TALES OF THE HALL.

VOL. VI.

B

[The "TALES OF THE HALL" were first published in June 1819, by Mr. Murray, who gave for them, and the copyright of the author's previous works, the sum of three thousand pounds. The reader will find some interesting particulars respecting this purchase, in a letter by Mr. Moore, printed in the first volume of the present collection (pp. 265-6-7.).

These "Tales" occupied Mr. Crabbe during the years 1817 and 1818; and it appears, from a letter to Mrs. Leadbeater, dated 30th October, 1817, that he originally designed to put them forth under another title. — "I know not," he writes, "how to describe the new, and probably (most probably) the last work I shall publish. My friends decided that 'Remembrances' should be the title. Though a village is the scene of meeting between my two principal characters, and gives occasion to other characters and relations in general, yet I no more describe the manners of village inhabitants. My people are of superior classes, though not the most elevated; and, with a few exceptions, are of educated and cultivated minds and habits. I do not know, on a general view, whether my tragic or lighter Tales, &c., are most in number. Of those equally well executed, the tragic will, I suppose, make the greater impression; but I know not that it requires more attention." — The title, under which the Tales eventually appeared, was suggested by Mr. Murray; and the reception of the work was highly favourable. — E.]

TO HER GRACE

THE DUCHESS OF RUTLAND. (1)

MADAM,

IT is the privilege of those who are placed in that elevated situation to which your Grace is an ornament, that they give honour to the person upon whom they confer a favour. When I dedicate to your Grace the fruits of many years, and speak of my debt to the House of Rutland, I feel that I am not without pride in the confession, nor insensible to the honour which such gratitude implies. Forty years have elapsed since this debt commenced. On my entrance into the cares of life, and while contending with its difficulties, a Duke and Duchess of Rutland observed and protected me—in my progress, a Duke and Duchess of Rutland favoured and assisted me—and, when I am retiring from the world, a Duke and Duchess of Rutland receive my thanks, and accept my offering. All, even in this world of mutability, is not change. I have experienced unvaried favour—I have felt undiminished respect.

With the most grateful remembrance of what I owe, and the most sincere conviction of the little I can return, I present these pages to your Grace's acceptance, and beg leave to subscribe myself,

May it please your Grace,

With respect and gratitude,

Your Grace's

Most obedient and devoted servant,

GEORGE CRABBE. (1)

Trowbridge, June, 1819.

(1) [The following is an extract of a letter written by Mr. Crabbe, to the Duke of Rutland, early in 1826:—“ I am always glad of an occasion for repeating my most sincere acknowledgments of the benefits your Grace has conferred upon me : you have given me all I could desire, and more than I could expect ; and though the painful disorder with which I am afflicted allows me but short intervals of relief, and unfits me for many of the enjoyments which I might otherwise take, yet have I, by your Grace's favour, all the comforts that decent circumstances and a respectable situation can afford. There is a subject, upon which I dare not enter, though I have never ceased to think of it— nor, pardon me, My Lord, if I add, to pray to the Giver of all good things, for that consolation, which I trust will be granted.”]

IF I did not fear that it would appear to my readers like arrogance, or if it did not seem to myself indecorous to send three volumes of considerable magnitude from the press without preface or apology, without one petition for the reader's attention, or one plea for the writer's defects, I would most willingly spare myself an address of this kind, and more especially for these reasons: first, because a preface is a part of a book seldom honoured by a reader's perusal; secondly, because it is both difficult and distressing to write that which we think will be disregarded; and thirdly, because I do not conceive that I am called upon for such introductory matter, by any of the motives which usually influence an author when he composes his prefatory address.

When a writer, whether of poetry or prose, first addresses the public, he has generally something to offer which relates to himself or to his work, and which he considers as a necessary prelude to the work itself, to prepare his readers for the entertainment or the instruction they may expect to receive ; for one of these every man who publishes must suppose he affords. This the act itself implies ; and in proportion to his conviction of this fact must be his feeling of the difficulty in which he has placed himself : the difficulty consists in reconciling the implied presumption of the undertaking, whether to please or to instruct mankind, with the diffidence and modesty of an untried candidate for fame or favour. Hence originate the many reasons an author assigns for his appearance in that character, whether they actually exist, or are merely offered to hide the motives which cannot be openly avowed ; namely, the want or the vanity of the man, as his wishes for profit or reputation may most prevail with him.

Now, reasons of this kind, whatever they may be, cannot be availing beyond their first appearance. An author, it is true, may again feel his former apprehensions, may again be elevated or depressed by the suggestions of vanity and diffidence, and may be again subject to the cold and hot fit of aguish expectation ; but he is no more a stranger to the press, nor has the motives or privileges of one who is. With respect to myself, it is certain they belong not to me. Many years have elapsed since I became a candidate for indulgence, as an inexperienced writer ; and to assume the language of such writer now, and to plead for his indulgences, would be proof of my ignorance of the place assigned to me, and the degree of favour which I have experienced; but of that place I am not uninformed, and with that degree of favour I have no reason to be dissatisfied.

It was the remark of the pious, but, on some occasions, the querulous author of the Night Thoughts, that he had ‘been so long remembered, he was forgotten;’ an expression in which there is more appearance of discontent than of submission <sup>(1)</sup>; if he had patience, it was not the patience that smiles at grief. <sup>(2)</sup> It is not, therefore, entirely in the sense of the good Doctor that I apply these words to myself, or to my more early publications. So many years, indeed, have passed since their first appearance, that I have no reason to complain, on that account, if they be now slumbering with other poems of decent reputation in their day—not dead indeed, nor entirely forgotten, but certainly not the subjects of discussion or conversation as when first introduced to the notice of the public, by those whom

(1) [The following is extracted from a letter of Mr. Crabbe's, written in 1817:—“There is, in Dr. Young's life and character, something not easily reconcilable with our respect and veneration. That excessive gloom, with that play of words and that false wit—the dreadful estimate of life, with that perpetual seeking after its emoluments—that strong aspiration after the future enjoyments of the soul, with that cheerful, not to say light, spirit which led him into common and frivolous society—all these have much of that incongruity which the children of infirmity possess, but from which we reasonably expect some to be, in a great measure, free. Young tires in some of the later Nights, I think; but he has fine passages every where.”]

[ —— “She pined in thought;
And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She sat like Patience on a monument,
Smiling at Grief.”—Twelfth Night.]

the public will not forget, whose protection was credit to their author, and whose approbation was fame to them. Still these early publications had so long preceded any other, that, if not altogether unknown, I was, when I came again before the public, in a situation which excused, and perhaps rendered necessary, some explanation; but this also has passed away, and none of my readers will now take the trouble of making any inquiries respecting my motives for writing or for publishing these Tales, or verses of any description. Known to each other as readers and author are known, they will require no preface to bespeak their good will, nor shall I be under the necessity of soliciting the kindness which, experience has taught me, endeavouring to merit, I shall not fail to receive.

There is one motive—and it is a powerful one—which sometimes induces an author, and more particularly a poet, to ask the attention of his readers to his prefatory address. This is when he has some favourite and peculiar style or manner which he would explain and defend, and chiefly if he should have adopted a mode of versification, of which an uninitiated reader was not likely to perceive either the merit or the beauty. In such case it is natural, and surely pardonable, to assert and to prove, as far as reason will bear us on, that such method of writing has both; to show in what the beauty consists, and what peculiar difficulty there is, which, when conquered, creates the merit. How far any particular poet has or has not succeeded in such attempt, is not my business nor my purpose to inquire. I have no peculiar notion to defend, no poetical heterodoxy to support, nor theory of any kind to vindicate or oppose. That which I have used is probably the most common measure in our language ; and therefore, whatever be its advantages or defects, they are too well known to require from me a description of the one, or an apology for the other.

Perhaps still more frequent than any explanation of the work is an account of the author himself, the situation in which he is placed, or some circumstances of peculiar kind in his life, education, or employment. How often has youth been pleaded for deficiencies or redundancies, for the existence of which youth may be an excuse, and yet be none for their exposure. Age, too, has been pleaded for the errors and failings in a work which the octogenarian had the discernment to perceive, and yet had not the fortitude to suppress. Many other circumstances are made apologies for a writer's infirmities ; his much employment, and many avocations, adversity, necessity, and the good of mankind. These, or any of them, however availing in themselves, avail not me. I am neither so young nor so old, so much engaged by one pursuit, or by many,—I am not so urged by want, or so stimulated by a desire of public benefit,—that I can borrow one apology from the many which I have named. How far they prevail with our readers, or with our judges, I cannot tell ; and it is unnecessary for me to inquire into the validity of arguments which I have not to produce.

If there be any combination of circumstances which may be supposed to affect the mind of a reader, and in some degree to influence his judgment, the junction of youth, beauty, and merit in a female writer may be allowed to do this; and yet one of the most forbidding of titles is 'Poems by a very young Lady,' and this although beauty and merit were largely insinuated. Ladies, it is true, have of late little need of any indulgence as authors, and names may readily be found which rather excite the envy of man than plead for his lenity. Our estimation of title, also, in a writer has materially varied from that of our predecessors: 'Poems by a Nobleman' would create a very different sensation in our minds from that which was formerly excited when they were so announced. A noble author had then no pretensions to a seat so secure on the 'sacred hill,' that authors not noble, and critics not gentle, dared not attack; and they delighted to take revenge by their contempt and derision of the poet, for the pain which their submission and respect to the man had cost them. But in our times we find that a nobleman writes, not merely as well, but better than other men; in-somuch that readers in general begin to fancy that the Muses have relinquished their old partiality for rags and a garret, and are become altogether aristocratical in their choice. A conceit so well supported by fact would be readily admitted, did it not appear, at the same time, that there were in the higher ranks of society men, who could write as tamely, or as absurdly, as they had ever been accused of doing. We may, therefore, regard the works of any noble author as extraordinary productions, but must not found any theory upon them; and, notwithstanding their appearance, must look on genius and talent as we are wont to do on time and chance, that happen indifferently to all mankind.

But whatever influence any peculiar situation of a writer might have, it cannot be a benefit to me, who have no such peculiarity. I must rely upon the willingness of my readers to be pleased with that which was designed to give them pleasure, and upon the cordiality which naturally springs from a remembrance of our having before parted without any feelings of disgust on the one side, or of mortification on the other.

With this hope I would conclude the present subject; but I am called upon by duty to acknowledge my obligations, and more especially for two of the following Tales:—The Story of Lady Barbara, in Book XVI. and that of Ellen in Book XVIII. The first of these I owe to the kindness of a fair friend, who will, I hope, accept the thanks which I very gratefully pay, and pardon me if I have not given to her relation the advantages which she had so much reason to expect. The other story, that of Ellen, could I give it in the language of him who related it to me, would please and affect my readers. It is by no means my only debt, though the one I now more particularly acknowledge; for who shall describe all that he gains in the social, the unrestrained, and the frequent conversations with a friend, who is at once communicative and judicious?—whose opinions, on all subjects of literary kind, are founded on good taste, and exquisite feeling? It is one of the greatest ‘pleasures of my memory’ to recall in absence those conversations; and if I do not in direct terms mention with whom I conversed, it is both because I have no permission, and my readers will have no doubt.

The first intention of the poet must be to please; for, if he means to instruct, he must render the instruction which he hopes to convey palatable and pleasant. I will not assume the tone of a moralist, nor promise that my relations shall be beneficial to mankind; but I have endeavoured, not unsuccessfully I trust, that, in whatsoever I have related or described, there should be nothing introduced which has a tendency to excuse the vices of man, by associating with them sentiments that demand our respect, and talents that compel our admiration. There is nothing in these pages which has the mischievous effect of confounding truth and error, or confusing our ideas of right and wrong. (1) I know

(1) [“Crabbe is the most moral of all modern poets; Cowper himself was not more so. He has the cause of religion and virtue on his lips and in his heart. The cause for which he pleads has in him an advocate thoroughly not which is most injurious to the yielding minds of the young, to render virtue less respectable by making its possessors ridiculous, or by describing vice with so many fascinating qualities, that it is sincere and zealous. We know indeed no writer more thoroughly practical. No man, who feels the stirrings of evil within him, can rise from the perusal of such volumes as these, without saying to himself, 'Here is my own individual case: this is the very march of my own feelings and wishes; here is my own precise danger; here I must seek to plant a guard, or this very guilt and misery will be mine.'—JEFFREY.

"In all the poetry of this extraordinary man, we see a constant display of the passions as they are excited and exacerbated by the customs, and laws, and institutions of society. Love, anger, hatred, melancholy, despair, and remorse, in all their infinite modifications, as exhibited by different natures and under different circumstances, are rife throughout all his works; and a perpetual conflict is seen carried on among all the feelings and principles of our nature, that can render that nature happy or miserable. We see love breaking through in desperation, but never with impunity, the barriers of human laws; or in hopelessness dying beneath them, with or without its victim. The stream of life flows over a rugged and precipitous channel in the poetry of Crabbe, and we are rarely indeed allowed to sail down it in a reverie or a dream. The pleasure he excites is almost always a troubled pleasure, and accompanied with tears and sighs, or with the profounder agitation of a sorrow, that springs out of the conviction, forced upon us, of the most imperfect nature, and therefore the most imperfect happiness, of man. Now, if all this were done in the mere pride of genius and power, we should look on Mr. Crabbe in any other light than as the benefactor of his species. But, in the midst of all his skill—all his art—we always see the tenderness of the man's heart; and we hear him with a broken and melancholy voice, mourning over the woe and wickedness, whose picture he has so faithfully drawn. Never in any one instance (and he claims this most boldly in his preface) has he sought to veil or to varnish vice; to confuse our notions of right and wrong; to depreciate moral worth, or exaggerate the value of worldly accomplishments; to cheat us out of our highest sympathies due to defeated or victorious virtue; or to induce us, in blindfolded folly, to bestow them on splendid guilt and dazzling crime. It is his to read aloud to us the records of our own hearts—the book of fate—and he does not close the leaves because too often stained with rueful tears. This world is a world of sin and sorrow; and he thinks, and thinks rightly, that it becomes him who has a gifted sight into its inmost heart, to speak of the triumphs of that sin, and the wretchedness of that sorrow, to beings who are all born to pass under that twofold yoke. We do not believe that a bad, or even an imperfect, moral can be legitimately drawn from the spirit of any of Mr. Crabbe's poetry."—WILSON.]

either lost in the assemblage, or pardoned by the association. Man's heart is sufficiently prone to make excuse for man's infirmity ; and needs not the aid of poetry, or eloquence, to take from vice its native deformity. A character may be respectable with all its faults, but it must not be made respectable by them. It is grievous when genius will condescend to place strong and evil spirits in a commanding view, or excite our pity and admiration for men of talents, degraded by crime, when struggling with misfortune. It is but too true that great and wicked men may be so presented to us as to demand our applause, when they should excite our abhorrence ; but it is surely for the interest of mankind, and our own self-direction, that we should ever keep at unapproachable distance our respect and our reproach.

I have one observation more to offer. It may appear to some that a minister of religion, in the decline of life, should have no leisure for such amusements as these ; and for them I have no reply ; — but to those who are more indulgent to the propensities, the studies, and the habits of mankind, I offer some apology when I produce these volumes, not as the occupations of my life, but the fruits of my leisure, the employment of that time which, if not given to them, had passed in the vacuity of unrecorded idleness ; or had been lost in the indulgence of unregistered thoughts and fancies, that melt away in the instant they are conceived, and 'leave not a wreck behind.'

THE HALL.

(1) [“ The plan of the work—for it has more of plan and unity than any of Mr. Crabbe’s former productions—is abundantly simple. Two brothers, both past middle age, meet together for the first time since their infancy, in the Hall of their native parish, which the elder and richer had purchased as a place of retirement for his declining age; and there tell each other their own history, and then that of their guests, neighbours, and acquaintances. The senior is much the richer, and a bachelor—having been a little distasted with the sex by the unlucky result of a very extravagant passion. He is, moreover, rather too reserved, and somewhat Toryish, though with an excellent heart and a powerful understanding. The younger is very sensible also, but more open, social, and talkative; a happy husband and father, with a tendency to Whiggism, and some notion of reform, and a disposition to think well both of men and women. The visit lasts two or three weeks in autumn; and the Tales are told in the after dinner têtes-à-têtes that take place in that time between the worthy brothers over their bottle.

“ The married man, however, wearies at length for his wife and children; and his brother lets him go with more coldness than he had expected. He goes with him a stage on the way; and, inviting him to turn aside a little to look at a new purchase he had made of a sweet farm with a neat mansion, he finds his wife and children comfortably settled there, and all ready to receive them; and speedily discovers that he is, by his brother’s bounty, the proprietor of a fair domain within a morning’s ride of the Hall, where they may discuss politics, and tell tales any afternoon they may think proper.”—Edinburgh Review, 1819.]

BOOK I.

THE HALL.

THE Brothers met, who many a year had past
 Since their last meeting, and that seem'd their last ;
 They had no parent then or common friend
 Who might their hearts to mutual kindness bend :
 Who, touching both in their divided state,
 Might generous thoughts and warm desires create ;
 For there are minds whom we must first excite
 And urge to feeling, ere they can unite :
 As we may hard and stubborn metals beat
 And blend together, if we duly heat.

The elder, George, had past his threescore years,
 A busy actor, sway'd by hopes and fears
 Of powerful kind : and he had fill'd the parts
 That try our strength and agitate our hearts.
 He married not, and yet he well approved
 The social state ; but then he rashly loved ;

Gave to a strong delusion all his youth,
Led by a vision till alarm'd by truth :
That vision past, and of that truth possest,
His passions wearied and disposed to rest,
George yet had will and power a place to choose,
Where Hope might sleep, and terminate her views.

He chose his native village, and the hill
He climb'd a boy had its attraction still ;
With that small brook beneath, where he would stand
And stooping fill the hollow of his hand
To quench th' impatient thirst — then stop awhile
To see the sun upon the waters smile,
In that sweet weariness, when, long denied,
We drink and view the fountain that supplied
The sparkling bliss — and feel, if not express,
Our perfect ease in that sweet weariness.

The oaks yet flourish'd in that fertile ground,
Where still the church with lofty tower was found ;
And still that Hall, a first, a favourite view,
But not the elms that form'd its avenue ;
They fell ere George arrived, or yet had stood,
For he in reverence held the living wood,
That widely spreads in earth the deepening root,
And lifts to heaven the still aspiring shoot ;
From age to age they fill'd a growing space,
But hid the mansion they were meant to grace.

It was an ancient, venerable Hall,
And once surrounded by a moat and wall ;

A part was added by a squire of taste,
Who, while unvalued acres ran to waste,
Made spacious rooms, whence he could look about,
And mark improvements as they rose without :
He fill'd the moat, he took the wall away,
He thinn'd the park, and bade the view be gay :
The scene was rich, but he who should behold
Its worth was poor, and so the whole was sold.

Just then the Merchant from his desk retired,
And made the purchase that his heart desired ;
The Hall of Binning, his delight a boy,
That gave his fancy in her flight employ ;
Here, from his father's modest home, he gazed,
Its grandeur charm'd him, and its height amazed :
Work of past ages ; and the brick-built place
Where he resided was in much disgrace ;
But never in his fancy's proudest dream
Did he the master of that mansion seem :
Young was he then, and little did he know
What years on care and diligence bestow ;
Now young no more, retired to views well known,
He finds that object of his awe his own :
The Hall at Binning ! — how he loves the gloom
That sun-excluding window gives the room ;
Those broad brown stairs on which he loves to tread ;
Those beams within ; without, that length of lead,
On which the names of wanton boys appear,
Who died old men, and left memorials here,
Carvings of feet and hands, and knots and flowers,
The fruits of busy minds in idle hours !

Here, while our squire the modern part possess'd,
His partial eye upon the old would rest ;
That best his comforts gave—this sooth'd his feelings best.

Here day by day, withdrawn from busy life,
No child t' awake him, to engage no wife,
When friends were absent, not to books inclined,
He found a sadness steal upon his mind ;
Sighing, the works of former lords to see,
“ I follow them,” he cried, “ but who will follow me ? ”

Some ancient men whom he a boy had known
He knew again, their changes were his own ;
Comparing now he view'd them, and he felt
That time with him in lenient mood had dealt :
While some the half-distinguish'd features bore
That he was doubtful if he saw before, [more.
And some in memory lived, whom he must see no

Here George had found, yet scarcely hoped to find,
Companions meet, minds fitted to his mind ;
Here, late and loth, the worthy Rector came,
From College dinners and a Fellow's fame ;
Yet, here when fix'd, was happy to behold
So near a neighbour in a friend so old :
Boys on one form they parted, now to meet
In equal state, their Worships on one seat.

Here were a Sister-pair, who seem'd to live
With more respect than affluence can give ;

Although not affluent, they, by nature graced,
Had sense and virtue, dignity and taste ;
Their minds by sorrows, by misfortunes tried,
Were vex'd and heal'd, were pain'd and purified.

Hither a sage Physician came, and plann'd,
With books his guides, improvements on his land ;
Nor less to mind than matter would he give
His noble thoughts, to know how spirits live,
And what is spirit ; him his friends advised
To think with fear, but caution he despised,
And hints of fear provoked him till he dared
Beyond himself, nor bold assertion spared,
But fiercely spoke, like those who strongly feel,
“ Priests and their craft, enthusiasts and their zeal.”

More yet appear'd, of whom as we proceed—
Ah ! yield not yet to languor—you shall read.

But ere the events that from this meeting rose,
Be they of pain or pleasure, we disclose,
It is of custom, doubtless is of use,
That we our heroes first should introduce.

Come, then, fair Truth ! and let me clearly see
The minds I paint, as they are seen in thee ;
To me their merits and their faults impart ;
Give me to say, “ frail being ! such thou art,”
And closely let me view the naked human heart.

George loved to think ; but as he late began
To muse on all the grander thoughts of man,

He took a solemn and a serious view
Of his religion, and he found it true ;
Firmly, yet meekly, he his mind applied
To this great subject, and was satisfied.

He then proceeded, not so much intent,
But still in earnest, and to church he went :
Although they found some difference in their creed,
He and his pastor cordially agreed ;
Convinced that they who would the truth obtain
By disputation, find their efforts vain ; (1)
The church he view'd as liberal minds will view,
And there he fix'd his principles and pew.

He saw, he thought he saw, how Weakness, Pride,
And Habit, draw seceding crowds aside :
Weakness that loves on trifling points to dwell,
Pride that at first from Heaven's own worship fell,
And Habit, going where it went before,
Or to the meeting or the tavern door.

George loved the cause of freedom, but reproved
All who with wild and boyish ardour loved ;

(1) [“ Thousands and tens of thousands of sincere and earnest believers in the Gospel of our Lord, and in the general contents of Scripture, seeking its meaning with veneration and prayer, agree, I cannot doubt, in essentials, but differ in many points, and in some which unwise and uncharitable persons deem of much importance ; nay, think that there is no salvation without them. Look at the good — good, comparatively speaking — just, pure, pious — the patient and suffering amongst recorded characters ; — and were not they of different opinions in many articles of their faith ? and can we suppose their heavenly Father will select from this number a few, a very few ; and that for their assent to certain tenets, which causes, independent of any merit of their own, in all probability, led them to embrace ? ” — CRABBE'S Letters.]

Those who believed they never could be free,
 Except when fighting for their liberty ;
 Who by their very clamour and complaint
 Invite coercion or enforce restraint :
 He thought a trust so great, so good a cause,
 Was only to be kept by guarding laws ;
 For public blessings firmly to secure,
 We must a lessening of the good endure.
 The public waters are to none denied —
 All drink the stream, but only few must guide ;
 There must be reservoirs to hold supply,
 And channels form'd to send the blessing by ;
 The public good must be a private care,
 None all they would may have, but all a share :
 So we must freedom with restraint enjoy,
 What crowds possess they will, uncheck'd, destroy ;
 And hence, that freedom may to all be dealt,
 Guards must be fix'd, and safety must be felt.
 So thought our squire, nor wished the guards t' appear
 So strong, that safety might be bought too dear ;
 The Constitution was the ark that he
 Join'd to support with zeal and sanctity,
 Nor would expose it, as th' accursed son
 His father's weakness, to be gazed upon. (1)

I for that Freedom make, said he, my prayer,
 That suits with all, like atmospheric air ;
 That is to mortal man by heaven assign'd,
 Who cannot bear a pure and perfect kind :

(1) Genesis, ch. ix. ver. 25.

The lighter gas, that, taken in the frame,
The spirit heats, and sets the blood in flame,
Such is the freedom which when men approve,
They know not what a dangerous thing they love. (1)

George chose the company of men of sense,
But could with wit in moderate share dispense;
He wish'd in social ease his friends to meet,
When still he thought the female accent sweet;
Well from the ancient, better from the young,
He loved the lispings of the mother tongue.

He ate and drank, as much as men who think
Of life's best pleasures, ought to eat or drink;
Men purely temperate might have taken less,
But still he loved indulgence, not excess;
Nor would alone the grants of Fortune taste,
But shared the wealth he judged it crime to waste,
And thus obtain'd the sure reward of care;
For none can spend like him who learns to spare.

(1) ["With respect to the parties themselves, Whig and Tory, I can but think, two dispassionate, sensible men, who have seen, read, and observed, will approximate in their sentiments more and more; and if they confer together, and argue,—not to convince each other, but for pure information, and with a simple desire for the truth,—the ultimate difference will be small indeed. The Tory, for instance, would allow that, but for the Revolution in this country, and the noble stand against the arbitrary steps of the house of Stuart, the kingdom would have been in danger of becoming what France once was; and the Whig must also grant, that there is at least an equal danger in an unsettled, undefined democracy; the ever-changing laws of a popular government. Every state is, at times, on the inclination to change: either the monarchical or the popular interest will predominate; and in the former case, I conceive, the well-meaning Tory will incline to Whiggism,—in the latter, the honest Whig will take the part of declining monarchy."—CRABBE'S Letters.]

Time, thought, and trouble made the man appear—
By nature shrewd—sarcastic and severe ;
Still he was one whom those who fully knew
Esteem'd and trusted, one correct and true ;
All on his word with surety might depend,
Kind as a man, and faithful as a friend :
But him the many know not, knew not cause
In their new squire for censure or applause ;
Ask them, “ Who dwelt within that lofty wall ? ”
And they would say, “ the gentleman was tall ;
“ Look'd old when follow'd, but alert when met,
“ And had some vigour in his movements yet ;
“ He stoops, but not as one infirm ; and wears
“ Dress that becomes his station and his years.”

Such was the man who from the world return'd,
Nor friend nor foe ; he prized it not, nor spurn'd ;
But came and sat him in his village down,
Safe from its smile, and careless of its frown :
He, fairly looking into life's account,
Saw frowns and favours were of like amount ;
And viewing all — his perils, prospects, purse,
He said, “ Content ! 't is well it is no worse.”

Through ways more rough had fortune Richard led,
The world he traversed was the book he read ;
Hence clashing notions and opinions strange
Lodged in his mind ; all liable to change.
By nature generous, open, daring, free,
The vice he hated was hypocrisy ;
Religious notions, in her latter years,
His mother gave, admonish'd by her fears ;

To these he added, as he chanced to read
 A pious work or learn a Christian creed :
 He heard the preacher by the highway side,
 The church's teacher and the meeting's guide ;
 And mixing all their matters in his brain,
 Distill'd a something he could ill explain ;
 But still it served him for his daily use,
 And kept his lively passions from abuse ;
 For he believed, and held in reverence high,
 The truth so dear to man—“ not all shall die.”<sup>(1)</sup>
 The minor portions of his creed hung loose,
 For time to shapen and a whole produce :
 This Love effected, and a favourite maid,
 With clearer views, his honest flame repaid ;
 Hers was the thought correct, the hope sublime,
 She shaped his creed, and did the work of time.<sup>(2)</sup>

He spake of freedom as a nation's cause,
 And loved, like George, our liberty and laws ;
 But had more youthful ardour to be free,
 And stronger fears for injured liberty :
 With him, on various questions that arose,
 The monarch's servants were the people's foes ;

(1) [“ Non omnis moriar, multaque pars mei
 Vitabit Libitinam.”—HOR.]

(2) [“ Mr. Crabbe remained at Woodbridge from 1770 to 1775 ; and while here he formed an attachment to Miss Sarah Elmy, the niece of a wealthy yeoman in the neighbouring village of Parham, an amiable and beautiful girl, who returned his affection, and after a lapse of twelve troubled years became his wife. This virtuous attachment appears to have had the strongest and most beneficial influence on his mind and manners, and consequently on his fortunes. It sustained him through miseries such as few young literary adventurers have ever gone through—it purified his feelings—fixed and enlarged his heart—and inspired his first poetry.”—Quarterly Review, Jan. 1834.]

And though he fought with all a Briton's zeal,
He felt for France as Freedom's children feel ;
Went far with her in what she thought reform,
And hail'd the revolutionary storm ;
Yet would not here, where there was least to win,
And most to lose, the doubtful work begin ;
But look'd on change with some religious fear,
And cried, with filial dread, " Ah ! come not here."

His friends he did not as the thoughtful choose,
Long to deliberate was, he judged, to lose :
Frankly he join'd the free, nor suffer'd pride
Or doubt to part them, whom their fate allied ;
Men with such minds at once each other aid,
" Frankness," they cry, " with frankness is repaid ;
" If honest, why suspect ? if poor, of what afraid ?
" Wealth's timid votaries may with caution move,
" Be it our wisdom to confide and love."

So pleasures came, (not purchased first or plann'd)
But the chance pleasures that the poor command ;
They came but seldom, they remain'd not long,
Nor gave him time to question " are they wrong ?"
These he enjoy'd, and left to after time
To judge the folly or decide the crime ;
Sure had he been, he had perhaps been pure
From this reproach — but Richard was not sure —
Yet from the sordid vice, the mean, the base,
He stood aloof — death frown'd not like disgrace.

With handsome figure, and with manly air,
He pleased the sex, who all to him were fair ;

With filial love he look'd on forms decay'd,
 And Admiration's debt to Beauty paid ;
 On sea or land, wherever Richard went,
 He felt affection, and he found content ;
 There was in him a strong presiding hope
 In Fortune's tempests, and it bore him up :
 But when that mystic vine his mansion graced,
 When numerous branches round his board were placed,

When sighs of apprehensive love were heard,
 Then first the spirit of the hero fear'd ;
 Then he reflected on the father's part,
 And all a husband's sorrow touch'd his heart ;
 Then thought he, " Who will their assistance lend ?

" And be the children's guide, the parent's friend ?

" Who shall their guardian, their protector be ?

" I have a brother — Well ! — and so has he."

And now they met: a message—kind, 'tis true,
 But verbal only—ask'd an interview ;

And many a mile, perplex'd by doubt and fear,
 Had Richard past, unwilling to appear—

" How shall I now my unknown way explore,

" He proud and rich — I very proud and poor ?

" Perhaps my friend a dubious speech mistook,

" And George may meet me with a stranger's look ;

" Then to my home when I return again,

" How shall I bear this business to explain,

" And tell of hopes raised high, and feelings hurt, in vain ?

“ How stands the case ? My brother’s friend and mine
“ Met at an inn, and sat them down to dine :
“ When having settled all their own affairs,
“ And kindly canvass’d such as were not theirs,
“ Just as my friend was going to retire,
“ ‘ Stay ! — you will see the brother of our squire,’
“ Said his companion ; ‘ be his friend, and tell
“ ‘ The captain that his brother loves him well,
“ ‘ And when he has no better thing in view,
“ ‘ Will be rejoiced to see him — Now, adieu !’

“ Well ! here I am ; and, Brother, take you heed,
“ I am not come to flatter you and feed ;
“ You shall no soother, fawner, hearer find,
“ I will not brush your coat, nor smooth your mind ;
“ I will not hear your tales the whole day long,
“ Nor swear you’re right if I believe you wrong :
“ Nor be a witness of the facts you state,
“ Nor as my own adopt your love or hate :
“ I will not earn my dinner when I dine,
“ By taking all your sentiments for mine ;
“ Nor watch the guiding motions of your eye,
“ Before I venture question or reply ;
“ Nor when you speak affect an awe profound,
“ Sinking my voice, as if I fear’d the sound ;
“ Nor to your looks obediently attend,
“ The poor, the humble, the dependant friend :
“ Yet son of that dear mother could I meet —
“ But lo ! the mansion — ’tis a fine old seat !”

The Brothers met, with both too much at heart
To be observant of each other's part ;
“ Brother, I 'm glad,” was all that George could say,
Then stretch'd his hand, and turn'd his head away ;
For he in tender tears had no delight,
But scorn'd the thought, and ridiculed the sight ;
Yet now with pleasure, though with some surprise,
He felt his heart o'erflowing at his eyes.

Richard, mean time, made some attempts to speak,
Strong in his purpose, in his trial weak ;
We cannot nature by our wishes rule,
Nor at our will her warm emotions cool : —
At length affection, like a risen tide,
Stood still, and then seem'd slowly to subside ;
Each on the other's looks had power to dwell,
And Brother Brother greeted passing well. (1)

(1) [“ The characters of the two brothers are admirably delineated ; the elder being a grave, and somewhat formal bachelor, with most of the peculiarities of that class of men — but sensitive, affectionate, and thoughtful ; the younger a generous seaman, who, having long buffeted with fortune, and learned many fine virtues in the school of adversity, had rather improvidentially but happily married ; and had visited his rich brother with many misgivings of mind and doubts of brotherly reception. There is great tenderness and beauty in all that relates to the affection of these brothers, and the contrast of their characters is throughout admirably sustained. All they have to tell of each other is new, and, consequently, all their relations are given with earnestness and vivacity. Mr. Crabbe lets us in at once to their characters ; and, loving the men, we listen with the eager attention of friends to the varied story of their lives.” — WILSON.]

BOOK II.

THE BROTHERS.

AT length the Brothers met, no longer tried
 By those strong feelings that in time subside ;
 Not fluent yet their language, but the eye
 And action spoke both question and reply ;
 Till the heart rested, and could calmly feel,
 Till the shook compass felt the settling steel ;
 Till playful smiles on graver converse broke,
 And either speaker less abruptly spoke :
 Still was there oftentimes silence, silence blest,
 Expressive (1), thoughtful — their emotions' rest ;
 Pauses that came not from a want of thought,
 But want of ease, by wearied passion sought ;
 For souls, when hurried by such powerful force,
 Rest, and retrace the pleasure of the course,

(1) [“ Come then, expressive Silence! muse His praise.” — THOMSON.]

They differ'd much ; yet might observers trace
 Likeness of features both in mind and face ; (1)
 Pride they possess'd, that neither strove to hide,
 But not offensive, not obtrusive pride :
 Unlike had been their life, unlike the fruits,
 Of different tempers, studies, and pursuits ;
 Nay, in such varying scenes the men had moved,
 'T was passing strange that aught alike they loved :
 But all distinction now was thrown apart,
 While these strong feelings ruled in either heart.

As various colours in a painted ball,
 While it has rest, are seen distinctly all ;
 Till, whirl'd around by some exterior force,
 They all are blended in the rapid course : (2)
 So in repose, and not by passion sway'd,
 We saw the difference by their habits made ;
 But, tried by strong emotions, they became
 Fill'd with one love, and were in heart the same ;
 Joy to the face its own expression sent,
 And gave a likeness in the looks it lent.

(1) [Original MS. : —

“ Yet with this difference might observers find
 Some kindred powers and features of the mind.
 A love of honour in both spirits ruled,
 But here by temper, there by trouble cool'd ;
 Their favourite objects, studies, themes, pursuits,
 Had various beauties, merits, ends, and fruits.”]

(2) [“ Crabbe's similes are almost all elaborate and ingenious ; and rather seem to be furnished from the effects of a fanciful mind, than to be exhaled by the spontaneous ferment of a heated imagination.”— Edinburgh Review. — Mr. Crabbe was much struck with the sagacity of this remark. On reading it, he said, “ Jeffrey is quite right : my usual method has been to think of such illustrations, and insert them after finishing a tale.”]

All now was sober certainty ; the joy
 That no strong passions swell till they destroy :
 For they, like wine, our pleasures raise so high,
 That they subdue our strength, and then they die.
 George in his brother felt a growing pride,
 He wonder'd who that fertile mind supplied—
 “ Where could the wanderer gather on his road
 “ Knowledge so various? how the mind this food?
 “ No college train'd him, guideless through his life,
 “ Without a friend—not so! he has a wife.
 “ Ah! had I married, I might now have seen
 “ My——No! it never, never could have been :
 “ That long enchantment, that pernicious state!—
 “ True, I recover'd, but alas! too late—
 “ And here is Richard, poor indeed—but—nay!
 “ This is self-torment—foolish thoughts, away!”

Ease leads to habit, as success to ease,
 He lives by rule who lives himself to please ;
 For change is trouble, and a man of wealth
 Consults his quiet as he guards his health ;
 And habit now on George had sovereign power,
 His actions all had their accustom'd hour :
 At the fix'd time he slept, he walk'd, he read,
 Or sought his grounds, his gruel, and his bed ;
 For every season he with caution dress'd,
 And morn and eve had the appropriate vest ;
 He talk'd of early mists, and night's cold air,
 And in one spot was fix'd his worship's chair.
 But not a custom yet on Richard's mind
 Had force, or him to certain modes confined ;

To him no joy such frequent visits paid,
 That habit by its beaten track was made : (1)
 He was not one who at his ease could say,
 “ We ’ll live to-morrow as we lived to-day ; ”
 But he and his were as the ravens fed,
 As the day came it brought the daily bread.

George, born to fortune, though of moderate kind,
 Was not in haste his road through life to find :
 His father early lost, his mother tried
 To live without him, liked it not, and—sigh’d,
 When, for her widow’d hand, an amorous youth applied :

She still was young, and felt that she could share
 A lover’s passion, and a husband’s care ;
 Yet past twelve years before her son was told,
 To his surprise, “ Your father you behold.”
 But he beheld not with his mother’s eye
 The new relation, and would not comply ;
 But all obedience, all connexion spurn’d,
 And fled their home, where he no more return’d.

His father’s brother was a man whose mind
 Was to his business and his bank confined ;
 His guardian care the captious nephew sought,
 And was received, caress’d, advised, and taught.

(1) [MS. : —

“ Joel nor time nor seasons could command,
 He took his comforts as they came to hand ;
 Nor came they often, nor delay’d so long,
 That they were habits either weak or strong ;
 What seem’d habitual was the urgent force
 Of stern necessity that shaped his course.”]

“ That Irish beggar, whom your mother took, “ Does you this good, he sends you to your book ;
“ Yet love not books beyond their proper worth,
“ But when they fit you for the world, go forth :
“ They are like beauties, and may blessings prove,
“ When we with caution study them, or love ;
“ But when to either we our souls devote,
“ We grow unfitted for that world, and dote.”

George to a school of higher class was sent,
But he was ever grieving that he went :
A still, retiring, musing, dreaming boy,
He relish'd not their sudden bursts of joy ;
Nor the tumultuous pleasures of a rude,
A noisy, careless, fearless multitude :
He had his own delights, as one who flies
From every pleasure that a crowd supplies :
Thrice he return'd, but then was weary grown,
And was indulged with studies of his own.
Still could the Rector and his Friend relate
The small adventures of that distant date ;
And Richard listen'd as they spake of time
Past in that world of misery and crime.

Freed from his school, a priest of gentle kind
The uncle found to guide the nephew's mind ;
Pleased with his teacher, George so long remain'd,
The mind was weaken'd by the store it gain'd.

His guardian uncle, then on foreign ground,
No time to think of his improvements found ;

Nor had the nephew, now to manhood grown,
Talents or taste for trade or commerce shown,
But shunn'd a world of which he little knew,
Nor of that little did he like the view.

His mother chose, nor I the choice upbraid,
An Irish soldier of a house decay'd,
And passing poor, but precious in her eyes
As she in his; they both obtain'd a prize.
To do the captain justice, she might share
What of her jointure his affairs could spare:
Irish he was in his profusion — true,
But he was Irish in affection too;
And though he spent her wealth and made her grieve,
He always said “ my dear,” and “ with your leave.”
Him she survived: she saw his boy possess'd
Of manly spirit, and then sank to rest.

Her sons thus left, some legal cause required
That they should meet, but neither this desired:
George, a recluse, with mind engaged, was one
Who did no business, with whom none was done;
Whose heart, engross'd by its peculiar care,
Shared no one's counsel — no one his might share.

Richard, a boy, a lively boy, was told
Of his half-brother, haughty, stern, and cold;
And his boy folly, or his manly pride,
Made him on measures cool and harsh decide:
So, when they met, a distant cold salute
Was of a long-expected day the fruit;

The rest by proxies managed, each withdrew,
Vex'd by the business and the brother too :
But now they met when time had calm'd the mind,
Both wish'd for kindness, and it made them kind :
George had no wife or child, and was disposed
To love the man on whom his hope reposed :
Richard had both ; and those so well beloved,
Husband and father were to kindness moved ;
And thus th' affections check'd, subdued, restrain'd,
Rose in their force, and in their fulness reign'd.

The bell now bids to dine : the friendly priest,
Social and shrewd, the day's delight increased :
Brief and abrupt their speeches while they dined,
Nor were their themes of intellectual kind ;
Nor, dinner past, did they to these advance,
But left the subjects they discuss'd to chance.

Richard, whose boyhood in the place was spent,
Profound attention to the speakers lent,
Who spake of men ; and, as he heard a name,
Actors and actions to his memory came ; <sup>(1)</sup>
Then, too, the scenes he could distinctly trace,
Here he had fought, and there had gain'd a race ;
In that church-walk he had affrighted been,
In that old tower he had a something seen ;

(1) [The following is from a letter by one of the Poet's family : " In the idea of one brother relating to another various particulars of his neighbours, I can recall the pleasure and interest, which my father himself evidently felt, in our visits to Aldborough, as his sister related to him the proceedings of those whom he had known in his youth — when, after a delightful day of fuci hunting, we all met over a light supper of delicate fish, then planned some amusement for the morrow, and then sank to sleep, within two hundred yards of the breakers, soothed by the deep, hollow roar, now loud and near, then rolling along the shore like distant thunder." ]

What time, dismiss'd from school, he upward cast
A fearful look, and trembled as he past.

No private tutor Richard's parents sought,
Made keen by hardship, and by trouble taught :
They might have sent him — some the counsel gave —
Seven gloomy winters of the North to brave,
Where a few pounds would pay for board and bed,
While the poor frozen boy was taught and fed ;
When, say he lives, fair freckled, lank and lean,
The lad returns shrewd, subtle, close and keen ;
With all the northern virtues, and the rules
Taught to the thrifty in these thriving schools :
There had he gone, and borne this trying part,
But Richard's mother had a mother's heart.

Now squire and rector were return'd to school,
And spoke of him who there had sovereign rule :
He was, it seem'd, a tyrant of the sort
Who make the cries of tortured boys his sport ;
One of a race, if not extinguish'd, tamed,
The flogger now is of the act ashamed ;
But this great mind all mercy's calls withstood,
This Holofernes <sup>(1)</sup> was a man of blood.

“ Students,” he said, “ like horses on the road,
“ Must well be lash'd before they take the load ;

(1) [See Love's Labour Lost, act. iv. sc. 2. Dr. Warburton says, “ that by Holofernes was designed a particular character, a pedant and a school-master, in Shakspeare's time, one John Florio, a teacher of the Italian language.” In 1578, Florio published a work called “ First Fruits, which yielde familiar speech, merrie proverbes, wittie sentences, and golden sayings :” he also translated Montaigne's Essays. He died in 1625.]

“ They may be willing for a time to run,
“ But you must whip them ere the work be done :
“ To tell a boy, that, if he will improve,
“ His friends will praise him, and his parents love,
“ Is doing nothing — he has not a doubt
“ But they will love him, nay applaud, without :
“ Let no fond sire a boy’s ambition trust,
“ To make him study, let him see he must.”
Such his opinion ; and to prove it true,
At least sincere, it was his practice too :
Pluto they call’d him, and they named him well,
’T was not a heaven where he was pleased to dwell :
From him a smile was like the Greenland sun,
Surprising, nay portentous, when it shone ;
Or like the lightning, for the sudden flash
Prepared the children for the thunder’s crash.

O ! had Narcissa, when she fondly kiss’d
The weeping boy whom she to school dismiss’d,
Had she beheld him shrinking from the arm
Uplifted high to do the greater harm,
Then seen her darling stript, and that pure white,
And — O ! her soul had fainted at the sight ;
And with those looks that love could not withstand,
She would have cried, “ Barbarian, hold thy hand ! ”
In vain ! no grief to this stern soul could speak,
No iron-tear roll down this Pluto’s cheek.

Thus far they went, half earnest, half in jest,
Then turn’d to themes of deeper interest ;
While Richard’s mind, that for awhile had stray’d,
Call’d home its powers, and due attention paid.

BOOK III.

BOYS AT SCHOOL.

WE name the world a school, for day by day
 We something learn, till we are call'd away ;
 The school we name a world, — for vice and pain,
 Fraud and contention, there begin to reign ;
 And much, in fact, this lesser world can show
 Of grief and crime that in the greater grow.
 “ You saw,” said George, “ in that still-hated school
 “ How the meek suffer, how the haughty rule ;
 “ There soft, ingenuous, gentle minds endure
 “ Ills that ease, time, and friendship fail to cure :
 “ There the best hearts, and those who shrink from sin,
 “ Find some seducing imp to draw them in ; (1)

(1) [MS. :—

“ Oh ! there 's a wicked little world in schools,
 Where mischief suffers and oppression rules ;
 Where mild, quiescent children oft endure
 What a long placid life shall fail to cure ;
 Where virtuous boys, who shrink from early sin,
 Meet guilty rogues, who love to draw them in,
 Who take a pleasure at their just surprise,
 Who make them wicked, and proclaim them wise.”]

“ Who takes infernal pleasure to impart
 “ The strongest poison to the purest heart.
 “ Call to your mind this scene — Yon boy behold :
 “ How hot the vengeance of a heart so cold !
 “ See how he beats, whom he had just reviled
 “ And made rebellious — that imploring child :
 “ How fierce his eye, how merciless his blows,
 “ And how his anger on his insult grows ;
 “ You saw this Hector and his patient slave,
 “ Th’ insulting speech, the cruel blows he gave. (1)

“ Mix’d with mankind, his interest in his sight,
 “ We found this Nimrod civil and polite,
 “ There was no triumph in his manner seen,
 “ He was so humble you might think him mean,
 “ Those angry passions slept till he attain’d
 “ His purpos’d wealth, and waked when that was gain’d ;
 “ He then resumed the native wrath and pride,
 “ The more indulg’d, as longer laid aside ;
 “ Wife, children, servants, all obedience pay,
 “ The slaves at school no greater slaves than they.

(1) [MS. : —

“ Behold him now, without the least pretence
 To such command — behold him five years hence ;
 Mix’d in the world, his interest in his sight,
 How smooth he looks, his language how polite,
 No signs of anger, insult, scorn are seen ;
 The address is mild, the temper is serene ;
 His fiery passions are resign’d and still,
 They yield to reason, or obey his will.
 But are they dead ? — Not so : should he attain
 The wish’d-for fortune, they will live again ;
 Then shall the Tyrant be once more obey’d,
 And all be Fags, whom he can make afraid.”]

“ No more dependent, he resumes the rein,
 “ And shows the school-boy turbulence again.
 “ Were I a poet, I would say, he brings
 “ To recollection some impetuous springs :
 “ See ! one that issues from its humble source,
 “ To gain new powers, and run its noisy course ;
 “ Frothy and fierce among the rocks it goes,
 “ And threatens all that bound it or oppose :
 “ Till wider grown, and finding large increase,
 “ Though bounded still, it moves along in peace ;
 “ And as its waters to the ocean glide,
 “ They bear a busy people on its tide ;
 “ But there arrived, and from its channel free,
 “ Those swelling waters meet the mighty sea ;
 “ With threat’ning force the new-form’d billows swell,
 “ And now affright the crowd they bore so well.”

“ Yet,” said the Rector, “ all these early signs
 “ Of vice are lost, and vice itself declines ;
 “ Religion counsels ; troubles — sorrows — rise,
 “ And the vile spirit in the conflict dies.

“ Sir Hector Blane, the champion of the school,
 “ Was very blockhead, but was form’d for rule :
 “ Learn he could not ; he said he could not learn,
 “ But he profess’d it gave him no concern :
 “ Books were his horror, dinner his delight,
 “ And his amusement to shake hands and fight ;
 “ Argue he could not, but in case of doubt,
 “ Or disputation, fairly box’d it out :

“ This was his logic, and his arm so strong,
“ His cause prevail’d, and he was never wrong :
“ But so obtuse — you must have seen his look,
“ Desponding, angry, puzzled o’er his book.

“ Can you not see him on the morn that proved
“ His skill in figures ? Pluto’s self was moved —
“ ‘ Come, six times five ? ’ th’ impatient teacher cried ;
“ In vain, the pupil shut his eyes, and sigh’d.
“ ‘ Try, six times count your fingers ; how he stands ! —
“ ‘ Your fingers, idiot ! ’ — ‘ What, of both my hands ? ’

“ With parts like these, his father felt assured,
“ In busy times, a ship might be procured ;
“ He too was pleased to be so early freed,
“ He now could fight, and he in time might read.
“ So he has fought, and in his country’s cause
“ Has gain’d him glory, and our hearts’ applause.
“ No more the blustering boy a school defies,
“ We see the hero from the tyrant rise, [dies.”
“ And in the captain’s worth the student’s dulness

“ Be all allow’d,” replied the Squire ; “ I give “ Praise to his actions ; may their glory live !
“ Nay, I will hear him in his riper age “ Fight his good ship, and with the foe engage :
“ Nor will I quit him when the cowards fly,
“ Although, like them, I dread his energy.

“ But still, my friend, that ancient spirit reigns,
“ His powers support the credit of his brains,

“ Insisting ever that he must be right,
 “ And for his reasons still prepared to fight.
 “ Let him a judge of England’s prowess be,
 “ And all her floating terrors on the sea ;
 “ But this contents not, this is not denied,
 “ He claims a right on all things to decide ;
 “ A kind of patent-wisdom, and he cries,
 “ ‘ ’T is so ! ’ and bold the hero that denies. (1)
 “ Thus the boy-spirit still the bosom rules,
 “ And the world’s maxims were at first the school’s.”

“ No doubt,” said Jacques, “ there are in minds the seeds
 “ Of good and ill, the virtues and the weeds ;
 “ But is it not of study the intent
 “ This growth of evil nature to prevent ?
 “ To check the progress of each idle shoot
 “ That might retard the ripening of the fruit ?

“ Our purpose certain ! and we much effect,
 “ We something cure, and something we correct ;
 “ But do your utmost, when the man you see,
 “ You find him what you saw the boy would be —
 “ Disguised a little — but we still behold
 “ What pleased and what offended us of old.

(1) [MS. — V. R. —

“ But when he sits in judgment, and decrees
 What men should rule us, and what books should please,
 And thus the merit of a critic gains,
 Only for blowing out a Frenchman’s brains,
 I must demur, and in my mind retrace
 The accountant Hector, and his rueful face ;
 But on he blunders ! thinking he is wise,
 Who has much strength, no matter where it lies.”]

“ Years from the mind no native stain remove,
“ But lay the varnish of the world above.
“ Still, when he can, he loves to step aside,
“ And be the boy without a check or guide ;
“ In the old wanderings he with pleasure strays,
“ And reassumes the bliss of earlier days.

“ I left at school the boy with pensive look,
“ Whom some great patron order'd to his book,
“ Who from his mother's cot reluctant came,
“ And gave my lord, for this compassion, fame ;
“ Who, told of all his patron's merit, sigh'd,
“ I know not why, in sorrow or in pride ;
“ And would, with vex'd and troubled spirit, cry,
“ ‘ I am not happy ; let your envy die.’
“ Him left I with you ; who, perhaps, can tell
“ If Fortune blest him, or what fate befell :
“ I yet remember how the idlers ran
“ To see the carriage of the godlike man,
“ When pride restrain'd me ; yet I thought the deed
“ Was noble, too, — and how did it succeed ? ”

Jacques answer'd not till he had backward cast
His view, and dwelt upon the evil past ;
Then, as he sigh'd, he smiled ; — from folly rise
Such smiles, and misery will create such sighs.
And Richard now from his abstraction broke,
Listening attentive as the Rector spoke.

“ This noble lord was one disposed to try
 “ And weigh the worth of each new luxury ;
 “ Now, at a certain time, in pleasant mood,
 “ He tried the luxury of doing good ;
 “ For this he chose a widow’s handsome boy, (1)
 “ Whom he would first improve, and then employ.
 “ The boy was gentle, modest, civil, kind,
 “ But not for bustling through the world design’d ;
 “ Reserved in manner, with a little gloom,
 “ Apt to retire, but never to assume ;
 “ Possess’d of pride that he could not subdue,
 “ Although he kept his origin in view.
 “ Him sent my Lord to school, and this became “ A theme for praise, and gave his Lordship fame ;
 “ But when the boy was told how great his debt,
 “ He proudly ask’d, ‘ Is it contracted yet ? ’
 “ With care he studied, and with some success ;
 “ His patience great, but his acquirements less :
 “ Yet when he heard that Charles would not excel,

(1) [In the character and melancholy death of Charles, the patronised boy, Mr. Crabbe has described the fate of his brother-in-law, Mr. James Elmy, who died at an early age, a few years after his sister’s marriage, but not until he had experienced much suffering. Having a strong predilection for the pencil, he was placed, by the assistance of his uncle, Mr. Tovell, under the tuition of the Royal Academician, Cosway ; but, unfortunately, he had more passion than genius, and painted respectably, but nothing more. Returning to reside with his mother at Beccles, great expectations of his success were formed by all his friends. Unhappily, he failed in his first attempt — a view of Beccles — and never overcame the bitter mortification. His health, always delicate, began about this time to decline. Not having strength or spirits for renewed exertion, he confined himself to his room, and would scarcely eat enough to support life, because he could not maintain himself, and would not be a burden to his widowed mother. At length, he pined away, a victim to disappointment and melancholy ; and the last effort of his sinking strength was to commit all his drawings to the flames.]

“ ‘ Let him proceed, and do the best he can ;
 “ ‘ I want no pedant, but a useful man.’

“ The speech was heard, and praise was amply dealt ;
 “ His Lordship felt it, and he said he felt —
 “ ‘ It is delightful,’ he observed, ‘ to raise
 “ ‘ And foster merit, — it is more than praise.’

“ Five years at school th’ industrious boy had pass’d,
 “ ‘ And what,’ was whisper’d, ‘ will be done at last?’
 “ My Lord was troubled, for he did not mean
 “ To have his bounty watch’d and overseen ;
 “ Bounty that sleeps when men applaud no more
 “ The generous act that waked their praise before ;
 “ The deed was pleasant while the praise was new,
 “ But none the progress would with wonder view :
 “ It was a debt contracted ; he who pays
 “ A debt is just, but must not look for praise :
 “ The deed that once had fame must still proceed, “ Though fame no more proclaims ‘ how great the
 “ The boy is taken from his mother’s side, [deed !’
 “ And he who took him must be now his guide.
 “ But this, alas ! instead of bringing fame,
 “ A tax, a trouble, to my Lord became.

“ ‘ The boy is dull, you say, — why then by trade,
 “ ‘ By law, by physic, nothing can be made ;
 “ ‘ If a small living — mine are both too large,
 “ ‘ And then the College is a cursed charge :
 “ ‘ The sea is open ; should he there display
 “ ‘ Signs of dislike, he cannot run away.’

“ Now Charles, who acted no heroic part,
 “ And felt no seaman’s glory warm his heart,
 “ Refused the offer — anger touch’d my Lord. —
 “ ‘ He does not like it — Good, upon my word —
 “ ‘ If I at College place him, he will need “ ‘ Supplies for ever, and will not succeed ;
 “ ‘ Doubtless in me ’tis duty to provide
 “ ‘ Not for his comfort only, but his pride —
 “ ‘ Let him to sea !’ — He heard the words again,
 “ With promise join’d — with threat’ning ; all in vain :
 “ Charles had his own pursuits ; for aid to these
 “ He had been thankful, and had tried to please ;
 “ But urged again, as meekly as a saint,
 “ He humbly begg’d to stay at home and paint. (1)
 “ ‘ Yes, pay some dauber, that this stubborn fool
 “ ‘ May grind his colours, and may boast his school.’

“ As both persisted, ‘ Choose, good sir, your way,’
 “ The peer exclaim’d, ‘ I have no more to say ;
 “ ‘ I seek your good, but I have no command
 “ ‘ Upon your will, nor your desire withstand.’

“ Resolved and firm, yet dreading to offend,
 “ Charles pleaded genius with his noble friend :
 “ ‘ Genius !’ he cried, ‘ the name that triflers give
 “ ‘ To their strong wishes without pains to live ;

(1) [MS. —

“ Again was made the offer, and again,
 With threats, with noble promises, in vain.
 When my Lord saw that nothing could be done,
 He nobly cried, — “ I ’ll fit him as my son ;
 Sir, will you go ?” As meekly as a saint,
 Charles humbly begg’d to stay on land and paint.”]

“ ‘ Genius ! the plea of all who feel desire
 “ ‘ Of fame, yet grudge the labours that acquire :
 “ ‘ But say ’tis true ; how poor, how late the gain,
 “ ‘ And certain ruin if the hope be vain !’
 “ Then to the world appeal’d my Lord, and cried,
 “ ‘ Whatever happens, I am justified.’
 “ Nay, it was trouble to his soul to find
 “ There was such hardness in the human mind : (1)
 “ He wash’d his hands before the world, and swore
 “ That he such minds would patronise no more.

“ Now Charles his bread by daily labours sought,
 “ And this his solace, ‘ so Correggio wrought.’
 “ Alas, poor youth ! however great his name,
 “ And humble thine, thy fortune was the same :
 “ Charles drew and painted, and some praise obtain’d
 “ For care and pains ; but little more was gain’d :
 “ Fame was his hope, and he contempt display’d
 “ For approbation, when ’t was coolly paid :
 “ His daily tasks he call’d a waste of mind,
 “ Vex’d at his fate, and angry with mankind :
 “ ‘ Thus have the blind to merit ever done,
 “ ‘ And Genius mourn’d for each neglected son.’ (2)

(1) [MS. —

Stubborn though mild, and fearing to offend,
 He gain’d his freedom, and he lost his friend :
 My Lord appeal’d to all the world, and cried, —
 “ There never breathed such stubbornness and pride ;
 “ Do what you please, Sir, I am justified.”
 So said my Lord ; for “ he was grieved to find “ Such vile ingratitude in base mankind.”]

(2) [MS. —

“ The boy then wrote for bread. I saw him thrice ;
 His passions placid, he without a vice :

“ Charles murmur’d thus, and angry and alone “ Half breathed the curse, and half suppress’d the groan ;
“ Then still more sullen grew, and still more proud,
“ Fame so refused he to himself allow’d, “ Crowds in contempt he held, and all to him was crowd.

“ If aught on earth, the youth his mother loved,
“ And at her death to distant scenes removed.

“ Years past away, and where he lived, and how,
“ Was then unknown — indeed we know not now ;
“ But once at twilight walking up and down,
“ In a poor alley of the mighty town,
“ Where, in her narrow courts and garrets, hide
“ The grieving sons of Genius, Want, and Pride,
“ I met him musing : sadness I could trace,
“ And conquer’d hope’s meek anguish in his face.
“ See him I must : but I with ease address’d,
“ And neither pity nor surprise express’d ;
“ I strove both grief and pleasure to restrain,
“ But yet I saw that I was giving pain.
“ He said, with quick’ning pace, as loth to hold
“ A longer converse, that ‘ the day was cold,

He sometimes painted, but was uninspired
By genius, unprotected, unadmired ;
But pensive, sober, diligent, employ’d
His every hour, his life without a void,
He sought for little, nothing he enjoy’d.
I fear he thought himself, because distress’d,
An injured genius, by the world oppress’d.”]

“ ‘ That he was well, that I had scarcely light
 “ ‘ To aid my steps,’ and bade me then good night !

“ I saw him next where he had lately come,
 “ A silent pauper in a crowded room ;
 “ I heard his name, but he conceal’d his face,
 “ To his sad mind his misery was disgrace :
 “ In vain I strove to combat his disdain
 “ Of my compassion — ‘ Sir, I pray refrain ;’
 “ For I had left my friends, and stepp’d aside,
 “ Because I fear’d his unrelenting pride. (1)

“ He then was sitting on a workhouse-bed,
 “ And on the naked boards reclined his head,
 “ Around were children with incessant cry,
 “ And near was one, like him, about to die ;
 “ A broken chair’s deal bottom held the store
 “ That he required — he soon would need no more ;
 “ A yellow tea-pot, standing at his side,
 “ From its half spout the cold black tea supplied.

“ Hither, it seem’d, the fainting man was brought,
 “ Found without food, — it was no longer sought :
 “ For his employers knew not whom they paid,
 “ Nor where to seek him whom they wish’d to aid :

(1) MS. —

“ Years past away ; I think some twenty-five,
 Again I saw him, and but just alive,
 And still forbidding, silent, sullen, proud,
 As one whose claims were just, and not allow’d.
 He saw me, saw my sympathy with pain,
 Received my humble offers with disdain,
 And sternly told me “ not to come again.”
 He then was sitting,” &c.]

“ Here brought, some kind attendant he address’d,
“ And sought some trifles which he yet possess’d ;
“ Then named a lightless closet, in a room
“ Hired at small rate, a garret’s deepest gloom :
“ They sought the region, and they brought him all
“ That he his own, his proper wealth, could call :
“ A better coat, less pieced ; some linen neat,
“ Not whole ; and papers, many a valued sheet ;
“ Designs and drawings ; these, at his desire,
“ Were placed before him at the chamber fire,
“ And while th’ admiring people stood to gaze,
“ He, one by one, committed to the blaze,
“ Smiling in spleen ; but one he held awhile,
“ And gave it to the flames, and could not smile.

“ The sickening man — for such appear’d the fact
“ Just in his need, would not a debt contract ;
“ But left his poor apartment for the bed
“ That earth might yield him, or some way-side
    shed ;
“ Here he was found, and to this place convey’d,
“ Where he might rest, and his last debt be paid :
“ Fame was his wish, but he so far from fame,
“ That no one knew his kindred, or his name,
“ Or by what means he lived, or from what place he came.

“ Thy days had calmly past, in peace thine end :

(1) [MS. —

“ Thou, Charles! unaided by a noble friend,
    Hadst spent a careful life, as others spend ;

“ Led by thy patron’s vanity astray,
 “ Thy own misled thee in thy trackless way,
 “ Urging thee on by hope absurd and vain,
 “ Where never peace or comfort smiled again !
 “ Once more I saw him, when his spirits fail’d,
 “ And my desire to aid him then prevail’d ;
 “ He show’d a softer feeling in his eye,
 “ And watch’d my looks, and own’d the sympathy :
 “ ’T was now the calm of wearied pride ; so long
 “ As he had strength was his resentment strong,
 “ But in such place, with strangers all around,
 “ And they such strangers, to have something found
 “ Allied to his own heart, an early friend,
 “ One, only one, who would on him attend,
 “ To give and take a look ! at this his journey’s end ;
 “ One link, however slender, of the chain
 “ That held him where he could not long remain ;
 “ The one sole interest ! No, he could not now “ Retain his anger ; Nature knew not how ;
 “ And so there came a softness to his mind,
 “ And he forgave the usage of mankind.
 “ His cold long fingers now were press’d to mine,
 “ And his faint smile of kinder thoughts gave sign ;
 “ His lips moved often as he tried to lend
 “ His words their sound, and softly whisper’d ‘ friend !’
 “ Not without comfort in the thought express’d
 “ By that calm look with which he sank to rest.

But when thy patron’s vanity and thine
 Were made by cruel fortune to combine,
 ’T was then th’ unhappy wretch was lifted high
 On golden stilts, and seem’d to touch the sky ;
 But when the tempter hand withdraws the props,
 The vision closes, and the victim drops.”]

“ The man,” said George, “ you see, through life retain’d

“ The boy’s defects ; his virtues too remain’d.

“ But where are now those minds so light and gay,
“ So forced on study, so intent on play,
“ Swept, by the world’s rude blasts, from hope’s dear views away ?
“ Some grieved for long neglect in earlier times,
“ Some sad from frailties, some lamenting crimes ;
“ Thinking, with sorrow, on the season lent
“ For noble purpose, and in trifling spent ;
“ And now, at last, when they in earnest view
“ The nothings done — what work they find to do !
“ Where is that virtue that the generous boy
“ Felt, and resolved that nothing should destroy ?
“ He who with noble indignation glow’d
“ When vice had triumph ? who his tear bestow’d
“ On injured merit ? he who would possess
“ Power but to aid the children of distress !
“ Who has such joy in generous actions shown,
“ And so sincere, they might be call’d his own ;
“ Knight, hero, patriot, martyr ! on whose tongue,
“ And potent arm, a nation’s welfare hung ;
“ He who to public misery brought relief,
“ And sooth’d the anguish of domestic grief.
“ Where now this virtue’s fervour, spirit, zeal ?
“ Who felt so warmly, has he ceased to feel ?
“ The boy’s emotions of that noble kind,
“ Ah ! sure th’ experienced man has not resign’d ;
“ Or are these feelings varied ? has the knight,
“ Virtue’s own champion, now refused to fight ?

“ Is the deliverer turn'd th' oppressor now ?
 “ Has the reformer dropt the dangerous vow ?
 “ Or has the patriot's bosom lost its heat,
 “ And forced him, shivering, to a snug retreat ?
 “ Is such the grievous lapse of human pride ?
 “ Is such the victory of the worth untried ?

“ Here will I pause, and then review the shame
 “ Of Harry Bland, to hear his parent's name ; (1)
 “ That mild, that modest boy, whom well we knew,
 “ In him long time the secret sorrow grew ;
 “ He wept alone ; then to his friend confess'd
 “ The grievous fears that his pure mind oppress'd ;
 “ And thus, when terror o'er his shame obtain'd
 “ A painful conquest, he his case explain'd :
 “ And first his favourite question'd — ‘ Willie, tell,
 “ ‘ Do all the wicked people go to Hell ? ’

“ Willie with caution answer'd, ‘ Yes, they do,
 “ ‘ Or else repent ; but what is this to you ? ’

(1) [MS. —

The boy was tall, but with a mincing air,
 Blue, languid eyes, pale cheek, and flaxen hair ;
 His temper fretful, but his spirits mild,
 Loved by mamma, by all her maidens styled
 The wittiest darling, and the sweetest child.
 In those dear times, when that mamma had rule,
 There was much play, few lessons, and no school ;
 But, oh ! misfortune — when the lady died,
 No second wife her honour'd place supplied,
 But one dishonour'd ; and she quickly sent
 All who had grief to grieve in banishment :
 No longer now was there the rush of joy,
 The flood of fondness o'er the happy boy ;
 No more indulgence-by the maidens shown,
 For master's pleasure, purchase of their own ;
 But they as spies were to new service sent,
 And the sad boy to school and banishment.
 He wept alone, &c.]

“ ‘O! yes, dear friend:’ he then his tale began —
“ He fear’d his father was a wicked man,
“ Nor had repented of his naughty life ;
“ The wife he had indeed was not a wife,
“ ‘ Not as my mother was ; the servants all
“ ‘ Call her a name—I’ll whisper what they call.
“ ‘ She saw me weep, and ask’d, in high disdain,
“ ‘ If tears could bring my mother back again ?
“ ‘ This I could bear, but not when she pretends
“ ‘ Such fond regard, and what I speak commends ;
“ ‘ Talks of my learning, fawning wretch ! and tries
“ ‘ To make me love her,—love ! when I despise.
“ ‘ Indeed I had it in my heart to say
“ ‘ Words of reproach, before I came away ;
“ ‘ And then my father’s look is not the same,
“ ‘ He puts his anger on to hide his shame.’

“ With all these feelings delicate and nice,
“ This dread of infamy, this scorn of vice,
“ He left the school, accepting, though with pride,
“ His father’s aid—but there would not reside ;
“ He married then a lovely maid, approved
“ Of every heart as worthy to be loved ;
“ Mild as the morn in summer, firm as truth,
“ And graced with wisdom in the bloom of youth.

“ How is it, men, when they in judgment sit
“ On the same fault, now censure, now acquit ?
“ Is it not thus, that here we view the sin,
“ And there the powerful cause that drew us in ?
“ ’Tis not that men are to the evil blind,
“ But that a different object fills the mind.

“ In judging others we can see too well
“ Their grievous fall, but not how grieved they fell ;
“ Judging ourselves, we to our minds recall,
“ Not how we fell, but how we grieved to fall.
“ Or could this man, so vex'd in early time,
“ By this strong feeling for his father's crime,
“ Who to the parent's sin was barely just,
“ And mix'd with filial fear the man's disgust ;
“ Could he, without some strong delusion, quit
“ The path of duty, and to shame submit ?
“ Cast off the virtue he so highly prized,
“ ‘ And be the very creature he despised ? ’

“ A tenant's wife, half forward, half afraid,
“ Features, it seem'd, of powerful cast display'd,
“ That bore down faith and duty ; common fame
“ Speaks of a contract that augments the shame.

“ There goes he, not unseen, so strong the will,
“ And blind the wish, that bear him to the mill ;
“ There he degraded sits, and strives to please
“ The miller's children, laughing at his knees ;
“ And little Dorcas, now familiar grown,
“ Talks of her rich papa, and of her own.
“ He woos the mother's now precarious smile
“ By costly gifts, that tempers reconcile ;
“ While the rough husband, yielding to the pay
“ That buys his absence, growling stalks away.
“ 'Tis said the offending man will sometimes sigh,
“ And say, ‘ My God, in what a dream am I ?

“ ‘I will awake :’ but as the day proceeds,
“ The weaken’d mind the day’s indulgence needs ;
“ Hating himself at every step he takes,
“ His mind approves the virtue he forsakes,
“ And yet forsakes her. O ! how sharp the pain,
“ Our vice, ourselves, our habits to disdain ;
“ To go where never yet in peace we went,
“ To feel our hearts can bleed, yet not relent ;
“ To sigh, yet not recede ; to grieve, yet not repent !”

BOOK IV.

ADVENTURES OF RICHARD.

EIGHT days had past: the Brothers now could meet
With ease, and take the customary seat.

“ These,” said the host, for he perceived where stray’d

His brother’s eye, and what he now survey’d ;

“ These are the costly trifles that we buy,

“ Urged by the strong demands of vanity,

“ The thirst and hunger of a mind diseased,

“ That must with purchased flattery be appeas’d ;

“ But yet, ’t is true, the things that you behold

“ Serve to amuse us as we’re getting old : (1)

(1) [Orig. MS. —

“ Brother,” said George, “ when I beheld you last,
“ The time how distant! — Well! the time is past —
“ I had not then these comforts you behold,
“ Things that amuse us when we’re getting old.
“ These Pictures now! experienced men will say,
“ They’re genuine all, and so perhaps they may ;
“ They cost the money, that I ’m sure is true,
“ And therefore, Richard, I will say it too.”]

“ These Pictures, as I heard our artists say,
 “ Are genuine all, and I believe they may ;
 “ They cost the genuine sums, and I should grieve
 “ If, being willing, I could not believe.
 “ And there is Music ; when the ladies come,
 “ With their keen looks they scrutinize the room
 “ To see what pleases, and I must expect
 “ To yield them pleasure, or to find neglect :
 “ For, as attractions from our person fly,
 “ Our purses, Richard, must the want supply ;
 “ Yet would it vex me could the triflers know
 “ That they can shut out comfort or bestow. (1)

“ But see this room : here, Richard, you will find “ Books for all palates, food for every mind ;
 “ This readers term the ever-new delight,
 “ And so it is, if minds have appetite :
 “ Mine once was craving ; great my joy, indeed,
 “ Had I possess'd such food when I could feed ;
 “ When at the call of every new-born wish
 “ I could have keenly relish'd every dish —
 “ Now, Richard, now I stalk around and look “ Upon the dress and title of a book,
 “ Try half a page, and then can taste no more,
 “ But the dull volume to its place restore :

(1) [MS. —

“ Music you find ; for hither ladies come ;
 “ They make infernal uproar in the room.
 “ I bear it. Why ? because I must expect
 “ To pay for honour, and I fear neglect.
 “ And if attraction from your person flies,
 “ You must some pleasure from your purse devise :
 “ But this apart — the triflers should not know
 “ That they can comfort or regret bestow.”]

“ Begin a second slowly to peruse,
“ Then cast it by, and look about for news ;
“ The news itself grows dull in long debates, —
“ I skip, and see what the conclusion states ;
“ And many a speech, with zeal and study made “ Cold and resisting spirits to persuade,
“ Is lost on mine ; alone, we cease to feel
“ What crowds admire, and wonder at their zeal.

“ But how the day ? No fairer will it be ?
“ Walk you ? Alas ! 't is requisite for me — “ Nay, let me not prescribe — my friends and guests are free.”

It was a fair and mild autumnal sky,
And earth's ripe treasures met th' admiring eye,
As a rich beauty, when her bloom is lost,
Appears with more magnificence and cost :
The wet and heavy grass, where feet had stray'd,
Not yet erect, the wanderer's way betray'd ;
Showers of the night had swell'd the deep'ning rill,
The morning breeze had urged the quick'ning mill ;
Assembled rooks had wing'd their sea-ward flight,
By the same passage to return at night,
While proudly o'er them hung the steady kite,
Then turn'd him back, and left the noisy throng,
Nor deign'd to know them as he sail'd along.
Long yellow leaves, from oziars, strew'd around,
Choked the small stream, and hush'd the feeble
    sound ;

While the dead foliage dropt from loftier trees,
 Our Squire beheld not with his wonted ease ;
 But to his own reflections made reply,
 And said aloud, " Yes ! doubtless we must die."

" We must," said Richard ; " and we would not live

" To feel what dotage and decay will give ;
 " But we yet taste whatever we behold,
 " The morn is lovely, though the air is cold :
 " There is delicious quiet in this scene,
 " At once so rich, so varied, so serene ;
 " Sounds too delight us, — each discordant tone
 " Thus mingled please, that fail to please alone ;
 " This hollow wind, this rustling of the brook,
 " The farm-yard noise, the woodman at yon oak —
 " See, the axe falls ! — now listen to the stroke !
 " That gun itself, that murders all this peace,
 " Adds to the charm, because it soon must cease." (1)

" No doubt," said George, " the country has its charms.

" My farm behold ! the model for all farms !
 " Look at that land — you find not there a weed,
 " We grub the roots, and suffer none to seed.

(1) [MS. —

That gun itself, that breaks upon the ear,
 Has something suited to the dying year ;
 " The dying partridge !" cried, with much disdain,
 Th' offended 'Squire — " Our laws are made in vain :
 The country, Richard, would not be amiss,
 But for these plagues, and villanies like this ;
 Wealth breeds the curse that fixes on the land,
 And strife and heritage go hand in hand.]

" To land like this no botanist will come,
 " To seek the precious ware he hides at home ;
 " Pressing the leaves and flowers with effort nice,
 " As if they came from herbs in Paradise ;
 " Let them their favourites with my neighbours see,
 " They have no — what ? — no habitat with me. (1)

" Now see my flock, and hear its glory ; — none
 " Have that vast body and that slender bone ;
 " They are the village boast, the dealer's theme,
 " Fleece of such staple ! flesh in such esteem ! " (2)

(1) [In botanical language, the "habitat" is the favourite soil or situation of the more scarce species of plants.

(2) [The original draft, in place of the following lines, runs—

They walk'd along, through mead and shaded wood,
 And stubble ground, where late abundance stood,
 And in the vale, where winter waters glide,
 O'er pastures stretching up the mountain side.

With a shrewd smile, but mix'd with look severe,
 The landlord view'd the promise of the year.
 " See ! that unrivall'd flock ! they, they alone
 " Have the vast body on the slender bone ;
 " They are the village boast, the country's theme,
 " Fleece of such staple ! flesh in such esteem ! "

Richard gave praise, but not in rapturous style ;
 He chose his words, and spoke them with a smile :
 " Brother," said he, " and if I take you right,
 " I am full glad — these things are your delight ;
 " I see you proud, but," — speaking half aside —
 " Is, now, the pleasure equal to the pride ? "

A transient flush on George's face appear'd,
 Cloudy he look'd, and then his looks were clear'd :
 " Look at yon hind ! " said he, — " in very deed,
 " His is the pride and pleasure in the breed ;
 " He has delight, he judges — I the name,
 " And the whole praise — I speak it to my shame.
 " Oh ! Richard, Richard, tell me, if you can,
 " What will engage and fix the mind of man ?

“ Brother,” said Richard, “ do I hear aright?
“ Does the land truly give so much delight?”

“ So says my bailiff: sometimes I have tried
“ To catch the joy, but nature has denied;
“ It will not be — the mind has had a store
“ Laid up for life, and will admit no more:
“ Worn out in trials, and about to die,
“ In vain to these we for amusement fly;
“ We farm, we garden, we our poor employ,
“ And much command, though little we enjoy;
“ Or, if ambitious, we employ our pen,
“ We plant a desert, or we drain a fen;
“ And — here, behold my medal! — this will show
“ What men may merit when they nothing know.”

“ Yet reason here,” said Richard, “ joins with pride: —”
“ I did not ask th’ alliance,” George replied —

“ Suppose,” said he, “ we look about the green,
“ In yonder cots some objects may be seen,
“ T’ excite our pity, or relieve our spleen.

“ Oh! they are thieves and blockheads,” George replied,
“ Unjust, ungrateful, and unsatisfied;
“ To grasp at all, their study, thought, and care,
“ All would be thieves and plunderers, if they dare;
“ His envious nature not a clown conceals,
“ But bluntly shows the insolence he feels.

“ And whence,” said Richard, “ should the vice proceed,
“ But from their want of knowledge, and their need?
“ Let them know more, or let them better feel,
“ And I ’ll engage they ’ll neither threat nor steal.”

“ Brother,” said George, “ your pity makes you blind
“ To all that ’s vile and odious in mankind;
“ ’T is true your notions may appear divine,
“ But for their justice — let us go and dine.”]

“ I grant it true, such trifles may induce
“ A dull, proud man to wake and be of use ;
“ And there are purer pleasures, that a mind
“ Calm and uninjured may in villas find ;
“ But where th’ affections have been deeply tried,
“ With other food that mind must be supplied :
“ ’T is not in trees or medals to impart
“ The powerful medicine for an aching heart ;
“ The agitation dies, but there is still
“ The backward spirit, the resisting will.
“ Man takes his body to a country seat,
“ But minds, dear Richard, have their own retreat ;
“ Oft when the feet are pacing o’er the green
“ The mind is gone where never grass was seen,
“ And never thinks of hill, or vale, or plain,
“ Till want of rest creates a sense of pain,
“ That calls that wandering mind, and brings it home again.
“ No more of farms : but here I boast of minds
“ That make a friend the richer when he finds ;
“ These shalt thou see ; — but, Richard, be it known,
“ Who thinks to see must in his turn be shown : —
“ But now farewell ! to thee will I resign “ Woods, walks, and valleys ! take them till we dine.”

The Brothers dined, and with that plenteous fare
That seldom fails to dissipate our care,
At least the lighter kind ; and oft prevails
When reason, duty, nay, when kindness fails.

Yet food and wine, and all that mortals bless,
Lead them to think of peril and distress ;
Cold, hunger, danger, solitude, and pain,
That men in life's adventurous ways sustain.

“ Thou hast sail'd far, dear Brother,” said the Squire —

“ Permit me of these unknown lands t' enquire,
“ Lands never till'd, where thou hast wondering been,
“ And all the marvels thou hast heard and seen :
“ Do tell me something of the miseries felt
“ In climes where travellers freeze, and where they melt ;
“ And be not nice, — we know 't is not in men,
“ Who travel far, to hold a steady pen :
“ Some will, 't is true, a bolder freedom take,
“ And keep our wonder always wide awake ;
“ We know of those whose dangers far exceed
“ Our frail belief, that trembles as we read ;
“ Such as in deserts burn, and thirst, and die,
“ Save a last gasp that they recover by :
“ Then, too, their hazard from a tyrant's arms,
“ A tiger's fury, or a lady's charms ;
“ Beside th' accumulated evils borne
“ From the bold outset to the safe return.
“ These men abuse ; but thou hast fair pretence
“ To modest dealing, and to mild good sense ;
“ Then let me hear thy struggles and escapes
“ In the far lands of crocodiles and apes :
“ Say, hast thou, Bruce-like, knelt upon the bed
“ Where the young Nile uplifts his branchy head ?

“ Or been partaker of th’ unhallow’d feast,
“ Where beast-like man devours his fellow beast,
“ And churn’d the bleeding life? while each great dame
“ And sovereign beauty bade adieu to shame?
“ Or did the storm, that thy wreck’d pinnace bore,
“ Impel thee gasping on some unknown shore;
“ Where, when thy beard and nails were savage grown,
“ Some swarthy princess took thee for her own,
“ Some danger-dreading Yarico, who, kind,
“ Sent thee away, and, prudent, staid behind?

“ Come — I am ready wonders to receive,
“ Prone to assent, and willing to believe.”

Richard replied: “ It must be known to you,
“ That tales improbable may yet be true;
“ And yet it is a foolish thing to tell
“ A tale that shall be judged improbable;
“ While some impossibilities appear
“ So like the truth, that we assenting hear:
“ Yet, with your leave, I venture to relate
“ A chance-affair, and fact alone will state;
“ Though, I confess, it may suspicion breed,
“ And you may cry, ‘ improbable, indeed!’

“ When first I tried the sea, I took a trip,
“ But duty none, in a relation’s ship;

“ Thus, unengaged, I felt my spirits light,
“ Kept care at distance, and put fear to flight ;
“ Oft this same spirit in my friends prevail’d,
“ Buoyant in dangers, rising when assail’d ;
“ When, as the gale at evening died away,
“ And die it will with the retiring day,
“ Impatient then, and sick of very ease,
“ We loudly whistled for the slumbering breeze.

“ One eve it came ; and, frantic in my joy,
“ I rose and danced, as idle as a boy :
“ The cabin-lights were down, that we might learn
“ A trifling something from the ship astern ;
“ The stiffening gale bore up the growing wave,
“ And wilder motion to my madness gave :
“ Oft have I since, when thoughtful and at rest,
“ Believed some maddening power my mind possess’d ;
“ For, in an instant, as the stern sank low,
“ (How moved I knew not—What can madness know ?)
“ Chance that direction to my motion gave,
“ And plunged me headlong in the roaring wave :
“ Swift flew the parting ship, — the fainter light
“ Withdrew, — or horror took them from my sight.

“ All was confused above, beneath, around ;
“ All sounds of terror ; no distinguish’d sound
“ Could reach me, now on sweeping surges tost,
“ And then between the rising billows lost ;
“ An undefined sensation stopt my breath ;
“ Disorder’d views and threat’ning signs of death

“ Met in one moment, and a terror gave —
“ I cannot paint it — to the moving-grave.
“ My thoughts were all distressing, hurried, mix’d,
“ On all things fixing, not a moment fix’d :
“ Vague thoughts of instant danger brought their pain,
“ New hopes of safety banish’d them again ;
“ Then the swoln billow all these hopes destroy’d,
“ And left me sinking in the mighty void :
“ Weaker I grew, and grew the more dismay’d,
“ Of aid all hopeless, yet in search of aid ;
“ Struggling awhile upon the wave to keep,
“ Then, languid, sinking in the yawning deep :
“ So tost, so lost, so sinking in despair,
“ I pray’d in heart an indirected prayer,
“ And then once more I gave my eyes to view
“ The ship now lost, and bade the light adieu !
“ From my chill’d frame the enfeebled spirit fled,
“ Rose the tall billows round my deep’ning bed, “ Cold seized my heart, thought ceased, and I was dead.

“ Brother, I have not, — man has not the power
“ To paint the horrors of that life-long hour ;
“ Hour ! — but of time I knew not — when I found “ Hope, youth, life, love, and all they promised, drown’d ;
“ When all so indistinct, so undefined,
“ So dark and dreadful, overcame the mind ;
“ When such confusion on the spirit dwelt,
“ That, feeling much, it knew not what it felt. (1)

(1) [See antè, Vol. I. p. 37.]

“ Can I, my Brother—ought I to forget
“ That night of terror? No! it threatens yet.
“ Shall I days, months—nay, years, indeed, neglect,
“ Who then could feel what moments must effect,
“ Were aught effected? who, in that wild storm,
“ Found there was nothing I could well perform ;
“ For what to us are moments, what are hours,
“ If lost our judgment, and confused our powers ?

“ Oft in the times when passion strives to reign,
“ When duty feebly holds the slacken'd chain,
“ When reason slumbers, then remembrance draws
“ This view of death, and folly makes a pause —
“ The view o'ercomes the vice, the fear the frenzy awes.

“ I know there wants not this to make it true,
“ What danger bids be done, in safety do ;
“ Yet such escapes may make our purpose sure,
“ Who slights such warning may be too secure.”

“ But the escape ! ” — “ Whate'er they judged might save
“ Their sinking friend they cast upon the wave ;
“ Something of these my heaven-directed arm
“ Unconscious seized, and held as by a charm ;
“ The crew astern beheld me as I swam,
“ And I am saved—O ! let me say I am.”

“ Brother,” said George, “ I have neglected long
 “ To think of all thy perils :—it was wrong ;
 “ But do forgive me ; for I could not be
 “ Than of myself more negligent of thee.
 “ Now tell me, Richard, from the boyish years
 “ Of thy young mind, that now so rich appears,
 “ How was it stored ? ’t was told me, thou wert wild,
 “ A truant urchin,—a neglected child.
 “ I heard of this escape, and sat supine
 “ Amid the danger that exceeded thine ; “ Thou couldst but die — the waves could but in-fold
 “ Thy warm gay heart, and make that bosom cold —
 “ While I—— but no ! Proceed, and give me truth ;
 “ How pass’d the years of thy unguided youth ?
 “ Thy father left thee to the care of one
 “ Who could not teach, could ill support a son ;
 “ Yet time and trouble feeble minds have stay’d,
 “ And fit for long-neglected duties made :
 “ I see thee struggling in the world, as late
 “ Within the waves, and with an equal fate,
 “ By Heaven preserved — but tell me, whence and how
 “ Thy gleaning came ? — a dexterous gleaner thou ! ”

“ Left by that father, who was known to few,
 “ And to that mother, who has not her due
 “ Of honest fame,” said Richard, “ our retreat
 “ Was a small cottage, for our station meet,
 “ On Barford Downs : that mother, fond and poor,
 “ There taught some truths, and bade me seek for more,

“ Such as our village-school and books a few “ Supplied ; but such I cared not to pursue ;
“ I sought the town, and to the ocean gave
“ My mind and thoughts, as restless as the wave :
“ Where crowds assembled, I was sure to run,
“ Heard what was said, and mused on what was done ;
“ Attentive listening in the moving scene,
“ And often wondering what the men could mean.
“ When ships at sea made signals of their need,
“ I watch’d on shore the sailors, and their speed :
“ Mix’d in their act, nor rested till I knew
“ Why they were call’d, and what they were to do.

“ Whatever business in the port was done,
“ I, without call, was with the busy one ;
“ Not daring question, but with open ear
“ And greedy spirit, ever bent to hear.

“ To me the wives of seamen loved to tell
“ What storms endanger’d men esteem’d so well ;
“ What wond’rous things in foreign parts they saw,
“ Lands without bounds, and people without law.
“ No ships were wreck’d upon that fatal beach,
“ But I could give the luckless tale of each ;
“ Eager I look’d, till I beheld a face
“ Of one disposed to paint their dismal case ;
“ Who gave the sad survivors’ doleful tale,
“ From the first brushing of the mighty gale
“ Until they struck ; and, suffering in their fate,
“ I long’d the more they should its horrors state ;
“ While some, the fond of pity, would enjoy
“ The earnest sorrows of the feeling boy.

“ I sought the men return'd from regions cold,
“ The frozen straits, where icy mountains roll'd ;
“ Some I could win to tell me serious tales
“ Of boats uplifted by enormous whales,
“ Or, when harpoon'd, how swiftly through the sea
“ The wounded monsters with the cordage flee ;
“ Yet some uneasy thoughts assail'd me then,
“ The monsters warr'd not with, nor wounded
    men :
“ The smaller fry we take, with scales and fins,
“ Who gasp and die — this adds not to our sins ;
“ But so much blood ! warm life, and frames so large
“ To strike, to murder — seem'd a heavy charge.

“ They told of days, where many goes to one —
“ Such days as ours ; and how a larger sun,
“ Red, but not flaming, roll'd, with motion slow,
“ On the world's edge, but never dropp'd below.
“ There were fond girls, who took me to their side
“ To tell the story how their lovers died ;
“ They praised my tender heart, and bade me prove “ Both kind and constant when I came to love.
“ In fact, I lived for many an idle year
“ In fond pursuit of agitations dear ;
“ For ever seeking, ever pleased to find,
“ The food I loved, I thought not of its kind ;
“ It gave affliction while it brought delight,
“ And joy and anguish could at once excite.

“ One gusty day, now stormy and now still,
“ I stood apart upon the western hill,

“ And saw a race at sea : a gun was heard
“ And two contending boats in sail appear'd :
“ Equal awhile ; then one was left behind,
“ And for a moment had her chance resign'd,
“ When, in that moment, up a sail they drew—
“ Not used before—their rivals to pursue.
“ Strong was the gale ! in hurry now there came “ Men from the town, their thoughts, their fears the same ;
“ And women too ! affrighted maids and wives,
“ All deeply feeling for their sailors' lives.
“ The strife continued ; in a glass we saw
“ The desperate efforts, and we stood in awe,
“ When the last boat shot suddenly before,
“ Then fill'd, and sank—and could be seen no more !

“ Then were those piercing shrieks, that frantic flight,
“ All hurried ! all in tumult and affright !
“ A gathering crowd from different streets drew near,
“ All ask, all answer—none attend, none hear !

“ One boat is safe ; and see ! she backs her sail
“ To save the sinking.—Will her care avail ?

“ O ! how impatient on the sands we tread,
“ And the winds roaring, and the women led,
“ As up and down they pace with frantic air,
“ And scorn a comforter, and will despair ;
“ They know not who in either boat is gone,
“ But think the father, husband, lover, one.

“ And who is she apart? She dares not come
“ To join the crowd, yet cannot rest at home :
“ With what strong interest looks she at the waves,
“ Meeting and clashing o’er the seamen’s graves :
“ ’Tis a poor girl betroth’d—a few hours more,
“ And he will lie a corpse upon the shore.
“ Strange, that a boy could love these scenes, and cry
“ In very pity—but that boy was I.
“ With pain my mother would my tales receive,
“ And say, ‘ My Richard, do not learn to grieve.’
“ One wretched hour had past before we knew “ Whom they had saved! Alas! they were but two,
“ An orphan’d lad and widow’d man—no more!
“ And they unnoticed stood upon the shore,
“ With scarce a friend to greet them—widows view’d
“ This man and boy, and then their cries renew’d :—
“ ’Twas long before the signs of woe gave place
“ To joy again; grief sat on every face.

“ Sure of my mother’s kindness, and the joy
“ She felt in meeting her rebellious boy,
“ I at my pleasure our new seat forsook,
“ And, undirected, these excursions took :
“ I often rambled to the noisy quay, “ Strange sounds to hear, and business strange to me ;
“ Seamen and carmen, and I know not who,
“ A lewd, amphibious, rude, contentious crew—
“ Confused as bees appear about their hive,
“ Yet all alert to keep their work alive.

“ Here, unobserved as weed upon the wave,
“ My whole attention to the scene I gave ;
“ I saw their tasks, their toil, their care, their skill,
“ Led by their own and by a master-will ;
“ And though contending, toiling, tugging on,
“ The purposed business of the day was done.

“ The open shops of craftsmen caught my eye,
“ And there my questions met the kind reply :
“ Men, when alone, will teach ; but, in a crowd,
“ The child is silent, or the man is proud ;
“ But, by themselves, there is attention paid
“ To a mild boy, so forward, yet afraid.

“ I made me interest at the inn’s fire-side,
“ Amid the scenes to bolder boys denied ;
“ For I had patrons there, and I was one,
“ They judged, who noticed nothing that was done.
“ ‘ A quiet lad ! ’ would my protector say ;
“ ‘ To him, now, this is better than his play :
“ ‘ Boys are as men ; some active, shrewd, and keen,
“ ‘ They look about if aught is to be seen ;
“ ‘ And some, like Richard here, have not a mind
“ ‘ That takes a notice—but the lad is kind.’

“ I loved in summer on the heath to walk,
“ And seek the shepherd—shepherds love to talk :
“ His superstition was of ranker kind,
“ And he with tales of wonder stored my mind ;
“ Wonders that he in many a lonely eve
“ Had seen, himself, and therefore must believe.

“ His boy, his Joe, he said, from duty ran,
“ Took to the sea, and grew a fearless man :
“ ‘ On yonder knoll—the sheep were in the fold—
“ ‘ His spirit pass’d me, shivering-like and cold !
“ ‘ I felt a fluttering, but I knew not how,
“ ‘ And heard him utter, like a whisper, ‘ Now !’
“ ‘ Soon came a letter from a friend—to tell
“ ‘ That he had fallen, and the time he fell.’

“ Even to the smugglers’ hut the rocks between,
“ I have, adventurous in my wandering, been :
“ Poor, pious Martha served the lawless tribe,
“ And could their merits and their faults describe ;
“ Adding her thoughts ; ‘ I talk, my child, to you,
“ ‘ Who little think of what such wretches do.’

“ I loved to walk where none had walk’d before,
“ About the rocks that ran along the shore ;
“ Or far beyond the sight of men to stray,
“ And take my pleasure when I lost my way ;
“ For then ’t was mine to trace the hilly heath,
“ And all the mossy moor that lies beneath :
“ Here had I favourite stations, where I stood
“ And heard the murmurs of the ocean-flood,
“ With not a sound beside, except when flew
“ Aloft the lapwing, or the gray curlew,
“ Who with wild notes my fancied power defied,
“ And mock’d the dreams of solitary pride.

“ I loved to stop at every creek and bay
“ Made by the river in its winding way,

“ And call to memory—not by marks they bare,
 “ But by the thoughts that were created there.

“ Pleasant it was to view the sea-gulls strive “ Against the storm, or in the ocean dive,
 “ With eager scream, or when they dropping gave
 “ Their closing wings to sail upon the wave :
 “ Then as the winds and waters raged around,
 “ And breaking billows mix'd their deafening sound,
 “ They on the rolling deep securely hung,
 “ And calmly rode the restless waves among.
 “ Nor pleased it less around me to behold,
 “ Far up the beach, the yesty sea-foam roll'd ;
 “ Or from the shore upborne, to see on high,
 “ Its frothy flakes in wild confusion fly :
 “ While the salt spray that clashing billows form,
 “ Gave to the taste a feeling of the storm.

“ Thus, with my favourite views, for many an hour
 “ Have I indulged the dreams of princely power ;
 “ When the mind, wearied by excursions bold,
 “ The fancy jaded, and the bosom cold,
 “ Or when those wants, that will on kings intrude,
 “ Or evening-fears, broke in on solitude ;
 “ When I no more my fancy could employ,
 “ I left in haste what I could not enjoy,
 “ And was my gentle mother's welcome boy. (1)

(1) [“ After leaving school, some time passed before a situation as surgeon's apprentice could be found for young Crabbe; and, by his own confession, he has painted the manner in which most of this interval was

“ But now thy walk, — this soft autumnal gloom
“ Bids no delay — at night I will resume
“ My subject, showing, not how I improved
“ In my strange school, but what the things I loved,
“ My first-born friendships, ties by forms uncheck'd,
“ And all that boys acquire whom men neglect.”

spent, in those beautiful lines of his 'Richard,' which give, perhaps, as striking a picture of inquisitive sympathy, and solitary musings of a youthful poet, as can elsewhere be pointed out.”— Life, Vol. I. p. 18.]

BOOK V.

RUTH.

RICHARD would wait till George the tale should ask,
Nor waited long — He then resumed the task.

“ South in the port, and eastward in the street,
“ Rose a small dwelling, my beloved retreat,
“ Where lived a pair, then old ; the sons had fled
“ The home they fill’d : a part of them were dead ;
“ Married a part ; while some at sea remain’d,
“ And stillness in the seaman’s mansion reign’d ;
“ Lord of some petty craft, by night and day,
“ The man had fish’d each fathom of the bay.

“ My friend the matron woo’d me, quickly won,
“ To fill the station of an absent son ;
“ (Him whom at school I knew, and Peter known,
“ I took his home and mother for my own) :
“ I read, and doubly was I paid to hear
“ Events that fell upon no listless ear :

“ She grieved to say her parents could neglect
 “ Her education!—’t was a sore defect;
 “ She, who had ever such a vast delight
 “ To learn, and now could neither read nor write:
 “ But hear she could, and from our stores I took,
 “ Librarian meet! at her desire, our book. (1)

“ Full twenty volumes—I would not exceed
 “ The modest truth—were there for me to read;
 “ These a long shelf contain’d, and they were found
 “ Books truly speaking, volumes fairly bound;
 “ The rest,—for some of other kinds remain’d,
 “ And these a board beneath the shelf contain’d—
 “ Had their deficiencies in part; they lack’d
 “ One side or both, or were no longer back’d;
 “ But now became degraded from their place,
 “ And were but pamphlets of a bulkier race.
 “ Yet had we pamphlets, an inviting store,
 “ From sixpence downwards—nay, a part were more;
 “ Learning abundance, and the various kinds
 “ For relaxation—food for different minds;
 “ A piece of Wingate—thanks for all we have—
 “ What we of figures needed, fully gave;
 “ Culpepper, new in numbers, cost but thrice
 “ The ancient volume’s unassuming price,

(1) [“ Mild, obliging, and the most patient of listeners, young Crabbe was a great favourite with the old dames of Aldborough. Like his own ‘Richard,’ many a friendly

    ‘ Matron woo’d him, quickly won,
     To fill the station of an absent son.’

He admired the rude prints on their walls, rummaged their shelves for books or ballads, and read aloud to those whose eyes had failed them, by the winter evening’s fireside.” —Life, Vol. I. p. 16.]

“ But told what planet o’er each herb had power,
“ And how to take it in the lucky hour.

“ History we had—wars, treasons, treaties, crimes,
“ From Julius Cæsar to the present times ;
“ Questions and answers, teaching what to ask
“ And what reply, — a kind, laborious task :
“ A scholar’s book it was, who, giving, swore
“ It held the whole he wish’d to know, and more.
“ And we had poets, hymns and songs divine ;
“ The most we read not, but allow’d them fine.

“ Our tracts were many, on the boldest themes —
“ We had our metaphysics, spirits, dreams,
“ Visions and warnings, and portentous sights
“ Seen, though but dimly, in the doleful nights,
“ When the good wife her wint’ry vigil keeps,
“ And thinks alone of him at sea, and weeps.

“ Add to all these our works in single sheets,
“ That our Cassandras sing about the streets :
“ These, as I read, the grave good man would say,
“ ‘ Nay, Hannah!’ and she answer’d, ‘ What is Nay ?
“ ‘ What is there, pray, so hurtful in a song ?
“ ‘ It is our fancy only makes it wrong ;
“ ‘ His purer mind no evil thoughts alarm,
“ ‘ And innocence protects him like a charm.’
“ Then would the matron, when the song had past,
“ And her laugh over, ask a hymn at last ;
“ To the coarse jest she would attention lend,
“ And to the pious psalm in reverence bend :
“ She gave her every power and all her mind,
“ As chance directed, or as taste inclined.

“ More of our learning I will now omit,
“ We had our Cyclopædias of Wit,
“ And all our works, rare fate, were to our genius fit.

“ When I had read, and we were weary grown
“ Of other minds, the dame disclosed her own ;
“ And long have I in pleasing terror stay’d
“ To hear of boys trepann’d, and girls betray’d ;
“ Ashamed so long to stay, and yet to go afraid.
“ I could perceive, though Hannah bore full well
“ The ills of life, that few with her would dwell,
“ But pass away, like shadows o’er the plain
“ From flying clouds, and leave it fair again ;
“ Still every evil, be it great or small,
“ Would one past sorrow to the mind recal,
“ The grand disease of life, to which she turns,
“ And common cares and lighter suffering spurns.
“ ‘ O ! these are nothing, — they will never heed
“ ‘ Such idle contests, who have fought indeed,
“ ‘ And have the wounds unclosed.’— I understood
“ My hint to speak, and my design pursued,
“ Curious the secret of that heart to find,
“ To mirth, to song, to laughter loud inclined,
“ And yet to bear and feel a weight of grief behind:
“ How does she thus her little sunshine throw
“ Always before her ? — I should like to know.
“ My friend perceived, and would no longer hide
“ The bosom’s sorrow — Could she not confide
“ In one who wept, unhurt — in one who felt, untried ?

“ ‘ Dear child, I show you sins and sufferings strange,
 “ ‘ But you, like Adam, must for knowledge change
 “ ‘ That blissful ignorance : remember, then,
 “ ‘ What now you feel should be a check on men ;
 “ ‘ For then your passions no debate allow,
 “ ‘ And therefore lay up resolution now.
 “ ‘ ’T is not enough, that when you can persuade
 “ ‘ A maid to love, you know there ’s promise made ;
 “ ‘ ’T is not enough, that you design to keep
 “ ‘ That promise made, nor leave your lass to weep :
 “ ‘ But you must guard yourself against the sin,
 “ ‘ And think it such to draw the party in ;
 “ ‘ Nay, the more weak and easy to be won,
 “ ‘ The viler you who have the mischief done.

“ ‘ I am not angry, love ; but men should know
 “ ‘ They cannot always pay the debt they owe
 “ ‘ Their plighted honour ; they may cause the ill
 “ ‘ They cannot lessen, though they feel a will ;
 “ ‘ For he had truth with love, but love in youth
 “ ‘ Does wrong, that cannot be repair’d by truth.

“ ‘ Ruth—I may tell, too oft had she been told—
 “ ‘ Was tall and fair, and comely to behold,
 “ ‘ Gentle and simple, in her native place
 “ ‘ Not one compared with her in form or face ;
 “ ‘ She was not merry, but she gave our hearth
 “ ‘ A cheerful spirit that was more than mirth.

“ ‘ There was a sailor boy, and people said
 “ ‘ He was, as man, a likeness of the maid ;

“ ‘ But not in this — for he was ever glad,
 “ ‘ While Ruth was apprehensive, mild, and sad ;
 “ ‘ A quiet spirit hers, and peace would seek
 “ ‘ In meditation : tender, mild, and meek !
 “ ‘ Her loved the lad most truly ; and, in truth,
 “ ‘ She took an early liking to the youth :
 “ ‘ To her alone were his attentions paid,
 “ ‘ And they became the bachelor and maid.
 “ ‘ He wish’d to marry, but so prudent we
 “ ‘ And worldly wise, we said it could not be :
 “ ‘ They took the counsel,— may be they approved,—
 “ ‘ But still they grieved and waited, hoped and loved.

“ ‘ Now, my young friend, when of such state I speak

“ ‘ As one of danger, you will be to seek ;
 “ ‘ You know not, Richard, where the danger lies
 “ ‘ In loving hearts, kind words, and speaking eyes ;
 “ ‘ For lovers speak their wishes with their looks
 “ ‘ As plainly, love, as you can read your books.
 “ ‘ Then, too, the meetings and the partings, all
 “ ‘ The playful quarrels in which lovers fall,
 “ ‘ Serve to one end — each lover is a child,
 “ ‘ Quick to resent and to be reconciled ;
 “ ‘ And then their peace brings kindness that remains,
 “ ‘ And so the lover from the quarrel gains :
 “ ‘ When he has fault that she reproves, his fear
 “ ‘ And grief assure her she was too severe,
 “ ‘ And that brings kindness — when he bears an ill,
 “ ‘ Or disappointment, and is calm and still,
 “ ‘ She feels his own obedient to her will,

- “ ‘ And that brings kindness — and what kindness brings
“ ‘ I cannot tell you : — these were trying things.
“ ‘ They were as children, and they fell at length ;
“ ‘ The trial, doubtless, is beyond their strength
“ ‘ Whom grace supports not; and will grace support
“ ‘ The too confiding, who their danger court ?
“ ‘ Then they would marry, — but were now too late, —
“ ‘ All could their fault in sport or malice state ;
“ ‘ And though the day was fix’d, and now drew on,
“ ‘ I could perceive my daughter’s peace was gone ;
“ ‘ She could not bear the bold and laughing eye
“ ‘ That gazed on her — reproach she could not fly ;
“ ‘ Her grief she would not show, her shame could not deny :
“ ‘ For some with many virtues come to shame,
“ ‘ And some that lose them all preserve their name.

“ ‘ Fix’d was the day ; but ere that day appear’d,
“ ‘ A frightful rumour through the place was heard ;
“ ‘ War, who had slept awhile, awaked once more,
“ ‘ And gangs came pressing till they swept the shore :
“ ‘ Our youth was seized and quickly sent away,
“ ‘ Nor would the wretches for his marriage stay,
“ ‘ But bore him off, in barbarous triumph bore,
“ ‘ And left us all our miseries to deplore :
“ ‘ There were wives, maids, and mothers on the beach,
“ ‘ And some sad story appertain’d to each ;

“ ‘ Most sad to Ruth — to neither could she go !
“ ‘ But sat apart, and suffer’d matchless woe !
“ ‘ On the vile ship they turn’d their earnest view,
“ ‘ Not one last look allow’d, — not one adieu !
“ ‘ They saw the men on deck, but none distinctly knew.
“ ‘ And there she stay’d, regardless of each eye,
“ ‘ With but one hope, a fervent hope to die :
“ ‘ Nor cared she now for kindness — all beheld
“ ‘ Her, who invited none, and none repell’d ;
“ ‘ For there are griefs, my child, that sufferers hide,
“ ‘ And there are griefs that men display with pride ;
“ ‘ But there are other griefs that, so we feel,
“ ‘ We care not to display them nor conceal :
“ ‘ Such were our sorrows on that fatal day,
“ ‘ More than our lives the spoilers tore away ;
“ ‘ Nor did we heed their insult — some distress
“ ‘ No form or manner can make more or less,
“ ‘ And this is of that kind — this misery of a Press !
“ ‘ They say such things must be — perhaps they must ;
“ ‘ But, sure, they need not fright us and disgust ;
“ ‘ They need not soul-less crews of ruffians send
“ ‘ At once the ties of humble love to rend :
“ ‘ A single day had Thomas stay’d on shore
“ ‘ He might have wedded, and we ask’d no more ;
“ ‘ And that stern man, who forced the lad away,
“ ‘ Might have attended, and have graced the day ;
“ ‘ His pride and honour might have been at rest,
“ ‘ It is no stain to make a couple blest !
“ ‘ Blest ! — no, alas ! it was to ease the heart
“ ‘ Of one sore pang, and then to weep and part !

“ ‘ But this he would not. — English seamen fight
 “ ‘ For England’s gain and glory — it is right :
 “ ‘ But will that public spirit be so strong,
 “ ‘ Fill’d, as it must be, with their private wrong ?
 “ ‘ Forbid it, honour ! one in all the fleet
 “ ‘ Should hide in war, or from the foe retreat ;
 “ ‘ But is it just, that he who so defends
 “ ‘ His country’s cause, should hide him from her friends ?
 “ ‘ Sure, if they must upon our children seize,
 “ ‘ They might prevent such injuries as these ;
 “ ‘ Might hours — nay, days — in many a case allow,
 “ ‘ And soften all the griefs we suffer now.
 “ ‘ Some laws, some orders, might in part redress
 “ ‘ The licensed insults of a British Press,
 “ ‘ That keeps the honest and the brave in awe,
 “ ‘ Where might is right, and violence is law.
 “ ‘ Be not alarm’d, my child ; there’s none regard
 “ ‘ What you and I conceive so cruel-hard :
 “ ‘ There is compassion, I believe ; but still “ ‘ One wants the power to help, and one the will,
 “ ‘ And so from war to war the wrongs remain,
 “ ‘ While Reason pleads, and Misery sighs in vain.

“ ‘ Thus my poor Ruth was wretched and undone,
 “ ‘ Nor had a husband for her only son,
 “ ‘ Nor had he father ; hope she did awhile,
 “ ‘ And would not weep, although she could not smile ;
 “ ‘ Till news was brought us that the youth was slain,
 “ ‘ And then, I think, she never smiled again ;
 “ ‘ Or if she did, it was but to express
 “ ‘ A feeling far, indeed, from happiness !

“ ‘ Something that her bewilder’d mind conceived :
 “ ‘ When she inform’d us that she never grieved,
 “ ‘ But was right merry, then her head was wild,
 “ ‘ And grief had gain’d possession of my child :
 “ ‘ Yet, though bewilder’d for a time, and prone
 “ ‘ To ramble much and speak aloud, alone ;
 “ ‘ Yet did she all that duty ever ask’d,
 “ ‘ And more, her will self-govern’d and untask’d :
 “ ‘ With meekness bearing all reproach, all joy
 “ ‘ To her was lost ; she wept upon her boy,
 “ ‘ Wish’d for his death, in fear that he might live
 “ ‘ New sorrow to a burden’d heart to give.

“ ‘ There was a Teacher, where my husband went—“ ‘ Sent, as he told the people — what he meant
 “ ‘ You cannot understand, but — he was sent :
 “ ‘ This man from meeting came, and strove to win
 “ ‘ Her mind to peace by drawing off the sin,
 “ ‘ Or what it was, that, working in her breast,
 “ ‘ Robb’d it of comfort, confidence, and rest :
 “ ‘ He came and reason’d, and she seem’d to feel
 “ ‘ The pains he took — her griefs began to heal ;
 “ ‘ She ever answer’d kindly when he spoke,
 “ ‘ And always thank’d him for the pains he took ;
 “ ‘ So, after three long years, and all the while “ ‘ Wrapt up in grief, she bless’d us with a smile,
 “ ‘ And spoke in comfort ; but she mix’d no more
 “ ‘ With younger persons, as she did before.

“ ‘ Still Ruth was pretty ; in her person neat ;
 “ ‘ So thought the Teacher, when they chanced to meet :

“ ‘ He was a weaver by his worldly trade
 “ ‘ But powerful work in the assemblies made ;
 “ ‘ People came leagues to town to hear him sift
 “ ‘ The holy text, — he had the grace and gift ;
 “ ‘ Widows and maidens flock’d to hear his voice ;
 “ ‘ Of either kind he might have had his choice ;—
 “ ‘ But he had chosen — we had seen how shy
 “ ‘ The girl was getting, my good man and I :
 “ ‘ That when the weaver came, she kept with us,
 “ ‘ Where he his points and doctrines might discuss ;
 “ ‘ But in our bit of garden, or the room
 “ ‘ We call our parlour, there he must not come :
 “ ‘ She loved him not, and though she could attend
 “ ‘ To his discourses, as her guide and friend,
 “ ‘ Yet now to these she gave a listless ear,
 “ ‘ As if a friend she would no longer hear ;
 “ ‘ This might he take for woman’s art, and cried,
 “ ‘ ‘ Spouse of my heart, I must not be denied !’ — “ ‘ Fearless he spoke, and I had hope to see “ ‘ My girl a wife — but this was not to be.

“ ‘ My husband, thinking of his worldly store,
 “ ‘ And not, frail man, enduring to be poor,
 “ ‘ Seeing his friend would for his child provide
 “ ‘ And hers, he grieved to have the man denied ;
 “ ‘ For Ruth, when press’d, rejected him, and grew
 “ ‘ To her old sorrow, as if that were new.
 “ ‘ ‘ Who shall support her ?’ said her father, ‘ how “ ‘ Can I, infirm and weak as I am now ?
 “ ‘ And here a loving fool ’ — this gave her pain,
 “ ‘ Severe, indeed, but she would not complain :

“ ‘ Nor would consent, although the weaver grew
“ ‘ More fond, and would the frighten’d girl pursue.

“ ‘ Oh! much she begg’d him to forbear, to stand
“ ‘ Her soul’s kind friend, and not to ask her hand :

“ ‘ She could not love him. — ‘ Love me!’ he replied,
“ ‘ The love you mean is love unsanctified,
“ ‘ An earthly, wicked, sensual, sinful kind,
“ ‘ A creature-love, the passion of the blind.’
“ ‘ He did not court her, he would have her know,
“ ‘ For that poor love that will on beauty grow ;
“ ‘ No! he would take her as the Prophet took
“ ‘ One of the harlots in the holy book ;
“ ‘ And then he look’d so ugly and severe!
“ ‘ And yet so fond — she could not hide her fear.

“ ‘ This fondness grew her torment ; she would fly,
“ ‘ In woman’s terror, if he came but nigh ;
“ ‘ Nor could I wonder he should odious prove,
“ ‘ So like a ghost that left a grave for love.

“ ‘ But still her father lent his cruel aid
“ ‘ To the man’s hope, and she was more afraid :
“ ‘ He said no more she should his table share,
“ ‘ But be the parish or the Teacher’s care.
“ ‘ ‘ Three days I give you : see that all be right
“ ‘ On Monday-morning — this is Thursday-night —
“ ‘ Fulfil my wishes, girl! or else forsake my sight!’

“ ‘ I see her now ; and, she that was so meek,
“ ‘ It was a chance that she had power to speak,

“ ‘ Now spoke in earnest — ‘ Father! I obey,
“ ‘ And will remember the appointed day!’

“ ‘ Then came the man : she talk’d with him apart,
“ ‘ And, I believe, laid open all her heart ;
“ ‘ But all in vain — she said to me, in tears,
“ ‘ ‘ Mother! that man is not what he appears :
“ ‘ He talks of heaven, and let him, if he will,
“ ‘ But he has earthly purpose to fulfil ;
“ ‘ Upon my knees I begg’d him to resign
“ ‘ The hand he asks — he said, ‘ It shall be mine :
“ ‘ What! did the holy men of Scripture deign
“ ‘ To hear a woman when she said ‘ refrain?’
“ ‘ Of whom they chose they took them wives, and these
“ ‘ Made it their study and their wish to please ;
“ ‘ The women then were faithful and afraid,
“ ‘ As Sarah Abraham, they their lords obey’d,
“ ‘ And so she styled him ; ’t is in later days
“ ‘ Of foolish love that we our women praise,
“ ‘ Fall on the knee, and raise the suppliant
hand,
“ ‘ And court the favour that we might command.’

“ ‘ O! my dear mother, when this man has power,
“ ‘ How will he treat me — first may beasts devour!
“ ‘ Or death in every form that I could prove,
“ ‘ Except this selfish being’s hateful love.’

“ ‘ I gently blamed her, for I knew how hard
“ ‘ It is to force affection and regard.

“ ‘ Ah ! my dear lad, I talk to you as one
 “ ‘ Who know the misery of a heart undone :
 “ ‘ You know it not ; but, dearest boy, when man,
 “ ‘ Do not an ill because you find you can :
 “ ‘ Where is the triumph? when such things men seek,
 “ ‘ They only drive to wickedness the weak.

“ ‘ Weak was poor Ruth, and this good man so
 “ ‘ That to her weakness he had no regard : [hard,
 “ ‘ But we had two days’ peace ; he came, and then,
 “ ‘ My daughter whisper’d, ‘ Would there were no
     men !
 “ ‘ None to admire or scorn us, none to vex
 “ ‘ A simple, trusting, fond, believing sex ;
 “ ‘ Who truly love the worth that men profess,
 “ ‘ And think too kindly for their happiness.’ ’

“ ‘ Poor Ruth ! few heroines in the tragic page
 “ ‘ Felt more than thee in thy contracted stage ;
 “ ‘ Fair, fond, and virtuous, they our pity move,
 “ ‘ Impell’d by duty, agonized by love :
 “ ‘ But no Mandane, who in dread has knelt
 “ ‘ On the bare boards, has greater terrors felt,
 “ ‘ Nor been by warring passions more subdued,
 “ ‘ Than thou, by this man’s groveling wish pursued ;
 “ ‘ Doom’d to a parent’s judgment, all unjust,
 “ ‘ Doom’d the chance mercy of the world to trust,
 “ ‘ Or to wed grossness and conceal disgust.

“ ‘ If Ruth was frail, she had a mind too nice
 “ ‘ To wed with that which she beheld as vice :

“ ‘ To take a reptile, who, beneath a show
 “ ‘ Of peevish zeal, let carnal wishes grow ;
 “ ‘ Proud and yet mean, forbidding and yet full
 “ ‘ Of eager appetites, devout and dull,
 “ ‘ Waiting a legal right that he might seize
 “ ‘ His own, and his impatient spirit ease,
 “ ‘ Who would at once his pride and love indulge,
 “ ‘ His temper humour, and his spite divulge.
 “ ‘ This the poor victim saw — a second time,
 “ ‘ Sighing, she said, ‘ Shall I commit the crime,
 “ ‘ And now untempted? Can the form or rite
 “ ‘ Make me a wife in my Creator’s sight ?
 “ ‘ Can I the words without a meaning say ?
 “ ‘ Can I pronounce love, honour, or obey ?
 “ ‘ And if I cannot, shall I dare to wed,
 “ ‘ And go a harlot to a loathed bed ?
 “ ‘ Never, dear mother ! my poor boy and I
 “ ‘ Will at the mercy of a parish lie ; “ ‘ Reproved for wants that vices would remove,
 “ ‘ Reproach’d for vice that I could never love,
 “ ‘ Mix’d with a crew long wedded to disgrace,
 “ ‘ A vulgar, forward, equalizing race, —
 “ ‘ And am I doom’d to beg a dwelling in that place ? ’

“ ‘ Such was her reasoning : many times she
 “ ‘ The evils all, and was of each afraid ; [weigh’d
 “ ‘ She loathed the common board, the vulgar seat,
 “ ‘ Where shame, and want, and vice, and sorrow meet,
 “ ‘ Where frailty finds allies, where guilt insures retreat.

“ ‘ But peace again is fled : the Teacher comes,
 “ ‘ And new importance, haughtier air assumes.

“ ‘ No hapless victim of a tyrant’s love
“ ‘ More keenly felt, or more resisting strove
“ ‘ Against her fate ; she look’d on every side,
“ ‘ But there were none to help her, none to guide ;—
“ ‘ And he, the man who should have taught the soul, “ ‘ Wish’d but the body in his base control.

“ ‘ She left her infant on the Sunday morn,
“ ‘ A creature doom’d to shame ! in sorrow born :
“ ‘ A thing that languish’d, nor arrived at age
“ ‘ When the man’s thoughts with sin and pain engage—
“ ‘ She came not home to share our humble meal,
“ ‘ Her father thinking what his child would feel
“ ‘ From his hard sentence—still she came not home.
“ ‘ The night grew dark, and yet she was not come ;
“ ‘ The east-wind roar’d, the sea return’d the sound,
“ ‘ And the rain fell as if the world were drown’d :
“ ‘ There were no lights without, and my good man,
“ ‘ To kindness frighten’d, with a groan began
“ ‘ To talk of Ruth, and pray ; and then he took
“ ‘ The Bible down, and read the holy book ;
“ ‘ For he had learning : and when that was done
“ ‘ We sat in silence—whither could we run ?
“ ‘ We said, and then rush’d frighten’d from the door,
“ ‘ For we could bear our own conceit no more :
“ ‘ We call’d on neighbours—there she had not been ;
“ ‘ We met some wanderers—ours they had not seen ;
“ ‘ We hurried o’er the beach, both north and south,
“ ‘ Then join’d, and wander’d to our haven’s mouth :

“ ‘ Where rush’d the falling waters wildly out,
“ ‘ I scarcely heard the good man’s fearful shout,
“ ‘ Who saw a something on the billow ride,
“ ‘ And—‘ Heaven have mercy on our sins!’ he cried,
“ ‘ It is my child!’—and to the present hour
“ ‘ So he believes—and spirits have the power.

“ ‘ And she was gone! the waters wide and deep “ ‘ Roll’d o’er her body as she lay asleep.
“ ‘ She heard no more the angry waves and wind,
“ ‘ She heard no more the threat’ning of mankind;
“ ‘ Wrapt in dark weeds, the refuse of the storm,
“ ‘ To the hard rock was borne her comely form!

“ ‘ But oh! what storm was in that mind! what strife,
“ ‘ That could compel her to lay down her life!
“ ‘ For she was seen within the sea to wade,
“ ‘ By one at distance, when she first had pray’d;
“ ‘ Then to a rock within the hither shoal
“ ‘ Softly and with a fearful step she stole;
“ ‘ Then, when she gain’d it, on the top she stood
“ ‘ A moment still—and dropp’d into the flood!
“ ‘ The man cried loudly, but he cried in vain,—
“ ‘ She heard not then—she never heard again!
“ ‘ She had—pray, Heav’n!—she had that world
    in sight,
“ ‘ Where frailty mercy finds, and wrong has right;
“ ‘ But, sure, in this her portion such has been,
“ ‘ Well had it still remain’d a world unseen!’

“ Thus far the dame : the passions will dispense
“ To such a wild and rapid eloquence —
“ Will to the weakest mind their strength impart,
“ And give the tongue the language of the heart.”<sup>(1)</sup>

(1) [“ Strong as Mr. Crabbe’s painting is, its strength can be fully felt by those alone who have read the whole story of ‘ Ruth,’ and of all her wild and confounding afflictions. Never was hopeless distress, day by day persecuted unto the death, delineated with such fearful truth—but the whole description so hangs together in its darkness, that no fragments could present an adequate idea of the desolation.” — WILSON.]

BOOK VI. (1)

ADVENTURES OF RICHARD CONCLUDED.

“ THIS then, dear Richard, was the way you took
 “ To gain instruction—thine a curious book,

(1) [In the original draft the Book opens thus :—

The evening came : “ My Brother, what employs “ Thy mind ? ” said Richard ; “ what disturbs thy joys ?
 “ Hast thou not all the good the world can give,
 “ And liv’st a life that kings might sigh to live ?
 “ Can nothing please thee ? Thou wert wont to seize
 “ On passing themes, and make the trifles please.
 “ Thy Muse has many a pleasant fancy bred,
 “ And clothed in lively manner !— is she dead ? ”

“ Not dead but sick, and I too weary grow
 “ Of reaping nothing from the things I sow.
 “ What is the pleasure— thou perhaps canst say—
 “ Of playing tunes, if none can hear thee play ?
 “ Timid and proud, the world I cannot court,
 “ Nor show my labours for the critic’s sport.
 “ Hast thou the courage, Richard ? hast thou tried
 “ An Author’s perils ? hast thou felt his pride ?
 “ For vain the efforts, and they quickly tire,
 “ If we alone our precious things admire.”

“ Not so,” said Richard, and acquired a look
 That some expression from his feelings took ;
 “ Oh ! my dear Brother, if this Muse of mine,
 “ Who prompts the idle thought, the trifling line,

“ Containing much of both the false and true ;
 “ But thou hast read it, and with profit too.

“ Come, then, my Brother, now thy tale complete—
 “ I know thy first embarking in the fleet,
 “ Thy entrance in the army, and thy gain
 “ Of plenteous laurels in the wars of Spain,
 “ And what then follow'd ; but I wish to know
 “ When thou that heart hadst courage to bestow,
 “ When to declare it gain'd, and when to stand
 “ Before the priest, and give the plighted hand ;
 “ So shall I boldness from thy frankness gain
 “ To paint the frenzy that possess'd my brain ;

---

“ If she who calmly looks around, nor more
 “ Muse of the Mad, the Foolish, and the Poor,
 “ If she can pleasure—and she can —impart,
 “ Can wing the fancy, can enlarge the heart ;
 “ What must a Muse of strength, of force, of fire,
 “ In the true Poet's ample mind inspire ?
 “ What must he feel, who can the soul express
 “ Of saint or hero?—he must be no less.
 “ Nor less of evil minds he knows the pain,
 “ But quickly lost the anguish and the stain,
 “ While with the wisest, happiest, purest, best,
 “ His soul assimilates and loves to rest.
 “ Crowns would I spurn, and empires would I lose,
 “ For inspiration from the sacred Muse.”

“ A song,” said George, “ and I my secret store, “ Confined in dust and darkness, will explore.
 “ Poet with poet, bard and critic too,
 “ We fear no censure, and dread no review.
 “ A judge so placed must be to errors kind,
 “ And yield the mercy that he hopes to find ;
 “ Begin then, Richard, put thy fears aside ;
 “ Shall I condemn, who must myself be tried ?
 “ In me at least my Brother may confide.
 “ In hope of wearing, I shall yield the bays,
 “ And my self-love shall give my rival praise.”]

“ For rather there than in my heart I found
 “ Was my disease ; a poison, not a wound,
 “ A madness, Richard — but, I pray thee, tell “ Whom hast thou loved so dearly and so well ? ” (1)

(1) [In the original MS. thus: —

“ Wilt thou explain? I shall not grieve to share
 “ A lover’s sorrow, or a husband’s care?”

Kindness like this had moved a sterner man,
 Richard much more. He smiled, and thus began: —

“ No more I loved the sea ; that plunge had tamed
 “ My blood, by youth in idleness inflamed :
 “ To my affairs I forced my mind t’ attend,
 “ And sought the town to counsel with a friend.
 “ Much we debated — Could I now resign
 “ My earthly views, and look to things divine?
 “ Could I to merchandise my mind persuade,
 “ And wait in patience for the gain of trade?
 “ Or if I could not early habits quit,
 “ Had I a stock, and could subsist on wit?

“ Measures like these became my daily themes,
 “ My airy castles, my projector’s dreams.
 “ But health, so long neglected, now became
 “ No more the blessing of my failing frame :
 “ A fever seized it, of that dangerous kind,
 “ That while it taints the blood, infects the mind.
 “ I traced her flight as Reason slowly fled,
 “ And her last act assured me Hope was dead :
 “ But Reason err’d, and when she came again
 “ To aid the senses and direct the brain,
 “ She found a body weak, but well disposed
 “ For life’s enjoyments, and the grave was closed.
 “ But danger past, and my recovery slow,
 “ I sought the health that mountain gales bestow,
 “ And quiet walks where peace and violets grow.

“ Now, my dear Brother, when the languid frame
 “ Has this repose, and when the blood is tame,
 “ Yet strength increasing, and when every hour
 “ Gives some increase of pleasure and of power,
 “ When every sense partakes of fresh delight,
 “ And every object wakes an appetite ;

The younger man his gentle host obey'd,
 For some respect, though not required, was paid,
 Perhaps with all that independent pride
 Their different states would to the memory glide ;
 Yet was his manner unconstrain'd and free,
 And nothing in it like servility.

Then he began :—“ When first I reach'd the land,
 “ I was so ill that death appear'd at hand ;
 “ And though the fever left me, yet I grew
 “ So weak 't was judg'd that life would leave me too.
 “ I sought a village-priest, my mother's friend,
 “ And I believed with him my days would end :
 “ The man was kind, intelligent, and mild,
 “ Careless and shrewd, yet simple as the child ;
 “ For of the wisdom of the world his share
 “ And mine were equal—neither had to spare ;
 “ Else—with his daughters, beautiful and poor—
 “ He would have kept a sailor from his door :
 “ Two then were present, who adorn'd his home,
 “ But ever speaking of a third to come ;

---

“ When the mind rests not, but for ever roves
 “ On all around, and as it meets approves ;
 “ Then feels the heart its bliss, that season then is love.

“ Think of me thus disposed, and think me then “ Retired from crowded streets and busy men,
 “ In a neat cottage, by the sweetest stream
 “ That ever warbled in a poet's dream ;
 “ An ancient wood behold, so vast, so deep,
 “ That hostile armies might in safety sleep,
 “ Where loving pairs had no observers near,
 “ And fearing not themselves, had none to fear ;
 “ There to fair walks, fresh meadows, and clear skies,
 “ I fled as flee the weary and the wise.
 “ My host,” &c.]

“ Cheerful they were, not too reserved or free,
“ I loved them both, and never wish'd them three.

“ The Vicar's self, still further to describe,
“ Was of a simple, but a studious tribe ;
“ He from the world was distant, not retired,
“ Nor of it much possess'd, nor much desired :
“ Grave in his purpose, cheerful in his eye,
“ And with a look of frank benignity.
“ He lost his wife when they together past
“ Years of calm love, that triumph'd to the last.
“ He much of nature, not of man had seen,
“ Yet his remarks were often shrewd and keen ;
“ Taught not by books t' approve or to condemn,
“ He gain'd but little that he knew from them ;
“ He read with reverence and respect the few,
“ Whence he his rules and consolations drew ;
“ But men and beasts, and all that lived or moved,
“ Were books to him ; he studied them and loved.

“ He knew the plants in mountain, wood, or mead ;
“ He knew the worms that on the foliage feed ;
“ Knew the small tribes that 'scape the careless eye,
“ The plant's disease that breeds the embryo-fly ;
“ And the small creatures who on bark or bough
“ Enjoy their changes, changed we know not how ;
“ But now th' imperfect being scarcely moves,
“ And now takes wing and seeks the sky it loves.

“ He had no system, and forbore to read
“ The learned labours of th' immortal Swede ;

“ But smiled to hear the creatures he had known
 “ So long, were now in class and order shown,
 “ Genus and species—‘Is it meet,’ said he,
 “ ‘This creature’s name should one so sounding be?
 “ ‘’Tis but a fly, though first-born of the spring—
 “ ‘Bombylius majus, dost thou call the thing?
 “ ‘Majus, indeed! and yet, in fact, ’tis true,
 “ ‘We all are majors, all are minors too,
 “ ‘Except the first and last,—th’ immensely distant two.
 “ ‘And here again,—what call the learned this?
 “ ‘Both Hippobosca (1) and Hirundinis?
 “ ‘Methinks the creature should be proud to find
 “ ‘That he employs the talents of mankind;
 “ ‘And that his sovereign master shrewdly looks, “ ‘Counts all his parts, and puts them in his books.
 “ ‘Well! go thy way, for I do feel it shame
 “ ‘To stay a being with so proud a name.’

“ Such were his daughters, such my quiet friend,
 “ And pleasant was it thus my days to spend;
 “ But when Matilda at her home I saw,
 “ Whom I beheld with anxiousness and awe,
 “ The ease and quiet that I found before
 “ At once departed, and return’d no more.
 “ No more their music soothed me as they play’d,
 “ But soon her words a strong impression made;
 “ The sweet Enthusiast, so I deem’d her, took “ My mind, and fix’d it to her speech and look;

(1) The horse-fly.

“ My soul, dear girl! she made her constant care,
 “ But never whisper’d to my heart ‘ beware!’
 “ In love no dangers rise till we are in the snare.

“ Her father sometimes question’d of my creed,
 “ And seem’d to think it might amendment need;
 “ But great the difference when the pious maid
 “ To the same errors her attention paid;
 “ Her sole design that I should think aright,
 “ And my conversion her supreme delight: (1)
 “ Pure was her mind, and simple her intent,
 “ Good all she sought, and kindness all she meant.
 “ Next to religion, friendship was our theme,
 “ Related souls and their refined esteem:
 “ We talk’d of scenes where this is real found,
 “ And love subsists without a dart or wound;
 “ But there intruded thoughts not all serene,
 “ And wishes not so calm would intervene.”

“ Saw not her father?”

(1) [See Mr. Crabbe’s Lines, addressed to Miss Elmy, in 1777, antè, Vol. II. p. 308. —

“ My Mira came! be ever blest the hour,
 “ That drew my thoughts half way from folly’s power;
 “ She first my soul with loftier notions fired;
 “ I saw their truth, and as I saw admired;
 “ With greater force returning reason moved,
 “ And as returning reason urged, I loved;
 “ Till pain, reflection, hope, and love allied
 “ My bliss precarious to a surer guide —
 “ To Him who gives pain, reason, hope, and love,
 “ Each for that end that angels must approve;
 “ One beam of light He gave my mind to see,
 “ And gave that light, my heavenly fair, by thee;
 “ That beam shall raise my thoughts, and mend my strain,
 “ Nor shall my vows, nor prayers, nor verse be vain,” &c.]

“ Yes ; but saw no more
 “ Than he had seen without a fear before :
 “ He had subsisted by the church and plough,
 “ And saw no cause for apprehension now.
 “ We, too, could live : he thought not passion wrong,
 “ But only wonder’d we delay’d so long.
 “ More had he wonder’d had he known esteem
 “ Was all we mention’d, friendship was our theme. —

“ Laugh, if you please, I must my tale pursue—
 “ This sacred friendship thus in secret grew
 “ An intellectual love, most tender, chaste, and true :
 “ Unstain’d, we said, nor knew we how it chanced
 “ To gain some earthly soil as it advanced ;
 “ But yet my friend, and she alone, could prove
 “ How much it differ’d from romantic love —
 “ But this and more I pass—No doubt, at length,
 “ We could perceive the weakness of our strength.

“ O ! days remember’d well ! remember’d all !
 “ The bitter-sweet, the honey and the gall ;
 “ Those garden rambles in the silent night,
 “ Those trees so shady, and that moon so bright ;
 “ That thickset alley by the arbour closed,
 “ That woodbine seat where we at last reposed ;
 “ And then the hopes that came and then were gone,
 “ Quick as the clouds beneath the moon pass’d on :
 “ Now, in this instant, shall my love be shown,
 “ I said—O ! no, the happy time is flown !

“ You smile : remember, I was weak and low,
 “ And fear’d the passion as I felt it grow :

“ Will she, I said, to one so poor attend,
“ Without a prospect, and without a friend?
“ I dared not ask her — till a rival came —
“ But hid the secret, slow-consuming flame.

“ I once had seen him ; then familiar, free,
“ More than became a common guest to be ;
“ And sure, I said, he has a look of pride
“ And inward joy, — a lover satisfied.

“ Can you not, Brother, on adventures past,
“ A thought, as on a lively prospect, cast?
“ On days of dear remembrance ! days that seem,
“ When past — nay, even when present, like a dream —
“ These white and blessed days, that softly shine
“ On few, nor oft on them — have they been thine ? ”

George answer'd, “ Yes ! dear Richard, through the years

“ Long past, a day so white and mark'd appears : (1)
“ As in the storm that pours destruction round,
“ Is here and there a ship in safety found ;
“ So in the storms of life some days appear
“ More blest and bright for the preceding fear ;
“ These times of pleasure that in life arise,
“ Like spots in deserts, that delight, surprise,
“ And to our wearied senses give the more,
“ For all the waste behind us and before ;

(1) It is recorded of the Scythians, that they were accustomed to mark every happy day with a white stone, and every unhappy day with a black one.

“ And thou, dear Richard, hast then had thy share
“ Of those enchanting times that baffle care ? ”

“ Yes, I have felt this life-refreshing gale
“ That bears us onward when our spirits fail ;
“ That gives those spirits vigour and delight —
“ I would describe it, could I do it right.

“ Such days have been — a day of days was one
“ When, rising gaily with the rising sun,
“ I took my way to join a happy few,
“ Known not to me, but whom Matilda knew,
“ To whom she went a guest, and message sent,
“ ‘ Come thou to us,’ and as a guest I went. (1)

“ There are two ways to Brandon — by the heath
“ Above the cliff, or on the sand beneath,
“ Where the small pebbles, wetted by the wave,
“ To the new day reflected lustre gave :
“ At first above the rocks I made my way,
“ Delighted looking at the spacious bay,
“ And the large fleet that to the northward steer’d
“ Full sail, that glorious in my view appear’d ;
“ For where does man evince his full control
“ O’er subject matter, where displays the soul
“ Its mighty energies with more effect,
“ Than when her powers that moving mass direct ?
“ Than when man guides the ship man’s art has made,
“ And makes the winds and waters yield him aid ?

(1) [MS. — “ With whom she tarried, a delighted guest !
“ Delightful ever ! blessing still and bless’d.”]

“ Much as I long’d to see the maid I loved,
“ Through scenes so glorious I at leisure moved ;
“ For there are times when we do not obey
“ The master-passion—when we yet delay—
“ When absence, soon to end, we yet prolong,
“ And dally with our wish although so strong.

“ High were my joys, but they were sober too,
“ Nor reason spoil’d the pictures fancy drew ;
“ I felt—rare feeling in a world like this—
“ The sober certainty of waking bliss ;
“ Add too the smaller aids to happy men,
“ Convenient helps—these too were present then.
“ But what are spirits? light indeed and gay
“ They are, like winter flowers, nor last a day ; “ Comes a rude icy wind, — they feel, and fade away.

“ High beat my heart when to the house I came,
“ And when the ready servant gave my name ;
“ But when I enter’d that pernicious room,
“ Gloomy it look’d, and painful was the gloom ;
“ And jealous was the pain, and deep the sigh
“ Caused by this gloom, and pain, and jealousy :
“ For there Matilda sat, and her beside
“ That rival soldier, with a soldier’s pride ;
“ With self-approval in his laughing face,
“ His seem’d the leading spirit of the place :
“ She was all coldness—yet I thought a look,
“ But that corrected, tender welcome spoke :
“ It was as lightning which you think you see,
“ But doubt, and ask if lightning it could be.

“ Confused and quick my introduction pass’d,
“ When I, a stranger and on strangers cast,
“ Beheld the gallant man as he display’d
“ Uncheck’d attention to the guilty maid ;
“ O ! how it grieved me that she dared t’ excite
“ Those looks in him that show’d so much delight ;
“ Egregious coxcomb ! there—he smiled again,
“ As if he sought to aggravate my pain :
“ Still she attends—I must approach—and find,
“ Or make, a quarrel, to relieve my mind.

“ In vain I try—politeness as a shield
“ The angry strokes of my contempt repell’d ;
“ Nor must I violate the social law
“ That keeps the rash and insolent in awe.
“ Once I observed, on hearing my replies,
“ The woman’s terror fix’d on me the eyes
“ That look’d entreaty ; but the guideless rage
“ Of jealous minds no softness can assuage.
“ But, lo ! they rise, and all prepare to take
“ The promised pleasure on the neighbouring lake.

“ Good Heaven ! they whisper ! Is it come to this ?
“ Already !—then may I my doubt dismiss :
“ Could he so soon a timid girl persuade ?
“ What rapid progress has the coxcomb made !
“ And yet how cool her looks, and how demure !
“ The falling snow nor lily’s flower so pure :
“ What can I do ? I must the pair attend,
“ And watch this horrid business to its end.
“ There, forth they go ! He leads her to the shore—
“ Nay, I must follow,—I can bear no more :

“ What can the handsome gipsy have in view
“ In trifling thus, as she appears to do?
“ I, who for months have labour'd to succeed,
“ Have only lived her vanity to feed.

“ O! you will make me room—'tis very kind,
“ And meant for him — it tells him he must
    mind;
“ Must not be careless:—I can serve to draw
“ The soldier on, and keep the man in awe.
“ O! I did think she had a guileless heart,
“ Without deceit, capriciousness, or art;
“ And yet a stranger, with a coat of red,
“ Has, by an hour's attention, turn'd her head.

“ Ah! how delicious was the morning-drive,
“ The soul awaken'd, and its hopes alive:
“ How dull this scene by trifling minds enjoy'd,
“ The heart in trouble and its hope destroy'd.

“ Well, now we land— And will he yet support
“ This part? What favour has he now to court?
“ Favour! O, no! He means to quit the fair;
“ How strange! how cruel! Will she not despair?
“ Well! take her hand—no further if you please,
“ I cannot suffer fooleries like these:—
“ How? 'Love to Julia!' to his wife?—O! dear
“ And injured creature, how must I appear, “ Thus haughty in my looks, and in my words severe?
“ Her love to Julia, to the school-day friend
“ To whom those letters she has lately penn'd!

“ Can she forgive? And now I think again,
 “ The man was neither insolent nor vain ;
 “ Good humour chiefly would a stranger trace,
 “ Were he impartial, in the air or face ;
 “ And I so splenetic the whole way long,
 “ And she so patient—it was very wrong. (1)

“ The boat had landed in a shady scene ;
 “ The grove was in its glory, fresh and green ;
 “ The showers of late had swell'd the branch and bough,
 “ And the sun's fervour made them pleasant now.
 “ Hard by an oak arose in all its pride,
 “ And threw its arms along the water's side ;
 “ Its leafy limbs, that on the glassy lake
 “ Stretch far, and all those dancing shadows make.

“ And now we walk — now smaller parties seek
 “ Or sun or shade as pleases — Shall I speak ?
 “ Shall I forgiveness ask, and then apply
 “ For — O ! that vile and intercepting cry.
 “ Alas ! what mighty ills can trifles make, —
 “ A hat ! the idiot's — fallen in the lake !

(1) [“ Truth compels to say, that Mr. Crabbe was by no means free from the less amiable sign of a strong attachment — jealousy. The description of this self torment, which occurs in the sixth book of ‘ Tales of the Hall,’ could only have been produced by one who had undergone the pain himself; and the catastrophe which follows may be considered as a vivid representation of his happier hours at Beccles. Miss Elmy was then remarkably pretty; she had a lively disposition, and, having generally more than her share of attention in a mixed company, her behaviour might, without any coquettish inclination, occasion painful surmises in a sensitive lover, who could only at intervals join her circle.” — Life, antè, Vol. I. p. 37.]

“ What serious mischief can such idlers do ?

“ I almost wish the head had fallen too.

“ No more they leave us, but will hover round,

“ As if amusement at our cost they found ;

“ Vex'd and unhappy I indeed had been,

“ Had I not something in my charmer seen

“ Like discontent, that, though corrected, dwelt

“ On that dear face, and told me what she felt.

“ Now must we cross the lake, and as we cross'd

“ Was my whole soul in sweet emotion lost ;

“ Clouds in white volumes roll'd beneath the moon,

“ Softening her light that on the waters shone :

“ This was such bliss ! even then it seem'd relief

“ To veil the gladness in a show of grief :

“ We sigh'd as we conversed, and said, how deep

“ This lake on which those broad dark shadows

“ There is between us and a watery grave [sleep ;

“ But a thin plank, and yet our fate we brave.

“ ‘ What if it burst ? ’ Matilda, then my care

“ Would be for thee : all danger I would dare,

“ And, should my efforts fail, thy fortune would I share.

“ ‘ The love of life, ’ she said, ‘ would powerful prove ! ’

“ O ! not so powerful as the strength of love :—

“ A look of kindness gave the grateful maid,

“ That had the real effort more than paid.

“ But here we land, and haply now may choose

“ Companions home—our way, too, we may lose :

“ In these drear, dark, inosculating lanes,
 “ The very native of his doubt complains ;
 “ No wonder then that in such lonely ways
 “ A stranger, heedless of the country, strays ;
 “ A stranger, too, whose many thoughts all meet
 “ In one design, and none regard his feet.

“ ‘ Is this the path ? ’ — the cautious fair one cries,
 “ I answer, Yes ! — ‘ We shall our friends surprise,’
 “ She added, sighing — I return the sighs.

“ ‘ Will they not wonder ? ’ O ! they would, indeed,
 “ Could they the secrets of this bosom read,
 “ These chilling doubts, these trembling hopes I feel !
 “ The faint, fond hopes I can no more conceal —
 “ I love thee, dear Matilda ! — to confess
 “ The fact is dangerous, fatal to suppress.

“ And now in terror I approach the home
 “ Where I may wretched but not doubtful come,
 “ Where I must be all ecstasy, or all —
 “ O ! what will you a wretch rejected call ?
 “ Not man, for I shall lose myself, and be
 “ A creature lost to reason, losing thee.

“ Speak, my Matilda ! on the rack of fear
 “ Suspend me not — I would my sentence hear,
 “ Would learn my fate — Good Heaven ! and what portend
 “ These tears ? — and fall they for thy wretched friend ?

“ Or —— but I cease ; I cannot paint the bliss,
“ From a confession soft and kind as this ;
“ Nor where we walk'd, nor how our friends we met,
“ Or what their wonder — I am wondering yet ;
“ For he who nothing heeds has nothing to forget.

“ All thought, yet thinking nothing—all delight
“ In every thing, but nothing in my sight !
“ Nothing I mark or learn, but am possess'd
“ Of joys I cannot paint, and I am bless'd
“ In all that I conceive — whatever is, is best.
“ Ready to aid all beings, I would go
“ The world around to succour human woe ;
“ Yet am so largely happy, that it seems
“ There are no woes, and sorrows are but dreams.

“ There is a college joy, to scholars known,
“ When the first honours are proclaim'd their own ;
“ There is ambition's joy, when in their race
“ A man surpassing rivals gains his place ;
“ There is a beauty's joy, amid a crowd
“ To have that beauty her first fame allow'd ;
“ And there's the conqueror's joy, when, dubious held
“ And long the fight, he sees the foe repell'd :

“ But what are these, or what are other joys,
“ That charm kings, conquerors, beauteous nymphs
    and boys,
“ Or greater yet, if greater yet be found,
“ To that delight when love's dear hope is crown'd ?

“ To the first beating of a lover’s heart,
“ When the loved maid endeavours to impart,
“ Frankly yet faintly, fondly yet in fear,
“ The kind confession that he holds so dear.
“ Now in the morn of our return how strange
“ Was this new feeling, this delicious change ;
“ That sweet delirium, when I gazed in fear,
“ That all would yet be lost and disappear.

“ Such was the blessing that I sought for pain,
“ In some degree to be myself again ;
“ And when we met a shepherd old and lame,
“ Cold and diseased, it seem’d my blood to tame ;
“ And I was thankful for the moral sight,
“ That soberised the vast and wild delight.”

BOOK VII.

THE ELDER BROTHER.

“ THANKS, my dear Richard ; and, I pray thee, deign

“ To speak the truth—does all this love remain,

“ And all this joy ? for views and flights sublime,

“ Ardent and tender, are subdued by time.

“ Speak'st thou of her to whom thou madest thy vows,

“ Of my fair sister, of thy lawful spouse ?

“ Or art thou talking some frail love about,

“ The rambling fit, before th' abiding gout ? ”

“ Nay, spare me, Brother, an adorer spare :

“ Love and the gout ! thou wouldst not these compare ? ”

“ Yea, and correctly ; teasing ere they come,

“ They then confine their victim to his home :

“ In both are previous feints and false attacks,
 “ Both place the grieving patient on their racks ;
 “ They both are ours, with all they bring, for life,
 “ ’T is not in us t’ expel or gout or wife ;
 “ On man a kind of dignity they shed,
 “ A sort of gloomy pomp about his bed :
 “ Then if he leaves them, go where’er he will,
 “ They have a claim upon his body still ;
 “ Nay, when they quit him, as they sometimes do,
 “ What is there left t’ enjoy or to pursue ? —
 “ But dost thou love this woman ? ”

“ O ! beyond

“ What I can tell thee of the true and fond :
 “ Hath she not soothed me, sick, enrich’d me, poor,
 “ And banish’d death and misery from my door ?
 “ Has she not cherish’d every moment’s bliss,
 “ And made an Eden of a world like this ?
 “ When Care would strive with us his watch to keep,
 “ Has she not sung the snarling fiend to sleep ?
 “ And when Distress has look’d us in the face,
 “ Has she not told him, ‘ Thou art not Disgrace ? ’ ”

“ I must behold her, Richard ; I must see
 “ This patient spouse who sweetens misery —
 “ But didst thou need, and wouldst thou not apply ? —
 “ Nay thou wert right — but then how wrong was I ! ”

“ My indiscretion was ” —

“ No more repeat ;

“ Would I were nothing worse than indiscreet ; —
 “ But still there is a plea that I could bring,
 “ Had I the courage to describe the thing.”

“ Then thou, too, Brother, couldst of weakness tell;
“ Thou, too, hast found the wishes that rebel
“ Against the sovereign reason ; at some time
“ Thou hast been fond, heroic, and sublime ;
“ Wrote verse, it may be, and for one dear maid
“ The sober purposes of life delay'd ;
“ From year to year the fruitless chase pursued,
“ And hung enamour'd o'er the flying good :
“ Then be thy weakness to a Brother shown,
“ And give him comfort who displays his own.”

“ Ungenerous youth ! dost thou presuming ask
“ A man so grave his failings to unmask ?
“ What if I tell thee of a waste of time,
“ That on my spirit presses as a crime,
“ Wilt thou despise me ? — I, who, soaring, fell
“ So late to rise — Hear then the tale I tell ;
“ Who tells what thou shalt hear, esteems his hearer
    well.

---

“ Yes, my dear Richard, thou shalt hear me own
“ Follies and frailties thou hast never known ;
“ Thine was a frailty, — folly, if you please, —
“ But mine a flight, a madness, a disease.

“ Turn with me to my twentieth year, for then
“ The lover's frenzy ruled the poet's pen ;
“ When virgin reams were soil'd with lays of love,
“ The flinty hearts of fancied nymphs to move :
“ Then was I pleased in lonely ways to tread,
“ And muse on tragic tales of lovers dead ;

“ For all the merit I could then descry
“ In man or woman was for love to die.

“ I mused on charmers chaste, who pledged their truth,
“ And left no more the once-accepted youth ;
“ Though he disloyal, lost, diseased, became,
“ The widow'd turtle's was a deathless flame ;
“ This faith, this feeling, gave my soul delight,
“ Truth in the lady, ardour in the knight.

“ I built me castles wondrous rich and rare,
“ Few castle-builders could with me compare ;
“ The hall, the palace, rose at my command,
“ And these I fill'd with objects great and grand.
“ Virtues sublime, that nowhere else would live,
“ Glory and pomp, that I alone could give ;
“ Trophies and thrones by matchless valour gain'd,
“ Faith unreprieved, and chastity unstain'd ; [soul,
“ With all that soothes the sense and charms the “ Came at my call, and were in my control.

“ And who was I ? a slender youth and tall,
“ In manner awkward, and with fortune small ;
“ With visage pale, my motions quick and slow,
“ That fall and rising in the spirits show ;
“ For none could more by outward signs express
“ What wise men lock within the mind's recess ;
“ Had I a mirror set before my view,
“ I might have seen what such a form could do ;
“ Had I within the mirror truth beheld,
“ I should have such presuming thoughts repell'd :

“ But awkward as I was, without the grace
“ That gives new beauty to a form or face,
“ Still I expected friends most true to prove,
“ And grateful, tender, warm, assiduous love.

“ Assured of this, that love’s delicious bond
“ Would hold me ever faithful, ever fond ;
“ It seem’d but just that I in love should find
“ A kindred heart as constant and as kind.
“ Give me, I cried, a beauty ; none on earth
“ Of higher rank or nobler in her birth ;
“ Pride of her race, her father’s hope and care,
“ Yet meek as children of the cottage are ;
“ Nursed in the court, and there by love pursued,
“ But fond of peace, and blest in solitude ;
“ By rivals honour’d, and by beauties praised,
“ Yet all unconscious of the envy raised ;
“ Suppose her this, and from attendants freed,
“ To want my prowess in a time of need,
“ When safe and grateful she desires to show
“ She feels the debt that she delights to owe,
“ And loves the man who saved her in distress—
“ So Fancy will’d, nor would compound for less.

“ This was my dream.—In some auspicious hour,
“ In some sweet solitude, in some green bower,
“ Whither my fate should lead me, there, unseen,
“ I should behold my fancy’s gracious queen,
“ Singing sweet song ! that I should hear awhile,
“ Then catch the transient glory of a smile ;
“ Then at her feet with trembling hope should kneel,
“ Such as rapt saints and raptured lovers feel ;

“ To watch the chaste unfoldings of her heart,
“ In joy to meet, in agony to part,
“ And then in tender song to soothe my grief,
“ And hail, in glorious rhyme, my Lady of the Leaf.

“ To dream these dreams I chose a woody scene,
“ My guardian-shade, the world and me between ;
“ A green inclosure, where beside its bound
“ A thorny fence beset its beauties round,
“ Save where some creature’s force had made a way
“ For me to pass, and in my kingdom stray :
“ Here then I stray’d, then sat me down to call,
“ Just as I will’d, my shadowy subjects all !
“ Fruits of all minds conceived on every coast,
“ Fay, witch, enchanter, devil, demon, ghost ;
“ And thus with knights and nymphs, in halls and bowers,
“ In war and love, I pass’d unnumber’d hours :
“ Gross and substantial beings all forgot,
“ Ideal glories beam’d around the spot,
“ And all that was, with me, of this poor world was not.

“ Yet in this world there was a single scene,
“ That I allow’d with mine to intervene ;
“ This house, where never yet my feet had stray’d,
“ I with respect and timid awe survey’d ;
“ With pleasing wonder I have oft-times stood,
“ To view these turrets rising o’er the wood ;
“ When Fancy to the halls and chambers flew,
“ Large, solemn, silent, that I must not view ;

“ The moat was then, and then o’er all the ground
“ Tall elms and ancient oaks stretch’d far around ;
“ And where the soil forbad the nobler race, “ Dwarf trees and humbler shrubs had found their place,
“ Forbidding man in their close hold to go,
“ Haw, gatter, holm, the service and the sloe ;
“ With tangling weeds that at the bottom grew,
“ And climbers all above their feathery branches threw.
“ Nor path of man or beast was there espied,
“ But there the birds of darkness loved to hide,
“ The loathed toad to lodge, and speckled snake to glide.

“ To me this hall, thus view’d in part, appear’d
“ A mansion vast ; I wonder’d, and I fear’d :
“ There as I wander’d, Fancy’s forming eye
“ Could gloomy cells and dungeons dark espy ; “ Winding through these, I caught the appalling sound
“ Of troubled souls, that guilty minds confound, “ Where Murder made its way, and Mischief stalk’d around.
“ Above the roof were raised the midnight storms,
“ And the wild lights betray’d the shadowy forms.
“ With all these flights and fancies, then so dear,
“ I reach’d the birthday of my twentieth year ;
“ And in the evening of a day in June
“ Was singing — as I sang — some heavenly tune ;
“ My native tone, indeed, was harsh and hoarse,
“ But he who feels such powers can sing of course —

“ Is there a good on earth, or gift divine,
“ That Fancy cannot say, Behold ! 'tis mine ?

“ So was I singing, when I saw descend,
“ From this old seat a lady and her friend ;
“ Downward they came with steady pace and slow,
“ Arm link'd in arm, to bless my world below.
“ I knew not yet if they escaped, or chose
“ Their own free way,—if they had friends or foes,—
“ But near to my dominion drew the pair,
“ Link'd arm in arm, and walk'd conversing, there.

“ I saw them ere they came, myself unseen,
“ My lofty fence and thorny bound between—
“ And one alone, one matchless face I saw,
“ And, though at distance, felt delight and awe :
“ Fancy and truth adorn'd her ; fancy gave “ Much, but not all ; truth help'd to make their slave ;
“ For she was lovely,—all was not the vain
“ Or sickly homage of a fever'd brain ;
“ No ! she had beauty, such as they admire
“ Whose hope is earthly, and whose love desire ;
“ Imagination might her aid bestow,
“ But she had charms that only truth could show.

“ Their dress was such as well became the place,
“ But One superior ; hers the air, the grace,
“ The condescending looks, that spoke the nobler
“ Slender she was and tall : her fairy-feet [race.
“ Bore her right onward, to my shady seat ;

“ And Oh ! I sigh’d that she would nobly dare
“ To come, nor let her friend the adventure share ;
“ But see how I in my dominion reign,
“ And never wish to view the world again.

“ Thus was I musing, seeing with my eyes
“ These objects, with my mind her fantasies,
“ And chiefly thinking — Is this maid, divine
“ As she appears, to be this queen of mine ?
“ Have I from henceforth beauty in my view,
“ Not airy all, but tangible and true ?
“ Here then I fix, here bound my vagrant views,
“ And here devote my heart, my time, my Muse.

“ She saw not this, though ladies early trace
“ Their beauty’s power, the glories of their face ;
“ Yet knew not this fair creature — could not know —
“ That new-born love ! that I too soon must show :
“ And I was musing — How shall I begin ?
“ How make approach my unknown way to win,
“ And to that heart, as yet untouch’d, make known
“ The wound, the wish, the weakness of my own ?
“ Such is my part, but — Mercy ! what alarm ?
“ Dare aught on earth that sovereign beauty harm ?
“ Again — the shrieking charmers — how they rend
“ The gentle air — The shriekers lack a friend —
“ They are my princess and the attendant maid
“ In so much danger, and so much afraid ! —
“ But whence the terror ? — Let me haste and see “ What has befallen them who cannot flee —
“ Whence can the peril rise ? What can that peril be ?

“ It soon appear'd, that while this nymph divine
“ Moved on, there met her rude uncivil kine,
“ Who knew her not — the damsel was not there
“ Who kept them — all obedient — in her care ;
“ Strangers they thus defied and held in scorn,
“ And stood in threat'ning posture, hoof and horn ; “ While Susan — pail in hand — could stand the while
“ And prate with Daniel at a distant stile.

“ As feeling prompted, to the place I ran,
“ Resolved to save the maids and show the man :
“ Was each a cow like that which challenged Guy,
“ I had resolved to attack it, and defy
“ In mortal combat ! to repel or die.
“ That was no time to parley — or to say,
“ I will protect you — fly in peace away !
“ Lo ! yonder stile — but with an air of grace,
“ As I supposed, I pointed to the place.

“ The fair ones took me at my sign, and flew,
“ Each like a dove, and to the stile withdrew,
“ Where safe, at distance, and from terrors free,
“ They turn'd to view my beastly foes and me.

“ I now had time my business to behold,
“ And did not like it — let the truth be told :
“ The cows, though cowards, yet in numbers strong,
“ Like other mobs, by might defended wrong ;
“ In man's own pathway fix'd, they seem'd disposed
“ For hostile measure, and in order closed,

“ Then halted near me, as I judged, to treat,
“ Before we came to triumph or defeat.

“ I was in doubt : ’t was sore disgrace, I knew,
“ To turn my back, and let the cows pursue ;
“ And should I rashly mortal strife begin,
“ ’T was all unknown who might the battle win ;
“ And yet to wait, and neither fight nor fly,
“ Would mirth create, — I could not that deny ;
“ It look’d as if for safety I would treat,
“ Nay, sue for peace — No ! rather come defeat !
“ ‘ Look to me, loveliest of thy sex ! and give
“ ‘ One cheering glance, and not a cow shall live ;
“ ‘ For, lo ! this iron bar, this strenuous arm,
“ ‘ And those dear eyes to aid me as a charm.’

“ Say, goddess ! Victory ! say, on man or cow
“ Meanest thou now to perch — On neither now —
“ For, as I ponder’d, on their way appear’d
“ The Amazonian milker of the herd ;
“ These, at the wonted signals, made a stand,
“ And woo’d the nymph of the relieving hand ;
“ Nor heeded now the man, who felt relief
“ Of other kind, and not unmix’d with grief ;
“ For now he neither should his courage prove,
“ Nor in his dying moments boast his love.

“ My sovereign beauty with amazement saw —
“ So she declared — the horrid things in awe ;
“ Well pleased, she witness’d what respect was paid
“ By such brute natures — Every cow afraid,

“ And kept at distance by the powers of one,
“ Who had to her a dangerous service done,
“ That prudence had declined, that valour’s self might shun.

“ So thought the maid, who now, beyond the stile,
“ Received her champion with a gracious smile ;
“ Who now had leisure on those charms to dwell,
“ That he could never from his thoughts expel ;
“ There are, I know, to whom a lover seems,
“ Praising his mistress, to relate his dreams ;
“ But, Richard, looks like those, that angel-face
“ Could I no more in sister-angel trace ;
“ Oh ! it was more than fancy ! it was more
“ Than in my darling views I saw before,
“ When I my idol made, and my allegiance swore.

“ Henceforth ’twas bliss upon that face to dwell,
“ Till every trace became indelible ;
“ I blest the cause of that alarm, her fright,
“ And all that gave me favour in her sight,
“ Who then was kind and grateful, till my mind,
“ Pleased and exulting, awe awhile resign’d.
“ For in the moment when she feels afraid,
“ How kindly speaks the condescending maid :
“ She sees her danger near, she wants her lover’s aid ;
“ As fire electric, when discharged, will strike
“ All who receive it, and they feel alike,
“ So in the shock of danger and surprise
“ Our minds are struck, and mix, and sympathise.

“ But danger dies, and distance comes between
“ My state and that of my all glorious queen ;
“ Yet much was done—upon my mind a chain
“ Was strongly fix’d, and likely to remain ;
“ Listening, I grew enamour’d of the sound,
“ And felt to her my very being bound ;
“ I blest the scene, nor felt a power to move,
“ Lost in the ecstasies of infant love.

“ She saw and smiled ; the smile delight convey’d,
“ My love encouraged, and my act repaid :
“ In that same smile I read the charmer meant
“ To give her hero chaste encouragement ;
“ It spoke, as plainly as a smile can speak,
“ ‘ Seek whom you love, love freely whom you seek.’

“ Thus, when the lovely witch had wrought her charm,
“ She took th’ attendant maiden by the arm,
“ And left me fondly gazing, till no more
“ I could the shade of that dear form explore ;
“ Then to my secret haunt I turn’d again,
“ Fire in my heart, and fever in my brain ;
“ That face of her for ever in my view,
“ Whom I was henceforth fated to pursue,
“ To hope I knew not what, small hope in what I knew.

“ O ! my dear Richard, what a waste of time
“ Gave I not thus to lunacy sublime ;
“ What days, months, years, (to useful purpose lost)
“ Has not this dire infatuation cost ?

“ To this fair vision I, a bounded slave,
“ Time, duty, credit, honour, comfort, gave ;
“ Gave all — and waited for the glorious things
“ That hope expects, but fortune never brings.

“ Yet let me own, while I my fault reprove,
“ There is one blessing still affix'd to love —
“ To love like mine — for, as my soul it drew
“ From Reason's path, it shunn'd Dishonour's too ;
“ It made my taste refined, my feelings nice,
“ And placed an angel in the way of vice.

“ This angel now, whom I no longer view'd,
“ Far from this scene her destined way pursued ;
“ No more that mansion held a form so fair,
“ She was away, and beauty was not there.

“ Such, my dear Richard, was my early flame,
“ My youthful frenzy — give it either name ;
“ It was the withering bane of many a year,
“ That pass'd away in causeless hope and fear ;
“ The hopes, the fears, that every dream could kill,
“ Or make alive, and lead my passive will.

“ At length I learnt one name my angel bore,
“ And Rosabella I must now adore ;
“ Yet knew but this — and not the favour'd place
“ That held the angel or th' angelic race ;
“ Nor where, admired, the sweet enchantress dwelt,
“ But I had lost her — that, indeed, I felt.

“ ‘ What is the puppy’s censure or applause
“ ‘ To the good man who on his banker draws,
“ ‘ Buys an estate, and writes upon the grounds,
“ ‘ ‘ Pay to A. B. a hundred thousand pounds?’
“ ‘ Thus, my dear nephew, thus your talents prove;
“ ‘ Leave verse to poets, and the poor to love.’

“ Some months I suffer’d thus, compell’d to sit
“ And hear a wealthy kinsman aim at wit;
“ Yet there was something in his nature good,
“ And he had feeling for the tie of blood:
“ So while I languish’d for my absent maid
“ I some observance to my uncle paid.”

“ Had you inquired?” said Richard.

“ I had placed
“ Inquirers round, but nothing could be traced;
“ Of every reasoning creature at this Hall,
“ And tenant near it, I applied to all —
“ Tell me if she — and I described her well —
“ Dwelt long a guest, or where retired to dwell?
“ But no! such lady they remember’d not —
“ They saw that face, strange beings! and forgot.

“ Nor was inquiry all; but I pursued
“ My soul’s first wish, with hope’s vast strength en-duced:
“ I cross’d the seas, I went where strangers go,
“ And gazed on crowds as one who dreads a foe,
“ Or seeks a friend; and, when I sought in vain, “ Fled to fresh crowds, and hoped, and gazed again.”

“ It was a strong possession ”— “ Strong and “ I felt the evil, yet desired not change : [strange,
“ Years now had flown, nor was the passion cured,
“ But hope had life, and so was life endured ;
“ The mind’s disease, with all its strength, stole on,
“ Till youth, and health, and all but love were gone.

“ And there were seasons, Richard, horrid hours
“ Of mental suffering ! they o’erthrew my powers,
“ And made my mind unsteady — I have still,
“ At times, a feeling of that nameless ill,
“ That is not madness — I could always tell
“ My mind was wandering — knew it was not well ;
“ Felt all my loss of time, the shameful waste
“ Of talents perish’d, and of parts disgraced :
“ But though my mind was sane, there was a void —
“ My understanding seem’d in part destroy’d ;
“ I thought I was not of my species one,
“ But unconnected ! injured and undone.

“ While in this state, once more my uncle pray’d
“ That I would hear — I heard, and I obey’d ;
“ For I was thankful that a being broke
“ On this my sadness, or an interest took
“ In my poor life — but, at his mansion, rest
“ Came with its halcyon stillness to my breast :
“ Slowly there enter’d in my mind concern
“ For things about me — I would something learn,
“ And to my uncle listen ; who, with joy,
“ Found that ev’n yet I could my powers employ,
“ Till I could feel new hopes my mind possess,
“ Of ease at least, if not of happiness :

“ Till, not contented, not in discontent,
“ As my good uncle counsell'd, on I went ;
“ Conscious of youth's great error — nay, the crime
“ Of manhood now — a dreary waste of time !
“ Conscious of that account which I must give “ How life had passed with me — I strove to live.

“ Had I, like others, my first hope attain'd,
“ I must, at least, a certainty have gain'd ;
“ Had I, like others, lost the hope of youth,
“ Another hope had promised greater truth ;
“ But I in baseless hopes, and groundless views,
“ Was fated time, and peace, and health to lose,
“ Impell'd to seek, for ever doom'd to fail,
“ Is — I distress you — let me end my tale.

“ Something one day occur'd about a bill
“ That was not drawn with true mercantile skill,
“ And I was ask'd and authorised to go
“ To seek the firm of Clutterbuck and Co. ;
“ Their hour was past — but when I urged the case,
“ There was a youth who named a second place ;
“ Where, on occasions of important kind,
“ I might the man of occupation find
“ In his retirement, where he found repose
“ From the vexations that in business rose.
“ I found, though not with ease, this private seat
“ Of soothing quiet, Wisdom's still retreat.

“ The house was good, but not so pure and clean
“ As I had houses of retirement seen ;

“ Yet men, I knew, of meditation deep,
“ Love not their maidens should their studies sweep ;
“ His room I saw, and must acknowledge, there
“ Were not the signs of cleanliness or care :
“ A female servant, void of female grace,
“ Loose in attire, proceeded to the place ;
“ She stared intrusive on my slender frame,
“ And boldly ask’d my business and my name.’

“ I gave them both ; and, left to be amused,
“ Well as I might, the parlour I perused.
“ The shutters half unclosed, the curtains fell
“ Half down, and rested on the window-sill,
“ And thus, confusedly, made the room half visible :
“ Late as it was, the little parlour bore
“ Some tell-tale tokens of the night before ;
“ There were strange sights and scents about the room,
“ Of food high season’d, and of strong perfume ;
“ Two unmatch’d sofas ample rents display’d,
“ Carpet and curtains were alike decay’d ;
“ A large old mirror, with once-gilded frame,
“ Reflected prints that I forbear to name,
“ Such as a youth might purchase — but, in truth,
“ Not a sedate or sober-minded youth :
“ The cinders yet were sleeping in the grate,
“ Warm from the fire, continued large and late,
“ As left by careless folk, in their neglected state ;
“ The chairs in haste seem’d whirl’d about the room,
“ As when the sons of riot hurry home,
“ And leave the troubled place to solitude and gloom.

“ All this, for I had ample time, I saw,
 “ And prudence question'd — should we not withdraw?
 “ For he who makes me thus on business wait,
 “ Is not for business in a proper state;
 “ But man there was not, was not he for whom
 “ To this convenient lodging I was come;
 “ No! but a lady's voice was heard to call
 “ On my attention — and she had it all;
 “ For, lo! she enters, speaking ere in sight,
 “ ‘ Monsieur! I shall not want the chair to-night —
 “ ‘ Where shall I see him?’ — This dear hour atones
 “ For all affection's hopeless sighs and groans —
 “ Then turning to me — ‘ Art thou come at last?
 “ ‘ A thousand welcomes — be forgot the past;
 “ ‘ Forgotten all the grief that absence brings,
 “ ‘ Fear that torments, and jealousy that stings —
 “ ‘ All that is cold, injurious, and unkind,
 “ ‘ Be it for ever banish'd from the mind;
 “ ‘ And in that mind, and in that heart be now
 “ ‘ The soft endearment, and the binding vow.’

“ She spoke—and o'er the practised features threw
 “ The looks that reason charm, and strength subdue.

“ Will you not ask, how I beheld that face,
 “ Or read that mind, and read it in that place?
 “ I have tried, Richard, oft-times, and in vain,
 “ To trace my thoughts, and to review their train —
 “ If train there were—that meadow, grove, and stile,
 “ The fright, th' escape, her sweetness and her smile;

“ Years since elapsed, and hope, from year to year,
“ To find her free — and then to find her here !

“ But is it she ? — O ! yes ; the rose is dead,
“ All beauty, fragrance, freshness, glory fled :
“ But yet 't is she — the same and not the same —
“ Who to my bower a heavenly being came ;
“ Who waked my soul's first thought of real bliss,
“ Whom long I sought, and now I find her — this.

“ I cannot paint her — something I had seen
“ So pale and slim, and tawdry and unclean ;
“ With haggard looks, of vice and woe the prey,
“ Laughing in languor, miserably gay :
“ Her face, where face appear'd, was amply spread,
“ By art's coarse pencil, with ill-chosen red,
“ The flower's fictitious bloom, the blushing of the dead :
“ But still the features were the same, and strange
“ My view of both — the sameness and the change,
“ That fixed me gazing and my eye enchain'd,
“ Although so little of herself remain'd ;
“ It is the creature whom I loved, and yet
“ Is far unlike her — Would I could forget
“ The angel or her fall ; the once adored
“ Or now despised ! the worshipp'd or deplored !

“ ‘ O ! Rosabella ! ’ I prepared to say,
“ ‘ Whom I have loved, ’ but prudence whisper'd nay,
“ And folly grew ashamed — discretion had her day.
“ She gave her hand ; which, as I lightly press'd,
“ The cold but ardent grasp my soul oppress'd ;

“ The ruin’d girl disturb’d me, and my eyes
 “ Look’d, I conceive, both sorrow and surprise.
 “ I spoke my business — ‘ He,’ she answer’d, ‘ comes
 “ ‘ And lodges here — he has the backward rooms —
 “ ‘ He now is absent, and I chanced to hear
 “ ‘ Will not before to-morrow eve appear,
 “ ‘ And may be longer absent — O! the night
 “ ‘ When you preserved me in that horrid fright;
 “ ‘ A thousand, thousand times, asleep, awake,
 “ ‘ I thought of what you ventured for my sake —
 “ ‘ Now have you thought — yet tell me so — deceive
 “ ‘ Your Rosabella, willing to believe?
 “ ‘ O! there is something in love’s first-born pain
 “ ‘ Sweeter than bliss — it never comes again —
 “ ‘ But has your heart been faithful?’ — Here my pride
 “ To anger rising, her attempt defied —
 “ ‘ My faith must childish in your sight appear,
 “ ‘ Who have been faithful — to how many, dear?’

“ If words had fail’d, a look explain’d their style,
 “ She could not blush assent, but she could smile:
 “ Good heaven! I thought, have I rejected fame,
 “ Credit, and wealth, for one who smiles at shame?

“ She saw me thoughtful — saw it, as I guess’d,
 “ With some concern, though nothing she express’d.
 “ ‘ Come, my dear friend, discard that look of care,
 “ ‘ All things were made to be, as all things are;
 “ ‘ All to seek pleasure as the end design’d,
 “ ‘ The only good in matter or in mind;

“ ‘ So was I taught by one, who gave me all
“ ‘ That my experienced heart can wisdom call.

“ ‘ I saw thee young, love’s soft obedient slave,
“ ‘ And many a sigh to my young lover gave ;
“ ‘ And I had, spite of cowardice or cow,
“ ‘ Return’d thy passion, and exchanged my vow ;
“ ‘ But while I thought to bait the amorous hook,
“ ‘ One set for me my eager fancy took ;
“ ‘ There was a crafty eye, that far could see,
“ ‘ And through my failings fascinated me :
“ ‘ Mine was a childish wish, to please my boy ;
“ ‘ His a design, his wishes to enjoy.
“ ‘ O ! we have both about the world been tost,
“ ‘ Thy gain I know not—I, they cry, am lost ;
“ ‘ So let the wise ones talk ; they talk in vain,
“ ‘ And are mistaken both in loss and gain ;
“ ‘ ’Tis gain to get whatever life affords,
“ ‘ ’Tis loss to spend our time in empty words.

“ ‘ I was a girl, and thou a boy wert then,
“ ‘ Nor aught of women knew, nor I of men ;
“ ‘ But I have traffick’d in the world, and thou,
“ ‘ Doubtless, canst boast of thy experience now ;
“ ‘ Let us the knowledge we have gain’d produce,
“ ‘ And kindly turn it to our common use.’

“ Thus spoke the siren in voluptuous style,
“ While I stood gazing and perplex’d the while, “ Chain’d by that voice, confounded by that smile.

“ And then she sang, and changed from grave to “ Till all reproach and anger died away. [gay,

“ ‘ My Damon was the first to wake
 “ ‘ The gentle flame that cannot die ;
 “ ‘ My Damon is the last to take
 “ ‘ The faithful bosom’s softest sigh :
 “ ‘ The life between is nothing worth,
 “ ‘ O ! cast it from thy thought away ;
 “ ‘ Think of the day that gave it birth,
 “ ‘ And this its sweet returning day.

“ ‘ Buried be all that has been done,
 “ ‘ Or say that naught is done amiss ;
 “ ‘ For who the dangerous path can shun
 “ ‘ In such bewildering world as this ?
 “ ‘ But love can every fault forgive,
 “ ‘ Or with a tender look reprove ;
 “ ‘ And now let naught in memory live,
 “ ‘ But that we meet, and that we love.’<sup>(1)</sup>

“ And then she moved my pity ; for she wept,
 “ And told her miseries till resentment slept ;

(1) [“ We were lately rash enough to say, that we had no poets so unlike as Crabbe and Moore : but poets of their metal can put out critics when they please. This little song is more like Mr. Moore than any thing we ever saw under the hand of a professed imitator ; and if Mr. Crabbe’s amatory propensities continue to increase with his years, as they have done, the bard of Lalla Rookh may still have a formidable rival.” — Edin. Rev. 1819.]

“ For when she saw she could not reason blind,
“ She pour’d her heart’s whole sorrows on my mind,
“ With features graven on my soul, with sighs
“ Seen but not heard, with soft imploring eyes,
“ And voice that needed not, but had the aid
“ Of powerful words to soften and persuade.

“ ‘ O! I repent me of the past; and sure
“ ‘ Grief and repentance make the bosom pure;
“ ‘ Yet meet thee not with clean and single heart,
“ ‘ As on the day we met!—and but to part,
“ ‘ Ere I had drank the cup that to my lip
“ ‘ Was held, and press’d till I was forced to sip:
“ ‘ I drank indeed, but never ceased to hate,—
“ ‘ It poison’d, but could not intoxicate.
“ ‘ T’ excuse my fall I plead not love’s excess,
“ ‘ But a weak orphan’s need and loneliness.
“ ‘ I had no parent upon earth—no door
“ ‘ Was oped to me—young, innocent, and poor,
“ ‘ Vain, tender, and resentful—and my friend
“ ‘ Jealous of one who must on her depend,
“ ‘ Making life misery—You could witness then
“ ‘ That I was precious in the eyes of men;
“ ‘ So, made by them a goddess, and denied
“ ‘ Respect and notice by the women’s pride;
“ ‘ Here scorn’d, there worshipp’d—will it strange appear,
“ ‘ Allured and driven, that I settled here?
“ ‘ Yet loved it not; and never have I pass’d
“ ‘ One day, and wish’d another like the last.

“ ‘ There was a fallen angel, I have read,
 “ ‘ For whom their tears the sister-angels shed,
 “ ‘ Because, although she ventured to rebel,
 “ ‘ She was not minded like a child of hell.—
 “ ‘ Such is my lot ! and will it not be given
 “ ‘ To grief like mine, that I may think of heaven ?
 “ ‘ Behold how there the glorious creatures shine,
 “ ‘ And all my soul to grief and hope resign ? ’

“ I wonder’d, doubting—and is this a fact,
 “ I thought ; or part thou art disposed to act ?

“ ‘ Is it not written, He, who came to save
 “ ‘ Sinners, the sins of deepest dye forgave ?
 “ ‘ That he his mercy to the sufferers dealt,
 “ ‘ And pardon’d error when the ill was felt ?
 “ ‘ Yes ! I would hope, there is an eye that reads
 “ ‘ What is within, and sees the heart that bleeds——
 “ ‘ But who on earth will one so lost deplore,
 “ ‘ And who will help that lost one to restore ?
 “ ‘ Who will on trust the sigh of grief receive ;
 “ ‘ And—all things warring with belief—believe ? ’

“ Soften’d, I said—‘ Be mine the hand and heart,
 “ ‘ If with your world you will consent to part.’
 “ She would—she tried——Alas ! she did not know

“ How deeply rooted evil habits grow :
 “ She felt the truth upon her spirits press,
 “ But wanted ease, indulgence, show, excess,
 “ Voluptuous banquets, pleasures—not refined,
 “ But such as soothe to sleep th’ opposing mind—

“ She look’d for idle vice, the time to kill,
“ And subtle, strong apologies for ill :
“ And thus her yielding, unresisting soul
“ Sank, and let sin confuse her and control :
“ Pleasures that brought disgust yet brought relief,
“ And minds she hated help’d to war with grief.”

“ Thus then she perish’d ? ” —

    “ Nay — but thus she proved
“ Slave to the vices that she never loved :
“ But while she thus her better thoughts opposed,
“ And woo’d the world, the world’s deceptions closed : —
“ I had long lost her ; but I sought in vain
“ To banish pity : — still she gave me pain, “ Still I desired to aid her — to direct,
“ And wished the world, that won her, to reject :
“ Nor wish’d in vain — there came, at length, request
“ That I would see a wretch with grief opprest,
“ By guilt affrighted — and I went to trace
“ Once more the vice-worn features of that face,
“ That sin-wreck’d being ! and I saw her laid
“ Where never worldly joy a visit paid :
“ That world receding fast ! the world to come
“ Conceal’d in terror, ignorance, and gloom ;
“ Sins, sorrow, and neglect : with not a spark
“ Of vital hope, — all horrible and dark —
“ It frighten’d me ! — I thought, and shall not I
“ Thus feel ? thus fear ? — this danger can I fly ?
“ Do I so wisely live that I can calmly die ?

“ The wants I saw I could supply with ease,
“ But there were wants of other kind than these ;
“ Th’ awakening thought, the hope-inspiring view—
“ The doctrines awful, grand, alarming, true —
“ Most painful to the soul, and yet most healing too :
“ Still I could something offer, and could send
“ For other aid — a more important friend,
“ Whose duty call’d him, and his love no less,
“ To help the grieving spirit in distress ;
“ To save in that sad hour the drooping prey,
“ And from its victim drive despair away.

“ All decent comfort round the sick were seen :
“ The female helpers quiet, sober, clean ;
“ Her kind physician with a smile appear’d,
“ And zealous love the pious friend endear’d :
“ While I, with mix’d sensations, could inquire,
“ Hast thou one wish, one unfulfill’d desire ?
“ Speak every thought, nor unindulged depart,
“ If I can make thee happier than thou art.

“ Yes ! there was yet a female friend, an old
“ And grieving nurse ! to whom it should be told —
“ If I would tell — that she, her child, had fail’d,
“ And turn’d from truth ! yet truth at length prevail’d.

“ ’Twas in that chamber, Richard, I began
“ To think more deeply of the end of man :
“ Was it to jostle all his fellows by,
“ To run before them, and say, ‘ Here am I,
“ Fall down, and worship ? ’ — Was it, life throughout,
“ With circumspection keen to hunt about

“ As spaniels for their game, where might be found
 “ Abundance more for coffers that abound ?
 “ Or was it life’s enjoyments to prefer,
 “ Like this poor girl, and then to die like her ?
 “ No ! He, who gave the faculties, design’d
 “ Another use for the immortal mind :
 “ There is a state in which it will appear
 “ With all the good and ill contracted here ;
 “ With gain and loss, improvement and defect ;
 “ And then, my soul ! what hast thou to expect
 “ For talents laid aside, life’s waste, and time’s neglect ?

“ Still as I went came other change—the frame
 “ And features wasted, and yet slowly came
 “ The end ; and so inaudible the breath,
 “ And still the breathing, we exclaim’d — ’tis death !
 “ But death it was not : when, indeed, she died,
 “ I sat and his last gentle stroke espied :
 “ When — as it came — or did my fancy trace
 “ That lively, lovely flushing o’er the face ?
 “ Bringing back all that my young heart impress’d !
 “ It came — and went ! — She sigh’d, and was at rest !

“ Adieu, I said, fair Frailty ! dearly cost
 “ The love I bore thee ! — time and treasure lost ;
 “ And I have suffer’d many years in vain ;
 “ Now let me something in my sorrows gain :
 “ Heaven would not all this woe for man intend
 “ If man’s existence with his woe should end ;
 “ Heaven would not pain, and grief, and anguish
 “ If man was not by discipline to live ;      [give,

“ And for that brighter, better world prepare,
“ That souls with souls, when purified, shall share,
“ Those stains all done away that must not enter there.

“ Home I return'd, with spirits in that state
“ Of vacant woe, I strive not to relate,
“ Nor how, deprived of all her hope and strength,
“ My soul turn'd feebly to the world at length.
“ I travell'd then till health again resumed
“ Its former seat—I must not say re-bloom'd ;
“ And then I fill'd, not loth, that favourite place
“ That has enrich'd some seniors of our race ;
“ Patient and dull I grew ; my uncle's praise
“ Was largely dealt me on my better days ;
“ A love of money—other love at rest—
“ Came creeping on, and settled in my breast ;
“ The force of habit held me to the oar,
“ Till I could relish what I scorn'd before :
“ I now could talk and scheme with men of sense,
“ Who deal for millions, and who sigh for pence ;
“ And grew so like them, that I heard with joy
“ Old Blueskin said I was a pretty boy ;
“ For I possess'd the caution with the zeal,
“ That all true lovers of their interest feel :
“ Exalted praise ! and to the creature due,
“ Who loves that interest solely to pursue.

“ But I was sick, and sickness brought disgust ;
“ My peace I could not to my profits trust :
“ Again some views of brighter kind appear'd,
“ My heart was humbled, and my mind was clear'd ;

“ I felt those helps that souls diseased restore,
 “ And that cold frenzy, Avarice, raged no more.
 “ From dreams of boundless wealth I then arose ;
 “ This place, the scene of infant bliss, I chose,
 “ And here I find relief, and here I seek repose.

“ Yet much is lost, and not yet much is found,
 “ But what remains, I would believe, is sound ;
 “ That first wild passion, that last mean desire,
 “ Are felt no more ; but holier hopes require
 “ A mind prepared and steady — my reform
 “ Has fears like his, who, suffering in a storm,
 “ Is on a rich but unknown country cast,
 “ The future fearing, while he feels the past ;
 “ But whose more cheerful mind, with hope imbued,
 “ Sees through receding clouds the rising good.”<sup>(1)</sup>

(1) [The following Lines have been found on a blank leaf of the original MS. : —

“ Love, I have seen a tiger on his prey,
 “ Savage and fond ; its capture his intent :
 “ Love, I have seen a sportive lamb at play,
 “ As mild as pure, as soft as innocent :
 “ Love, I have seen a child, who only meant
 “ A short amusement, trifling for an hour ;
 “ And now a fox, on secret mischief bent,
 “ And now an owlet, gloating from his bower ;
 “ And watchful in his guilt, and gloomy in his power.

“ He comes in every way that men can come,
 “ And now is garrulous, and now is dumb ;
 “ In some takes instant root, and grows apace,
 “ In some his progress you can barely trace.
 “ At first a simple liking and no more ;
 “ He sits considering, ‘ Do I love or not ?’
 “ He seems a pleasing object to explore,
 “ As men appear to view a pleasing spot ;
 “ Then forms a wish that heaven would fix his lot
 “ In that same place, and then begins regret,
 “ That ’t is not so — but may the prize be got ?

“ Then comes the anxious strife that prize to get,
“ And then 't is all he wants, and he must have it yet.
“ So then he kneels, and weeps, and begs, and sighs,
“ Hangs on the looks, and trembles in the eyes ;
“ Is all with hope and tenderness possess'd,
“ Entirely wretched till supremely bless'd.”]

BOOK VIII.

THE SISTERS.

THE morning shone in cloudless beauty bright ;
 Richard his letters read with much delight ;
 George from his pillow rose in happy tone,
 His bosom's lord sat lightly on his throne :
 They read the morning news — they saw the sky
 Inviting call'd them, and the earth was dry.

“ The day invites us, Brother,” said the Squire ;
 “ Come, and I'll show thee something to admire :
 “ We still may beauty in our prospects trace ;
 “ If not, we have them in both mind and face.

“ 'Tis but two miles — to let such women live
 “ Unseen of him, what reason can I give ?
 “ Why should not Richard to the girls be known ?
 “ Would I have all their friendship for my own ?

“ Brother, there dwell, yon northern hill below,
 “ Two favourite maidens, whom 'tis good to know ;

“ Young, but experienced ; dwellers in a cot,
 “ Where they sustain and dignify their lot,
 “ The best good girls in all our world below —
 “ O ! you must know them — Come ! and you shall know.

“ But, lo ! the morning wastes — here, Jacob, stir —
 “ If Phœbe comes, do you attend to her ;
 “ And let not Mary get a chattering press
 “ Of idle girls to hear of her distress :
 “ Ask her to wait till my return — and hide
 “ From her meek mind your plenty and your pride ;
 “ Nor vex a creature, humble, sad, and still,
 “ By your coarse bounty, and your rude good-will.”

This said, the Brothers hasten'd on their way,
 With all the foretaste of a pleasant day.
 The morning purpose in the mind had fix'd
 The leading thought, and that with others mix'd.

“ How well it is,” said George, “ when we possess
 “ The strength that bears us up in our distress ;
 “ And need not the resources of our pride,
 “ Our fall from greatness and our wants to hide ;
 “ But have the spirit and the wish to show,
 “ We know our wants as well as others know.
 “ 'Tis true, the rapid turns of fortune's wheel
 “ Make even the virtuous and the humble feel :
 “ They for a time must suffer, and but few
 “ Can bear their sorrows and our pity too.

“ Hence all these small expedients, day by day,
 “ Are used to hide the evils they betray :
 “ When, if our pity chances to be seen,
 “ The wounded pride retorts, with anger keen,
 “ And man’s insulted grief takes refuge in his spleen.

“ When Timon’s board contains a single dish,
 “ Timon talks much of market-men and fish,
 “ Forgetful servants, and th’ infernal cook,
 “ Who always spoil’d whate’er she undertook.

“ But say, it tries us from our height to fall,
 “ Yet is not life itself a trial all?<sup>(1)</sup>
 “ And not a virtue in the bosom lives,
 “ That gives such ready pay as patience gives ;
 “ That pure submission to the ruling mind,
 “ Fix’d, but not forced ; obedient, but not blind ;
 “ The will of heaven to make her own she tries,
 “ Or makes her own to heaven a sacrifice.

“ And is there aught on earth so rich or rare,
 “ Whose pleasures may with virtue’s pains compare ?
 “ This fruit of patience, this the pure delight,
 “ That ’tis a trial in her Judge’s sight ;
 “ Her part still striving duty to sustain,
 “ Not spurning pleasure, not defying pain ;

(1) [Originally, —

“ Oh! that we had the virtuous pride to show
 “ We know ourselves what all about us know ;
 “ Nor, when our board contains a single dish,
 “ Tell lying tales of market-men and fish :
 “ We know ’t is hard from higher views to fall—
 “ What is not hard when life is trial all? ”]

“ Never in triumph till her race be won,
 “ And never fainting till her work be done.”<sup>(1)</sup>

With thoughts like these they reach'd the village brook,

And saw a lady sitting with her book ;
 And so engaged she heard not, till the men
 Were at her side, nor was she frighten'd then ;
 But to her friend, the Squire, his smile return'd,
 Through which the latent sadness he discern'd.
 The stranger-brother at the cottage door
 Was now admitted, and was strange no more :
 Then of an absent sister he was told,
 Whom they were not at present to behold ;
 Something was said of nerves, and that disease,
 Whose varying powers on mind and body seize,
 Enfeebling both ! — Here chose they to remain
 One hour in peace, and then return'd again.
 “ I know not why,” said Richard, “ but I feel
 “ The warmest pity on my bosom steal
 “ For that dear maid ! How well her looks express
 “ For this world's good a cherish'd hopelessness !
 “ A resignation that is so entire,
 “ It feels not now the stirrings of desire ;

(1) [Here follows in MS. —

“ But I digress, dear Richard, who despise
 “ Tellers of tales, who stop and moralize ;
 “ As some good editors of Esop used
 “ Their privilege, and readers' sense abused ;
 “ Who half a page to write their fable tock,
 “ And just a page and half to swell their book.
 “ But to that gentle being I return,
 “ And as I treat of patience let me learn.”]

“ What now to her is all the world esteems ?
 “ She is awake, and cares not for its dreams ;
 “ But moves while yet on earth, as one above
 “ Its hopes and fears — its loathing and its love.

“ But shall I learn,” said he, “ these sisters’ fate ? ” —
 And found his Brother willing to relate.

---

“ The girls were orphans early ; yet I saw,
 “ When young, their father — his profession law ;
 “ He left them but a competence, a store
 “ That made his daughters neither rich nor poor ;
 “ Not rich, compared with some who dwelt around ;
 “ Not poor, for want they neither fear’d nor found ;
 “ Their guardian uncle was both kind and just,
 “ One whom a parent might in dying trust ;
 “ Who, in their youth, the trusted store improved,
 “ And, when he ceased to guide them, fondly loved.
 “ These sister beauties were in fact the grace
 “ Of yon small town, — it was their native place ;
 “ Like Saul’s famed daughters were the lovely twain, (1)
 “ As Micah Lucy, and as Merab Jane : (2)

(1) [MS. —

“ Like Saul’s fair daughters, as by Cowley sung ;
 “ Not from a monarch, but a yeoman sprung.”]

(2) [“ Like two bright eyes in a fair body placed “ Saul’s royal house, two beauteous daughters graced ;
 “ Merab the first, Michel the younger named,
 “ Both equally for different glories famed.
 “ Merab with spacious beauty fill’d the sight,
 “ But too much awe chastised the bold delight.

“ For this was tall, with free commanding air,
 “ And that was mild, and delicate, and fair.

“ Jane had an arch delusive smile, that charm'd
 “ And threaten'd too ; alluring, it alarm'd ;
 “ The smile of Lucy her approval told,
 “ Cheerful, not changing ; neither kind nor cold.

“ When children, Lucy love alone possess'd,
 “ Jane was more punish'd and was more caress'd ;
 “ If told the childish wishes, one bespoke
 “ A lamb, a bird, a garden, and a brook ;
 “ The other wish'd a joy unknown, a rout
 “ Or crowded ball, and to be first led out.

“ Lucy loved all that grew upon the ground,
 “ And loveliness in all things living found ;
 “ The gilded fly, the fern upon the wall,
 “ Were nature's works, and admirable all ;
 “ Pleased with indulgence of so cheap a kind,
 “ Its cheapness never discomposed her mind.

“ Jane had no liking for such things as these,
 “ Things pleasing her must her superiors please ;
 “ The costly flower was precious in her eyes,
 “ That skill can vary, or that money buys ;
 “ Her taste was good, but she was still afraid,
 “ Till fashion sanction'd the remarks she made.

---

“ Like a calm sea, which to th' enlarged view
 “ Gives pleasure, but gives fear and rev'rance too ;
 “ Michel's sweet looks clear and free joys did move,
 “ And no less strong, though much more gentle, love,” &c.
 COWLEY, Davidis.]

“ The Sisters read, and Jane with some delight,
“ The satires keen that fear or rage excite,
“ That men in power attack, and ladies high,
“ And give broad hints that we may know them by.
“ She was amused when sent to haunted rooms,
“ Or some dark passage where the spirit comes
“ Of one once murder’d! then she laughing read,
“ And felt at once the folly and the dread:
“ As rustic girls to crafty gipsies fly,
“ And trust the liar though they fear the lie,
“ Or as a patient, urged by grievous pains,
“ Will fee the daring quack whom he disdains,
“ So Jane was pleased to see the beckoning hand,
“ And trust the magic of the Ratcliffe-wand.

“ In her religion—for her mind, though light,
“ Was not disposed our better views to slight—
“ Her favourite authors were a solemn kind,
“ Who fill with dark mysterious thoughts the
    mind;
“ And who with such conceits her fancy plied,
“ Became her friend, philosopher, and guide.

“ She made the Progress of the Pilgrim one
“ To build a thousand pleasant views upon;
“ All that connects us with a world above
“ She loved to fancy, and she long’d to prove;
“ Well would the poet please her, who could lead
“ Her fancy forth, yet keep untouch’d her creed.

“ Led by an early custom, Lucy spied,
“ When she awaked, the Bible at her side;

“ That, ere she ventured on a world of care,
“ She might for trials, joys or pains prepare,
“ For every dart a shield, a guard for every snare.

“ She read not much of high heroic deeds,
“ Where man the measure of man’s power exceeds ;
“ But gave to luckless love and fate severe
“ Her tenderest pity and her softest tear.
“ She mix’d not faith with fable, but she trod
“ Right onward, cautious in the ways of God ;
“ Nor did she dare to launch on seas unknown,
“ In search of truths by some adventurers shown,
“ But her own compass used, and kept a course her own.

“ The maidens both their loyalty declared,
“ And in the glory of their country shared ;
“ But Jane that glory felt with proud delight,
“ When England’s foes were vanquish’d in the fight ;
“ While Lucy’s feelings for the brave who bled
“ Put all such glorious triumphs from her head.

“ They both were frugal ; Lucy from the fear
“ Of wasting that which want esteems so dear,
“ But finds so scarce ; her sister from the pain
“ That springs from want, when treated with disdain.

“ Jane borrow’d maxims from a doubting school,
“ And took for truth the test of ridicule ;
“ Lucy saw no such virtue in a jest,
“ Truth was with her of ridicule a test.

“ They loved each other with the warmth of youth,
“ With ardour, candour, tenderness, and truth ;
“ And though their pleasures were not just the same,
“ Yet both were pleased whenever one became ;
“ Nay, each would rather in the act rejoice,
“ That was th’ adopted, not the native choice.

“ Each had a friend, and friends to minds so fond
“ And good are soon united in the bond ;
“ Each had a lover ; but it seem’d that fate
“ Decreed that these should not approximate.

“ Now Lucy’s lover was a prudent swain,
“ And thought, in all things, what would be his gain ;
“ The younger sister first engaged his view,
“ But with her beauty he her spirit knew ;
“ Her face he much admired, ‘ But, put the case,’
“ Said he, ‘ I marry, what is then a face ?
“ ‘ At first it pleases to have drawn the lot ;
“ ‘ He then forgets it, but his wife does not ;
“ ‘ Jane too,’ he judged, ‘ would be reserved and nice,
“ ‘ And many lovers had enhanced her price.’

“ Thus, thinking much, but hiding what he thought,
“ The prudent lover Lucy’s favour sought,
“ And he succeeded,—she was free from art ;
“ And his appear’d a gentle, guileless heart ;
“ Such she respected ; true, her sister found
“ His placid face too ruddy and too round,

“ Too cold and inexpressive ; such a face
“ Where you could nothing mark'd or manly trace.

“ But Lucy found him to his mother kind,
“ And saw the Christian meekness of his mind ;
“ His voice was soft, his temper mild and sweet,
“ His mind was easy, and his person neat.
“ Jane said he wanted courage ; Lucy drew
“ No ill from that, though she believed it too ;
“ ‘ It is religious, Jane, be not severe ;’
“ ‘ Well, Lucy, then it is religious fear.’
“ Nor could the sister, great as was her love,
“ A man so lifeless and so cool approve.

“ Jane had a lover, whom a lady's pride
“ Might wish to see attending at her side,
“ Young, handsome, sprightly, and with good address,
“ Not mark'd for folly, error, or excess :
“ Yet not entirely from their censure free,
“ Who judge our failings with severity ;
“ The very care he took to keep his name
“ Stainless, with some was evidence of shame.

“ Jane heard of this, and she replied, ‘ Enough ;
“ ‘ Prove but the facts, and I resist not proof ;
“ ‘ Nor is my heart so easy as to love
“ ‘ The man my judgment bids me not approve.’
“ But yet that heart a secret joy confess'd,
“ To find no slander on the youth would rest ;
“ His was, in fact, such conduct, that a maid
“ Might think of marriage, and be not afraid ;

“ And she was pleased to find a spirit high,
 “ Free from all fear, that spurn’d hypocrisy.
 “ ‘ What fears my sister ? ’ said the partial fair,
 “ For Lucy fear’d, — ‘ Why tell me to beware ?
 “ ‘ No smooth deceitful varnish can I find ;
 “ ‘ His is a spirit generous, free, and kind ;
 “ ‘ And all his flaws are seen, all floating in his mind.
 “ ‘ A little boldness in his speech. What then ?
 “ ‘ It is the failing of these generous men.
 “ ‘ A little vanity, but — O ! my dear,
 “ ‘ They all would show it, were they all sincere.

“ ‘ But come, agreed ; we’ll lend each other eyes
 “ ‘ To see our favourites, when they wear disguise ;
 “ ‘ And all those errors that will then be shown
 “ ‘ Uninfluenced by the workings of our own.’

“ Thus lived the Sisters, far from power removed,
 “ And far from need, both loving and beloved.
 “ Thus grew, as myrtles grow ; I grieve at heart
 “ That I have pain and sorrow to impart.<sup>(1)</sup>
 “ But so it is, the sweetest herbs that grow
 “ In the lone vale, where sweetest waters flow,

(1) [Orig. MS. —

“ Near to the village, where they now abide,
 “ In their own style — the vulgar call it pride —
 “ Dwelt the fair sisters : good they were and kind,
 “ That prying scandal scarce could error find, —
 “ And candour none — they spent, they spared, they gave “ Just as they ought to give, to spare, to save ;
 “ Like two queen-myrtles in an arbour’s side,
 “ So they abode, and so might still abide,
 “ But for a blight ! it wounds me at the heart,
 “ That I have grief and anguish to impart,” &c.]

“ Ere drops the blossom, or appears the fruit,
“ Feel the vile grub, and perish at the root ;
“ And in a quick and premature decay,
“ Breathe the pure fragrance of their life away.

“ A town was near, in which the buildings all
“ Were large, but one pre-eminently tall—
“ A huge high house. Without there was an air
“ Of lavish cost ; no littleness was there ;
“ But room for servants, horses, whiskies, gigs,
“ And walls for pines and peaches, grapes and “                   figs ;
“ Bright on the sloping glass the sunbeams shone,
“ And brought the summer of all climates on.

“ Here wealth its prowess to the eye display’d,
“ And here advanced the seasons, there delay’d ;
“ Bid the due heat each growing sweet refine,
“ Made the sun’s light with grosser fire combine,
“ And to the Tropic gave the vigour of the Line.

“ Yet, in the master of this wealth, behold
“ A light vain coxcomb taken from his gold,
“ Whose busy brain was weak, whose boasting heart
“                   was cold.

“ O ! how he talk’d to that believing town,
“ That he would give it riches and renown ;
“ Cause a canal where treasures were to swim,
“ And they should owe their opulence to him !
“ In fact, of riches he insured a crop,
“ So they would give him but a seed to drop.

“ As used the alchymist his boasts to make,
“ ‘ I give you millions for the mite I take ;’
“ The mite they never could again behold,
“ The millions all were Eldorado gold.

“ By this professing man, the country round
“ Was search’d to see where money could be found.

“ The thriven farmer, who had lived to spare,
“ Became an object of especial care ;
“ He took the frugal tradesman by the hand,
“ And wish’d him joy of what he might command ;
“ And the industrious servant, who had laid
“ His saving by, it was his joy to aid ;
“ Large talk, and hints of some productive plan,
“ Half named, won all his hearers to a man ;
“ Uncertain projects drew them wondering on,
“ And avarice listen’d till distrust was gone.

“ But when to these dear girls he found his way,
“ All easy, artless, innocent were they ;
“ When he compell’d his foolish wife to be
“ At once so great, so humble, and so free ;
“ Whom others sought, nor always with success !
“ But they were both her pride and happiness ;
“ And she esteem’d them, but attended still
“ To the vile purpose of her husband’s will ;
“ And when she fix’d his snares about their mind,
“ Respected those whom she essay’d to blind ;
“ Nay, with esteem she some compassion gave
“ To the fair victims whom she would not save.

“ The Banker’s wealth and kindness were her themes,
“ His generous plans, his patriotic schemes ;
“ What he had done for some, a favourite few,
“ What for his favourites still he meant to do ;
“ Not that he always listened — which was hard —
“ To her, when speaking of her great regard
“ For certain friends — ‘ but you, as I may say,
“ ‘ Are his own choice — I am not jealous — nay !’

“ Then came the Man himself, and came with speed,
“ As just from business of importance freed ;
“ Or just escaping, came with looks of fire,
“ As if he’d just attain’d his full desire ;
“ As if Prosperity and he for life
“ Were wed, and he was showing off his wife ;
“ Pleased to display his influence, and to prove “ Himself the object of her partial love :
“ Perhaps with this was join’d the latent fear,
“ The time would come when he should not be dear.

“ Jane laugh’d at all their visits and parade,
“ And call’d it friendship in a hot-house made ;
“ A style of friendship suited to his taste,
“ Brought on and ripen’d, like his grapes, in haste ;
“ She saw the wants that wealth in vain would hide,
“ And all the tricks and littleness of pride :
“ On all the wealth would creep the vulgar stain,
“ And grandeur strove to look itself in vain.

“ Lucy perceived — but she replied, ‘ why heed
“ ‘ Such small defects ? — they’re very kind indeed !’

“ And kind they were, and ready to produce
“ Their easy friendship, ever fit for use,
“ Friendship that enters into all affairs,
“ And daily wants, and daily gets, repairs.

“ Hence at the cottage of the Sisters stood
“ The Banker’s steed — he was so very good ;
“ Oft through the roads, in weather foul or fair,
“ Their friend’s gay carriage bore the gentle pair ;
“ His grapes and nectarines woo’d the virgins’ hand,
“ His books and roses were at their command ;
“ And costly flowers, — he took upon him shame
“ That he could purchase what he could not name.

“ Lucy was vex’d to have such favours shown,
“ And they returning nothing of their own ;
“ Jane smiled, and begg’d her sister to believe, —
“ ‘ We give at least as much as we receive.’

“ Alas ! and more : they gave their ears and eyes,
“ His splendour oft-times took them by surprise ;
“ And if in Jane appear’d a meaning smile,
“ She gazed, admired, and paid respect the while.
“ Would she had rested there ! deluded maid,
“ She saw not yet the fatal price she paid ;
“ Saw not that wealth, though join’d with folly,
    grew
“ In her regard ; she smiled, but listen’d too ;
“ Nay would be grateful, she would trust her all,
“ Her funded source, — to him a matter small ;
“ Taken for their sole use, and ever at their call :

“ To be improved — he knew not how indeed,
“ But he had methods — and they must succeed.

“ This was so good, that Jane, in very pride,
“ To spare him trouble, for a while denied ;
“ And Lucy’s prudence, though it was alarm’d,
“ Was by the splendour of the Banker charm’d ;
“ What was her paltry thousand pounds to him,
“ Who would expend five thousand on a whim ?
“ And then the portion of his wife was known ;
“ But not that she reserved it for her own.

“ Lucy her lover trusted with the fact,
“ And frankly ask’d, ‘ if he approved the act ?’
“ ‘ It promised well,’ he said ; ‘ he could not tell
“ ‘ How it might end, but sure it promised well ;
“ ‘ He had himself a trifle in the Bank,
“ ‘ And should be sore uneasy if it sank.’

“ Jane from her lover had no wish to hide
“ Her deed ; but was withheld by maiden pride ;
“ To talk so early — as if one were sure
“ Of being his ; she could not that endure.
“ But when the sisters were apart, and when
“ They freely spoke of their affairs and men ;
“ They thought with pleasure of the sum improved,
“ And so presented to the men they loved.

“ Things now proceeded in a quiet train ;
“ No cause appear’d to murmur or complain ;
“ The monied man, his ever smiling dame,
“ And their young darlings, in their carriage came ;

“ Jane’s sprightly lover smiled their pomp to see,
 “ And ate their grapes, with gratitude and glee,
 “ But with the freedom there was nothing mean,
 “ Humble, or forward, in his freedom seen ;
 “ His was the frankness of a mind that shows
 “ It knows itself, nor fears for what it knows :
 “ But Lucy’s ever humble friend was awed
 “ By the profusion he could not applaud ;
 “ He seem’d indeed reluctant to partake
 “ Of the collation that he could not make ;
 “ And this was pleasant in the maiden’s view, —
 “ Was modesty — was moderation too ;
 “ Though Jane esteem’d it meanness ; and she saw
 “ Fear in that prudence, avarice in that awe.

“ But both the lovers now to town are gone,
 “ By business one is call’d, by duty one ;
 “ While rumour rises, — whether false or true
 “ The ladies knew not — it was known to few —
 “ But fear there was, and on their guardian-friend
 “ They for advice and comfort would depend,
 “ When rose the day ; meantime from Belmont-
     place
 ‘ Came vile report, predicting quick disgrace. (1)

(1) [Here follows in the original MS. —

“ Thus fill’d with fear, that evening they attend
 “ To his last home an ancient village-friend ;
 “ And they, reflecting on the old man’s days,
 “ Who living had their love, and now their praise,
 “ That good old man, with so much native sense,
 “ Such health and ease, such hope with competence ;
 “ They could but own, if such should be their lot,
 “ They should be thankful! — It, alas! was not.”]

“ 'T was told — the servants, who had met to thank
“ Their lord for placing money in his Bank —
“ Their kind free master, who such wages gave,
“ And then increased whatever they could save —
“ They who had heard they should their savings lose,
“ Were weeping, swearing, drinking at the news ;
“ And still the more they drank, the more they wept,
“ And swore, and rail'd, and threaten'd, till they slept.

“ The morning truth confirm'd the evening dread ;
“ The Bank was broken, and the Banker fled ;
“ But left a promise, that his friends should have,
“ To the last shilling — what his fortunes gave.

“ The evil tidings reach'd the sister-pair,
“ And one like Sorrow look'd, and one Despair ;
“ They from each other turn'd th' afflicting look,
“ And loth and late the painful silence broke.

“ ‘ The odious villain ! ’ Jane in wrath began ;
“ In pity Lucy, ‘ the unhappy man !
“ ‘ When time and reason our affliction heal,
“ ‘ How will the author of our sufferings feel ? ’

“ ‘ And let him feel, my sister, — let the woes
“ ‘ That he creates be bane to his repose !
“ ‘ Let them be felt in his expiring hour,
“ ‘ When death brings all his dread, and sin its power :
“ ‘ Then let the busy foe of mortal state
“ ‘ The pangs he caused, his own to aggravate !

“ ‘ Wretch ! when our life was glad, our prospects gay,
“ ‘ With savage hand to sweep them all away !
“ ‘ And he must know it—know when he beguiled
“ ‘ His easy victims—how the villain smiled !

“ ‘ Oh ! my dear Lucy, could I see him crave
“ ‘ The food denied, a beggar and a slave,
“ ‘ To stony hearts he should with tears apply,
“ ‘ And Pity’s self withhold the struggling sigh ;
“ ‘ Or, if relenting weakness should extend
“ ‘ Th’ extorted scrap that justice would not lend,
“ ‘ Let it be poison’d by the curses deep
“ ‘ Of every wretch whom he compels to weep !’

“ ‘ Nay, my sweet sister, if you thought such pain
“ ‘ Were his, your pity would awake again ;
“ ‘ Your generous heart the wretch’s grief would feel,
“ ‘ And you would soothe the pangs you could not heal.’

“ ‘ Oh ! never, never, — I would still contrive
“ ‘ To keep the slave whom I abhorr’d alive ;
“ ‘ His tortured mind with horrid fears to fill,
“ ‘ Disturb his reason, and misguide his will ;
“ ‘ Heap coals of fire, to lie like melted lead,
“ ‘ Heavy and hot, on his accursed head ;
“ ‘ Not coals that mercy kindles hearts to melt,
“ ‘ But he should feel them hot as fires are felt ;
“ ‘ Corroding ever, and through life the same,
“ ‘ Strong self-contempt and ever burning shame ;
“ ‘ Let him so wretched live that he may fly
“ ‘ To desperate thoughts, and be resolved to die—

“ ‘ And then let death such frightful visions give,
 “ ‘ That he may dread th’ attempt, and beg to live!’

“ So spake th’ indignant maid, when Lucy sigh’d,
 “ And, waiting softer times, no more replied.

“ Barlow was then in town; and there he thought
 “ Of bliss to come, and bargains to be bought;
 “ And was returning homeward—when he found
 “ The Bank was broken, and his venture drown’d.

“ ‘ Ah! foolish maid,’ he cried, ‘ and what wilt thou

“ ‘ Say for thy friends and their excesses now?
 “ ‘ All now is brought completely to an end;
 “ ‘ What can the spendthrift now afford to spend?
 “ ‘ Had my advice been—true, I gave consent,
 “ ‘ The thing was purposed; what could I prevent?

“ ‘ Who will her idle taste for flowers supply?—
 “ ‘ Who send her grapes and peaches? let her try;—
 “ ‘ There’s none will give her, and she cannot buy.
 “ ‘ Yet would she not be grateful if she knew
 “ ‘ What to my faith and generous love was due?
 “ ‘ Daily to see the man who took her hand,
 “ ‘ When she had not a sixpence at command;
 “ ‘ Could I be sure that such a quiet mind
 “ ‘ Would be for ever grateful, mild, and kind,
 “ ‘ I might comply—but how will Bloomer act,
 “ ‘ When he becomes acquainted with the fact?
 “ ‘ The loss to him is trifling—but the fall
 “ ‘ From independence, that to her is all;

“ ‘ Now should he marry, ’t will be shame to me
“ ‘ To hold myself from my engagement free ;
“ ‘ And should he not, it will be double grace
“ ‘ To stand alone in such a trying case.

“ ‘ Come then, my Lucy, to thy faithful heart
“ ‘ And humble love I will my views impart ;
“ ‘ Will see the grateful tear that softly steals
“ ‘ Down thy fair face, and all thy joy reveals ;
“ ‘ And when I say it is a blow severe,
“ ‘ Then will I add — restrain, my love, the tear,
“ ‘ And take this heart, so faithful and so fond,
“ ‘ Still bound to thine ; and fear not for that bond.’

“ He said ; and went, with purpose he believed
“ Of generous nature — so is man deceived.
“ Lucy determined that her lover’s eye
“ Should not distress nor supplication spy ;
“ That in her manner he should nothing find,
“ To indicate the weakness of her mind.

“ He saw no eye that wept, no frame that shook,
“ No fond appeal was made by word or look ;
“ Kindness there was, but join’d with some restraint ;
“ And traces of the late event were faint.

“ He look’d for grief deploring, but perceives
“ No outward token that she longer grieves ;
“ He had expected for his efforts praise,
“ For he resolved the drooping mind to raise ;
“ She would, he judged, be humble, and afraid
“ That he might blame her rashness and upbraid ;

“ And lo ! he finds her in a quiet state,
 “ Her spirit easy and her air sedate ;
 “ As if her loss was not a cause for pain,
 “ As if assured that he would make it gain. —

“ Silent awhile, he told the morning news,
 “ And what he judged they might expect to lose ;
 “ He thought himself, whatever some might boast,
 “ The composition would be small at most ;
 “ Some shabby matter, she would see no more
 “ The tithe of what she held in hand before.

“ How did her sister feel ? and did she think
 “ Bloomer was honest, and would never shrink ?
 “ ‘ But why that smile ? is loss like yours so light
 “ ‘ That it can aught like merriment excite ?
 “ ‘ Well, he is rich, we know, and can afford
 “ ‘ To please his fancy, and to keep his word ;
 “ ‘ To him ’t is nothing ; had he now a fear,
 “ ‘ He must the meanest of his sex appear ;
 “ ‘ But the true honour, as I judge the case,
 “ ‘ Is, both to feel the evil, and embrace.’

“ Here Barlow stopp’d, a little vex’d to see
 “ No fear or hope, no dread or ecstasy :
 “ Calmly she spoke — ‘ Your prospects, sir, and mine
 “ ‘ Are not the same, — their union I decline ;
 “ ‘ Could I believe the hand for which you strove
 “ ‘ Had yet its value, did you truly love,
 “ ‘ I had with thanks address’d you, and replied,
 “ ‘ Wait till your feelings and my own subside,

“ ‘ Watch your affections, and, if still they live,
 “ ‘ What pride denies, my gratitude shall give ;
 “ ‘ Ev’n then, in yielding, I had first believed
 “ ‘ That I conferr’d the favour, not received.
 “ ‘ You I release — nay, hear me — I impart
 “ ‘ Joy to your soul, — I judge not of your heart.
 “ ‘ Think’st thou a being, to whom God has lent
 “ ‘ A feeling mind, will have her bosom rent
 “ ‘ By man’s reproaches? Sorrow will be thine,
 “ ‘ For all thy pity prompts thee to resign !
 “ ‘ Think’st thou that meekness’ self would con-descend
 “ ‘ To take the husband when she scorns the friend?
 “ ‘ Forgive the frankness, and rejoice for life,
 “ ‘ Thou art not burthen’d with so poor a wife.

“ ‘ Go ! and be happy — tell, for the applause
 “ ‘ Of hearts like thine, we parted, and the cause
 “ ‘ Give, as it pleases.’ With a foolish look
 “ That a dull school-boy fixes on his book
 “ That he resigns, with mingled shame and joy ;
 “ So Barlow went, confounded like the boy.

“ Jane, while she wept to think her sister’s pain
 “ Was thus increased, felt infinite disdain ;
 “ Bound as she was, and wedded by the ties
 “ Of love and hope, that care and craft despise ;
 “ She could but wonder that a man, whose taste
 “ And zeal for money had a Jew disgraced,
 “ Should love her sister ; yet with this surprise,
 “ She felt a little exultation rise ;

“ Hers was a lover who had always held
“ This man as base, by generous scorn impell'd ;
“ And yet, as one, of whom for Lucy's sake
“ He would a civil distant notice take.

“ Lucy, with sadden'd heart and temper mild,
“ Bow'd to correction, like an humbled child,
“ Who feels the parent's kindness, and who knows
“ Such the correction he, who loves, bestows.

“ Attending always, but attending more
“ When sorrow ask'd his presence, than before,
“ Tender and ardent, with the kindest air
“ Came Bloomer, fortune's error to repair ;
“ Words sweetly soothing spoke the happy youth,
“ With all the tender earnestness of truth.

“ There was no doubt of his intention now —
“ He will his purpose with his love avow :
“ So judged the maid ; yet, waiting, she admired
“ His still delaying what he most desired ;
“ Till, from her spirit's agitation free,
“ She might determine when the day should be.
“ With such facility the partial mind
“ Can the best motives for its favourites find.
“ Of this he spake not, but he stay'd beyond
“ His usual hour ; — attentive still and fond ; —
“ The hand yet firmer to the hand he prest,
“ And the eye rested where it loved to rest ;
“ Then took he certain freedoms, yet so small
“ That it was prudish so the things to call ;

“ Things they were not — ‘ Describe ’ — that none
can do,
“ They had been nothing had they not been new ;
“ It was the manner and the look ; a maid,
“ Afraid of such, is foolishly afraid ;
“ For what could she explain ? The piercing eye
“ Of jealous fear could nought amiss descry.

“ But some concern now rose ; the youth would seek
“ Jane by herself, and then would nothing speak,
“ Before not spoken ; there was still delay,
“ Vexatious, wearying, wasting, day by day.

“ ‘ He does not surely trifle ! ’ Heaven forbid !
“ She now should doubly scorn him if he did.

“ Ah ! more than this, unlucky girl ! is thine ;
“ Thou must the fondest views of life resign ;
“ And in the very time resign them too,
“ When they were brightening on the eager view.
“ I will be brief, — nor have I heart to dwell
“ On crimes they almost share who paint them well.

“ There was a moment’s softness, and it seem’d
“ Discretion slept, or so the lover dream’d ;
“ And watching long the now confiding maid,
“ He thought her guardless, and grew less afraid ;
“ Led to the theme that he had shunn’d before,
“ He used a language he must use no more —
“ For if it answers, there is no more need,
“ And no more trial, should it not succeed.

“ Then made he that attempt, in which to fail
“ Is shameful, — still more shameful to prevail.

“ Then was there lightning in that eye that shed
“ Its beams upon him, — and his frenzy fled ;
“ Abject and trembling at her feet he laid,
“ Despised and scorn'd by the indignant maid,
“ Whose spirits in their agitation rose,
“ Him, and her own weak pity, to oppose :
“ As liquid silver in the tube mounts high,
“ Then shakes and settles as the storm goes by.

“ While yet the lover stay'd, the maid was strong,
“ But when he fled, she droop'd and felt the wrong —
“ Felt the alarming chill, th' enfeebled breath, “ Closed the quick eye, and sank in transient death.
“ So Lucy found her ; and then first that breast
“ Knew anger's power, and own'd the stranger guest.

“ ‘ And is this love ? Ungenerous ! Has he too
“ ‘ Been mean and abject ? Is no being true ? ’
“ For Lucy judged that, like her prudent swain,
“ Bloomer had talk'd of what a man might gain ;
“ She did not think a man on earth was found,
“ A wounded bosom, while it bleeds, to wound ;
“ Thought not that mortal could be so unjust,
“ As to deprive affliction of its trust ;
“ Thought not a lover could the hope enjoy,
“ That must the peace, he should promote,
    destroy ;

“ Thought not, in fact, that in the world were those,
“ Who, to their tenderest friends, are worse than
foes,
“ Who win the heart, deprive it of its care,
“ Then plant remorse and desolation there.

“ Ah! cruel he, who can that heart deprive
“ Of all that keeps its energy alive ;
“ Can see consign'd to shame the trusting fair,
“ And turn confiding fondness to despair ;
“ To watch that time—a name is not assign'd
“ For crime so odious, nor shall learning find.

“ Now, from that day has Lucy laid aside
“ Her proper cares, to be her sister's guide,
“ Guard, and protector. At their uncle's farm
“ They pass'd the period of their first alarm,
“ But soon retired, nor was he grieved to learn
“ They made their own affairs their own concern.

“ I knew not then their worth; and, had I
known,
“ Could not the kindness of a friend have shown ;
“ For men they dreaded :—they a dwelling sought,
“ And there the children of the village taught ;
“ There, firm and patient, Lucy still depends “ Upon her efforts, not upon her friends ;
“ She is with persevering strength endued,
“ And can be cheerful—for she will be good.

“ Jane too will strive the daily tasks to share,
“ That so employment may contend with care ;

“ Not power, but will, she shows, and looks about
“ On her small people, who come in and out ;
“ And seems of what they need, or she can do, in doubt.

“ There sits the chubby crew on seats around,
“ While she, all rueful at the sight and sound,
“ Shrinks from the free approaches of the tribe,
“ Whom she attempts lamenting to describe,
“ With stains the idlers gather'd in their way,
“ The simple stains of mud, and mould, and clay,
“ And compound of the streets, of what we dare not say ;
“ With hair uncomb'd, grimed face, and piteous
    look,
“ Each heavy student takes the odious book,
“ And on the lady casts a glance of fear,
“ Who draws the garment close as he comes near ;
“ She then for Lucy's mild forbearance tries,
“ And from her pupils turns her brilliant eyes,
“ Making new efforts, and with some success,
“ To pay attention while the students guess ;
“ Who to the gentler mistress fain would glide,
“ And dread their station at the lady's side.

“ Such is their fate :—there is a friendly few “ Whom they receive, and there is chance for you ;
“ Their school, and something gather'd from the wreck
“ Of that bad Bank, keeps poverty in check ;
“ And true respect, and high regard, are theirs,
“ The children's profit, and the parent's prayers.

“ With Lucy rests the one peculiar care,
“ That few must see, and none with her may share ;
“ More dear than hope can be, more sweet than pleasures are.

“ For her sad sister needs the care of love
“ That will direct her, that will not reprove,
“ But waits to warn : for Jane will walk alone,
“ Will sing in low and melancholy tone ;
“ Will read or write, or to her plants will run
“ To shun her friends,—alas ! her thoughts to shun.

“ It is not love alone disturbs her rest,
“ But loss of all that ever hope possess'd ;
“ Friends ever kind, life's lively pleasures, ease,
“ When her enjoyments could no longer please ;
“ These were her comforts then ! she has no more of these.

“ Wrapt in such thoughts, she feels her mind astray,
“ But knows 'tis true, that she has lost her way ;
“ For Lucy's smile will check the sudden flight,
“ And one kind look let in the wonted light.

“ Fits of long silence she endures, then talks
“ Too much—with too much ardour, as she walks ;
“ But still the shrubs that she admires dispense
“ Their balmy freshness to the hurried sense,
“ And she will watch their progress, and attend
“ Her flowering favourites as a guardian friend ;
“ To sun or shade she will her sweets remove,
“ ‘ And here,’ she says, ‘ I may with safety love.’

“ But there are hours when on that bosom steals
“ A rising terror,— then indeed she feels ;— “ Feels how she loved the promised good, and how “ She feels the failure of the promise now.

“ ‘ That other spoiler did as robbers do,
“ ‘ Made poor our state, but not disgraceful too.
“ ‘ This spoiler shames me, and I look within
“ ‘ To find some cause that drew him on to sin ;
“ ‘ He and the wretch who could thy worth forsake
“ ‘ Are the fork’d adder and the loathsome snake ;
“ ‘ Thy snake could slip in villain-fear away,
“ ‘ But had no fang to fasten on his prey.

“ ‘ Oh ! my dear Lucy, I had thought to live
“ ‘ With all the comforts easy fortunes give ;
“ ‘ A wife caressing, and caress’d,— a friend,
“ ‘ Whom we would guide, advise, consult, defend,
“ ‘ And make his equal ;—then I fondly thought “ ‘ Among superior creatures to be brought ;
“ ‘ And while with them, delighted to behold
“ ‘ No eye averted, and no bosom cold ;—
“ ‘ Then at my home, a mother, to embrace
“ ‘ My—————Oh ! my sister, it was surely base !
“ ‘ I might forget the wrong ; I cannot the disgrace.

“ ‘ Oh ! when I saw that triumph in his eyes,
“ ‘ I felt my spirits with his own arise ;
“ ‘ I call’d it joy, and said, the generous youth
“ ‘ Laughs at my loss—no trial for his truth ;
“ ‘ It is a trifle he can not lament,
“ ‘ A sum but equal to his annual rent ;

“ ‘ And yet that loss, the cause of every ill,
 “ ‘ Has made me poor, and him’——

“ ‘ Oh ! poorer still ;
 “ ‘ Poorer, my Jane, and far below thee now :
 “ ‘ The injurer he, — the injured sufferer thou ;
 “ ‘ And shall such loss afflict thee ?’ —

“ ‘ Lose I not
 “ ‘ With him what fortune could in life allot ?
 “ ‘ Lose I not hope, life’s cordial, and the views
 “ ‘ Of an aspiring spirit ? — O ! I lose [choose.
 “ ‘ Whate’er the happy feel, whate’er the sanguine
 “ ‘ Would I could lose this bitter sense of wrong,
 “ ‘ And sleep in peace — but it will not be long !
 “ ‘ And here is something, Lucy, in my brain,
 “ ‘ I know not what — it is a cure for pain ;
 “ ‘ But is not death ! — no beckoning hand I see,
 “ ‘ No voice I hear that comes alone to me ;
 “ ‘ It is not death, but change ; I am not now
 “ ‘ As I was once, — nor can I tell you how ;
 “ ‘ Nor is it madness — ask, and you shall find
 “ ‘ In my replies the soundness of my mind :
 “ ‘ O ! I should be a trouble all day long ;
 “ ‘ A very torment, if my head were wrong.’

“ At times there is upon her features seen,
 “ What moves suspicion — she is too serene.
 “ Such is the motion of a drunken man,
 “ Who steps sedately, just to show he can.
 “ Absent at times she will her mother call,
 “ And cry at mid-day, ‘ Then good night to all.’

“ But most she thinks there will some good ensue
 “ From something done, or what she is to do ;
 “ Long wrapt in silence, she will then assume
 “ An air of business, and shake off her gloom ;
 “ Then cry exulting, ‘ O ! it must succeed,
 “ ‘ There are ten thousand readers—all men read :
 “ ‘ There are my writings,—you shall never spend
 “ ‘ Your precious moments to so poor an end ;
 “ ‘ Our peasants’ children may be taught by those,
 “ ‘ Who have no powers such wonders to compose ;
 “ ‘ So let me call them,—what the world allows,
 “ ‘ Surely a poet without shame avows ;
 “ ‘ Come, let us count what numbers we believe
 “ ‘ Will buy our work—Ah ! sister, do you grieve ?
 “ ‘ You weep ; there’s something I have said amiss,
 “ ‘ And vex’d my sister—What a world is this !
 “ ‘ And how I wander !—Where has fancy run ?
 “ ‘ Is there no poem ? Have I nothing done ?
 “ ‘ Forgive me, Lucy, I had fix’d my eye,
 “ ‘ And so my mind, on works that cannot die ;
 “ ‘ Marmion and Lara yonder in the case,
 “ ‘ And so I put me in the poet’s place.

“ ‘ Still, be not frighten’d ; it is but a dream ;
 “ ‘ I am not lost, bewilder’d though I seem ;
 “ ‘ I will obey thee—but suppress thy fear—
 “ ‘ I am at ease,—then why that silly tear ?’<sup>(1)</sup>

(1) [Here follows in MS.—

“ I read your looks, my Brother, you would give “ Largely to these—they should in comfort live,
 “ Nor labour thus ; but you would find it hard
 “ To gain assent : professions they regard

“ Jane, as these melancholy fits invade
 “ The busy fancy, seeks the deepest shade ;
 “ She walks in ceaseless hurry, till her mind
 “ Will short repose in verse and music find ;
 “ Then her own songs to some soft tunes she sings,
 “ And laughs, and calls them melancholy things ;
 “ Not frenzy all ; in some her erring Muse
 “ Will sad, afflicting, tender strains infuse :
 “ Sometimes on death she will her lines compose,
 “ Or give her serious page of solemn prose ;
 “ And still those favourite plants her fancy please,
 “ And give to care and anguish rest and ease.

“ ‘ Let me not have this gloomy view,
 “ ‘ About my room, around my bed ;
 “ ‘ But morning roses, wet with dew,
 “ ‘ To cool my burning brows instead.
 “ ‘ As flow’rs that once in Eden grew,
 “ ‘ Let them their fragrant spirits shed,
 “ ‘ And every day the sweets renew,
 “ ‘ Till I, a fading flower, am dead.

“ As their experience bids them, and they run
 “ From ready love, as they would treachery shun ;
 “ Yet have I woo’d them long, and they attend
 “ With growing trust — they treat me as a friend,
 “ And talk of my probation ; but afraid,
 “ They take my counsel, but refuse my aid.
 “ Jane,” &c.]

“ ‘ Oh ! let the herbs I loved to rear
“ ‘ Give to my sense their perfumed breath ;
“ ‘ Let them be placed about my bier,
“ ‘ And grace the gloomy house of death.
“ ‘ I’ll have my grave beneath a hill,
“ ‘ Where, only Lucy’s self shall know ;
“ ‘ Where runs the pure pellucid rill
“ ‘ Upon its gravelly bed below ;
“ ‘ There violets on the borders blow,
“ ‘ And insects their soft light display,
“ ‘ Till, as the morning sunbeams glow,
“ ‘ The cold phosphoric fires decay.

“ ‘ That is the grave to Lucy shown,
“ ‘ The soil a pure and silver sand,
“ ‘ The green cold moss above it grown,
“ ‘ Unpluck’d of all but maiden hand :
“ ‘ In virgin earth, till then unturn’d,
“ ‘ There let my maiden form be laid,
“ ‘ Nor let my changed clay be spurn’d,
“ ‘ Nor for new guest that bed be made.

“ ‘ There will the lark,—the lamb, in sport,
“ ‘ In air,—on earth,—securely play,
“ ‘ And Lucy to my grave resort,
“ ‘ As innocent, but not so gay.
“ ‘ I will not have the churchyard ground,
“ ‘ With bones all black and ugly grown,
“ ‘ To press my shivering body round,
“ ‘ Or on my wasted limbs be thrown.

“ ‘ With ribs and skulls I will not sleep,
 “ ‘ In clammy beds of cold blue clay,
 “ ‘ Through which the ringed earth-worms creep,
 “ ‘ And on the shrouded bosom prey ;
 “ ‘ I will not have the bell proclaim
 “ ‘ When those sad marriage rites begin,
 “ ‘ And boys, without regard or shame,
 “ ‘ Press the vile mouldering masses in.

“ ‘ Say not, it is beneath my care ;
 “ ‘ I cannot these cold truths allow ;
 “ ‘ These thoughts may not afflict me there,
 “ ‘ But, O ! they vex and tease me now.
 “ ‘ Raise not a turf, nor set a stone,
 “ ‘ That man a maiden’s grave may trace,
 “ ‘ But thou, my Lucy, come alone,
 “ ‘ And let affection find the place.

“ ‘ Oh ! take me from a world I hate,
 “ ‘ Men cruel, selfish, sensual, cold ;
 “ ‘ And, in some pure and blessed state,
 “ ‘ Let me my sister minds behold :
 “ ‘ From gross and sordid views refined,
 “ ‘ Our heaven of spotless love to share,
 “ ‘ For only generous souls design’d,
 “ ‘ And not a man to meet us there.’ ”(1)

(1) [“ The characters of the two Sisters are drawn with infinite skill and minuteness, and their whole story narrated with great feeling and beauty. The effects of their trials on their different tempers are also very finely described. The gentler Lucy is the most resigned and magnanimous. The more aspiring Jane suffers far keener anguish, and fiercer impatience ; and the task of soothing and cheering her devolves on her generous sister.

The wanderings of her reason are represented in a very affecting manner. The concluding stanzas appear to us to be eminently beautiful, and make us regret that Mr. Crabbe should have indulged us so seldom with those higher lyrical effusions." — JEFFREY.]

TALES OF THE HALL.

BOOK IX.

THE PRECEPTOR HUSBAND.

“ WHOM pass'd we musing near the woodman's
   shed,
 “ Whose horse not only carried him but led,
 “ That his grave rider might have slept the time,
 “ Or solved a problem, or composed a rhyme?
 “ A more abstracted man within my view
 “ Has never come—He recollected you.”

“ Yes,—he was thoughtful—thinks the whole day long,
 “ Deeply, and chiefly that he once thought wrong;
 “ He thought a strong and kindred mind to trace
 “ In the soft outlines of a trifler's face.

“ Poor Finch! I knew him when at school,—a boy
 “ Who might be said his labours to enjoy;
 “ So young a pedant that he always took
 “ The girl to dance who most admired her book;

“ That every beauty, both of form and mind,
“ Must be by him, if unendow'd, resign'd ;
“ That wealth was wanted for their joint affairs ;
“ His sisters' portions, and the Hall's repairs.

“ The son assented — and the wife must bring “ Wealth, learning, beauty, ere he gave the ring ;

“ But as these merits, when they all unite,
“ Are not produced in every soil and site ;
“ And when produced are not the certain gain
“ Of him who would these precious things obtain ;
“ Our patient student waited many a year,
“ Nor saw this phoenix in his walks appear.
“ But as views mended in the joint estate,
“ He would a something in his points abate ;
“ Give him but learning, beauty, temper, sense,
“ And he would then the happy state commence.
“ The mother sigh'd, but she at last agreed,
“ And now the son was likely to succeed ;
“ Wealth is substantial good the fates allot,
“ We know we have it, or we have it not ;
“ But all those graces, which men highly rate,
“ Their minds themselves imagine and create ;
“ And therefore Finch was in a way to find
“ A good that much depended on his mind.

“ He look'd around, observing, till he saw “ Augusta Dallas ! when he felt an awe
“ Of so much beauty and commanding grace,
“ That well became the honours of her race :

“ ‘ Then how unhappy will the husband be,
“ ‘ Whose sole associate spoils his company ?’

“ This he would try ; but all such trials prove “ Too mighty for a man disposed to love ;
“ He whom the magic of a face enchains,
“ But little knowledge of the mind obtains ;
“ If by his tender heart the man is led,
“ He finds how erring is the soundest head.

“ The lady saw his purpose ; she could meet
“ The man’s enquiry, and his aim defeat ;
“ She had a studied flattery in her look,
“ She could be seen retiring with a book ;
“ She by attending to his speech could prove,
“ That she for learning had a fervent love ;
“ Yet love alone, she modestly declared,
“ She must be spared enquiry, and was spared ;
“ Of her poor studies she was not so weak,
“ As in his presence, or at all, to speak ;
“ But to discourse with him — who, all agreed,
“ Has read so much, would be absurd indeed ;
“ Ask what he might, she was so much a dunce
“ She would confess her ignorance at once.

“ All this the man believed not,—doom’d to grieve
“ For his belief, he this would not believe :
“ No ! he was quite in raptures to discern
“ That love, and that avidity to learn.
“ ‘ Could she have found,’ she said, ‘ a friend, a guide,
“ ‘ Like him, to study had been all her pride ;

“ ‘ But, doom’d so long to frivolous employ,
“ ‘ How could she those superior views enjoy ?
“ ‘ The day might come—a happy day for her,
“ ‘ When she might choose the ways she should prefer.’

“ Then too he learn’d, in accidental way,
“ How much she grieved to lose the given day
“ In dissipation wild, in visitation gay.
“ Happy, most happy, must the woman prove
“ Who proudly looks on him she vows to love ;
“ Who can her humble acquisitions state,
“ That he will praise, at least will tolerate.

“ Still the cool mother sundry doubts express’d,—
“ ‘ How ! is Augusta graver than the rest ?
“ ‘ There are three others : they are not inclined
“ ‘ To feed with precious food the empty mind :
“ ‘ Whence this strong relish ?’ ‘ It is very strong,’
“ Replied the son, ‘ and has possess’d her long,
“ ‘ Increased indeed ; I may presume, by views, —
“ ‘ We may suppose—ah ! may she not refuse ?’

“ ‘ Fear not !—I see the question must be tried,
“ ‘ Nay, is determin’d—let us to your Bride.’

“ They soon were wedded, and the Nymph appear’d
“ By all her promised excellence endear’d : [few,
“ Her words were kind, were cautious, and were
“ And she was proud—of what her husband knew.
“ Weeks pass’d away, some five or six, before,
“ Bless’d in the present, Finch could think of more :

“ A month was next upon a journey spent,
 “ When to the Lakes the fond companions went ;
 “ Then the gay town received them, and, at last,
 “ Home to their mansion, man and wife, they
     pass’d. (1)

“ And now in quiet way they came to live
 “ On what their fortune, love, and hopes would give ;
 “ The honied moon had nought but silver rays,
 “ And shone benignly on their early days ;
 “ The second moon a light less vivid shed,
 “ And now the silver rays were tinged with lead.
 “ They now began to look beyond the Hall,
 “ And think what friends would make a morning-
     call ;
 “ Their former appetites return’d, and now
 “ Both could their wishes and their tastes avow ;
 “ ’Twas now no longer ‘ Just what you approve,’
 “ But ‘ Let the wild fowl be to-day, my love.’
 “ In fact the senses, drawn aside by force
 “ Of a strong passion, sought their usual course.

“ Now to her music would the wife repair,
 “ To which he listen’d once with eager air ;
 “ When there was so much harmony within,
 “ That any note was sure its way to win ;

(1) [Thus in the original MS.

“ The weeks fled smoothly, five or six, before,
 “ Bless’d in the present, he could think of more.
 “ Two months beside were at his villa spent,
 “ Where first enraptured, he became content,
 “ Then went to town, scarce knowing why he went.
 “ His lady with him, as a wife should be—
 “ Talk of a moon of honey! there were three.”]

“ But now the sweet melodious tones were sent “ From the struck chords, and none cared where they went.
 “ Full well we know that many a favourite air,
 “ That charms a party, fails to charm a pair ; (1)
 “ And as Augusta play'd she look'd around,
 “ To see if one was dying at the sound :
 “ But all were gone — a husband, wrapt in gloom,
 “ Stalk'd careless, listless, up and down the room.

“ And now 't is time to fill that ductile mind
 “ With knowledge, from his stores of various kind :
 “ His mother, in a peevish mood, had ask'd,
 “ ‘ Does your Augusta profit? is she task'd? ’

“ ‘ Madam ! ’ he cried, offended with her looks,
 “ ‘ There's time for all things, and not all for books :
 “ ‘ Just on one's marriage to sit down, and prate
 “ ‘ On points of learning, is a thing I hate. ’ —

“ ‘ 'T is right, my son, and it appears to me,
 “ ‘ If deep your hatred, you must well agree. ’

“ Finch was too angry for a man so wise,
 “ And said, ‘ Insinuation I despise !
 “ ‘ Nor do I wish to have a mind so full
 “ ‘ Of learned trash — it makes a woman dull :
 “ ‘ Let it suffice, that I in her discern
 “ ‘ An aptitude, and a desire to learn. ’ —

“ For pairs not loving, cannot music find,
 “ And loving pairs have music in the mind.”]

“ The matron smiled, but she observed a frown
“ On her son’s brow, and calmly sat her down ; “ Leaving the truth to Time, who solves our doubt,
“ By bringing his all-glorious daughter out —
“ Truth ! for whose beauty all their love profess,
“ And yet how many think it ugliness !

“ ‘ Augusta, love,’ said Finch, ‘ while you engage “ ‘ In that embroidery, let me read a page ;
“ ‘ Suppose it Hume’s ; indeed he takes a side,
“ ‘ But still an author need not be our guide ;
“ ‘ And as he writes with elegance and ease,
“ ‘ Do now attend — he will be sure to please.
“ ‘ Here at the Revolution we commence, —
“ ‘ We date, you know, our liberties from hence.’

“ ‘ Yes, sure,’ Augusta answer’d with a smile,
“ ‘ Our teacher always talk’d about his style ;
“ ‘ When we about the Revolution read,
“ ‘ And how the Martyrs to the flames were led ;
“ ‘ The good old Bishops, I forget their names,
“ ‘ But they were all committed to the flames ;
“ ‘ Maidens and widows, bachelors and wives, —
“ ‘ The very babes and sucklings lost their lives.
“ ‘ I read it all in Guthrie at the school, —
“ ‘ What now ! — I know you took me for a fool ;
“ ‘ There were five Bishops taken from the stall,
“ ‘ And twenty widows, I remember all ;
“ ‘ And by this token, that our teacher tried
“ ‘ To cry for pity, till she howl’d and cried.’

“ ‘ True, true, my love, but you mistake the thing,—

“ ‘ The Revolution that made William king
 “ ‘ Is what I mean ; the Reformation you,
 “ ‘ In Edward and Elizabeth.’—‘ ’T is true :
 “ ‘ But the nice reading is the love between
 “ ‘ The brave lord Essex and the cruel queen ;
 “ ‘ And how he sent the ring to save his head,
 “ ‘ Which the false lady kept till he was dead.

“ ‘ That is all true : now read, and I ’ll attend :
 “ ‘ But was not she a most deceitful friend ?
 “ ‘ It was a monstrous, vile, and treacherous thing,
 “ ‘ To show no pity, and to keep the ring ;
 “ ‘ But the queen shook her in her dying bed,
 “ ‘ And ‘ God forgive you ! ’ was the word she said ;
 “ ‘ ‘ Not I for certain : ’ — Come, I will attend,
 “ ‘ So read the Revolutions to an end.’

“ Finch, with a timid, strange, enquiring look,
 “ Softly and slowly laid aside the book
 “ With sigh inaudible — ‘ Come, never heed,’
 “ Said he, recovering, ‘ now I cannot read.’

“ They walk’d at leisure through their wood and groves,
 “ In fields and lanes, and talk’d of plants and loves,
 “ And loves of plants. — Said Finch, ‘ Augusta, dear,
 “ ‘ You said you loved to learn, — were you sincere ?
 “ ‘ Do you remember that you told me once
 “ ‘ How much you grieved, and said you were a dunce ?

“ ‘ That is, you wanted information. Say,
“ ‘ What would you learn? I will direct your way.’

“ ‘ Goodness!’ said she, ‘ what meanings you discern

“ ‘ In a few words! I said I wish’d to learn,

“ ‘ And so I think I did; and you replied,

“ ‘ The wish was good: what would you now beside?

“ ‘ Did not you say it show’d an ardent mind;

“ ‘ And pray what more do you expect to find?’

“ ‘ My dear Augusta, could you wish indeed

“ ‘ For any knowledge, and not then proceed?

“ ‘ That is not wishing——’

“ ‘ Mercy! how you tease!

“ ‘ You knew I said it with a view to please;

“ ‘ A compliment to you, and quite enough,—

“ ‘ You would not kill me with that puzzling stuff!

“ ‘ Sure I might say I wish’d; but that is still “ ‘ Far from a promise: it is not,—‘ I will.’

“ ‘ But come, to show you that I will not hide

“ ‘ My proper talents, you shall be my guide;

“ ‘ And Lady Boothby, when we meet, shall cry,

“ ‘ She’s quite as good a botanist as I.’

“ ‘ Right, my Augusta;’ and, in manner grave,

“ ‘ Finch his first lecture on the science gave;

“ ‘ An introduction,—and he said, ‘ My dear,

“ ‘ Your thought was happy,—let us persevere;

“ ‘ And let no trifling cause our work retard :’ —
 “ Agreed the lady, but she fear’d it hard.

“ Now o’er the grounds they rambled many a mile ;
 “ He show’d the flowers, the stamina, the style,
 “ Calix and corol, pericarp and fruit,
 “ And all the plant produces, branch and root ;
 “ Of these he treated, every varying shape,
 “ Till poor Augusta panted to escape :
 “ He show’d the various foliage plants produce,
 “ Lunate and lyrate, runcinate, retuse ;
 “ Long were the learned words, and urged with force,
 “ Panduriform, pinnatifid, premorse,
 “ Latent, and patent, papulous, and plane, —
 “ ‘ Oh !’ said the pupil, ‘ it will turn my brain.’
 “ ‘ Fear not,’ he answer’d, and again, intent
 “ To fill that mind, o’er class and order went ;
 “ And stopping, ‘ Now,’ said he, ‘ my love, attend.’
 “ ‘ I do,’ said she, ‘ but when will be an end ?’
 “ ‘ When we have made some progress, — now begin,
 “ ‘ Which is the stigma, show me with the pin :
 “ ‘ Come, I have told you, dearest, let me see,
 “ ‘ Times very many, — tell it now to me.’

“ ‘ Stigma ! I know, — the things with yellow heads,
 “ ‘ That shed the dust, and grow upon the threads ;
 “ ‘ You call them wives and husbands, but you
 know
 “ ‘ That is a joke — here, look, and I will show

“ ‘ All I remember.’ — Doleful was the look
“ Of the preceptor, when he shut his book,
“ (The system brought to aid them in their view,)
“ And now with sighs return’d — ‘ It will not do.’

“ A handsome face first led him to suppose,
“ There must be talent with such looks as those ;
“ The want of talent taught him now to find
“ The face less handsome with so poor a mind ;
“ And half the beauty faded, when he found
“ His cherish’d hopes were falling to the ground.

“ Finch lost his spirit ; but e’en then he sought
“ For fancied powers : she might in time be taught.
“ Sure there was nothing in that mind to fear ;
“ The favourite study did not yet appear. —

“ Once he express’d a doubt if she could look
“ For five succeeding minutes on a book ;
“ When, with awaken’d spirit, she replied,
“ ‘ He was mistaken, and she would be tried.’

“ With this delighted, he new hopes express’d, —
“ ‘ How do I know ? — She may abide the test ?
“ ‘ Men I have known, and famous in their day,
“ ‘ Who were by chance directed in their way :
“ ‘ I have been hasty. — Well, Augusta, well,
“ ‘ What is your favourite reading ? prithee tell ;
“ ‘ Our different tastes may different books require, —
“ ‘ Yours I may not peruse, and yet admire : [haste,
“ ‘ Do then explain’ — ‘ Good Heaven !’ said she, in “ ‘ How I do hate these lectures upon taste !’

“ ‘ I lecture not, my love ; but do declare, —
“ ‘ You read you say — what your attainments are.’

“ ‘ Oh ! you believe,’ said she, ‘ that other things
“ ‘ Are read as well as histories of kings,
“ ‘ And loves of plants, with all that simple stuff
“ ‘ About their sex, of which I know enough.

“ ‘ Well, if I must, I will my studies name, “ ‘ Blame if you please — I know you love to blame.

“ ‘ When all our childish books were set apart,
“ ‘ The first I read was ‘ Wanderings of the Heart ;
“ ‘ It was a story, where was done a deed
“ ‘ So dreadful, that alone I fear’d to read.

“ ‘ The next was ‘ The Confessions of a Nun,’ —
“ ‘ ’T was quite a shame such evil should be done ;
“ ‘ Nun of — no matter for the creature’s name,
“ ‘ For there are girls no nunnery can tame :
“ ‘ Then was the story of the Haunted Hall,
“ ‘ Where the huge picture nodded from the wall,
“ ‘ When the old lord look’d up with trembling
dread,
“ ‘ And I grew pale, and shudder’d as I read :
“ ‘ Then came the tales of Winters, Summers Springs,
“ ‘ At Bath and Brighton, — they were pretty things !
“ ‘ No ghosts nor spectres there were heard or seen,
“ ‘ But all was love and flight to Gretna-green.
“ ‘ Perhaps your greater learning may despise
“ ‘ What others like, and there your wisdom lies, —

“ ‘ Well! do not frown,—I read the tender tales
“ ‘ Of lonely cots, retreats in silent vales
“ ‘ For maids forsaken, and suspected wives,
“ ‘ Against whose peace some foe his plot contrives;
“ ‘ With all the hidden schemes that none can clear
“ ‘ Till the last book, and then the ghosts appear.

“ ‘ I read all plays that on the boards succeed,
“ ‘ And all the works, that ladies ever read,— “ ‘ Shakspeare, and all the rest, — I did, indeed, —
“ ‘ Ay! you may stare; but, sir, believe it true
“ ‘ That we can read and learn, as well as you.

“ ‘ I would not boast,—but I could act a scene
“ ‘ In any play, before I was fifteen.

“ ‘ Nor is this all; for many are the times
“ ‘ I read in Pope and Milton, prose and rhymes;
“ ‘ They were our lessons, and, at ten years old,
“ ‘ I could repeat——but now enough is told.
“ ‘ Sir, I can tell you I my mind applied
“ ‘ To all my studies, and was not denied
“ ‘ Praise for my progress —— Are you satisfied?’

“ ‘ Entirely, madam! else were I possess’d
“ ‘ By a strong spirit who could never rest.
“ ‘ Yes! yes, no more I question,—here I close
“ ‘ The theme for ever—let us to repose.’”

TALES OF THE HALL.

---

BOOK X.

THE OLD BACHELOR.

SAVE their kind friend the Rector, Richard yet
 Had not a favourite of his Brother met ;
 Now at the Hall that welcome guest appear'd,
 By trust, by trials, and by time endear'd ;
 Of him the grateful 'Squire his love profess'd,
 And full regard — he was of friends the best ;
 “ Yet not to him alone this good I owe,
 “ This social pleasure that our friends bestow ;
 “ The sex, that wrought in earlier life my woes,
 “ With loss of time, who murder'd my repose,
 “ They to my joys administer, nor vex
 “ Me more ; and now I venerate the sex ;
 “ And boast the friendship of a Spinster kind,
 “ Cheerful and pleasant, to her fate resign'd ;
 “ Then by her side my Bachelor I place,
 “ And hold them honours to the human race.
 “ Yet these are they in tale and song display'd,
 “ The peevish man and the repining maid :

“ Creatures made up of misery and spite,
 “ Who taste no pleasures, except those they blight :
 “ From whom the affrighten’d niece and nephew fly, —
 “ Fear’d while they live, and useless till they die.

“ Not such these friends of mine ; they never meant
 “ That youth should so be lost, or life be spent.
 “ They had warm passions, tender hopes, desires
 “ That youth indulges, and that love inspires :
 “ But fortune frown’d on their designs, displaced
 “ The views of hope, and love’s gay dreams disgraced :
 “ Took from the soul her sunny views, and spread
 “ A cloud of dark but varying gloom instead :
 “ And shall we these with ridicule pursue,
 “ Because they did not what they could not do ?
 “ If they their lot preferr’d, still why the jest
 “ On those who took the way they judged the best ?
 “ But if they sought a change, and sought in vain,
 “ ’Tis worse than brutal to deride their pain —
 “ But you will see them ; see the man I praise,
 “ The kind protector in my troubled days,
 “ Himself in trouble, you shall see him now,
 “ And learn his worth ! and my applause allow.”

This friend appear’d with talents form’d to please,
 And with some looks of sprightliness and ease ;
 To him indeed the ills of life were known,
 But misery had not made him all her own.

They spoke on various themes, and George design’d
 To show his Brother this, the favourite mind ;

To lead the friend, by subjects he could choose,
 To paint himself, his life, and earlier views,
 What he was bless'd to hope, what he was doom'd to lose.

They spoke of marriage, and he understood
 Their call on him, and said, "It is not good
 "To be alone, although alone to be
 "Is freedom; so are men in deserts free;
 "Men who unyoked and unattended groan,
 "Condemn'd and grieved to walk their way alone:
 "Whatever ill a married pair betide,
 "Each feels a stay, a comfort, or a guide;
 "'Not always comfort,' will our wits reply. —
 "Wits are not judges, nor the cause shall try.
 "Have I not seen, when grief his visits paid,
 "That they were easier by communion made?
 "True, with the quiet times and days serene,
 "There have been flying clouds of care and spleen;
 "But is not man, the solitary, sick
 "Of his existence, sad and splenetic?
 "And who will help him, when such evils come,
 "To bear the pressure or to clear the gloom?"

"Do you not find, that joy within the breast
 "Of the unwedded man is soon suppress'd;
 "While, to the bosom of a wife convey'd,
 "Increase is by participation made? —
 "The lighted lamp that gives another light,
 "Say, is it by th' imparted blaze less bright?
 "Are not both gainers when the heart's distress
 "Is so divided, that the pain is less?"

“ And when the tear has stood in either eye,
“ Love’s sun shines out, and they are quickly dry.”

He ended here, — but would he not confess,
How came these feelings on his mind to press ?
He would ! nor fear’d his weakness to display
To men like them ; their weakness too had they.
Bright shone the fire, wine sparkled, sordid care
Was banish’d far, at least appear’d not there :
A kind and social spirit each possess’d,
And thus began his tale the friendly guest.

---

“ Near to my father’s mansion, — but apart,
“ I must acknowledge, from my father’s heart, —
“ Dwelt a keen sportsman, in a pleasant seat ;
“ Nor met the neighbours as should neighbours meet :
“ To them revenge appear’d a kind of right,
“ A lawful pleasure, an avow’d delight ;
“ Their neighbours too blew up their passion’s fire,
“ And urged the anger of each rival-squire ;
“ More still their waspish tempers to inflame,
“ A party-spirit, friend of anger, came :
“ Oft would my father cry, ‘ That tory-knave,
“ ‘ That villain-placeman, would the land enslave.’
“ Not that his neighbour had indeed a place,
“ But would accept one — that was his disgrace ;
“ Who, in his turn, was sure my father plann’d
“ To revolutionise his native land.
“ He dared the most destructive things advance,
“ And even pray’d for liberty to France ;

“ Had still good hope that Heaven would grant his prayer,
“ That he might see a revolution there.
“ At this the tory-squire was much perplex'd :
“ ‘ Freedom in France ! — what will he utter next ?
“ ‘ Sooner should I in Paris look to see
“ ‘ An English army sent their guard to be.’

“ My poor mamma, who had her mind subdued
“ By whig-control, and hated every feud,
“ Would have her neighbour met with mind serene ;
“ But fiercer spirit fired the tory-queen :
“ My parents both had given her high disgust,
“ While she resenting said, ‘ Revenge is just ;’
“ And till th’ offending parties chose to stoop,
“ She judged it right to keep resentment up ;
“ Could she in friendship with a woman live
“ Who could the insult of a man forgive ?
“ Did not her husband in a crowded room
“ Once call her idiot, and the thing was dumb ?
“ The man’s attack was brutal to be sure,
“ But she no less an idiot to endure.

“ This lofty dame, with unrelenting soul,
“ Had a fair girl to govern and control ;
“ The dear Maria ! — whom, when first I met, —
“ Shame on this weakness ! do I feel it yet ?

“ The parent’s anger, you will oft-times see,
“ Prepares the children’s minds for amity ;
“ Youth will not enter into such debate,
“ ’Tis not in them to cherish groundless hate ;

“ Nor can they feel men’s quarrels or their cares,
“ Of whig or tory, partridges or hares.

“ Long ere we loved, this gentle girl and I “ Gave to our parents’ discord many a sigh ;
“ It was not ours, — and when the meeting came “ It pleased us much to find our thoughts the same ;
“ But grief and trouble in our minds arose
“ From the fierce spirits we could not compose ;
“ And much it vex’d us that the friends so dear
“ To us should foes among themselves appear.

“ Such was this maid, the angel of her race,
“ Whom I had loved in any time and place,
“ But in a time and place which chance assign’d,
“ When it was almost treason to be kind ;
“ When we had vast impediments in view,
“ Then wonder not that love in terror grew
“ With double speed — we look’d, and strove to find
“ A kindred spirit in the hostile mind ;
“ But is it hostile? there appears no sign
“ In those dear looks of warfare — none have mine ;
“ At length I whisper’d — ‘ Would that war might cease
“ ‘ Between our houses, and that all was peace !’
“ A sweet confusion on her features rose,
“ ‘ She could not bear to think of having foes,
“ ‘ When we might all as friends and neighbours
    live,
“ ‘ And for that blessing, Oh ! what would she give ?’ —

“ ‘ Then let us try and our endeavours blend,’
“ I said, ‘ to bring these quarrels to an end :’
“ Thus, with one purpose in our hearts, we strove,
“ And, if no more, increased our secret love ;
“ Love that with such impediments in view
“ To meet the growing danger stronger grew :
“ And from that time each heart, resolved and sure,
“ Grew firm in hope, and patient to endure.

“ To those who know this season of delight
“ I need not strive their feelings to excite ;
“ To those who know not the delight or pain,
“ The best description would be lent in vain ;
“ And to the grieving, who will no more find
“ The bower of bliss, to paint it were unkind ;
“ I pass it by, to tell that long we tried
“ To bring our fathers over to our side ;
“ ’T was bootless on their wives our skill to try,
“ For one would not, and one in vain comply.

“ First I began my father’s heart to move,
“ By boldly saying, ‘ We are born to love ;’
“ My father answer’d, with an air of ease,
“ ‘ Well ! very well ! be loving if you please !
“ ‘ Except a man insults us or offends,
“ ‘ In my opinion we should all be friends.’

“ This gain’d me nothing ; little would accrue
“ From clearing points so useless though so true ;
“ But with some pains I brought him to confess,
“ That to forgive our wrongs is to redress :

“ ‘It might be so,’ he answer’d, yet with doubt,
“ That it might not, ‘but what is this about?’
“ I dared not speak directly, but I strove
“ To keep my subjects, harmony and love.

“ Coolly my father look’d, and much enjoy’d
“ The broken eloquence his eye destroy’d ;
“ Yet less confused, and more resolved at last,
“ With bolder effort to my point I pass’d ;
“ And fondly speaking of my peerless maid,
“ I call’d her worth and beauty to my aid,
“ ‘Then make her mine!’ I said, and for his favour pray’d.

“ My father’s look was one I seldom saw,
“ It gave no pleasure, nor created awe ;
“ It was the kind of cool contemptuous smile
“ Of witty persons, overcharged with bile ;
“ At first he spoke not, nor at last to me —

“ ‘Well now, and what if such a thing could be ?
“ ‘What, if the boy should his addresses pay
“ ‘To the tall girl, would that old tory say ?
“ ‘I have no hatred to the dog,—but, still,
“ ‘It was some pleasure when I used him ill ;
“ ‘This I must lose if we should brethren be,
“ ‘Yet may be not, for brethren disagree ;
“ ‘The fool is right,—there is no bar in life
“ ‘Against their marriage,—let her be his wife.
“ ‘Well, sir, you hear me!’—Never man complied,
“ And left a beggar so dissatisfied ;

“ Though all was granted, yet was grace refused ;
“ I felt as one indulged, and yet abused,
“ And yet, although provoked, I was not unamused.
“ In a reply like this appear'd to meet
“ All that encourage hope, and that defeat ;
“ Consent, though cool, had been for me enough,
“ But this consent had something of reproof ;
“ I had prepared my answer to his rage,
“ With his contempt I thought not to engage :
“ I, like a hero, would my castle storm,
“ And meet the giant in his proper form ;
“ Then, conquering him, would set my princess free ;
“ This would a trial and a triumph be :
“ When lo ! a sneering menial brings the keys,
“ And cries in scorn, ‘ Come, enter, if you please ;
“ ‘ You’ll find the lady sitting on her bed,
“ ‘ And ’t is expected that you woo and wed.’

“ Yet not so easy was my conquest found ;
“ I met with trouble ere with triumph crown'd.
“ Triumph, alas !— My father little thought,
“ A king at home, how other minds are wrought ;
“ True, his meek neighbour was a gentle squire,
“ And had a soul averse from wrath and ire ;
“ He answer'd frankly, when to him I went,
“ ‘ I give you little, sir, in my consent :’
“ He and my mother were to us inclined,
“ The powerless party with the peaceful mind ;
“ But that meek man was destined to obey
“ A sovereign lady’s unremitted sway ;
“ Who bore no partial, no divided rule,—
“ All were obedient pupils in her school.

“ She had religious zeal, both strong and sour,
“ That gave an active sternness to her power ;
“ But few could please her, she herself was one
“ By whom that deed was very seldom done ;
“ With such a being, so disposed to feed
“ Contempt and scorn—how was I to succeed ?
“ But love commanded, and I made my prayer
“ To the stern lady, with an humble air ;
“ Said all that lovers hope, all measures tried
“ That love suggested, and bow'd down to pride.

“ Yes ! I have now the tigress in my eye—
“ When I had ceased and waited her reply,
“ A pause ensued, and then she slowly rose,
“ With bitter smile predictive of my woes ;
“ A look she saw was plainly understood——

“ ‘ Admire my daughter ! Sir, you're very good.
“ ‘ The girl is decent, take her all in all, —
“ ‘ Genteel we hope—perhaps a thought too tall ;
“ ‘ A daughter's portion hers—you'll think her fortune
“ ‘ Perhaps her uncles, in a cause so good, [small.
“ ‘ Would do a little for their flesh and blood ;
“ ‘ We are not ill allied,—and say we make
“ ‘ Her portion decent—whither would you take ?
“ ‘ Is there some cottage on your father's ground,
“ ‘ Where may a dwelling for the girl be found ?
“ ‘ Or a small farm,—your mother understands
“ ‘ How to make useful such a pair of hands.

“ ‘ But this we drop at present, if you please,
“ ‘ We shall have leisure for such things as these ;

“ ‘They will be proper ere you fix the day
“ ‘For the poor girl to honour and obey ;
“ ‘At present therefore we may put an end
“ ‘To our discourse——Good morrow to you,
friend !’

“ Then, with a solemn curtsey and profound,
“ Her laughing eye she lifted from the ground,
“ And left me lost in thought, and gazing idly round.

“ Still we had hope, and, growing bold in time,
“ I would engage the father in our crime :
“ But he refused; for though he wish’d us well,
“ He said, ‘he must not make his house a hell ;’—
“ And sure the meaning look that I convey’d
“ Did not inform him that the hell was made.
“ Still hope existed that a mother’s heart
“ Would in a daughter’s feelings take a part ;
“ Nor was it vain,—for there is found access
“ To a hard heart, in time of its distress.

“ The mother sicken’d, and the daughter sigh’d,
“ And we petition’d till our queen complied ;
“ She thought of dying, and if power must cease,
“ Better to make, than cause, th’ expected peace ;
“ And sure this kindness, mixing with the blood,
“ Its balmy influence caused the body’s good ;
“ For as a charm, it work’d upon the frame
“ Of the reviving and relenting dame ;
“ For when recover’d, she no more opposed [closed.
“ Her daughter’s wishes. —— Here contention

“ Then bliss ensued, so exquisitely sweet,
“ That with it once, once only, we can meet ;
“ For though we love again, and though once more
“ We feel th’ enlivening hope we felt before,
“ Still the pure freshness of the joy that cast
“ Its sweet around us is for ever past.
“ Oh ! time to memory precious,—ever dear,
“ Though ever painful—this eventful year ;
“ What bliss is now in view ! and now what woes
    appear !
“ Sweet hours of expectation !—I was gone
“ To the vile town to press our business on ;
“ To urge its formal instruments,—and lo !
“ Comes with dire looks a messenger of woe,
“ With tidings sad as death !—With all my speed
“ I reach’d her home !—but that pure soul was freed—
“ She was no more—for ever shut that eye,
“ That look’d all soul, as if it could not die ;
“ It could not see me—Oh ! the strange distress
“ Of these new feelings !—misery’s excess ;
“ What can describe it ? words will not express.
“ When I look back upon that dreadful scene,
“ I feel renew’d the anguish that has been ;
“ And reason trembles —— Yes ! you bid me
    cease,
“ Nor try to think ; but I will think in peace.—

“ Unbid and unforbidden, to the room
“ I went, a gloomy wretch amid that gloom ;
“ And there the lovely being on her bed
“ Shrouded and cold was laid — Maria dead !

“ There was I left,—and I have now no thought
“ Remains with me, how fear or fancy wrought ;
“ I know I gazed upon the marble cheek,
“ And pray’d the dear departed girl to speak —
“ Further I know not, for, till years were fled,
“ All was extinguish’d — all with her was dead.
“ I had a general terror, dread of all
“ That could a thinking, feeling man befall ;
“ I was desirous from myself to run,
“ And something, but I knew not what, to shun :
“ There was a blank from this I cannot fill,
“ It is a puzzle and a terror still.
“ Yet did I feel some intervals of bliss,
“ Ev’n with the horrors of a fate like this ;
“ And dreams of wonderful construction paid
“ For waking horror — dear angelic maid !

“ When peace return’d, unfelt for many a year,
“ And Hope, discarded flatterer, dared t’ appear ;
“ I heard of my estate, how free from debt,
“ And of the comforts life afforded yet ;
“ Beside that best of comforts in a life
“ So sad as mine — a fond and faithful wife.
“ My gentle mother, now a widow, made
“ These strong attempts to guide me or persuade.

“ ‘ Much time is lost,’ she said, ‘ but yet my son
“ ‘ May, in the race of life, have much to run ;
“ ‘ When I am gone, thy life to thee will seem “ ‘ Lonely and sad, a melancholy dream ;
“ ‘ Get thee a wife — I will not say to love,
“ ‘ But one, a friend in thy distress to prove ;

“ ‘ One who will kindly help thee to sustain
 “ ‘ Thy spirit’s burden in its hours of pain ;
 “ ‘ Say, will you marry ? ’ — I in haste replied,
 “ ‘ And who would be the self-devoted bride ?
 “ ‘ There is a melancholy power that reigns
 “ ‘ Tyrant within me — who would bear his chains,
 “ ‘ And hear them clicking every wretched hour,
 “ ‘ With will to aid me, but without the power ?
 “ ‘ But if such one were found with easy mind,
 “ ‘ Who would not ask for raptures — I ’m resign’d.’

“ ‘ ’Tis quite enough,’ my gentle mother cried ;
 “ ‘ We leave the raptures, and will find the bride.’

“ There was a lady near us, quite discreet,
 “ Whom in our visits ’twas our chance to meet,
 “ One grave and civil, who had no desire
 “ That men should praise her beauties or admire ;
 “ She in our walks would sometimes take my arm,
 “ But had no foolish fluttering or alarm ;
 “ She wish’d no heart to wound, no truth to prove,
 “ And seem’d, like me, as one estranged from love ;
 “ My mother praised her, and with so much skill,
 “ She gave a certain bias to my will ;
 “ But calm indeed our courtship ; I profess’d
 “ A due regard — My mother did the rest ;
 “ Who soon declared that we should love, and grow
 “ As fond a couple as the world could show ;
 “ And talk’d of boys and girls with so much glee,
 “ That I began to wish the thing could be.

“ Still when the day that soon would come was named
“ I felt a cold fit, and was half ashamed ;
“ But we too far proceeded to revoke,
“ And had been much too serious for a joke :
“ I shook away the fear that man annoys,
“ And thought a little of the girls and boys.

“ A week remain'd, — for seven succeeding days
“ Nor man nor woman might control my ways ;
“ For seven dear nights I might to rest retire
“ At my own time, and none the cause require ;
“ For seven blest days I might go in and out,
“ And none demand, ‘ Sir, what are you about ? ’
“ For one whole week I might at will discourse
“ On any subject, with a freeman’s force.

“ Thus while I thought, I utter’d, as men sing
“ In under-voice, reciting ‘ With this ring,’
“ That when the hour should come, I might not dread
“ These, or the words that follow’d, ‘ I thee wed.’
“ Such was my state of mind, exulting now
“ And then depress’d—I cannot tell you how —
“ When a poor lady, whom her friends could send
“ On any message, a convenient friend,
“ Who had all feelings of her own o’ercome,
“ And could pronounce to any man his doom ;
“ Whose heart indeed was marble, but whose face
“ Assumed the look adapted to the case ;
“ Enter’d my room, commission’d to assuage
“ What was foreseen, my sorrow and my rage.

“ It seem’d the lady whom I could prefer,
 “ And could my much-loved freedom lose for her,
 “ Had bold attempts, but not successful, made,
 “ The heart of some rich cousin to invade ;
 “ Who, half resisting, half complying, kept
 “ A cautious distance, and the business slept.

“ This prudent swain his own importance knew,
 “ And swore to part the now affianced two :
 “ Fill’d with insidious purpose, forth he went,
 “ Profess’d his love, and woo’d her to consent :
 “ ‘ Ah! were it true!’ she sigh’d; he boldly swore

“ His love sincere, and mine was sought no more.
 “ All this the witch at dreadful length reveal’d,
 “ And begg’d me calmly to my fate to yield :
 “ Much pains she took engagements old to state,
 “ And hoped to hear me curse my cruel fate, “ Threat’ning my luckless life ; and thought it
     strange

“ In me to bear the unexpected change :
 “ In my calm feelings she beheld disguise,
 “ And told of some strange wildness in my eyes.

“ But there was nothing in the eye amiss,
 “ And the heart calmly bore a stroke like this ;
 “ Not so my mother ; though of gentle kind,
 “ She could no mercy for the creature find.

“ ‘ Vile plot!’ she said.—‘ But, madam, if they plot,
 “ ‘ And you would have revenge, disturb them not.’

“ ‘ What can we do, my son ? ’ — ‘ Consult our ease,
‘ And do just nothing, madam, if you please.’

“ ‘ What will be said ? ’ — ‘ We need not that discuss ;
“ ‘ Our friends and neighbours will do that for us.’

“ ‘ Do you so lightly, son, your loss sustain ? ’ —
“ ‘ Nay, my dear madam, but I count it gain.’

“ ‘ The world will blame us sure, if we be still.’ —
“ ‘ And, if we stir, you may be sure it will.’

“ ‘ Not to such loss your father had agreed.’ —
“ ‘ No, for my father’s had been loss indeed.’

“ With gracious smile my mother gave assent,
“ And let th’ affair slip by with much content.

“ Some old dispute, the lover meant should rise,
“ Some point of strife they could not compromise, “ Displeas’d the squire — he from the field withdrew,

“ Not quite conceal’d, not fully placed in view ;
“ But half advancing, half retreating, kept
“ At his old distance, and the business slept.

“ Six years had pass’d, and forty ere the six,
“ When Time began to play his usual tricks :
“ The locks once comely in a virgin’s sight,
“ Locks of pure brown, display’d th’ encroaching
white ;

“ The blood once fervid now to cool began,
“ And Time’s strong pressure to subdue the man :
“ I rode or walk’d as I was wont before,
“ But now the bounding spirit was no more ;
“ A moderate pace would now my body heat,
“ A walk of moderate length distress my feet.
“ I show’d my stranger-guest those hills sublime,
“ But said, ‘ The view is poor, we need not climb.’
“ At a friend’s mansion I began to dread
“ The cold neat parlour, and the gay glazed bed ;
“ At home I felt a more decided taste,
“ And must have all things in my order placed ;
“ I ceased to hunt, my horses pleased me less,
“ My dinner more ; I learn’d to play at chess ;
“ I took my dog and gun, but saw the brute
“ Was disappointed that I did not shoot ;
“ My morning walks I now could bear to lose,
“ And bless’d the shower that gave me not to choose :
“ In fact, I felt a languor stealing on ;
“ The active arm, the agile hand were gone ;
“ Small daily actions into habits grew,
“ And new dislike to forms and fashions new ;
“ I loved my trees in order to dispose,
“ I number’d peaches, look’d how stocks arose, “ Told the same story oft—in short, began to prose. (1)

(1) [“The ‘Old Bachelor,’ who had been five times on the brink of matrimony, is mixed up of sorrow and mirth. The description of the first coming on of old age is admirable—though we feel assured, somehow, that this malicious observer has mistaken the date of these ugly symptoms; and brought them into view nine or ten, or, at all events, six or seven years too early.”—Edinburgh Review.]

“ My books were changed ; I now preferr'd the
“ To the light reading of unsettled youth ; [truth
“ Novels grew tedious, but by choice or chance,
“ I still had interest in the wild romance :
“ There is an age, we know, when tales of love
“ Form the sweet pabulum our hearts approve ;
“ Then as we read we feel, and are indeed,
“ We judge, th' heroic men of whom we read ;
“ But in our after life these fancies fail,
“ We cannot be the heroes of the tale ;
“ The parts that Cliffords, Mordaunts, Bevilles play,
“ We cannot,—cannot be so smart and gay.

“ But all the mighty deeds and matchless powers
“ Of errant knights we never fancied ours,
“ And thus the prowess of each gifted knight
“ Must at all times create the same delight ;
“ Lovelace a forward youth might hope to seem,
“ But Lancelot never,—that he could not dream ;
“ Nothing reminds us in the magic page
“ Of old romance, of our declining age :
“ If once our fancy mighty dragons slew,
“ This is no more than fancy now can do ;
“ But when the heroes of a novel come,
“ Conquer'd and conquering, to a drawing-room,
“ We no more feel the vanity that sees “ Within ourselves what we admire in these,
“ And so we leave the modern tale, to fly
“ From realm to realm with Tristram or Sir Guy.

“ Not quite a Quixote, I could not suppose
“ That queens would call me to subdue their foes ;

“ But, by a voluntary weakness sway’d,
“ When fancy call’d, I willingly obey’d.

“ Such I became, and I believed my heart
“ Might yet be pierced by some peculiar dart
“ Of right heroic kind, and I could prove “ Fond of some peerless nymph who deign’d to love,
“ Some high-soul’d virgin, who had spent her time
“ In studies grave, heroic and sublime ;
“ Who would not like me less that I had spent
“ Years eight and forty, just the age of Kent ; (1)
“ But not with Kent’s discretion, for I grew “ Fond of a creature whom my fancy drew ;
“ A kind of beings who are never found
“ On middle-earth, but grow on fairy-ground.

“ These found I not ; but I had luck to find
“ A mortal woman of this fairy kind ;
“ A thin, tall, upright, serious, slender maid,
“ Who in my own romantic regions stray’d ;
“ From the world’s glare to this sweet vale retired,
“ To dwell unseen, unsullied, unadmired ;
“ In all her virgin excellence, above
“ The gaze of crowds, and hopes of vulgar love.
“ We spoke of noble deeds in happier times,
“ Of glorious virtues, of debasing crimes :
“ Warm was the season, and the subject too,
“ And therefore warm in our discourse we grew.

(1) [“ Lear. How old art thou?

“ Kent. Not so young, sir, to love a woman for singing ; nor so old, to dote on her for any thing : I have years on my back forty-eight.”
— LEAR.]

“ Love made such haste, that ere a month was flown
“ Since first we met, he had us for his own ;
“ Riches are trifles in a hero's sight,
“ And lead to questions low and unpolite ;
“ I nothing said of money or of land,
“ But bent my knee, and fondly ask'd her hand ;
“ And the dear lady, with a grace divine,
“ Gave it, and frankly answered, ‘ It is thine.’

“ Our reading was not to romance confined,
“ But still it gave its colour to the mind ;
“ Gave to our studies something of its force,
“ And made profound and tender our discourse ;
“ Our subjects all, and our religion, took
“ The grave and solemn spirit of our book :
“ And who had seen us walk, or heard us read,
“ Would say, ‘ These lovers are sublime indeed.’

“ I knew not why, but when the day was named,
“ My ardent wishes felt a little tamed ;
“ My mother's sickness then awaked my grief,
“ And yet, to own the truth, was some relief ;
“ It left uncertain that decisive time
“ That made my feelings nervous and sublime.

“ Still all was kindness, and at morn and eve
“ I made a visit, talk'd, and took my leave :
“ Kind were the lady's looks, her eyes were bright,
“ And swam, I thought, in exquisite delight ;
“ A lovely red suffused the virgin cheek,
“ And spoke more plainly than the tongue could speak ;

“ Plainly all seem’d to promise love and joy,
“ Nor fear’d we aught that might our bliss destroy.

“ Engaged by business, I one morn delay’d
“ My usual call on the accomplish’d maid ;
“ But soon, that small impediment removed,
“ I paid the visit that decisive proved ;
“ For the fair lady had, with grieving heart,
“ So I believed, retired to sigh apart :
“ I saw her friend, and begg’d her to intreat
“ My gentle nymph her sighing swain to meet.

“ The gossip gone — What demon, in his spite
“ To love and man, could my frail mind excite,
“ And lead me curious on, against all sense of right?
“ There met my eye, unclosed, a closet’s door —
“ Shame ! how could I the secrets there explore ?
“ Pride, honour, friendship, love, condemn’d the deed,
“ And yet, in spite of all, I could proceed !
“ I went, I saw — shall I describe the hoard
“ Of precious worth in seal’d deposits stored
“ Of sparkling hues ? Enough — enough is told,
“ ’Tis not for man such mysteries to unfold.
“ Thus far I dare — Whene’er those orbits swam
“ In that blue liquid that restrain’d their flame,
“ As showers the sunbeams — when the crimson glow
“ Of the red rose o’erspread those cheeks of snow,
“ I saw, but not the cause — ’t was not the red
“ Of transient blush that o’er her face was spread ;

“ ’Twas not the lighter red, that partly streaks
“ The Catherine pear, that brighten’d o’er her cheeks,
“ Nor scarlet blush of shame—but such disclose
“ The velvet petals of the Austrian rose
“ When first unfolded, warm the glowing hue,
“ Nor cold as rouge, but deep’ning on the view ;
“ Such were those cheeks—the causes unexplored
“ Were now detected in that secret hoard ;
“ And ever to that rich recess would turn
“ My mind, and cause for such effect discern.

“ Such was my fortune, O! my friends, and such
“ The end of lofty hopes that grasp’d too much.
“ This was, indeed, a trying time in life,
“ I lost at once a mother and a wife ;
“ Yet compensation came in time for these,
“ And what I lost in joy, I gain’d in ease.” —

“ But,” said the Squire, “ did thus your courtship cease ?
“ Resign’d your mistress her betroth’d in peace ? ” —

“ Yes ; and had sense her feelings to restrain,
“ Nor ask’d me once my conduct to explain ;
“ But me she saw those swimming eyes explore,
“ And explanation she required no more :
“ Friend to the last, I left her with regret—
“ Nay, leave her not, for we are neighbours yet.

“ These views extinct, I travell’d, not with taste,
“ But so that time ran wickedly to waste ;

“ I penn’d some notes, and might a book have made,
“ But I had no connection with the trade ;
“ Bridges and churches, towers and halls, I saw, “ Maids and Madonnas, and could sketch and
draw :
“ Yes, I had made a book, but that my pride
“ In the not making was more gratified.

“ There was one feeling upon foreign ground,
“ That more distressing than the rest was found ;
“ That though with joy I should my country see,
“ There none had pleasure in expecting me.

“ I now was sixty, but could walk and eat ;
“ My food was pleasant and my slumbers sweet :
“ But what could urge me at a day so late
“ To think of women ? — my unlucky fate.
“ It was not sudden ; I had no alarms,
“ But was attack’d when resting on my arms ;
“ Like the poor soldier ; when the battle raged
“ The man escaped, though twice or thrice engaged,
“ But when it ended, in a quiet spot
“ He fell, the victim of a random-shot.

“ With my good friend the Vicar oft I spent
“ The evening hours in quiet, as I meant ;
“ He was a friend in whom, although untried
“ By aught severe, I found I could confide ;
“ A pleasant, sturdy disputant was he,
“ Who had a daughter — such the Fates decree,
“ To prove how weak is man — poor yielding man,
like me.

“ Time after time the maid went out and in,
“ Ere love was yet beginning to begin ;
“ The first awakening proof, the early doubt,
“ Rose from observing she went in and out.
“ My friend, though careless, seem'd my mind to explore,
“ ‘ Why do you look so often at the door ? ’
“ I then was cautious, but it did no good,
“ For she, at least, my meanings understood ;
“ But to the Vicar nothing she convey'd
“ Of what she thought—she did not feel afraid.

“ I must confess, this creature in her mind
“ Nor face had beauty that a man would blind ;
“ No poet of her matchless charms would write,
“ Yet sober praise they fairly would excite :
“ She was a creature form'd man's heart to make
“ Serenely happy, not to pierce and shake ;
“ If she were tried for breaking human hearts,
“ Men would acquit her—she had not the arts ;
“ Yet without art, at first without design,
“ She soon became the arbitress of mine ;
“ Without pretensions—nay, without pretence,
“ But by a native strange intelligence
“ Women possess when they behold a man
“ Whom they can tease, and are assured they can ;
“ Then 'tis their souls' delight and pride to reign
“ O'er the fond slave, to give him ease or pain,
“ And stretch and loose by turns the weighty view-less chain.

“ Though much she knew, yet nothing could she prove ;
“ I had not yet confess'd the crime of love ;
“ But in an hour when guardian-angels sleep,
“ I fail'd the secret of my soul to keep ;
“ And then I saw the triumph in those eyes
“ That spoke — ‘ Ay, now you are indeed my prize.’
“ I almost thought I saw compassion, too,
“ For all the cruel things she meant to do.
“ Well I can call to mind the managed air
“ That gave no comfort, that brought no despair,
“ That in a dubious balance held the mind,
“ To each side turning, never much inclined.

“ She spoke with kindness — thought the honour
“ And knew not how to give a fit reply ;     [high,
“ She could not, would not, dared not, must not deem
“ Such language proof of aught but my esteem ;
“ It made her proud — she never could forget
“ My partial thoughts, — she felt her much in debt :
“ She who had never in her life indulged
“ The thought of hearing what I now divulged,
“ I who had seen so many and so much, —
“ It was an honour — she would deem it such ;
“ Our different years, indeed, would put an end
“ To other views, but still her father's friend
“ To her, she humbly hoped, would his regard extend.

“ Thus saying nothing, all she meant to say,
“ She play'd the part the sex delights to play ;

“ Now by some act of kindness giving scope
“ To the new workings of excited hope,
“ Then by an air of something like disdain,
“ But scarcely seen, repelling it again ;
“ Then for a season, neither cold nor kind,
“ She kept a sort of balance in the mind,
“ And as his pole a dancer on the rope,
“ The equal poise on both sides kept me up.

“ Is it not strange that man can fairly view
“ Pursuit like this, and yet his point pursue ?
“ While he the folly fairly will confess,
“ And even feel the danger of success ?
“ But so it is, and nought the Circes care
“ How ill their victims with their poison fare,
“ When thus they trifle, and with quiet soul
“ Mix their ingredients in the maddening bowl.
“ Their high regard, the softness of their air,
“ The pitying grief that saddens at a prayer,
“ Their grave petitions for the peace of mind
“ That they determine you shall never find,
“ And all their vain amazement that a man
“ Like you should love—they wonder how you can.

“ For months the idler play'd her wicked part,
“ Then fairly gave the secret of her heart.
“ ‘ She hoped’—I now the smiling gipsy view—
“ ‘ Her father’s friend would be her lover’s too,
“ ‘ Young Henry Gale’—But why delay so long ?—
“ She could not tell—she fear’d it might be wrong,
“ ‘ But I was good’—I knew not, I was weak,
“ And spoke as love directed me to speak.

“ When in my arms their boy and girl I take,
“ I feel a fondness for the mother’s sake ;
“ But though the dears some softening thoughts excite,
“ I have no wishes for the father’s right.

“ Now all is quiet, and the mind sustains
“ Its proper comforts, its befitting pains ;
“ The heart reposes ; it has had its share
“ Of love, as much as it could fairly bear,
“ And what is left in life, that now demands its care ?

“ For O ! my friends, if this were all indeed,
“ Could we believe that nothing would succeed ;
“ If all were but this daily dose of life,
“ Without a care or comfort, child or wife ;
“ These walks for health with nothing more in view,
“ This doing nothing, and with labour too ;
“ This frequent asking when ’t is time to dine,
“ This daily dozing o’er the news and wine ;
“ This age’s riddle, when each day appears
“ So very long, so very short the years ;
“ If this were all — but let me not suppose —
“ What then were life ! whose virtues, trials, woes,
“ Would sleep th’ eternal sleep, and there the scene would close.

“ This cannot be — but why has Time a pace
“ That seems unequal in our mortal race ?
“ Quick is that pace in early life, but slow,
“ Tedious and heavy, as we older grow ;

“ But yet, though slow, the movements are alike,
“ And with no force upon the memory strike,
“ And therefore tedious as we find them all,
“ They leave us nothing we in view recall ;
“ But days that we so dull and heavy knew
“ Are now as moments passing in review,
“ And hence arises ancient men’s report,
“ That days are tedious, and yet years are short.”

BOOK XI.

THE MAID'S STORY.

THREE days remain'd their Friend, and then again
 The Brothers left, themselves to entertain ;
 When spake the younger — “ It would please me well
 “ To hear thy Spinster-friend her story tell ;
 “ And our attention would be nobly paid
 “ Thus to compare the Bachelor and Maid.”

“ Frank as she is,” replied the Squire, “ nor one
 “ Is more disposed to show what she has done
 “ With time, or time with her ; yet all her care
 “ And every trial she might not declare
 “ To one a stranger ; but to me, her friend,
 “ She has the story of those trials penn'd ;
 “ These shalt thou hear, for well the maid I know,
 “ And will her efforts and her conquests show.
 “ Jacques is abroad, and we alone shall dine,
 “ And then to give this lady's tale be mine ;

“ Thou wilt attend to this good spinster’s life,
 “ And grieve and wonder she is not a wife ;
 “ But if we judge by either words or looks,
 “ Her mode of life, her morals, or her books,
 “ Her pure devotion, unaffected sense,
 “ Her placid air, her mild benevolence,
 “ Her gay good humour, and her manners free,
 “ She is as happy as a maid can be ;
 “ If as a wife, I know not, and decline
 “ Question like this, till I can judge of thine.”

Then from a secret hoard drew forth the Squire
 His tale, and said, “ Attention I require — “ My verse you may condemn, my theme you must admire.” (1)

---

I to your kindness speak ! let that prevail,
 And of my frailty judge as beings frail. —

(1) [In the original MS. the book thus opens : —

That gentle Spinster whom our Squire approved
 So well, they judged aright who said he loved,
 Though when they thought to what the love would lead,
 They err’d — for neither would so far proceed.

This Maiden Lady, to her promise just,
 Gave them her story. — She could safely trust
 Her neighbours both : the one she long had known,
 The other kindness and respect had shown.
 Frankly not fearless, from her early youth,
 She gave her tale, nor would disguise a truth ;
 Timid in places, and with some restraint,
 But still resolved the very facts to paint,
 With plaintive smile she prefaced what she spoke,
 And the Friends listen’d with attentive look.]

My father dying, to my mother left
An infant charge, of all things else bereft ;
Poor, but experienced in the world, she knew
What others did, and judged what she could do ;
Beauty she justly weigh'd, was never blind
To her own interest, and she read mankind :
She view'd my person with approving glance,
And judged the way my fortune to advance :
Taught me betimes that person to improve,
And make a lawful merchandise of love ;
Bade me my temper in subjection keep,
And not permit my vigilance to sleep ;
I was not one, a miss, who might presume
Now to be crazed by mirth, now sunk in gloom ;
Nor to be fretful, vapourish, or give way
To spleen and anger, as the wealthy may ;
But I must please, and all I felt of pride,
Contempt, and hatred, I must cast aside.

“ Have not one friend,” my mother cried, “ not one ;

“ That bane of our romantic triflers shun ;
“ Suppose her true, can she afford you aid ?
“ Suppose her false, your purpose is betray'd ;
“ And then in dubious points, and matters nice,
“ How can you profit by a child's advice ?
“ While you are writing on from post to post,
“ Your hour is over, and a man is lost ;
“ Girls of their hearts are scribbling ; their desires,
“ And what the folly of the heart requires,
“ Dupes to their dreams — but I the truth impart,
“ You cannot, child, afford to have a heart ;

“ Think nothing of it ; to yourself be true,
 “ And keep life’s first great business in your view ;—
 “ Take it, dear Martha, for a useful rule,
 “ She who is poor is ugly or a fool ;
 “ Or, worse than either, has a bosom fill’d
 “ With soft emotions, and with raptures thrill’d. (1)

“ Read not too much, nor write in verse or prose,
 “ For then you make the dull and foolish foes ;
 “ Yet those who do, deride not nor condemn,
 “ It is not safe to raise up foes in them ;
 “ For though they harm you not, as blockheads do,
 “ There is some malice in the scribbling crew.”

Such her advice : full hard with her had dealt
 The world, and she the usage keenly felt.

“ Keep your good name,” she said ; “ and that to “ You must not suffer vigilance to sleep : [keep,
 “ Some have, perhaps, the name of chaste retain’d,
 “ When nought of chastity itself remain’d ;
 “ But there is danger—few have means to blind
 “ The keen-eyed world, and none to make it kind.

“ And one thing more — to free yourself from foes,
 “ Never a secret to your friend disclose ;
 “ Secrets with girls, like loaded guns with boys,
 “ Are never valued till they make a noise ;

(1) [Here follows in MS. —

“ Think not of love ! it is a chance indeed,
 “ When love and prudence side by side proceed.
 “ Nay, when they do, I doubtfully approve—
 “ Love baffles prudence— Oh ! beware of love.”]

“ To show how trusted, they their power display ;
“ To show how worthy, they the trust betray ;
“ Like pence in children's pockets secrets lie
“ In female bosoms — they must burn or fly.

“ Let not your heart be soften'd ; if it be,
“ Let not the man his softening influence see ;
“ For the most fond will sometimes tyrants prove,
“ And wound the bosom where they trace the love.
“ But to your fortune look, on that depend
“ For your life's comforts, comforts that attend
“ On wealth alone — wealth gone, they have their end.”

Such were my mother's cares to mend my lot,
And, such her pupil, they succeeded not.

It was conceived the person I had then
Might lead to serious thoughts some wealthy men,
Who, having none their purpose to oppose,
Would soon be won their wishes to disclose :
My mother thought I was the very child
By whom the old and amorous are beguiled ;
So mildly gay, so ignorantly fair,
And pure, no doubt, as sleeping infants are :
Then I had lessons how to look and move,
And, I repeat, make merchandise of love.

Thrice it was tried if one so young could bring
Old wary men to buy the binding ring ;
And on the taper finger, to whose tip
The fond old swain would press his withering lip,

Place the strong charm :—and one would win my
By re-assuming youth—a trying part ;     [heart
Girls, he supposed, all knew the young were bold,
And he would show that spirit in the old ;
In boys they loved to hear the rattling tongue,
And he would talk as idly as the young ;
He knew the vices our Lotharios boast,
And he would show of every vice the ghost,
The evil's self, without disguise or dress,
Vice in its own pure native ugliness ;
Not as the drunkenness of slaves to prove
Vice hateful, but that seeing, I might love.
He drove me out, and I was pleased to see
Care of himself, it served as care for me ;
For he would tell me, that he should not spare
Man, horse, or carriage, if I were not there :
Provoked at last, my malice I obey'd,
And smiling said, “ Sir, I am not afraid.”
This check'd his spirit ; but he said, “ Could you
“ Have charge so rich, you would be careful too.”
And he, indeed, so very slowly drove,
That we dismiss'd the over-cautious love.

My next admirer was of equal age,
And wish'd the child's affection to engage,
And keep the fluttering bird a victim in his cage :
He had no portion of his rival's glee,
But gravely praised the gravity in me ;
Religious, moral, both in word and deed,
But warmly disputatious in his creed :
Wild in his younger time, as we were told,
And therefore like a penitent when old.

Strange ! he should wish a lively girl to look Upon the methods his repentance took.
Then he would say, he was no more a rake
To squander money for his passions' sake ;
Yet, upon proper terms, as man discreet,
He with my mother was disposed to treat,
To whom he told, " the price of beauty fell
" In every market, and but few could sell ;
" That trade in India, once alive and brisk,
" Was over done, and scarcely worth the risk."
Then stoop'd to speak of board, and what for life
A wife would cost——if he should take a wife.
Hardly he bargain'd, and so much desired,
That we demurr'd ; and he, displeas'd, retired.

And now I hoped to rest, nor act again
The paltry part for which I felt disdain,
When a third lover came within our view,
And somewhat differing from the former two ;
He had been much abroad, and he had seen
The world's weak side, and read the hearts of
men ;

But all, it seem'd, this study could produce,
Was food for spleen, derision, and abuse ;
He levell'd all, as one who had intent
To clear the vile and spot the innocent ;
He praised my sense, and said I ought to be
From girl's restraint and nursery maxims free ;
He praised my mother ; but he judg'd her wrong
To keep us from the admiring world so long ;
He praised himself ; and then his vices nam'd,
And call'd them follies, and was not ashamed.

He more than hinted that the lessons taught
By priests were all with superstition fraught ;
And I must think them for the crowd design'd,
Not to alarm the free and liberal mind.

Wisdom with him was virtue. They were wrong
And weak, he said, who went not with the throng ;
Man must his passions order and restrain,
In all that gives his fellow-subjects pain ;
But yet of guilt he would in pity speak,
And as he judged, the wicked were the weak.

Such was the lover of a simple maid,
Who seem'd to call his logic to his aid,
And to mean something : I will not pretend
To judge the purpose of my reasoning friend,
Who was dismiss'd, in quiet to complain
That so much labour was bestow'd in vain.

And now my mother seem'd disposed to try
A life of reason and tranquillity ;
Ere this, her health and spirits were the best,
Hers the day's trifling, and the nightly rest ;
But something new was in her mind instill'd ;
Unquiet thoughts the matron bosom fill'd ;
For five and forty peaceful years she bore
Her placid looks, and dress becoming wore :
She could a compliment with pleasure take,
But no absurd impression could it make.
Now were her nerves disorder'd : she was weak,
And must the help of a physician seek ;

A Scotch physician, who had just began
To settle near us, quite a graceful man,
And very clever, with a soft address,
That would his meaning tenderly express.

Sick as my mother seem'd, when he enquired
If she was ill, he found her well attired ;
She purchased wares so showy and so fine,
The venders all believed th' indulgence mine :—
But I, who thrice was woo'd, had lovers three,
Must now again a very infant be ;
While the good lady, twenty years a wife,
Was to decide the colour of his life :
And she decided. She was wont t' appear
To these unequal marriages severe ;
Her thoughts of such with energy she told,
And was repulsive, dignified, and cold ;
But now, like monarchs weary of a throne,
She would no longer reign—at least alone.

She gave her pulse, and, with a manner sweet,
Wish'd him to feel how kindly they could beat ;
And 't is a thing quite wonderful to tell
How soon he understood them, and how well.

Now, when she married, I from home was sent,
With grandmamma to keep perpetual Lent ;
For she would take me on conditions cheap,
For what we scarcely could a parrot keep :
A trifle added to the daily fare
Would feed a maiden who must learn to spare.

With grandmamma I lived in perfect ease ;
Consent to starve, and I was sure to please.
Full well I knew the painful shifts we made
Expenses all to lessen or evade,
And tradesmen's flinty hearts to soften and persuade.

Poor grandmamma among the gentry dwelt
Of a small town, and all the honour felt ;
Shrinking from all approaches to disgrace
That might be marked in so genteel a place ;
Where every daily deed, as soon as done,
Ran through the town as fast as it could run :—
At dinners what appear'd—at cards who lost or won.

Our good appearance through the town was known,
Hunger and thirst were matters of our own ;
And you would judge that she in scandal dealt
Who told on what we fed, or how we felt.

We had a little maid, some four feet high,
Who was employ'd our household stores to buy ;
For she would weary every man in trade,
And tease to assent, whom she could not persuade.

Methinks I see her, with her pigmy light,
Precede her mistress in a moonless night ;
From the small lantern throwing through the street
The dimm'd effulgence at her lady's feet ;
What time she went to prove her well-known skill
With rival friends at their beloved quadrille.

“ And how 's your pain ? ” enquired the gentle maid,
For that was asking if with luck she play'd ;
And this she answer'd as the cards decreed,
“ O Biddy ! ask not—very bad indeed ; ”
Or, in more cheerful tone, from spirit light,
“ Why, thank you, Biddy, pretty well to-night. ”

The good old lady often thought me vain,
And of my dress would tenderly complain ;
But liked my taste in food of every kind,
As from all grossness, like her own, refined :
Yet when she hinted that on herbs and bread
Girls of my age and spirit should be fed,
Whate'er my age had borne, my flesh and blood,
Spirit and strength, the interdict withstood ;
But though I might the frugal soul offend
Of the good matron, now my only friend,
And though her purse suggested rules so strict,
Her love could not the punishment inflict :
She sometimes watch'd the morsel with a frown,
And sigh'd to see, but let it still go down.

Our butcher's bill, to me a monstrous sum,
Was such, that summon'd, he forbore to come :
Proud man was he, and when the bill was paid,
He put the money in his bag and play'd,
Jerking it up, and catching it again,
And poising in his hand in pure disdain ;
While the good lady, awed by man so proud,
And yet disposed to have her claims allow'd,

Balanced between humility and pride,
Stood a fall'n empress at the butcher's side,
Praising his meat as delicate and nice ——
“ Yes, madam, yes ! if people pay the price.”

So lived the lady, and so murmur'd I,
In all the grief of pride and poverty :
Twice in the year there came a note to tell
How well mamma, who hoped the child was well ;
It was not then a pleasure to be styled,
By a mamma of such experience, Child !
But I suppress'd the feelings of my pride,
Or other feelings set them all aside.

There was a youth from college, just the one
I judged mamma would value as a son ;
He was to me good, handsome, learn'd, genteel,
I cannot now what then I thought reveal ;
But, in a word, he was the very youth
Who told me what I judged the very truth,
That love like his and charms like mine agreed,
For all description they must both exceed :
Yet scarcely can I throw a smile on things
So painful, but that Time his comfort brings,
Or rather throws oblivion on the mind ;
For we are more forgetful than resign'd.

We both were young, had heard of love and read,
And could see nothing in the thing to dread,
But like a simple pair our time employ'd
In pleasant views to be in time enjoy'd ;

When Frederick came, the kind old lady smiled
To see the youth so taken with her child ;
A nice young man, who came with unsoil'd feet
In her best room, and neither drank nor eat :
Alas ! he planted in a vacant breast
The hopes and fears that robb'd it of its rest.

All now appear'd so right, so fair, so just,
We surely might the lovely prospect trust ;
Alas ! poor Frederick and his charmer found
That they were standing on fallacious ground :
All that the father of the youth could do
Was done — and now he must himself pursue
Success in life ; and, honest truth to state,
He was not fitted for a candidate :
I, too, had nothing in this world below,
Save what a Scotch physician could bestow,
Who for a pittance took my mother's hand,
And if disposed, what had they to command ?
But these were after fears, nor came t' annoy
The tender children in their dreams of joy :
Who talk'd of glebe and garden, tithe and rent,
And how a fancied income should be spent ;
What friends, what social parties we should see,
And live with what genteel economy ;
In fact, we gave our hearts as children give,
And thought of living as our neighbours live.

Now when assured ourselves that all was well,
'Twas right our friends of these designs to tell :
For this we parted. — Grandmamma, amazed,
Upon her child with fond compassion gazed ;

Then pious tears appear'd, but not a word
In aid of weeping till she cried, " Good Lord !"
She then, with hurried motion, sought the stairs,
And calling Bidy, bade her come to prayers.

Yet the good lady early in her life
Was call'd to vow the duties of a wife ;
She sought the altar by her friends' advice,
No free-will offering, but a sacrifice :
But here a forward girl and eager boy
Dared talk of life, and turn their heads with joy.
To my mamma I wrote in just the way
I felt, and said what dreaming lasses say ;
How handsome Frederick was, by all confess'd,
How well he look'd, how very well he dress'd ;
With learning much, that would for both provide,
His mother's darling, and his father's pride :
And then he loves me more than mind can guess,
Than heart conceive, or eloquence express.

No letter came, a doubtful mind to ease,
And, what was worse, no Frederick came to please ;
To college gone — so thought our little maid —
But not to see me ! I was much afraid ;
I walk'd the garden round, and deeply sigh'd,
When grandmamma grew faint ! and dropp'd, and
A fate so awful and so sudden drove [died :
All else away, and half extinguish'd love.

Strange people came; they search'd the house
around,
And, vulgar wretches ! sold whate'er they found :

The secret hoards that in the drawers were kept,
The silver toys that with the tokens slept,
The precious beads, the corals with their bells,
That laid secure, lock'd up in secret cells,
The costly silk, the tabby, the brocade,
The very garment for the wedding made,
Were brought to sale, with many a jest thereon !
“ Going—a bridal dress—for —— Going!—Gone.”
That ring, dear pledge of early love and true,
That to the wedded finger almost grew,
Was sold for six and ten-pence to a Jew !

Great was the fancied worth ; but ah ! how small
The sum thus made, and yet how valued all !
But all that to the shameful service went
Just paid the bills, the burial, and the rent ;
And I and Biddy, poor deserted maids !
Were turn'd adrift to seek for other aids.

Now left by all the world, as I believed,
I wonder'd much that I so little grieved ;
Yet I was frighten'd at the painful view
Of shiftless want, and saw not what to do :
In times like this the poor have little dread,
They can but work, and they shall then be fed :
And Biddy cheer'd me with such thoughts as this,
“ You'll find the poor have their enjoyments, Miss ! ”
Indeed I saw, for Biddy took me home
To a forsaken hovel's cold and gloom ;
And, while my tears in plenteous flow were shed,
With her own hands she placed her proper bed,

Reserved for need — A fire was quickly made,
And food, the purchase for the day, display'd :
She let in air to make the damp retire,
Then placed her sad companion at her fire ;
She then began her wonted peace to feel,
She bought her wool, and sought her favourite wheel,
That as she turn'd, she sang with sober glee,
“ Begone, dull Care ! I'll have no more with thee ;”
Then turn'd to me, and bade me weep no more,
But try and taste the pleasures of the poor.

When dinner came, on table brown and bare
Were placed the humblest forms of earthen ware,
With one blue dish, on which our food was placed,
For appetite provided, not for taste :
I look'd disgusted, having lately seen
All so minutely delicate and clean ;
Yet, as I sat, I found to my surprise
A vulgar kind of inclination rise,
And near my humble friend, and nearer drew,
Tried the strange food, and was partaker too.

I walk'd at eve, but not where I was seen,
And thought, with sorrow, what can Frederick mean ?
I must not write, I said, for I am poor ;
And then I wept till I could weep no more.
Kind-hearted Bidy tried my griefs to heal :
“ This is a nothing to what others feel :
“ Life has a thousand sorrows worse than this,
“ A lover lost is not a fortune, Miss !
“ One goes, another comes, and which is best
“ There is no telling — set your heart at rest.”

At night we pray'd — I dare not say a word
Of our devotion, it was so absurd ;
And very pious upon Biddy's part,
But mine were all effusions of the heart ;
While she her angels call'd their peace to shed,
And bless the corners of our little bed.
All was a dream ! I said, is this indeed
To be my life ? and thus to lodge and feed,
To pay for what I have, and work for what I need ?
Must I be poor ? and Frederick, if we meet,
Would not so much as know me in the street ?
Or, as he walk'd with ladies, he would try
To be engaged as we were passing by —
And then I wept to think that I should grow
Like them whom he would be ashamed to know.

On the third day, while striving with my fate,
And hearing Biddy all its comforts state,
Talking of all her neighbours, all her schemes,
Her stories, merry jests, and warning dreams ;
With tales of mirth and murder ! Oh ! the nights
Pass'd, said the maiden, in such dear delights,
And I was thinking, can the time arrive
When I shall thus be humbled, and survive ? —
Then I beheld a horse and handsome gig,
With the good air, tall form, and comely wig
Of Doctor Mackey — I in fear began
To say, Good Heaven, preserve me from the man !
But fears ill reason, — Heaven to such a mind
Had lent a heart compassionate and kind.

---

From him I learnt that one had call'd to know
What with my hand my parents could bestow ;
And when he learn'd the truth, in high disdain
He told my fate, and home return'd again.
“ Nay, be not grieved, my lovely girl ; but few
“ Wed the first love, however kind and true ;
“ Something there comes to break the strongest vow,
“ Or mine had been my gentle Mattie now.
“ When the good lady died — but let me leave
“ All gloomy subjects — 't is not good to grieve.”

Thus the kind Scotchman soothed me : he sustain'd
A father's part, and my submission gain'd :
Then my affection ; and he often told
My sterner parent that her heart was cold.
He grew in honour — he obtain'd a name —
And now a favourite with the place became :
To me most gentle, he would condescend
To read and reason, be the guide and friend ;
He taught me knowledge of the wholesome kind,
And fill'd with many a useful truth my mind :
Life's common burden daily lighter grew,
And even Frederick lessen'd in my view :
Cold and repulsive as he once appear'd,
He was by every generous act endear'd ;
And, above all, that he with ardour fill'd
My soul for truth — a love by him instill'd ;
Till my mamma grew jealous of a maid
To whom a husband such attention paid :
Not grossly jealous ; but it gave her pain,
And she observed, “ He made her daughter vain ;

“ And what his help to one who must not look
“ To gain her bread by poring on a book?”

This was distress ; but this, and all beside,
Was lost in grief—my kinder parent died ;
When praised and loved, when joy and health he gave,
He sank lamented to an early grave :
Then love and woe—the parent and the child,
Lost in one grief, allied and reconciled.

Yet soon a will, that left me half his worth,
To the same spirit gave a second birth :
But 't was a mother's spleen ; and she indeed
Was sick, and sad, and had of comfort need ;
I watch'd the way her anxious spirit took,
And often found her musing o'er a book ;
She changed her dress, her church, her priest, her
    prayer,
Join'd a new sect, and sought her comforts there ;
Some strange coarse people came, and were so free
In their addresses, they offended me ;
But my mamma threw all her pride away—
More humble she as more assuming they.

“ And what,” they said, as having power, “ are now
“ The inward conflicts ? do you strive ? and how ?”
Themselves confessing thoughts so new and wild,
I thought them like the visions of a child. [demn ?
“ Could we,” they ask, “ our best good deeds con-
“ And did we long to touch the garment's hem ?
“ And was it so with us ? for so it was with them.”

A younger few assumed a softer part,
And tried to shake the fortress of my heart ;
To this my pliant mother lent her aid,
And wish'd the winning of her erring maid :
I was constrain'd her female friends to hear,
But suffer'd not a bearded convert near :
Though more than one attempted, with their whine,
And " Sister ! sister ! how that heart of thine ? " —
But this was freedom I for ever check'd :
Mine was a heart no brother could affect.

But, " would I hear the preacher, and receive
" The dropping dew of his discourse at eve ?
" The soft, sweet words ? " I gave two precious hours
To hear of gifts and graces, helps and powers ;
When a pale youth, who should dismiss the flock,
Gave to my bosom an electric shock.
While in that act he look'd upon my face
As one in that all-equalising place :
Nor, though he sought me, would he lay aside
Their cold, dead freedom, or their dull, sad
pride.

Of his conversion he with triumph spoke,
Before he orders from a bishop took :
Then how his father's anger he had braved ;
And, safe himself, his erring neighbours saved.
Me he rejoiced a sister to behold
Among the members of his favourite fold ;
He had not sought me, the availing call
Demanded all his love, and had it all ;

But, now thus met, it must be Heaven's design.—
Indeed ! I thought, it never shall be mine ;—
Yes, we must wed. He was not rich ; and I
Had of the earthly good a mean supply ;
But it sufficed. Of his conversion then
He told, and labours in converting men ;
For he was chosen all their bands among—
Another Daniel ! honour'd, though so young.

He call'd me sister : show'd me that he knew
What I possess'd ; and told what it would do ;
My looks, I judge, express'd my full disdain ;
But it was given to the man in vain : [the brain.
They preach till they are proud, and pride disturbs

Is this the youth once timid, mild, polite ?
How odious now, and sick'ning to the sight !
Proud that he sees, and yet so truly blind,
With all this blight and mildew on the mind !
Amazed, the solemn creature heard me vow,
That I was not disposed to take him now.

“ Then, art thou changed, fair maiden ? changed thy heart ? ”
I answer'd, “ No ; but I perceive thou art.”

---

Still was my mother sad, her nerves relax'd,
And our small income for advice was tax'd ;
When I, who long'd for change and freedom, cried,
Let sea and Sidmouth's balmy air be tried ;

And so they were, and every neighbouring scene,
That make the bosom, like the clime, serene ; (1)
Yet were her teachers loth to yield assent ;
And not without the warning voice we went ;
And there was secret counsel all unknown
To me—but I had counsel of my own.

And now there pass'd a portion of my time
In ease delicious, and in joy sublime—
With friends endear'd by kindness—with delight,—
In all that could the feeling mind excite,
Or please, excited ; walks in every place,
Where we could pleasure find and beauty trace,
Or views at night, where on the rocky steep
Shines the full moon, or glitters on the deep.

Yes, they were happy days ; but they are fled !
All now are parted—part are with the dead ! (2)

(1) [Orig. MS. —

On Sidmouth terrace pace at morn and noon,
Or view from Dawlish rocks the full-orb'd moon,
At Exmouth beacon the far bay explore,
Or quiet sit at Teignmouth's pebbly shore ;
These scenes are lovely all, and will your peace restore.]

(2) [Thus in the original MS. : —

Dear scenes of social comfort, friendly ease,
The power of pleasing, the delight to please ;
When friends agreed the views around t' explore,
When sympathising minds exchanged their store ;
When fear was banish'd, and no form desired,
But such as decency and sense required ;
When each in meeting wore the looks that make
Such strong impression, and preclude mistake ;
When looks, and words, and manner all declare
What hearts, and thoughts, and dispositions are ; —
In fact, when we in various modes express
That we are happy all ! all answer yes !
This is indeed approach to perfect happiness.

Still it is pleasure, though 'tis mix'd with pain,
To think of joys that cannot live again !
Here cannot live ; but they excite desire
Of purer kind, and heavenly thoughts inspire !

And now my mother, weaken'd in her mind,
Her will, subdued before, to me resign'd.
Wean'd from her late directors, by degrees
She sank resign'd, and only sought for ease :
In a small town upon the coast we fix'd ;
Nor in amusement with associates mix'd.
My years—but other mode will I pursue,
And count my time by what I sought to do.

And was that mind at ease ? could I avow
That no once leading thoughts engaged me now ?
Was I convinced th' enthusiastic man
Had ruin'd what the loving boy began ?
I answer doubting—I could still detect
Feelings too soft—yet him I could reject—
Feelings that came when I had least employ,
When common pleasures I could least enjoy—
When I was pacing lonely in the rays
Of a full moon, in lonely walks and ways—

---

Dear objects ! scatter'd in the world around,
Whom do ye gladden ? where may ye be found ?
Ye who excited joy by day, by night,
Ye who delighted to dispense delight,
Ye who to please the sadden'd temper strove,
Who, when ye loved not, show'd the effect of love,
Ye who are blessings wheresoe'er ye dwell,
Accept the wishes of a long farewell !]

When I was sighing o'er a tale's distress,
And paid attention to my Bible less.

These found, I sought my remedies for these ;
I suffer'd common things my mind to please,
And common pleasures : seldom walk'd alone,
Nor when the moon upon the waters shone ;
But then my candles lit, my window closed,
My needle took, and with my neighbours prosed :
And in one year—nay, ere the end of one,
My labour ended, and my love was done.

My heart at rest, I boldly look'd within,
And dared to ask it of its secret sin ;
Alas ! with pride it answer'd, “ Look around,
“ And tell me where a better heart is found.”
And then I traced my virtues : Oh ! how few,
In fact, they were, and yet how vain I grew ;
Thought of my kindness, condescension, ease,
My will, my wishes, nay, my power to please ;
I judged me prudent, rational, discreet,
And void of folly, falsehood, and deceit ;
I read, not lightly, as I some had known,
But made an author's meaning all my own ;
In short, what lady could a poet choose
As a superior subject for his Muse ?

So said my heart ; and Conscience straight re-
“ I say the matter is not fairly tried :      [plied—
“ I am offended, hurt, dissatisfied ;
“ First of the Christian graces, let me see
“ What thy pretensions to humility ?

“ Art thou prepared for trial? Wilt thou say,
 “ I am this being, and for judgment pray?
 “ And with the gallant Frenchman, wilt thou cry,
 “ When to thy judge presented, Thus am I— (1)
 “ Thus was I form'd—these talents I possess'd—
 “ So I employ'd them—and thou know'st the rest?’

Thus Conscience; and she then a picture drew,
 And bade me think and tremble at the view.
 One I beheld—a wife, a mother—go
 To gloomy scenes of wickedness and woe;
 She sought her way through all things vile and base,
 And made a prison a religious place:
 Fighting her way—the way that angels fight
 With powers of darkness—to let in the light;
 Tell me, my heart, hast thou such victory won
 As this, a sinner of thy sex, has done,
 And calls herself a sinner? What art thou?
 And where thy praise and exaltation now? (2)
 Yet is she tender, delicate, and nice,
 And shrinks from all depravity and vice;
 Shrinks from the ruffian gaze, the savage gloom,
 That reign where guilt and misery find a home:
 Guilt chain'd, and misery purchased; and with them
 All we abhor, abominate, condemn—

(1) [“ Power Eternal! assemble round thy throne the innumerable throng of my fellow mortals, let them listen to my Confessions, let them blush at my depravity, let them tremble at my sufferings; let each in his turn expose with equal sincerity the failings, the wanderings of his heart, and, if he dare, aver I was better than that man.” — ROUSSEAU.]

(2) [In MS. —

What is the good that thy whole life has done
 Compared with her one day, a single one?]

The look of scorn, the scowl, th' insulting leer
Of shame, all fix'd on her who ventures here :
Yet all she braved ! she kept her steadfast eye
On the dear cause, and brush'd the baseness by. (1)
So would a mother press her darling child
Close to her breast, with tainted rags defiled.

But thou hast talents truly ! say the ten :
Come, let us look at their improvement then.
What hast thou done to aid thy suffering kind,
To help the sick, the deaf, the lame, the blind ?
Hast thou not spent thy intellectual force
On books abstruse, in critical discourse ?
Wasting in useless energy thy days,
And idly listening to their common praise,
Who can a kind of transient fame dispense,
And say — “ A woman of exceeding sense.”
Thus tried, and failing, the suggestions fled,
And a corrected spirit reign'd instead.

My mother yet was living ; but the flame
Of life now flash'd, and fainter then became ;
I made it pleasant, and was pleased to see
A parent looking as a child to me.

And now our humble place grew wond'rous gay ;
Came gallant persons in their red array :
All strangers welcome there, extremely welcome
they.

(1) [“ Of that charity which, tending directly to amend the guilty, is beneficial to the public as well as to its immediate objects, a memorable example has been given in Mrs. Fry, and those other generous Quakers who have effected so great a change in the condition of the female prisoners in Newgate. Their zealous and well-directed benevolence is beyond all praise,

When in the church I saw enquiring eyes
Fix'd on my face with pleasure and surprise ;
And soon a knocking at my door was heard ;
And soon the lover of my youth appear'd —
Frederick, in all his glory, glad to meet,
And say, " his happiness was now complete."

He told his flight from superstitious zeal ;
But first what torments he was doom'd to feel :—
" The tender tears he saw from women fall—
" The strong persuasions of the brethren all—
" The threats of crazed enthusiasts, bound to keep
" The struggling mind, and awe the straying sheep—
" From these, their love, their curses, and their creed,
" Was I by reason and exertion freed."

Then, like a man who often had been told
And was convinced success attends the bold,
His former purpose he renew'd, and swore
He never loved me half so well before :
Before he felt a something to divide
The heart, that now had not a love beside.

In earlier times had I myself amused,
And first my swain perplex'd, and then refused ;—
Cure for conceit ;—but now in purpose grave,
Strong and decisive the reply I gave.
Still he would come, and talk as idlers do,
Both of his old associates and his new ;

and as it proceeds from the most exalted of all motives—true Christian charity—so, beyond all doubt, it carries with it the highest of all rewards."
—SOUTHEY.]

Those who their dreams and reveries receive
For facts, and those who would not facts believe.

He now conceived that Truth was hidden, placed
He knew not where, she never could be traced ;
“ But in that every place, the world around,
“ Might some resemblance of the nymph be found :
“ Yet wise men knew these shadows to be vain,
“ Such as our true philosophers disdain, —
“ They laugh to see what vulgar minds pursue —
“ Truth, as a mistress, never in their view — [true.”
“ But there the shadow flies, and that, they cry, is

Thus, at the college and the meeting train'd,
My lover seem'd his acmé to have gain'd ;
With some compassion I essay'd a cure :
“ If truth be hidden, why art thou so sure ? ”
This he mistook for tenderness, and cried,
“ If sure of thee, I care not what beside ! ”
Compell'd to silence, I, in pure disdain,
Withdrew from one so insolent and vain :
He then retired ; and I was kindly told,
“ In pure compassion grew estranged and cold.”

My mother died ; but, in my grief, drew near
A bosom friend, who dried the useless tear :
We lived together : we combined our shares
Of the world's good, and learn'd to brave its cares :
We were “ the Ladies of the Place,” and found
Protection and respect the country round ;
We gave, and largely, for we wish'd to live
In good repute — for this 't is good to give ;

Our annual present to the priest convey'd
Was kindly taken : — we in comfort pray'd ;
There none molested in the crimson pew
The worthy ladies, whom the vicar knew :
And we began to think that life might be,
Not happy all, but innocently free.

My friend in early life was bound to one
Of gentle kindred, but a younger son.
He fortune's smile with perseverance woo'd,
And wealth beneath the burning sun pursued :
There, urged by love and youthful hope, he went,
Loth ; but 't was all his fortune could present.

From hence he wrote ; and, with a lover's fears,
And gloomy fondness, talk'd of future years ;
To her devoted, his Priscilla found
His faithful heart still suffering with its wound,
That would not heal. A second time she heard ;
And then no more : nor lover since appear'd ;
Year after year the country's fleet arrived,
Confirm'd her fear, and yet her love survived ;
It still was living ; yet her hope was dead,
And youthful dreams, nay, youth itself, was fled ;
And he was lost : so urged her friends, so she
At length believed, and thus retired with me ;
She would a dedicated vestal prove,
And give her virgin vows to heaven and love ;
She dwelt with fond regret on pleasures past,
With ardent hope on those that ever last ;
Pious and tender, every day she view'd
With solemn joy our perfect solitude ;

Her reading, that which most delighted her,
That soothed the passions, yet would gently stir ;
The tender, softening, melancholy strain,
That caused not pleasure, but that vanquish'd pain,
In tears she read, and wept, and long'd to read again.
But other worlds were her supreme delight,
And there, it seem'd, she long'd to take her flight :
Yet patient, pensive, arm'd by thoughts sublime,
She watch'd the tardy steps of lingering time.

My friend, with face that most would handsome
call,
Possess'd the charm that wins the heart of all ;
And, thrice entreated by a lover's prayer,
She thrice refused him with determin'd air.
“ No ! had the world one monarch, and was he
“ All that the heart could wish its lord to be, — “ Lovely and loving, generous, brave, and true, —
“ Vain were his hopes to waken hers anew !”
For she was wedded to ideal views,
And fancy's prospects, that she would not lose,
Would not forego, to be a mortal's wife,
And wed the poor realities of life.

There was a day, ere yet the autumn closed,
When, ere her wintry wars, the earth reposed,
When from the yellow weed the feathery crown,
Light as the curling smoke, fell slowly down ;
When the wing'd insect settled in our sight,
And waited wind to recommence her flight ;
When the wide river was a silver sheet,
And on the ocean slept th' unanchor'd fleet ;

When from our garden, as we look'd above,
There was no cloud, and nothing seem'd to move ;
Then was my friend in ecstasies—she cried,
“ There is, I feel there is, a world beside !
“ Martha, dear Martha ! we shall hear not then
“ Of hearts distress'd by good or evil men,
“ But all will constant, tender, faithful be—
“ So had I been, and so had one with me ;
“ But in this world the fondest and the best
“ Are the most tried, most troubled, and distress'd ;
“ This is the place for trial ; here we prove,
“ And there enjoy, the faithfulness of love.

“ Nay, were he here in all the pride of youth,
“ With honour, valour, tenderness, and truth,
“ Entirely mine, yet what could I secure,
“ Or who one day of comfort could insure ?
“ No ! all is closed on earth, and there is now
“ Nothing to break th' indissoluble vow ;
“ But in that world will be th' abiding bliss,
“ That pays for every tear and sigh in this.”

Such her discourse, and more refined it grew,
Till she had all her glorious dream in view ;
And she would further in that dream proceed
Than I dare go, who doubtfully agreed :
Smiling I ask'd, again to draw the soul
From flight so high, and fancy to control,
“ If this be truth, the lover's happier way
“ Is distant still to keep the purposed day ;
“ The real bliss would mar the fancied joy,
“ And marriage all the dream of love destroy.”

She softly smiled, and as we gravely talk'd,
We saw a man who up the gravel walk'd,
Not quite erect, nor quite by age depress'd,
A travell'd man, and as a merchant dress'd;
Large chain of gold upon his watch he wore,
Small golden buckles on his feet he bore;
A head of gold his costly cane display'd,
And all about him love of gold betray'd.

This comely man moved onward, and a pair
Of comely maidens met with serious air;
Till one exclaim'd, and wildly look'd around,
"O Heav'n, 't is Paul!" and dropp'd upon the ground;
But she recover'd soon, and you must guess
What then ensued, and how much happiness.

They parted lovers, both distress'd to part!
They met as neighbours, heal'd, and whole of heart:
She in his absence look'd to heaven for bliss,
He was contented with a world like this;
And she prepared in some new state to meet
The man now seeking for some snug retreat.
He kindly told her he was firm and true,
Nor doubted her, and bade her then adieu!

"What shall I do?" the sighing maid began,
"How lost the lover! O, how gross the man."
For the plain dealer had his wish declared,
Nor she, devoted victim! could be spared:
He spoke as one decided; she as one
Who fear'd the love, and would the lover shun.

“ O Martha, sister of my soul ! how dies
“ Each lovely view ! for can I truth disguise,
“ That this is he ? No ! nothing shall persuade ;
“ This is a man the naughty world has made,
“ An eating, drinking, buying, bargaining man —
“ And can I love him ? No ! I never can.
“ What once he was, what fancy gave beside,
“ Full well I know, my love was then my pride ;
“ What time has done, what trade and travel wrought,
“ You see ! and yet your sorrowing friend is sought ;
“ But can I take him ? ” — “ Take him not, ” I
    cried,
“ If so averse — but why so soon decide ? ”

Meantime a daily guest the man appear'd,
Set all his sail, and for his purpose steer'd :
Loud and familiar, loving, fierce, and free,
He overpower'd her soft timidity ;
Who, weak and vain, and grateful to behold
The man was hers, and hers would be the gold ;
Thus sundry motives, more than I can name,
Leagued on his part, and she a wife became.

A home was offer'd, but I knew too well
What comfort was with married friends to dwell ;
I was resign'd, and had I felt distress,
Again a lover offer'd some redress ;
Behold, a hero of the buskin hears
My loss, and with consoling love appears ;
Frederick was now a hero on the stage,
In all its glories, rhapsody, and rage ;

Again himself he offer'd, offer'd all
 That his a hero of the kind can call :
 He for my sake would hope of fame resign,
 And leave the applause of all the world for mine.
 Hard fate was Frederick's, never to succeed,
 Yet ever try — but so it was decreed :
 His mind was weaken'd ; he would laugh and weep,
 And swore profusely I had “ murder'd sleep.”
 Had quite unmann'd him, cleft his heart in twain,
 And he should never “ be himself again.”

He was himself; weak, nervous, kind, and poor,
 Ill dress'd and idle, he besieged my door,
 Borrow'd, — or, worse, made verses on my charms,
 And did his best to fill me with alarms ;
 I had some pity, and I sought the price
 Of my repose — my hero was not nice ;
 There was a loan, and promise I should be
 From all the efforts of his fondness free,
 From hunger's future claims, or those of vanity.
 “ Yet,” said he, bowing, “ do to study take !
 “ Oh ! what a Desdemona wouldst thou make ! ”<sup>(1)</sup>
 Thus was my lover lost ; yet even now
 He claims one thought, and this we will allow.

His father lived to an extreme old age,
 But never kind ! — his son had left the stage,

(1) [Orig. MS. —

And then he spouted — till I cried, Is he
 The man I loved ? Oh ! that could never be.
 No ! time upon the outward beauty preys,
 And the mind's beauty in its vice decays.]

And gain'd some office, but a humble place,
 And that he lost! Want sharpen'd his disgrace,
 Urged him to seek his father — but too late,
 His jealous brothers watch'd and barr'd the gate.<sup>(1)</sup>

The old man died: but there is one who pays
 A moderate pension for his latter days,
 Who, though assured inquiries will offend,
 Is ever asking for this unknown friend;
 Some partial lady, whom he hopes to find,
 As to his wants so to his wishes kind.

“ Be still,” a cool adviser sometimes writes —
 “ Nay, but,” says he, “ the gentle maid invites —
 “ Do, let me know the young! the soft! the fair!”
 “ Old man,” ’tis answer'd, “ take thyself to prayer!
 “ Be clean, be sober, to thy priest apply,
 “ And — dead to all around thee — learn to die!”

Now had I rest from life's strong hopes and fears,
 And no disturbance mark'd the flying years;
 So on in quiet might those years have pass'd,
 But for a light adventure, and a last.

A handsome Boy, from school-day bondage free,
 Came with mamma to gaze upon the sea;
 With soft blue eye he look'd upon the waves,
 And talk'd of treacherous rocks, and seamen's graves:
 There was much sweetness in his boyish smile,
 And signs of feelings frank, that knew not guile.

(1) [MS. — But that he lost, and with a wither'd hand,
 Stood at his father's gate, as beggars stand;
 But his were jealous brethren, and they kept
 Their dying father from him till he slept.]

The partial mother, of her darling proud,
Besought my friendship, and her own avow'd ;
She praised her Rupert's person, spirit, ease,
How fond of study, yet how form'd to please ;
In our discourse he often bore a part,
And talk'd, heaven bless him! of his feeling heart ;
He spoke of pleasures souls like his enjoy,
And hated Lovelace like a virtuous boy ;

He felt for Clementina's holy strife,
And was Sir Charles as large and true as life :
For Virtue's heroines was his soul distress'd ;
True love and guileless honour fill'd his breast,
When, as the subjects drew the frequent sigh,
The tear stood trembling in his large blue eye,
And softly he exclaim'd, " Sweet, sweetest sympathy!"

When thus I heard the handsome stripling
speak,
I smiled assent, and thought to pat his cheek ;
But when I saw the feelings blushing there,
Signs of emotions strong, they said — forbear !

The Youth would speak of his intent to live
On that estate which heaven was pleased to give,
There with the partner of his joys to dwell,
And nurse the virtues that he loved so well ;
The humble good of happy swains to share,
And from the cottage drive distress and care ;
To the dear infants make some pleasures known,
And teach, he gravely said, the virtues to his own.

He loved to read in verse, and verse-like prose,
The softest tales of love-inflicted woes ;
When, looking fondly, he would smile and cry,
Is there not bliss in sensibility ?”

We walk'd together, and it seem'd not harm
In linking thought with thought, and arm with arm,
Till the dear boy would talk too much of bliss,
And indistinctly murmur — “ such as this.”

When no maternal wish her heart beguiled,
The lady call'd her son “ the darling child ;”
When with some nearer view her speech began,
She changed her phrase, and said, “ the good young man !”

And lost, when hinting of some future bride,
The woman's prudence in the mother's pride.

Still decent fear and conscious folly strove
With fond presumption and aspiring love ;
But now too plain to me the strife appear'd,
And what he sought I knew, and what he fear'd ;
The trembling hand and frequent sigh disclosed
The wish that prudence, care, and time opposed.

Was I not pleased, will you demand ? — Amused
By boyish love, that woman's pride refused ?
This I acknowledge, and, from day to day,
Resolved no longer at such game to play ;
Yet I forbore, though to my purpose true,
And firmly fix'd to bid the youth adieu.

There was a moonlight eve, serenely cool,
When the vast ocean seem'd a mighty pool ;
Save the small rippling waves that gently beat,
We scarcely heard them falling, at our feet :
His mother absent, absent every sound,
And every sight, that could the youth confound ;
The arm, fast lock'd in mine, his fear betray'd,
And when he spoke not, his designs convey'd ;
He oft-times gasp'd for breath, he tried to speak,
And studying words, at last had words to seek.

Silent the boy, by silence more betray'd,
And fearing lest he should appear afraid,
He knelt abruptly, and his speech began—
“ Pity the pangs of an unhappy man.”

“ Be sure,” I answer'd, “ and relieve them too—
“ But why that posture ? What the woes to you ?
“ To feel for others' sorrows is humane,
“ But too much feeling is our virtue's bane.

“ Come, my dear Rupert ! now your tale disclose,
“ That I may know the sufferer and his woes,
“ Know there is pain that wilful man endures,
“ That our reproof and not our pity cures ;
“ For though for such assumed distress we grieve,
“ Since they themselves as well as us deceive,
“ Yet we assist not.” — The unhappy youth,
Unhappy then, beheld not all the truth.

“ O ! what is this ? ” exclaim'd the dubious boy,
“ Words that confuse the being they destroy ?

“ So have I read the gods to madness drive
“ The man condemn'd with adverse fate to strive ;
“ O ! make thy victim, though by misery, sure,
“ And let me know the pangs I must endure ;
“ For, like the Grecian warrior, I can pray
“ Falling, to perish in the face of day.”

“ Pretty, my Rupert ; and it proves the use
“ Of all that learning which the schools produce :
“ But come, your arm—no trembling, but attend
“ To sober truth, and a maternal friend.

“ You ask for pity ? ” — “ O ! indeed I do.”
“ Well then, you have it, and assistance too :
“ Suppose us married ! ” — “ O ! the heavenly thought ! ”
“ Nay—nay, my friend, be you by wisdom taught ;
“ For wisdom tells you, love would soon subside,
“ Fall, and make room for penitence and pride ;
“ Then would you meet the public eye, and blame
“ Your private taste, and be o'erwhelm'd with shame :
“ How must it then your bosom's peace destroy
“ To hear it said, ‘ The mother and her boy ! ’
“ And then, to show the sneering world it lies,
“ You would assume the man, and tyrannize ;
“ Ev'n Time, Care's general soother, would augment
“ Your self-reproaching, growing discontent.

“ Add twenty years to my precarious life,
“ And lo ! your aged, feeble, wailing wife ;
“ Displeased, displeasing, discontented, blamed ;
“ Both, and with cause, ashaming and ashamed :

“ When I shall bend beneath a press of time,
“ Thou wilt be all erect in manhood’s prime ;
“ Then wilt thou fly to younger minds t’ assuage
“ Thy bosom’s pain, and I in jealous age
“ Shall move contempt, if still ; if active, rage :
“ And though in anguish all my days are past,
“ Yet far beyond thy wishes they may last ;
“ May last till thou, thy better prospects fled,
“ Shall have no comfort when thy wife is dead.

“ Then thou in turn, though none will call thee old,
“ Wilt feel thy spirit fled, thy bosom cold ;
“ No strong or eager wish to wake the will,
“ Life will appear to stagnate and be still,
“ As now with me it slumbers ; O ! rejoice
“ That I attend not to that pleading voice ;
“ So will new hopes this troubled dream succeed,
“ And one will gladly hear my Rupert plead.”

Ask you, while thus I could the youth deny,
Was I unmoved ? — Inexorable I,
Fix’d and determin’d : thrice he made his prayer,
With looks of sadness first, and then despair ;
Thrice doom’d to bear refusal, not exempt,
At the last effort, from a slight contempt.

Did his distress, his pains, your joy excite ? —
No ; but I fear’d his perseverance might.
Was there no danger in the moon’s soft rays,
To hear the handsome stripling’s earnest praise ?
Was there no fear that, while my words reprov’d
The eager youth, I might myself be moved ?

Not for his sake alone I cried "Persist
No more," and with a frown the cause dismiss'd.

Seek you th' event?—I scarcely need reply,
Love, unreturn'd, will languish, pine, and die:
We lived awhile in friendship, and with joy
I saw depart in peace the amorous boy.

We met some ten years after, and he then
Was married, and as cool as married men;
He talk'd of war and taxes, trade and farms,
And thought no more of me, or of my charms.

We spoke; and when, alluding to the past,
Something of meaning in my look I cast,
He, who could never thought or wish disguise,
Look'd in my face with trouble and surprise;
To kill reserve, I seized his arm, and cried,
"Know me, my lord!" when laughing, he replied,
Wonder'd again, and look'd upon my face,
And seem'd unwilling marks of time to trace;
But soon I brought him fairly to confess,
That boys in love judge ill of happiness.

Love had his day,—to graver subjects led,
My will is govern'd, and my mind is fed;
And to more vacant bosoms I resign
The hopes and fears that once affected mine.

IN MONTHLY VOLUMES,

THE

HISTORY OF THE DECLINE AND FALL

OF

THE ROMAN EMPIRE,

BY

EDWARD GIBBON ;

WITH

NOTES BY THE REV. H. H. MILMAN.

---

THE work of GIBBON has long maintained its rank as the standard History of the extensive period which it embraces, not only in this country but in every part of the Continent. Its authority, as a work of incomparable depth and accuracy of research, is still, in general, unimpeached ; its popularity, as a splendid historical composition, unimpaired. At the same time, the unfriendly tone in which it treats of the Christian religion has been a constant subject of regret to many of those who are most desirous and capable of appreciating its high value. While it has been universally admitted that the " Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire" is indispensable to every reader of history—that the whole literature of Europe has, as yet, furnished no adequate substitute for this comprehensive work—men of the most unprejudiced minds, and superior to the least suspicion of bigotry, have lamented that, on this important subject, its general bias should be as irreconcilable with the true philosophy of history, as with the interests of pure and rational religion.

Within the last twenty years, two editions of the French translation, with the NOTES of M. GUIZOT, have appeared at Paris. The object of M. GUIZOT (an historical writer of a very high order, and now an influential member of the government in France,) was chiefly to correct these erroneous views of the author with regard to the early history of Christianity; but he has likewise entered into many other points of great interest in the history of the Empire.

The New Edition will contain almost the whole of M. GUIZOT'S NOTES, a selection from those of M. ST. MARTIN, with many Illustrations and Corrections by the present EDITOR. The design of the Work is to furnish the original, unmutilated text of GIBBON, revised throughout, particularly in the quotations, and to subjoin a candid and dispassionate examination of his mistatements on the subject of Christianity, with such additional correction and information as has been brought to light by the enquiries or discoveries of later historians, who have successfully treated the different periods comprehended in the History of GIBBON.

The LIFE of GIBBON (by himself) will be prefixed, and copiously illustrated from his Miscellaneous Works, and from other sources.

The Edition will be illustrated by an original Set of MAPS, compiled for the Work.

“ If accuracy of historical knowledge be of importance even in minute points—if it be desirable that erroneous views should not be thus incorporated and perpetuated in our whole system of instruction—any palliative to this growing evil would be a valuable service to our national literature. The only remedy appears to be the republication of such works as are unlikely to be superseded in public estimation and authority, with a body of notes, which may at once correct their errors, and incorporate the more valuable discoveries of modern enquiry. It is time that variorum editions of our standard works should issue from the press. In this the French are setting a good example; and we trust that we shall not long remain behind our enlightened neighbours. The combined motives of admiration for the classical works of our literature—which, in proportion to their merit, we should rejoice in beholding in a more perfect form—and of zeal for the sound and accurate instruction of the people, will, we trust, before long, be enlisted in this important cause, and the attempt at least be made to extend and enlarge the general knowledge, not by hasty and temporary compilations, and such shreds and tatters of information as are scattered abroad in the countless cheap publications of the day, but by the continual improvement and completion of the great imperishable works of English literature.”— Quarterly Review.

LANDSCAPE ILLUSTRATIONS

OF THE

B I B L E,

MADE FROM ORIGINAL SKETCHES TAKEN ON THE SPOT.

Engraved in the best style by W. and E. Finden. Accompanied by Descriptions, drawn up from Original and other Sources. By the Rev. THOMAS HARTWELL HORNE, B.D. Author of "An Introduction to the Study of the Holy Scriptures," &c.

The peculiar value of Mr. Murray's illustrations of the Bible consists in their being matter of fact views of places as they now exist, taken on the spot, and not fictitious pictures made up from prints in books of travels, nor imaginary representations.

Announcement of New Works.

TRAVELS INTO BOKHARA ; being the Account of a Journey from India to Cabool, Tartary, and Persia ; also, NARRATIVE of a VOYAGE by the INDUS, while on a Mission to the Court of Lahore, with Presents from the King of Great Britain. Performed under the Orders of the Supreme Government of India, in the Years 1831, 1832, and 1833. By LIEUT. ALEXANDER BURNES, F. R. S., Member of the Asiatic Societies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay. Three Vols. 8vo. ; with Illustrative Engravings.

This Work lays open to our view a wide extent of country which has not been visited by Europeans in modern times, though it is full of interest from early impressions and classical associations. It is the Journal of an officer who has trodden those unfrequented regions, partly as an accredited agent of his government, and partly in a love of travel and research. He first ascends the Indus from the sea to Lahore, a river of which we have no account since the days of Alexander the Great. Its importance in a general and commercial point of view is clearly pointed out, and we have much matter of an interesting nature regarding the chiefs and people who inhabit its banks. In particular, the gorgeous splendour of the Court of Runjeet Sing, the ruler of Lahore and Cashmeer, at which our traveller resided, brings us back to the age of the Caliphs. He next traverses the countries at the base of the Hemilaya mountains, and crosses the Indus to the kingdom of Cabool. The mission of the Honourable Mr. Elphinstone terminated at the city of Peshawur, close to the Indus ; but Lieut. Burnes carries us to Cabool, and over the whole extent of the kingdom — the lofty mountains of the Indian Caucasus or Hindoo Koosh — to the plains of Tartary, among tribes which have been hitherto undescribed. We are then conducted beyond the Oxus to the far-famed countries of Samarcand and Bokhara, in which latter city he resided for two months. The intercourse with the Uzbek nations will be found both novel and amusing. The route then leads through the inhospitable deserts of the Toorkmans, eastward of the Caspian Sea, which Lieut. Burnes reaches in safety, and at length enters the capital of Persia.

Besides a very full and interesting personal Narrative of the Adventures and Dangers of the undertaking, this Work contains an Historical and Geographical Account of the countries which have been visited, as well as much information regarding their Antiquities, and some remarkable Bactrian Coins collected by the Author. It is also embellished by a few sketches of Scenery and Costume, which are being engraved by the first artists.

THE MAP, constructed to illustrate these volumes, by Mr. J. Arrowsmith, who has devoted much time in studying the Geography of this portion of Asia, will doubtless be deemed most valuable, since it adds greatly to our knowledge, as well as rectifies much of the Geography found most variable and erroneous in all former Maps of Central Asia. Price, in sheets, 7s. In cover, 7s. 6d. On canvass, and in case, 10s.

GUIDE to the HIGHLANDS and ISLANDS of SCOTLAND, including ORKNEY and ZETLAND; descriptive of their Scenery, Statistics, Antiquities, and Natural History, with numerous Historical Notices. By GEORGE ANDERSON, General Secretary to the Northern Institution for the Promotion of Science and Literature; and PETER ANDERSON, Secretary to the Inverness Society for the Education of the Poor in the Highlands. One Pocket Volume, post 8vo., accompanied by a most elaborate and complete Map engraved by Arrowsmith, and containing the most recent information respecting Roads, &c. for the use of Travellers.

A HISTORY of ARCHITECTURE. By the late THOMAS HOPE, Esq., Author of "Anastasius." Illustrated by numerous Engravings by Moses, Shaw, Le Keux, and Basley, from Drawings made by the Author. 4to.

BELGIUM and WESTERN GERMANY, in 1833. With Excursions to WISBADEN, BADEN-BADEN, CASSEL, HANOVER, the HARTZ MOUNTAINS, &c. &c. By Mrs. TROLLOPE. 2 Vols. post 8vo.

UNIVERSAL HISTORY, Vols. V. and VI., which complete the Work, will be ready on the 1st of July.

HISTORY of BRITISH INDIA. By the G. R. GLEIG, Author of the "Subaltern." Vols. II., III., and IV., completing the Work.

REFUTATION of COLONEL NAPIER'S JUSTIFICATION of the Third Volume of his "War in the Peninsula." By General Lord Viscount BERESFORD, G. C. B. 8vo. 6s. 6d.

A GENERAL VIEW of EGYPT, and the TOPOGRAPHY of THEBES, made during a Residence of more than Twelve Years in Egypt and among the Ruins of Thebes. By J. G. WILKINSON, Esq.

WORKS OF ALEXANDER POPE. An entirely New Edition, with Notes.

Announcement of New Works.

FAIRY LEGENDS and TRADITIONS of the South of IRELAND. By T. CROFTON CROKER, Esq. Compressed into One Volume of the FAMILY LIBRARY, with nearly Fifty Wood-cuts.

POEMS of the VITA NUOVA and CONVITO. With a SELECTION from the CANZONIERE of DANTE ALIGHIERI. Translated by C. L. of K. Post 8vo.

On the MORAL STATISTICS of GREAT BRITAIN. By WORONZOW GREIG, Barrister, M. A., F. R. S.

This Work embraces a view of the various Crimes (including suicide) committed in this country during the present century, arranged according to the frequency of their occurrence — of the proportion which they bear to the whole population — of their distribution throughout the country generally, and as between agricultural and manufacturing districts in particular — of their nature and frequency with reference to the age and sex of the offender, and also with respect to the season of the year at which they are committed — of the motives which lead to their commission — and lastly, of the effect of pauperism and education upon their increase and diminution.

To this may be added, a statement of the proportion which Illegitimate Children bear to the population generally, and to other births in particular; their sex, the mortality which exists among them, and the districts in which this offence is most prevalent; and, in conclusion, a short review is taken of the different degrees of Education received by the lower classes in different parts of the country, and the effects it produces upon their morals and happiness.

ILLUSTRATIONS of the HISTORY of the SIXTEENTH and SEVENTEENTH CENTURIES. Translated from the German of FREDERIC VON RAUMER. Part I. — Germany, Denmark, Spain, the Netherlands, and France. Post 8vo.

A New Edition of the CONNEXION of the PHYSICAL SCIENCES. By MRS. SOMERVILLE. A New Edition. Foolscap 8vo. 7s. 6d.

“The general reader, before he enters upon Sir John Herschel's Treatise on Astronomy, should prepare his thoughts for the tone of elevation which it requires, by reading Mrs. Somerville's delightful volume on the 'Connexion of the Physical Sciences.' The style of this astonishing production is so clear and unaffected, and conveys, with so much simplicity, so great a mass of profound knowledge, that it should be placed in the hands of every youth the moment he has mastered the general rudiments of education.” — Quarterly Review.
