Mr. PITT rofe, and spoke as follows:

THE

SIR,

illian Fa

WHEN I proposed to the House, the last time this fubject was before them, to fix this day for the further confideration of His Majesty's Message, I certainly indulged the hope that the refult of a fimilar communication to the Parliament of Ireland would have opened a more favourable Prospect, than at prefent exists, of the speedy accomplishment of a measure which I then stated, and which I still confider, to be of the greatest importance to the power, the stability, and the general welfare of the Empire; to the immediate interefts of both Kingdoms; and more particularly to the peace, the tranquillity, and the fafety of Ireland : in this hope, I am forry to fay, I have for the present been disappointed, by the proceedings of the Irish House of Commons, of which

s or beneficial, far be it from me to focale I feel and know that the Parliament of Ireland posses the power, the intire competence, on the behalf of that country, alike to accept or reject a proposition of this nature-a power which I am by no means inclined to difpute. I fee that at the present moment one House of Parliament in Ireland has expressed a repugnance, even to the confideration of this measure. Feeling, Sir, as I have already stated, that it is important, not only as it tends to the general prosperity of the Empire of Great Britain, but (what, under every fituation, must always be to me an object of the greatest moment) feeling that it was defigned and calculated to increase the prosperity and enfure the fafety of Ireland, I must have feen with the deepest regret that, at the very first moment, and before the nature of the measure could be known, it was fo received.

But whatever may have been my feelings upon this fubject, knowing that it is the undoubted B 2 right right of the Legislature of Ireland to reject or to adopt fuch measures as may appear to them injurious or beneficial, far be it from me to speak of its determination in any other terms but those of respect. Let it not, therefore, be imagined that I am inclined to prefs any fentiment, however calculated it may appear to me to benefit every member of the Empire, in any manner which may lead to hostile discussion between two Kingdoms, whofe mutual happinefs and fafety depend upon their being ftrictly and cordially united. But while I admit and refpect the rights of the Parliament of Ireland, I feel that, as a Member of the Parliament of Great Britain, I alfo have a Right to exercife, and a Duty to perform. That Duty is to express, as diffinctly as I can, the general nature and outline of the Plan, which, in my confcience, I think would tend in the strongest manner to ensure the fafety and the happiness of both Kingdoms.

While I feel, therefore, that as long as the House of Commons of Ireland view the subject in the light they do at present, there is no chance of of its adoption, I do not think that I ought on that account to abstain from submitting it to the confideration of this Parliament; on the contrary, I think it only the more necessary to explain distinctly the principles of the Measure, and to state the grounds upon which it appears to me to be entitled to the approbation of the Legislature.

If Parliament, when it is in poffeifion of the basis upon which this Plan is founded, and of its general outline, should be of opinion with me, that it is founded upon fair, just, and equitable principles, calculated to produce mutual advantages to the two Kingdoms — if Parliament, I fay, upon full explanation, and after mature deliberation, should be of that opinion, I should propose that its determination should remain recorded as that by which the Parliament of Great Britain were ready to abide, leaving it to the Legislature of Ireland to reject or to adopt hereafter, upon a full confideration of the subject.

There is no man who will deny that in a great question of this nature, involving in it objects which,

which, in the first instance, are more likely to be decided upon by paffion than by judgment; in a queftion in which an honeft but, I must be allowed to fay, a miltaken sense of National Pride is fo likely to operate, that much mifconstruction and misconception must inevitably happen. It therefore becomes the more necessary that the intentions of the Government which propofes the Measure, and the principles of the Measure itself, should be diftinctly understood. But, Sir, in stating that intention and those principles, I look to fomething more than a mere vindication of Government for having proposed the Measure. I do entertain a confidence, even under the apparent discouragement of the opinion expressed by the Irish House of Commons, that this Measure is founded upon fuch clear, fuch demonstrable grounds of utility, is fo calculated to add to the ftrength and power of the Empire, (in. which the fafety of Ireland is included, and from which it never can be separated) and is attended with so many advantages to Ireland in particular, that all that can be neceffary for its ultimate adoption is, that it should be stated distinctly, temperately, and fully, and that it should be left to the unprejudiced, diced, the difpaffionate, the fober judgment of the Parliament of Ireland. I with that those whole interests are involved in this measure should have time for its confideration—I with that time should be given to the Landed, to the Mercantile, and Manufacturing Interest, that they should look at it in all its bearings, and that they should coolly examine and fift the popular arguments by which it has been opposed, and that then they should give their deliberate and final judgment.

Ireland, and of the intelligent part of the

I am the more encouraged in this hope of the ultimate fuccefs of this meafure, when I fee, notwithftanding all the prejudices which it has excited, that barely more than one-half of the members that attended the Houfe of Commons were adverfe to it; and that in the other Houfe of Parliament in Ireland, containing, as it does, fo large, a portion of the property of that kingdom, it was approved of by a large majority.—When I have reafon to believe that the fentiments of a large part of the People of that Country are favourable to it; and that much of the Manufacturing, and of the Commercial Intereft of Ireland are already fentible how how much it is calculated to promote their advantage, I think, when it is more deliberately examined, and when it is feen in what temper it is here proposed and discussed, that it will still terminate in that which can alone be a fortunate refult.

Mercande, and Magnine Interell, that they

. It would be vain indeed to hope that a propofition upon which prejudices are fo likely to operate, and which is fo liable to misconception, should be unanimously approved. But the approbation I hope for is, that of the Parliament of Ireland, and of the intelligent part of the Public of that Country. It is with a view to this object that I think it my duty to bring this measure forward at prefent; not for the fake of urging its immediate adoption, but that it may be known and recorded; that the intention of the British Parliament may be known, in the hope that it will produce similar sentiments among our Countrymen in Ireland. With this view it is my intention not to go at prefent into any detailed flatement of the plan, because should it ultimately be adopted, the minuter parts must necessarily become the objects of much distinct discussion ; but to give fuch a general statement of the nature of II the the measure as will enable the House to form a correct judgment upon it.

I shall therefore, Sir, before I sit down, open to the House a string of Resolutions, comprising the general heads of this plan. It will be neceffary for me, for the purpose of discuffing those Refolutions with regularity and convenience, to move that the House should resolve itself into a Committee. And I have already stated, that it is not my intention then to prefs the Committee to come to an immediate decifion upon the Refolutions; but if, upon full and deliberate examination, the Refolutions which I shall have the honour to propose, and which contain as much as is neceffary for an outline of the plan, shall be approved, my opinion is, that nothing can contribute more to obviate any doubts and diffatisfaction which may exist, than that Parliament should adopt those Resolutions, and that it should then humbly lay them at the foot of the Throne, leaving it to HIS MAJESTY'S wildom to communicate them to the Parliament of Ireland, whenever circumstances should appear favourable to such a Meafure. I shall therefore, Sir, proceed as fhortly

I shall propose to accompany them, if it should be the pleasure of the House to adopt them.

che gemerni ind de of this plan. It will be nevel

Having now, Sir, explained to the Houfe the mode I mean to purfue, and my reafons for perfifting, under the prefent circumftances, in fubmitting this Meafure to the confideration of Parliament, I will endeavour to ftate the general grounds on which it refts, the general arguments by which it is recommended, and to give a fhort view of the particulars of the Plan.

As to the general principle upon which the whole of this Meafure is founded, I am happy to obferve, from what paffed upon a former occafion, that there is not a probability of any difference of opinion. The general principle, to which both fides of the Houfe perfectly acceded, is, that a perpetual Connection between Great Britain and Ireland was effential to the interefts of both. The only Honourable Gentleman who, when this fubject was before the Houfe on a former former day, opposed the confideration of the Plan altogether, ftated, in terms as ftrong as I could with, the necessity of preferving the ftricteft Connection between the two Countries. I most cordially agree with him in that opinion, but I then flated, that I do not barely with for the maintenance of that Connection as tending to add to the general strength of the Empire, but I wish for the maintenance of it with a peculiar regard to the local interests of Ireland, with a regard to every thing that can give to Ireland its due weight and importance, as a great member of the Empire. I wish for it with a view of giving to that Country the means of improving all its great natural Refources, and of giving it a full participation of all those bleffings which this Country fo eminently enjoys.

Confidering the fubject in this point of view, and affuming it as a proposition not to be controverted, that it is the duty of those who wish to promote the Interest and Prosperity of both Countries, to maintain the strongest connection between them, let me ask, what is the situation of Affairs that has called us to the discussion of this  $C_2$  subject?

fubject? This very connection, the necessity of which has been admitted on all hands, has been attacked by Foreign Enemies, and by Domeftic Traitors. The diffolution of that connection is the great object of the hostility of the common Enemies of both Countries, it is almost the only remaining hope with which they now continue the contest. Baffled and defeated as they have hitherto been, they still retain the hope, they are fill meditating attempts, to diffolve that connection. God grant that in this inftance the fame favour of Divine Providence, which has in fo many instances protected this Empire, may again interpofe in our favour, and that the attempts of the Enemy to separate the two Countries, may tend ultimately to knit them more closely together, to strengthen a Connection, the best pledge for the happiness of both, and so add to that power which forms the chief barrier to the civilized world, against the destructive principles, the dangerous projects, and the unexampled usurpation of France. This Connection has been attacked not only by the avowed Enemies of both Countries, but by internal Treason, acting in concert with the defigns of the Enemy. Internal Treason, Treafon, which ingrafted Jacobinism on those difeases which necessarily grew out of the State and Condition of Ireland.

Thinking, then, as we all must think, that a close Connection with Ireland is effential to the interefts of both Countries, and feeing how much this Connection is attacked, let it not be infinuated that it is unneceffary, much lefs improper, at this arduous and important crifis, to fee whether fome new arrangements, some fundamental regulations, are not neceffary, to guard against the threatened danger. The foreign and domeftic Enemies of these Kingdoms have shewn, that they think this the vulnerable point in which they may be most fuccessfully attacked; let us derive advantage, if we can, from the hoftility of our Enemies - let us profit by the defigns of an Enemy, who, if his conduct difplays no true wifdom, at least possessien an eminent degree that fpecies of wiflom which is calculated for the promotion of mischief. They know upon what footing that Connection refts at this moment between the two Countries, and they feel the most ardent hope, that the two Parliaments will be infatuated enough enough not to render their defigns abortive, by fixing that Connection upon a more folid bafis.

Thefe circumftances I am fure will not be denied. And if upon other grounds we had any doubt, thefe circumftances alone ought to induce us, deliberately and difpaffionately, to review the fituation of the two Countries, and to endeavour to find out a proper remedy for an evil, the exiftence of which is but too apparent. It requires but a moment's reflection, for any man who has marked the progrefs of events, to decide upon the true ftate and character of this Connection. It is evidently one which does not afford that fecurity which, even in times lefs dangerous and lefs critical than the prefent, would have been neceffary, to enable the empire to avail itfelf of its ftrength and its refources.

When I laft addreffed the Houfe on this fubject, I ftated that the fettlement, which was made in 1782, fo far from deferving the name of a Final Adjustment, was one that left the Connection between Great Britain and Ireland exposed to all the attacks of Party, and all the effects of II accident. accident. That Settlement confifted in the demolition of the System which before held the two Countries together. Let me not be understood as expressing any regret at the termination of that System. I disapproved of it, because I thought it was one unworthy the liberality of Great Britain, and injurious to the interests of Ireland. But to call that a System in itself-to call that a glorious fabric of human wildom-which is no more than the mere demolition of another System-is a perversion of terms which, however prevalent of late, can only be the effect of großs misconception, or of great hypocrify. We boaft that we have done every thing, when we have merely deftroyed all that before existed, without substituting any thing in its place. Such was the Final Adjustment of 1782; and I can prove it to be fo, not only from the plainest reasoning, but I can prove it by the opinion expressed by the British Parliament at that very time. I can prove it by the opinion expreffed by those very Ministers by whom it was proposed and conducted. I can prove it by the opinion of that very Government who boaft of having effected a Final Adjustment. I refer, for what I have faid, to proofs which they will find it very very difficult to answer; I mean their own acts, which will plainly fhew that they were of opinion that a new Syftem would be necessary. But, Sir, I will go farther-I will alfo produce the authority of one of those whose influence, on the present occafion, has been peculiarly exerted to prevent the discussion of the question in Ireland - of one, of whom I do not with to fpeak but with refpect, but for whom, neverthelefs, I should convey an idea of more respect, than I can now feel to be due to him, if I were merely to defcribe him as the perfon who fills the fame fituation, in the Houfe of Commons of Ireland, which you, Sir, hold among us, and of which on all occafions you discharge the duties with a dignity and impartiality which reflects fo much credit on yourfelf, and fo well fupports the character and authority of the House.

On a former night, I read an Extract from the Journals, to fhew what was the opinion even of those by whom the Final Adjustment was proposed of that Measure. It would there appear, that the Message was fent to the Parliament of Ireland, recommending to them the adoption of fome fome Plan for a Final Adjustment between the two Countries, and wishing to know what were the grounds of the grievances of which they complained. In anfwer to this Meffage, the Parliament of Ireland stated certain grievances, the principal of which was, the power claimed by the Parliament of Great Britain of making Laws to bind Ireland; but, with respect to that part of the Mesfage which related to the propriety of adopting fome Measures for a Final Adjustment between the two Countries, they were wholly filent. This Address was laid before the Parliament of Great. Britain, to whom a fimilar Message had been fent, and on that ground was moved the Repeal of what was called the Declaratory Act, which Motion was affented to by the British Parliament. This fatisfaction was complete to Ireland, as far as related to the grievance of which her Parliament had complained, viz. the Power of the British Parliament of making Laws for Ireland, because, by the Repeal of the Declaratory Act, that power was given up. But fo far was the Minister of that day from confidering that the Repeal of that Law finally terminated all differences, and eftablished the Connection between the two Countries tries upon a folid bafis, that he thought it neceffary to move that a farther Settlement was indifpenfable for the maintenance of that Connection.

[Mr. SHERIDAN across the Table, defired that that part of the Journals to which Mr. PITT alluded, might be read.]

Mr. PITT continued. Sir, I have ftated the fubftance of the Journals correctly; they were read on a former night, and the Honourable Gentleman may, if he choofes, have them read again.* If he does he will find that they fully juftify the ftatement I have made, but I beg that at prefent I may not be interrupted. I do maintain, that upon a reference to the Journals of the period to which I have alluded, it will appear that a farther agreement between Great Britain and Ireland is there ftated, in the opinion of the Administration of the day, to be abfolutely neceffary.

I beg farther to state, that after the Bill of which fo much has been faid, was passed, an Addrefs to HIS MAJESTY was moved and carried, praying him to take such further measures as to him seemed proper, to strengthen the Connection * Vide Appendix.

between

between the two Countries. HIS MAJESTY'S most Gracious Answer, stating, that in compliance with the Address, he would immediately take fuch measures as might be necessary for that purpofe, was delivered to the Houfe by an Honourable Gentleman who then filled the office of Secretary of State, and whom we have not lately feen in the House, though he still continues to be a Member of it. I do affert, without the leaft fear of contradiction from any Gentleman whatever, that it was in the contemplation of the Government of that day, to adopt fome measures of the nature alluded to in the Addrefs; fince that period, however, no fuch measure has been taken. I do alfo maintain, that that very fystem which by these very Ministers who brought it forward was found to be imperfect, even for the purpose of maintaining the Connection between the two Countries, remains at this moment in the fame imperfect state. It leaves the two Countries with separate and independent Legislatures, connected only with this tie, that the Third Eftate in both Countries is the fame-that the Executive Government is the fame-that the Crown exercifes its power of affenting to Irish Acts of Parliament under D 2 under the Great Seal of Great Britain, and by the advice of British Ministers.

This is the only principle of Connection which is left by the Final Adjuftment of 1782. Whether this is a fufficient tie to unite them in time of Peace; whether in time of War it is fufficient to confolidate their ftrength againft a Common Enemy; whether it is fufficient to guard againft those local jealoufies which muft neceffarily fometimes exift between countries fo connected; whether it is calculated to give to Ireland all the important commercial and political advantages which fhe would derive from a closer Connection with Great Britain; whether it can give to both Nations that degree of ftrength and prosperity which muft be the refult of fuch a Measure as the prefent, I believe need only to be ftated to be decided.

But I have already faid, that I have upon this point, the authority of an opinion to which I before alluded—an opinion delivered upon a very important Measure, very soon after the Final Adjustment of 1782. The Measure to which I refer, was that of the Commercial Propositions which were were brought forward in 1785. I am not now going to enter into a difcuffion of the merits of that Measure. The best, perhaps, that can be faid of it is, that it went as far as circumstances would then permit, to draw the two Countries to a clofer Connection. But those who think that the Adjustment of 1782 was final, and that it contained all that was neceffary for the eftablishment of the Connection between the two Countries upon a firm basis, can hardly contend that the Commercial Propositions of 1785 were necessary to prevent the danger of feparation between the two Countries, and to prevent the conflicting operation of Independent Legislatures. Yet, if I am not miftaken, there will be found, upon a reference to better Records than those in which Parliamentary Debates are usually stated (I mean a statement of what passed in the discussion upon those Propositions fourteen years ago, made, as I have underftood, by fome of the principal parties themfelves) that the CHANCELLOR of the Ex-CHEQUER of that day in Ireland, in a Debate upon the Irifh Propositions, held this language-" If " this infatuated Country gives up the prefent of-" fer, she may look for it again in vain." Here the Right Right Honourable Gentleman was happily miftaken; Ireland has again had the offer of the fame advantages, but more complete, and in all refpects better calculated to attain their object; and this offer the Right Honourable Gentleman has exerted all his influence to reject. But he goes on to fay — " THINGS CANNOT REMAIN AS " THEY ARE — Commercial jealoufy is roufed— " it will increase with two independent Legislatures " — and without an united interest in commerce, " in a commercial Empire, political Union will " receive many shocks, and feparation of interest " must threaten feparation of Connection, which " every bonest Irishman must shudder to look at, " as a possible event."

Gentlemen will have the goodne's to obferve, that I am not now quoting these expressions as pledges given by that Right Honourable Gentleman that he would support a proposal for a Union between the two Countries, but I am adducing them to prove that the situation of the two Countries after the Final Adjustment of 1782, was such, in his opinion, as led to the danger of a separation between them. I am not now arguing that that a Legislative Union is the only measure which can possibly be adopted, but I am contending that the Adjustment of 1782 was never confidered as final, by those who now state it to be fo as an argument against the confideration of the present measure. How the Honourable Gentleman on the other fide of the House will evade this authority I do not know; — an authority too, which, I must observe, he seems much more inclined to treat with respect than he was formerly.

But, Sir, it does not ftop there. What is the evil to which he alludes ? Commercial jealoufies. between two Countries acting upon the laws of two independent Legiflatures, and from the danger of thofe Legiflatures acting with jealoufy to each other.—How can this evil be remedied ? By two means only; either by fome Compact entered into by the Legiflatures of the two Countries refpecting the mode of forming their commercial regulations, or elfe by blending the two Legiflatures together; thefe are the only two means. I defy the wit of man to point out a third. The mode of compact was proposed in 1785, but unfortunately, in spite of that Right Honourable Gentleman's Gentleman's eloquence and authority, who then stated the importance of guarding against the evil, it fo happened that doctrines, derived chiefly from this fide of the water, fucceeded in convincing the Parliament of Ireland, that it would be inconfistent with their independence, to enter into any compact whatever. We have then the authority of that Right Honourable Gentleman to whom I have fo often alluded, that the unfettled flate in which the matter was left, would give " Political Union many shocks, and lead to a separation of Connection." The experiment of a mutual Compact has been tried without fuccess; the arrangement of that fort, which was proposed in 1785, in order to obviate the inconveniences stated by the Right Honourable Gentleman, was then attacked with the fame fuccefs against his authority, as another and more effectual remedy has recently experienced under his aufpices. The refult then is-you must remain in the state which that Right Honourable Gentleman has defcribed, with the feeds of feparation in the fystem now eftablished, and with the Connection, on which the mutual prosperity of both countries depends in danger of being hourly diffolved, or you must again

recur to the propofal of a compact fimilar to that, rejected in 1785, or you must refort to the best and most effectual remedy, - A LEGISLATIVE Union discumitances have forved to beight NOINU countrm. F.very Gentleman will know, that I

I have dwelt longer, perhaps, upon this part of the fubject than was abfolutely neceffary, because I believe there is fcarcely any man who has ever asked himself, whether there is a folid, permanent system of Connection between the two Countries, who could, upon reflection, answer the question in the affirmative. But belides the authorities of the perfons who made the arrangement in 1782, and of those who have fince treated of it, to shew that it was not deemed to be final and complete; I have further the teft of experience to shew how imperfect it was, and how inadequate in practice to the great object of cementing the Connection, and placing it beyond the danger of being diffolved. In the fingle inftance, which has occurred, (and that a melancholy one which all of us deplored,) in which we could feel the effects of two jarring Legislatures we did feel it. On that occasion, it might have produced the most fignal calamities, had we not been

been refcued from its danger by an event, to which no man can now look back without feeling the utmost joy and exultation; feelings, which fubsequent circumstances have served to heighten and confirm. Every Gentleman will know, that I must allude to the Regency. With two independent Legislatures, acting upon different principles, it was accident alone that preferved the identity of the Executive Power, which is the bond and fecurity of the Connection: And even then the Executive authority, though vested in one perfon, would have been held by him by two different tenures, by one tenure in England, by another in Ireland, had not the interpolition of Providence prevented a circumstance pregnant with the most imminent perils, and which might have operated to a separation of the two kingdoms.

After feeing the recorded opinion of Parliament, of those who made the arrangement of 1782, and after the decided testimony of experience on the subject, within the short period of sixteen years, perhaps, it is hardly necessary to appeal to farther proofs proofs of its inadequacy, or to defire Gentlemen to look forward to poffible cafes, which I could eafily put, and which will naturally fuggeft themfelves to the minds of all, who chufe to turn their attention to the fubject.

wills tway a be the

Samo

But when we confider the diftin it powers poffeffed by the two Legislatures on all the great queftions of Peace and War, of alliances and confederacies,-(for they each have in principle, a right to difcufs them and decide upon them, though one of them has hitherto been wifely restrained by difcretion, from the exercise of that right),-have we not feen circumstances to induce us to think it possible, at least, that on some of these important questions the opinions and decifions of the two Parliaments might have been at variance? Are we talking of an indiffoluble Connection, when we fee it thus perpetually liable to be endangered? Can we really think that the interests of the Empire, or of its different branches rest upon a fafe and folid basis at prefent? I am anxious to discuss this point closely with any man, either here, or in Ireland. Will it be faid, that the Parliament of the latter Country is bound by our decifion on the queftion of Peace or War? And if not fo bound, will any man, looking at human Nature as it is, contend, that there is a fufficient certainty that the decifion on that important fubject will always be the fame in both countries? I fhould be glad to receive a diffinct anfwer to this queftion, from the Honourable Gentleman who has declared himfelf to be as warm a friend to the Connection between the two Countries as I am.

though one of there I

Suppofe, for inftance, that the prefent war, which the Parliament of Great Britain confiders to be juft and neceffary, had been voted by the Irifh Parliament, to be unjuft, unneceffary, extravagant, and hoftile to the principles of humanity and freedom.—Would that Parliament have been bound by this Country? If not;—what fecurity have we, at a moment the moft important to our common intereft and common falvation, that the two Kingdoms fhould have but one friend and foe? I repeat it; I am eager to hear what can be faid in juftification of a bafis fo imperfect and unfound, found, and liable to be shaken by so many accidents. I have already observed, that in the peculiar circumstances of the present moment, we may find stronger reasons to prove the necessity of correcting the system of Connection between this Country and Ireland, of supplying its imperfections, and strengthening its weakness, than are to be found at any former period.

theis only the fachter and interneted representation

Having thus stated, and I think sufficiently proved, that the Settlement of 1782, in every point of view in which it can be confidered, is imperfect, and inadequate to the object of maintaining the connection between the two kingdoms, I proceed next to the circumstances which peculiarly call upon us at the prefeat moment to remedy that imperfection.

troinne he of idelf fortelid for premimable, that

This Country is at this time engaged in the most important, and momentous conflict that ever occurred in the History of the World; a conflict in which Great Britain is distinguished for having made the only manly and successful stand against the common enemies of civilized society. We see the point in which that Enemy think us the most most affailable—Are we not then bound in policy and prudence, to ftrengthen that vulnerable point, involved as we are in a contest of Liberty against Defpotifm—of Property against Plunder and Rapine—of Religion and Order against Impiety and Anarchy? There was a time when this would have been termed declamation; but, unfortunately, long and bitter experience has taught us to feel that it is only the feeble and imperfect representation of those calamities (the result of French Principles and French Arms), which are attested by the wounds of a bleeding world.

Is there a man who does not admit the importance of a meafure which, at fuch a crifis, may augment the ftrength of the Empire, and thereby enfure its fafety ? Would not that benefit to Ireland be of itfelf fo folid, fo ineftimable, that, in comparison with it, all Commercial Interefts, and the prefervation of local habits and manners, would be triffing, even if they were endangered by the prefent measure ;—which they undoubtedly are not ? The people of Ireland are proud, I believe, of being affociated with us in the great conteft in which we are engaged, and muft feel the

the advantage of augmenting the general force of the Empire. That the prefent measure is calculated to produce that effect, is a proposition which I think cannot be disputed. There is not in any Court of Europe a Statefman fo ill informed as not to know, that the general power of the Empire would be increased to a very great extent indeed, by fuch a confolidation of the strength of the two Kingdoms. In the courfe of the Century every writer of any information on the fubject has held the fame language, and in the general strength of the Empire both Kingdoms are more concerned than in any particular interefts which may belong to either. If we were to afk the Ministers of our Allies, what measure they thought the most likely to augment the power of the British Empire, and confequently increase that ftrength by which they were now protectedif we were to ask the Agent of our Enemies, what measure would be the most likely to render their defigns abortive - the answer would be the fame in both cafes, viz. the firm confolidation of every part of the Empire.

There

There is another confideration well worth attention. Recollect what are the peculiar means by which we have been enabled to refift the unequalled and eccentric efforts of France, without any diminution, nay, with an increase, of our general profperity - what, but the great Commercial Refources which we poffes? A Measure, then, which must communicate to such a mighty Limb of the Empire as Ireland, all the Commercial advantages which Great Britain poffesse, which will open the markets of the one Country to the other, which will give them both the common use of their Capital, must, by diffusing a large portion of wealth into Ireland, confiderably increafe the Refources, and confequently the ftrength, of the whole Empire.

But it is not merely in this general view, that I think the Queftion ought to be confidered.— We ought to look to it with a view peculiarly to the permanent intereft and fecurity of Ireland. When that Country was threatened with the double danger of hoftile attacks by Enemies without, and of Treafon within, from what quarter did fhe derive

of the Ethild Empire, and con derive the means of her deliverance? - from the Naval Force of Great Britain - from the voluntary exertions of her Military of every description, not called for by Law - and from her pecuniary refources, added to the loyalty and energy of the Inhabitants of Ireland itself; - of which it is impoffible to fpeak with too much praife, and which shews how well they deferve to be called the Brethren of Britons. Their own courage might, perhaps, have ultimately fucceeded, in repelling the dangers by which they were threatened, but it would have been after a long contest, and after having waded through feas of blood. Are we fure that the fame ready and effectual affiftance which we have happily afforded, on the prefent occafion, will be always equally within our power? Great Britain has always felt a common intereft in the fafety of Ireland; but that common intereft was never fo obvious and urgent as when the Common Enemy made her attack upon Great Britain, through the medium of Ireland, and when their attack upon Ireland went to deprive her of her Connection with Great Britain, and to substitute in flead, the new Government of the French Republic. When that danger threatened Ireland, bis conce of the minie, and the purfe of Great Britain was open for the wants of Ireland, as for the necessities of England.

I do not, Sir, state these circumstances, as upbraiding Ireland for the benefits we have conferted; far from it; but I state them with pleasure, as shewing the friendship and good will with which this Country has acted towards her. But if struggles of this fort may and must return again, if the worst dangers are those which are yet to come, dangers which may be greater from being more difguifed-if those fituations may arise when the same means of relief are not in our power, what is the remedy that reason and policy point out? It is to identify them with us-it is to make them part of the fame Community, by giving them a full share of those accumulated bleffings which are diffused throughout Great Britain; it is, in a word, by giving them a full participation of the Wealth, the Power, and the Glory of the British Empire. If then this Measure comes recommended not only by the obvious defects of the fystem which now exists, but that it has also the pre-eminent recommendation of increasing the general power of the Empire, and of guarding againft against future danger from the Common Enemy, we are next to confider it as to its effects upon the internal condition of Ireland.

I know perfectly well, that as long as Ireland is separated from Great Britain, any attempt on our part to provide measures which we might think falutary, as refpecting queftions of contending fects or parties, of the claimed rights of the Catholics, or of the precautions necessary for the fecurity of the Protestants-I know that all these, though they may have been brought forward by the very perfons who are the advocates of the Final Adjustment in 1782, were, in fact, attacks upon the Independence of the Irish Parliament, and attempts to usurp the Right of deciding on points which can only be brought within our province by Compact. Until the Kingdoms are united, any attempt to make regulations here for the internal state of Ireland must certainly be a violation of her Independence. But feeling as I do, for their interests and their welfare, I cannot be inattentive to the events that are paffing before me; I must therefore repeat, that whoever looks at the circumftances to which I have alluded-whoever confiders that the Enemy have F2

have shewn by their conduct, that they confidered Ireland as the weakeft and most vulnerable part of the Empire; whoever reflects upon those dreadful and inexcufable cruelties inftigated by the Enemies of both Countries, and upon those lamentable feverities by which the exertions for the defense of Ireland were unhappily, but unavoidably, attended, and the necessity of which is itself one great aggravation of the Crimes and Treasons which led to them, must feel that, as it now stands composed, in the hostile division of its Sects, in the animofities existing between ancient Settlers and orginal Inhabitants, in the ignorance and want of Civilization, which marks that Country more than almost any other Country in Europe, in the unfortunate prevalence of Jacobin Principles, arifing from these causes, and augmenting their malignity, and which have produced that diffreffed state which we now deplore; every one, I fay, who reflects upon all these circumstances, must agree with me in thinking, that there is no cure but in the formation of a General Imperial Legiflature, free alike from terror and from refentment, removed from the danger and agitation, and uninflamed by the prejudices and paffions of that distracted Country.

I know

I know that it is impoffible, if we wilh to confider this subject properly, to confider it in any other point of view than as it affects the Empire in general. I know that the interefts of the two Countries must be taken together, and that a man cannot speak as a true Englishman, unless he speaks as a true Irishman, nor as a true Irishman, unless he speaks as a true Englishman: But if it was possible to separate them, and I could confider myself as addreffing you, not as interested for the Empire at large, but for Ireland alone, I should fay, that it would be indispensably neceffary, for the fake of that Country, to compose its present distractions, by the adoption of another fystem :--- I should fay, that the establishment of an Imperial Legislature was the only means of healing its wounds and of reftoring it to tranquillity. I must here take the liberty of alluding to fome topics which were touched upon during the discussion of the former night.

Among the great and known defects of Ireland, one of the most prominent features is, its want of industry and a capital; how are those wants to be supplied, but by blending more closely with Ireland, Ireland, the induftry and the capital of this Country. But, above all, in the great leading diffinctions between the People of Irelard, I mean their religious diffinctions, what is their fituation ?— The Proteftant feels that the claims of the Catholics threatens the exiftence of the Proteftant afcendancy; while, on the other hand, the great body of Catholics feel the eftablishment of the National Church, and their exclusion from the exercise of certain rights, and privileges, a grievance. Between the two, it becomes a matter of difficulty in the minds of many perfons, whether it would be better to liften only to the fears of the former, or to grant the claims of the latter,

I am well aware that the fubject of religious diffinction is a dangerous and delicate topic, efpecially when applied to a country fuch as Ireland; the fituation of which is different in this refpect from that of every other. Where the eftablifhed religion of the State is the fame as the general religion of the Empire, and where the property of the Country is in the hands of a comparatively fmall number of perfons profeffing that eftablifhed religion, while the religion of a great majority majority of the people is different, it is not easy to fay, on general principles, what fystem of Church Establishment in fuch a Country would be free from difficulty and inconvenience. By many I know it will be contended, that the religion professed by a majority of the people, would at least be entitled to an equality of Privileges. I have heard fuch an argument urged in this House; but those who apply it without qualification to the cafe of Ireland, forget furely the principles on which English Interest and English Connection has been eftablished in that Country, and on which its prefent Legislature is formed. No man can fay, that, in the prefent flate of things, and while Ireland remains a separate kingdom, full conceffions could be made to the Catholics, without endangering the State, and fhaking the Conflicution of Ireland to its centre.

On the other hand, without anticipating the difcuffion, or the propriety of agitating the queftion, or faying how foon or how late it may be fit to difcufs it; two propositions are indifputable: First, When the conduct of the Catholics shall be fuch as to make it fase for the Government to admit admit them to the participation of the privileges granted to those of the Established Religion, and when the temper of the times shall be favourable to fuch a measure. When these events take place, it is obvious that fuch a queftion may be agitated in an United, Imperial Parliament, with much greater fafety, than it could be in a separate Legislature. In the second place, I think it certain that, even for whatever period it may be thought neceffary, after the Union, to withhold from the Catholics the enjoyment of those advantages, many of the objections which at prefent arise out of their situation would be removed, if the Protestant Legislature were no longer separate and local, but general and Imperial; and the Catholics themfelves would at once feel a mitigation of the most goading and irritating of their present causes of complaint, minutifico d'anti-

How far, in addition to this great and leading confideration, it may also be wife and practicable to accompany the measure by some mode of relieving the lower orders from the pressure of Tithes, which in many instances operate at prefent as a great practical evil, or to make—under proper proper Regulations, and without breaking in on the fecurity of the present Protestant Establishment an effectual and adequate provision for the Catholic Clergy, it is not now necessary to difcufs. It is fufficient to fay, that these and all other fubordinate points connected with the fame fubject, are more likely to be permanently and fatisfactorily fettled by an United Legislature, than by any local arrangements. On these grounds I contend, that with a view to providing an effectual remedy for the distractions which have unhappily prevailed in Ireland, with a view of removing those caufes which have endangered, and ftill endanger its fecurity, the measure which I am now proposing promises to be more effectual than any other which can be devised, and on these grounds alone, if there existed no other, I should feel it my duty to fubmit it to the House.

But, Sir, though what I have thus stated relates most immediately to the great object of healing the diffentions, and providing for the internal tranquillity of Ireland; there are alfo other objects which, though comparatively with this of inferior importance, are yet in themfelves

vitories over all our enemics, the f

felves highly material, and in a fecondary view, well worthy of attention.

I have heard it afked, when I prefied the meafure, what are the politive advantages that Ireland is to derive from it? To this very queftion I prefume the confiderations which I have already urged afford a fufficient anfwer. But, in fact, the queftion itfelf is to be confidered in another view; and it will be found to bear fome refemblance to a queftion which has been repeatedly put, by fome of the Gentlemen oppofite to me, during the laft fix years. What are the advantages which Great Britain has gained by the prefent war with France?

To this, the brilliant fucceffes of the Britifh arms by fea and land, our unexampled naval victories over all our enemies, the folid acquifition of valuable territory, the general increase of our power, the progreffive extension of our commerce, and a feries of events more glorious than any that ever adorned the page of our history, afford at once an ample and a fatisfactory answer. But there is another general answer which we 9 have uniformly given, and which would alone be fufficient: it is, that we did not enter into this war for any purpose of ambition; our object was not to acquire, but to preferve; and in this fense, what we have gained by the war is, in one word, ALL that we should have lost without it: it is, the prefervation of our Constitution, our Independence, our Honour, our Existence as a Nation.

In the fame manner I might answer the question with respect to Ireland, I might enumerate the general advantages which Ireland would derive from the effects of the Arrangement to which I have already referred, the Protection which she will fecure to herfelt in the hour of danger. The most effectual means of increasing her Commerce and improving her Agriculture, the command of English Capital, the infusion of English Manners and English Industry, necessarily tending to ameliorate her Condition, to accelerate the progrefs of internal civilization, and to terminate those feuds and diffentions which now diffract the Country, and which the does not poffefs, within herfelf, the power either to control or to extinguish. She would fee the avenue to Honours, to Diffinctions, and exalted Situations in the general feat of Empire, opened to all those whose abilities and talents enable them to indulge an honourable and laudable ambition.

what we have gained by the war is, in one

But, independent of all thefe advantages, I might alfo anfwer, that the queftion is not what Ireland is to gain, but what fhe is to preferve: not merely how fhe may beft improve her fituation, but how fhe is to avert a preffing and immediate danger. In this view, what fhe gains is the prefervation of all those bleffings arifing from the British Confficution, and which are infeparable from her Connection with Great Britain. Those Bleffings of which it has long been the aim of France, in conjunction with domeftic traitors, to deprive her, and on their ruins to effablish (with all its attendant miseries and horrors) a Jacobin Republic, founded on French Influence, and existing only in fubferviency to France.

Such, Sir, would be the answer, if we direct our attention only to the question of general advantage. And here I should be inclined to stop; but fince it has also been more particularly asked, what what are the advantages which fhe is to gain, in point of Commerce and Manufactures, I am defirous of applying my answer more immediately and diffinctly to that part of the fubject : and, as I know that the flatement will carry more conviction with it, to those who make the inquiry, if given in the words of the Right Honourable Gentleman, to whom, and to whofe opinions, I have had more than one occasion to advert in the course of this night, I will read you an extract from his recorded fentiments on the fubject, in the year 1785, on this fame memorable occasion of the Commercial Propositions. Speaking of a folid and unalterable Compact between the two Countries, speaking expressly of the peculiar importance of infuring the continuance of those Commercial benefits, which she at that time held only at the diferetion of this country, he fays-" The exportation of Irish Products, to England, " amounts to Two Millions and a Half annually; " and the exportation of British Products, to Ire-" land, amounts to but One Million." of Frelow

He then proceeds to reafon upon the advantage which Ireland would derive, under fuch circumftances, cumftances, from guarding against mutual prohibitions; and he accompanies the statement, which I have just read, with this observation-

" If, indeed, the Adjustment were to take away the Benefit from Ireland, it would be a good cause for rejecting it; but, as it for ever confirms all the Advantages we derived from our Linen Trade, and binds England from making any law that can be injurious to it, furely Gentlemen who regard that trade, and whose fortunes and rents depend on its prosperity, will not entertain a moment's doubt about embracing the offer."

Such was the reafoning of the Irifh CHANCEL-LOR of the EXCHEQUER; which I confider to have been perfectly juft. With reference to his late opinions, I do not think I can more forcibly reply, to a perfon who figns his name to Propositions which declare that the ruin of the Linen Trade of Ireland is likely to be the confequence of an Union, than by opposing to him his own opinion. I shall be able to strengthen the former opinion of that Gentleman, by stating, that the progress that that has been made in Commercial advantages to Ireland, fince 1785, has been fuch as to render his argument ftill more applicable. What is the nature of that Commerce, explained by the fame perfon in fo concife and forcible a manner, that I am happy to use his own statement? He does not confine himself to the gross amount, but gives the articles in detail:---

a philippined with

" Britain," he fays, " imports annually from us Two Million Five Hundred Thoufand Pounds of our products, all, or very nearly all, duty free, and covenants never to lay a duty on them. We import about a Million of her's, and raife a Revenue on almost every article of it, and referve the power of continuing that Revenue. She exports to us Salt for our Fisheries and Provisions; Hops, which we cannot grow; Coals, which we cannot raife; Tin, which we have not; and Bark, which we canin not get elfewhere : and all these without referving any duty."

I will not tire the patience of the House, by reading farther extracts; but the Right Honourable able Gentleman's whole Speech, in like manner, points out the advantages of the Commercial Propositions (at that time under confideration) as a ground-work of a Compact between the two Countries, in 1785, on Commercial subjects .--But how flands the cafe now? The trade is at this time infinitely more advantageous to Ireland. It will be proved, from the documents which I hold in my hand, as far as relates to the mere interchange of manufactures, that the manufactures, exported to Ireland from Great Britain, in 1797, very little exceeded a Million sterling (the articles of produce amount to nearly the fame fum) while Great Britain, on the other hand, imported from Ireland to the amount of near Three Millions in the manufactured articles of Linen and Linen Yarn, and between Two and Three Millions in Provisions and Cattle, besides Corn and other articles of produce.

In addition to thefe Articles, there are other circumftances of advantage to Ireland. Articles which are effential to her trade and to her fubfiftence, or ferve as raw materials for her manufactures, are fent from hence free of duty. It is exprefsly

" which we have note and Buch which we want prefsly ftated on the fame authority, that all that we take back from Ireland was liable to a Duty in that Country on their exports; fo that in fome inftances we gave them a preference over ourfelves.

ALL TING

The increasing produce of the chief article of their manufacture, and four-fifths of her whole export trade, are to be ascribed, not to that Independent Legislature, but, to the liberality of the British Parliament. It is by the free admission of Linens for our market, and the Bounties granted by the British Parliament on its re-export, that the Linen-Trade has been brought to the height at which we now fee it. To the Parliament of this Country, then, it is now owing, that a Market has been opened for her Linen to the amount of three millions. By the Bounty we give to Ireland, we afford her a double market for that article, and (what is still more striking and important) we have prevented a competition against her, arising from the superior cheapness of the Linen-Manufactures of the Continent, by subjecting their importation to a Duty of thirty per cent. Nothing would more clearly fhew what would be the danger to Ireland from the Competition in all its principal branches of the Linen-Trade, than the fimple fact, that we even now import foreign Linens, under this heavy duty, to an amount equal to a feventh part of all that Ireland is able to fend us, with the preference that has been stated. By this arrangement alone, we must therefore be confidered, either as foregoing between seven and eight hundred thousand pounds per annum in revenue, which we should collect if we chose to levy the fame duty on all Linens, Irish as well as Foreign, or on the other hand, as facrificing perhaps at least a million sterling in the price paid for those articles, by the subjects of this Country, which might be faved, if we allowed the importation of all Linen, Foreign as well as Irish, equally free from Duty.

The prefent measure is, however, in its effects calculated not merely for a confirmation of the advantages on which the perfon to whom I have alluded has infifted. It is obvious that a fuller and more perfect Connection of the two Countries, from whatever caufe it may arife, must produce a greater facility and freedom of commercial intercourfe, tercourfe, and ultimately tend to the advantage of both. The benefits to be derived to either Country from fuch an arrangement must indeed, in a great measure, be gradual; but they are not on that account the lefs certain, and they cannot be ftated in more forcible language than in that used in the Speech to which I have referred .----

" Gentlemen undervalue the reduction of Bri-" tish Duties on our Manufactures. I agree with " them it may not operate foon, but we are to " look forward to a final fettlement, and it is im-" poffible but that in time, with as good climate, " equal natural powers, cheaper food, and fewer " taxes, we must be able to fell to them. When " commercial jealoufy shall be banished by final " fettlement, and Trade take its natural and fleady " courfe, the Kingdoms will ceafe to look to " rivalship, each will make that fabrick which it " can do cheapest, and buy from the other what " it cannot make fo advantageoufly. Labour " will be then truly employed to profit, not di-" verted by Bounties, Jealousies, or Legislative " Interference, from its natural and beneficial « course. This system will attain its real object, « con-

confolidating the ftrength of the remaining parts of the Empire, by encouraging the communications of their market among themselves, with preference to every part against all strangers ! "

I am at least, therefore, secure from the defign of appearing to deliver any partial or chimerical opinion of my own, when I thus state, on the authority of a perfon the best informed, and who then judged dispassionately, both the infinite importance to Ireland of fecuring permanently the great commercial advantages which she now holds at the diferetion of Great Britain, and the additional benefit which she would derive from any fettlement which opened to her gradually a ftill more free and compleat commercial intercourse with this Country. And while I ftate thus ftrongly the commercial advantages to the fifter Kingdom, I have no alarm left I should excite any fentiment of jealoufy here. I know that the inhabitants of Great Britain wish well to the prosperity of Ireland ;- that, if the Kingdoms are really and folidly united, they feel that to increase the commercial wealth of one Country is not to diminish that that of the other, but to increase the firength and power of both. But to justify that sentiment, we must be fatisfied that the wealth we are pouring into the lap of Ireland is not every day liable to be fnatched from us, and thrown into the scale of the enemy. If therefore Ireland is to continue, as I trust it will for ever, an effential part of the integral firength of the British Empire; if her firength is to be permanently ours, and our firength to be hers, neither I, nor any English minister, can ever be deterred by the fear of creating jealous in the hearts of Englishmen, from stating the advantages of a closer Connection, or from giving any affistance to the Commercial Prosperity of that Kingdom.

If ever indeed I fhould have the misfortune to witnefs the melancholy moment when fuch principles must be abandoned, when all hope of feeing Ireland permanently and fecurely connected with this country shall be at an end, I shall at least have the consolution of knowing, that it will not be the want of temper or forbearance, of conciliation, of kindness, or of full explanation on our part, which which will have produced an event fo fatal to Ireland, and fo dangerous to Great Britain. If ever the over-bearing power of prejudice and paffion fhall produce that fatal confequence, it will too late be perceived and acknowledged, that all the great commercial advantages which Ireland at prefent enjoys, and which are continually increasing, are to be ascribed to the liberal conduct, the fostering care, of the British Empire, extended to the Sister Kingdom as to a part of ourfelves, and not (as has been fallaciously and vainly pretended) to any thing which has been done or can be done by the independent power of her own feparate Legislature.

I have thus, Sir, endeavoured to flate to you the reafons, why I think this Meafure advifable; why I wifh it to be proposed to the Parliament of Ireland, with temper and fairness; and why it appears to me, entitled at least to a calm and dispatsionate discussion in that Kingdom. 1 am aware, however, that objections have been urged against the Measure, fome of which are undoubtedly plausible, and have been but too successful in their influence on the Irifh Parliament. Of these objections I shall now proceed, as concisely as possible, to take fome notice.

The first is, what I heard alluded to by the Honourable Gentleman opposite to me, when his Majefty's Meffage was brought down; namely-That the Parliament of Ireland is incompetent to entertain and discuss the question, or rather, to act upon the Measure proposed, without having previously obtained the confent of the People of Ireland, their Conftituents. But, Sir, I am led to suppose from what the Honourable Gentleman afterwards stated, that he made this objection, rather by way of deprecating the discussion of the question, than as entertaining the smallest doubt upon it himself. -If, however, the Honourable Gentleman, or any other Gentleman on the other fide of the House, should seriously entertain a doubt on the subject, I shall be ready to discuss it with him diffinctly, either this night or at any future opportunity. For the prefent I will affume, that no man can deny the competency of the Parliament of Ireland (representing as it does, in the language II language of our Constitution, " lawfully, fully, and freely, all the estates of the people of the realm") to make Laws to bind that People, unlefs he is difposed to diffinguish that Parliament from the Parliament of Great Britain; and, while he maintains the Independence of the Irish Legislature, yet denies to it the lawful and effential powers of Parliament .--No man, who maintains the Parliament of Ireland to be co-equal with our own, can deny its competency on this queftion, unless he means to go the length of denying, at the fame moment, the whole of the authority of the Parliament of Great Britain - to shake every principle of legislation and to maintain, that all the Acts paffed, and every thing done by Parliament, or fanctioned by its authority, however facred, however beneficial, is neither more nor less than an act of usurpation. He must not only deny the validity of the Union between Scotland and England, but he must deny the authority of every one of the proceedings of the limited Legislature fince the Union; nay, Sir, he must go still farther, and deny the authority under which we now fit and deliberate here, as a House of Parliament. Of course, he must deny the validity of the adjustment of 1782, and call in question every measure which he has himself been the most forward to have enforced. This point, Sir, is of fo much importance, that I think I ought not to fuffer the opportunity to pafs, without illuftrating more fully what I mean. If this principle of the incompetency of Parliament to the decision of the Measure be admitted, or if it be contended, that Parliament has no legitimate authority to difcufs and decide upon it, you will be driven to the neceffity of recognizing a principle, the most dangerous that ever was adopted in any civilized State. I mean the principle, that Parliament cannot adopt any measure new in its nature, and of great importance, without appealing to the constituent and delegating authority for directions. If that doctrine be true, look to what an extent it will carry you. If fuch an argument could be fet up and maintained, you acted without any legitimate authority when you created the representation of the Principality of Wales, or of either of the Counties Palatine of England. Every Law that Parliament ever made, without that appeal, either as to its own Frame and Conftitution, as to the qualification of the electors or the elected, as to the great great and fundamental point of the fuccession to the Crown, was made without due authority.

If we turn to Ireland itfelf, what do Gentlemen think of the power of that Parliament, which, without any fresh delegation from its Protestant conftituents, affociates to itfelf all the Catholic electors, and thus destroys a fundamental distinction on which it was formed? God forbid, that I should object to or blame any of these Meafures ! I am only stating the extent to which the principle (that Parliament has no authority to decide upon the present Measure) will lead; and, if it be admitted in one cafe, it must be admitted in all. Will any man fay, that (although a Protestant Parliament in Ireland, chofen exclusively by Protestant Constituents, has by its own inherent power, and without confulting those conftituents, admitted and comprehended the Catholics who were till then, in fact, a separate community) that Parliament cannot affociate itself with another Protestant community, represented by a Protestant Parliament, having one interest with itself, and fimilar in its Laws, its Constitution, and its Eftablished

Established Religion? What must be faid by those who have at any time been friends to any plan of Parliamentary Reform, and particularly fuch as have been most recently brought forward, either in Great Britain or Ireland? Whatever may have been thought of the propriety of the Measure, I never heard any doubt of the competency of Parliament to confider and discuss it. Yet I defy any man to maintain the principle of those plans, without contending that, as a Member of Parliament, he posseffes a right to concur in disfranchifing those who fent him to Parliament, and to felect others, by whom he was not elected, in their stead. I am sure that no sufficient distinction, in point of principle, can be fuccefsfully maintained for a fingle moment; nor should I deem it necessary to dwell on this point, in the manner I do, were I not convinced that it is connected in part with all those false and dangerous notions on the fubject of Government which have lately become too prevalent in the world. It may, in fact, be traced to that groß perversion of the principles of all political fociety, which refts on the fuppofition that there exifts continually in every Government I 2

vernment a Sovereignty in abeyance (as it were) on the part of the People, ready to be called forth on every occafion, or rather, on every pretence, when it may fuit the purpofes of the party or faction who are the advocates of this doctrine to fuppofe an occafion for its exertion. It is in thefe falfe principles that are contained the feeds of all the mifery, defolation, and ruin, which in the prefent day have fpread themfelves over fo large a proportion of the habitable Globe.

These principles, Sir, are, at length, fo well known and understood in their practical effects, that they can no longer hope for one enlightened or intelligent advocate, when they appear in their true colours. Yet, with all the horror we all feel, in common with the reft of the World, at the effect of them, with all the confirmed and increasing love and veneration which we feel towards the Constitution of our Country, founded as it is, both in Theory and Experience, on principles directly the reverse; yet, there are too many among us, who, while they abhor and reject fuch opinions, when prefented to them in their naked deformity, suffer them in a more disguised shape II to

to be gradually infused into their minds, and infenfibly to influence and bias their fentiments and arguments on the greatest and most important discuttions. This concealed poison is now more to be dreaded than any open attempt to fupport fuch principles by argument or to enforce them by arms. No fociety, whatever be its particular form, can long fubfift, if this principle is once admitted. In every Government, there must refide fomewhere a supreme, absolute, and unlimited authority. This is equally true of every lawful Monarchy-of every Ariftocracy-of every pure Democracy (if indeed fuch a form of Government ever has existed, or ever can exist)-and of those mixed Conftitutions formed and compounded from the others, which we are justly inclined to prefer to any of them. In all these Governments, indeed alike, that power may by poffibility be abufed, but whether the abuse is such as to justify and call for the interference of the people collectively, or, more properly speaking, of any portion of it, must always be an extreme cafe and a queftion of the greatest and most perilous refponfibility, not in Law only, but in Confcience and in Duty, to all those who either act upon it themfelves, themselves, or persuade others to do so. But no provision for fuch a cafe ever has been or can be made before-hand; it forms no chapter in any known code of laws, it can find no piace in any fystem of human jurisprudence. But, above all, if such a principle can make no part of any eftablished Constitution, not even of those where the Government is fo framed as to be most liable to the abuse of its powers, it will be preposterous indeed to fuppofe that it can be admitted in one where those powers are fo distributed and balanced as to furnish the best security against the probability of fuch an abufe. Shall that principle be fanctioned as a neceffary part of the best Government, which cannot be admitted to exist even as a check upon the worft! Pregnant as it is with danger and confusion, shall it be received and established in proportion as every reason which can ever make it necessary to recur to it is not likely to exist? Yet, Sir, I know not how it is, that, in proportion as we are lefs likely to have occasion for fo desperate a remedy, in proportion as a Government is fo framed as to provide within itself the best guard and control on the exercise of every branch of authority, to furnish the means

and to fecure, by its own natural operation, a due attention to the interest and feelings of every part of the community, in that very proportion perfons have been found perverse enough to imagine, that such a Constitution admits and recognizes, as a part of it, that which is inconfissent with the nature of any Government, and, above all, inapplicable to our own.

Ihave faid more, Sir, upon this fubje & than I fhould have thought neceffary, if I had not felt that this falfe and dangerous mockery of the Sovereignty of the People is in truth one of the chief elements of Jacobinifm, one of the favourite impoflures to miflead the underftanding, and to flatter and inflame the paffions of the mafs of mankind, who have not the opportunity of examining and expofing it, and that as fuch on every occafion, and in every fhape in which it appears, it ought to be combated and refifted by every friend to civil order, and to the peace and happinefs of mankind.

Sir, the next and not the least prevalent objection, is one which is contained in words which are an appeal to a natural and laudable, but what I must

I must call an erroneous and mistaken sense of national pride. It is an appeal to the generous and noble paffions of a nation eafily inflamed under any supposed attack upon its honour, I mean the attempt to represent the quiftion of a Union by compact between the Parliaments of the two Kingdoms as a queftion involving the Independance of Ireland .---- It has been faid, that no compensation could be made to any country for the furrender of its National Independance. Sir, on this, as well as on every part of the question, I am defirous Gentlemen should come closely to the point, that they should fift it to the bottom, and afcertain upon what grounds and principles their opinion really refts. Do they mean to maintain that in any humiliating, in any degrading fense of the word which can be acted upon practically as a rule, and which can lead to any useful conclusion, that at any time when the Government of any two separate Countries unite in forming one more extensive empire, that the individuals who composed either of the former narrow societies are afterwards less members of an independant country, or to any valuable and useful purpose less possessed of political freedom or civil civil happinefs than they were before. It mult be obvious to every Gentleman who will look at the fubject, in tracing the hiftory of all the countries, the most proud of their present exifting independance, of all the nations in Europe, there is not one that could exift in the flate in which it now flands, if that principle had been acted upon by our forefathers; and Europe mult have remained to this hour in a flate of ignorance and barbarism, from the perpetual warfare of independent and petty states. In the instance of our own Country, it would be a superfluous waste of time to enumerate the steps by which all its parts were formed into one Kingdom; but will any man in general affert, that in all the different Unions which have formed the principal states of Europe, their inhabitants have become less free, that they have had lefs of which to be proud, lefs fcope for their own exertions, than they had in their former fituation. If this doctrine is to be generally maintained, what becomes of the fituation at this hour of any one county of England, or of any one county of Ireland, now united under the independant Parliament of that Kingdom? If it be pushed to its full extent, it is obvioualy incompatible with all civil fociety. As the former principle of the fovereignty of the people ftrikes at the foundation of all governments, fo this is equally hoftile to all political confederacy, and mankind must be driven back to what is called the ftate of nature.

NI LITE STATES

But while I combat this general and abstract principle, which would operate as an objection to every union between separate states, on the ground of the facrifice of independance, do I mean to contend that there is in no cafe just ground for such a statement? Far from it : it may become, on many occasions, the first duty of a free and generous people. If there exists a country which contains within itself the means of military protection, the naval force neceffary for its defence, which furnishes objects of industry fufficient for the fubfistence of its inhabitants, and pecuniary refources adequate to maintaining, with dignity, the rank which it has attained among the nations of the world; if, above all, it enjoys the bleffings of internal content and tranquillity, and posseffes a distinct constitution of its own, the defects of which, if any, it is within itself capable of correcting, and if that conftitution be equal, if not superior, to that of any other in the world, or (which is nearly the fame thing) thing) if those who live under it believe it to be fo, and fondly cherish that opinion, I can indeed well understand that such a country must be jealous of any measure, which, even by its own confent, under the authority of its own lawful government, is to affociate it as a part of a larger and more extensive empire.

But, Sir, if, on the other hand, it should happen that there be a country which, against the greatest of all dangers that threaten its peace and fecurity, has not adequate means of protecting itself without the aid of another nation; if that other be a neighbouring and kindred nation, fpeaking the fame language, whofe laws, whofe cuftoms, and habits are the fame in principle, but carried to a greater degree of perfection, with a more extensive commerce, and more abundant means of acquiring and diffusing national wealth; the stability of whose governmentthe excellence of whofe constitution-is more than ever the admiration and envy of Europe, and of which the very Country of which we are speaking can only boast an inadequate and imperfect refemblance;-under fuch circumstances, I would afk, what conduct would be prefcribed by every rational K 2 rational principle of dignity, of honour, or of intereft? I would ask, whether this is not a faithful description of the circumstances which ought to dispose Ireland to a Union ? Whether Great Britain is not precifely the nation with which, on these principles, a Country, fituated as Ireland is, would defire to unite? Does a Union, under fuch circumstances, by free consent, and on just and equal terms, deferve to be branded as a propofal for fubjecting Ireland to a foreign yoke? Is it not rather the free and voluntary affociation of two great Countries, which join, for their common benefit, in one Empire, where each will retain its proportional weight and importance, under the fecurity of equal laws, reciprocal affection, and infeparable interests, and which want nothing but that indiffoluble Connection to render both invincible.

Non ego nec Teucris Italos parere jubebo Nec nova regna peto; paribus fe legibus ambæ Invictæ gentes æterna in fædera mittant.

Sir, I have nearly flated all that is neceffary for me to trouble the Houfe with; there are, however, one or two other objections which I with not entirely to pass over : One of them is, a general general notion that a Union with Great Britain must neceffarily increase one of the great evils of Ireland, by producing depopulation in many parts of the Country, and by increasing greatly the number of absentees. I do not mean to deny that this effect would, to a limited extent, take place during a part of the year; but I think it will not be difficult for me to prove, that this circumstance will be more than counterbalanced by the operation of the fystem in other respects.

Artiament hom Doam. If it

If it be true that this measure has an inevitable tendency to admit the introduction of that Britifh Capital which is most likely to give life to all the operations of Commerce, and to all the improvements of Agriculture; if it be that which above all other confiderations is most likely to give fecurity, quiet, and internal repose to Iteland; if it is likely to remove the chief bar to the internal advancement of wealth and of civilization, by a more intimate intercours with England; if it is more likely to communicate from hence those habits which diftinguish this Country, and which, by a continued gradation, unite the highest and the lowest orders of the community without a chasm in any part of the system; if it is not only likely to invite (as I have already faid) English Capital to set Commerce in motion, but to offer it the use of new markets, to open fresh resources of wealth and industry; can wealth, can industry, can civilization increase among the whole bulk of the people without its much more than counterbalancing the partial effect of the removal of the few individuals who, for a small part of the year, would follow the ieat of Legislation? Will it be supposed that the mere absence of Parliament from Dublin, if it would ftill remain the centre of Education and of the internal commerce of a country increasing in improvement; if it would still remain the feat of legal discussion, which must always increase with an increase of property and occupation, what ground is there to suppose, with a view even to the interefts of those whose partial interests have been most fuccessfully appealed to; what reason is there to fuppose that, with a view either to the respectable Body of the Bar, to the Merchant, or Shopkeeper of Dublin (if it were possible to suppose that a transaction of this fort cught to be referred to that fingle criterion) that they would not find their proportionate share of advantage in the general advantage advantage of the State? Let it be remembered, also, that if the transfer of the Seat of Legislature may call from Ireland to England the Members of the United Parliament, yet, after the Union, property, influence and confideration in Ireland will lead, as much as in Great Britain, to all the objects of imperial ambition; and there must, confequently, exist a new incitement to perfons to acquire property in that Country, and to those who possible it, to reside there and to cultivate the good opinion of those with whom they live, and to extend and improve their influence and connections.

But, Sir, I need not dwell longer on argument, however it may fatisfy my own mind, becaufe we can on this queftion refer to experience. I fee every Gentleman anticipates that I allude to Scotland. What has been the refult of the Union there? A Union, give me leave to fay, as much oppofed, and by much the fame arguments, prejudices, and mifconceptions, as are urged, at this moment, creating too the fame alarms, and provoking the fame outrages, as have lately taken place in Dublin. Look at the metropolis of Scotland:

Scotland: the population of Edinburgh has been more than doubled fince the Union, and a new city added to the old. But we may be told, that Edinburgh has engroffed all the commerce of that country, and has those advantages which Dublin cannot expect. Yet while Edinburgh, deprived of its Parliament, but retaining, as Dublin would retain, its Courts of Justice; continuing, as Dublin would continue, the refort of those whose circumstances would not permit them to visit a diftant metropolis; continuing, as Dublin would continue, the feat of national education, while Edinburgh has baffled all the predictions of that period, what has been the fituation of Glafgow? The population of Glafgow, fince the Union, has increased in the proportion of between five and fix to one : look at its progress in manufactures; look at its general advantages, and tell me what ground there is, judging by experience in aid of theory, for those gloomy apprehensions which have been so industriously excited.

There remains, Sir, another general line of argument, which I have already anticipated, and I hope anfwered, that the commercial privileges 9 now now enjoyed by Ireland, and to which it owes fo much of its profperity, would be lefs fecure than at prefent. I have given an anfwer to that already, by flating that they are falfely imputed to the independence of the Irish Parliament, for that they are in fact owing to the exercise of the voluntary difcretion of the British Parliament, unbound by compact, prompted only by its natural disposition to confider the interefts of Ireland the fame as its own; and if that has been done while Ireland is only united to us in the imperfect and precarious manner in which it is, while it has a feparate Parliament, notwithstanding the commercial jealousies of our own manufactures ; if under these circumftances we have done fo, if we have done fo with no other connection than that which now fubfifts, and while Ireland has no fhare in our reprefentation; what fresh ground can there be for apprehenfion, when she will have her proportionate weight in the Legislature, and will be united with us as closely as Lancashire or Yorkshire, or any other county in Great Britain.

Sir, I have feen it under the fame authority to which I am forry fo often to advert, that the L Linen Linen Trade would be injured, and that there will be no fecurity for its retaining its prefent advantages. I have already flated to you (and with that very authority in my favour) that those advantages are at prefent precarious, and that their fecurity can only arife from Compact with Great Britain. Such a Compact, this Measure would establish in the most folemn manner; but besides this, Sir, the natural policy of this Country, not merely its experienced liberality, but the identity of Interests after a Union, would offer a fecurity worth a thousand Compacts.

Sir, the only other general topic of objection is (that upon which great pains have been taken to raife an alarm in Ireland) the idea that the main principle of the Measure was to subject Ireland to a load of Debt and an increase of Taxes, and to expose her to the confequences of all our alleged difficulties and supposed necessities.

Sir, I hope the zeal, the fpirit, and the liberal and enlarged policy, of this Country, has given ample proof that it is not from a pecuniary motive that we feek an Union. If it is not 12 . defirable defirable on the grounds I have stated, it cannot be recommended for the mere purpose of Taxation; but to quiet any jealoufy on this fnbject, here again let us look to Scotland : is there any inftance where, with 45 Members on her part and 513 on ours, that that part of the United Kingdom has paid more than its proportion to the general burthens ?- Is it, then, Sir, any ground of apprehension, that we are likely to tax Ireland more heavily when the becomes affociated with ourfelves?- To tax in its due proportion the whole of the Empire, to the utter exclusion of the idea of the predominence of one part of fociety over another, is the great characteristic of British Finance, as Equality of Laws is of the British Constitution.

But, Sir, in addition to this, if we come to the details of this proposition, it is in our power to fix, for any number of years which shall be thought fit, the proportion by which the Contribution of Ireland, to the expences of the State, shall be regulated; that these proportions shall not be fuch as would make a contribution greater than the necessary amount of its own prefent necessary L 2 expences expences as a feparate Kingdom ; and, even after that limited period, the proportion of the whole contribution, from time to time, might be made to depend on the comparative produce, in each Kingdom, of fuch general taxes as might be thought to afford the beft criterion of their refpective wealth. Or, what I fhould hope would be found practicable, the fyftem of internal taxation in each county might gradually be fo equalized and affimilated, on the leading articles, as to make all rules of fpecific proportion unneceffary, and to fecure, that Ireland fhall never be taxed but in proportion as we tax ourfelves.

The application of these principles, however, will form matter of future discussion; I mention them only as strongly shewing, from the misseprefentation which has taken place on this part of the subject, how incumbent it is upon the House to receive these propositions, and to adopt, after due deliberation, such resolutions as may record to Ireland the terms upon which we are ready to meet her. And, in the mean time, let us wait, not without impatience, but without disfatisfaction, for that moment, when the effect of reason and discussion difcuffion may reconcile the minds of men, in that Kingdom, to a Meafure which I am fure will be found as neceffary for their peace and happines, as it will be conducive to the general fecurity and advantage of the British Empire.

Sir, it remains to be my duty to lay these Refolutions before the House, wishing that the more detailed discussion of them may be referved to a future day.

That for the fame purpose it appears also to this Committee, that it would be fit to propose that His Majesty's Subjects in Ireland shall at all times hereafter be entitled to the fame privileges, and be on the fame footing in respect of Trade and Navigation, in all Ports and Places belonging to Great Britain, and in all cafes with respect to which Treaties shall be made by His Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, with any Foreign Power, as His Majefty's Subjects in Great Britain; that no Duty shall be imposed on the Import or Export between Great Britain and Ireland of any Articles now Duty free; and that on other Articles there shall be established, for a time to be limited, such a moderate rate of equal Duties as shall, previous to the Union, be agreed upon and approved by the respective Parliaments, subject, after the expiration of fuch limited time, to be diminished equally with respect to both Kingdoms, but in no cafe to be encreased; that all Articles which may at any time hereafter be imported into Great Britain from Foreign Parts, shall be importable through either Kingdom into the other, fubject to the like Duties and Regulations as if the fame were imported directly from Foreign Parts; that where any Articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of either Kingdom, are fubject to any internal Duty in one Kingdom, fuch countervailing Duties (over and above any Duties on import to be fixed as aforefaid) shall be imposed as shall be necessary to prevent any inequality in that respect: and that all other matters of Trade and Commerce other than the foregoing, and than fuch others as may before the Union be fpecially agreed upon for the due encouragement of the Agriculture and Manufactures of the respective Kingdoms, shall remain to be regulated from time to time by the United Parliament.

EIGHTH.

- That for the like purpofe it would be fit to propofe, that all Laws in force at the time of the Union, and that all the Courts of Civil or Ecclefiaffical Jurifdiction within the refpective Kingdoms, fhall remain as now by Law effablifhed within the fame, fubject only to fuch alterations or regulations from time to time as circumftances may appear to the Parliament of the UNITED KINGDOM to require.
- That the foregoing RESOLUTIONS be laid before His Majesty with an humble ADDRESS, affuring His Majesty that we have proceeded with the utmost attention to the confideration of the important objects recommended to us in His Majesty's Gracious MESSAGE.

That we entertain a firm perfuasion that a COMPLETE AND INTIRE UNION between Great Britain and Ireland, founded on equal and liberal Principles, on the fimilarity of Laws, Conflictution and Government, and on a fenfe of mutual Interefts and Affections, by promoting the Security, Wealth, and Commerce of the refpective Kingdoms, and by allaying the diffractions which have unhappily prevailed in Ireland, must afford fresh means of opposing at all times an effectual refistance to the defiructive Projects of our Foreign and Domestic Enemies, and must tend to confirm and augment the Stability, Power, and Resources of the Empire.

Impressed with these confiderations, we feel it our duty humbly to lay before His Majesty such Propositions as appear to us best calculated to form the Basis of fuch a settlement, leaving it to His Majesty's wifdom, at fuch time and in fuch manner as His Majefty, in his Parental Solicitude for the happinels of his People, shall judge fit, to communicate these Propositions to His Parliament of Ireland, with whom we shall be at all times ready to concur in all such Measures as may be found most conducive to the accomplishment of this great and falutary Work. And we trust that, after full and mature confideration, fuch a Settlement may be framed and established, by the deliberative Confent of the Parliaments of both Kingdoms, as may be conformable to the Sentiments, Wifhes, and real Interests of His Majesty's faithful Subjects of Great Britain and Ireland, and may unite them infeparably in the full enjoyment of the bleffings of our free and invaluable Conftitution, in the fupport of the Honour and Dignity of His Majefty's Crown, and in the prefervation and advancement of the Welfare and Prosperity of the whole British Empire.

RESOLVED, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament affembled Nemine diffentiente, That an humble Addrefs be preferred to His Majefty, to return him our thanks for the moft gracions Meffage fent to this Houfe by His Majefty's command, through the medium of His Grace the Lord Lieutenant, and to affure him of our moft unfhaken loyalty and attachment to His Majefty's perfon and government, and of the lively fenfe we entertain of his paternal care of his people of Ireland, in thus enquiring into the difcontents discontents and jealousies that subsist amongst them, in order to such Final Adjustment as may give mutual satisfaction to his Kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland.

That, thus encouraged by His Royal Interpofition, we fhall beg leave, with all duty and affection, to lay before His Majefty the caufe of fuch difcontents and jealoufies.

To reprefent to His Majefty, That his fubjects of Ireland are entitled to a free conflictation; that the Imperial Crown of Ireland is infeparably annexed to the Crown of Great Britain, on which Connection the happiness of both nations effentially depends; but that the Kingdom of Ireland is a distinct dominion, having a Parliament of her own, the fole Legislature thereof.

That there is no power whatfoever competent to make laws to bind this nation, except the King, Lords, and Commons, of Ireland; upon which exclusive Right of Legislation we confider the very effence of our liberties to depend, a Right which we claim as the Birth-right of the People of Ireland, land, and which we are determined, in every fituation of life, to affert and maintain.

To reprefent to His Majefty, That we have feen with concern certain claims, both of leg flature and judicature, afferted by the Parliament of Great Britain, in an Act paffed in Great Britain in the fixth year of George the First, inticuled " An Act for the better fecuring the Depen-" dency of Ireland upon the Crown of Great " Britain :"

That we conceive the faid Act, and the powers thereby claimed, to be the great and principal caufes of the difcontents and jealoufies that fubfift in this Kingdom:

To affure His Majefty, That this Houfe confiders it as a matter of conflicutional right and protection, that all Bills which become Law fhould receive the approbation of His Majefly, under the Seal of Great Britain, but we confider the practice of fupprefing our Bills in the Council of Ireland, or altering them any where, to be a matter which calls for redrefs:

To

To represent to His Majesty, That an Act intituled "An Act for the better Accommodation "of His Majesty's Forces," being unlimited in duration, but which, from the particular circumstances of the times, passed into a law, has been the cause of much jealously and discontent in this Kingdom:

That we have thought it our duty to lay before His Majesty these, the principal causes of the discontents and jealouss subsisting in this Kingdom:

That we have the greatest reliance on His Majesty's wifdom, the most fanguine expectations from his virtuous choice of a Chief Governor, and the greatest confidence in the wife and conflitutional Council His Majesty has adopted:

That we have, moreover, a high fenfe and veneration for the British Character, and do therefore conceive, that the proceedings of this country, founded as they are in right, and supported by conflictutional liberty, must have excited the approbation and effeem of the British nation: That That we are the more confirmed in this hope, inafmuch as the people of this Kingdom have never expressed a defire to share the freedom of Great Britain, without at the fame time declaring their determination to share her fate, standing or falling with the British nation.

Copy of a Refolution of the House of Commons in Ireland, Martis, 16° die Aprilis, 1782.

RESOLVED, That an humble Address be prefented to His Majefty, to return His Majefty the thanks of this House for his most gracious meffage to this House, fignified by his Grace the Lord Lieutenant. To assure His Majesty of our unshaken attachment to His Majesty's Person and Government, and of our lively fense of his Paternal Care, in thus taking the lead to administer content to His Majesty's subjects of Ireland; that thus encouraged by his royal interposition, we shall beg leave, with all duty and affection, to lay before His Majesty the causes of our discontents tents and jealousies : To affure His Majesty, that his fubjects of Ireland are a free People ; that the Crown of Ireland is an Imperial Crown, infeparably annexed to the Crown of Great Britain, on which Connection the interests and happiness of both Nations offentially depend; but that the kingdom of Ireland is a diftinct Kingdom, with a Parliament of her own, the fole Legislature thereof; that there is no body of men competent to make Laws to bind this nation, except the King, Lords, and Commons of Ireland, nor any other Parliament which hath any authority or power of any fort whatfoever in this country, fave only the Parliament of Ireland : To affure His Majefty, that we humbly conceive, that in this Right the very Effence of our Liberties exist; a Right which we, on the part of all the People of Ireland, do elaim as their birth-right, and which we cannot yield but with our lives: To affure His Majefty, that we have feen with concern certain Claims advanced by the Parliament of Great Britain, in an act, intituled, " An Act for the " better fecuring the Dependency of Ireland;" an act containing matter entirely irreconcileable to the fundamental Rights of this Nation; that we

we confider this act, and the claims it advances, to be the great and principle cause of the discontents and jealousies in this Kingdom : To assure His Majesty, that His Majesty's Commons of Ireland do most fincerely wish, that all Bills which become Law in Ireland should receive the approbation of His Majesty, under the Seal of Great Britain; but that yet we do confider the Practice of fuppreffing our Bills in the Council of Ireland, or altering the fame any where, to be another just cause of discontent and jealousy: To assure His Majesty, that an Act, intituled, " An Act " for the better Accommodation of His Majefty's "Forces," being unlimitted in duration, and defective in other instances (but passed in that shape from the particular circumstances of the times) is another just cause of discontent and jealousy in this Kingdom: That we have submitted these, the principal causes of the present difcontent and jealoufy in Ireland, and remain in humble expectation of redreis; that we have the greatest reliance on His Majesty's wildom, the most sanguine expectations from his virtuous choice of a Chief Governor, and great confidence in the wife, auspicious, and constitutional councils II which

which we fee with fatisfaction His Majefty has adopted; that we have moreover a high fenfe and veneration for the Britifh character, and do therefore conceive, that the proceedings of this country, founded as they are in right, and tempered by duty, must have excited the approbation and efteem, inftead of wounding the pride, of the Britifh Nation; and we beg leave to affure His Majefty, that we are the more confirmed in this hope, in as much as the people of this Kingdom have never expressed a defire to fhare the freedom of England, without declaring a determination to fhare her fate likewife, ftanding and falling with the British nation.
