or some other origin. Several of the witnesses use distinctly older forms of the letters; cf. e.g. אַרְנָנָה A 18, וְרָנָה C 18. The characters generally are, allowing for difference of date, the same as those found in the Aramaic parts of Assyrian and Babylonian contracts. They are in fact just what a trained scribe would use in Babylonia and are those which tradition says were introduced by Ezra on his return to Jerusalem. The transition to the later square character was a mere matter of development, which can be traced in some of the later papyri edited in the C/S.

The words are as a rule carefully divided, but in some cases are written together, as e.g. בָּרְלִי בָּרְאַלִי, where the ל is no doubt regarded as a mere suffix like the • in בָּרִי. See also the note on פֶּרֶת in G 35. Punctuation is marked in some at least of the texts (e.g. in C, D) by extra spacing, which is a help to understanding the construction of the sentences. There is also a mark \ or † which seems to serve the same purpose, as in L 4, or is a sign of abbreviation as perhaps in וְ, L 2, 3, or calls attention to something unusual, as in וְ, K 4, 5, like the Masoretic paseq as Professor Sayce suggests. A similar mark is also found at the end of the numerals, and causes some uncertainty because we do not know whether it is to be counted as a unit or not. The signs for 10 (→) and 20 (↔) are well known. The latter is evidently a doubling of the former, one → being written above the other. The units are written in groups of three, but the last is generally (and the last two sometimes) written slanting (\ or †). In one text (K 1) where the number of the year is given twice, it is in the first instance clearly וְ-יָמִין, but in the second place as clearly וְ-יָמִין where there seems to be an evident intention to differentiate the last stroke from the rest. The same is probably true in J 1, where see note. In K 1 the number ought to be the same in both cases, and, unless we suppose a scribal error there and possibly in J 1, we must regard the final slanting stroke as not part of the number, but either as marking the end of the numeral or as joining it to what follows. It is made very much like a † (hence in PSBA, the reading וְ for וְ in L 2, 3) and perhaps was originally, if not in these texts, for וְ the relative or mark of the genitive. This would certainly suit K 1, where the phrases would then be equivalent to בְּנֵי לְשָׁבָת וְלְשָׁבָת, because the numeral is joined to the next word, but וְ-יָמִין because not so joined; וְ-יָמִין וְ-יָמִין וְ-יָמִין, and וְ-יָמִין וְ-יָמִין, because joined. If so, the sign must have lost this sense and become merely a mark to close the numeral; cf. G, where it is found at the end of numerals following their nouns. In B 1, D 1 it seems to be counted as a unit, but not in H 1. We have thought best where there is uncertainty to give both alternatives in the translation.

CONSONANTAL CHANGES.

We find בְּנֵי and בְּנֵי, where the י must be a consonant (Egyptian Pj-fw-nwN') and similar in sound to soft ئ. The ئ also interchanges with the soft ة in بְּנֵה and for بְּנֵה. (In the ordinary Aram. بَنِي it corresponds to the Hebrew hard ئ.)

Both ئ and ئ occur, for Heb. בְּנֵי (ئى), even in the same text (B 15, 16), as in the well-known passage of Jeremiah (x. 11). So also ئ (as well as ئ) for Heb. بְּנֵי, and ئ for Heb. بְּנֵי, a form not hitherto found, but in agreement with the same alternation of ئ for ئ (where the Hebrew is ئ and the Arabic ئ) found in ئ itself in the Aramaic of Nineveh and Babylonia, Zingirli and in Mandaic, and also, especially in the Zingirli inscriptions and in Mandaic, in other words: see Cooke, NSI, pp. 166, 185, 192, and Driver, Introd., ed. 6, p. 255 note.

ئ seems to have become little stronger than ئ, since we find بَرَأ for بְּרָא for أَسْتَدَّه; بَرَأ for بְּרָא for أَسْتَدَّه; دَنَّا for دَنَّا for دَنَّا. (In بَلَّ أَبَلَّ أَبَلَّ the shorter forms are to be referred to the stem بَلَّ; see note on E 8.)

In M<sup>b</sup> 4, 5, M. Clermont-Ganneau inclines to identify דָתִי with דָתִי, but as the latter word is found in A it is unlikely that this is a case of ד for נ.

The mater lectionis is sometimes omitted, e.g. twice נְגַדֵּל (unless it is a mere mistake) for נְגַדֵּל; אֲמֹר for אֲמֹר; cf. pr<sup>a</sup> and pr<sup>b</sup>.

Abbreviations are נ for נְגַדֵּל; שׁ for שְׁמַנִּים; ר (or נ) for some coin unknown. In פְּרִי for פְּרִי the dropping of the termination may be due to religious reasons, as also in פְּתִיכָה for פְּתִיכָה.

NOUNS.

The forms בָּתָה daughter, בָּתָה sister occur frequently for the later Aramaic בָּתָה, בָּתָה.

The formative נ is found in פָּלָט, פָּלָט and perhaps נְסָן.

The shortened form נִי is found for בָּתָה. But בָּתִי, בָּתִי, בָּתִי are the original indefinite forms. The word פָּתָח also has the feminine form פָּתָחָה, which alone is found in Targum (פָּתָחָה) and Syr. (פָּתָחָה).

The emphatic state ends in נ, both in singular and plural, as בָּתָה נִשְׁתָּחָא, בָּתָה נִשְׁתָּחָא. The only exception is the feminine נִשְׁתָּחָה.

The plural masculine ends in נ (not נ) as פָּתָח and no doubt פָּתָח (as in BA., Targ., Syr.) not פָּתָח. In פָּתָח, פָּתָח, &c., the נ belongs to the stem: פָּתָח G 8 is probably dual. The constr. st. ends in נ; as בָּתִי. The only undoubted forms of the plural feminine are in the constr. state, as בָּתָה, בָּתָה, בָּתָה.

Numerals being usually expressed by signs, only the following words occur: חָרָב, fem. חָרָב, חָרָב; יְהוָה יְהוָה (יְהוָה), 10; שְׁנָנָה, 20.

נִי and נִי are verbal suffixes, and נִי (נִי), נִי (fem.), נִי are used with nouns. In the future tense the נִי (energeticum?) is regularly inserted (as in BA. and Targum, cf. Dalman, § 76), as נִי but נִי; נִי but נִי; נִי but נִי. The heavy suffix נִי is found once with a future without the נִי, in יִשְׁכַּב J 15 (but גַּעֲנָבָם J 10). The suffix of the first person is only found with a verb once in נִי. In יִשְׁכַּבָּם, רִשְׁכַּבָּם, the נִי of course belongs to the termination of the verb.

The preposition נִי takes a נִי before suffixes as נִי, נִי, but נִי is composed of נִי with suffix.

The suffix of the 1st pers. pl. with nouns is distinguished from the termination of the masc. plur. by the preceding נִי, as נִי (our sons), נִי, cf. עַלְיָן (against us), בִּין.

The 3rd sing. masc. has the form נִי when joined to a plural noun, as תְּחֻטָּבָה, and once נִי, but נִי is masc. singular = נִי.

The possessive suffix, however, is often supplanted by ל or לָי with the suffix, as ברתי for בר-הַלְּיָה, where the combination is so close that the two words are sometimes written as one; בֵּיקָד or בֵּיקָדָי. Once וְלֹפִי.

The separate pronoun may be used to emphasize the suffix, as הִנֵּה רָא אַתָּה (cf. B 8, 12; Dan. vii. 15, Ezr. vii. 21).

வன் is properly the separate form, nominative, but it is also used as the object of a verb (as in BA), and in two places (G 35, K 13) it is doubtful whether it is joined to the verb or not.

Demonstratives. The root is -ti as in Babylonia, not -ta as in BA (but see below).

The distinction between hic and iste (this near me, and this near you) was no doubt originally observed, but already in these documents it is sometimes lost.

The forms are :-

sing. $\tau\alpha$	hic	plur. $\tau\alpha\tau\alpha$	hi
$\tau$	iste	$\tau\alpha\tau\alpha$	speaking to a man
$\tau\alpha$		$\tau\alpha\tau\alpha$	woman $i$

Forms with רָ occur twice, but only in one text: דְּנָא F6, דְּבִי F9, in speaking to a woman.

‘p: (not otherwise known) is apparently strengthened from p by attaching the demonstrative suffix τ-; cf. Wright, Comp. Gr., p. 110.

There is also a peculiar strengthened form est, apparently meaning that very or the same. See note on C2.

מְנֻהָה is used as in BA. = Heb. מִנְהָה, but with a rather more pronominal force, this is, these are.

<sup>17</sup> It is also used as a demonstrative apparently in וְאֵת כָּל־בָּנָה C 12.

The relative is "it", as in the Aramaic of Nineveh, Babylonia, Zingirli, Nerab, Cilicia and Téma. In one text (E 7, 11, 16) ת occurs in the combination תְּלִי.

The indefinite pronoun is p followed by n, but n alone is frequently used, as subject of the verb, in this sense.

The forms בַּל (beside בְּלָה) and בַּכְל (beside בְּכָל) are no doubt to be referred as scriptio defectiva to the root בְּל, which is used in BA. (fut. בְּלִי) as well as בְּלָה.

From פָּל there is a Hanphel 1st and 2nd pers. sing. perfect הִנְפַּל (as in BA.), where the ה is now explained as compensatory.

In verbs לִי (לֵא, לִי) the weak 3rd radical is sometimes not written: (a) before terminations, as for חִזְרִית, חִזְרִית; (b) before suffixes, as נְרִיב for נְרִיב; רְשִׁבָּם for רְשִׁבָּם. This happens in the future even with ה energeticum, as נְרִיבָּק, נְרִיבָּק (but חִזְרִיבָּק).

The future of הוּה is always הוֹוּ (plur. הוֹוּ in Str.). The BA. forms לְהֹוּ, לְהֹוּ never occur.

A. Niphil form apparently occurs in נְבָק (a Hebraism), and perhaps in נְבָק (Babylonian?) of which, however, the meaning is unknown. Another Hebraism is the infinitive לְמַרְכָּב.

The forms שְׁלָטָם, שְׁלָטָק, שְׁלָטָק are no doubt adjectival, as BA. שְׁלָטָשׁ, קְרִים, not participial.

PARTICLES.

בָּם, in the midst (absolutely), within, is common and in these texts always without any dependent word or suffix, in the adverbial sense of here = in it, &c. It occurs also in RÉS. 246 (see below, p. 78), probably in the same sense, though, as the text is incomplete, we cannot be sure that it is not used in the ordinary way as a preposition, as it seems to be in Str. B 2. It may now be restored in CIS. 146 A, 5, and 153 A, 2, in the adverbial sense.

עֲלָם is similarly used without a dependent word, for thereon, concerning it.

On מְן and מְנוּ where, see the note on G 25.

כְּמֶן, not found elsewhere, is a stronger form of מְן. The כְּ may be compared with that in כְּמָה; see above and note on A 8. The meaning is always assuredly.

מְיֻ, if, introduces conditional sentences, as in BA. It may be used either with the future followed by the future, as ... מְיֻ... אָרַשְׁךָ... אָתָּה... if I (shall) sue you, I will give, C 13-15; or with a perfect followed by a future, as מְיֻ... אָתָּה בְּלֹא תִּשְׁאַלְכָּךְ... מְיֻ... if I (shall) have prevented you, I will give, A 13; or with a future followed by a noun-clause, as מְיֻ... אָתָּה שְׁלָמָה תִּהְשְׁאַלְכָּךְ... מְיֻ... if she (shall) divorce you, she has no rights, C 8, 9.

לְמַן is only used in the allied senses of but (sed) and except (praeter), as also in BA. (Dan. ii. 11, &c.); in the former sense even without a preceding negative.

SYNTAX.

Nouns. The genitive relation is most often expressed by וְ (BA. וְ), the first noun being then in the emphatic state as וְאַתָּה וְיְהִי J 6. The redundant possessive is also used as אַתָּה וְעַלְפָתָא G 18, בְּתָה וְאַתָּה K 13.

The genitive relation is also expressed by means of the constr. state, generally with common words, where the relation is a close and natural one, as בְּתָה וְגִבְرִית A 5, בְּתָה וְמִתְחַדְּשָׂה A 9, בְּתָה וְקִירָה D 36. So always in stating the year of the king, as שָׁנָת אַלְמָתָה III III C 1, not לְאַלְמָתָה as it would be in BA., but יְמִינָה וְלְמִינָה D 1; see also above on the numerals, p. 15.

Pronouns. On the use of וְ, וְיְלִי with suffixes to express the possessive, see above, p. 17.

The demonstrative use of the suffix as in בְּהַלְלָא in that night (Dan. v. 30) does not seem to occur.

Verbs. The object is usually found without any particle, but in four places it is marked by ל as in BA. Especially noticeable is בָּאַת לְבִזְבֵּחַ I have given the house to you, where we should expect a distinction between the nearer and the remoter object.

מ (only once in BA., Dan. iii. 12, and perhaps there due to dittography) never occurs. אָתָה is construed either with a simple accusative of the place, as אָתָה בַּעַד G 3, or (as in BA.) with לְ (-לָךְ) of the person, as אָתָה לְלֹךְ A 3.

אָתָה there is, &c., is invariable and does not occur with suffixes. In three places (D 10, G 18, 21) it is preceded by אָלָה, as in BA.

לְלֹךְ has the complementary pronoun in לְלֹךְ תַּךְ let her go her way G 29.

In general, it will be noticed that a few Hebraisms appear in these texts as in the fragments published in CJS. Such are perhaps, e.g., the words שָׁמֶן (CJS), חַנְקָה (Zingirli), שְׂרָט, דָּרָשׁ, לְאַמְרָה mentioned above. One reason no doubt is that the persons concerned are mostly Jews, using both Hebrew and the closely allied Aramaic, and not always distinguishing between the two. That they were Jews can hardly be doubted, considering the many names compounded with מ- and names like בָּנָי, בָּנָת, בָּנָה. The number of Jewish settlers in Syene and Elephantine must have been large, and their peculiarities of idiom have become a characteristic part of Egyptian Aramaic (at least so far as we know it), distinguishing it from other Aramaic dialects, very much as mediaeval Jewish Arabic is distinguished from the classical language. Probably if we had texts in Egyptian Aramaic which were not of Jewish origin, we should find them free from Hebraisms. It is, however, unsafe, considering how little early Aramaic we possess, to assume that the use of particular words is due to Hebrew influence, because they do not appear in the later texts.

Another foreign element, which has not become naturalized in the same way, is the Babylonian. Aramaic, even before the Persian period, was the language of trade, and we find it in the dockets of Assyrian and Babylonian deeds from the eighth century onwards. When it spread to Egypt, where we find it in the fifth century, there came with it, under the influence of the Persian Empire, the legal formulae current in Babylonia<sup>1</sup>. Such are: the enumeration of the relatives of the contracting parties; the obligation to pay a fine for breach of contract; the way of stating the boundaries of the property; phrases like דְּן דְּבָרָבָר; מְבָרָךְ לְבָרָךְ; דְּן לְשָׁרָא; perhaps בְּאַבְּנָה מְלָכָה; דְּן לְשָׁרָא; special words like חַלְלָה, אֲרַמְלָה, and perhaps אֲלָלָה. There are also many Babylonian proper names.

Persian loan-words, as would be expected, also occur: שְׁמָךְ, שְׁמָרָךְ, both titles of officials, as perhaps is אֲבִינְרָאָד, דְּמָרָן, and probably אֲמָרָה. There are also many Persian proper names.

From Egyptian some loan-words are found in the CJS fragments, but apparently not in these deeds. The proper names are collected in Professor Spiegelberg's list, p. 24, below.

Some of these features appear also in BA., and much of the interest of the texts lies in the many points of contact which they show with Palestinian Aramaic as represented by the books of Ezra and Daniel. The differences are due no doubt partly to the difference of locality, partly also perhaps to the popular style of the deeds as compared with the literary character of BA.

<sup>1</sup> Cf. also the account of the drawing up of a deed in Jer. xxxii. 9 sqq.

MONEY.

The terms used are שֶׁקֶל, קָרְבָּן, רַ, מִנְחָה, וְשֵׁרָה, שְׁלָמָה (or שְׁלָמָה). For determining their relative value the most important text is G. Various sums are there mentioned (ll. 5-14) and the total is given at the end, thus:—

5 shekels + 1 kebhes + 2 sh. + 2 k. + 8 sh. + 8 sh. + 6 (or 7?) sh. + 1 sh. + 2 d. + 1 sh. + 2 d. + 3 sh. + 2 d.—total 6 k. + 5 sh. + 20 hallurin.

If the figures be added up they will be found to amount to 3 kebhaisin + 34 (or 35?) shekels + 6 d., which are therefore equivalent to 6 k. + 5 sh. + 20 h. It can hardly be doubted, in view of this equation, that 30 shekels make up the 3 kebhais required, and therefore 10 shekels = 1 kebhes.

With regard to the other coins, there is unfortunately a doubt as to the number of shekels in G 11 (see above, p. 15). The number of hallurin in G 14 is practically certain. If the shekels are 7, then 6 d. = 20 hallurin. If, however, the last stroke is not to be counted, the shekels will be 6, and it follows that 6 d. - 1 sh. + 20 hal., that is to say either 4 or 5 d. must make up 1 shekel. There is also the usual uncertainty as to reading ר or ר. (In G it is clearly written as ר). If it is ר it may be for ר a quarter-shekel. Or either may be for ר ר (צ'ר), C/S, 147.

Now M. Clermont-Ganneau (R&O, vi, pp. 153 sqq.) has made it at least probable that the shekel in use at this time was the tetradrachm (στεγλος μηδικός) or stater. It may then be suggested that just as  $\text{ש} - \text{ל}$ , and  $\text{n} - \text{ח}$ , so  $\text{נ}$  here -  $\text{ה}$  drachma. Of the 6 d. then 4 d(rachmae) make up the required shekel, and the remaining 2 d. = 20 hallurin. (According to M. Clermont-Ganneau's calculation 2 drachmae ought to be 96 hallurin). We thus arrive at the following table:—

1 kebhes	= 10 shekels
1 shekel	= 4 drachmae (or $\frac{1}{4}$ , quarters)
1 drachma	= 10 hallurin.

This agrees with the facts so far as we have them. We find, for instance, shekels counted up to 8 but never beyond, from which it may be inferred that either 9 or 10 made up the higher coin; also never more than 2 d. are mentioned so that 3 or 4 must have made up the higher coin. Hallurin are counted elsewhere only up to 8. The 20 hal. are used here as the better known coin to define the meaning of the less common drachma. In connexion with sums of money the phrase  $\text{ר} \text{ל}$  occurs six times (in B 15, C 15, D 14, 21, G 7, 14). It appears to be equivalent to  $\text{ר} \text{ל}$   $\text{לכבי}$  which appears in the same connexion twice (in H 15, J 16). As we found above that 1 kebhes = 10 shekels, we may conclude from this parallelism that  $\text{לכבי}$  and that  $\text{לכבי}$  was the 10-shekel piece. In that case  $\text{ר} \text{ל}$ , if it means 2 drachmae, can only denote a certain weight (5%) of alloy in the 10-shekel piece or kebhes. The phrase is always accompanied by  $\text{בכבי}$   $\text{טלה}$ , according to the royal (Persian) weight or standard, and is only used after mentioning the  $\text{ככש}$ , never after the smaller coins without  $\text{ככש}$ . It would seem that  $\text{לכבי}$  was the customary well-known coin, and was so called just as the half-piastre or piece of 20 paras was known among the peasants of modern Egypt as 'asherin, a twenty. The kebhes was perhaps a new introduction, and required to be explained by reference to the old 10-piece. In six places ( $\text{ככש}$ ) is used without  $\text{לכבי}$ , but in five of them is followed by  $\text{בכבי}$  (A 7, F 10, G 8, 34, 36), and in one by  $\text{טלה}$   $\text{טלה}$  (K 11) which is the same thing, both no doubt implying the standard  $\text{ר} \text{ל}$ . In two of these places it is stated to be  $\text{ככש}$   $\text{לכבי}$  (A 7, K 11), which may denote a different standard or may be considered equivalent to the ordinary qualification<sup>1</sup>. The other four passages are all in the later documents, by which time perhaps the coin was better known and the addition was less necessary. In three other places (B 6, 11, G 31) ( $\text{ככש}$ ) is used quite alone.

In L the case seems to be different. The money is there reckoned by another standard  $\text{טלה}$ , which counts  $\text{ל}$   $\text{ש}$ , 1 shekel to the 10-piece. M. Clermont-Ganneau, taking  $\text{טלה}$  as  $\chi\alpha\lambda\omega\sigma$ , makes 1 shekel = 4 drachmae = 24 obols = 192 hallurin. Interest at the rate of 2 hal. on the shekel per month, would then be 12½% per annum, which is a reasonable rate and agrees with his very probable reading  $\text{ל}$   $\text{ל}$  in L 8, since by the end of the eighth year the interest would reach the amount of the principal. However, this may be only a coincidence. If the shekel in L is the same as in the other deeds and if the previous calculation is correct (1 sh. = 4 dr. = 40 hal.) the interest will be  $\frac{1}{2}$  per month =  $\frac{1}{24}$  per annum = 60%, which is less probable, it must be admitted, but not impossible.

On the analogy of the other deeds we should expect  $\text{ל}$   $\text{ש}$  to be preceded by  $\text{ככש}$  (one or more) in the lost part of L 2. This cannot have been the case, because the total monthly interest is stated (L.4) to be ...<sup>ל</sup> לְחֵלָה, which must be 6 or 8 (possibly 9). The whole sum lent was therefore only 3 or 4 shekels.

If →<sup>ל</sup> לְחֵלָה means here 1 shekel to the 10-piece (it can hardly mean anything else), and like →<sup>ל</sup> לְחֵלָה in the other deeds indicates the standard of the currency, then in the standard of Ptaḥ there was twice as much alloy (10%) as in the royal currency. Was it debased during the revolt?

We can hardly suppose that the shekel was a different coin here. Though if it were more valuable the rate of interest would be less exorbitant.

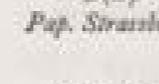

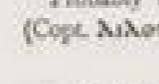

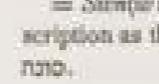

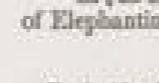

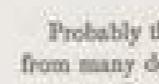

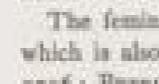

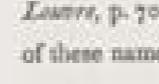

With regard to the names of the coins: לְחֵלָה is well known in Assyrian (see quotations in PSBA, xxv, p. 206 note) as the name of a small coin, and it can hardly be doubted that the לְחֵלָה was likewise the Babylonian coin of that name. The לְחֵלָה, if it means drachma, must be בְּרִכָּת, found in the later parts of the Old Testament (Ezra ii. 69, Neh. vii. 70). If, however, it is a לְחֵלָה we must take it for כְּבָשָׂה or for צַדְקָה as in CIS, 147. The other name כְּבָשָׂה should properly mean a lamb, and is naturally compared with the כְּבָשָׂה of the Old Testament—a word which, according to tradition (LXX &c.), means a lamb. The comparison supports the tradition that the gesitah was the lamb-coin, whatever may have been the reason of the name, and makes it probable that the LXX rendering is not merely a corruption for mina (μινᾶ for μινᾶ) as Cheyne proposes (Encycl. Bibl., s.v.). Whether gesitah, like kebbes, was equivalent to 10 shekels cannot be determined without further evidence.

REHES n. pr. masc.  Nt-pj-md(w) ('nr-pj-md') 'belonging to the holy stick.' Assyrian Hpinidu ; Greek 'Epeipetos'.
SH n. locl.  = sh(w) . Gk. 'tēph' 'Elephantine.' Same transcription as in Pap. Strassburg .
SHY n. pr. masc.  Probably the late name Ashoy <sup>1</sup> (var. Ashoy ) '(the) boy' (Copt. XiXoy ).
SHD n. locl.  = Sut(w) . Copt. cov-an Sytn (Σύτη), the same transcription as that in Report , i, 495, different from that in Ezekiel, 20:10.
SHD n. goddess.  =  Shd (Σήδη). Gk. Σήδη, the well-known goddess of Elephantine.
SHR n. pr. masc.  Probably the Egyptian name Pt-hi (Copt. *na-yuat) known from many demotic documents, viz. Pap. Cairo , 30605, 30612; PETRIE, Denderah , 26 & 8. This name is rendered in Pap. Reinach 3 by Ηεγέια and Pap. Berlin 3116, 5/12, by τεχίτης in the name Τεχίτηος (genitive).
 The feminine form of this name is Ti-hi (Copt. *ta-yuat) which is also frequent in demotic documents, viz. Pap. Berlin 3096; PETRIE, Denderah , 26 & 8. This name is known too in hieroglyphics as  DEVEREA, Catalogue des Pap. Louvre , p. 70.  LIEBLEIN, 3170. The meaning of these names is not clear.
SHSH n. pr. masc.  =  Pt-g-i-si (Πτ-γ-ι-σι) 'whom Isis gives.' Gk. Ήλιος.

VOCIS n. pr. masc.  Pt-g-Wijr (Πτ-γ-Уи-р) 'whom Osiris gives.'
SHSH n. pr. masc.  Pt-g-Hsm(w) (Πτ-γ-Хи-м) 'whom (the god) Khnum gives.' Gk. Ήλερόποτης.

SHSHSH n. pr. masc.
A very interesting and important name, giving the true reading of a very frequent theophoric formation in Egyptian proper names. There cannot be any doubt that it is the n. pr.  * Nf-fsw-twt(j)-N(j)f (Νφ-Φω-τωτ(γ)-Ν(γ)φ) 'his breath is in the hands of Neit.' The Aramaic transcription shows that we must read  here not sh but sh (νω).<sup>2</sup> It is of great interest to see that in the Persian period the first consonant of gm was not a simple t (cf. νωτ) but was still an aspirate, so that it could be rendered by θ. The Dual of * 'arm'-ay is transcribed ψ<sup>3</sup>.

SHU n. pr. masc.
 Dd-hr (Δδ-ηρ). Gk. Τεύ, Τούχος; Assyr. Gi-ha-a.

SHU n. pr. fem.
 Perhaps =  (Linen, 165) var.  Ti-py(j). This name may be  (= tree) 'the bush.' Gk. Τράχη.

The names of the months are:
MWT =  μούττι: μούττι—μούτ.
WMT =  μούττη: μούττη—μούτη.
SHMT = ma-yuat: μαγιατ—μαγιατ.
SHD = ma-yuat: μαγιατ—μαγιατ.
SHWD = ma-yuat: μαγιατ—μαγιατ.

For the details of the phonetic and other questions connected with these names see the author's Ägyptisches Sprachgut in den aus Ägypten stammenden aramäischen Urkunden der Perserkult.

W. SPIEGELBERG.

<sup>5</sup> The reading of the name of Osiris is not quite certain. But the Aramaic transcription is one proof more for the above transcription.

APPENDIX II
BIBLIOGRAPHY OF EGYPTIAN ARAMAIC PAPYRI

By SEYMOUR DE RICCI

The peculiar importance of the Aramaic papyri from Elephantine recently acquired by the Cairo Museum will compel every student to give a look backwards on the by no means inconsiderable amount of material already available for working purposes in this small but fascinating part of the vast field of Semitic philology. It was Mr. Robert Mond's desire that the present edition of the Cairo papyri should also contain a certain amount of information on the other Aramaic texts already discovered in Egypt. Though not a specialist, I undertook this task with great pleasure, as I feel every scholar will rightly consider the study of Aramaic texts from Egypt inseparable from the study of both Demotic and Greek papyri, so plentiful in this very land of marvels.

I must state, however, as a preliminary remark, that nearly every Aramaic text from Egypt, known up to the year 1893, is described, published, and translated, with a full commentary and ample explanatory notes, in the monumental Corpus Inscriptionum Semiticarum published by the French Académie des Inscriptions et Belles-Lettres. The author of the Part secunda, inscriptiones Aramaicas continent is the Marquis de Vogüé, and the part containing the texts from Egypt, for which he has had Professor Maspero's invaluable assistance, goes from p. 122 to p. 177, from No. 122 to No. 155; plates XI to XXI giving excellent photographic facsimiles of every single text. In the following note I have quoted this work as CIS. I have quoted as RES. the Répertoire d'épigraphie sémitique, publié par la Commission du Corpus Inscriptionum Semiticarum, which may be considered as a continuation on a smaller scale of the great Corpus, bringing it fairly up to date. Six parts have already (1904) been issued. A most useful dictionary of these texts has been published by Stanley A. Cook, A Glossary of the Aramaic Inscriptions (Cambridge, 1898, 8vo, viii+127 pp.).

2 and 3. BRITISH MUSEUM. Two fragments, written on both sides, bought towards 1825 by the Due de Blacas from Michelangelo Lanci, who had them from the Greek dealer Papandriopoulos. They are stated to have been found at Saqqara. De Vogüé translates them as follows:

a recto, col. I: a dozen disconnected signs from the ends of six lines.

col. II:

De Vogüé calls the fragments A, B, C, D, E, F but only attempts to translate parts of A, B and C, the other four pieces being mere scraps. 15. CAIRO MUSEUM. (Room N, case A.) A small fragment of papyrus containing the ends of five lines in a small careful hand. Briefly entered by Daressey in the Journal of the Cairo Museum, under the number 36499. Discovered not long ago by Spiegelberg among a small quantity of early demotic papyri stated to have been found at Saqqara, near the tomb of Ptahhotep.

16. STRASBURG. Imperial library. Long strip of papyrus, written on both sides, bought at Luxor, but probably found at Elephantine. There are many differences between the translations of Euting, Clermont-Ganneau, and Halévy; that of Clermont-Ganneau is given here.

18. ELEPHANTINE. Fragment discovered by Maspero near the temple at Elephantine on January 1, 1902. De Vogüé's translation:

*As for one (table): cubits twelve; breadth: cubit one; thickness: palms four.
As for (an)other table: cubits nine and-a-half; breadth: cubit one; thickness: [palms . . .].
Other table: cubits five; breadth: cubit one; thickness: palms[ . . .].*

Clermont-Ganneau reads stab and not table and frames instead of thickness. In the middle of the last line, he thinks that there is place for cubit one, palm one.

27-29. SAQQARA. Four fragments of papyrus discovered with many others, not Aramaic, in one of the subterranean galleries close to the pyramid of King Unas. They are described as follows by Clermont-Ganneau:

27. Written on both sides. On each side ten lines of accounts, each line ending with the number 4.

28 and 29. Two very small fragments, apparently from letters or deeds.

30. Contains the beginnings of five lines, the first of which is read by M. Clermont-Ganneau:

the 29th year of Ard[ash-ir]-ha [the king]

B. INSCRIPTIONS.

1. BERLIN. Egyptian museum. Funerary stela discovered at Saqqara in 1877. De Vogüé translates:

*1. Benedicti Aba, filius Hor, et Abailu, filia Adaya, ambo perfici, ei divino favore adiutati, accidentis
2. eorum Ouidis dei. Abailu, filius Aba, et cuius mater Abailu,
3. sic dixit, anno IV, mensis Melchi (regni) Xerxias, regis i[ugum].
4. mense Panem . . .*

The name Hakna is written before a man's legs, a little higher up on the stela.

TRANSLATION AND NOTES

A.

Papyrus bought by the Bodleian Library, Oxford (MS. Aram. b. 1).

(1) On the 17th (18th?) of Elul, that is the 27th (28th?) day of Pachons, the 14th (15th?) year of Xerxes the king, said (2) Qoniyah the son of Zadok an Aramaean of Syene, belonging to the quarter (clientèle) of Wartzath, to Mahseiah the son of Yedoniah an Aramaean of Syene, (3) belonging to the quarter of Wartzath, saying: I am come to thee and thou hast given me the gateway of thy house for building (4) a brick wall there. This brick wall shall be thine which adjoins my house at the corner which is at the upper end. (5) This brick wall shall adjoin the side of my house from the ground upwards from the corner of my house which is at the upper end as far as the house of Zechariah. (6) Neither to-morrow nor any later day shall I have power to restrain thee from building above (or upon) this thy brick wall. (7) If I restrain thee, I will pay thee the sum of 5 hebbes royal standard, pure silver, and this brick wall (8) is assuredly [thine]. And if Qoniyah dies, neither to-morrow nor on any later day shall son or daughter, brother or sister, (9) relative or stranger, foreign resident or citizen, have power to restrain Mahseiah or his son from building above (10) this brick wall of his. Whoever shall restrain any of them shall pay him the sum which is specified above, and the brick wall (11) is thine assuredly, and thou hast full power to build above it upwards, and I Qoniyah shall have no power (12) to say to Mahseiah, saying: This gateway is not thine, and thou shalt not go out (by it) into the street which (13) runs between us and the house of Peft'oni the sailor. If I interfere with (thy rights) I will pay thee the sum which is specified above, (14) and thou hast full rights to open this gateway and to go out into the street which runs between us. (15) Pelatiah the son of Ahio has written this deed at the dictation of Qoniyah; witnesses thereto: (16) witness Mahaseh (sic!) the son of Isaiah, witness Satibarzanes the son of Athar-ili, (17) witness Shemaiah the son of Hosca, witness Phrataphernes the son of Artaphernes, (18) witness Bagdates the son of Nabu-kuduri, Nabu-ili the son of Darga, (19) witness Ben-tirash the son of Rahamra, witness Shallum the son of Hoshaiyah.

Docket on the outside of the roll:

(20) Deed of the brick wall which he built, written by Qoniyah to Mahaseh.

1. On the numerals see p. 15. According as we take the number of the year to be 14 or 15, the date of this papyrus will be 471 or 470 B.C.

2. וְנִיָּה. In B 8, 9 Qoniyah is called וְנִיָּה. Mahseiah is called וְנִיָּה in B 2, C 2, D 2, but he and his daughter are Aramaeans again in F 2.

3. לְבָנָה. Cf. לְבָנָה, Exod. xi. 8, and perhaps לְבָנָה, Gen. xxx. 30, in the sense of following after or defending a person. It may possibly be לְבָנָה, in which case לְבָנָה would have the meaning of company, see G. B. Gray in J. O. R., xl, pp. 92 sqq. In these deeds the phrase is always followed by a proper name: Wartzath (A 2, 3; B 4, 9, 10; E 2; F 2; G 2; K 2), Artabanos (B 3), Athropadan (B 9), Haumadita (C 2; D 2), Iddin-nabu (H 2). Of the persons mentioned in connexion with them, Qoniyah b. Zadok belongs to two (Wartzath, A 2; Athropadan, B 9), Mahseiah b. Yedoniah to two (Wartzath, A 3; E 2;

F 2; G 2; B 4; Haumadita, C 2; D 2), Jeremiah b. Uriah to two (Wartzath, B 9, 10; Haumadita, C 2 if the explanation of בְּנֵי be right), Yedoniah and Mahseiah sons of As-Hôr or Nathan to two (Iddin-nabu, H 2, if the explanation of בְּנֵי be right; Wartzath, K 2), Dargman to one (Artabanos, B 3), Menahem and Ananiah, sons of Meshullam, to one (Iddin-nabu, H 2). Thus four families or persons belong to Wartzath, two each to Haumadita and Iddin-nabu, one each to Artabanos and Athropadan. As to locality, persons both of Syêd and of Yeb belong to the regel (or devel) of Wartzath, but Yeb only is mentioned in connexion with the others. As to date, Wartzath appears in A, B, E, F, G, K, i.e. from 470-411 B.C., Artabanos and Athropadan in 465, Haumadita in 459, Iddin-nabu in 420.

The variety of dates in the case of Wartzath (extending over sixty years) makes it improbable that the regel denoted simple attachment to an individual Persian or Babylonian, as is the case of the Roman civis, or of aliens under the protection of a Bey in the Mamluk and Turkish periods of Egyptian history. Perhaps the regel denoted a garrison of the town, like the jâza of modern Cairo, which took its title from the official who was responsible for its good order, and who corresponded to the modern shâfi of the jâza. Even so the sixty years' duration of Wartzath is not explained. See note on l. 9.

yârî gat-sayy as in Dan. ii. 49.

4. uš. The reading is certain, except that the 'i' may be a u. It is translated here by brick wall from its similarity to the Assyrian aqurra, brickwork (cf. Arab. qârî, borrowed from the Persian), which is sometimes used to denote a wall-covering of tiles. Perhaps it means here the mezzâba or divan of brickwork commonly built against the outer wall of an Egyptian house close to the door; but since it extended from the upper corner of Qoniyah's house to Zechariah's house it seems to have been more probably a wall. The meaning of 'uš̄ ref' would hardly suit the description, though that is far from clear; nor is it probable that it is connected with the genit. of E 14, J 6. The word is feminine. The mark after it is like the final strokes in the numerals in l. 1, but must be a numeral here, since a stop is impossible.

5. From the way in which the lines are crowded here, it seems that l. 5 was inserted as an after-thought, as though l. 4 were not clear; hence the repetition.

niby means the southern end and nibn the northern throughout these deeds (except in B). Both are nouns.

6. uš̄. In these deeds only the future is found, and it is always followed by a future. On the construction, cf. Nöldeke, Syr. Gr., § 267. In BA. the prep. occurs followed by infinitive with h.

7. qâd, here and generally, is the sum of.

8. Either ṣâd is omitted by accident, or ṣî is a mistake for it. uš̄ qâd seems to be a strengthening of uš̄ (cf. Gen. iii. 1 'uš̄ qâd ap did he really say'). For the termination cf. uš̄ (C 2, II 4) if it is a strengthening of ṣî.

9. nibn. On -ṣ see grammatical remarks, p. 20. nibn is hardly a mistake since it occurs frequently. It is probably a secondary form of the name, like ṣî for uš̄ and qâd for uš̄ qâd. Perhaps the divine name uš̄ was suppressed in more familiar use.

ṣâd uš̄ as opposed to uš̄ qâd shows that the ṣâd denotes the position of one who was not a full citizen—clientela.

10. uš̄, 1st pers. sing. future. The space after uš̄ is due to an erasure: nothing is lost.

11. uš̄ in these deeds is always used in a sort of adverbial sense, in the suid, without suffix or dependent word. We should expect uš̄u. It occurs also in RÈS, 146 (see below, p. 18), probably in the same sense as here, and is to be restored in CIS, 146, A 5 (2 uš̄u 12 . . . + 5 uš̄u, 5 uš̄u and . . . in [which] are 2 gabîm) and 153, 2 (III III uš̄ uš̄ uš̄ . . . niby around . . . in [which] are 6 shokels). A similarly strange use of uš̄ occurs, see Glossary.

12. uš̄ is generally but not always repeated with each name. So in medieval Jewish deeds uš̄ is sometimes but not usually added.

ṣâd is an Assyrian name; hence u for ṣ in the name of the goddess with which it is compounded.

13. uš̄ for uš̄ qâd. Cf. on l. 9.

14. yârî. The papyrus is broken but the reading is fairly certain. The name perhaps occurs also in CIS, 154, 7.

15. The reading of the docket, though strange, is fairly certain.

B.

Papyrus bought by Lady William Cecil (No. 37107).

(1) On the 18th (?) of Chislev, that is the 6th (7th?) day of Thoth, the 20th (21st?) year (of Xerxes), the beginning of the reign when (2) Artaxerxes the king ascended his throne, said Dargman the son of Harshin the Chorasmian of the fire-temple (?) (3) in Yeb (Elephantine) the fortress, a workman belonging to the quarter of Artabanos, to Mahseiah the son of Yedoniah, a Jew who (lives) in the fortress of Yeb (4), belonging to the quarter of Wartzath, saying: Thou hast sw[orn] to me by Yahu the god in Yeb the fortress, thou and thy wife, (5) and thy son, all three, about my land in regard to which I lodged a complaint against thee before (6) Damidata and his colleagues the judges, and they imposed upon thee an oath to me to swear by Yahu in regard to this land (7) that it was no longer the land of Dargman, even mine. Now behold (these are) the boundaries of this land (8) about which thou hast sworn to me: my house, which belongs to me Dargman, is on the east [of it], and the house of Qoniyah son of Zadok, (9) a Jew, belonging to the quarter of Athropadan is to the west of it, and the house of [Jez]janiah son of Uriah (10), a Jew, belonging to the quarter of Wartzath, is at the lower end of it, and the house of Espemet son of Pevtont, (11) the cataract sailor, is at its upper end. Thou didst swear to me by Yahu, and thou didst satisfy (12) my heart as to the land, in regard to which I shall have no power to raise suit or process against thee—I or son or daughter, (13) brother or sister of mine, relative or stranger, in regard to this land, against thee or son or daughter, brother or sister of thine, relative or stranger. (14) If any one shall raise (a suit) against thee in my name in regard to this land, I will pay the sum of 20 hebbes (that is, twenty,) royal (15) standard, at the rate of 2 d. to the ten, and this land is assuredly thine, and thou art quit of (16) all claims which they may bring against thee in the matter of this land. Ethan the son of Abah has written this deed (17) in Syene the fortress at the dictation of Dargman. Witness: Hosea the son of Peti-Khnūm, (18) witness Gadōl the son of Yigdal, witness Gemariah the son of Ahio, Meshullam the son of Hosea, (19) Sin-kasid the son of Nabu-sum-iskun, witness Hadad-nūrī the Babylonian, (20) witness Gedaliah the son of Ananiah, (21) witness Arytsha the son of Arūsathmar.

Docket on the outside of the roll:

(22) Deed of conveyance written by [Dargman] the son of Harshin to Mahseiah.

1. The date of the papyrus is 465 n.c., the year of the accession of Artaxerxes I. The Babylonian form of this king's name is always used, Artakhaszu, not the Persian Artakhshathei. So also in CIS, 67 (cuneiform), RÉS, 438, 4, and in the hieroglyphic inscriptions.

2. šwā i.e. no doubt šwā as in BA.; so in G 23, L 5, not šwā.

3. šwā Chorasmia, Chorasmia (Khvarizm) is 'Uvdrzmi in O. Persian, Khvarizm in Babylonian, Khairiz in Zend.

4. šwā, the n might be a t, and is in fact more like t. Cf. šwā in E 19. It cannot be the Aramaic šwā place, which would give no sense. It may, however, be connected with O. Pers. atara, Zend. dār 'fire.'

5. šwā as in C 2, D 2. He is šwā in A 2, E 2, G 2.

6. See Prof. Spiegelberg's list of Egyptian names, on p. 24. It was no doubt pronounced fed, as Gk. leipos = Elephantine. The credit of this brilliant identification is due to M. Clermont-Ganneau (RÉS, 381, p. 296). Elephantine and Syene were the twin fortresses which protected Egypt on the south from the incursions of the Sudanese tribes.

7. šwā. See on A 2.

8. See Introduction, p. 10. This is the form always used in these deeds (and in Str. C 5) except once šwā E 14. Its occurrence shows that the Jews of Elephantine, at all events in the fifth century n.c., had no objection to pronouncing the name, and that Yahu was the common form, not Yahweh.

9. Mahseiah's daughter is not mentioned. Probably she was too young to take an oath. She was married six years later.

10. šwā. There is the usual uncertainty as to n or t. It is clearly Persian and might be a title, such as magistratus, but is probably a personal name, Damidata.

11. Cf. CIS, 151, 2, Ezra v. 6, and frequently. In Ezra iv. 9 it is combined as here with šwā judge, which the LXX (and MT) have misunderstood; cf. Cheyne, Encyclop. Biblica, s.v. Damites.

12. šwā they laid upon you an oath, i.e. made you take it. The occasion of the deed apparently was as follows: Dargman was in occupation of, or claimed a right over, certain land, which was contested by Mahseiah. He then brought an action to establish his claim, and Mahseiah made a counter-claim. Mahseiah was required by the court to take an oath as to the grounds of his claim, which was allowed by the court with costs. Dargman had to submit to the ruling, and this deed of renunciation (šwā) was then drawn up at his expense.

13. Originally the scribe wrote šwā šwā, then he altered it to šwā and added šwā above the line. Hence the awkward construction. For this use of the pronoun to emphasize the suffix, cf. Dan. vii. 15, Ezra vii. 21.

14. more correctly šwā (D 4, 6; E 14) = Heb. šwā, from šwā = šwā.

15. šwā is an Aramaean in A 2, and 'client' of Warzah in Syene.

16. šwā or šwā. Both are possible Persian forms.

17. šwā, in A 13 'Bab. The t must have been consonantal. It is evidently the same man, as he and his son are both described as sailors.

18. A sailor who lived in Elephantine must have been either a Nile boatman or a 'Shellall' who helped to take boats over the Cataract. The phrase hard or difficult waters implies the latter. Nebuchadrezzar (Cylinder II, 12 in Cun. Inscr. of West. Asia, vol. I) similarly speaks of the mill kassam (for gamm) or terrible flood ('like the swell of the sea') and Sennacherib (Rassam Cylinder, 8a) of the mil kassat or flood of the rapids.

19. šwā. For other forms see Glossary, s.v. šwā. The word more commonly used is šwā, and once šwā, all meaning to stir up, set in motion legal procedure, followed by an accusative of the person against whom the suit is brought, and sometimes by a second (cognate) accusative, as šwā šwā here.

20. šwā. A Babylonian formula commonly used in legal documents, see Jolian, Assyrian Deeds, iii, p. 260 sq., or Stevenson, Assyrian and Babylonian Contracts, passim. The fuller form is found in e.g. Stevenson no. 1 šwā dina dobbu la-allu, appeal, suit or process shall not lie, and it continues (as here in L 14) manu la qarrus 10 manu haspi iddan, whoever shall institute proceedings shall pay 10 minas of silver, the same root šwā being used as here.

21. šwā II 7. See Introduction, p. 22.

22. šwā is a technical term in these deeds, to withdraw from (all claims to) a thing.

23. The name of Hosea's father, Peti-khnūm, the gift of Akedē, seems to imply that the son was a Jewish proselyte; cf. note on As-Bôr = Nathan, in J 3. In mediaeval and modern times, however, it is customary to find Jews using two names, one Hebrew and another vernacular for ordinary purposes. Possibly the practice had already begun, and Peti-khnūm and As-Bôr were the non-Hebrew names borne by Jews who were rather lax in their religious views; cf. Jerem. xlvi. 8 sqq.

24. The three names are all common in Babylonia.

25. šwā, the second ' seems to have a tail, but it may be merely accidental. Perhaps the two names are Persian.

26. šwā, a deed of withdrawal, practically equivalent to conveyance.

A comparison of this deed with D shows that the scribe has described the boundaries of the estate incorrectly, having mistaken the points of the compass. Dargman's house was south, not east, of Mahseiah's; Qoniyah's was north, not west; Jezaniah's was east, not south; and Espe'mel's was west, not south. That D is right is shown by E and J, which agree with its topography.

C.

Papyrus bought by Mr. Robert Mond (No. 37106).

(1) On the [21st] of Chis[eu], that is the 1st day of [Mesor], the 6th year of Artaxerxes the king, said Mahseiah (2) the son of Yedoniah a J[ew, of] Yeb, belonging to the quarter of Haumadita, to Jezaniah the son of Uriah, of the same quarter, (3) saying: There is the land of one house belonging to me, west of thy house, which I have given to Mibhtahyah, (4) my daughter, thy wife, and I have written a deed (of gift) for her respecting it. The measurement of this house is 13 cubits and a hand-breadth (5) by 11, with the measuring-rod. Now I, Mahseiah, say to thee: Build upon this land and stock (it) with its cattle, (6) and live on it with thy wife; but thou hast no power to sell this house or to give it as a present to any others, (7) but thy sons by Mibhtahyah, my daughter, have rights over it (8) after you. If to-morrow, or any later day, thou buildest on this land (and) my daughter shall afterwards divorce thee (9) and leave thee, she shall have no power to take it and to give it to others, but thy sons by (10) Mibhtahyah shall have rights over it in return for the work which thou hast expended (upon it). If thou shalt put her away (11) from thee, one half of the house shall be hers to take, but to the other half thou hast full right in return (12) for the buildings which thou hast built on to this house. Furthermore as to that half, thy sons by Mibhtahyah (13) have the right to it after thee. If to-morrow, or any later day, I institute against thee suit or process, (14) and say, I have not given thee this land for building, and have not written for thee this deed, I (15) will pay thee the sum of 10 kebbes, royal standard, at the rate of 2 d. to the ten, and no suit or process (shall lie). (16) Athar-shurt, the son of Nabuzira-ibni, has written this deed in Syene, the fortress, at the dictation of Mahseiah; witnesses (17) hereto: witness Hosea the son of Pelaliah, witness Zechariah the son of Nathan, (18) witness Gemariah the son of Mahseiah, witness Zechariah the son of Meshullam, (19) witness Me'ozyah the son of Malchiah, witness Shemaiah the son of Yedoniah, (20) witness Yedoniah the son of Mahseiah, witness Nathan the son of Ananiah, (21) witness Hosea [the son] of Re'ayah, witness Mahaseh (sic) the son of Isaiah, witness Zaccur the son of Zephaniah, (22) witness Ho[sea the son of Yigdjal].

t. The date is 459 B.C.

After the first letter (2) the remains of the numeral probably represent ፩. There is then room for I (or possibly II) before the 5. The month can only be ዓመት, consistently with the position of the two ፩'s. There are traces of the ፩ in ዓመት, after which there is room for I (barely II) before the next 5. It is therefore highly probable that the date is the same as that of D, since both relate to the same transaction. The number of the year is here clearly six.

2. ዓመት, part of the ፩ remains; the rest is completed from B 3, ዓመተኝ ተ ዓመት, and is fairly certain on grounds of space. The ፩ in ዓመት is probable, but this is the only case of such a spelling.

3. ዓመት, here and in H 4, seems to be a strengthening of ዓመት, the same. For the termination cf. ዓመት. It may perhaps be compared with ዓመት, a strengthened form of ዓመት the foregoing, in Dan. ii. 31; vii. 20. If in ዓመት the termination implies the sing. pers. plural (Wright, Cogn. Gr., § 110), that would be a different formation. ዓመት stands in both cases before its noun (in the emphatic state), whereas ዓመት in Daniel stands in both cases after its noun.

3. ዓመት, not a scribal error, since it occurs again in the companion deed, D 3. The J must be a numeral. Land sufficient for one house?

4. ዓመተኝ concerning it, as in E 7. The sense is no doubt derived from that of following after; cf. ዓመት in consequence, E 5.

5. ዓመት as in RÉS, 246 = Heb. ዓመት, and like the modern Egyptian shibr was probably about 9 inches.

5. ስንቅ (in later Hebrew ስንቅ is a lump or bar of metal), must be here the measuring-rod, still necessary in all measurements of land in Egypt. The native instrument now is usually of bamboo (as in Ezek. xl. 3), but this seems to have been of metal.

6. ዓመት, perhaps in a wider sense to lay out land.

7. ዓመት, more like ዓመት. In either case it must mean to stock with cattle; cf. Prov. xxiv. 27 (לֹא תַּמְצֵא כָּבֵד).

8. ዓመት may be ዓመተኝ, but the ዓ is very close to the መ and seems to be merely the beginning of another letter which was corrected to መ.

9. ዓመት, adverbially as before—divorce.

10. ዓመተኝ, a noun, elsewhere ዓመት.

11. ዓመት, a general term, children.

12. ዓመተኝ as in B 5 and 14, lay out.

13. ዓመተኝ, probably a technical term for divorce.

14. ዓመተኝ. Must be Haphel of ዓመት with an active meaning as in D 18. Two cases seem to be contemplated: if she divorced him, she was to have none of the property; if he put her away, it was to be divided.

15. ዓመተኝ evidently means the house and land together.

16. ዓመተኝ is equivalent to ዓመት in B 12, but ዓመት is the commoner root. Both mean to start up legal proceedings. So also ዓመት in D 17. The construction with double accusative (or dative of the person, in the suffix, and accusative of the thing) is the same with both ዓመት and ዓመተኝ.

17. ዓመተኝ, an Aramaic name. His father's name is Babylonian. The names of the witnesses are confirmed by the end of D.

D.

Papyrus bought by Mr. Robert Mond (No. 37114).

(1) On the 21st of Chisleu, that is the 1st of Mesore, the 6th year of Artaxerxes the king said Mahseiah (2) the son of Yedoniah, a Jew holding property in Yeb the fortress, belonging to the quarter of Haumadata, to the maid (?) Mibhatahyah (3) his daughter, saying: I have given thee during my lifetime and after my death 1 house of my land. Its (4) measurement is: in length from the lower to the upper end 13 cubits and 1 handbreadth; in width from east (5) to west 11 cubits by the measuring-rod; its boundaries are:—at the upper end of it, the house of Dargman the son of Harshin (6) adjoining it; at its lower end the house of Qoniyah the son of Zadok; east of it the house of Yezan (sic) the son of (7) Uriah thy husband and the house of Zechariah the son of Nathan; west of it the house of Espemet the son of Peft'ōnīt (8) the cataract sailor. This house as an estate I have given thee during my lifetime and after my death; (9) thou hast full rights over it from this day and for ever, and thy children after thee; to whomsoever (10) thou desirest thou mayest give (it); there is no other son or daughter of mine, brother or sister or wife (11) or other person who has a right over this estate, but only thou and thy children for ever. Whoever (12) shall institute against thee suit or process, against thee, or son or daughter of thine, or any one belonging to thee on account of this estate (13) which I have given thee, and shall bring up against thee prefect and judge, he shall pay thee and thy children (14) the sum of 10 kebhes (that is ten), royal standard, at the rate of 2 d. to the ten, and no suit or process (shall lie). (15) And the house is thy house assuredly and thy children's after thee, and they shall have no power to produce against thee (16) any deed new or old in my name about this estate in order to give (it) to any one else: that (= any) deed (17) which they shall produce against thee will be false; I have not written it, and it shall not be acknowledged in court (18) while this deed (is) in thy possession. And moreover I Mahseiah will neither to-morrow nor any other day take (it) (19) from thee to give (it) to another: this estate is thine, build (on it) and give (it) to whomsoever thou desirest. (20) If to-morrow or any other day I shall institute against thee suit or process, and shall say, I have not given (it) to thee, (21) I will pay thee the sum of 10 kebhes, royal standard, at the rate of 2 d. to the ten, and neither suit (22) nor process (shall lie). And the house is thy house assuredly, so that should I go into court I shall not win my case while this deed is in thy possession. (23) Moreover there is a deed of conveyance which Dargman the son of Harshin the Chorasmian wrote for me concerning (24) this estate when he instituted an action about it before the judges, and I made oath to him and swore to him (25) that it was mine; and he wrote a deed of conveyance and gave (it) to me. That deed I have given to thee; (26) do thou keep possession of it. If to-morrow or any later day Dargman or his son shall bring an action (27) concerning this house, produce this deed and institute an action against him therewith. Athar-shūrī (28) the son of Nabō-zira-ibni has written this deed in Syēnē the fortress at the dictation of Mahseiah. Witnesses thereto: (29) witness Gemariah son of Mahseiah, witness Zechariah the son of Nathan, (30) witness Hosea the son of Pelaliah, witness Zechariah the son of Meshullam, witness Metozyah the son of (31) Malchiah; witness Shemaiah the son of Yedoniah, witness Yedoniah the son of Mahseiah, (32) witness Nathan the son of Ananiah, Zaccur the son of Zephaniah, (33) witness Hosea the son of Re'uyah, witness Maḥasch (sic) the son of Isaiah, (34) witness Hosea the son of Yigdal.

Docket on the outside of the roll:

(35) Deed concerning 1 house [which] Maḥasch (sic) the son of Yedon[iah gave] (36) to Mibhata[yah] the daughter of Maḥasch (sic).

<sup>1.</sup> The date is 459, as that of C, to which this is closely related. They were written by the same scribe, and many of the expressions used are the same.

After 29 the papyrus is creased, but probably nothing is lost and the numeral is 1. After 10 it is likely that the number is 6, as in C, so that the 1 is only the way of writing the final stroke.

2. yr. The reading is certain. It must be some qualification of the following name. In mediæval Jewish Archibiblio the bride is always described as rivna or rudeh, as the case may be, and perhaps this word means girl [129, cf. Arab. qas to grow up, qas a young person, grows up]. It was apparently Miphayah's first marriage.

3. yr pñk l 12=yr l 12 pñk in C 3, so that l must denote some sort of measurement.

4. nrw, probably the fem. noun (BA. nrw) in apposition with nrw. The words nrw and nrw are nouns, meaning North and South respectively; see note on A 5.

5. krwz. The papyrus is crushed together, so that the y has disappeared and the x is almost like a t, but by comparison with C 5 there can be no doubt about the word.

6. pñm. Cf. above on nñm, A 9.

7. wpw wpw as in B 11.

pñk pñk corresponds to pñk l 12 in L 3.

8. wd is practically certain, though the papyrus is crushed and the x looks like a t.

9. pñk as used in these enumerations seems to be a general inclusive term, person or perhaps dependent.

10. nrw here corresponds to the pñk l 12 of II. 3; 8. The land was the important thing; the house went with it as a 'fixture' and also indicated the amount of the land.

11. 2270, the first z is lost owing to a crease in the papyrus.

12. pd wdyb 520p complain [i.e.] the prefect against you. In later Aramaic it would be 520p.

13. pd, the Zoganes of Berossus, Assyrian zakim, governor or prefect, with z for k as in the name of Tiglath-pileser; cf. Jos. II. 23, Dan. II. 2 &c. The use of pn pd here, prefect and magistrate (or law-mall?) makes it possible that the parallel phrase 2270 pn means judge and plaintiff, and not as translated throughout these deeds, but the Assyrian formula is against this; see note on B 12.

14. nrw nrw simply to guard against misunderstanding or alteration of the numeral, as we should write '110 (ten pounds).'

15. The slightly larger space after pñk shows that nrw belongs to the next sentence.

16. z as before probably lay it out.

17. 2270 nrw, a deed of alienation of property, or renunciation of claim, i.e. a cognovit. It refers to B, which is so named on the docket. The following l is the numeral one.

18. nrw, if 120 in B 6 is Pael, they made you take, this is probably Pael, I took. It can hardly be the internal passive since it has the accusative nrw.

19. nrw, imperat. fem. of nrw in a transitive sense, make, set in motion, like yr and yr above. In later Hebrew nrw z nrw nrw is a legal phrase. There is a crease in the papyrus. The z must have been there, judging from the appearance of the letters on the same crease in the lines above, but it has almost disappeared. The right-hand edge of its down-stroke is just discernible beside that of the x.

20-24. Scribe and witnesses are the same as in C.

25. The docket is very much broken. The z is clear. The following space might be filled up with pñk 1, but there is a trace of the tail of a z before nñm, suggesting 2270 z 12, which is also more probable.

26. nrw is certain. It is either an abbreviation, or a popular form like nñm; cf. note on A 9.

Papyrus bought by Lady William Cecil (No. 37108).

(1) On the 3rd of Chislev, that is the 10th day of the month Mesore, the 19th year of Artaxerxes the king, said Mahseiah the son of (2) Yedoniah, an Aramaean of Syéné, belonging to the quarter of Wartzath, to Miphayah (sic) his daughter, saying: I have given thee the house (3) which Meshullam the son of Zaccur the son of Ater, an Aramaean of Syéné, gave me for its price, and wrote a deed for me in regard to it, (4) and I have given it to Miphayah my daughter in return for the goods which she gave me when I was hind in (the) citadel. I took them in exchange, (5) and did not find money and goods to pay thee. Therefore I have given thee this house (6) in return for those thy goods, equivalent to the sum of 5 kebbes, and I have given thee the original deed which was written (7) for me by the said Meshullam respecting it. This house I have given to thee, and have renounced all claim to it; it is thine, and thy children's (8) after thee, and to whom[soever thou desire]st thou mayest give it. I shall have no power, I and my children, and my descendants, and any one (9) else, to institute against thee suit or process on account of this house which I have given thee, and about which I have written the deed for thee. (10) Whoever shall raise against thee suit or process, (whether) I myself or brother or sister, relative or stranger, foreign resident or citizen, (11) he shall pay thee the sum of 10 kebbes, [and the] house is assuredly thine. Moreover, no one else shall be able to produce against thee a deed, (12) whether new or old, except this deed which I have written and given thee. [Who]ever shall produce against thee a deed, I have not written it. (13) Moreover, behold these are the boundaries of this house: at the upper end of it is the house of Ye'or the son of [Pe]ntuliah, at its lower end (14) the chapel of the god Yahu; east of it is the house of Gadol the son of Oshia (sic) and the street running between them; (15) west of it is [the land] of Mardak (?) the son of Palio, the priest of the gods [Khnúm and Sa]ti. This house (16) I have given to thee, and have renounced all claim to it; it is thine for ever; and to [whom]soever thou shalt wish, give (it). (17) Nathan

(1) On the 13th (14th?) of Ab, that is the 19th day of Pachons, the 25th year of Artaxerxes the king, said Pi' (2) the son of Paḥt, a builder belonging to Syēnē the fortress, to Mibḥtahyāh the daughter of Mahseiah the son of Yedonia, (3) the Aramaeans of Syēnē, belonging to the quarter of Warizath, at the court of the Hebrews in Syēnē : Let us make a division as regards the money (4) and grain and clothing and bronze and iron, all the goods and chattels, and a quittance I will give. Then an oath (5) has been imposed upon thee, and thou hast sworn to me in regard to them by the goddess Sati, and my heart is content (6) with this oath which thou hast made to me in regard to these goods, and I renounce my claim on thee from (7) this day and for ever. I shall have no power to raise against thee suit or process, against thee or son (8) or daughter of thine on account of these goods in regard to which thou hast sworn to me. If I have raised against thee (9) suit or process, or son or daughter of mine has raised (it) against thee, on account of this oath, I Pi' and my children (10) will pay to Mi[bh]tahyāh the sum of 5 hekkēs, royal standard, and no suit or process (shall lie), (11) and I withdraw from all suit and process. Petis is the son of Nebo-nathan has written this deed (12) in Syēnē the fortress at the dictation of Pi' the son of Paḥt. bārūt, probably Assyrian arad-shalli, servant of the palace.

3. r̥̥p, no doubt so to be read, though the r̥ is more like r̥̥ and the p like p̥.

The mention of the tribunal of the Hebrews throws an interesting light on the position of the Jews in Egypt. Interesting also is the name (רְכָב) given to it. The court was probably not confined to the Jews, but was used by all who were beyond the river, as the district west of the Euphrates was termed. Two Babylonian contracts of the first and third years of Darius describe Tarsus as governor of Ebit-nari, beyond the river (as in Ezra v. 6), and at an earlier date, in the treaty between Esarhaddon and Baal, king of Tyre (K. 3500), the gods of Phoenicia are called the gods of Ebit-nari. It was possibly the influence of this official name of Syria and Palestine that caused the old name of 'Hebrews' to be revived. Cf. Cooke, p. 340 seq., and references there.

מִזְבֵּחַ, the נָטַת might be a נָתַן. If פָּרָשָׁה is right in L. 4, a future would be natural here, and פָּרָשָׁה may be taken as 1st person singular, fut. of פָּרַשׂ to make a division.

Papyrus in two parts; one part bought by Lady William Cecil and the other by Mr. Robert Mond (No. 37110).

(1) On the 26th (?) of Tishri . . . . , the 6th (?) [day] of the month Epiph[i, the 25th year of Artaxerxes the king]. (2) said As-Hor the son of [Teos], a builder to the king, to Mah[seiah] an [A]ramaean of Syêne, belonging to the quarter (3) of Wartzath, saying: I came to thy house for thee to give me thy daughter Miphtâyah (sic) to wife; (4) she is my wife, and I am her husband, from this day and for ever. I have given thee as the marriage settlement (5) of thy daughter Miphtâyah [the sum of] 5 shekels, royal standard; it is accepted by thee, and thy heart is content (6) therewith. I have delivered into the hand of [thy daughter] Miphtâyah as mone[y] for an outfit (7) 1 kebhes, 2 shekels, royal (7) standard, at the rate of 2 d. to the ten; I have delivered into her hand 1 garment of wool, new, embroidered, (8) dyed on both sides (?), 8 cubits long by 5, [w]orth the sum of 2 kebhes, 8 shekels, (9) royal standard; 1 closely-woven shawl, new, 7 cubits long by 5, worth (10) the sum of 8 shekels, royal [sta]ndard; another garment of spun wool, (11) 6 cubits long by 4 (3?), worth the sum of 6 (7?) shekels; 1 mirror of bronze, worth (12) the sum of 1 shekel 2 d.; 1 tr[ay] of bronze, worth the sum of 1 shekel 2 d.; 2 cups of bronze, (13) worth the sum of [3] shekels; 1 [b]owl of bronze, worth the sum of 2 d.: all the money (14) and the value of the goods (amounting to) the sum of 6 kebhes, 5 shekels, 20 hallurin, at the rate of 2 d. to the ten, royal (15) standard. There is accepted by me [and] my heart is [con]tent therewith: 1 . . . . of papyrus (?), in which are 4 . . . . (16) of stone; 1 . . . which rises up with 2 handles, value 8 hallurin; 1 . . . ; 1 new ivory cosmetic-box. (17) (If) to-morrow or any la[te]r day As-Hor shall die, having no issue, whether male or female, (18) by Miphtâyah his wife, Miphtâyah shall have full rights over the house (19) of As-Hor, and [his] goods and chattels, and all that he has on the face of the earth (20) without exception. (If) to-morrow or [any later] day Miphtâyah shall die having no issue, whether male or female, (21) by As-Hor her husband, As-Hor shall be heir to her goods (22) and her chattels. (If) to-morrow [or] any later day [Mip]tâyah shall stand up in the congregation (23) and shall say: I divorce As-Hor my husband, the price of divorce shall be on her head; she shall return to (24) the scales and she shall weigh for [As-Hor] the sum of 5 (6?) shekels 2 d., and all which I have delivered (25) into her hand she shall give back, both . . and thread, and she shall go away whithersoever she will, and no (26) suit or process (shall lie). (If) to-morrow or any later day As-Hor shall stand up in the congregation (27) and say: I divorce my (w)ife Miphtâyah, her marriage-settlement [shall] be forfeited, and all that I have delivered (28) into her hand, she shall give back, both . . and thread, in one day, at one time, and she shall go (29) away whithersoever she will, so that neither suit nor process (shall lie). And [if] he shall rise up against Miphtâyah (30) to drive her away from the house of As-Hor and his goods and his chattels, he shall pay her (31) the sum of 20 kebhes, and (the terms of) this deed shall hold good for her; and I shall have no power to say: (32) I have a[nother] wife than Miphtâyah, and other children than the children which (33) Miphtâyah shall bear to me. If I shall say: I have chil[dren] and wife other than (34) Miphtâyah and her children, I will pay Miphtâyah the sum of 20 kebhes, royal (35) standard, and I shall not have power [to take aw]ay my goods and my chattels from Miphtâyah. And if I shall have removed them (36) from her [erasure] I will pay Miphtâyah [the sum of] 20 kebhes, roy[al] standard. (37) Nathan the son of Ananiah has written [this deed at the dictation of As-Hor], and the witnesses thereto (are): (38) Penâiah the son of Jezaniah, [Jezan]iah the son of U[riah], Menahem the son of [Z]accur, (39) witness, . . . .

This is the most difficult of all these texts, partly owing to its broken condition and partly to the many strange words it contains.

1. The first numeral and Tishri are fairly certain. 2d<sup>e</sup> + are doubtful, and it is difficult to see what they could mean. Probably the second numeral is complete. The number of Bought by Mr. Robert Mond (No. 37111).

(1) In the month Elul, that is Pa[yni], the 3rd [4th?] [y]ear of Darius the king: at that time, in Yeb the fortress, said (2) Menahem and Ananiah, both [sons] of Meshullam the son of Shelomim, Jews of Yeb the fortress, belonging to the quarter of Iddin-Nabu, (3) to Yedoniah and Mahseiah, both sons of As-Hor the son of Teos by Mibhāyah the daughter of Mahseiah, Jews, (4) belonging to the same quarter, saying: [We] sued you in the court of Napha before the lieutenant of the governor Widrang (5) the commander of the garrison, saying: There are goods (consisting of) garments of wool and linen, utensils of bronze and iron, utensils of wood (6) and ivory, corn, &c. And we pleaded, saying: As-Hor your father received (them) from Shelomim the son of Azariah, and also (7) said: They are things which are on trust; and they gave them on trust (7), but he kept possession and did not deliver (them) back to him. And accordingly we sue you. (8) Then you inquired into (the case), and thou Yedoniah and Mahseiah sons of As-Hor have satisfied our heart respecting these goods, (9) and our heart is content in the matter: from this [day] for ever I Menahem and Ananiah, we renounce our claim on thee. (10) From this day for eve[r] we shall have n[o] power, we and our sons and our daughters and brothers and any one belonging to us, relative or citizen, (11) shall have no power to institute against you, Yedoniah and Mahseiah, suit or process, (and) they shall have no power to sue your children (12) and your brothers and any one belonging to you [on account of the goods and money, corn, &c., of Shelomim the son of Azariah. And if we (13) or our sons or our daughters or any one belonging to us or the family of Shelomim the son of Azariah shall sue you or shall sue your sons or your daughters (14) or any one belonging to you or whomsoever they shall sue therefor, he shall pay to you or your children or whomsoever they shall sue a fine (15) of the sum of ten kebhes, royal [standar]d at the rate of 2 d. to one kebhes; and he shall afterwards withdraw from (all claim to) these goods (16) in respect of which we sue; and no suit or process (shall lie). Me'oziah the son of Nathan has written this deed at the dictation of Menahem and Ananiah both (17) sons of Meshullam the son of Shelomim; witness: [Me]nahem the son of Gadol, Gadol the son of Berechiah, Menahem the son of Azariah, (18) witness Hodaviah the son of Zaccu[r the son] of Oshaiah (sic).

Docket on the outside of the roll:

(19) Deed which has been written by Menahem and Ananiah [both] sons of Menahem (sic) the son of (20) Shelomim [for Yedoniah and Mahseiah both sons of As-Hor the son of Teos.

The sealing of the roll bears the impression of a scarab representing the name of Amon-Ra.

1. In the numeral the last stroke certainly looks as though it did not belong to the number.

The date is accordingly 420 or 421 a.c.

3. מנהם. On a British Museum ostracon (CIS, 138, B 1) a מנהם is mentioned who was son of בֶּרְכִּיָּה.

4. סַבֵּת. See note on C 2.

It is curious that the action should not have been brought before the 'court of the Hebrews' considering that both the parties were Jews, while in F one of them is shown by his name IP to have belonged to some other (Egyptian?) nationality. Both cases were alike concerned with real property. Possibly the Egyptian origin of the father of Yedoniah and Mahseiah may account for the difference.

מִנְחָה. See Glossary.

לְבָנָן תְּלִמְדֵי יְהוּדָה are probably to be so read, though there is the usual difficulty in distinguishing between 'ה' and 'ת'. All three look like Persian words. They can hardly be all proper names, for then they would be connected by 'ו'. In Str. סְבָבָה occurs in connexion, as here, with לְבָנָן (so read for לְבָנָה). The explanation elikum there proposed is unconvincing, and is here impossible. M. Clermont-Ganneau (RÉS, p. 296) compares תְּלִמְדֵי (Esther i. 3 &c.) and rightly points out that it is the title of some official. If the reading there is correct (and the facsimiles are not sufficiently clear to warrant disagreement from so eminent a palaeographer as Prof. Euting), and if לְבָנָה can have the meaning there, it would be simplest to take לְבָנְתָה as a proper name and translate with Widrang who was Fratadot (governor?) there. The other word פְּרָתָדָה here might be either a proper name or a title, and we must accordingly translate either Damascus the lieutenant of Widrang or better the lieutenant of the governor Widrang. Str. makes it improbable that לְבָנְתָה is anything but a proper name. Widrang was then commander of the troops quartered at Syend, and had a representative to bear cases סְבָבָה פְּרָתָדָה. On a fragment of sandstone from Elephantine (?) in the Cairo Museum, dated Sivan-Mechir in the 7th year of Artaxerxes, mention is made of 'the son of our lord Int(a)... commander of the forces of Syend.'

5. רְכָב = רְכָב in G 7, 10.

6. מַתָּא should be some sort of material, probably = מַתָּא in G 16. See Glossary.

7. מְפֹזֵז is probable and gives a sense. Of מְפֹזֵז the remains of the first letter suggest only a ל, the next letter is probably ב, and the rest is clear, but the construction is very awkward. Perhaps we should point מְפֹזֵז and treat it as a passive, cf. Dan. iii. 21 &c., Wright, Cogn. Gram., p. 224, but it would be the only instance of this passive in the present texts.

8. מִתְ must be adverbial here, and מִתְ*בָּא a verb.

14. [ל]ְמַתָּא לְ. The relative might be either subject or object. In either case the whole construction is awkward, and the change from plural (מְפֹזֵז in I. 13) to singular (מְפֹזֵז L. 14) must be due to confusion. We might read [לְ]מַתָּא לְ here as in J 15, but the change of number (מְפֹזֵז לְ מַתָּא . . . מַתָּא) would be equally difficult.

מַתָּא is more like מַתָּא, which would be suitable if it were possible in Aramaic.

מְפֹזֵז, or מְפֹזֵז, the meaning fine or compensation is required by the context. It looks like a Persian word and a legal term.

17. מְנֻחָה, or מְנֻחָה. There is scarcely room for the ו, unless the מְנֻחָה is much disengaged. The name מְנֻחָה, however, does not occur elsewhere in these deeds, and if the ו was not there it may have been omitted by mistake. In J 18 (written by the same scribe) there is a witness מְנֻחָה b. גָּדֶל b. בָּאֵדָה.

18. מְנֻחָה as in the Assyrian form Anut for Hosca. On מְנֻחָה instead of מְנֻחָה see note on F 9.

19. מְנֻחָה is a mistake for מְשֻׁלָּם.

Papyrus bought by Mr. Robert Mond (No. 37113).

(1) On the 3rd of Chislev, the 7th (8th?) year, that is the 11th (12th?) day of Thoth, the 7th (8th?) year of Darius the king: at that time, in יְהוּא (2) the fortress, said Yedoniah the son of Hoshaiyah (sic) the son of Uriah, an Aramaean of Yet the fortress, before Widrang the commander of the garrison (3) of Syené, to Yedoniah the son of Nathan and Mahseiah the son of Nathan his brother, their mother being Miblahyah the daughter of Mahseiah the son of Yedoniah, before (4) Widrang the commander of the garrison of Syené, saying: I have relinquished (all claims) against you on the house of Jezaniah the son of Uriah. These are its boundaries: (5) at its upper end the house of Hosea the son of Uriah adjoins it; at its lower end the house of H..n'l the son of Zechariah adjoins it; (6) below it and above are open windows, east of it is the chapel of the god Yahu with the king's road (7) running between them; west [of it] the house of Miblahyah the daughter of Mahseiah, which Mahseiah her father gave her, (8) adjoins it. This house, whose boundaries are described above, is yours, Yedoniah and Mahseiah both (9) sons of Nathan, for ever, and thy (sic) children's after you and to whomsoever you desire you may give it. I have no power, I, Yedoniah or my sons (10) or wife or any one belonging to me, I have no power to raise suit or process against you. Moreover, we have no power to sue son or daughter of yours (11), brother or sister, wife or dependant [of yours] or any one to whom you shall sell this house or to whom you shall give (it) as a present (12) in the name of me Yedoniah and in the name of my children and wife and dependant of mine. And if I Yedoniah sue you or if (13) any son or daughter of mine, wife or dependant, sue you in my name or in the name of my children, on behalf (?) of son or daughter of Jezaniah the son of Uriah, (14) or shall sue son or daughter or wife or dependant of yours, or any one else to whom you shall sell or to whom you shall make a gift of (15) this house, and whoever shall institute a suit against you, I will pay you a fine of the sum of ten kebbes, that is to say 10 kebbes, (16) at the rate of 2 d. to 1 kebbe, royal standard, and the house is assuredly yours for ever and your children's after you as far as concerns (?) (17) the children of Jezan (sic) the son of Uriah; and no suit (lies). Me'oziah the son of Nathan has written (this) at the dictation of Yedoniah the son of Hosca. And the witnesses (18) to it (are): Menahem the son of Shallum, Mahseiah the son of Yedoniah, Menahem the son of Gadol[!] the son of Ba'adyah, Yedoniah the son of Meshullam, (19) Yishah the son of Gadol, Gadol the son of Berechiah, Jezaniah the son of Pentiliah, Ahio the son of Nathan.

Docket on the outside of the roll:

(20) Deed of conveyance which Yedoniah the son of Hosea has written in respect of the house of Jezaniah the son of Uriah (21) for Yedoniah the son of Nathan and Mahseiah his brother, both of them.

The seal is a lion with tail erect.

1. The number of the year is given twice, and presumably is the same in both cases, unless two different reckonings are followed, which is unlikely where the numbers are so nearly the same. The last stroke in both is sloping, and it is doubtful therefore whether we read them as 7 or 8. But the arrangement of the last numeral is peculiar. Elsewhere in these deeds the units are always arranged in groups of three. There is a crease in the papyrus here in the second group, and a faint trace of a hidden third stroke may perhaps be discerned. If so, the number would be 311 311 311, which would be regular, but would not agree with the other year-number, unless we assume that the final stroke is counted in one and not in the other. At any rate, if they are to be so read, the number eight is the most probable, and the date will be 417 B.C.

2. sbn 27 3777, repeated in l. 4. See on H 4.

3. jsj appears to be another name of As-[hor]. Cf. H 3. It is curious that in H 3 where the father is called by his Egyptian name, the sons are called Jews, but in K 2, where he has a Jewish name, they are called Arameans. He must have changed his name (on becoming a Jewish convert?) between the dates of H and J.

5. jsj. The n and the z alone are really certain. There is a crease in the papyrus after the n. The traces of the concealed letter suggest a z, or a z. The z might be the left-hand stroke of a n or a y (or even p). The y is probable.

None of the combinations gives any known name. The termination suggests a shortened form of nbn, like p for nbn, but the n is against this. It ought to be a Jewish name as being that of a son of Zechariah.

6. prns puz. Cf. Dan. vi. 11. prns is probably so to be read, though the last letter looks like a n owing to an accidental extra stroke.

nnum. See on E 14.

7. We should expect the 'king's highway' to have been in Syene rather than in Elephantine.

8. ypd is written as one word; equivalent to (or a mistake for) wd in A 10, 13.

11. prns. Cf. I. 14 and mrtn in C 7. It corresponds to me gild libi in the Babylonian contracts; cf. Peiser, Ketubbah, Add. 81.

13 and 16. jd nsw is difficult. It is apparently =Syr. jd nsw, apart from, except. In l. 13 Yedoniah accepts responsibility for himself and his own family, but expressly repudiates any liability for the action of (his cousins?) the sons of Jeaziah, the former owners of the house. In l. 16 perhaps it means as against Jeaziah, or in spite of any claims on his part.

14. jd, a mistake for wd.

15. prns, the construction is loose. It probably means I or any other litigant shall pay.

17. p. See note on A 9, and cf. psn l. 20.

K.

Papyrus bought by Lady William Cecil (No. 37109).

(1) On the 23rd (24th?) of Shebat, the 13th year, that is the 8th (9th?) day of Athyr, the 13th (14th?) year of Darius the king, in Yeb the fortress, (2) said Mahseiah the son of Nathan (and) Yedoniah the son of Nathan, both being Arameans of Syene, belonging to the quarter of War[iz]ath, saying: We have agreed (3) together, and have divided between us the slaves of Mibhtahyah our mother, and behold this is the share which comes to thee as (thy) share, even to thee Yedoniah: (4) (one) Petosiris by name, his mother being Tebo, a slave; I have tattooed a yod on his right hand, the writing being tattooed in Aramaic like that (5) of Mibhtahyah; and behold this is the share which has come to me as (my) share, even to me Mahseiah: (one) Belo by name, his mother being Tebo, a slave; a yod (6) I have tattooed on his right hand, the writing being tattooed in Aramaic like that of Mibhtahyah. Thou, Yedoniah, hast rights over Petosiris (7) this slave, who has come to thee as (thy) share, from this day and for ever, as well as thy children after thee, and to whomsoever thou wilt thou mayest give (him). I have no power, (8) I, Mahseiah, or son or daughter, brother or sister of mine, or any one else belonging to me, to bring an action against [thee] or against thy children in respect of Petosiris, (9) as his name is, the slave who has come to thee as (thy) share. If we sue thee concerning him, we, Mahseiah and my children, or shall sue son (10) or daughter of thine, or any one belonging to thee, in respect of this slave Petosiris who has come to thee as (thy) share, then we will pay thee a fine of pure silver (11), ten kebbes, royal weight, and we relinquish all claim on thee, and on thy children, in respect of this Petosiris (12) who has come to thee as (thy) share. He is thine, and thy children's after thee, and to whomsoever thou wilt thou mayest give (him); and no suit (lies). Moreover, there is Tebo, (13) as her name is, the mother of these lads, and Lila, her son, whom we do not yet divide between us; when the time shall come we will divide them (14) between us, and will each take possession of his share, and write a deed of our division between us; and no suit (shall lie). Nabutukulti the son of Nabuzira-ibni has written (15) this deed in Yeb the fortress at the dictation of Mahseiah and Yedoniah his brother; witnesses thereto: Menahem the son of Gadol, (16) witness Hanan the son of Haggai, witness Nathan the son of Yehoadar, witness Shallum the son of Nathan.

Docket on the outside of the roll:

(17) Deed of division of (property, to wit) a slave Petosiris, written by Mahseiah the son of Nathan for Yed[oniah] the son of Nathan his brother.

The date is 411 B.C.

1. In the numbers denoting the year there is the same peculiarity as in J.1. The final stroke in the second year-number is more slanting than in the first, and clearly does not count, so that we should read 13 in each case.

2. After  $\pi\gamma$  (twice) the slanting stroke seems to be a mark of interpunction as in L.4.

3. Mibnahyah had apparently died before this date.

4.  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$  'voice', cf. Ezra v. 14. A 'voice' is mentioned on ostricon M, obtained at Elephantine, where it was discovered by the seba'atim from the rubbish on the north-western side of the old city, immediately to the west of the site of the temple of Amon-hotep III and the citadel. It must have been on this spot that the Jewish residents were settled. On the ostricon something is ordered to be written on the slave's arm 'above the writing that is upon his arm.'  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$  seems to refer to this, though there is no evidence for a root  $\pi\pi\pi$  meaning to write (cf. Ass. šanu, to shu), and the form  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$  is very strange. Similar tattoo-marks on the wrist or arm are still almost universal in Egypt, the Copts for example being known by a tattooed cross. Cf. Ezek. ix. 4, 6. A mark had already been tattooed by Mibnahyah upon the slave, and it was an Aramaic letter, not an Egyptian hieroglyph or a cuneiform character. The alphabet used by the Jews, we thus learn, was called Aramaic. If  $\pi\pi$  is to be taken as the name of the letter, the mark after it must be intended to indicate this, like the mediaeval Hebrew way of writing  $\pi\pi$  (or the peniq in the O.T., calling attention to something unusual). It is interesting to find the name used so early. In the first case a ' is intelligible as being the initial of Yedoniah, but why should Mahseiah's slave be marked with a ' ? The lines no doubt refer to tattooing, though the translation of them is difficult. The expression  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$  (l. 4, 6) is also very strange.

5.  $\pi\pi$  seems to be the only possible way of reading the word. The letters are badly made and if they are to be so read, the word may be a mistake for  $\pi\pi$ , or possibly it is the plural, judge, since in l. 9  $\pi\pi\pi$  is used in the corresponding phrase. In any case it should follow the verb according to the usage of these deeds.

6.  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$  'call up the judge (or court)', which suggests that the common phrase  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$  really means judge and plaintiff, but cf. note on D.13.

7.  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$   $\pi\pi\pi\pi$ = $\pi\pi\pi\pi$  elsewhere.

8.  $\pi\pi\pi$  must be her son.

16.  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$ , perhaps we should read  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$ , but it would be a strange form, equivalent to  $\pi\pi\pi\pi$ . Cf.  $\pi\pi\pi$ , E.13.

MS. Aram. c. 1 (P) in the Bodleian Library.

(1) [ . . . said X to Y]son of Yathma, saying: Thou hast given me the sum of (2) [4 shekels?] according to the standard of Ptah, at the rate of one shekel to the ten, for which interest shall be due from me at the rate of 2 hallurin (3) for one shekel per month, till the day on which I repay it to you in full. The interest on (4) your money shall be[eight?] hallurin per month. Any month in which I do not give you (5) the interest, it shall be (added to the) principal and bear interest. I will pay it to you month by month (6) out of my salary which they give me from the treasury, and you shall write me a receipt for all (7) money and interest which I pay you. If I have not paid you all (8) your money and the interest on it by the month of Thoth, in the ninth (?) year, your money shall accumulate (9) with the interest on it which is outstanding 'against me, and interest (on the whole sum) shall be due from me month by month (10) till the day when I repay it (in full) to you.

(11) Witnesses:—

(12) Uqban son of Shemesh-nuri.

(13) Qogri son of Yah-hadari.

(14) Mahseiah son of Yedoniah.

(15) Malchiah son of Zechariah.

(16) Gemariah son of Ahio wrote the deed at the dictation of the witnesses whose names are upon this deed.

The date is lost

This deed was published by A. Cowley in PSBA. for May, 1903, pp. 205 seqq. It is republished here because the names make it clear that it belongs to the same series as the others, and also because some of the difficulties in it are explained by the other deeds.

The text has been ably discussed by M. Clermont-Ganneau in RAO, vi, pp. 147 sqq., 260 sqq., and by M. Halévy in Ztschr. Sem., 1903, pp. 250 sqq.

The papyrus as usual had a blank space at the top, which was very much broken. In fact only a few detached fragments of it remain, which were already separated from the rest before the papyrus was unrolled. It is therefore impossible to say what, if anything, originally stood between the blank fragments and the first line of writing. M. Clermont-Ganneau suggests that the missing date must have come at the end, after the statement about the scribe, and refers to CIS, nos. 64-71. But the end of the papyrus presents a clean, straight edge, evidently as originally finished off by the manufacturer. Moreover the end was the innermost part of the roll, and therefore completely protected from the time when it was first rolled up until it was unrolled in the Bodleian Library. The beginning was injured because it was on the outside of the roll. In all the other deeds the date is at the beginning, and we might therefore expect that the same would be the case here. It is not certain, however, because this deed differs in some respects from the others, e.g. the mention of the scribe is after, not before, the names of the witnesses. As stated in PSBA, it is quite uncertain how the fragments of letters at the top are to be arranged. They must belong to the beginning because they are on fragments which had become detached from the papyrus before it was unrolled. After many attempts at reconstruction we have come to the following conclusions about them: the first fragment has a n, which may be part of a name; the second fragment, containing traces too small to be identified, does not belong to it; the third has the remnants of what might be [t]pət2 and might have belonged to the date in the missing line; the fourth looks like tq or tp, and, if so, must have belonged to the beginning of the present l. 2; the last contains a clear n preceded by what can only be the remnant of a t, which must either be part of tət3, required at the beginning of the present l. 1, or, more probably, from the appearance of the papyrus, part of tət3 restored in l. 1 before tət3. If a whole line is lost at the beginning, the missing parts might be restored with some probability as follows:—

It is difficult, however, to believe that a line can have disappeared so completely, leaving no traces (e.g. of 3 or 7) on the blank space above l. 1. The alternative is equally difficult, but on the whole preferable, that the deed began with the present l. 1, and that the date, if any, was somehow expressed in the lost part of l. 1. With regard to the date it may be observed that in B 18, written in the first year of Artaxerxes, one of the witnesses is a Gemariah b. Ahio, who may reasonably be identified with the scribe of this deed (l. 16), and one of the contracting parties in B, תְּמִימָה, is a witness here (l. 14). Both Gemariah and Mahseiah must therefore have been of full age in 465 B.C., and the date of the deed, though it may be earlier, can hardly be much later than this, for the writing is not at all that of an old man. Unfortunately the names of the witnesses were written by the scribe, so that we cannot compare Mahseiah's signature here with that in E 17 (about eighteen years later than B) evidently written by an old man. Gemariah does not appear in any deed dated later than B (463 B.C.). From 460 to 455 B.C. Egypt was in revolt against the Persian rule. If we suppose that L was written during that period (cf. on ms. 3343 I, 2) the date would probably be expressed as 'year 1' &c., as in I, 8, without any king's name; cf. the inscriptions on the Jewish coins of the revolt, in NSJ, pp. 326, 358. Since the debt was to be paid at the beginning of the year, it was probably contracted at the end of a year (see on I, 8) and the mention of the month would be unnecessary. Putting the year as late as possible, we may perhaps venture to fill up the beginning thus:—

עמ' ۱۱۱ – ۵۵۵ – אפריל ۲۰۰۷ – בר יתבאל

1. most possible occurs also in N.

תְּמִימָה. The end of the  $\text{ב}$  is visible, and the completion is required by the sense and by the analogy of the other deeds.

2. Whether the  $\wp$  on the fragment mentioned above belongs here or not, the statement of the amount of the loan must have stood at the beginning of this line.

The first stroke may be a 1, part of the numeral stating the amount lent. If we read 8 hallurim in 1.4, the loan will be 4 shekels. M. Clermont-Ganneau proposes ~~xxvii~~ (or -5) at the beginning of 1.2, and refers to M § 1.

'שׁוֹבֵן is supplied on the analogy of שׁוֹבֵן תְּמִימָה, and admits of little doubt when once it is suggested. The tail of each 2 is quite clear, and can hardly be anything else. Of the weight or standard of Ptah we know no more than of the 'Royal weight' generally used. If the deed was written during the revolt, as suggested above, the weight of Ptah may have been used because there was no king. It would be the national standard, in use before the Persian conquest, and reintroduced at the time of the revolt. As Ptah was the god specially worshipped at Memphis, it would be the standard of Memphis, but does not necessarily show that the deed was drawn up there.

W was read as ng in PSBA. As the stroke is like that used in the other deeds, where it cannot be t, there is no doubt that it is here only a mark of abbreviation, so that the difficult word w disappears. The w is no doubt for bew.

→ was read → in PSBA, which seemed impossible in an Aramaic document. M. Clermont-Ganneau suggested that it was a sign for 1000, but the analogy of the other deeds would make it represent שְׁמֵן. The argument therefore for 1000 shekels being the amount of the loan derived from this passage falls to the ground.

which shall produce interest from me.

777. See PSBA, pp. 206, 207. The rate of interest is 2 halburin per shekel. In later times 20 to 30 per cent. was the usual rate. If it is here 20 per cent. the shekel would be worth 120 halburin; at 30 per cent. it would be worth 80 halburin. But see above, p. 12. M. Clermont-Ganneau, on the basis of Josephus' statement (An. ill. 8, 2), ingeniously argues that if 1 shekel = 4 drachmae = 14 obolae = 192 χατάραι, and if a halburin = 8 χατάραι, the interest would be at the moderate rate of 12½ per cent., which in eight years (see on l. 8) would produce an amount, at simple interest, equal to the original loan.

4. The entire numeral may be III-III or possibly II-III-III. The small fragment following seems not to belong here.
1 ٣٣٣. The stroke may be a numeral or merely a mark of punctuation.

*<sup>2</sup> is on a fragment which has accidentally been shifted to the line below. Considering the state of the papyrus, it was thought better not to attempt to rearrange any of the displaced fragments.

<sup>6</sup> מִסְרָא, properly my share, probably meaning my wages.
הַמְנֻחָה was read in PSBA, 1922, but in the other deeds the 123, as has been pointed out by Dr. Pernauaki (in a private communication) and by M. Clermont-Ganneau (R.A.D., p. 150).

occurs in the Samaritan Targum on Lev. xvi. 8-10, for the Heb. בְּנֵי. If it is connected with Arab. بَنِي it should mean a strip, something thrown aside and rejected—not a very suitable word for a receipt, unless it means cashing off an obligation by paying one's debt. Even then it ought to be represented in Aramaic by ת. Perhaps, after all, the words are distinct, the Samaritan תִּזְבַּח being a loan-word from Arabic, written phonetically, something drawn, i.e. a list, while here it is much more likely to be a Persian legal term from خُتَّاب (as suggested in PSBA.), something written, a formal receipt. Cf. Haug in Ewald's Jahrb. 1853, p. 160.

8. III III ... תְּנֵגָג. As M. Clermont-Ganneau very justly observes, this cannot be the year of a king, because before the time expired the king might be dead and the date meaningless. It might, however, be the number of years after the revolt. Supposing the deed to have been so dated at the beginning, the number of the year could not be greater than five. Here the smallest number which would suit the space is nine. From the end of year 5 to the first day of Thoth (the first month) in year 9, is three years—a reasonable period for a loan. M. Clermont-Ganneau also reads nine here, but takes it as the ninth year after the drawing up of the deed. He points out that the term is then eight years, in which time the simple interest at 10 per cent. (see on 1. 2) would have accumulated to the amount of the original capital.

תְּנֵגָג was rendered in PSBA. shall be doubled, but it more probably means (as M. Clermont-Ganneau proposes), shall accumulate, i.e. overdue interest was to be added to the principal, and interest was then to be paid on the whole, so that in case of non-payment the debt would increase by compound interest. There is, however, no evidence for this meaning of the root.

13. תְּנֵגָג. There seems to be no other way of reading this strange name.

16. מְתֻבָּה. Both M. Clermont-Ganneau and M. Halévy prefer to take this as scribe rather than document.

20. לְפָנֶיךָ, generally לְפָנֶיךָ. In the presence of (PSBA.) is not quite accurate.

The arrangement of the end of the deed is different from that of the others in having half of L 10 left blank, the word תְּנֵגָג and names of the witnesses being on separate lines, while the mention of the scribe comes at the end.

The reading of the ostraca is still too uncertain to admit of a translation. The texts, however, are reprinted here (from the PSBA., pp. 264, 311, 312, 314), with some corrections, for the sake of completeness, as they seem to belong to the same group of documents as the papyri. In fact, M and N were found together with L.

M (apparently complete).

a. Seems to refer to the transaction in papyrus L. Perhaps the writer was the borrower in L.

3. The stroke after תְּנֵגָג was read as ת in PSBA. It is more probably the mark of punctuation, as in K 4.5. M. Clermont-Ganneau (RAD., p. 150), translates II. 3-6: Die que vous entendez dire que les . . . donnent le vende à Sybre, envers moi etc., taking תְּנֵגָג as participle and תְּנֵגָג as in L.

4. מְתֻבָּה is probable, but the p has an unusual shape. Perhaps papyrus!

5. תְּנֵגָג is written over a flaw in the earthenware. The ת is fairly certain. M. Clermont-Ganneau suggests תְּנֵגָג, but the last letter can hardly be a ת.

verger from תְּנֵגָג or תְּנֵגָג (C.-G.) in the sense of ratifying a document.

8. g. M. Clermont-Ganneau would read these together, תְּנֵגָג, taking תְּנֵגָג (l. 9) as a mistake for תְּנֵגָג.

8. This side of the ostracon is palimpsest, and traces of the first text are visible between l. 1 and 2 (תְּנֵגָג) and between l. 4 and 5 (תְּנֵגָג v). There are traces elsewhere, but they are illegible.

1. מְתֻבָּה. M. Clermont-Ganneau takes this as מְתֻבָּה shop.

תְּנֵגָג he takes as Heb. תְּנֵגָג away, and translates: donne à Gomaryah la boutique que m'a donnée Ourijah en garantie de mon prêt; qu'il en perçoive le loyer et qu'il me crédite Ourijah (i.e. as part interest on the loan). This again, like the other side, would seem to refer to L, though here the writer appears to be the lender. On the other hand, what follows might well refer to K, if K and L were not probably of very different dates.

3. תְּנֵגָג; in Ezra iv. 13 תְּנֵגָג is a tax.

תְּנֵגָג is written in a strange manner but fairly certain; it is clear, ת and נ are run together and the ו has a curious form; תְּ is above the line.

4. תְּנֵגָג, on the original this seems to be the most likely reading, but תְּנֵגָג are not impossible; hardly תְּנֵגָג.

תְּנֵגָג. M. Clermont-Ganneau thinks this cannot be = Heb. תְּנֵגָג, and proposes to identify it with תְּנֵגָג the door of the shop (l. 1), but cf. note on K 4.

N. This ostracon is much obliterated, but the readings are fairly certain, and give a sense.

1. מְתֻבָּה, uncertain: apparently a proper name.

3. מְתֻבָּה, perhaps מְתֻבָּה.

5. מְתֻבָּה is probable and, if right, shows that this and the following lines have lost something at the beginning. The rest of the line is very faint, but is possibly as printed. If מְתֻבָּה is right, we might restore מְתֻבָּה as on M, and identify both with the person mentioned in L.

The hand is like that of CIS. 155. The contents may have some relation to CIS. 137 B.

O. a. Perhaps the address of the letter on the other side.

The fragment is palimpsest. Above l. 3 is תְּנֵגָג belonging to the first text, of which there are other traces. It is in a different hand from the others.

P. 1. תְּנֵגָג part, share, or half.

4. מְתֻבָּה. Since the writing is like that of M, and both appear to be of the same date (c. 450 B.C.) as most of the papyri, this may well be Mahseiah son of Yedoniah.

5. תְּנֵגָג as in M & 8.

Q. a. 3. תְּ may be תְּ.

4. Very uncertain. תְּ may be תְּ.

5. a. תְּ very doubtful.

5. Or . . . תְּ.

It is in a different hand from the others, somewhat resembling O.

This image shows a vertical strip of aged, yellowish-brown paper. The paper has a textured appearance with some darker spots and irregular edges, suggesting it is from an old document. There are very faint, illegible markings on the paper, which appear to be bleed-through from the reverse side of the page. The text is mostly obscured by the paper's color and texture.

and was held at the old schoolhouse. Now we are in the church and have a new organ and piano.

All the time we were working on our (what do you call it) new piano the old piano was in the hall. We had a lot of fun playing all kinds of things on it. — But I think I like the old piano best.
I think it's better than the new one.
We are all very happy now. We have a lot of fun.
All the time we were working on our piano.

und linken Ende wie in der Mitte und nicht weiter als bis zum unteren Ende der Tafel von der einander gegenüberliegenden
Seite aus gesehen werden kann.
Hier ist die Tafel in einer Reihe von zwei Reihen von vier Tafeln aufgetheilt.
Die eine Reihe ist oben, die andere unten.
Die obere Reihe besteht aus vier Tafeln die untere aus vier Tafeln.

This image shows a vertical strip of aged, yellowish-brown paper. The paper has a slightly textured appearance and some minor discoloration or foxing. There are some very faint, illegible markings or smudges on the surface, which appear to be bleed-through from the reverse side of the page. The overall condition of the paper suggests it is quite old.
