THE
CHRISTOPHER SMART, A. M.

CHRISTOPHER SMART was born at Shipbourne, in Kent, April 11, 1722. The family of which he was descended had been long established in the county of Durham. His grandfather married a Miss Gilpin, of the family of the celebrated Bernard Gilpin, rector of Houghton-le-Spring, "the Apostle of the North." His father was steward of the estates in Kent, of Lord Barnard, afterwards Earl of Darlington, and was possessed of an estate of 300l. a-year, in the neighbourhood of Shipbourne. Having been intended for holy orders, he had a better taste for literature than is commonly found in country gentlemen; a taste which he transmitted to his son.

In the beginning of his life he was of a very delicate constitution, having been born earlier than the natural period; and his body being too feeble to permit his indulging freely in childish amusements, his mind had leisure to exercise and expand its powers.

He received the rudiments of his education at Maidstone school, from which he was removed when he was eleven years old, on the death of his father, which happened at that time, and sent by his mother to Durham, that he might have the advantages of a good school, change of air to strengthen a weakly frame, and the notice and protection of his father's relations.

He did not continue without distinction at Durham school, the master of which, at that time, was the Rev. Mr Dongworth, an Etonian, and a man of eminent learning and abilities. His addiction to metre was then such, that several of his school-fellows have confessed their obligations to him for their first successful essays in Latin versification.

As his father had been steward to Lord Barnard, he was very cordially received at Raby Castle, when absent, during the holidays, from school. In this noble family he was introduced to the acquaintance of the late Duchess of Cleveland, who discerned and patronised his talents. She allowed him forty pounds a-year, till her death.

He was removed from Durham school to the University of Cambridge, when he was seventeen, being admitted of Pembroke Hall, October 30, 1739.

Though the favourite studies of this seat of learning were not congenial with his mind, yet his classical attainments and poetical powers were so eminent, as to attract the notice of persons not very strongly prejudiced in favour of such accomplishments. Such was the fame of his genius, and such the vivacity of his disposition, that his company was very earnestly solicited; and to suppress or withhold our talents, when the display of them is repaid by admiration, is commonly too great an effort for human prudence.

While he was the pride of Cambridge, and the chief poetical ornament of that university, he ruined himself by returning the tavern-treats of strangers, who had invited him as a wit, and an extraordinary personage, in order to boast of his acquaintance.

This social spirit of retaliation quickly involved him in habits and expences, of which he felt the consequences during the rest of his life.

His allowance from home was scanty; for, as his father had died suddenly, and in embarrassed circumstances, his mother had been compelled to sell the largest part of the family estate at considerable loss.

At this early period of life he was not more remarkable for his learning than his humour, of which many examples, like the following, were long remembered by his academical acquaintance. The three beadles of the university being men of unusual bulk, he characterised them in this extemporary spondiac.

Pingua tergemorum abdomina Bedellorum.

In 1740, he wrote his first Tripes verses, Datur Mundorum Pluralitas, which were succeeded in the following years by Materies Gaudet vi Inertiæ, and Mutua Oscitationum Propagatio solvi potest mechanice. These verses have more system and design than is generally found in the compositions of young academics; and it is some argument of their being well approved, that they were all thought worthy of a translation into English by the Rev. Mr Fawkes, the translator of "Theocritus," "Anacreon," "Bion," "Moschus," "Musæus," and "Apollonius Rhodius."

He was encouraged by the commendations of his friends to offer himself a candidate for an university scholarship. The yearly value of these appointments is barely 20l.; but the election is open to the whole university, under the degree of Master of Arts; and as the electors are of approved learning, and fix their choice after the strictest scrutiny, the honour of obtaining a scholarship is considerable.

It has been said, that upon this occasion he translated Pope's "Ode on St Cecilia's Day;" but the conjecture is rendered improbable by the length and labour of the composition. But that a scholar equal to such a work, in an impartial classical examination, should surpass his competitors, is no matter of surprise.

His extraordinary success in this ode, induced him to turn his mind to the translation of the "Essay on Man;" and he seems to have written to Pope for his approbation; who, in his answer, advises him to undertake the "Essay on Criticism." "I would not," he says, "give you the trouble of translating the whole "Essay"; the two first epistles are already well done; and if you try, I could wish it were on the last, which is less abstracted, and more easily falls into poetry and common place.—I believe the "Essay on Criticism" will, in general, be more agreeable, both to a young writer, and to the generality of readers.—I ought to take this opportunity of acknowledging the Latin translation of my ode, which you sent me, and in which, I could see little or nothing to alter, it is so exact. Believe me equally desirous of doing you any service, and afraid of engaging you in an art so little profitable, though so well deserving, as good poetry."

It does not appear that Pope bestowed any farther notice on his translator, excepting that he received him once very civilly at his house at Twickenham; and Smart seems to have been induced by his suggestion, to undertake and finish the Latin Translation of the Essay on Criticism; with much praise from the learned, but without profit or popularity.

In 1743, he was admitted to the degree of Bachelor of Arts, and was elected Fellow of Pembroke Hall, on the 3d of July, 1745; and took the degree of Master of Arts in 1747.

In 1747, he wrote a comedy, called A Trip to Cambridge; or, the Grateful Fair, which was acted by the students of the university in Pembroke College Hall. Of this mock play, little remains, except the prologue, printed in the "Poetical Calendar," and a Soliloquy of the Princess Periwinkle, containing the well-known humorous simile,

"Thus when a barber and a collier fight,
The barber beats the luckless collier—white;
The dusty collier heaves his pond'rous sack,
And, big with vengeance, beats the barber—black.
In comes the brick dust man, with grime o'erspread,
And beats the collier and the barber—red.
Black, red, and white, in various clouds are toss'd,
And in the dust they raise, the combatants are lost."

About this time, he contributed largely to The Student; or, The Oxford and Cambridge Monthly Miscellany, a periodical work, set up by Bonnel Thornton, and printed at Oxford, in which Colman, Warton, Johnson, and other wits of both universities distinguished their talents. The papers were collected in two vols. 8vo. 1750-1.

In 1750, he became a candidate for Mr Seaton's reward, arising from the rent of his Kisingbury estate, left by him to the University of Cambridge, to be annually adjudged by the Vice-Chancellor, the Master of Clare-Hall, and the Greek Professor for the time being, to the author, being a Master of Arts, of the best poem on "one or other of the attributes of the Supreme Being, till the subject is exhausted; and afterwards on death, judgment, heaven, hell, purity of heart, &c. or whatever else may be judged by them to be most conducive to the honour of the Supreme Being, and recommendation of virtue."

Mr Seaton's will, dated October 8, 1738, having been disputed by his relations, a law-suit commenced between them and the university; which terminating in favour of the latter, the first subject given out was The Eternity of the Supreme Being, in which Smart had the preference; and for five years, four of which were in succession, the prize was disposed in his favour, for his poetical essays On the Eternity of the Supreme Being, 1750; On the Immensity of the Supreme Being, 1751; On the Omniscience of the Supreme Being, 1752; On the Power of the Supreme Being, 1753; On the Goodness of the Supreme Being, 1755. The value of the prize was then about 30l.

In these poems on the Divine Attributes, confessedly the most finished of his works, confidence in genius, and aversion to the labour of correction, sometimes prevailed over better considerations. The poem On the Divine Goodness, which was written in London, he so long delayed to undertake, that there was barely opportunity to write it upon paper, and to send it to Cambridge, by the most expeditious conveyance, within the time limited for receiving the compositions.

The decisions of the Cambridge judges were, almost in every instance, confirmed by the approbation of the periodical critics; they admired the vein of pious poetry, which ran through his prize poems: they were diffuse in the praise of his genius, though they freely censured his carelessness and inaccuracy; and they continued their approbation of his compositions, till fanaticism (always fatal to just thinking), distorted his ideas, and confined their applause to the talents of his better day.

While he was advancing his reputation as a poet, his extravagance involving him in tavern debts, occasioned his fellowship to be sequestered, and obliged him to leave the university.

In 1752, he quitted college, and soon after relinquished his fellowship, on his marriage with Miss Anna Maria Carnan, the daughter by a former husband of Mary, the wife of the late Mr John Newbery, "the philanthropic bookseller, in St Paul's Church-yard."

As he had relinquished his fellowship without engaging in any of the professions, he seems to have trusted for his future maintenance to his powers as an author. But he had either over-rated his own abilities and perseverance, or the favour of the public.

Though Mr Newbery, to whom he was now allied, was a liberal patron of men of genius, yet the difficulties that had perplexed him at Cambridge, pursued him to London; to which the expence of a family was superadded. Such was his thoughtlessness, that he often invited company to dinner, when no means appeared of providing a meal for his family.

Subsisting in London as a writer for bread, his manner of life neither augmented his personal importance, nor that of his productions. Never nice in his person, in his taste, nor in his acquaintance; he lost his dignity, his time, and his peace of mind. The profits of the publications in which he engaged, were dissipated by a total neglect of economy. While the works of his more prudent contemporaries, Gray and Mason, always polished at leisure, with critical care, and solicitude, were received as favours, and read with reverence; his compositions appeared good, bad, and indifferent, before the dread tribunal of the public, "with all their imperfections on their head."

He enjoyed, while thus engaged in the metropolis, the familiar acquaintance of Dr Johnson, Dr Percy, Dr James, Dr Hawkesworth, Dr Burney, Dr Goldsmith, and Mr Garrick, and indeed of most who were then celebrated for genius, or for learning.

In 1752, he published a collection of Poems on several Occasions, in one volume 4to; which he dedicated to the Earl of Middlesex, "not as a writer, or a scholar," but as "a man of Kent." The Hop-Garden, and Judgment of Midas, first appeared in this collection.

Having received some provocation from Dr Hill, afterwards Sir John Hill, in "the Inspector," and in a paper called "The Impertinent," he took a severe revenge in another "Dunciad," which he called after the name of his hero, The Hilliad. The First Book of this mock-epic, with notes variorum, was published in 1753, in quarto; and was followed by an anonymous performance, called "The Smartiad, a satire occasioned by the Hilliad," folio, 1753.

In his quarrel with Dr Hill, he could obtain no fame, though he greatly augmented the ridicule of that extraordinary personage; but time settles the disputes of authors and men of talents, in the most upright manner. Dr Hill seems to have been insensible to the learning and genius of Smart; and Smart only saw Dr Hill in the light of a quack, and a coxcomb: but posterity not only allows the originality, the invention, and the poetical talents of Smart, but also regards Dr Hill as an able botanist; and though his nostrums and panaceas are now exploded, his voluminous works in natural history have advanced towards fame, with nearly as much rapidity as his empirical productions have descended towards oblivion.

To the Old Woman's Magazine, published about this time, Mr Newbery and himself were the chief, if not the only contributors. He translated also for Mr Newbery, The Works of Horace into English Prose, in two volumes, 12mo. in 1756; a task which he has very ably executed, but of that kind which will never be praised in proportion to the labour. By few and apposite terms, he has expressed the sentiments of Horace, in an idiom, not placed very near the Roman, in the table of grammatical affinities. Of an author not among the least difficult, he is at once an accurate, and an elegant translator. He shows the humblest attention to the language of the original, and an absolute command over his own.

In 1756, he entered into an engagement with Mr Gardner, the bookseller, to furnish papers monthly, in conjunction with Mr Rolt, a voluminous compiler, for The Universal Visitor. Smart, and his coadjutor, were to divide one-third of the profits of the work; they, on their part, signing an agreement, "not to write for ninety-nine years in any other publication." Never, surely, did rapacious avarice dictate a more unreasonable bargain, or submissive poverty place itself in a more humiliating situation. To this publication, Dr Johnson was a contributor, for the assistance of Smart, with whose unhappy vacillation of mind he sincerely sympathized.

He was likewise engaged with Mr Rolt, in a theatrical enterprise at the Haymarket theatre, called Mother Midnight's Entertainment. This was first undertaken at the expence of Mr Newbery, and was afterwards carried on with some degree of success.

In 1756, he published A Hymn to the Supreme Being, on Recovery from a dangerous Fit of Illness, which he dedicated to Dr James. "If it be meritorious," says the dedication, "to have invented medicines for the cure of distempers, either overlooked or disregarded by all your predecessors, millions yet unborn will celebrate the man who wrote the "Medicinal Dictionary," and invented the "Fever Powder."

Though his fortune, as well as constitution, required the utmost care, he was equally negligent in the management of both; and his various and repeated embarrassments, acting upon an imagination uncommonly fervid, produced temporary alienations of mind; which at last were attended with paroxysms so violent and continued, as to render confinement necessary.

In this melancholy state, his family must have been much embarrassed in their circumstances, but for the kind friendship and assistance of Mr Newbery.

Many others of his friends were likewise forward in their services; particularly Dr Johnson and Sir John Hussy Delaval, Bart. afterwards Lord Delaval, to whom he was private tutor in college; and who showed him, upon various occasions, particular instances of his regard.

It was at the request of Sir John, that he wrote a Prologue and Epilogue to the Tragedy of Othello, acted at Drury-Lane, by several persons of quality, 1751; the parts of Iago and Othello being filled by Sir John, and his brother Sir Francis Blake Delaval.

After an interval of little more than two years, he appeared to be pretty well restored; and was accordingly set at liberty; but his mind had received a shock, from which it never entirely recovered. He took a pleasant lodging in the neighbourhood of St James's Park; conducting his affairs, for some time, with sufficient prudence. He was maintained partly by his literary compositions, and partly by the generosity of his friends, receiving, among other benefactions, fifty pounds a-year from the Treasury.

Of the state of his mind, and of his modes of life at this period, Dr Hawkesworth gives the following account, in a letter to Mrs Hunter, one of his sisters.

“ I have, since being in town, called on my old friend, and seen him. He received me with an ardour of kindness natural to the sensibility of his temper; and all were soon seated by his fire-side. I perceived upon his table a quarto book, in which he had been writing, a prayer-book, and a Horace. After the first compliments, I said I had been at Margate, had seen his mother and his sister, who expressed great kindness for him, and made me promise to come and see him. To this he made no reply; nor did he make any inquiry after those I mentioned. He did not even mention the place, nor ask me any question about it, or what carried me thither. After some pause, and some indifferent chat, I returned to the subject, and said, that Mr Hunter and you would be very glad to see him in Kent. To this he replied very quick, “ I cannot afford to be idle.” I said he might employ his mind as well in the country as in town; at which he only shook his head, and I entirely changed the subject. Upon my asking him when we should see the Psalms, he said they were going to press immediately: as to his other undertakings, I found he had completed a translation of Phædrus, in verse, for Dodsley, at a certain price ; and that he is now busy in translating all Horace into verse ; which he sometimes thinks of publishing on his own account, and sometimes of contracting for it with a bookseller. I advised him to the latter ; and he then told me he was in treaty about it, and believed it would be a bargain. He told me, his principal motive for translating Horace into verse, was to supersede the prose translation, which he did for Newbery ; which, he said, would hurt his memory. He intends, however, to review that translation, and print it at the foot of the page in his poetical version : which he proposes to print in quarto, with the Latin, both in verse and prose, on the opposite page. He told me he once had thoughts of publishing it by subscription ; but as he had troubled his friends already, he was unwilling to do it again, and had been persuaded to publish it in numbers ; which, though I rather dissuaded him, seemed at last to be the prevailing bent of his mind. He read me some of it : it is very clever ; and his own poetical fire sparkles in it very frequently ; yet, upon the whole, it will scarcely take place of Francis's ; and therefore, if it is not admitted as a school book, which perhaps may be the case, it will turn to little account. Upon mentioning his prose translation, I saw his countenance kindle ; and, snatching up the book, " what," says he, " do you think I had for this ?" I said I could not tell. " Why," says he, with great indignation, " thirteen pounds." I expressed very great astonishment, which he seemed to think he should increase, by adding—" but I gave a receipt for a hundred." My astonishment was now over ; and I found that he received only thirteen pounds, because the rest had been advanced for his family. This was a tender point ; and I found means immediately to divert him from it. He is with very decent people, in a house most delightfully situated, with a terrace that overlooks St James's Park, and a door into it. He was going to dine with an old friend of my own, Mr Richard Dalton, who has an appointment in the King's Library ; and if I had not been particularly engaged, I would have dined with him. He had lately received a very genteel letter from Dr Lowth, and is by no means considered in any light, that makes his company as a gentleman, a scholar, and a genius, less desirable "

In 1759, Mr Garrick made him an offer of a free benefit at Drury-Lane theatre, which his friends did not permit him to refuse. Upon this occasion, Garrick's comedy of "The Guardian" was acted for the first time, in which he himself performed the principal character.

In 1763, he published A Song to David, written during his confinement; when he was denied the use of pen, ink, and paper, and was obliged to indent his lines with the end of a key upon the wainscot.

The same year he published two small quarto pamphlets, entitled, Poems, and Poems on Several Occasions; and, the year following, Hannah, an Oratorio, 4to; and an Ode to the Earl of Northumberland, on his being appointed Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, with some other pieces, 4to.

In 1765, he published A New Version of the Psalms, 4to, and a Poetical Translation of the Fables of Phædrus, 12mo, which were followed by The Parables, in familiar verse, 12mo, 1768.

In the course of a few years, his economy forsook him, and he was confined for debt in the King's Bench prison; the rules of which he afterwards obtained, by the kindness of his brother-in-law, Mr Thomas Carnan. He appears to have been in extreme distress, by a letter of his to the Rev. Mr Jackson, not long before his death. "Being upon the recovery from a fit of illness, and having nothing to eat, I beg you to lend me two or three shillings, which (God willing) I will return, with many thanks, in two or three days."

At length, after suffering the accumulated miseries of poverty, disease, and insanity, he died of a disorder in his liver, on the 21st of May, 1771, in the 49th year of his age. He left behind him a widow and two daughters, who settled at Reading, in Berkshire; and by the kindness of Mr Newbery, and their own meritorious prudence, were enabled to retrieve their circumstances.

A collection of his Poems, consisting of his Prize Poems, Odes, Sonnets, and Fables, Latin and English Translations, together with many original Compositions, not included in the Quarto Edition, to which is prefixed an Account of his Life, &c. was printed at Reading, by Smart and Cowslade, in two volumes, 12mo. in 1791. Besides the Poetical Translations, which he published in his life-time, the pieces omitted in this edition of his works, are chiefly the Song to David, and some pieces in the small quarto pamphlets, which were written after his confinement, and bear, for the most part, melancholy proofs of the estrangement of his mind.

It is not easy to account for the works of Smart not being included in the collection of the "Works of the English Poets," whose lives were written by Dr Johnson. The choice of poets, for whose works he had agreed to write biographical prefaces, was not his own; and yet, as he condescended to ask a place for Pomfret, Yalden, Blackmore, and Watts, his friend Smart had an equal claim to his notice, from piety, and from genius; but, perhaps the copy-right of his scattered productions could not be easily settled. Even his best pieces, though admirable, have not often been honoured with a place in favourite Collections of Poems. He was too poor an author to bestow, and perhaps he had no ambition to share in the triumph of those who, for the most part, write pieces more for their own amusement, than for that of the public. His way of living, from hand to mouth, depending always on the product of his desultory pen, appropriated to no regular nor profitable purpose, and on the liberality of his friends, was not likely to procure for him that public respect from his contemporaries, which sweetens a man's life, however useless it may be to his works after his death.

The works of Smart, reprinted from the edition of 1791, with some additions, were included in the general edition of the "Works of the British Poets, with Prefaces Biographical and Critical," furnished by the present writer, printed at Edinburgh, in 14 volumes, 8vo. in 1795. The "Biographical and Critical Preface," with some corrections, has been transferred to this edition of his translation of The Works of Horace into English Prose.

The character of this unfortunate poet, compounded like that of all human beings, of good qualities and of defects, may be easily collected from this account of his life. Of his domestic manners, and petty habits, a few peculiarities remain to be mentioned.

Though he was a very diligent student while he was at Cambridge, he was also extremely fond of exercise, and of walking in particular; at which times it was his custom to pursue his meditations. A path worn by his constant treading on the pavement, under the cloisters of his college, was marked by his fellow students. Like Milton and Gray, he had his moments propitious to invention; and has been frequently known to rise suddenly from his bed, that he might fix by writing those delightful ideas which floated before his fancy in the visions of the night.

His piety was exemplary and fervent. In composing his religious poems, he was frequently so impressed with sentiments of devotion, as to write particular passages on his knees.

He was friendly, affectionate, and liberal to excess; so as often to give that to others, of which he was in the utmost want himself. He was also particularly engaging in conversation, when his first shyness was worn away, which he had in common with literary men; but in a very remarkable degree. Having undertaken to introduce his wife to Lord Darlington, he had no sooner mentioned her name to his Lordship, than he retreated suddenly, as if stricken with a panic, from the room, and from the house, leaving her to follow overwhelmed with confusion.

During the far greater part of his life, he was wholly inattentive to economy; and by this negligence lost first his fortune, and then his credit. The civilities shown him by persons greatly his superiors in rank and character, either induced him to expect mines of wealth from the exertion of his talents, or encouraged him to think himself exempted from attention to common obligations.

But his chief fault, from which most of his other faults proceeded, was his deviations from the rules of sobriety; of which the early use of cordials, in the infirm state of his childhood and his youth, might, perhaps, be one cause, and is the only extenuation.

As a poet, his genius has never been questioned by those who censured his carelessness, and commiserated the unhappy vacillation of his mind. He is sometimes not only greatly irregular, but irregularly great. His errors are those of a bold and daring spirit, which bravely hazards what a vulgar mind could never suggest. Shakespeare and Milton are sometimes wild and irregular; and it seems as if originality alone could try experiments. Accuracy is timid, and seeks for authority. Fowls of feeble wing sometimes quit the ground, though at liberty; while the eagle, unrestrained, soars into unknown regions.

His prize poems on the Divine Attributes, are written with the sublimest energies of religion, and the true enthusiasm of poetry; and if he had written nothing else, these compositions alone would have given him a very distinguished rank among the writers of verse. Their faults, though numerous, are amply compensated by their beauties. Some of their defects may be fairly ascribed to redundancy of genius, and impatience of labour ; others to fanaticism, generated, perhaps by the grandeur of the subject ; on which he strained his faculties, in trying to penetrate " beyond the reach of human ken ;" but he never could mount " to the height of his great argument." Dr Johnson, in speaking of sacred poetry, in his life of Waller, has admirably said, that " whatever is great, desirable, or tremendous, is comprised in the name of the Supreme Being. Omnipotence cannot be exalted ; infinity cannot be amplified ; perfection cannot be improved." Upon the whole, however, his prize poems are more accurate than the generality of his performances ; which may be attributed to the deference he might feel for those persons who were to adjudge the prizes which he obtained.

Of his Odes it may be said in general, that they are spirited and poetical. It will be difficult to find any other quality equally applicable to compositions very different from each other ; and in many of which opposite characters occasionally predominate. He has followed the example of Horace, rather than that of the Grecian models ; and of him he is, for the most part, a judicious imitator. Some of the shorter pieces are beautiful, and nearly perfect ; but instances of an improper association of the grave and the ludicrous sometimes occur : and he debases, by an impure admixture, what otherwise would have been gold of the standard value.

On the Hop-Garden much commendation cannot justly be conferred ; and the praise which is withheld from the poetry, will not be very cheerfully lavished on the instructions. But the roughness and want of dignity in the blank verse, and the want of previous information on the art of which he treats, are to be ascribed, not to the want of genius, but to want of diligence and care ; for he never had patience nor application sufficient to bring a long work to any degree of perfection.

His mock heroic poem, the Hilliad, may afford entertainment to those who care little about the hero of the poem, or the subject of the quarrel. Compositions of this class, as they gratify malignity, are usually read with avidity on their first appearance ; but without uncommon merit, they quickly sink into oblivion. The spirit and loftiness of some of the lines, the happy imitation of the " Dunciad," and the wit and humour of the notes, deserve great praise ; but the abuse is coarse, and the scurrility is a disgrace to the republic of letters.

His Judgment of Midas, a masque, or dramatic pastoral, is a classical and elegant performance. It is executed throughout in a masterly manner. It has none of those glaring inaccuracies which disgrace some of his other pieces. The description of Midas following Pan, is full of poetry, as well as spirit. The address of Timolus to the inanimate things about him, on the approach of the gods, has great dignity and propriety, as well as beauty. The first stanza of the song to Pan has great softness and great elegance. But dramatic pastorals, even if the generally interesting topic of love be superadded, will not greatly entertain without their proper embellishments, acting and music.

His Fables, chiefly written for the Student, and the Old Woman's Magazine, rank with the most agreeable metrical compositions of that kind in our language. His versification is less polished, and his apologues, in general, are perhaps less correct than those of Gay and Moore; but in originality, in wit, and in humour, the preference seems due to Smart. They unite the grace and ease of Prior with the humour of Swift; and to these is superadded a very considerable portion of poetical spirit. The introductory lines of almost all the fables are singularly ingenious and happy; and in the course of each, the second line of most couplets generally presents us with an independent new idea. The best and most serious of these playful compositions, is, doubtless, Care and Generosity. It is one of the most beautiful allegories that has ever been imagined. The Citizen and the Red Lion of Brentford, may be thought to transgress the limits of mythological probability; but a dialogue between a man and a painted board, may be forgiven for its humour. The Brocaded Gown and Linen Rag, contains liberal praises of his poetical contemporaries, Akenside, Collins, Gray, and Mason. The Pig is a very exact and beautiful translation of the same story in Phædrus. If in any instances the modern is surpassed by the most charming fabulist of antiquity, for which, perhaps, the Roman is not a little indebted to the superior force and conciseness of the language in which he wrote, in others the original is undoubtedly rivalled, if not excelled, and obtains at last a doubtful victory.

His Ballads, Epigrams, and lighter pieces, bear the stamp of originality, of wit, and of pleasantry. The Force of Innocence is an elegant application of the Integer Vitæ of Horace, to female virtue. Sweet William, The Lass with the Golden Locks, The Decision, Jenny Gray, Lovely Harriot, a crambo ballad, written on Miss Pratt, of Downham, in Norfolk, a lady whom he tenderly loved, are generally known and admired. The epigrams of The Physician and the Monkey, Apollo and Daphne, are sprightly and elegant, and the imitation of Martial and Petronius Ascanius have considerable merit. In the Horatian Canons of Friendship, the sentiments of Horace, Lib. I. Sat. 3, are successfully accommodated to recent facts and familiar images.

Though Smart, if placed like his friend Garrick in the picture, between Tragedy and Comedy, would more incline to the laughter-loving dame than the goddess of tears; some of his serious pieces, besides those on religious subjects, manifest and excite feeling in an eminent degree. The little poem On the Death of Master Newbery, after a lingering illness, must touch every reader of sensibility. In the Epitaph on the Rev. Mr Reynolds, at St Peter's, in the Isle of Thanet, the thoughts and the words in which they are clothed seem to breathe the true spirit of poetical pathos.

In the first rank of the elegant writers of Latin, among our English poets, Jonson, May, Crashaw, Cowley, Milton, Marvell, Addison, Gray, Warton, Johnson, Smart stands very high. His translation of Pope's Ode on St Cecilia's Day, is at once elegant and appropriate. He equals his original in the sublimest passages, except only the third stanza; and to the ballad and epigrammatic stanzas gives dignity and grace. The lines which describe the power of Styx over the enthralled Eurydice, and the superior power of music and of love, are translated with truth and beauty. It has been objected, and with some reason, to Smart's translation, that it exhibits a variety of metres unauthorised by any single example among the Latin poets. But had he, too timid to pursue the rapid flights and wild genius of his original, confined himself to the regular recurrence of the Roman stanza, his imitation would not have been exact, and probably would not have been interesting. The opinion of the public has fully justified the choice of Smart.

In his version of Pope's Essay on Criticism, he is a very diligent imitator of the epistolary style of Horace; and we shall find him carefully following the footsteps of his master, where we might otherwise have been disposed to suspect the purity of his language. To the labours of Smart those persons chiefly are indebted, who, being unacquainted with the English tongue, wish to see Pope's just rules of taste, embellished with his powers of poetry, though appearing with less gloss and lustre, through the medium of translation. In the famous lines intended as an echo to the sense, he has laboured through a very painful task, with considerable dexte-riety ; and in the beautiful picture of the reign of Leo, of Vida, and of the Arts, no foreigner need regret that he is unacquainted with Pope.

His version of Milton's L' Allegro, exhibits the exquisite poetry and brilliant imagery of one of the first descriptive poems in the English language, in appropriate diction, and legitimate verse.

His translation of Fanny Blooming Fair, is a professed imitation of the manner of Vincent Bourne, and not without a considerable portion of the perspicuity of contexture, facility, fluency, delicacy, simplicity and elegance, which characterise the compositions of that amiable and ingenious poet ; but it is inferior to his admirable version of Mallet's "William and Margaret."

His Tripes-poems may be justly considered as legitimate classical compositions. They are the production of a mind deeply tinctured with the excellencies of ancient literature, and attentive both to the substantial parts, and to the decorations of poetry. In boldness of invention, felicity of decoration, and strength and elegance of diction, they are not surpassed by the hexametric poetry of Milton and Gray. The Temple of Dulness, in particular, exhibits such beauties of personification, as only the richest and most vivid imagination could supply. His personifications of Stupor, Sophistica, Mathesis, Microphile, and Atheia, abound with the most poetical imagery, delivered in language that will abide the test of criticism.

TO MÆCENAS.

Men have various attachments : Horace's taste is for Lyric poetry, for the success of which he depends upon the patronage of Mæcenas.

MÆCENAS, descended from royal ancestors, O both my protection and my darling honour! There are some, whose delight it is to have collected Olympic dust in the chariot-race; and whom the goal nicely avoided by glowing wheels, and the noble palm, exalts to the Gods—the governors of the world.

soever is swept from the Lybian threshing-floors : a third, as his delight is to plough his patrimonial fields, you could never tempt, with all the wealth of Attalus, to become a timorous sailor and cross the Myrtoan sea in a Cyprian bark. The merchant, dreading the south-west wind contending with the Icarian waves, commends tranquillity and the rural retirement of his village : but danger over, and incapable of being taught to bear poverty, he refits his shattered vessel. There is another, whose highest indulgence is in cups of old Massic, and in breaking the day, one while stretched at ease under the green Arbutus, another at the placid head of some sacred stream.

The camp, and the sound of the trumpet mingled with that of the clarion, and wars detested by mothers, rejoice many.

The huntsman, unmindful of his tender spouse, remains in the cold air, whether a hart is held in view by his faithful hounds, or a Marsian boar has broken the circling toils.

Ivy, the reward of learned brows, equals Me (in happiness) to the Gods above : the cool grove, and the light dances of Nymphs and Satyrs, distinguish Me from the crowd ; if neither Euterpe withholds her pipe, nor Polyhymnia disdains to tune the Lesbian lyre. But, if you will rank me among the Lyric poets, I shall tower to the stars with my exalted head.

TO AUGUSTUS CÆSAR.

Horace dissuades Augustus from resigning the empire, on account of the prodigies which happened at the beginning of the year.

ENOUGH of snow and dreadful hail has Jupiter now sent upon the earth, and having hurled his thunderbolts with his red right-hand against the sacred towers, he has terrified the city: he has terrified the nations, lest the grievous age of Pyrrha, * complaining of prodigies till then unheard of, should return, when Proteus drove all his marine herd to visit the lofty mountains; and the fishy race was entangled in the elm-top, which before was the frequented seat of doves; and the timorous deer swam in the overwhelming flood. We have seen the yellow † Tiber, with his waves forced back with violence from the Tuscan shore, proceed to demolish the monuments of king Numa, and the temples of Vesta; while he vaunts himself the avenger of the too disconsolate Ilia, ‡ and the uxorious river, leaving his channel, overflows his left bank §, notwithstanding the disapprobation of Jupiter.

Our youth, less numerous by the vices of their fathers, shall hear of the citizens having whetted the sword against themselves, with which it had been better that the formidable Persians had fallen; they shall hear of actual engagements. Which of the Gods shall the people invoke to the affairs of the sinking empire? With what prayer shall the sacred Virgins importune Vesta, who is now inattentive to their hymns? To whom shall Jupiter assign the task of expiating our wickedness? Do thou at length, prophetic Apollo (we pray thee!) come, veiling thy radiant shoulders with a cloud: Or thou, if it be more agreeable to thee, smiling Venus, about whom hover the Gods of Mirth and Love: Or thou, if thou regard thy neglected race and ascendants, our founder Mars, to whom clamour and polished helmets, and the terrible aspect of the Moorish infantry against their bloody enemy are delightful, satiated at length with thy sport, alas! of too long continuance: Or if thou, the winged son of gentle Maia, by changing thy figure personate a youth * upon earth, submitting to be entitled the avenger of Cæsar. Late mayest thou return to the skies, and long mayest thou with pleasure be present to the Roman people; neither may an untimely blast transport thee from us, offended at our crimes. TO THE SHIP, IN WHICH VIRGIL WAS ABOUT TO SAIL TO ATHENS.

Horace wishes Virgil a good voyage, and inveighs against the impious boldness of mankind.

So may the powerful Cyprian Goddess; so may the bright stars, the brothers* of Helen; and so may the father of the winds, confining all except Iapyx†, direct thee, O Ship, who art entrusted with Virgil: my prayer is, that thou mayest land him safe on the Athenian shore, and preserve the half of my soul. Surely oak and threefold brass surrounded his heart, who first trusted a frail vessel to the merciless ocean, nor was afraid of the impetuous Africus contending with the northern storms, nor of the mournful Hyades, nor of the rage of Notus, than which there is not a more absolute controller of the Adriatic, either to raise or assuage its waves at pleasure. What form of death could terrify him, who beheld unmoved the rolling monsters of the deep; who beheld unmoved the tempestuous swelling of the sea, and the Acroceraunians—infamous rocks!

In vain has God in his wisdom divided the countries of the earth by the separating ocean, if nevertheless profane ships bound over waters, which ought not to be violated. The race of man, presumptuous enough to support every thing, rushes on through forbidden wickedness‡.

The presumptuous son of Iäpetus* by an impious † fraud brought down fire into the world. After fire was thus stolen from the celestial mansions, consumption, and a new train of fevers settled upon the earth : and the slow approaching necessity of death, which till now was remote, accelerated its pace. Dædalus essayed the empty air with wings not designed for men. The labour of Hercules broke through Acheron. There is nothing too arduous for mortals to attempt. We aim at heaven itself through folly ‡ ; neither do we suffer, by our wickedness, Jupiter to lay aside his revengeful thunderbolts.

TO SESTIUS.

He exhorts him to pleasure, on the considerations of the approach of spring, and the brevity of life.

SEVERE winter is relaxed by the agreeable vicissitude of the spring and the western breeze ; and engines haul from shore the dry ships. And neither does the cattle any longer delight in the stalls, nor the ploughman in the fire-side ; nor are the meadows whitened by hoary frosts. Now Cytherean Venus leads up the dance by moon-light ; and the comely Graces, in conjunction with the Nymphs, shake the ground with alternate feet ; while ardent Vulcan inflames the laborious forges of the Cyclops. produces. Now likewise it is fitting to sacrifice to Faunus in the shady groves, whether he demand a lamb, or be more pleased with a kid. Pale death knocks at the cottages of the poor, and the palaces of kings, with an impartial foot. O happy Sestius! the short sum total of life forbids us to form remote expectations. Presently shall darkness, and the ghosts so much talked of, and the shadowy mansion of Pluto oppress you; where, when you shall once arrive, you shall neither decide the dominion of the bottle by dice*, nor shall you admire the tender Lycidas, with whom now all the youth is inflamed, and for whom ere long the ladies will grow warm.

ODE V.

TO PYRRHA.

They are miserable, who are captivated by her charms: for his own part, he has escaped from them as from a shipwreck.

WHAT dainty youth, bedewed with liquid perfumes, caresses you, Pyrrha, in some pleasant grotto, amidst a profusion of roses? For whom do you fillet up your golden hair, unaffectedly delicate? Alas! how frequently shall he deplore your perfidy, and the altered Gods; and through inexperience be amazed at the seas, rough with blackening storms, who now credulous enjoys you all precious; and, ignorant of the faithless gale, hopes you will be always disengaged, always amiable! Wretched are those, to whom you untried seem fair! The sacred wall of Neptune's temple demonstrates, by a votive tablet, that I have consecrated dropping garments to the powerful God of the sea.

TO AGRIPPA.

Horace's genius is fitter for amorous subjects, than to celebrate the exploits of heroes.

You shall be described by Varius, with all the flight of the Mæonian verse, as brave and a subduer of your enemies, whatever achievements your fierce soldiery shall have accomplished, under your command, either on ship-board or on horseback. We humble writers, O Agrippa, neither undertake these high subjects, nor the destructive wrath of inexorable Achilles, nor the voyages of the crafty Ulysses, nor the cruel house of Pelops : while diffidence, and the Muse who presides over the peaceful lyre, forbids me to diminish the praises of illustrious Cæsar, and yours, through defect of genius. Who with sufficient dignity will ever describe Mars covered with his adamantine coat of mail, or Meriones embrowned with Trojan dust, or the son of Tydeus * by the favour of Pallas a match for the Gods? We, whether free, or ourselves enamoured, with our accustomed levity sing of banquets ; we of the battles of maids, desperate against young fellows—with pared nails.

TO MUNATIUS PLANCUS.

He describes the pleasant retreat of Tibur. The poet advises him to drive away care with wine, after the example of Teucer.

OTHER poets shall celebrate the famous Rhodes, or Mitylene, or Ephesus, or the walls of Corinth situated between two seas, or Thebes illustrious by the birth of Bacchus, or Delphi by Apollo's Oracle, or the Thessalian Tempe. There are some, whose sole employment is to chant in endless verse the city of the spotless virgin goddess Pallas, and to prefer the olive * to every other leaf that is gathered. Many a one, in honour of Juno celebrates Argos productive of generous horses, and rich Mycenæ. Neither patient Lacedæmon so much struck me, nor so much did the plain of fertile Larissa, as the house of resounding Albunea †, and the precipitately rapid Anio, and the Tiburnian groves, and the orchards watered by ductile rivulets. As the pure south-wind often clears away the clouds from a lowering sky, nor teems with perpetual showers; so do you, O Plancus, wisely remember to put an end to care and the toils of life by mellow wine; whether the camp refulgent with banners possess you, or the dense shade of your own Tibur shall detain you. TO LYDIA.

He blames Lydia for engaging Sybaris in dishonourable amours, and making him leave those manly exercises, to which he had been accustomed.

LYDIA, I conjure you by all the powers above, to tell me why you are so intent to ruin Sybaris by your amours? Why hates he the sunny plain, though so inured to bear the dust and heat? Why does he neither, in military accoutrements, appear mounted among his equals*; nor manage the gallic steed with bitted reins? Why fears he to touch the yellow Tiber? Why shuns he the oil, used by wrestlers, more cautiously than the blood of vipers? Why neither does he, who has often acquired so much reputation by the quoit, often by the javelin having cleared the mark, any longer appear with arms all black-and-blue by martial exercises? TO THALIARCHUS.

He advises him to spend the winter season chearfully.

You see how the mountain Soracte stands whitened † with deep snow, nor can the labouring woods any longer support the weight, and the rivers stagnate with the sharpness of the frost. Dissolve the cold, liberally piling up billets on the hearth; and bring out, Thaliarchus, the more generous wine, four years old, from the Sabine jar. Leave the rest to the Gods, who having once laid the winds warring with the fervid ocean, neither the cypresses, nor the aged ashes are moved. Avoid inquiring, what may happen to-morrow; and whatever day fortune shall bestow on you, score it up for gain; nor disdain, being a young fellow, delicious loves, nor dances, as long as ill-natured hoariness keeps off from your blooming age. Now let both the Campus Martius, and the public walks, and soft whispers in the dark be repeated at the appointed hour: now too the delightful laugh, the betrayer of the sculking damsel from a secret corner, and the token ravished from her arms or finger, pretendingly tenacious of it.

TO MERCURY.

MERCURY, eloquent grandson of Atlas, you who artful formed the savage manners of the first men by oratory, and the exercise of the graceful Palestra: I will celebrate you, the messenger of Jupiter and the other Gods, and the sire of the bending harp; you, ingenious to conceal whatever you have a mind to, in a jocose theft. While Apollo in angry voice threatened you, then but a boy, that unless you had restored the oxen, previously driven away by your fraud, he laughed, when he found himself deprived of his quiver also. Moreover, the wealthy Priam too, on his departure from Ilium, under your guidance deceived the proud sons * of Atreus, and the Thessalian watch-lights, and the camp inveterate against Troy. You place the souls of good men in blissful regions, and drive together the airy crowd with your golden rod, being acceptable both to the supernal and infernal Gods.

ODE XII.

TO AUGUSTUS.

A hymn in praise of Gods and men.

WHAT man, what hero, O Clio, will you undertake to celebrate on the harp, or the shrill pipe? What God? Whose name shall the sportive echo resound, either in the shady borders of Helicon, or on the top of Pindus, or on the cold Hæmus? Whence the woods followed promiscuously the tuneful Orpheus, who by his* maternal art retarded the rapid courses of rivers, and the fleet winds; and was so sweet, that he drew the listening oaks with his harmonious strings. But what can I sing prior to the usual praises of the Father of us all, who governs the affairs of men and Gods; who governs the sea, the earth, and the whole world with grateful vicissitudes of seasons? Whence nothing is produced greater than him; nothing springs either like him, or even in a second degree to him: nevertheless, Pallas has acquired those honours, which are next after him.

Neither will I pass thee by in silence, O Bacchus, bold in combat: nor thee, O virgin†, who art an enemy to the savage beasts: nor thee, O Phœbus, formidable for thy unerring dart.

I will sing also of Hercules, and the two sons of Leda‡, the one illustrious for his achievements on horseback, the other on foot; whose benign constellation, as soon as it has shone forth to the sailors, the troubled surge

After these, I am in doubt whom I shall first commemorate, whether Romulus, or the peaceful reign of Numa, or the splendid ensigns of Tarquinius*, or the glorious death of Cato? I will celebrate, out of gratitude, with the choicest verses Regulus, and the Scauri, and Paulus†, prodigal of his great soul when Carthage conquered, and Fabricius.

Severe poverty, and an hereditary farm, with a dwelling adapted to it, formed this hero useful in war, as it did also Curius with his rough locks, and Camillus. The fame of Marcellus increases, as a tree does in the insensible progress of time. But the Julian constellation shines amidst them all, as the moon among the smaller stars. O thou son of Saturn, author and preserver of the human race, the protection of Cæsar is committed to thy charge by the fates: thou shalt reign supreme, with Cæsar for thy second. Whether he shall subdue with a just victory the Parthians making inroads upon Italy, or shall render subject the Seres and Indians on the Eastern coasts; he shall rule the wide world with equity, in subordination only to thee. Thou shalt shake Olympus with thy tremendous car; thou shalt hurl thy hostile thunderbolts against the polluted groves.

TO LYDIA.

Horace describes his own jealousy.

O LYDIA, when you commend Telephus' rosy neck, and the waxen arms of Telephus, alas! my inflamed liver swells with bitter choler. Then neither is my mind firm, nor does my colour maintain a certain situation * : and the involuntary tears glide on my cheek, demonstrating with what lingering flames I am inwardly consumed. I am on fire, whether excessive quarrels in consequence of wine have stained your fair shoulders; or whether the youth, in his fury, has impressed with his teeth a memorial of himself on your lips. If you will give due attention to my advice, never expect that he will be constant, who inhumanly wounds those sweet kisses, which Venus has imbued with the quintessence of her own nectar. O thrice, and more than thrice happy are those, whom an indissoluble connection binds together; and whose love, undivided by impious complainings, does not separate them sooner than the day of death!

 ODE XV.

Nereus' prophecy of the destruction of Troy.

WHEN the perfidious shepherd (Paris) carried off by sea in Trojan ships his hostess Helen, Nereus suppressed the swift winds in an unpleasing calm, that he might sing to them their dire fates. "With unlucky omens do you convey home that woman, whom Greece shall demand back again with a numerous army, having entered into a confederacy to dissolve your nuptials, and the ancient kingdom of Priam. Alas! what sweat to horses, what to men is just at hand! What a destruction are you preparing for the Trojan nation! Even now Pallas is fitting her helmet, and her shield, and her chariot, and her fury. In vain, looking fierce through the patronage of Venus, will you comb your hair, and run divisions upon the effeminate harp with songs pleasing only to women. tial bed, and the point of the Cretan dart, and the din of battle, and Ajax swift in pursuit. Nevertheless, alas! the time will come, though late, when you shall defile your adulterous hairs in the dust. Do you not see the son of Laërtes, fatal to your nation, and Pylia Nestor, Salaminian Teucer, and Sthenelus skilled in fight, (or, if there be occasion to manage horses, an expert charioteer) pursue you with intrepidity? Meriones also shall you experience. Behold! the gallant son of Tydeus, even a better man than his father, glows to find you out: him, as a stag flies a wolf, which he has seen on the opposite side of the vale, unmindful of his pasture, shall you effeminate fly grievously panting: not such the promises you made your mistress. The fleet of the enraged Achilles shall defer for a time that day, which is to be fatal to Troy and the Trojan matrons: but, after a certain number of years, Grecian fire shall consume the Trojan palaces."

 ODE XVI.

Horace had lampooned Gratidia, the mother of Tyndaris. He attempts to appease her offended daughter, chiefly by alleging the ungovernableness of passion.

O DAUGHTER, more charming than your charming mother, put what end you please to those injurious iambics; either in the flames, or, if you choose it, in the Adriatic sea. Neither Cybele, nor Apollo, the possessor of the priests, so shakes the breast in his inmost shrines; Bacchus does not do it equally, nor do the Corybantes so redouble their strokes on their sharp-sounding

It is reported that Prometheus was obliged to add to that original clay, with which he formed mankind, some ingredient taken from every animal, and that he applied the vehemence of the raging lion to the human breast. It was rage, that destroyed Thyestes with horrible perdition ; and has been the final cause, that lofty cities have been entirely demolished, and that an insolent army has driven the hostile ploughshare over their walls. Compose your mind. An ardour of soul attacked me also in blooming youth, and drove me in a rage to the writing of swift-footed iambics. But now I am desirous of exchanging severity for good-nature, provided that you will become my friend, after my having recanted my ill language, and restore me your affections.

Here, in a sequestered vale, you shall avoid the heat of the dog-star; and, on your Anacreontic harp, sing of Penelope and the frail Circe, striving for one lover: here you shall quaff, under the shade, cups of unintoxicating Lesbian. Nor shall the raging son of Semele enter the combat with Mars; and unsuspected you shall not fear the insolent Cyrus, lest he should savagely lay his intemperate hands on you, who are by no means a match for him; and should rend the chaplet that is plaited in your hair, and your inoffensive garment.

O candid Bacchus, I will not rouse thee against thy will ; nor will I bring abroad thy mysteries, which are covered with various leaves. Cease your dire cymbals, together with your Phrygian horn, whose followers are blind Self-love and Arrogance, holding up too high her empty head, and the faith communicative of secrets, and more transparent than glass.

ODE XIX.

TO GLYCERA.

That he was inflamed with the love of her.

THE cruel mother of the Cupids, and the son of the Theban Semele, and my own lascivious ease, command me to give back my mind to its deserted loves. The splendor of Glycera, shining brighter than the Parian marble, inflames me : her agreeable petulance, and her countenance, too unsteady to be beheld, inflame me. Venus, attacking me with her whole force, has quitted Cyprus ; and suffers not me to sing of the Scythians, and the Parthian, furious when his horse is turned for flight, or any subject which is not to my present purpose. Here, slaves, place me a live turf ; here place me the vervains and frankincense, with a flagon of two-year-old wine. Glycera will approach more propitious, after I have sacrificed a victim.

THE man of perfect life and pure from wickedness, O Fuscus, has no occasion for the Moorish javelins or bow, or quiver loaded with poisoned darts. Whether he is about to make his journey through the sultry Syrtes, or the inhospitable Caucasus, or those places which Hydaspes, celebrated in story, washes. For lately, as I was singing my Lalage, and wandered beyond my usual bounds devoid of care, a wolf in the Sabine wood fled from me, though I was unarmed: Such a monster, as neither the warlike Apulia nourishes in its extensive woods, nor the land of Juba, the dry nurse of lions, produces. Place me in those barren plains, where no tree is refreshed by the genial air; at that part of the world, which clouds and an inclement atmosphere infest: Place me under the chariot of the too neighbouring sun, in a land deprived of habitations; there will I love my sweetly-smiling, sweetly-speaking Lalage.

ODE XXIII.

TO CHLOE.

That, being now marriageable, she had no reason to be frightened at the sight of a man.

YOU shun me, my Chloe, like a fawn that is seeking its timorous mother in the pathless mountains, not without a vain dread of the breezes and the thickets: for she trembles both in her heart and knees, whether the arrival of the spring has terrified her by its rustling leaves, or the green lizards have stirred the bush. But I do not follow you, like a savage tigress or a Gætulian lion, to tear you to pieces. Therefore quit your mother, now you are mature for a husband.

ODE XXIV.

TO VIRGIL.

He admonishes him to bear with patience the death of Quinctilius.

WHAT shame or bound can there be to our affection for so dear a person? O Melpomene, to whom your father has given a melting voice and the harp, teach me the mournful strains. Does then a perpetual sleep oppress Quinctilius? To whom when will Modesty, and uncorrupt Faith the sister of Justice, and undisguised Truth, find any equal? He died lamented by many good men, but more lamented by none, than by you, my Virgil. You, though pious, alas! in vain demand Quinctilius back from the Gods, who did not lend him to us on such terms.

What though you could strike the lyre, listened to by the trees, with more sweetness than the Thracian Orpheus; yet the blood can never return to the empty shade, which Mercury, inexorable to reverse the fates, has with his dreadful caduceus once driven to the gloomy throng. This is hard: but what it is out of our power to amend becomes more supportable by patience.

TO LYDIA.

He takes occasion to insult her for her former haughtiness, and tells her that she is now grown old, and in return for her insolence forsaken by all the young men.

THE wanton sparks less violently shake your fastened windows with their redoubled raps, nor do they rob you of your rest; and your door, which formerly moved much its yielding hinges, now sticks lovingly to its threshold. Less and less do you now hear the serenade; “My Lydia, do you sleep the live-long night, while I your lover am dying?” Now you are an old woman, it will be your turn to bewail the insolence of rakes, when you are neglected in a lonely alley, while the Thracian wind rages at the Interlunium*: when that hot desire and lust, which is wont to render furious the dams of horses, shall rage about your ulcerous liver; not without complaint, that sprightly youth rejoice rather in the verdant ivy and growing myrtle, and dedicate sapless leaves to Hebrus, the companion of winter.

That, free from all care and anxiety, he celebrates the praises of Lamia.

A FRIEND to the Muses, I will deliver up grief and fears to the wanton winds, to waft into the Cretan sea; singularly careless, what king of a frozen region is dreaded under the pole, or what terrifies Tiridates. ODE XXVIII.

Under the form of a dialogue between a sailor and the ghost of Archytas, he ridicules the opinion of the Pythagoreans, and recommends the care of the burial of the dead.

THE want of the small present of a little sand near the Martinian shore, confines thee, O Archytas, the surveyor of sea and earth and the innumerable sand: neither is it of any advantage to you, a mere mortal, to have explored the celestial regions, and to have traversed the round world in your comprehensive imagination. Thus also did the father of Pelops, the guest of the Gods, die; and Tithonus likewise was translated to the skies, and Minos, though admitted to the secrets of Jupiter; and the Tartarean regions are possessed of the son of Panthoüs*, once more sent down to the receptacle of the dead; notwithstanding, having retaken his shield from the temple, he gave evidence of the Trojan times, and that he had resigned to gloomy death nothing but his nerves and skin; and, in your opinion, he is no inconsiderable judge of truth and nature. But the same night awaits all, and the road of death must once be travelled. The furies give up some to the sport of horrible Mars: the sea is destructive to the avaricious sailors: the mingled funerals

But do not thou, O sailors, malignantly grudge to give a portion of loose sand to my bones, and unburied head. So, whatever the east wind shall threaten to the Italian sea, let the Venusinian woods suffer, while you are in safety; and manifold profit, from whatever port it may, come to you by favouring Jove, and Neptune, the defender of consecrated Tarentum. But if you by chance make light of committing a crime, which will be hurtful to your innocent posterity, just laws and contemptuous treatment await you in your turn. I will not be deserted with fruitless prayers; and no expiations shall atone for you. O ICCIUS, you now covet the opulent treasures of the Arabians, and are making vigorous preparations for a war against the kings of Saba, hitherto unconquered, and are forming chains for the formidable Mede. What barbarian virgin shall be your slave, after you have killed her betrothed husband? What boy from the court shall be made your cup-bearer with his perfumed locks, skilled to direct the Serican arrows with his father's bow? O thou son of Latona, grant me to enjoy my acquisitions, and to have my health, together with an unimpaired understanding, I beseech thee ; and that I may not lead a dishonourable old age, nor one deprived of a taste for music.

 ODE XXXII.

TO HIS LYRE.

Being desired to write a secular ode, Horace invokes his lyre to assist him with strains equal to the subject.

WE are now called upon. If in idle amusement in the shade with you, we have played any thing that may live for this year and many, come on, assist me with a lyric ode in Latin, my dear lyre,—first tuned in Greek by the Lesbian citizen Alcæus ; who, fierce in war, yet amidst arms, or if he had made fast to the watery shore his tossed vessel, sung Bacchus, and the Muses, and Venus, and the boy her ever-close attendant, and Lycus, lovely for his black eyes and jetty locks. O thou ornament of Apollo, charming shell, agreeable even at the banquets of supreme Jupiter ! O thou sweet alleviator of anxious toils, be propitious to me, whenever I duly invoke thee !

ODE XXXIII.

TO ALBIUS TIBULLUS.

He endeavours to comfort him, by instancing others who were in love without a mutual return.

GRIEVE not too much, my Albius, thoughtful of cruel Glycera ; nor chant your mournful elegies because, as she has forfeited her faith, a younger man is more agreeable than you in her eyes. A love for Cyrus inflames Lycoris distinguished for her delicate little forehead * : Cyrus follows the rough Pholoë ; but she-goats shall sooner be united to the Apulian wolves, than Pholoë shall commit a crime with a base adulterer. Such is the will of Venus, who delights in cruel sport to subject to her brazen yokes persons and tempers ill suited to each other. As for myself, the slave-born Myrtale, more untractable than the Adriatic sea that forms the Calabrian gulfs, entangled me in a pleasing chain, at the very time that a more eligible love courted my embraces.

DE XXXIV.

In a pretended recantation he absolutely overthrows the arguments in favour of the providence of the Gods.

I WAS an unfrequent and remiss worshipper of the Gods, while I professed the errors of a senseless philosophy ; but now I am obliged to set sail back again, and to renew the course that I had deserted. For Jupiter, who usually cleaves the clouds † with his gleaming lightning, lately

The Deity is able to make an exchange between the highest and the lowest, and diminishes the exalted, bringing to light the obscure : rapacious fortune, with a shrill whizzing, has borne off the plume from one head, and delights in having placed, not fixed, it on another.

ODE XXXV.

TO FORTUNE.

He prays to her for the commonwealth, Augustus, and the Roman armies.

O GODDESS, who presidest over beautiful Antium ; thou, that art ready to exalt mortal man from the most abject state, or to convert superb triumphs into funerals ! Thee, the poor countryman solicits with his anxious vows ; and whosoever ploughs the Carpathian sea with the Bithynian vessel, importunes thee as mistress of the sea. Spurn not with destructive foot that column, which now stands firm, nor let popular tumults rouse those who now rest quiet to arms,—to arms—and break the empire.  ODE XXXVII.

TO HIS COMPANIONS.

That they ought to make a rejoicing on account of Cleopatra's death.

Now, my companions, is the time to carouse, now to beat the ground with a light foot : now is the time, that was to deck the couch of the Gods with sumptuous Salian dainties. Before this, it was impious to produce the old Cæcuban stored up by our ancestors ; while the queen, with a contaminated gang of creatures, noisome through distemper, was preparing giddy destruction for the capitol and the subversion of the empire, being weak enough to hope for any thing, and intoxicated with the favours of fortune. But scarcely a single ship preserved from the flames bated her fury : and Cæsar brought down her mind, inflamed with Egyptian wine, to real fears, close pursuing her in her flight from Italy in his gallies, (as the hawk pursues the tender doves, or the nimble hunter the hare in the plains of snowy Æmon) that he might throw into chains this destructive monster of a woman ; who, seeking a more generous death, neither had an effeminate dread of the sword, nor repaired with her swift ship to hidden shores. She was able also to look upon her palace, lying in ruins, with a countenance unmoved, and courageous enough to handle exasperated asps*, that she might imbibe into her body the deadly poison, being more resolved by having premeditated her death : for she was a woman of such greatness of soul, as to scorn to be carried off in haughty triumph, like a private person, by rough Liburnian tars.

ODE XXXVIII.

TO HIS SERVANT.

He forewarns him against any extravagant doings at his entertainment.

Boy, I detest the pomp of the Persians ; chaplets, which are woven with the Philyra †, displease me ; by no means hunt for the place, where the later rose abides. It is my particular desire, that you make no laborious addition to the plain myrtle ; for myrtle is neither unbecoming you a servant, nor me while I quaff under this mantling vine.

ODE I.

TO ASINIUS POLLIO.

He entreats him to quit tragedy for the present, that he may apply himself wholly to the history of the civil wars.

You are treating of the civil commotion, which began in the consulship of Metellus, and the causes of the war, and the crimes that were committed, and the measures that were taken, and the sport of fortune, and the pernicious * confederacy of the chiefs, and arms stained with blood not yet expiated—a work full of hazardous consequence: and you are treading upon fires, hidden under deceitful ashes: Let therefore the muse, that presides over severe tragedy, be for a while absent from the theatres; shortly, when you shall have regulated the public affairs, you shall resume your great work in the tragic style,

O Pollio, you excellent succour to melancholy defendants and a consulting senate ; Pollio, to whom the laurel produced immortal honours in the Dalmatian triumph. Even now you stun our ears with the threatening murmur of horns : now the clarions sound ; now the glitter of arms affrights the flying steeds, and dazzles the sight of the riders. Now I seem to see great commanders besmeared with glorious dust, and the whole earth subdued, except the stubborn soul of Cato. Juno, and every other God propitious to the Africans, impotently went off, leaving that land unrevenged ; but soon offered the descendants of the conquerors, as sacrifices to the manes of Jugurtha. What plain, enriched by Latin blood, bears not record, by its numerous sepulchres, of our impious battles, and of the sound of the downfall of Italy, heard even by the Medes ? What pool, what rivers are unconscious of our deplorable war ? What sea have not the Daunian slaughters discoloured ? What shore is unstained by our blood ? Do not however, rash muse, neglecting your jocose strains, resume the task of Cæan plaintive song, but rather with me seek measures of a lighter style, beneath some love-sequestered grotto.

ODE II.

TO CRISPUS SALLUSTIUS.

That he alone is rich, who makes a proper use of his riches; and he alone is happy, who can command his passions.

O CRISPUS Sallustius, thou foe to the bullion that is concealed * in the niggard earth, there is no lustre in money, unless it derives its splendor from a moderate enjoyment. Proculeius shall live an extended age, conspicuous for fatherly affection to his brothers: surviving fame shall bear him on an indissoluble wing. You may have a more extensive dominion by controlling a craving disposition, than if you could unite Lybia to the distant Gades, and the natives of both the Carthages were subject to you alone. The direful dropsy increases by self-indulgence, nor extinguishes its thirst, unless the cause of the disorder has departed from the veins, and the watery languor from the pallid body. Virtue, differing from the vulgar, excepts Phraates, though restored to the throne of Cyrus, from the number of the happy; and corrects the false language of the populace, by conferring the kingdom, and a safe diadem, and the perpetual laurel upon him alone, who can view the largest heaps of treasure without one wishful cast of his eye.

ODE III.

TO QUINTUS DELLIUS.

That the happiness of life consists in serenity of mind and virtuous enjoyments.

O DELLIUS ! since you were born to die, be mindful to preserve a temper of mind even in times of difficulty, as well as secured from insolent exultation in prosperity ; whether you shall lead a life of continual sadness, or through happy days regale yourself with Falernian wine of the richest date, at ease reclined in some grassy retreat ; where the lofty pine and hoary poplar delight to interweave their boughs into an hospitable shade, and the clear current with trembling surface purls along the meandering rivulet. Hither order your slaves to bring the wine, and the perfumes, and the too transitory flowers of the grateful rose, while fortune and age and the sable threads of the three fatal sisters permit you. You must depart from your numerous purchased groves ; from your stately house also, and that delightful villa, which the yellow (sandy) Tiber washes, you must depart ; and an heir shall possess these high-piled riches. It is of no consequence, whether you are the wealthy descendent of ancient Inachus, or whether poor and of ignoble race you live without a covering from the open air, since you are the victim of merciless Pluto. We are all compelled to take the same road : the lot is shaking in the universal urn ; sooner or later it must come forth, and embark us in Charon's boat to eternal exile.

ODE IV.

TO XANTHIAS PHOCEUS.

That he had no occasion to be ashamed at being in love with his maid : for that had been the case with many great men.

LET not, O Xanthias Phoceus, your passion for your maid put you out of countenance : before your time, the slave Briseïs moved the haughty Achilles by her fair complexion. The beauty of the captive Tecmessa smote her master the Telamonian Ajax : Agamemnon, in the midst of victory, burned for a ravished virgin ; when the barbarian troops fell by the hands of their Thessalian conqueror, and Hector, vanquished, left Troy more easy to be destroyed by the Grecians. You do not know, but the beautiful Phyllis has parents of condition happy enough to do honour to you their son-in-law. Certainly she must be of royal race, and laments the unpropitiousness of her family-Gods *. Be confident, she was not selected for you out of the paltry vulgar ; nor that one so true, so unmercenary, could possibly be born of a mother to be ashamed of. I can commend arms, and face, and well-made legs, quite chastely : Avoid being jealous of one, whose age has trembled upon the verge of forty †.

ODE V.

That he ought to recall his affection from the pursuit of a young lady : as yet unripe for his addresses.

NOT yet is she fit to be broken to the yoke ; not yet is she equal to the duties of a partner, nor can she support the weight of the bull impetuously rushing upon enjoyment. Your heifer's sole inclination is about verdant fields, one while in running streams soothing the grievous heat ; at another, highly delighted to frisk with the steerlings in the moist willow-ground. Suppress your appetite for the immature grape ; shortly variegated autumn shall tinge the livid clusters with a purple hue. Shortly she shall follow you ; for her resisting time runs on, and shall place to her account those years, of which it abridges you ; shortly Lalage with a wanton assurance shall seek a husband, beloved in a higher degree than the coy Pholoë, or even Chloris ; with a resplendency on her fair shoulder *, like the lustre of the spotless moon upon the nocturnal sea, or even the Cnidian Gyges, whom if you intermix in a company of girls, the undiscernible difference occasioned by his flowing locks and equivocal countenance would wonderfully impose on strangers, though of sagacity.

That corner of the world smiles in my eye beyond all others; where the honey yields not to the Hy-mettian, and the olive rivals the verdant Venafrican: where the temperature of the air † produces a long spring and mild winters, and Aulon, friendly to the fruitful vine‡, envies not the Falernian grapes. That place, and those blest towering hills, solicit you and me: there you shall bedew the glowing ashes of your poetical friend with a tributary tear.

ODE VII.

TO POMPEIUS VARUS.

OFTEN reduced with me to the last extremity, in the war which Brutus carried on, who has restored thee, a Roman citizen, to the Gods of thy country and the Italian air, Pompey, thou first of my companions; with whom I have frequently broken * the loitering day in drinking, having my hair, shining with the Syrian unguents, crowned with flowers? Together with thee did I experience the battle of Philippi, and a precipitate flight, having shamefully enough left my shield: when valour itself was broken, and the most daring smote the squalid earth with their faces. But Mercury swift conveyed me away, terrified as I was, in a thick cloud through the midst of the enemy. Thee the reciprocating sea, with its tempestuous waves, bore back again to war. Wherefore render to Jupiter the offering that is due, and deposit your limbs, wearied with a tedious war, under my laurel, and spare not the casks reserved for you. Fill up the polished bowls with oblivious Massic: pour out the perfumed ointments from the capacious shells. Who takes care to hasten the chaplets of fresh parsley or myrtle? Whom shall the Venus † pronounce to be toast-master? In wild carouse I will become frantic as the Bacchanalians. 'Tis delightful to me to play the madman, on the reception of my friend.

* To break a day is with us also a common form of expression in many parts of England, for leaving part of the proper business of the day undone.

† The Romans chose their toast-master, by the casting of dice, and the fortunate throw they named 'Venus.'

ODE VIII.

TO BARINE.

That her swearing was no reason for his believing her ; for the Gods never punish the perjuries of beauties.

IF any punishment, Barine, for your violated oath had ever been of prejudice to you ; if you had become less agreeable by the blackness of a single tooth or nail, I might believe you. But you no sooner have bound your perfidious head with solemn vows, but you shine out more charming by far, and come forth the public care of all our youth. It is of advantage to you to deceive the buried ashes of your mother, and the silent constellations of the night, together with all heaven, and the immortal Gods. Venus herself, I profess, laughs at this ; the gentle nymphs laugh, and cruel Cupid, who is perpetually sharpening his burning darts on a bloody whetstone. Add to this, that all our boys are growing up for you ; a new set of slaves is growing up ; nor do the former ones quit the house of their impious * mistress, notwithstanding they often have threatened it. The matrons are in dread of you on account of their young ones ; the thrifty old men are in dread of you ; and the girls but just married are in distress, lest your beauty should slacken the affections of their husbands.

* As having so often broken her faith.

TO TITUS VALGIUS.

He comforts his friend grieving for the loss of his son.

SHOWERS do not perpetually pour down upon the furrowed fields, nor do hurricanes for ever harass the Caspian sea ; nor, my friend, Valgius, does the motionless ice remain fixed throughout all the months in the regions of Armenia ; nor do the Garganian oaks always labour under the northerly winds, nor are the ash-trees always widowed of their leaves. But you continually pursue Mystes, who is taken from you, with mournful measures : nor do the effects of your love for him cease at the rising of Vesper, or when he flies the rapid approach of the sun. But the three-aged old man (Nestor) did not lament the amiable Antilochus all the years of his life : nor did his parents or his Trojan sisters perpetually bewail the blooming Toilus. At length then desist from your tender complaints ; and rather let us sing the fresh trophies of Augustus Cæsar, and the frozen Niphates, and the river Medus added to the vanquished nations rolling more humble tides, and the Gelonians riding within a prescribed boundary in a narrow tract of land.

ODE X.

TO LICINIUS MURENA.

He advises him to be content with a mean, and to maintain an evenness of temper.

O LICINIUS, you will lead a better course of life, by neither always pursuing the main sea, nor, while you cautiously are in dread of storms, by pressing too much upon the hazardous shore. Whosoever loves the golden mean, is secure from the sordidness of an antiquated cell, and is too prudent to have a palace that might expose him to envy. The lofty pine is more frequently agitated with winds, and high towers fall down with a heavier ruin, and thunderbolts strike the summits of the mountains. A well-provided breast hopes in adversity, and fears in prosperity. 'Tis the same Jupiter, that brings the hideous winters back, and that takes them away. If it is ill with us now, it shall not be so hereafter. Apollo sometimes rouses the silent lyric muse, neither does he always bend his bow. In narrow circumstances appear in high spirits, and undaunted. In the same manner you will prudently contract your sails, which are apt to be too much swollen in a prosperous gale.

ODE XI.

TO QUINTIUS HIRPINUS.

He endeavours to divert the mind of Quintius from public and private solitudes to a taste for gayety and enjoyment.

O QUINTIUS Hirpinus, forbear to be inquisitive what the Cantabrian, and the Scythian, divided from us by the interposition of the Adriatic, is meditating; neither be fearfully solicitous for the necessaries of life, which requires but a few things. Youth and beauty fly swift away, while sapless old age expels the wanton loves and gentle sleep. The same glory does not always remain to the vernal flowers, nor does the ruddy moon shine with one continued aspect: why, therefore, do you fatigue your mind, unequal to eternal projects? Why do we not rather (while it is in our power) thus carelessly reclining under a lofty plane-tree, or this pine, with our hoary locks made fragrant by roses, and anointed with Syrian perfume, indulge ourselves with generous wine? Bacchus dissipates preying cares. What slave at hand here, instantly to cool some cups of ardent Falernian in the passing stream? Who will tempt the vagrant wanton Lyde from her house? See that you bid her hasten with her ivory lyre, not staying to dress her hair, but collecting it into a careless knot after the Spartan fashion.

ODE XII.

TO MÆCENAS.

That he was so given up to Lycimnia, that he could not rise to more serious subjects.

Do not insist that the long wars of fierce Numantia, or the formidable Annibal, or the Sicilian sea impurpled with Carthaginian blood, should be adapted to the tender lays of the lyre : nor the cruel Lapithæ, nor Hylæus excessive in wine, and the earth-born youths (giants) subdued by Herculean force, from whom the splendid habitation of old Saturn dreaded danger. And you yourself, Mæcenas, with more propriety shall recount the battles of Cæsar, and the necks of haughty kings led in triumph through the streets, in historical prose. It was the muses' will that I should celebrate the sweet strains of my mistress Lycimnia, that I should celebrate her bright-darting eyes, and her breast laudably faithful to mutual love ; who can with a grace introduce her foot into the dance, or, sporting contend in raillery, or join arms with the bright virgins on the celebrated Diana's festival. Would you, Mæcenas, change one of Lycimnia's tresses for all the rich Achæmenes possessed, or the Mygdonian wealth of fertile Phrygia, or all the dwellings of the Arabians replete with treasures ? especially when she turns her neck to meet the ardent kisses, or with a gentle cruelty denies, what she would more delight to have ravished by the petitioner,—or sometimes eagerly anticipates to snatch them herself.

ODE XIII.

To the tree, by the fall of which he had been nearly crushed.

O TREE, he planted thee in an inauspicious hour, whoever did it first, and with an impious hand raised thee to the destruction of posterity, and the scandal of my village. I could believe that he had broken his own father's neck, and stained his most secret apartments with the midnight blood of his guest. He had practised the Colchian poisons, and whatever wickedness is any where conceived, who planted in my field thee, a sorry log; thee, ready to fall on the head of thy inoffensive master. What we ought to be aware of, no man is sufficiently cautious, at all hours. The Carthaginian sailor thoroughly dreads the Bosphorus; nor, beyond that, does he fear his hidden fate from any other quarter. The soldier dreads the arrows and the fleet retreat of the Parthian; the Parthian, the chains and force of the Italians: but the unexpected assault of death has carried off, and will carry off, the world in general. How near was I seeing the dominions of black Proserpine, and Æacus sitting in judgment; the selected mansions also of the pious, and Sappho complaining on her Æolian lyre of her own country-damsels*; and thee, O Alcæus, sounding in fuller strains on thy golden harp the distresses of the sea, the distresses of exile, and the distresses of war. The ghosts admire them both, while they utter strains worthy of a religious silence:

* As not returning her affection.

but the crowded multitude with pressing shoulders imbibes, with a more greedy ear, battles and banished tyrants. What wonder? Since the many-headed monster of hell *, astonished at those lays, hangs down his sable ears; and the snakes, entwined in the hair of the furies, are soothed. Moreover, Prometheus and the sire of Pelops are deluded into an insensibility of their torments, by the melodious sound: nor is Orion any longer solicitous to harass the lions, or the fearful lynxes.

That death can neither be avoided nor retarded; and that therefore we ought to make a generous use of riches, while we live.

ALAS! my Postumus, my Postumus, the fleeting years glide on; nor will piety cause any delay to wrinkles, and advancing old age, and insuperable death. You could not, if you were to sacrifice every day three hundred bulls, render propitious pityless Pluto, who confines the thrice-monstrous Geryon and Tityus with the dismal Stygian stream, namely that stream, which is to be passed over by all who are fed upon the munificence of the earth, whether kings or poor hinds. In vain shall we be free from sanguinary Mars, and the broken billows of the hoarse Adriatic; in vain shall we be apprehensive of the South, noxious to human bodies in the time of autumn.  ODE XV.

He opposes the ancient thriftiness and frugality to the modern luxury and extravagance.

THE magnificent edifices will in a short time leave but a few acres for the plough : ponds of wider extent than the Lucrine lake will be every where to be seen ; and the barren plane-tree will supplant the elms. Then banks of violets, and myrtle-groves, and all the tribe of nose-gays shall diffuse their odors in the olive-plantations, which were fruitful to their preceding master. Then the dense boughs of the laurel shall exclude the burning beams. It was not so prescribed by the institutes of Romulus, and the stern unshaven Cato, and ancient custom. Their private revenue was contracted, while that of the community was great. No private men were then possessed of galleries measured by ten-foot rules, which collected the shady northern breezes ; nor did the laws permit them to reject the casual turf for their own huts, though at the same time they obliged them to ornament in the most sumptuous manner with new stone, the buildings of the public, and the temples of the Gods, at a common expense.

TO GROSPHUS.

That happiness is obtained by bridling our affections.

O GROSPHUS, he that is caught in the wide Ægean sea, when a black tempest has obscured the moon, and not a star appears for the mariners to regulate their course by, supplicates the Gods for ease; for ease, Thrace furious in war; the quiver-graced Medes for ease neither purchasable by jewels, nor by purple, nor by gold. For neither regal treasures, nor the consul's officer can remove the wretched tumults of the mind, nor the cares that hover about splendid cielings. That man lives happily on a little, who can view with pleasure the old-fashioned family salt-sellar on his frugal board; neither anxiety, nor sordid avarice robs him of gentle sleeps. Why do we, whose vigour is so transitory, aim at many things? Why do we change our own for climates heated by another sun? Who ever, by becoming an exile from his country, escaped likewise from himself? Consuming care boards even brazen-beaked ships; nor does it quit the troops of horsemen, for it is more fleet than the stags, more fleet than the storm-driving east-wind. A mind, that is cheerful in its present state, will disdain to be solicitous any farther, and can correct the bitters of life with an ingenuous smile. Nothing on earth is completely blessed. He comforts Mæcenas labouring under a perpetual fever, and affirms that he cannot possibly survive him.

WHY do you kill me with your complaints? 'Tis neither agreeable to the Gods, nor to me, that you should depart first, O Mæcenas, grand ornament and support of my affairs. Alas! if an untimely blow hurry away you, a part of my soul, why do I the other moiety remain, my value lost, nor any longer whole? That fatal day shall bring destruction upon us both. I have by no means taken a false oath: we will go, we will go, whenever you shall lead the way, prepared to be fellow travellers in the last journey. As for me, neither the breath of the fiery Chimæra, nor the hundred-handed Gyges, were he to rise again, shall ever tear me from you: such is the will of Thee the benign protection of Jupiter, shining with friendly aspect, rescued from the baleful influence of impious Saturn *, and retarded the wings of precipitate destiny, at the time the crowded people with resounding applauses thrice hailed you in the theatre: me the trunk of a tree falling upon my skull would have dispatched, had not Faunus †, the protector of men of genius, with his right hand warded off the blow. But honour, and a liberal vein of genius, are mine: and the man of fortune makes his court to me, who am but poor. You put out marble to be hewn, though with one foot in the grave, and unmindful of a sepulchre are building houses; and are busy to extend the shore of the sea, that beats with violence at Baiæ, not rich enough while restrained to the limits of land. Why is it, that through avarice you even remove the landmarks of your neighbour's ground, and trespass beyond the bounds of your clients; and wife and husband are turned out, bearing in their bosom their household Gods, and their poor-looking children? Nevertheless, no court more certainly awaits its wealthy lord, than the destined seat of rapacious Pluto. Why do you go on? The impartial earth is opened equally to the poor, and to the sons of kings: nor has the life-guard ferryman of hell, bribed with gold, re-conducted the artful Prometheus. That it was his duty to celebrate the praises of Bacchus, as being full of, and roused and animated by, his divinity.

It is given me to sing the wanton Bacchanalian priestess, and the fountain of wine, and rivulets flowing with milk, and to reiterate the honies distilling from hollow trunks. It is granted me likewise to celebrate the honour added to the constellations by your happy spouse ‡, and the palace of Pentheus demolished with hideous ruin, and the perdition of Thracian Lycurgus. You command the rivers, you the barbarian sea: You, moist with wine, in selected mountains bind the hair of your Thracian priestesses with a knot of vipers without hurt. You, when the impious band of giants scaled the realms of father Jupiter through the sky, repelled Rhætus, with the paws and horrible jaw of the lion-shape you had assumed. Though reported to be better adapted for dances, and jokes, and play, you were accounted insufficient for fight, Yet it then appeared, you had the same talent for peace and for war. You, orna-

He promises himself eternal fame from his verses.

I, A two-formed poet, will be conveyed through the liquid air with no vulgar or humble wing ; nor will I loiter upon earth any longer ; and, superior to envy, I will quit cities. Not I, even I, whom my rivals stile the blood of low parents, my dear Mæcenas, shall die ; nor will I be restrained by the Stygian wave. At this instant, a rough skin settles upon my ankles, and all upward I am transformed into a white bird *, and the downy plumage arises over my fingers and shoulders. Now, a melodious bird, more expeditious than the Dædalean Icarus, I will visit the shores of the murmuring Bosphorus, and the Gætulean Syrtes, and the Hyperborean plains. Me the Colchian, and the Dacian, who pretends not to fear the Marsian cohort, and the remotest Gelonians shall know : me the learned Spaniard shall study, and he that drinks the waters of the Rhone. Let there be no dirges, or shameful lamentation, or bewailings at my imaginary funeral ; suppress your crying, and forbear the superfluous honours of a sepulchre.

ODES OF HORACE.

ODE I.

That happiness consists not in honours and riches.

I ABOMINATE the uninitiated vulgar, and drive them off. Give a religious attention: I, the priest of the muses, sing to virgins and boys verses not heard before. The dominion of dread sovereigns is only over their own subjects*; that of Jupiter, glorious for his conquest over the giants, who shakes all nature with his nod, is over sovereigns themselves. It happens that one man plants trees in regular rows, to a greater extent than another; this man comes down into the Campus Martius as a candidate of a better family, while another vies with him for morals and a better reputation; a third has a superior number of dependants; but death, by the impartial law of nature is allotted both to the conspicuous and the obscure : the capacious urn keeps every name in motion. Sicilian dainties will not force a delicious relish * to that man, over whose impious neck the naked sword impends : the songs of birds and the lyre will not restore his sleep. Sleep disdains not the humble cottages and shady bank of peasants ; he disdains not Tempe, fanned by zephyrs. Him, who desires but a competency, neither the tempestuous sea renders anxious, nor the malign violence of Arcturus setting, or of the rising Kid ; not his vineyards beaten down with hail, and a deceitful farm ; his plantations at one season blaming the rains, at another, the influence of the constellations parching the grounds, at another, severe winters. The fishes perceive the seas contracted, by the vast foundations that have been laid in the deep : hither numerous undertakers with their men, and lords disdainful of the land, send down mortar : but anxiety, and the threats of conscience, ascend by the same way as the possessor ; nor does gloomy care depart from the brazen-beaked galley, and she mounts behind the horseman. Since then neither the Phrygian marble, nor the use of purple more dazzling than the sun †, nor the Falernian vine, nor the Persian perfume composes a troubled mind, why should I set about a lofty edifice with envy-exciting columns, and in the modern taste ? Why should I exchange my Sabine vale for wealth, which is attended with more trouble ?

* Literally flocks. Homer is fond of terming kings shepherds of the people. Thus the true God entitles himself the shepherd of his people, and them the sheep of his pasture; the expression therefore is not too low for the pomp of the strophe, agreeably to the charge of a late ingenious editor of our author.

* Alluding to the story of Damocles.

† It is presumed that commentators upon this passage might have succeeded better, had they remembered Seneca's expression, clarum mundi sidus, speaking of the sun. That orb, in many languages, is frequently and emphatically termed the star. Clarior, here rendered dazzling, refers not at all to the colour of purple, but only to the use of it as a badge of dignity and office.

ODE II.

TO HIS FRIENDS.

He praises military bravery, probity, and fidelity in the keeping of a secret.

LET the robust youth, my friends, learn to endure pinching want in the active exercise of arms ; and as an expert horseman, dreadful for his spear, let him harass the fierce Parthians ; and let him lead a life exposed to the open air, and familiar with dangers. Him, the consort and marriageable virgin-daughter of some warring tyrant, viewing from the hostile walls, may sigh—alas ! lest the royal husband, unacquainted with the state of the battle, should provoke by a touch this terrible lion, whom rage hurries through the midst of slaughter *. It is sweet and glorious to die for one's country : death even pursues the man, that flies from him ; nor does he spare the trembling knees of effeminate youth, nor the coward back. Virtue, unknowing of base repulse †, shines with immaculate honours ; nor does she assume or lay aside the ensigns of her dignity, at the capricious veering of popular air. Virtue, throwing open heaven to those who deserve not to die, directs her progress through paths of difficulty, and spurns with a rapid wing groveling crowds, and the slippery earth. There is likewise a sure reward for faithful si-

ODE III.

He privately dissuades Augustus from any thoughts of transferring the seat of empire to Troy.

NOR the rage of the people pressing to hurtful measures, not the aspect of a threatening tyrant, can shake from his settled purpose the man who is just and determined in his resolution; nor can the south wind, that tumultuous ruler of the restless Adriatic, nor the mighty hand of thundering Jupiter; if a crushed world should fall in upon him, the ruins would strike him undismayed. By this character Pollux, by this the wandering Hercules, arrived at the starry citadels; among whom Augustus has now taken his place, and quaffs nectar with em-purpled lips. Thee, father Bacchus, meritorious for this virtue, thy tigers carried, drawing the yoke with intractable neck; by this Romulus escaped Acheron (death) on the horses of Mars—Juno having spoken what the Gods in full council approved: “Troy, Troy a fatal and lewd judge †, and a foreign woman ‡, have reduced to ashes,

Now neither the infamous guest of the Lacedæmonian adulteress shines any more; nor does Priam's perjured family repel the warlike Grecians by the aid of Hector, and that war, spun out to such a length by our factions, has sunk to peace. But I pronounce this fate to the warlike Romans, upon this condition; that, neither through an excess of piety, nor of confidence in their power, they become inclined to rebuild the houses of their ancestors' Troy. The fortune of Troy, reviving under unlucky auspices, shall be repeated with lamentable destruction, me, the wife and sister of Jupiter, leading on the victorious bands. Thrice, if a brazen wall should arise by the means of its founder Phœbus, thrice should it fall demolished by my Grecians; thrice should the captive wife bewail her husband and her children slain." That horrid youth trusting to the strength of their arms, and the brethren proceeding to place Pelion upon the shady Olympus, had brought great dread even upon Jupiter.  ODE V

He praises Augustus, who by the terror of his arms had subdued the Britons, but especially because he had subdued the Parthians.

WE have believed, that the thundering Jupiter has dominion in the heavens: Augustus shall be esteemed a present deity, the Britons and terrible Parthians being added to the Roman empire. What! has any soldier of Crassus lived, an infamous husband with a barbarian wife? And has (O the corrupted senate, and inverted morals of the times!) the Marsian and Apulian, unmindful of the sacred shields*, of the Roman name and habit, and of eternal† Vesta, grown old in the camps of hostile fathers-in-law, Jupiter Capitolinus and the city being as yet in safety? The prudent mind of Regulus had provided against this, dissenting from ignominious terms, and a precedent productive of destruction to the succeeding age, if the captive youth were not to perish unpitied. I have beheld, said he, the Roman standards affixed to the Carthaginian temples, and their arms taken away from our soldiers without bloodshed. I have beheld the arms of our citizens inverted behind their free-born backs, and the gates of the enemy unshut, and the fields, which were depopulated by our battles, cultivated a-new. The soldier, to be sure, ransomed by gold, will return a braver fellow!—No—you add loss to infamy; for neither does the wool prepared in the die of the sea-weed ever resume its lost colour; and genuine valour, when once it has failed, scorns to resume the place, of which it was dispossessed through cowardice. If the hind, disentangled from the thick-set toils, ever fights, then indeed shall he be valorous, who has entrusted himself to faithless enemies; and he shall trample upon the Carthaginians in a second war, who dastardly has felt the thongs with his arms tied behind him, and has been afraid of death. He through cowardice, knowing no other way to preserve his life, has confounded peace with the very act of war.—O scandal! O illustrious Carthage, elevated to a higher pitch by Italy's disgraceful downfall!—He (Regulus) is reported to have rejected the embrace of his virtuous wife and his little sons, like one degraded; and to have sternly fixed his manly countenance on the ground, until by his unexampled counsel he had confirmed the wavering senators, and amidst his weeping friends hastened away a glorious exile. Notwithstanding he knew what the barbarian executioner was providing for him, yet he pushed from him his opposing kindred, and the populace retarding his return, in no other manner, than if (after he had quitted the tedious business of his clients by determining their suit) he was only going to the Venafran plains, or the Lacedæmonian Tarentum.

TO THE ROMANS.

That the contempt of religion, and the corruption of morals, had brought the greatest misfortunes upon the Romans.

You shall suffer, O Rome, for the sins of your ancestors, though innocent of them, till you shall have repaired the temples and tottering edifices of the Gods, and their statues, which are defiled with sooty smoke. You justly reign, because you conduct yourself as subordinate to the Gods: to this source refer every undertaking, to this every event. The Gods, because neglected, have inflicted many evils on calamitous Italy. Already has Monæses, and the band of Pacorus, twice repelled our inauspicious attacks, and exults in having added the Roman spoils to their inferior collars. The Dacian and Æthiopian have almost demolished the city engaged in civil broils, the one formidable for his fleet, the other more expert for missile arrows. The times, fertile in wickedness, have in the first place polluted the marriage state, and thence the issue and families. From this fountain perdition being derived, has overwhelmed the nation and people. The marriageable virgin delights to be taught the Ionic dances, and at this time even is fashioned in her limbs, and cherishes unchaste desires from her very infancy; for she courts younger debauchees when her husband is in his cups, nor has she any choice, to whom she shall privately grant her forbidden pleasures when the lights are removed, but at the word of com-

It was not a youth born from parents like these, that tinged the sea with Carthaginian gore, and slew Pyrrhus, and Antiochus the Great, and the terrific Annibal; but a manly progeny of rustic soldiers, instructed to turn the glebe with Sabine spades, and to carry clubs cut out of the woods at the pleasure of a rigid mother, what time the sun shifted the shadows of the mountains, and took the yokes from the wearied oxen, bringing on the pleasant hour with his retreating chariot. landlady slyly tempts him by a thousand methods, informing him that his mistress, Chloe, is sighing for him, and burns with your flames. He remonstrates to him how a perfidious woman urged the credulous Prætus, by false accusations, to hasten the death of the overchaste Bellerophon. He tells how Peleus was like to have been given up to the infernal regions, while out of temperance he avoided the Magnesian Hippolyte; and the deceiver quotes histories to him, that are lessons for sinning.—In vain; for, heart-whole as yet, he receives his words deaf-er than the Icarian rocks.—But with regard to you, have a care lest your neighbour Enipeus prove too pleasing. Though no other person equally skilful to guide the steed, is conspicuous in the course, nor does any one with equal swiftness swim down the Etrurian stream, yet secure your house at the very approach of night, nor look down into the streets at the sound of the doleful pipe; and still remain inflexible, however upbraided with insensibility.

You are able to draw after you tigers and attendant woods, and to retard rapid rivers. To your blandishments the enormous porter of the infernal palace yielded, though an hundred serpents fortify his head, and a pestilential stream and an infectious poison issue from his triple-tongued mouth. Moreover, Ixion and Tityus smiled with a reluctant aspect: and, while you soothe the daughters of Danäus with your delightful harmony, their vessel for some time remained dry. The severe season of the burning dog-star cannot reach thee; thou affordest a refreshing coolness to the oxen fatigued with the plough-share, and to the ranging flock. TO THE ROMANS.

He celebrates Augustus' return from Spain.

AUGUSTUS CÆSAR, O ye Roman people, who was lately said, like another Hercules, to have explored the laurel purchaseable by death, revisits his domestic Gods victorious from the Spanish shore. Let the matron Livia, to whom her husband alone is dear, come forth in public procession, having first performed her duty to the just Gods; and Octavia, the sister of our glorious general, the mothers also of the maidens and of the youths just preserved from danger, becomingly adorned with supplicatory fillets. Ye, O young men, and young women lately married, abstain from ominous expressions. This day, to me a real festival, shall expel gloomy cares: I will neither dread commotions, nor violent death, while Cæsar is in possession of the earth. Away, slave, and seek for perfume and chaplets and a cask that remembers the Marsian * war, if any vessel could elude the vagabond Spartacus †. And bid the tuneful Neæra make haste to collect into a knot her auburn hair; but, if any delay should happen from the surly porter, come away. Hoary hair mollifies minds, that are fond of strife and wrangling petulance. I would not have endured this treatment, warm with youth in the consulship of Plancus.

UPON CHLORIS.

That at least, now become an old woman, she ought to set some bounds to her debauchery and lewdness.

You wife of the indigent Ibycus, at length put an end to your wickedness, and your infamous practices. Cease to sport among the damsels, and to intermix a cloud with bright constellations, as now on the verge of a timely death. If any thing well becomes Pholoë, it does not you, Chloris, likewise. Your daughter with more propriety attacks the young men's apartments, like a Bacchanalian roused up by the rattling timbrel. The love of Nothus makes her frisk about like a wanton she-goat. He exhorts him to spend the morrow, which threatened to be dark and cloudy, in a liberal indulgence.

O ÆLIUS, who art nobly descended from the ancient Lamus († forasmuch as they report, that both the first of the Lamian family had their name hence, and all the race of the descendents through faithful records) you derive your origin from that founder, who is said to have possessed, as prince, the Formian walls, and Liris gliding on the shores of Marica—an extensive potentate. To-morrow a tempest sent from the east shall strew the grove with many leaves, and the shore with useless sea-weed, unless that old prophetess of rain, the raven, deceives me. O FAUNUS, thou lover of the flying nymphs, benignly traverse my borders and sunny fields, and depart propitious to my little nursery; if a tender kid fall a victim to thee at the completion of the year, and plenty of wines be not wanting to the goblet, the companion of Venus, and the ancient altar smoke with liberal perfume. Give me, boy, a bumper for the new moon in an instant, give me one for midnight, and one for Murena the augur. Let the decanters be mixed up with three or nine glasses, according to every one's disposition. The enraptured bard, who delights in the odd-numbered Muses, shall call for brimmers thrice three. Each of the Graces, in conjunction with her naked sisters, fearful of broils, prohibits upward of three. It is my pleasure to rave : Why cease the breathings of the Phrygian flute ? Why is the pipe hung up with the silent lyre ? I hate your niggardly handfuls : strew roses in abundance. Let the envious Lycus hear the jovial noise ; and let our neighbour, ill-suited to the old Lycus, hear it. The ripe Chloë aims at thee, Telephus, with thy bushy locks, at thee, bright as the clear evening-star, but the love of my Glycera slowly consumes me.

He calls upon it to furnish him with generous wine, in compliment to Messala.

O THOU goodly cask, that wast brought to light at the same time with me in the consulship of Manlius, whether thou containest the occasion of complaint, or jests, or broils and madding amours, or gentle sleep; under whatever title thou preservest the choice Massic, thou art worthy to be removed in an auspicious day; descend, Corvinus bids me draw the mellowest wine. He, though he is imbued in the Socratic lectures, will not morosely reject thee. The virtue even of old Cato is recorded to have been frequently warmed with wine. In what caverns, meditating the immortal honour of illustrious Cæsar, shall I be heard enrolling him among the stars and the council of Jove? TO GALATEA, UPON HER GOING TO SEA.

His best wishes attending her departure, he sets before her the dangers of the sea, and particularly the example of Europa.

LET the augury of the chattering jay, and a pregnant bitch, or a tawny wolf running down from the Lanuvian fields, or a fox with whelp conduct the impious on their way; the serpent also breaks their undertaken journey, if like an arrow athwart the road it has frightened the horses. I, a provident augur for her whom I shall be concerned for, will invoke from the east with my prayers the raven foreboding by his croaking, before the bird which presages impending showers re-visits the stagnant pools. May you be happy O Galatea, wheresoever you choose to reside, and live mindful of me, and may neither the unlucky pie nor the vagrant crow forbid your going on. But do you see, with what an uproar the prone Orion labours on? I well know what the dark bay of the Adriatic is, and in what manner Iäpyx *, seemingly serene, is guilty of deceit. Let the wives and children of our enemies feel the blind tumults of the rising south, and the roaring of the blackened sea, and the shores trembling with its lash. Thus too Europa trusted her fair side to the deceitful bull, and, bold as she was, turned pale at the sea abounding with monsters, and the cheat now become manifest. She, who lately in the meadows was busied

Was it better to travel over the tedious waves, or to gather the fresh flowers? If any one now would deliver up to me in my anger this infamous bull, I would do my utmost to tear him to pieces with steel, and break off the horns of the monster, lately so much beloved by me. Abandoned I have left my father's house, and yet abandoned I procrastinate my doom. O if any of the Gods hear this, I wish I may wander naked among lions! before a disagreeable decay seizes my comely cheeks, and moisture leave this tender prey; I desire, in all the perfection of my beauty, to be the food of tigers. TO MÆCENAS.

He invites him to a frugal entertainment, and wisely admonishes him to lay aside all anxious cares about futurity.

O MÆCENAS, thou progeny of Tuscan kings, there has been a long while for you in my house some mellow wine in an unbroached hogshead, with rose-flowers and expressed essence for your hair. Disengage yourself from any thing that may retard you, nor contemplate the ever-marshy Tibur, and the sloping fields of Æsula, and the hills of Telegonus * the parricide. Leave abundance, which is the source of daintiness, and yon pile of buildings approaching near the lofty clouds: cease to admire the smoke, and opulence, and noise of flourishing Rome. A change is frequently agreeable to the rich, and a cleanly meal in the little cottage of the poor has smoothed an anxious brow without carpets or purple. Now the bright father † of Andromeda displays his hidden fire; now Procyon rages, and the constellation of the frantic Lion, as the sun causes the thirsty season to revolve. Now the weary shepherd with his languid flock seeks the shade, and the river, and the thickets of rough Silvanus; and the silent bank is free from the wandering winds. You regard what constitution may best suit the state, and are in an anxious dread for Rome, what preparations the Seres and the Bactrians subject to Cyrus and the factious Tanais are making. involve in obscure darkness the events of the time to come, and laugh if a mortal is over and above solicitous. Be mindful to manage duly that, which is present. What remains goes on in the manner of the river, at one time calmly gliding in the middle of its channel to the Tuscan sea, at another rolling along corroded stones, and stumps of trees forced away, and cattle, and houses, not without the noise of echoing mountains and neighbouring woods, when the merciless deluge enrages the peaceful waters. That man is master of himself and shall live happy, who has it in his power to say, ' I have lived to-day : to-morrow let father Jupiter invest the heaven, either with a black cloud, or with clear sunshine ; nevertheless he shall not render ineffectual what is past, nor undo or annihilate what the fleeting hour has once carried off.' Fortune, happy in the execution of her cruel office, and persisting to play her insolent game, changes uncertain honours, indulgent now to me, and by and by to another. I praise her, while she abides by me. But if she moves her fleet wings, I resign what she has bestowed, and wrap myself up in my virtue, and court honest poverty without a portion. It is no business of mine, if the mast groan with the African storms, to have recourse to piteous prayers, and to make a bargain with my vows, that my Cyprian and Syrian merchandise may not add to the wealth of the insatiable sea. Then may the fanning gale and the twin Pollux carry me safe in the protection of a skiff with two oars, through the tumultuous Ægean sea.

ODE XXX.

He promises himself an immortality of fame from his poetical writings.

I HAVE executed a monument more lasting than brass, and more sublime than the regal elevation of pyramids, which neither the wasting rain, the unavailing north-wind, nor an innumerable succession of years, and the flight of seasons, shall be able to demolish. I shall not wholly die, but a great part of me shall escape Libitina*. I shall continually be renewed in the praises of posterity, as long as the priest shall ascend the capitol with the silent vestal virgin. Where the rapid Aufidus shall murmur, and where Daunus, poorly supplied with water, ruled over a rustic people, I, exalted from a low degree, shall be acknowledged as having originally adapted the Æolic verse to Italian measures. Melpomene, assume that pride which your merits have acquired, and willingly crown my hair with the Delphic laurel.

TO VENUS.

He is now arrived at such an age, that he ought no longer to think of love-affairs.

AFTER a long cessation, O Venus, again are you stirring up tumults? Spare me, I beseech you, I beseech you. I am not the man I was under the dominion of good-natured Cynara. Forbear, O cruel mother of soft desires, to bend one bordering upon fifty, now too hardened for your soft commands: go, whither the soothing prayers of youth invoke you. More seasonably may you revel in the house of Paulus Maximus, flying thither with your splendid swans, if you seek to inflame a suitable breast. For he is both noble and graceful, and by no

There you shall smell abundant frankincense, and shall be charmed with the mixed music of the lyre and Berecynthian pipe, not without the flagelet. There the youths, together with the tender maidens, twice a day celebrating your divinity, shall, Salian-like *, with snow-white foot thrice shake the ground. As for me, neither woman, nor youth, nor the fond hope of a mutual inclination, nor to contend in wine, nor to bind my temples with fresh flowers, delight me any longer. But why, ah! why, Ligurinus, does the tear every now and then trickle down my cheeks? Why does my fluent tongue falter between my words with an ill-becoming silence? Thee in my dreams by night I clasp, caught in my arms; thee flying cross the turf of the Campus Martius, thee I pursue, O cruel one, through the rolling waters.

ODE II.

TO ANTONIUS IULUS.

Horace, being desired to celebrate the victories of Augustus in Pindaric verse, excuses himself in such a manner, that the very excuse itself very highly performs what he seems to decline.

WHOEVER endeavours, O Iulus, to rival Pindar, makes an effort on wings formed of wax, by art Dædalean, about to communicate his name to the azure sea. Like a river, pouring down a mountain, when sudden rains have increased it beyond its accustomed banks, such the deep-mouthed Pindar rages and rushes on immeasurable; sure to merit Apollo's laurel, whether he rolls down his new-formed terms through the daring dithyrambic, and is borne on in numbers exempt from rule: whether he sings the Gods, and kings the offspring of the Gods, by whom the Centaurs perished with a just destruction, by whom was quenched the flame of the dreadful Chimæra; or celebrates those whom the palm, in the Olympic games at Elis, brings home exalted to the skies, wrestler or steed, and presents them with a gift preferable to a hundred statues: or deploras some youth, snatched by death from his mournful bride—he elevates both his strength and courage and golden morals * to the stars, and rescues him from the dark oblivion of the grave. A copious strong air † elevates the Dircean swan, O Antonius, as often as he soars into the lofty regions of the clouds: but I, after the custom and manner of the Matinian bee‡, that laboriously gathers the grateful thyme, I, a diminutive creature, compose elaborate verses about the grove and the banks of the watery Tibur. You, a poet of a sublimer rate, shall sing of Cæsar, whenever, graceful in his merited laurel, he shall drag the fierce Sicambri along the sacred hill; Cæsar, than whom nothing greater or better the fates and indulgent Gods ever bestowed on the earth, nor will bestow, though the times should return to their primitive gold. You shall sing both the festal days, and the public rejoicings on account of the often-implored return of the brave Augustus, and the forum silent from law-suits. Then (if I can offer any thing worth hearing) a considerable portion of my voice shall join the general acclamation, and then will I sing, happy at the reception of Cæsar, "O glorious day! O worthy art thou to be celebrated!" And while you move along in procession, shouts of triumph we will repeat, shouts of triumph the whole city shall repeat, and we will offer frankincense to the indulgent Gods. Thee ten bulls and as many heifers shall absolve; me a tender steerling, that having left his dam thrives in spacious pastures for the discharge of my vows, resembling by the horns on his forehead the bright curvature of the moon, when she appears of three days old, in which part also he has a mark of a snowy aspect, being of a dun colour over the rest of his body.

ODE III.

TO MELPOMENE.

He ascribes the favour to her, that he obtains some place and rank among poets.

HIM, O Melpomene, whom at his birth you have once viewed with a benign aspect, the Isthmian contest shall not render eminent as a wrestler; the swift horse shall not draw him triumphant in a Grecian car; nor shall warlike achievement show him in the capitol, a general adorned with the Delian laurel, on account of his having quashed the proud threats of kings: but such waters as flow through the fertile Tibur, and the dense leaves of the groves, shall make him distinguished for the Æolian* verse. The sons of Rome, the queen of cities, deign to rank me among the amiable band of poets; and now I am less carped at by the tooth of envy. O muse, regulating the sweet harmony of the gilded shell †! O you, who can immediately bestow, if you please, the notes of the dying swan upon the mute fish! It is entirely your gift that I am marked out, as the stringer of the Roman lyre, by the fingers of passengers: that I breathe, and give pleasure (if I give pleasure) is yours.

THE PRAISES OF DRUSUS.

He celebrates the victory of Claudius Drusus Nero over the Vindelici.

LIKE as the winged minister of thunder (to whom Jupiter, the sovereign of the Gods, has assigned the dominion over the fleeting birds, having experienced his fidelity in the affair of the beautiful Ganymede) first youth and hereditary vigour drew him from his nest, unused to toil; and the vernal winds, the showers being now dispelled, taught him, with some apprehension, unwonted enterprises: in a little while his violent impetuosity dispatched him, as an enemy, to the sheep-folds; and now an appetite for food and fight has impelled him upon the reluctant dragons:—or as a she-goat, intent on rich pastures, has beheld a young lion but just weaned from the udder of his tawny dam, ready to be devoured by his newly-grown tooth: such did the Rhæti and the Vindelici behold Drusus carrying on the war under the Alps (whence this people derived the custom, which has always prevailed among them, of arming their right hands with the Amazonian axe, I have purposely omitted to inquire: neither can we discover every thing *.) But those troops, which had been for a long while and extensively victorious, being subdued by the conduct of a youth, perceived what a disposition, what a genius rightly educated under an auspicious roof, what the fatherly affection of Augustus toward the young Neros could jointly effect. The brave are generated by the brave ; and there is in steers, there is in horses the virtue of their sires ; nor do the courageous eagles procreate the unwarlike dove. But yet learning improves the innate force, and good discipline confirms the mind : whenever morals are deficient, vices disgrace what is naturally good. What thou owest, O Rome, to the Neros, the river Metaurus is a witness, and the defeated Asdrubal, and that day which was illustrious by the dispelling of darkness from Italy, and which first smiled with benignant victory * ; when the terrible African † rode through the Latian cities, like a fire through the pitchy pines, or the east-wind through the Sicilian waves. After this, the Roman youth increased continually in successful exploits, and temples laid waste by the impious outrage of the Carthaginians had the statues of their Gods set up again. And at length the perfidious Annibal said ; “ We like stags, the prey of rapacious wolves, follow of our own accord those, whom to deceive and escape is a signal triumph. That nation, which tossed in the Etrurian waves bravely transported their Gods, and sons, and aged fathers, from the burnt Troy to the Italian cities, like an oak lopped by sturdy axes in Algidum abounding in dusky leaves, through losses and through wounds derives strength and spirit from the very steel. He would not, by being shut up in a wooden horse that falsely pretended to bear the sacred rites of Minerva, have surprised the Trojans revelling in an evil hour, and the court of Priam making merry with balls; but openly inexorable to his captives (Oh impious! Thou lyrist Phœbus, the tutor of the harmonious Thalia, who bathest thy locks in the river Xanthus, O delicate Agyieus *, support the dignity of the Latian muse. Phœbus gave me genius, Phœbus gave me the art of composing verse, and the title of poet. Therefore ye virgins of the first distinction, and ye youths born of illustrious parents, ye wards of the Delian † Goddess, who stops with her bow the flying lynxes and the fleetest stags, observe the Lesbian measure, and the motion ‡ of my thumb; duly celebrating the son of Latona, duly celebrating the Goddess that enlightens the night with her shining crescent, she that is so propitious to the fruits of the earth, and expeditious in rolling on the precipitate months.—Shortly a bride you will say: “I, expert in the measures of the poet, Horace, recited an ode which was acceptable to the Gods, when the secular period brought on the festal days.”

* Apollo was styled Agyieus (which signifies the streets of cities) from his having altars and statues in the public streets, for the same reason that Diana had her name of Trivia, from being worshipped in the high-ways.

† Delos was the place of Diana's nativity.

ODE VII.

TO TORQUATUS.

By representing to him the certainty of death, he exhorts him to live in a cheerful and joyous manner.

THE SNOWS are dissolved away, the herbage now returns to the fields, and the leaves to the trees. The earth changes her vicissitudes, and the decreasing rivers glide along their banks: the elder Grace, together with the Nymphs, and her two sisters *, dares now naked lead up the dance. That you are not to expect things permanent here, the year, and the hour that hurries away the agreeable day, sufficiently convince us. The colds are mitigated by the returning Zephyrs; the Summer follows close upon the Spring, shortly to die itself, as soon as fruitful Autumn shall have shed its stores; and anon sluggish Winter returns again. Nevertheless, the quick-revolving moons repair their wanings in the skies: but when we descend to those regions where the pious Æneas, where Tullus and the wealthy Ancus have gone before us, we become nothing but dust and shade. Who knows, whether the Gods above will add to this day's reckoning the space of to-morrow? Every thing which you shall indulge to your friendly genius, will escape the greedy hands of your heir. When once, Torquatus, you shall be dead, and Minos shall have made his awful decisions concerning you; not your family, not your eloquence, not even your piety shall restore you to life. For neither can Diana free the chaste Hippolytus from infernal darkness; nor is Theseus able to break off the Lethæan fetters from his dear Pirithöus.

ODE VIII.

TO MARCIUS CENSORINUS.

That the gift of immortality is in the power of the poets.

O CENSORINUS, with liberal heart I would present my acquaintance with goblets and beautiful vases of brass : I would present them with tripods, which were the rewards of the brave Grecians : nor would you bear off the meanest of my donations, if I were rich in those pieces of art, which either Parrhasius or Scopas produced ; the latter in statuary, the former in liquid colours, eminent to portray at one time the image of a man, at another that of a God. But I have no store of this sort, nor do your circumstances * or inclination require any such curiosities as these. You delight in verses : verses I can give, and set a value on the donation. Not marbles engraved with public inscriptions, by means of which breath and life returns to illustrious generals after their decease ; not the precipitate flight of Annibal, and his menaces retorted upon his own head ; not the flames of impious Carthage more eminently set forth his praises, who returned †, having gained a name from conquered Africa, than the Calabrian ‡ Muses ; neither, should writings be silent, would you have any adequate reward for your laudable actions. What would the son of Mars and Ilia be, if invidious silence had stifled the merits of Romulus ? The force, and favour, and voice of powerful poets consecrates Æacus, snatched from the Stygian floods, to the Fortunate Islands. The muse forbids a praise-worthy man to die : the muse confers the happiness of heaven. Thus laborious Hercules has a place at the longed-for banquets of

TO MARCUS LOLLIUS.

The poet endeavours, by his verses, to rescue Lollius's name from oblivion.

Do not imagine that those words will perhaps be lost, which I, though born on the far-resounding Aufidus, utter to be accompanied with the lyre, by arts hitherto undivulged. If Mæonian Homer possesses the first rank, yet the Pindaric and Cean † muses, and the menacing strains of Alcæus, and the majestic ones of Stesichorus, are by no means obscure ; neither, if Anacreon long ago lightly sung any thing, has time destroyed it : even now breathes the love, and live the ardors of the Æolian maid ‡, committed to her lyre. The Lacedæmonian Helen is not the only fair, who has been inflamed by admiring the delicate ringlets of a gallant, and garments embroidered with gold, and courtly accomplishments, and retinue : nor was Teucer the first, that levelled arrows from the Cydonian bow : Troy was more than once harassed : the great Idomeneus and Sthenelus were not the only heroes that fought battles worthy to be recorded by the Muses : The fierce Hector or the strenuous Deïphobus were not the first, that received heavy blows in defence of virtuous wives and children. Many brave men lived before Agamemnon ; but all them, unlamented and unknown, are overwhelmed with endless obscurity, because they were destitute of a sacred bard. Valour, uncelebrated, differs but little from cowardice when in the grave. I will not therefore, O Lollius, pass you over in silence, uncelebrated in my writings, or suffer envious forgetfulness with impunity to seize so many glorious toils of yours. You have a mind ever prudent in the conduct of affairs, and steady alike amidst success and danger: You are an avenger of avaricious fraud, and proof against money, that attracts every thing by its influence; and a consul not of one year only, but as often as the good and upright magistrate has preferred the honourable to the profitable, and has rejected with a disdainful brow the bribes of wicked men, and triumphant through opposing bands has displayed the arms of his integrity. You cannot with propriety call him happy, that possesses much; he more justly claims the title of happy, who well understands how to make a wise use of the gifts of the Gods, and how to bear severe poverty, and dreads a reproachful action worse than death: such a man as this is not afraid to perish in the defence of his dear friends, or of his country.

boys, in busy preparation, fly about from place to place : the flames quiver, rolling on their pointed summit the sooty smoke. But yet that you may know to what joys you are invited ; the ides are to be celebrated by you, the day which divides April, the month * of sea-born Venus ; a day, with reason to be solemnised by me, and almost more sacred to me than that of my own birth ; since from this day my dear Mæcenas reckons his flowing years. A rich and buxom girl hath possessed herself of Telephus, a youth above your rank ; and she holds him fast by an agreeable fetter. Consumed Phaëton strikes terror into ambitious hopes, and the winged Pegasus, not stomaching to bear the earth-born rider Bellerophon, affords a terrible example, that you ought always to pursue things that are suitable to you ; and that you should avoid a disproportioned match, by thinking it a crime to entertain a hope beyond what is allowable. Come then, thou last of my loves (for hereafter I shall burn for no other woman) learn with me such measures, as you may recite with your lovely voice : our gloomy cares shall be mitigated with an ode.

TO VIRGIL.

Horace invites him to supper, upon consideration that he brings something toward the entertainment along with him.

THE Thracian breezes *, those attendants on the spring, which moderate the raging sea, now fill the sails; now neither are the meadows stiff with frost, nor roar the rivers swollen with winter's snow. The unhappy bird †, that piteously bemoans the fate of Itys, and is the eternal disgrace of the house of Cecrops (because she wickedly revenged the cruel liberties, that kings will take) now builds her nest. The keepers of the sheep play tunes upon the pipe amidst the tender herbage, and delight that God ‡, to whom flocks, and the shady hills of Arcadia are agreeable. The time of year, O Virgil, has brought on a drought: but if you desire to quaff wine from the Calenian press, you, that are a constant companion of young noblemen, must earn your liquor by bringing some spikenard: a small box of spikenard shall draw out a cask, which now lies in the Sulpician store-house, bounteous in the indulgence of fresh hopes, and efficacious in washing away the bitterness of care. To which joys if you hasten, come instantly with your merchandise; I do not intend to dip you in my cups scot-free, like a man of wealth in a house abounding with plenty. But however lay aside delay, and the desire of gain; and, mindful of the gloomy funeral flames, intermix, while you may, your grave studies with a little light gayety: it is delightful to give a loose on a proper occasion.

ODE XIII.

TO LYCE.

He insults her, on being the contempt of the young fellows.

THE Gods have heard my prayers, Oh Lyce ; Lyce, the Gods have heard my prayers : you are become an old woman, and yet you would have the appearance of a beauty ; and you wanton and drink in an audacious manner ; and, when in for it, solicit tardy Cupid with an affected quavering of voice. He basks in the charming cheeks of the blooming Chian, who is a proficient on the lyre. The teasing urchin flies over blasted oaks, and starts back at the sight of you, because foul teeth, because wrinkles and snowy hair render you odious. Now neither Coan purples, nor sparkling jewels restore those years, which winged time has inserted in the public annals. Whither is your beauty gone ? Alas ! or whither your bloom ? Whither your graceful deportment ? What have you remaining of her, of her, who breathed loves, and ravished me from myself ? Happy in accomplishments next to Cynara, and distinguished for an aspect of graceful delicacies : but the fates granted but a few years to Cynara, intending to preserve for a long time Lyce, to rival in years the aged raven : that the fervid young fellows might see, not without excessive laughter, that torch, which once so brightly scorched, now reduced to ashes.

ODE XIV.

TO AUGUSTUS.

He ascribes the victory of Drusus over the Vindelici, and more especially that of Tiberius over the Rhæti, to the auspices and good fortune of Augustus.

WHAT zeal of the senators, or what of the Roman people, by decreeing the most ample honours, can eternalise your virtues, O Augustus, by monumental inscriptions and lasting records? O you, wherever the sun illuminates the habitable regions, greatest of princes, whom the Vindelici, that never experienced the Roman sway, have lately learned how powerful you are in war! For Drusus, by means of your soldiery, has more than once bravely overthrown the Genauni, an implacable race, and the rapid Brenni, and the citadels situated on the tremendous Alps. The elder of the Neros * soon after fought a terrible battle, and, under your propitious auspices, smote the ferocious Rhæti: how worthy of admiration in the field of battle, to see with what destruction he oppressed the brave hearts devoted to voluntary death: just as the south works the untameable waves, when the dance of the Pleiades cleaves the clouds; so is he strenuous to annoy the troops of the enemy, and to drive his eager steed through the midst of flames. Thus the bull-formed † (or branching) Aufidus, who washes the dominions of the Apulian Daunus, rolls, when he rages and meditates an horrible deluge to the cultivated lands; by Romulus, now free from war ; and has imposed a due discipline upon head-strong licentiousness, and has extirpated crimes, and recalled the ancient arts ; by which the Latin name and strength of Italy have increased, and the fame and majesty of the empire is extended from the sun's western bed, even to the east. ODE I.

TO MÆCENAS.

Horace offers to accompany him, on his departure for the Actian expedition.

You will go, my friend Mæcenas, with Liburnian gallies among the towering forts of Antony's large ships, ready at your own hazard to undergo any of Cæsar's dangers. What shall I do? To whom life may indeed be agreeable, if you survive; but, if otherwise, insupportable. Whether shall I at your command pursue my ease, which cannot be pleasing unless in your company? Or shall I endure this toil with such a courage, as becomes uneffeminate men to bear? I will bear it; and with an intrepid soul follow you, either through the summits of the Alps, and the inhospitable Caucasus, or to the farthest western bay. You may ask how I, unwarlike and infirm, can assist your labours by mine? While I am your companion, I shall be in less anxiety, which takes possession of the absent in a greater measure. As the bird, that has unfledged young, is in a greater dread of serpents' approaches, when they are left;—Not that, if she should be present when they came, she could be of any more service. Not only this, but every other war, shall be cheerfully embraced by me for the hope of your favour: and this, not that my ploughs should labour, yoked to a greater number of teams of mine own oxen; or that my cattle before the scorching dog-star should change the Calabrian for the Lucanian pastures: neither that my white country-box should reach (approach in magnificence) the Circæan * walls of lofty Tusculum. Your generosity has already enriched me enough, and more than enough: I shall never wish to amass, what either, like the miser Chremes in the play, I may bury in the earth, or luxuriously squander, like a prodigal.

ODE II.

THE PRAISES OF A COUNTRY LIFE.

Alphius the usurer, weary as it were with his craft, praises a country life; but shortly, overcome with avarice, he returns to his old way of living.

HAPPY the man, who, remote from business, after the manner of the ancient race of mortals, cultivates his paternal lands with his own oxen, disengaged from every kind of usury; he is neither alarmed with the horrible trumpet, as a soldier, nor dreads he the angry sea; he shuns both the bar, and the proud portals of men in power. Wherefore, he either weds the lofty poplars to the mature branches of the vine; or, lopping off the useless boughs with his pruning-knife, he engrafts more fruitful ones; or takes a prospect of the herds of his lowing cattle, wandering about in a lonely vale; or stores his honey, pressed from the combs, in clean vessels; or shears his tender sheep. Or, when Autumn has lifted up in the fields his head adorned with mellow fruits, how glad is he while he gathers the pears grafted by himself, and the grape that vies with the purple, with which he may recompense thee, O Priapus, and thee, father Sylvanus, the guardian of his boundaries! Sometimes he delights to lie under an aged holm, sometimes on the matted grass. meanwhile the waters glide down from steep clefts; the birds warble in the woods; and the fountains murmur with their purring streams, which invites gentle slumbers. But when the wintry season of the tempestuous * air prepares rains

* Thundering Jupiter: but, as thunder is the least frequent in winter, and Jupiter (it has above been observed) frequently signifies the air, the expression may perhaps be best understood of the loud hurricanes, and the generally troubled state of the atmosphere in the winter-season.

Amongst such joys as these, who does not forget those mischievous anxieties, which are the property of love? But if a chaste wife, assisting on her part in the management of the house and beloved children, (such as is the Sabine, or the sun-burnt spouse of the industrious Apulian) piles up the sacred hearth † with old wood, just at the approach of her weary husband; and, shutting up the fruitful cattle in the woven hurdles, milks dry their distended udders; and, drawing this year's wine out of a well-seasoned cask, prepares the unbought collation; not the Lucrine oysters could delight me more, nor the turbot, nor the scar, should the tempestuous winter drive any from the Eastern floods to this sea: not the turkey, nor the Asiatic wild fowl, can come into my stomach more agreeable, than the olive gathered from the richest branches of the trees, or the sorrel that loves the meadows, or mallows salubrious for a sickly body, or a lamb slain at the feast of the God Terminus ‡, or a kid just rescued from the wolf. ODE III.

TO MÆCENAS.

He expresses his aversion from garlick.

IF any person at any time with an impious hand has broken his aged father's neck, let him, by way of punishment, eat garlick, more baneful than hemlock. Oh the hardy bowels of the mowers! What poison is this, that rages in my entrails? Has vipers' blood, infused in these herbs, deceived me? Or has Canidia meddled with this vile food? When Medea, beyond all the other Argonauts, admired their handsome leader, she anointed Jason with this, as he was going to tie the untried yoke on the fiery bulls: and having revenged herself on Jason's † mistress, by making her presents besmeared with this, she flew away on her winged dragon. Never did the steaming influence of any constellation so raging as this rest upon the thirsty Apulia; neither did the gift of Dejanira burn hotter upon the shoulders of the laborious Hercules. But if ever, facetious Mæcenas, you should have a desire for any such stuff again, I wish that your girl may oppose her hand to your kiss, and lie at the farthest part of the bed.

ODE IV.

On a certain person, who, from a slave being made a military tribune, was to have the command of one part of the fleet of the Triumvirs.

As great an enmity as is allotted by nature to wolves and lambs, so great a one have I to you, you that are galled at your side with Spanish cords, and on your legs with the pinching fetter. Though, purse-proud with your riches, you strut along, yet fortune does not alter your low birth. Do you not observe, while you are measuring the Sacred Way * with a robe twice three ells long, how a most open indignation distorts the faces of those that pass and repass? Mind this fellow (say they) cut with the triumvirs' whips even till the beadle was sick of his office, he cultivates a thousand acres of Falernian land, and wears out the Appian road with his prancing nags; and in despite of Otho †, sits in the first rows of the Circus as a knight of distinction. To what purpose is it, that so many brazen-beaked ships of immense bulk should be led out against pirates and a band of slaves, while this, this fellow, is a military tribune?

ODE V.

The imprecations of a boy against the witch Canidia.

thee by this empty honour of my purple *, and by Jupiter, who must disapprove these proceedings, why dost thou look at me like a step-mother, or as a wild beast stricken with a dart? While the boy made these complaints with a faltering voice, he stood, with his badges † of distinction taken from him, a delicate boy, such as might soften the impious breasts of the savage Thracians: Canidia, having her hair and uncombed head interwoven with little vipers, orders wild fig-trees torn up from groves, orders funereal cypresses, and eggs besmeared with the gore of a loathsome toad, and feathers of the nocturnal screech-owl, and those herbs, which Iöichos ‡, and Spain fruitful in poisons transmits, and bones snatched from the mouth of a hungry bitch, to be buried in Colchian § flames. But Sagana, tucked up for expedition, sprinkling the waters of Avernus || all over the house, bristles up with her rough hair, like a sea-urchin, or a boar pursued. Veia, deterred by no remorse of conscience, groaning with the toil, dug up the ground with the sharp spade: where the boy, fixed in, might long be tormented to death at the sight of food varied two or three times in a day; while he stood out with his face, just as much as bodies suspended by the chin in swimming project from the water, that his parched marrow and dried liver might be a charm for love; when once the pupils of his eyes had wasted away by being fixed on the forbidden food. Naples, and every neighbouring town believed, that Folia of Ariminum, a witch of masculine lust, was not absent from those rites: she, who with her Thessalian incantations forces the charmed constellations and the moon from heaven. Here the fell Canidia, gnawing her unpared thumb with her livid teeth, what said she? Or what did she not say? Oh ye faithful witnesses to my proceedings, Night, and Diana, who presidest over silence, when the secret mysteries are celebrated; now, now be present, and turn your anger and power against the houses of our enemies. While the wild beasts lie hid in the gloomy woods, dissolved in sweet repose: let the dogs of the Suburra * (which may be a matter of ridicule for every body) bark at the old fornicator, bedaubed with essence, such as my hands never made any more exquisite. What is the matter? Why are those compositions less efficacious than those of the barbarian Medea; by means of which she made her escape, after having revenged herself on Jason's haughty mistress, the daughter of the mighty Creon; when the garment, a gift that was infected with poison, took off his new bride by its inflammatory power? And yet no herb, nor root latent in inaccessible places, ever escaped my notice. Nevertheless, he sleeps in the essenced bed of every harlot, from his forgetfulness of me. Ah! ah! he walks in security, set free from my power by the charms of some more powerful witch. At these words, the boy no longer attempted, as before, to move impious hags by soothing expressions; but, doubtful in what manner he should break silence, uttered Thyestean * imprecations. Potions (said he) have a great efficacy in confounding right and wrong, but are not able to invert the condition of human nature: I will persecute you with curses; and that execrating detestation is not to be expiated by any victim. Moreover, when doomed by you to death I shall have expired, I will attend you as a nocturnal fury; and, a ghost, I will attack your faces with my hooked talons, (for such is the power of those divinities, the Manes †) and, brooding upon your restless breasts, I will deprive you of repose by terrible visions. This is the case: a cruel fatality and the crime of fratricide have disquieted the Romans, from that time, when the blood of the innocent Remus *, to be expiated by his descendants, was spilled upon the earth.

 ODE VIII.

UPON A WANTON OLD WOMAN.

CAN you, grown rank and old, ask what unnerves my vigour? When your teeth are black, and old age withers your brow with wrinkles; and your back sinks between your staring hip-bones, like that of an unhealthy cow. But, forsooth! your breast and your fallen chest, full well resembling a broken-backed horse, provoke me; and a body flabby, and feeble knees supported by swollen legs. May you be happy; and may triumphal statues † adorn your funeral procession: and may no matron appear in public abounding with richer pearls. What follows, because the bookish stoicks sometimes love to indulge on silken pillows? Are unlearned constitutions the less robust? Or are their limbs less stout? TO MÆCENAS.

Horace celebrates the successes, which preceded the victory at Actium.

Indignant at this, the Gauls turned two thousand of their cavalry, proclaiming Cæsar: and the ships of the hostile navy, going off to the left, lie by in port. Hail, God of triumph! You, that delay the triumphal honours of golden chariots, and untouched heifers. Hail, God of triumph! You neither brought back a general equal to Cæsar, from the Jugurthine war; nor from the African war, him, whose valour raised him a monument by conquered Carthage. Our enemy, overthrown both by land and sea, has changed his purple vestments for mourning. And now he either seeks Crete, famous for her hundred cities, ready to sail with the

AGAINST MÆVIUS.

Horace wishes that he may suffer shipwreck.

THE vessel, that carries the loathsome Mævius, makes her departure with an unlucky omen. Be mindful, oh south-wind, that you may buffet it about with horrible billows. May the gloomy east, turning up the sea, disperse its cables and broken oars. Let the north arise in as mighty fury, as when he rives the quivering oaks on the lofty mountains ; nor let a friendly star appear through the murky night, in which the baleful Orion sets ; nor let him be conveyed in a calmer sea, than was the Grecian band of conquerors, when Pallas turned her rage from burned Troy to the ship of impious Ajax *.  ODE XI.

TO PETTIUS.

Horace is so much in love, that he cannot apply himself to the study of poetry.

IT by no means, oh Pettius, delights me as heretofore to write Lyric verses, being smitten with cruel love; with love, who takes pleasure to inflame me beyond others, either youths or maidens. This is the third December, that has shaken the leafy honours from the woods, since I ceased to be mad for Inachia. Ah me! (for I am ashamed of so great a misfortune) what a subject of talk was I through the whole city! I repent too of the entertainments, that I frequented, at which both a languishing and silence and sighs, heaved from the bottom of my breast, discovered the lover. Then, as soon as the indelicate god (Bacchus) by stronger wine than ordinary, had removed, as I grew warm, the secrets of my heart from their repository, I made my complaints, thus lamenting to you, "that the fairest genius of a poor man hath no weight against wealthy lucre." Wherefore, if a generous indignation should boil in my breast, insomuch as to disperse to the winds these disagreeable (though soothing) applications, that give no ease to the desperate wound; then the shame (of being overcome) ending, shall cease to contest with rivals of such a sort. When I, with great gravity, had applauded these resolutions in your presence, being ordered by you to go home, I was carried with a wandering foot to posts, alas! to me not friendly, and alas! obdurate gates; against which I bruised my loins and side. Now my engagements with the delicate Lyciscus engross all my time: from them neither the unreserved

Upon an old woman.

WHAT would you be at, you woman fitter for the swarthy monsters? Why do you send tokens, why billet-doux to me, and not to some vigorous youth, and of a taste not nice? For I am one who discern a polypus or fetid ramminess, however concealed, more quickly than the keenest dog the covert of the boar. What sweatiness, and how rank an odour, every where rises from her withered limbs! when she strives to lay her furious rage with impossibilities; now she has no longer the advantage of moist cosmetics, and her colour appears as if stained with crocodile's ordure; and now, in wild impetuosity, she tears her bed, bedding, and all she has. She attacks even my loathings in the most angry terms:—"You are always less dull with Inachia than me: in her company you are threefold complaisance; but you are ever unprepared to oblige me in a single instance. Lesbia, who first recommended you—so unfit a help in time of need, may she come to an ill end! when Coan Amyntas paid me his addresses; who is ever as constant in his fair one's service, as the young tree to the hill it grows on. For whom were laboured the fleeces of the richest Tyrian dye? For you? Even so that there was not one in company, among gentlemen of your own rank, whom his own wife * admired preferably to you; oh, unhappy me, whom you fly, as the lamb dreads the fierce wolves, or the she-goats the lions!"

TO A FRIEND.

The troubles of life are to be assuaged by drinking, and singing, and friendly conversation.

AN horrible storm has condensed the sky, and showers and snows bring down the atmosphere: now the sea, now the woods bellow with the Thracian north-wind. Let us, my friends, take occasion of merriment from this dismalness of the day; and, while our knees are vigorous, and it becomes us, let old age with his contracted forehead become smooth. Do you produce the wine, that was pressed in the consulship of my Torquatus. Forbear to talk of any other matters. The Deity, perhaps, will reduce these present evils to your former happy state by a propitious change. Now it is fitting both to be bedewed with Persian perfume, and to relieve our breasts of dire vexations by the lyre, sacred to Mercury. In the same manner as the noble Centaur, Chiron, sung to his grand pupil: "Invincible mortal, son of the Goddess Thetis, the land * of Assaracus awaits you, which the cold currents of the little Scamander and the swift-gliding Simois divide: whence the fatal sisters have broken off your return, by a thread that cannot be altered; nor shall your azure mother convey you back to your home. There then by wine and music, and by sweet converse, drive away every symptom of hideous melancholy."

TO MÆCENAS.

Horace's love for Phryne hinders him from finishing the promised iambics.

YOU kill me, my courteous Mæcenas, by frequently inquiring, why a soothing indolence has diffused as great a degree of forgetfulness on my inmost senses, as if I had imbibed with a thirsty throat those cups that bring on Lethæan slumbers. For the God, the God prohibits me from bringing to a conclusion the verses I promised you, namely those iambics which I had begun. In the same manner they report, that Anacreon of Teios * burned for the Samian Bathyllus; who often lamented his love to an inaccurate measure on a hollow lyre. You are violently in love yourself: but if a fairer flame did not burn besieged Troy, rejoice in your happy lot. Phryne, though a freed-woman, and not content with a single admirer, consumes me.

parents ; but we, an impious race, whose blood is devoted to perdition, shall destroy her : and this land shall again be possessed by wild beasts. The victorious barbarian, alas ! shall trample upon the ashes of the city, and the horseman shall smite it with the sounding hoofs ; and (horrible to see !) he shall insultingly disperse the bones of Romulus, which as yet are free from the injuries of wind and sun. Perhaps you all in general, or the better part of you are inquisitive to know, what may be expedient, in order to escape such dreadful evils. There can be no determination better than this ; namely, to go wherever our feet will carry us, wherever the south or boisterous south-west shall summon us through the waves ; in the same manner as the whole state of the Phocæans fled, after having uttered execrations against such as should return, and left their fields and proper dwellings and temples to be inhabited by boars and ravenous wolves. Is this agreeable ? or has any one a better scheme to advise ? Why do we delay to go on ship-board under an auspicious omen ? But first let us swear to these conditions—the stones shall swim upward, lifted from the bottom of the sea, as soon as it shall not be impious to return ; nor let it grieve us to direct our sails homeward then, and not before, when the Po shall wash the tops of the Matinian summits ; or the lofty Apennine shall remove into the sea, or a miraculous appetite shall unite monsters by a strange kind of lust ; insomuch that tigers may delight to couple with hinds, and the dove be polluted with the kite ; nor the simple herds may dread the tawny lions, and the he-goat grown smooth may love the briny main. After having sworn to these things, and whatever else may cut off the pleasing hope of returning, let us go, the whole city of us, or at least that part which is superior to the illiterate mob : but let the idle and despairing part remain upon these inauspicious habitations. But ye, that have bravery, away with effeminate grief, and fly beyond the Tuscan shore. The circumambient ocean awaits us : let us seek the plains, the happy plains, and fortunate islands, where the untilled land yearly produces corn, and the unpruned vineyard punctually flourishes; and where the branch of the never-failing olive blossoms forth, and the purple fig adorns its native tree; honey distils from hollow oaks; and the light water bounds down from the high mountains with a murmuring pace. There the she-goats come to the milk-pails of their own accord, and the friendly flock returns with their udders distended; nor does the evening bear growl about the sheep-fold, nor does the rising ground swell with vipers: and many more things shall we, happy Romans, view with admiration; how neither the rainy east lays waste the corn-fields with profuse showers, nor is the fertile seed burned by too dry a glebe; the king of Gods moderating both extremes. The ship that carried the Argonauts never attempted to come hither; nor did the lascivious Medea of Colchis set her foot in this place: hither the Sidonian mariners never turned their sail-yards, nor the toiling crew of Ulysses. No contagious distempers here hurt the flocks; nor does the fiery violence of any constellation scorch the herd. The mariners of the indefatigable Ulysses put off their limbs, bristled with the hard skins of swine, at the will of Circe: and then their reason and voice were restored, and their former comeliness to their countenances. I have suffered punishment enough, and more than enough, on your account, oh you so dearly beloved by the sailors and factors. My vigour is gone away, and my ruddy complexion has left me; my bones are covered with a ghastly skin: my hair too with your preparations is grown hoary. No ease respites me from my sufferings: night presses upon day, and day upon night: nor is it in my power to relieve my lungs, which are strained with gasping. Wherefore, wretch that I am, I am compelled to credit (what before was denied by me) that the charms of the Samnites discompose the breast, and the head splits in sunder at the Marsian incantations. What would you have more? O sea! O earth! I burn in such a degree as neither Hercules did, besmeared with the black gore of Nessus, nor the fervid flame burning in the Sicilian

* The rhombus was a kind of wheel, by the turning of which certain sorceries were performed.

† Telephus, king of Mysia, opposed the march of the Greeks through his kingdom on their way to Troy. He was wounded by the spear of Achilles, and afterward cured by some filings from the same weapon, for which he was directed by the oracle to apply.

Ætna. Yet you, a laboratory of Colchian poisons, remain on fire, till I, reduced to a dry ember, shall be wasted away by the injurious winds. What event, or what penalty awaits me? Speak out: I will with honour pay the demanded mulct; ready to make an expiation, whether you shall require to have it done with an hundred steers, or choose to be celebrated on a lying lyre: "you a woman of modesty, you a woman of probity, shall traverse the stars, as a golden constellation." Castor, and the brother of the great Castor, though offended at the infamy brought on their sister Helen, yet overcome by intreaty restored to the poet * his eyes that were taken away from him. And do you (for it is in your power) extricate me from this phrensy; oh you, that are neither defiled by family-meanness, nor, like an old sorceress, skilful to disperse the ashes of poor people, after they have been nine days interred. You have an hospitable breast, and unpolluted hands; and your womb is a fruitful one; and, whenever you bring forth, you spring up with unabated vigour.

CANIDIA'S ANSWER.

WHY do you pour forth your entreaties to ears that are obstinately shut up against them? The wintry ocean, with its briny tempests, does not lash rocks more deaf to the cries of the naked mariners. What, shall you, without being made an example of, deride the Cotyttian † mysteries, sacred to unrestrained love, which were divulged by you? And shall you, assuming the office of Pontiff with regard to my Esquilian incantations, fill the city with my name unpunished? What will it avail me to have enriched the Pelignian sorceresses with my charms, and to have prepared poison of more expedition than others, if a slower fate awaits you than is agreeable to my wishes? An irksome life shall be protracted by you, wretch as you are, only for this purpose, that you may perpetually be able to endure new tortures. Tantalus, the sire of the perfidious Pelops, always in want of that plenteous banquet, which is always before him, wishes for respite; Prometheus, chained to the vulture wishes for rest; Sisyphus wishes to place the stone upon the summit of the mountain: but the laws of Jupiter forbid. Thus you, in hopes of relief, shall desire at one time to leap down from an high tower, at another to lay open your breast with the Noric sword; and, grieving with your tedious indisposition, shall tie nooses about your neck in vain. For I at that time will ride on your odious shoulders; and the whole earth shall acknowledge my enexampl'd power. What, shall I, who can give motion to waxen images (as you yourself, inquisitive as you are, were convinced of) and snatch the moon from heaven by my incantations; I, who can raise the dead after they are burned, and duly prepare the potion of love, shall I bewail the event of my art having no efficacy upon you?

* The poet Stesichorus wrote a satire against Helen, on account of which her brethren Castor and Pollux deprived the bard of his sight, but on his making a recantation he was restored.

† Cotytto was the goddess of Impudence.

* * In conformity to the opinion of M. SANADON, and many other ingenious editors of our author, it is here thought proper to collect together, into one view, the several parts the secular ode may be supposed to have originally consisted of. Whether or not the generality of competent judges of antiquity and Horatian elegance, be convinced that this is the form in which its author wrote, and Rome admired it; most, I believe, will allow, that in this condition every part is consistent, each division adds dignity to the whole, and that there arises a poem, which is at once the finest monument of heathen worship, and perhaps the noblest specimen of lyric poetry that is any where remaining.—Translations of the several parts will be found by the references in the margin.

PHŒBUS, and thou Diana, sovereign of the woods, ye illustrious ornaments of the heavens, oh ever-worthy of adoration and ever-adored, bestow what we pray for at this sacred season: at which the Sibylline verses have given directions, that select virgins and chaste youths should sing a hymn to the Deities, to whom the seven hills of Rome are acceptable.

CHORUS OF YOUTHS,

Oh genial sun, who in your splendid car draw forth and obscure the day, and who arise another and the same; may it never be in your power to behold any thing more glorious than the city of Rome.

CHORUS OF VIRGINS.

Oh Ilithia *, of lenient power to produce the timely birth, protect the matrons in labour; whether you choose the title of Lucina or Genitalis. Oh Goddess, multiply our offspring; and prosper the decrees of the senate in relation to the joining of women in wedlock, and the matrimonial law about to teem with a new race.

CHORUS OF YOUTHS AND VIRGINS.

That the stated revolution of a hundred and ten years may bring back the hymns and the games, three times by bright day-light resorted to in crowds, and as often in the welcome night. And you, ye fatal sisters, infallible in having predicted what is now established, and what the settled order of things preserves, add propitious fates to those already past. Let the earth, fertile in fruits and flocks, present Ceres with a sheafy crown : may both salubrious rains and Jupiter's pure air cherish the young brood.

And may that prince, the illustrious issue of Anchises and Venus, who this day worships you with offerings of white bulls, reign superior to the warring enemy, but merciful to the prostrate.
