SPEECH, &c.

MY LORDS,

I A M to accompany what I have to trouble your Lordships with, this day, with many apologies. From a long refearch into the right of your Lordships jurifdictive power, I am but too well apprized of the labour and difficulty of the enquiry, and am fensible of my prefumption in troubling you with my thoughts on a fubject of fuch difficulty.

DOUBTS, however, having been lately thrown out, founded upon antient errors and miftakes, it will be neceffary, to trace this fubject, to enter into the hiftory of our jurifdictive power from its origin, from the earlieft period of the hiftory of this country.

My Lords, one, and only one, merit I shall claim, that I shall advance nothing that is not supported ported by evidence, by authentic materials, by the records of parliamentary proceedings both here and in another country.

I SHALL labour only to be explicit and fatisfactory in a detail of facts, and depend only upon truth, which feldom wears and never wants ornament.

As the whole of this fubject is not collected in any publication that I have ever heard of, it will not be, I hope, difpleafing to your Lordfhips to have it collected in one point of view. If I fhould omit any transaction relating to this fubject, it will be fupplied, I hope, by other Lords of greater ability, and more knowledge in parliamentary proceedings than I can prefume to poffes.

My Lords, in the early ages of this country, and of her first connections with England, it is acknowledged, that, in consequence of the voluntary submission of the Irish to king Henry II. he granted them the laws and liberties of England, and added afterwards a rule for parliamentary government, in the fame individual form and terms with that of England, England, in which record it is faid, "That " caufes of property are to be examined and " corrected in full parliament, and no where " elfe."

My Lords, this was renewed by his fucceffor; and it was provided, as before, that all laws and cuftoms, enjoyed in England, fhould be likewife enjoyed in Ireland, of which the judicature in parliament was one of the moft eminent. And it appears that Henry III. renewed this charter at Gloucefter, ordaining that their conflitution fhould be preferved entire upon the Englifh plan, as his father king John had decreed when he was laft in Ireland, and that all writs and matters of law fhould have their courfe in Ireland in like manner as in England.

My Lords, in early times, appeals were fometimes made from the court of King's-bench in Ireland to the court of King's-bench in England, becaufe the king, who was common judge of both nations, prefided in that court, and fometimes the judges of England were confulted, in certain difficult points of law, from a want of men fully inftructed in the conflitution flitution here during its infancy; but flill there does not appear to be any pretence, all that time, that this was done de jure, or that any appeal then lay to any court without the kingdom, till at length, in the reign of Edward III. the English began to aim at extending their jurifdiction, and pretended that the ancient appeals to the kings in England implied a fuperiority in the English nation over the Irish, arguing, a fortiori, that, if appeals were made to the inferior courts in England, they might of confequence be made to the fupreme court of all, the British parliament; and under these pretences, it feems they had actually taken cognizance of fome judicial matters relating to Ireland. My Lords, upon this, a remonstrance was made from the commons of Ireland in the twenty-fixth of Edward III. I shall, my Lords, dwell upon and specify this transaction, because I conceive the judicature of this house to depend upon that charter; the remonstrance fet forth, That they had long endured intolerable oppreffion and injustice from men of authority in this kingdom, who, abufing their power, dispossed them of their eftates, and, under pretence that there was no appeal to the parliament of Ireland, fupported themfelves with impunity impunity in this violence, reducing multitudes to the greatest poverty and extreme distress, unable, from the great charge and hazard in profecuting their rights abroad, to carry their appeals to England : wherefore they befought the king to remedy this abuse, and maintain the privilege of their violated conftitution; in confequence of which, my Lords, the king, by ordinance of the forty-ninth year of his reign, decreed, That, whereas it appeared an intolerable grievance, that his people of that nation should be thus oppressed, without a remedy, and that he was bound, by the nature of his supreme office, to see justice done to all his fubjects, for the future justice should be done to them according to the known cuftoms and laws of both kingdoms, and all appeals and proceedings upon errors of judgments, in the inferior courts of that realm, fhould be made and carried on in the parliament of this kingdom only.

AND, my Lords, if any thing was wanting to corroborate these ordinances and charters from the crown, it was supplied by a decree of Richard II. in the seventeenth year of his reign, when all the liberties and immunities of this kingdom kingdom were again confirmed, among which the judicature of the Irish parliament was included.

3 01 Ltion

IT does not appear, my Lords, that the judicature of our parliament was molefted till the eighth of Henry VI. but it is recorded by Mr. Prynn, in his animadverfions on the fourth Inftitute, that at that time the prior of Lanthony in Wales having brought an action against the Irifh prior of Mullingar, for the arrear of an annuity, in the common pleas, judgment was given against the prior of Mullingar, who thence brought a writ of error into the King's-bench of Ireland, where the judgment was affirmed ; the prior of Mullingar appealed again to the parliament of Ireland, which parliament reverfed both the former judgments; whereupon the prior of Lanthony removed the caufe into the King's-bench in England, but that court refused to be concerned in it, as having no power over what had paffed in the parliament of Ireland; after which the prior of Lanthony appealed in the eighth of Henry VI. to the parliament of England, but neither would they determine thereupon; thereby declaring, that they had no pretensions to interfere in the judicature of this nation.

THIS

THIS cuftom of appeals being carried to England, feems to have gained fome ground at this time, fo as to become an object of the attention of the legislature ; for, by 32d Henry VI. ch. 3. it is enacted, that if any do appeal, in hope to be fent to England, the matter of appeal shall be declared before the governor of this land and the king's council; and, if the matter does not touch the king's perion, the faid governor shall fend the faid appeal to the King's-bench there, to be determined, as if it were an appeal of robbery; and, if the faid appeal be not found to be true, the appellant shall pay to the appellee his damages, taxed by the inqueft, and twenty pounds, and over, and one hundred shillings to the king for his fine, faving the king's prerogative.

THIS act would not be fufficiently clear and explicit, were it not for the comment of your Lordships ancestors, in the year 1703, when they founded their resolutions upon it, declaring those, who appealed from the judgment of this house, and to a foreign jurisdiction, enemies to their country.

By an act of the 7th Henry VIII. this matter was farther guarded, and provision was made against against these appeals, in matters determinable here, and they were obliged to find furety in the chancery, if the cause of appeal was found not to be true, to satisfy the defendant for his costs, damages, and expences.

THESE acts feem to accord with the flatute of absentees, which made a forfeiture of land the confequence of non-refidence, that they might have no cause for absence, that the people might have every advantage in this country, and that justice might be domesticated in their native land.

AND the English lawyers themselves declared in favour of these rights, as appears in the yearbooks, in the 2d of Richard III. when a question arising about certain bales of wool, exported by a merchant of Waterford, which the treafury of Calais had seized in that port, the judges of England, occasionally pronounced that Ireland was not to be bound by English statutes, because they had no representatives in the English parliament; but that they had a parliament of their own, in which they made and amended laws, and that they had all manner of courts, with the same perogatives as in England.

FROM

FROM this time forward, the judicature of this house stood unmolested for ages, till the middle of the reign of Charles II. I find only one instance, my lords, in the Journals of the lords of England, for an application of this fort; and the entry which was made, and the difficulty of enforcing their order, plainly shews, that it was a novel, unprecedented, practice: the entry, my lords, is as follows, in 1621.

"WHEREAS one Stafford, an Irifhman, has brought his writ of error in this houfe, about certain lands in the county of Wexford, in Ireland, the lord chief juffice moved to know the pleafure of this houfe, whether the writ, in that cafe to be awarded, fhould be directed to the fheriff of Middlefex, or to the fheriff of the county in Ireland, where the lands lay; and it was ordered, that the writ, in this cafe to be awarded, fhall be directed to the chief juffice of the King's-bench in Ireland, to order the fheriff of the county of Wexford, in Ireland, to warn the party defendant to appear before this houfe on a day appointed to hear errors."

My Lords, you will find the rules for proceedings, in appeals and writs of error, in your Journals, Journals, in 1642 and 1662, and a regular course of upwards of forty applications from that period, till the year 1717.

My Lords, during the long interval of our parliament, for twenty-fix years, there were fix precedents of appeals from this country to the lords of England.

THE first, that occurs in the Journals of the lords of England, was, in a case between Sir Robert Nugent and colonel Talbot, the famous duke of Tyrconnel; it was in the year 1670, and I shall beg leave to say a word upon the particulars of that case.

COLONEL Talbot had been an active folicitor for the Roman Catholics in the court of claims, and had obtained a bond of 4000l from Sir Robert Nugent, provided he procured him his eftate in the court of claims; but his own innocence being clear, he obtained it without the intervention of colonel Talbot, who, notwithftanding, fued him upon the penalty, in the court of chancery in Ireland; from their determination Nugent appealed to the lords of England, but their conduct fhews, that they were not defirous of interfering in the jurifdiction of this this country; for the caufe, however flagrant, was difmiffed, and a bill of review was ordered to be had in the chancery of Ireland.

My lords, as I have before obferved, in the long interval of twenty-fix years, in our parliaments, there are only fix precedents, which occur, of appeals from this country to the houfe of lords in England, till the two jurifdictions interfered in the famous cafe of the bifhop of Derry, in the latter days of king William.

My lords, the validity of appeals to this house was never questioned till the year 1698.

Bur, previous to that period, an appeal having been brought before the houfe of lords of England, by the governor and fociety of the Londonderry plantation, againft a judgment, which had been given by this houfe in favour of the bifhop of Derry, though no objection had been previoufly pleaded, by the parties, to our jurifdiction, the houfe of lords of England thought proper to declare, that the proceedings before this houfe were before an incompetent judicature, and that the chancery here ought to proceed as if no fuch appeal had been made to the lords of Ireland; a composition, however, however, taking place between the parties, this houfe was not under a neceffity of enforcing their own order: the reafonings of the council upon our jurifdiction are reported in the cafe of the bifhop of Derry, in Sir Bartholomew Shower's reports, though the argument in our favour feems to be imperfect and mutilated.

As this cafe of the bifhop of Derry, in 1698, was the first in which the jurisdictive power of this house was called in question, your lordships will, no doubt, be curious to know upon what plausible plea that opinion was founded.

IT was, perhaps, one of the most extraordinary crotchets that legal subtilty ever devised.

THE reasoning of the council was, that the Irifh parliament were debarred of their jurifdictive right by Poyning's law, and that, as the conftitution here was inverted, and no legislative matter could be taken up here, unless it originated from the crown, before the parliament was convened, by Poyning's law, the fame rule was to take place in other matters, in judicial cases.

THIS

This mode of reasoning is so whimfical and extraordinary, that I am compelled to juftify my opinion, by reading to your lordships a curious paper which I have in my hand; it is a copy of the printed cafe, which was drawn up by that great lawyer, Sir B. Shower, in the cafe of the bishop of Derry, which was communicated to me by a learned friend of mine in another country, and which led the house of lords of England, in receiving an appeal from this house.

" THE fociety of Londonderry having appealed to your Lordships from the lords of Ireland, the appellants do pray that the faid appeal may be received.

" ift, THAT no appeal or writ of error, as is conceived, lies to the house of lords in Ireland in any cafe; but the errors of the courts of law and equity there are to be reformed in England, and the appeal to the house of lords there is of dangerous confequence, and may tend to the hazard of the English constitution and government there; if the fame should be allowed by your Lordships, it will equal the jurisdiction of the lords of parliament in Ireland to that of the English peerage, which was never the defign of Poyning's law. 66 2dly,

" 2dly, IN cafe the houfe of lords there have a power of hearing and examining fuch appeals, yet their orders are not final, but fubjected to re-examination before your lordships, who are the fupreme court of judicature, as well for that as for this kingdom, as it is humbly hoped will appear to every man who shall impartially, among other reasons and authorities, consider, I. The true original nature and title of property in Ireland, as derived from and under the crown of England. 2. The equality of reason for a fubordination in judicature to the judicial power, as in the legislative to the legislative power, in England.

" 3dly, THE protection which the plantation of Ireland always receives from the mother country, with the vaft fums of money the owes England. The dependency refulting thence in all refpects whatfoever, which, if appeals there be final, will be in a great measure deftroyed."

WHAT reafoning, what inductions, what a defign to miflead, by a reference to fomewhat that was not clearly underflood! What has Poyning's law to fay to the judicial power of this houfe? Or, in plain English and common fense, what analogy is there between the law which regulates regulates the paffing of bills through the council and the jurifdictive power? No more, my Lords, no more analogy, than between the jurifdiction of our parliament and the law of gravitation or the doctrine of fluxions !

IT is to be obferved, my Lords, that the argument of the council on our fide, in the cafe of the bifhop of Derry, in Shower's reports, is purpofely blanked and mutilated.

bro. W

My Lords, it would be neceffary for me to mention the great cafe of Sherlock and Annefly in the year 1717, when this House was suspended from its jurifdiction; but the noble reprefentation of your Lordships ancestors, and the detail of the merits of the cafe contained in it, will fave your Lordships and me much trouble. I cannot suppose your Lordships to be unapprized of this important transaction, which is also detailed in the state-trials. All that I have to fay upon it is, that the widow Sherlock pleaded here in forma pauperis; that, upon the face of it, it was a determination in favour of the weak against the firong and powerful; that the reprefentation which was made upon that occasion does eternal honour to the great pre-B 2 late, late, to archbishop King, who framed it, and to your Lordships ancestors, who unanimously concurred in it.

THIS reprefentation having been read at your table, and being fo able and fo conclusive as to need no comment, I shall proceed to mention the last case in which the jurisdiction of this house was called in question.

My Lords, the laft cafe, in which the jurifdiction of this house was called in question, was that of the earl of Meath, and Cecilia, countefs of Meath, his wife. In 1692 an appeal was brought to this house, from the chancery of the county palatine of Tipperary, by lord Meath, against a decree given in that court in favour of lord Dudley and Ward; to this appeal lord Dudley pleaded his peerage as a peer of Great Britain; but this plea was over-ruled, as no privilege can obtain against an appeal, for that would be a total bar to the proceeding, as it can only be heard in a feffion of parliament; and judgment was given in favour of lord Meath, after a long process, which lasted till 1695, and the sheriff was ordered to give him poffession of the lands accordingly. During the interval of parliament, lord Dudley appealed from the determination of this house to the lords lords of England, who pronounced that the proceedings here were coram non judice, before an incompetent judicature, and ordered the chancellor of that court to enforce their decree in favour of lord Dudley. When your Lordships ancestors met in 1703, after an intermisfion of parliament for four years, upon the petition of lord Meath, they enforced their order with great fpirit, and came to feveral refolutions vindicating their jurifdiction : poffession was awarded to lord Meath, and the family had possession of the lands in queftion for upwards of thirty years; but, in the year 1736, upon a petition to the lords of England, they refumed this matter again; a report was made of the whole proceedings, an order was fent over to the chancellor Windham, to give poffession of the lands to the reprefentative of lord Dudley, as the court and county palatine of Tipperary were extinguished by the attainder of that illustrious family, who were an honour to this country, the duke of Ormond. The whole proceedings upon this affair, the letters that paffed between the lord Talbot and the chancellor Windham, are inferted at length in the journals of the lords of England. My Lords, I cannot help observing here, that the author of a late pamphlet is wrong in his obfervation, that the lord Meath's reprefentatives held the land under under an order of your Lordships ancestors, for that order was laid aside by the last determination of the lords of England.

FROM this plain state of facts, your Lordships fee that no right was ever better founded nor better ascertained than the jurifdiction of this house; the whole number of appeals, that appear on your journals from 1642 to 1717, amounts to thirty-eight.

I SHALL now beg leave to contraft fo founded and fo proved a right with the declaratory law, the 6th of George I. which I shall read as a part of my speech*.

* An act for better fecuring the dependency of the kingdom of Ireland upon the crown of Great Britain :

To

"WHEREAS the house of lords of Ireland have of late, against law, affumed to themselves a power and jurifdiction to examine, correct, and amend, the judgments and decrees of the courts of justice in the kingdom of Ireland; therefore, for the better securing of the dependency of Ireland upon the imperial crown of Great Britain, may it please your most excellent majesty, that it may be declared, and be it declared by the king's most excellent majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the lords spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament affembled, and by the authority of the same, that the faid kingdom of Ireland hath been, is, and of right ought to be, subordinate unto, and dependent upon, the imperial crown of Great Britain, as being inseparably united and annexed thereunto; To the words, of late, and against law, your Lordships cannot be inattentive; these words furely are strangely applied to the chartered right of this house, to the custom and long tide of precedents for three centuries. Never sure was such an unparalleled act of injustice, never was the omnipotence of parliament so extended, not only over right and justice, but over truth itself; an omnipotence greater than that of the Supreme Being himself; for he can do no wrong: but this act decided that the British parliament, swayed by the lust of power, could do flagrant wrong and notorious injustice.

I AM

thereunto; and the king's majefty, by and with the advice and confent of the lords fpiritual and temporal, and commons, of Great Britain, in parliament affembled, had, hath, and of right ought to have, full power and authority to make laws and ftatutes of fufficient force and validity to bind the kingdom and people of Ireland.

"AND be it farther declared and enacted, by the authority aforefaid, that the houfe of lords of Ireland have not, nor of right ought to have, any jurifdiction to judge of, affirm, or reverfe, any judgment, fentence, or decree, given or made within any court within the faid kingdom; and that all proceedings before the faid houfe of lords, upon any fuch judgment, fentence, or decree, are, and are hereby declared to be, utterly null and void to all intents and purpofes whatfoever." I am to apologize for having dwelt fo long upon this fubject; a fubject fo arduous as to involve no lefs than the complete inveftigation of the Journals of the two houfes of lords in both kingdoms.

My Lords, I am well aware that there are various opinions in this country about right and expedience: those who think the right of jurifdiction vested clearly in your lordships in the last refort, think that justice will be more impartially administered by a final reference to a foreign tribunal, as it has been under the compulsion of the declaratory law; I know prejudices are entertained against the incompetence of this house to decide upon legal matters in the dernier refort.

In this variety of opinion, let the public voice decide; I do not prefume to pronounce mine upon fuch a queftion; I am inclined to believe, that there was an appeal allowed, by the conftitution, to the king in his parliament of Great Britain; I remember to have feen an inftance recorded of it in the rolls of parliament in the 22d year of Edward I. If that be the cafe, it is left to the public choice; but there is no reafon we fhould be deprived of our franchife, of our inalienable privilege, nor this country of the advantage advantage of a domeftic tribunal, agreeable to the charter of the third Edward, of the maxim of the founder of the conflictution of Alfred, that juffice should be brought home to every man's door.

THOSE, my Lords, who think that the lords of England decide upon legal matters, are much deceived : formally, indeed, they do, but in fact, prefcribed and dictated to, in these matters, by the sages of the law.

So will it also be here; whenever our jurifdiction shall revive, the administration of justice, in the last refort, will be by the judges and fages of the Irish law.

CONSTITUTED as they are at prefent, every regard is due to them from their country. Why should the Irish bar be deprived of its emoluments, of its credit, of its honour? If, in ruder and more uninformed times, justice was administered in this country without complaint in this house, why should the course be altered in a more fcientific and enlightened period?

My Lords, I have lately heard fome doubts thrown out, that this house had never any cognizance of writs of error, though they had of appeals; appeals; and that the conftant practice was, to remove them to the King's bench in England; I fhall therefore beg leave to fay a word on that fubject, and to dwell particularly on the precedents of writs of error in our Journals.

THERE are four precedents of writs of error in this house before the Restoration; and in the year 1662, the mode of proceeding upon them was settled by the following entry in your Journals.

"MEMOR ANDUM, that the lord Santry, chief juffice of the King's bench, declared, that he was commended by writ of error, to bring in a record of a judgement between Robert Park, Efq. plaintiff, and Kean O'Hara, and Uxor, defendants; and that, according to cuftom, the original ought to be returned to faid court, having firft compared a transcript therewith, which rule was accordingly obferved, and the transcript ordered to be read the firft day of next fitting."

My Lords, in confequence of five records which were brought in by the chief juffice here, in 1710, a committee was appointed to confider the

IV MIN OI

THIS mode of proceeding obtained till the fufpenfion of our jurifdiction in 1717, during which period there are many precedents of writs of error in this house.

It is neceffary to mention, that the ftanding orders are framed, with regard, not only to appeals, but to writs of error, on the fame plan of those in the house of lords of England, and that an act of parliament passed in the 6th year of George I. for the limitation of writs of error; fo that writs of error have been determined upon in this house grounded on an ancient practice, regulated by the standing orders, warranted and countenanced by the law of the land.

In a variety of matter, it elapsed my memory, to mention how materially the rights of parliament at large, of the house of commons, were interested in our jurisdiction; in one branch of it, I mean; feldom, I hope, to be exerted; the right of impeachment: for, if this house is no court of justice, that privilege also falls to the ground. Two instances of this I remember to have heard of in the Journals of the house of commons, commons, in the cafe of the chancellor, Sir Richard Bolton, and Sir George Ratcliffe, before the great rebellion; the other in latter times, in the cafe of the lord chancellor Porter: in the first of these, a doubt having been started about our criminal jurisdiction, the house of commons set forth, in an ample manner, and afferted their own and our right to parliamentary impeachment.

Bur shall I, my Lords, remember antient, and forget recent, merit? shall I think of an old vindication of our rights, and forget the fplendid example of yesterday? No, my Lords, the gentleman, to whom the prefent glorious fystem of our emancipation is due, demands a tribute from the nobility, as well as the people, of this country, to crown and confummate his well-raifed praise. He did not forget, that the rights of parliament and its dependence, was wounded through our fides; I am happy to repeat the public opinion within these walls; no man fure ever deserved better of his country; and, if the Roman people to a man role up in the theatre to do honour to the poet, the reftorer of industry, and of agriculture, the fame eulogy is due to the affertor and effectual vindicator of the freedom of his country; claffical language and and claffical allufions are not mifplaced here; the powers and eloquence exerted were equal to the caufe that he pleaded.

NEC dignius unquam majestas meminit fese Romana locutam.

My Lords, I am to apologize for this digreffion : I shall revert now, and fay a conclusive word on the great subject which is, at prefent, the object of your lordships contemplation.

ADMITTING, my Lords, for a moment, and for the fake of argument, that we had been bound by the laws of England, when expressly named, yet were we never bound by this law; because the recital is erroneous, because it is built upon misconception, because it is unwarrantable in its conclusion, because it afferts the thing that is not; for, my Lords, nothing is more clear than this, than that all the precedents, which I have cited to your Lordships, from the charter of the third Edward to the year 1717, are fabulous and legendary, or that the recital in the declaratory law is fallacious; both of them cannot be true, they cannot both confist and agree together.

My Lords, what are the words of the declaratory law, of late, and against law? What! is that that practice against law, which has obtained under the charter of the third Edward? is that a late practice which has obtained for upwards of four hundred years?

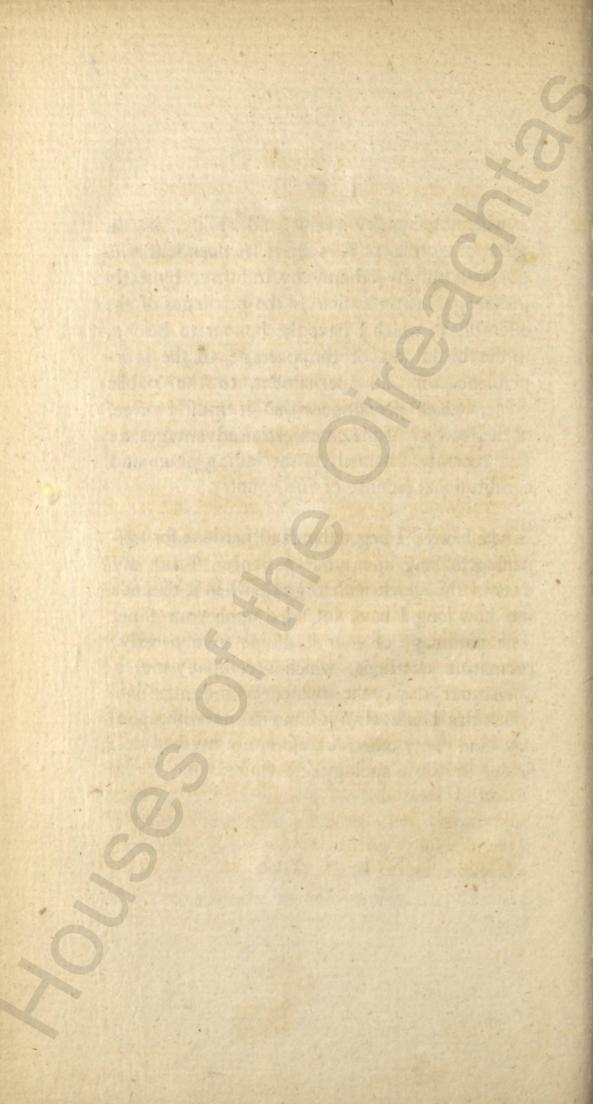

My Lords, I am to apologize for entering fo deep into this arduous fubject, I know well to whom I have the honour to addrefs myfelf, I know well that I fpeak under the criticifm, animadverfion, and correction, of the fages of the law.

IF I have not fpoke equal to the fubject, I have fpoke to the beft of my abilities, but, what is more, to the beft of my intentions.

To promote the credit and advantage of the affembly I belong to has early been the object of a laborious life; I began with that purfuit from my first entrance into this affembly, I shall terminate my days with the fame wish. Whether or not my labours deferve to dwell for a moment in the attention of the prefent, or in the recollection of the future, race, is more than I can tell; but this I know, that it is mine, and the duty of every man, in my fituation, to endeavour, at least, to deferve that they should; I will I will not fay, by genius and ability, by the gifts of great powers and transcendent eloquence, but by labour, by industry, by early indefatigable application to the privileges of the affembly to which I have the honour to belong, to the birthrights of the peerage, to the independence of our parliament, to the public voice, which pronounces that it must be free, to the fecurity of the commercial advantages we have recently obtained, to the lasting peace and constitutional fecurity of this country.

My Lords, I beg a thoufand pardons for trefpaffing fo long upon your patience; I turn my eyes to the clock with regret, when it reminds me how long I have intruded upon your time. The patronage of your lordfhips to my early, premature exertions, which accompany me to a maturer day; the politenefs and attention which this houfe always honours me with upon this, and every other, occafion, are my beft defence, my only apology and vindication.

FINIS.

The following is the Case of the London Company and the Bishop of Derry, which is alluded to in the foregoing Speech.

10th of May, 1698.

THE cafe of the fociety of the governor and affiftants of the new plantation of Ulfter, in Ireland, appellants; against William, lord bishop of Derry.

THE faid fociety, who are a corporation, made out of the twelve companies of London, being feized, inter alia, of the hill on which the city of Derry is built, and four thousand acres of land adjoining, by feveral leafes from the committee of England, which were made in confideration of great charges in building the faid city of Derry and feveral other fortreffes thereabouts, and planting and peopling those parts with protestant tradefmen, artificers, and hufbandmen, to the great fecurity and advantage of that kingdom and the reformed religion there, the faid fociety did affign and fet out to the faid city, foon after its being built, about fifteen hundred acres, part of land, to be held under ### under the fame fociety, at fome fmall rent or acknowledgment for the fupport of the magiftracy thereof; they having little elfe for that purpofe; which that city has all along enjoyed accordingly, and the fociety have been ftill known to be the proprietors thereof, and were found to be fo by the public furvey in Ireland, commonly called the civil furvey, in the year 1654, as thereby appears, and they have always paid and do ftill pay, the king's rent for the fame to this day; and by feveral entries in the common-council books of the city of London, from the first building of Londonderry, about the year 1610, the fociety's title to thefe lands and the grant and tenure of the fame from and we have al-

London, from the first building of Londonderry, about the year 1610, the fociety's title to these lands and the grant and tenure of the fame from and under them, as aforesaid, is manifest; and, by depositions taken in this case, by very antient witness there resident, does appear; yet, notwithstanding all this, and although by the grand inquisition which was taken at Derry, in Ireland, about ecclessifical land belonging to the crown, these lands were not found to be bishops lands, and to be part of the lands escheated from the crown, yet the present bishop of Derry hath now lately set up a claim to those lands as belonging to the set, and that either as a part of the antient possibility ons ons belonging thereto, which is contrary to the faid inquifition, or by colour of fome grant from Charles I. to bifhop Bramhall, his predeceffor, which will appear to be void and pass for nothing; the faid fociety being then, and long before, actually feized by their letters patent, which letters patent were obtained upon fome private contrivance or compact between the faid bishop and the city of Derry, who were the tenants of those lands to the faid fociety without the knowledge and in prejudice of the faid fociety, there being by the faid grant 90%. 10s. per ann. referved to the faid city for ever and out of the faid lands; and farther it is pretended, in behalf of the faid prefent bishop of Derry, that the faid bifhop Bramhall had made a leafe of those lands to the city of Derry, for a long term of years, which, as it is confeffed, did expire in 1694, and that the faid city had paid a rent thereupon, and confequently that he had a poffeffion; of all which the faid fociety heard nothing, till the year 1692, and then, being informed that fuch letters patent and leafe were pretended to be in prejudice of their inheritance, and that the now bishop was setting up a claim to the premifes aforefaid, they ordered their general agent to fecure and continue their poffeifion poffession of the faid lands, which they conceived they ftill had, and were jufly intitled to, and he accordingly did it in July, 1694. Then the faid bishop, in October, 1694, brought his bill in chancery in Ireland, without alleging of any grant to bishop Bramhall, in order to be reftored to, and quieted in the faid fuppofed poffession; and many perfons, parties to his bill, who answered the same; yet none of them could fay, that the faid lands were belonging to the fee, or that they knew of his right; and on the hearing there was no proof of any kind of title or feizing, but only that fome of the defendants had confeffed, in their answers, that bishop Bramhall had made fuch a leafe, as aforefaid, to the city of Derry, and that a rent, or yearly fum had been paid on that account to the bifhop of Derry, from 1662 to 1694, but no actual entry of any bishop on faid lands, at any time, did at all appear; but the city of Londonderry had continued always in the poffeffion as under their first title from the fociety, though they had paid fuch rent to the bishop of late, merely as being concluded at law, by taking the faid leafe to avoid fuch payment, which leafe could pafs no interest or possession, the bishop having none that made it, and at most it would only work by eftoppel between the parties during the leafe and no longer; and, being expired, all pretence on that account was gone.

THE lord chancellor, on hearing the caufe, ordered an iffue at law, to try whether the faid bifhop, or any of his predeceffors, had ever any, or what, poffeffion of faid lands, or to that effect, and from that interlocutory order, before any trial or decree, the bifhop appealed to the houfe of lords in Ireland, who ordered that the chancellor's order fhould be reverfed, that the bifhop fhould be reftored to the lands in queffion, by an injunction of that houfe; and the fame was accordingly done foon after by the fheriffs of Londonderry, and the fociety turned out of their poffeffion.

THE fociety having therefore appealed to your lordships from thence, and the appellants do pray that the faid appeal may be received.

ift, For that no appeal, or writ of error, as is conceived, lies to the house of lords of Ireland in any case; but the errors of the courts of law and equity there are to be reformed in England, and the appeal to the house of lords there is of dangerous consequence, and may tend to the hazard hazard of the English conftitution and government there, if the same should be allowed by your lordships, it will equal the jurisdiction of the lords of parliament in Ireland to that of the English peerage, which was never the design of Poyning's law.

2dly, IN cafe the houfe of lords there have a power of hearing and examining fuch appeals, yet their orders are not final, but fubjected to re-examination before your lordships, who are the fupreme court of judicature as well for that as this kingdom, as is humbly hoped will appear to every man who shall impartially consider, among other reasons and authorities:

Ift, THE true original and title of property in Ireland, as derived from and under the crown of England.

2dly, THE equality of reafon for a fubordination in judicature to the judicial power here, as in the legiflature to the legiflative power of England.

AND 3dly, The protection which the plantation of Ireland always receives from the mother country, with the vaft fums of money fhe owes

to

to England on that account, and dependency refulting therefrom in all refpects whatfoever, which, if appeals there be final, will, in a great measure, be destroyed; wherefore, it is most humbly prayed that your lordships will receive and examine this appeal, and the rather in this cafe, becaufe the order of the chancery there was just and reasonable; first, by a title at law to fettle the right to the poffession before the court, would change the poffeffion from the appellants, to give it to the bishop, who did not appear to have a better nor fo good a right as the appellants had : but, leaving the merits of the caufe to your lordships just judgment when the fame shall come to be heard before this honourable house, it is hoped the appeal will be received for the reasons abovementioned
