TART not at my Name, you formidable Champions against the Patriots of IRE-LAND: I have not rifen from the Dead. Such an one might indeed affright, but could not convince you: And well for you he could not; for Conviction, you are perfuaded, would ruin you. But recollect, and you will clearly perceive, that you might ever write on at the fame rate, though you were thoroughly convinced.

I AM well known in the political World : I am as much respected in the Region of party-colour'd Gentry, as the Trunk-maker was heretofore in the Theatre ; and, in all Places I resort, am called a faithful Irishman ; so that you cannot get Dishonour, by entering the Lifts with me : It is fome Condescension in me, in your present Circumstances, to take a Turn with either of you.

To be more particular in the Defcription of myfelf; I am, and have been, long in the Family of the Vindicator of the Proceeding of the Honourable House of Commons, &c. and could I conveniently let you A 2 into into the feveral Branches of my Office, which arife from the Confidence my Mafter daily places in me, you would be tempted to give me the Name of Scrub inftead of that of Dionyfius.

ONE Branch of my Office, however, I must acquaint you with ; that is, to buy everyPrint that appears in the Street, (for herein confists my Master's Extravagance) and to peruse them all carefully, (which indeed is an ample Punishment for all my Sins) and to lay before my Master those which strike me as fit for his Inspection ; but to conceal the rest, that his Time may not be misemployed, in an Examination of Works, neither of publick nor private Use.

THIS Duty imposed upon me hath made me acquainted with A third Letter to the Publick—An Anfwer to the Proceeding, &c. fo far as the fame relates to the Confiderations, &c.—and, An Anfwer to Part of a Pamphlet, intitled, The Proceeding, &c. by the Author of the Observations, &c.—which I have most faithfully with-held from the Perusal of my Master; being very unworthy Returns for the Pains he took to inform you, with all others, who needed Instruction upon the Subject.

But it is not enough that I have acted thus: I know you will be much difappointed, if you cannot provoke my Mafter to write more, and to keep you employed; you will fancy, nay, you will report, that you have given fuch a ftunning Blow, that he cannot quickly recover his Senfes. I muft therefore let you know, that your Performances were too mean to be admitted into his Prefence, when I, in the Anti-chamber, could effectually confute what you do not confute one another in.

IT makes me very uneafy to fee how differently you express yourselves about the Vindication, according cording to the different Effects it hath upon your. feveral Paffions.

THE Town generally faith, it is cool and difpaffionate;—you, Mr. Letter-writer, fay, Page 16, That the Author is very angry; and again, Page 17, "That he appears in an angry Mood from his "first fetting out, to the Conclusion of his Paper.

You, Mr. Confiderer, fay thus, Page 5, "To fay nothing of his perfonal Invectives, which are indeed too low."

BUT you, Mr. Observator, talking of the Struggle that the Vindicator hath made, to keep to himself and his Associates certain respected Titles, fay, "That this hath been hitherto done, by poisoning the Minds of uninform'd People, with most indecent and ill-grounded Investives. But now, that be is brought into a cool Method of Reasoning, the Question must be left to the Decision of unprejudiced Readers,"

I pray you to fettle this Matter amongst yourfelves; for it was impossible he could be angry and a cool Reasoner; that he could have refrained from Investives, and have made use of very low ones at one and the same Instant.

THERE is a furprifing Miftake in the Triumvirate about this Matter, which I cannot take upon me to rectify. However, this I must observe, that they all concurred, in finding Fault at one time or other, though they could not agree in the Point.

HAVING fo far addreffed you jointly, 1 must now take you feparately in the order you step'd into the World.

THE LETTER-WRITER first made his Appearance in a most dreadful Fury, for the Contempt with which he had been treated; and I cannot but fay, he had good Reason to be outrageous; for he was indeed treated with infinite Contempt, when he was fen-A 3 tenced hnce. Which and tenced to be chastis'd, by the Confiderations and Obfervations.

But, poor Man! he hath, as angry Men commonly do, given my Master every Advantage over him he could wish for.

HE charges, Page 15, the Vindicator, with faying, "That he (the Letter-writer) very precipi-"tately declared, that our unhappy Difputes have been, not about Effentials, but merely upon Forms and Ceremonies.

AND from thence to the End of the 16th Page, he hath most ingeniously laboured to prove, and at length with great Clearness shewed to a Demonstration, that he did by fair Argument, and from a Concatenation of Causes, draw this Conclusion, "That the Disputes were not about Effentials, but "merely upon Forms and Ceremonies."—I must confess he hath fairly overthrown the Charge of Precipitancy; for he proved himself to be a very flow Reasoner: And fo I must take the Liberty to leave him where I found him.

THE CONSIDERER next advanced, not one Whit lefs angry than the LETTER-WRITER; but being conftitutionally more phlegmatick, did not fo fuddenly run himfelf off his Speed.

HE, Page 5, with great Refentment, charges my Master, with giving him foul Usage, "by blend-"ing and perplexing his Arguments, with those of others, with whom he was in no Connection; and whose Pamphlets he had not seen or heard of, until they were in Print.

I BELIEVE my Master, if he were acquainted with this Matter, would find it pretty difficult to contrive an Apology for this Author. All that ought to be faid upon the Occasion is, that the LETTER-WRITER, who appears to be a pretty Scholar, very conversant in his favourite Author; and and the OBSERVATOR, who is as expert in Figures, as any Hocus-Pocus Doctor with Cups and Ball, are made his Companions. If they are alhamed of one another, who can help it? The Readers think much alike of them all.

THE CONSIDERER will fee, what a Hurry the LETTER-WRITER was thrown into, by being put under the Difcipline of his Friends, the CONSI-DERATIONS and OBSERVARIONS; how he flung about, and endangered every Body near him, for being put into fo glaring a Light; and he may fee, what Pains the OBSERVATOR hath taken, Page 3, at fetting out, to eftablifh an Opinion, that he had not any Acquaintance with the CONSIDERER. If the Vindicator fhould prefume to make an Apology to either, he certainly may expect, to bring the others upon his Back; and therefore muft wait, until they agree amongft themfelves, which deferves the Preference.

I cannot however but observe, Mr. CONSIDERER, that you vastly exceed your Brethren in Modesty; for where you will not pretend to fay, you are not vanquished, you are decently filent. Thus you have fairly given up the Precedent of 1749; To be fure, you mean not more to trouble the World with an unprofitable Criticism about Consent and Intention; and you are without Doubt assended of that simple Observation, that the Attorney-General made the Motion; and of the foolish Apology, that you formerly made for his Majesty's Servants not inferting originally the Word CONSENT.

BUT why were you not explicit about the Objection, that the Recital was inferted in Great-Britain? It was not enough to be filent about this, as you knew in your Confcience that Argument was never made Use of, you should have A 4 been

You have indeed relinquished all the Precedents you formerly fo vehemently relied upon, for which I give you Credit. But then you must take Notice, that your Readers are hereby taught, not entirely to depend upon your peremptory Decisions.

EXPLAIN for your Readers the following Words in Page 4, 5. of your Anjwer. "Therefore he "(the CONSIDERER) muft fay, that the Writer "of the Vindication betrays a Want of Candour, as "well as a Diffidence in his Abilities to defend the "Caufe he hath engaged in, when he endeavours to ftop a Search after Truth, by introducing the Name of that Body (the Houfe of COMMONS) into the Debate, in the Manner he hath, more than once, done in the Courfe of his Argu-"ment."

I believe, whoever reads this will think the Author thereof was confoundedly frightened: But pluck up your Spirits, Mr. CONSIDERER, you have ftroked the COMMONS in the preceding Paragraph, "wherein you hope you have kept clear of offending an important Body, for whose Constitutional Rights, no one can have a higher, or more just "Respect."

I wifh indeed you had not diftinguished these Words Constitutional Rights by Italicks, by which you seem to Hint, that they claim some Rights not altogether Constitutional; and that you referve to yourself a Power of expounding your Words hereafter, either for or against them, as Occasion shall offer, or they shall be up or down: If they should take that into their Heads, it may go ill with you. But as your Intention, you say, was not to offend them, the best your Friends can expect is, that you may be overlooked; fince the COMMONS never can fubmit their Rights or Privileges to be difcuffed by Lawyers, or to be determined by Judges of inferior Courts.

But be fo Kind as to Point out, how my Master could vindicate the Commons, without bringing the Name of that Body into the Debate. He hath faid indeed, " that there were fundry Pamphlets, little " better than Libels against the Commons, against " the Constitution, and against Truth, at a great Ex-" pence, and in a Manner unufual in this Kingdom, " put into the Hands of all who would accept of " them, from the Capital to the remotest Corner " of the Nation."

CAN this be denied? If you doubt it, look into your own Confiderations, the Observations, the three Letters-to the Publick, and, above all, into the curious QUERIES impudently addressed to all the serious boneft and well-meaning People of Ireland. Who encouraged these Papers? Who adopted them? Who patronized them ? Who difperfed them ? Can Libels only be on one Side? Suppose the Majority had happened to be on the other Side on the ever Memorable 17th of December; would not the Commons have been a most respectable Body of People ? Has not the Majority been hourly abused by Libellers, from the Day on which it was fixed, that the Parliament should be prorogued, because they were not on that Side? Has any one Printer or Publisher been yet fent to NEWGATE, for thus libelling one of the Estates in Parliament?

IF their Advocates cannot punish, allow them to complain. Words will not put you into the Pillory. Do not stop their Mouths, and then fay they will not tell Truth. Truth is worshipped by every Lover of of Liberty; but it is prophaned in the Mouth of a Slave.

You have fo fhuffled the Words APPROPRIA-TION and APPLICATION, that you have fairly worn out their Meaning; yet I cannot blame you for this, because your Business was to puzzle.

THE whole Difpute arofe upon a Surplus after the Trust was discharged; for so was the Fact, when a new Supply was demanded. It hath been shewn by the Vindication, that every Surplus hath been appropriated or applied, (take which Word you like,) to the current Service of the Publick, or to the publick Service, (chuse also whichsoever Expression you like best in this Place) and that therefore the Commons could not, without betraying the Rights, which were intrusted to their Care, and without totally changing, nay subverting the regular Proceeding in Parliament, solemnly allow, that they could not even propose the Application of a Surplus, which they had ever done, without the previous Confent of the Crown.

IT is poffible learned Men may be able to conftrue Things fo, as to make them unintelligible to plain natural Reafon. It must be fo, or there could not arife fo many Difficulties in the Scripture; I mean in the Explanation of the Scripture; for there are truly none in the Scripture.

Now give me leave, without one Scrap of Learning more than what I have picked up accidentally, (of which I dare not make Use, left I should misapply it, as my Betters often do;) to fay, that if the History of this Affair in the Vindication be true, and that bath not been disputed, the Commons have an inherent Right, to apply every Surplus, after the Ends of Government are answered, within the Term for which the Supply was granted; and that therefore therefore, all that is faid about the Right of Application in the intermediate Time, is an Evalion of the Point in Difpute, and nothing at all to the Purpofe. Therefore, Mr. CONSIDERER, give me leave without Offence, to charge you with the going befide the true Queftion, and making Ufe of your two beloved Words, APPROPRIATION and APPLI-CATION, as old Women mumble Charms over Children, under Pretence of curing the Worms, but in Truth, to cheat the Parents of their Money.

I am fure you will be aftonished at my great Knowledge in this Matter, and be curious to know how I came by it. To gratify your Curiofity, I must inform you, that I am one of the many Politicians made by the late active Winter; and that I forn to draw Learning from any Place but the Fountain-Head; and the Fountain-Head indeed I applied to: For very early I contracted an Acquaintance with one of the Servants, belonging to the House of Commons, who permitted me, in Difguise, to stand within the Door, where I learned all I know of the Matter; and I do now most heartily Wish, you had gone to the school, for your own Improvement, and the Quiet of the Publick.

HOWEVER, though you have diffurbed Men's Minds not a little; you have made fome Amends, by exhibiting the prettieft Method of replying that ever was invented: Such an One as will excellently ferve all whimfical or abfurd Authors, who fhall fucceed you. It is fo entertaining, that it cannot fail to pleafe a Reader.

WHEN your main Argument is turned Topfy-Turvy, then you charge your Antagonift with Equivocation, put two Meanings upon his Words, chufe that which is leaft obvious, but most apt for your your Purpofe, and down you lay him at your Feet. — Excellent and Stout.

WHEN you find your Antagonist hath clearly proved, that you either knew nothing of the Matter, or wilfully concealed the Strength of the Argument, you take as much Merit to yourself, allowing there is no very essential Difference between you.—Truly ingenuous !

WHEN great Labour is used, to shew your Proofs from History to be False or Impertinent, and that is demonstrated; then you make a new State of the Case, against which your Adversary could not provide; and tell him, be might have spared the unnecessary Pains be bath taken: And thus you ingeniously give him a Go-by. Very Honest!

WHEN your Adversary thinks he hath fully anfwered all your Objections, you at once dash his Hopes to Pieces, and destroy the Force of every thing he hath faid, by looking big, and positively affuring your Readers, that be hath attempted, but in vain, to answer.—Wondrously modest !

FACTS are nothing in your Way. His you deny, by affirming the contrary to be true. Your own you establish by afferting them to be Fasts.

PRECEDENTS, the ftronger they happen to be, fo much the worfe for them; for you prove, with a clearnefs peculiar to yourfelf, that they proving too much, are good for nothing.

THE whole you finish, by affirming in Capitals, that you are UNANSWERED, and thus the Piece is rendered compleat.

HAPPY Man ! who hath discovered so easy a Road to Fame, by being for ever invincible.

IN

IN the third Place, I must address my felf to the OBSERVATOR, an incorrigible old Sinner, who deals much in Facts, and obstinately, without pretending to the Cloak of Modesty, adheres to them, though they have been confuted by Friends and Foes.

INDEED, Mr. OBSERVATOR, I cannot wonder at any Thing you fay; but however, for your own fake you should have a little Caution, and not point out directly to the very Spot wherein your Guilt appears in its ftrongeft Colours. In what Part of the 35th Page of the VINDICATION, doth the Author disclaim all Pretence to the fole Right of drawing up Heads of Money-Bills, as you affert he doth, in Page 5, of your Answer. He there denies indeed, that the fole Right of having Money-Bills take their Rife in the House of Commons, was, as you fally afferted, in your Observations, an Argument for throwing out the Money-Bill. He meddles not farther with the Affair. He had no Occafion to infift upon it; for it was not in Difpute: And he had acted imprudently, if he had difclaimed it, when the CONSIDERATIONS, that were published by Authority, and dispersed FOR HIS MAJESTY'S SERVICE, had expressly, Page 33, admitted the Right of granting Money to be in the Commons : And however jealous you may be of the Author, or he of you, you dare not difpute his Doctrine, nor has he difavowed it. But your Charge in this Place against the VINDICATOR is but a Peccadillo, compared with what is to come.

In the Account you give, Mr. OBSERVATOR, of the Bill in 1749, Pages 6, 7, 8, you are big with Milreprefentation; but this Matter having been already fully difcuffed between the CONSIDERA-TIONS and the VINDICATION, and at length having been given up by the CONSIDERATIONS, fullenly lenly enough; it is not worth while, to revive it at your Inftance. It will be enough to fix my Finger upon the Point, in which you and your Friend, Mr. CONSIDERER, woefully difagree. --- Page 8, you fay, " In Confequence whereof, (that is of " imaginary Meffages, &c.) the Words agreeably to bis Majefty's most gracious Intentions, were in-" ferted, in the Heads of the Bill, as most expressive " of his Majefty's previous Confent, and of the " Manner of obtaining thereof; and it is now very " well known, that if the Terms on which his Ma-" jefty's previous Confent was given, had not been " complied with, as it was chearfully, and in a most " remarkable Manner, by those who applied to the " Lord Lieutenant on this Occasion, the Bill for " Payment of Part of the Loan-Debt, would not " have been then paffed into a Law, without " Words being inferted either here or in Great-" Britain, for the Support of his Majefty's Preroga-« tive and Dignity."

Now, Mr. OBSERVATOR, attend with Patience, to fee yourfelf brought to Shame by the Consi-DERER, with whom you dare not contend; for he ftruts under the Cloak of Power, with which I am fure you will not ftrive.

PAGE 7 of the CONSIDERATIONS, the Author fpeaking of this very Point, faith, "As the Occafion " was new, it is not to be wondered at, that the Gen-" tlemen who conducted the Affair, on this Side of " the Water, fhould not be exact as to the Form " in which his Majefty's Confent ought to appear : " And probably, they apprehended that the Return " of a Bill for that Purpofe, under the Great Seal " of Great Britain, would be a fufficient Notification " of his Majefty's previous Confent to fuch Applica-" tion. Again, Page 9, he faith, " But as that " Recital, (agreeably to your Majefty's most gracious " Intentions) " Intentions) though it feems ftrongly to imply his "Majefty's previous Confent, had not clearly and explicitly expressed the fame, and not having done fo, might occasion future Cavils on that Head; it is faid (and I prefume the Fact is well known to be true) that Objections were made to this Bill, on that Account, by those to whom it was, as usual, referred in Great-Britain. How it happened, that his Majesty's Confent was not by them, at that Time, inferted, may I think be fairly accounted for; as the Omission on this Side, feemed to have been occasioned merely by the Novelty of the Case, without any Intention of questioning the King's Right, &c."

IF thou hast one blush about thee, let it out, Mr. OBSERVATOR, at being thus exposed by thy Fellow-Labourer.

BUT, I fear, it is too late, to call for Marks of Contrition. Thy OBSERVATIONS warranted a Sufpicion that you were miftaken in every Article; but thy Defence of those Observations, in a pretended ANSWER to the VINDICATION, thews clearly, that - you cannot shelter yourfelf under that Apology of being miftaken; nay, that you fcorn to be fereened. You are grown callous, and refolved to brazen it out in the Face of the World. Thus, Page 9, you - infift, that your Affirmation in the OBSERVATIONS, " " That one Argument employed for rejecting of " the Bill, was raifed on the Pretence of the fole " Right of having Money-Bills take their Rife in "" the Houfe of Commons, and that no Alteration " thould be made in those Bills, after they are pre-" pared by the House', is TRUE, and that you never bave an evil Defign in what you write.---- What - could prompt you to perfift in fuch a FIB, but a wicked Defign against this Country? It is evident, the Tale was not calculated for this Meridian ; becaule caufe it is here univerfally known to be falfe. The Minority of December 17, to a Man, could confute you; the Author of the CONSIDERATIONS, (and his Authority is fo far out of all Queftion) Page 20, declares, "He could not fuppofe it could be fo," and in his Anfwer, though he was called upon to be explicit, is fullenly filent, which with him is a Knockingunder. But you have, doubtlefs, made a Merit of this Matter elfewhere, and chufe to hazard your Reputation, rather than to retract. Some you hope will ftill believe you; and therefore you will not give up, by an open Confeffion. But even thofe you muft lofe, when they find out, that your Friend, the Principal Advocate for your Party, hath given you up.

IN Page 10, you fay, " that the Inference " drawn by the VINDICATOR, Page 72, is all " his own, and no way warranted by the Observa-" vations".

Wondrous Effrontery! turn to Page 22 of the Observations, and read these Words and Figures, " The Debt of the Nation at Lady-day 1745, £ 258517 10 6-" and this Observation immediately following, "But it appears, that the Nation " paid Intereft for £ 335000."- Again : Turn to Page 23, where this Observation will stare you full in the Face, " That it was fomewhat extraordi-" nary, that an additional Loan fhould be made " of £ 70000 at this Time, when so large a Sum " of Money as 71947 was allowed to be due to " the Nation (abstracted from the former Loans) " after answering all the Demands on Account of " the Eftablishments, and all other Charges what-" foever to the 25th of March 1745, and that it " is well known that a confiderable Arrear is con-" ftantly due on these Articles."

To

Do not these feveral Observations well warrant the Inference drawn by the Vindication for the Observations, Page 72. " That it is extraordinary, that " the Nation should be reported, to be in Debt but " two hundred and fifty-eight thousand, five hun-" dred and feventeen Pounds, ten Shillings and " fix pence; and should, if it had a Power over " the Surplus, without the PREVIOUS CONSENT of " the Crown, pay at the fame Time Intereft for " fo much a greater Sum; and not only fubmit " to this Hardship, but also raise a farther Sum of " feventy thousand Pounds at Interest,

CAN any other Meaning be put upon these OB-SERVATIONS? If there can, why did not the OB-SERVATOR shew his Skill, and draw another more natural, and more agreeable to his Intention. He best knew, if there was any fuch : And as he hath not favoured us with another, we must be content with that we have, though it unhappily exposes his bad Heart.

THE Method you have taken to prove, that the Vindicator hath miftated the Fact, when he affirmed, " That the Troops of this Country were car-" ried to the Affiftance of England ; and that there-" fore the Difference could not be called a fav-" ing, &c." is fingularly merry. For you prove it, by shewing, that there were drawn out of the Kingdom, one Regiment of Horse, two Regiments of Dragoons, and fourteen Regiments of Foot. Indeed, you fay, " That in order to keep up our Troops to the " full Complement of 12000 Men, the Regiments " which remained in Ireland, were increased in " Numbers by the Addition of private Men, and a " few Officers." Even this is not true. The Vindicator's Remarks are general, upon the fluctuating Condition of the Army during the whole War ; and it cannot be forgotten, that in 1745, the Army was was fo fmall, the Foot confifting of four Regiments only of 1400 Men each, that it was thought neceffary by fome Gentlemen, to move in Parliament, for an Addrefs to his Majefty, to raife 4000 Foot, for the Security of the Kingdom.

You have not denied, that inftead of one Farthing of your boasted Saving being in the Treasury, the Nation really contracted a Debt between 1741 and 1747, of £ 38939 6 11. Your new jesuitical Expedient to impose upon your Readers, and to keep up the Credit of your Saving, is indeed a Master-piece, " That if there had not been those " Savings, the Debt would have been in that Time "£437133 17 1, inftead of £38939 6 11." What, think you it was a Favour, not to lay out Money, voted for a certain Eftablishment, when that Eftablishment did not exist? A wretched Minister of State would you make indeed, if fuch were to be your Economy. It would be kind, if you would in your Recantation, which, if you have any Candour left; you must soon make, observe for the Vindicator, That if there was not Provision made in one Seffion for a larger Establishment, than continued to the other Seffion, there could not be a Saving, even in your way of computing; and thus you will give his Argument against you its just Force.

I HAVE very little Skill in Figures, just as much as I have acquired merely to keep fome minute Accounts in the Family; yet I am able, by the Aid of an undefigning Understanding, free from Art or Cunning, to detect a new Fallacy, furprizing only, as it was unneceffary.

To explain the Thing fully, I must first quote your Inference, before I examine your Juggle, that you may not have a Subterfuge left.

PAGE 27, you fay; "Thus I have ftated the "Supplies voted, and the Produce of the Aids "granted granted, from Lady-day 1739 to Lady-day 1749: And it fully appears that the Produce of the Aids hath always fallen fhort of the Supplies. The Reader may perceive that there has been fome Increafe der may perceive that there has been fome Increafe did not enable them to anfwer the Supplies for which they were granted to the Crown; fo we may conclude that the Redundant Money in the Treafury at Lady-day 1749, did not arife from Exceedings in the Aids, as fome would vainly imagine. We must therefore look out for fome other Source of this Redundancy."

" THE Increase of the Hereditary Revenue has contributed thereto, and that in a treble Proportion, to what the Increase in the additional Duties has done; but the chief Source of this Redundancy has been the Savings in the Civil Lift, and Military Eftablishment.

You are, I think, fairly beaten out of your Fortrefs, called Savings, and therefore I shall have no more Words with you upon that Subject. And indeed you begun to suspect that this was not tenable, and therefore you provided another Place of Force to retire to; viz. the treble Proportion of the Increase of the Hereditary Revenue. But this must also now fall into the Hands of the Conqueror; as soon as it is recollected, that the Additional Duties are given but in Aid of the Hereditary Revenue; and that not a Penny of the Hereditary Revenue can ever be justly called a Redundancy, if the Publick Services call for the Application of any Part of the Additional Duties; for the Principal must be confumed, before the Aid can be wanted.

Now, to fhew clearly the boneft Manner in which you ftate the Supplies voted, and the Produce of the Aids granted; and how fairly you prove that the Produce of the Aids hath always fallen Short of the the Supplies, I will examine the particular Æra of 1743, having procured the neceffary Information for that Period, and that will ferve for all; there being no other Variation in the feveral Inftances, than what arifes from the different Ballances.

PAGE 22, you fay, the Debt of the Nation at Lady-day 1743 was voted, to be a Sum, not exceeding 331,440*l*. 12s. 6d. and that the Supply granted toward Payment of the faid Debt, &c. was a Sum not exceeding 521906*l*. 10s. 6d. from whence you deduct 9742*l*. granted by Parliament, and then the Supply remaining is 512,164*l*. 10s. 6d.

THEN you proceed to fhew how the Account for the two Years turned out.

PERHAPS

PERHAPS a fouler Fraud never was attempted to be imposed upon Mankind than this appears to be, even upon the Face of this Account : For herein is confessed, that there was a Fund provided for the Payment of an Interest for a certain Principal, and yet the Principal is not separated, as fairly it ought, from the Total of the Supply.

THE Debt to bear Intereft was a Sum of 327,590 l. 18 s. 11 d. which being deducted from the Total of the Supply, there remained but 184,573 l. 11 s. 7 d. for the Support of the Eftablifhment; fo that in Truth, the additional Duties, (allowing alfo for the Article deficient in the Fund for Intereft,) produced 92,808 l. 17 s. 2 d. more than they were granted for. You may out of this, if you pleafe, deduct 59,074 l. 9 s. 1 d. paid, by Virtue of King's Letters, &c. and you will find a Redundancy of 33,734 l. 8 s. 1 d. belonging to the Nation, inftead of a Deficiency of 293,856 l. 10 s. 10 d.

WHAT could provoke you to give this additional Inftance of your Difingenuity, when you had declared, Page 19, that there was no Need to dwell longer upon the Point, fince it is now finally determined, by his Majesty's ordering the Payment of the Debt out of the Money remaining in his Treasury? Was it only to shew, that you had an inexhaustible Fund of Missepresentation about you? You need not have taken the Trouble, we were all ready to acknowledge your great Abilities in that Way. Some have reasoned ill; others have failed in Exactness, as to Fact. But you have outstripp'd them all. In your whole Operation, you have not produced one tolerable Reason, or one true State of any Transaction.

In one of the weekly Papers I observed two Lines, which I must borrow upon this Occasion.

The Wretch that often has deceiv'd ; Though Truth he fpeaks, is ne'er believ'd.

THUS have I taken you to Task separately; do not be Angry, that I put you once more together ; I doubt not but by this Time, you diflike one another; but if each of you will but observe the Figure he cuts in the Groupe, he will be the eafier reconciled to his Company.

IN your joint State then, let me ask you what provoked you to enter into a Controverfy, that was fo eminently Superior to your Capacities? If I knew you, I could without Delay or Difficulty difcover your Motives: But truly you are not amongst my Acquaintance; and yet you must be of very low Degree. But the loweft of my Companions admires Virtue ; and honours the Man, who acts upon virtuous Principles, whether he be or be not Successful.

HAD you Property, had you Children, had you Friends, or had you from any Caufe, a Love for this Kingdom, you would have contributed to have raifed Friends for it, not have laboured to create Enemies; not only to create Enemies, but to make bitter Enemies of the best Friends.

SUPPOSE the Majority of the COMMONS had erred; and erred in a Point of Intereft, wherein the Crown, or Great-Britain, was materially concerned, and was prejudicially affected : Would not a good Man throw a Veil over the Fault? Would an honeft Man aggravate it ? Would a charitable Man expose innocent Millions to a Refentment, that IF these Things be so, then have you forfeited all Title to the amiable Characters of Honesty, Goodness or Charity: For you have exposed all our Infirmities; you have aggravated our Faults; and you have endeavoured to rouze the Lion to Anger—And indeed it would be no great Matter, if you only were to be the Victims.

WHAT Profit could all your Writings produce, if they were the wifeft upon Earth, when the Queftion to which they relate, is like never to arife more? What but Difappointment, unforgiving, malicious Difappointment, could ftir Men up to appeal to Perfons, who could not change the Judgement, but might, through Mifinformation, conceive a hurtful Opinion of thofe who gave it? Confider thefe Things well, and reform before it be too late: It will recommend me much hereafter, if I can bring about the Repentance of three fuch Sinners: Sinners, who are at prefent like Swearers, in Danger of Damnation, for a Crime, that hath in it neither Pleafure or Profit.

PERMIT me, through you, to convey one Word to the HABERDASHER of SMALL WARE, who made his Appearance laft Week. I have his Work now under Perufal, but have not yet determined, whether I fhall or fhall not lay it before my Mafter. But left he fhould, in a Hurry, fend Abroad more of his Small Ware, before I have well examined his former Cargoe, I muft give him fome Advice for his Conduct. Indeed, it would be well, if he drop'd all Thoughts of meddling with Politicks. They are not his Profession, and are above his Comprehension. But if he will not be advised in this Point, bid him not Dimmeck-like to throw down a Gauntlet, which he is very fure will not be taken up. up. I have read in a great Book of Travels, that lies in our Hall, that in China, the Mandarins are obliged daily to throw into a Cheft, by a Hole in the Lid, their Obfervations on Publick Tranfactions; when the Emperor dies, the Cheft is opened, and out of the Papers found therein, his Hiftory is composed. A Word to the Wife.
