The Arte of English Poesie.

INTRODUCTION.

It must ever be remembered that this Ladies' book was first published anonymously; that the printer was or feigned to be in ignorance of its Author; that similarly Sir John Harington, in 1591, only refers to him as 'that vnknowne Godfather, that this last yeare faue on, viz. 1589, fet forth a booke called the Arte of English Poefie,' and again as that 'fame Ignoto;' and lastly, that the authorship of the work was never openly claimed by any of Elizabeth's contemporaries.

The treatise appears to have been written between June 1584, and November 1588 when it was first entered at Stationers' Hall. This is proved not only by the general tenour of contemporary allusion, as by the following particulars, among other.

1. John Soowthern's 'Pandora. The Musyque of the beautie of his mistresse Diana,' has on its title page the date 20. June 1584. Mr. J. P. Collier—in Bibl. Cat. ii. 367, ed. 1865—gives the result of his examination—while it was in the possession of the late Mr. Heber—of the only perfect copy of this intrinsically worthless work. He quotes passages to show that Puttenham meant, though he does not name, Soowthern in his description, at p. 259, of 'our minion' with his vice of Mingle-Mangle. That being the case; the present work was written after June 1584.

2. There is at p. 206 of some of the copies of the original edition, a remarkable substitution of one passage for another, respecting the Netherlanders. We have reprinted both passages at pp. 252-3. This substitution tells this tale. The work was composed at a time when the Netherlanders were in bad odour; when indecision marked the Queen's counsel, as to whether the long peace should be broken and they should be assisted in the war against Spain. The first passage is, therefore, strongly anti-Dutch. This would accord with the history of 1585.

But the work came to the press about March-April 1589. Meanwhile, the Armada had been defeated—the Dutch had proved themselves worthy confederates, and had helped much in the victory. So a more friendly though somewhat patronizing passage is substituted for the former one—but not before some sheets had been printed. Thus, we obtain from this diversity, evidence as to the original composition in 1585, or later.

3. In one of the cancelled pages, see p. 118, is an account of the King of Spain's escutcheon and its legend, Non sufficit orbis, in the Governor's palace at St. Domingo. This city was taken by Drake, on New Year's Day 1586; and his great Expedition returned to Portsmouth on the 20th July 1586. Subsequent to which date, we must place our Author's knowledge of the fact.

4. Sidney is called Sir Philip Sidney (he was knighted 8th Jan. 1583). The absence of all allusion to his death (17 Oct. 1586) or magnificent public funeral (16 Feb. 1587), accords with an anterior composition of this work.

5. The correction on publication in 1589, as to events and time, is sometimes perfect; as in bringing up the Queen's rule to 'this one and thirty yeares space of your glorious raigne;'* sometimes imperfect as 'We ourselues haue heretofore giuen some example by our Triumphals written in honour of her Maiesties long peace;'† a passage evidently written in the time of that peace.

A minute and exhaustive analysis of the work, tracing every contemporary allusion to its date, would probably but confirm this general result—that it was written about 1585, and then as, with but few corrections and additions, it was printed in 1589.

The occasion of the work appears in language, which, considering that great Age, and the great Worthies and Poets then living, is somewhat extraordinary.

But in these dayes (although some learned Princes may take delight in Poets) yet vniuersally it is not so. For as well Poets as Poesie are despised, and the name become, of honorable infamous, subiect to scorne and derision, and rather a reproch than a prayse to any that vseth it: for commonly who so is studious in th'Arte or shewes him selfe excellent in it, they call him in disdayne a phantasticall: and a light headed or phantasticall man (by conuersion) they call a Poet.‡

Peradventure in this iron and malitious age of ours, Princes are lesse delighted in it [the Arte of Poesie] being ouer earnestly bent and affected to the affaires of Empire and ambition. . . . So as, it is hard to find in these dayes of noblemen or gentlemen any good Mathematician, or excellent Musitian, or notable Philosopher, or els a cunning Poet: becaufe we find few great Princes much delighted in the same studies. Now also of such among the Nobilitie or gentry as be very well seene in many laudable sciences, and especially in making or Poesie, it is so come to passe that they haue no courage to write and if they haue, yet are they loath to be a knowen of their skill. So as I know very many notable Gentlemen in the Court that haue written commendably and suppressed it agayne, or els suffred it to be publisht without their names to it : as if it were a discredit for a Gentleman, to seeme learned, and to shew him selfe amorous of any good Art.*

And in her Maiesties time that now is are sprong vp an other crew of Courtly makers Noble men and Gentlemen of her Maiesties owne seruantes, who haue written excellently well as it would appeare if their doings could be found out and made publicke with the rest.†

Which chiding, strangely coming from an anonymous author,—containing as it does an important testimony, both as to an anterior literary fecundity, and to the mass of contemporary literature which never reached the printing-press—is always to be estimated, in considering the earlier Elizabethan literature of England.

Such being the occasion, the Author tells us of the persons he had in view in writing this, the largest piece of Poetical Criticism in Elizabeth's reign.

First and above all : he writes for the Queen's own personal information and pleasure : whose portrait, in all her glorious attire, adorns the original edition, and specimens of whose poesie will be found at pp. 243, 255.

You (Madame) my most Honored and Gracious : if I should seeme to offer you this my deuise for a discipline and not a delight.‡

So haue we remembred and set forth to your Maiestie very briefly, all the commended formes of the auncient Poesie . . . And we haue purposely omitted all nice or scholastical curiosities not meete for your Maiesties contemplation in this our vulgar arte.§

Also that I write to the pleasure of a Lady and a most gracious Queene, and neither to Priestes nor to Prophetes or Philosophers.||

Next he wrote for the Court.

I trust they will beare with me writing in the vulgar speach and seeking by my nouelties to satisfie not the schoole but the Court.¶

Courtiers for whose instruction this trauaile is taken. . . . The authors owne purpose, which is to make of a rude rimer, a learned and a Courtly Poet.**

Because our chiefe purpose herein is for the learning of Ladies and young Gentlewomen or idle Courtiers, desirous to become skilful in their owne mother tongue, and for their priuate recreation to make now and then ditties of pleafure. . . .*

Specially for your Ladies and pretie mistresses in Court, for whose learning I write.†

Neuerthelesse because we are to teache Ladies and Gentlemen to know their schoole points and termes appertaining to the Art.‡

[Proportion in figure] also fitteft for the pretie amourets in Court to entertaine their seruants and the time withall, their delicate wits requiring some commendable exercife to keepe them from idleneffe.§

So as every furplufage or preposterous placing or vndue iteration or darke word, or doubtfull speach are not fo narrowly to be looked vpon in a large poeme, nor specially in the pretie Poesies and deuifes of Ladies, and gentlewoman makers, whom we would not haue too precife Poets leaft with their shrewd wits, when they were married they might become a little too phantasticall wiues. ||

Laftly, he tells us.

Our intent is to make this Art vulgar for all English mens vse.¶

Thus, Queen, Court, Educated if it might not be the Learned as well, are those for whose instruction and delight in The Arte of English Poesie this work was undertaken.

What was then his purpose and plan? He gives us his own summary of it?

Now (most excellent Queene) hauing largely faid of Poets and Poesie, and about what matters they be employed: then of all the commended fourmes of Poemes, thirdly of metricall proportions, such as do appertaine to our vulgar arte: and laft of all fet forth the poeticall ornament confifting chiefly in the beautie and gallantnesse of his language and stile, and fo haue appalled him to our seeming, in all his gorgeous habilliments, and pulling him first from the carte to the schoole, and from thence to the Court, and preferred him to your Maiefties seruice, in that place of great honour and magnificence to geue entertainment to Princes, Ladies of honour, Gentlewomen and Gentlemen, and by his many moodes of skill, to serue the many humors of men thither haunting and resorting, some by way of folace, some of ferious aduife, and in matters aswell profitable as pleafant and honest.**

Hitherto we have dealt with the intention of the book, its execution is too large a subject for consideration here. A few points may be simply glanced at.

The work is not exclusively confined to English Poësie. The First of the three bookes gives also the theory of the origin of the various forms of Poetry. The Second describes the ancient Classic Poetry; reports, and apparently introduces into our literature, the Tartarian and Persian forms of verse, afterwards so fashionable; and discusses the application of Greek and Latin metrical 'numerositie' to English poetry. The Third book explains the then theory of Punctuation; has a long chapter on Language; deals with the figures of Rhetoric as well as those of Poetry proper: and has some forty pages on a seemingly foreign subject, Decorum; by which we are to understand not only Courtly manners, but also apt and felicitous expression of thought, and appropriateness of dress and conduct to our condition in life.

That chapter Of Language, and the many criticisms on 'words' scattered through the book are most interesting. Our Author was the Archbishop Trench of his age. It is important in the history of the growth of our Tongue, to see him fixing English, as 'the vsuall speach of the Court, and the shires lying about London within sixty miles, and not much above;' defending the introduction by himself or others, into our language, of such words as Impression, Scientific, Major-domo, Politician, Conduct, Idiom, Significant;* to listen to his explanations of such words as Pelf, Moppe or of such proverbs as Totnesse is turned French, Skarborow warning, and the like. A man who could patiently transpose a single sentence five hundred times in search of an Anagram on his Sovereign's name; would easily delight in the refined subtilties of meaning which are enshrined in words.

A word of common occurrence in the book—vulgar, must oftentimes be stripped of its modern acceptation. Sometimes it is used as we use it now, for low, common: but often it refers to the then current theory of languages. People supposed that from the three ancient and dead languages, Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, all modern Continental languages were derived. They gave to these national living languages the common name of 'vulgar tongues.' So in many instances herein, vulgar stands for native or national: e. g. our vulgar art, may be read our national art, or sometimes simply, our vulgar is equivalent to our native tongue.

It would be great injustice to overpass the clear style of the book. Considering the nature of the subject, and that the Author was writing for Ladies; great skill is shown in the breaking up of the book into many chapters; and in his perfect affluence of example, illustration, and anecdote to solace their 'minds with mirth after all these scholastical preceptes which can not but bring with them (specially to Courtiers) much tediousness'; while a merry twinkling wit is constantly peeping out, as in his debating 'I cannot well say whether a man use to kisse before hee take his leaue, or take his leaue before he kisse, or that it be all one busines.'

Another characteristic is his dispassionate judgement. His condemnation of his own productions is without a qualm; and his praise of others' poetry is equally unqualified: just as either appear to him to neglect or conform to the principles of his Arte.

There yet remains a great question. Who was the Author?

A large number of tantalizing self-allusions occur in the book. No less than twelve of the writer's previous works, not counting slighter pieces, are either referred to, described, or quoted in it; and some of them in a way, only consistent with their antecedent circulation in MS. Of all these works, there has come down to us, but a late and imperfect copy of one,—Partheniades: and that copy, in accordance with the perfectly successful reticence, has not the author's name on it.

We learn from The Arte of English Poesie that it was written by an Englishman, born about 1532; that he was one of children in the Nurfery, and he calls his nurse, 'the old gentlewoman'; that in due time he became a Scholar at Oxford; that in his younger days

he gave himself up to Poësie; that at eighteen he 'made an Eglogue entitled Elpine to Edward VI; that yet in his youth he was brought up in Foreign Courts and knew them better than he did the English one; that he could say 'I my selfe hauing seene the Courts of Fraunce, Spaine, Italie, and that of the Empire, with many inferiour Courts;' that by early studies, riper training, and foreign society he was at home in Greek and Latin; well skilled in French, Italian, and Spanish; well read in history, especially that of his own time; of great acquaintance with our national literature; and taking an especial delight in English poesy.

Further he was some time on the Continent between 1560-1570: and in 1579 presented his Partheniades as a New Year's gift to Queen Elizabeth.

Finally, approaching sixty years of age, he wrote the present work for his Sovereign's delight and instruction. Who is this high-born, high bred, highly cultivated, courtly Crichton?

Can he be George Puttenham, of whose existence there is no doubt, but whose name is first possibly associated in print with this work so late as 1614, in William Carew's paper On the excellencie of the English tongue, in the second edition of Camden's Remaines. It is an aggravation, that gleaning as much as we do of our Author, we know so little otherwise of Puttenham's life: that we have no elements to combine with the above facts.

Our purpose is not to dispossess Puttenham of the authorship, as to contrast the abundant self-allusion in the work, with the weak external evidence in his favour. It is to be hoped in the exhumation of old documents so constantly going on, all or at least some of our Author's works may be discovered: or if that be too great a hope, that evidence, decisive and final, may turn up, as to whether among the good writers, either in prose or verse, of our Country can be enrolled the name of George Puttenham: whether it is to him that we are indebted for this original and clever book on Poetry, Rhetoric, and Good Manners.

The indications of time are so rarely given, that the order is often simply haphazard: and the whole collection is but tentative.

With reference to the story at p. 277, Professor J. S. Brewer, a great authority as to this period, writes to me: "The Ambassador referred to can be no other than Dr. Lee, afterwards Archbp. of York, the celebrated opponent of Erasmus. He was ambassador in Spain from 1525 until the Emperor left for Italy at the commencement of 1530. During the year 1529, he was called upon to remonstrate with the Emperor for the part he took in supporting Catherine, and practising with the Pope to prevent the king's divorce. It was apparently on one of these occasions that the circumstances mentioned in the anecdote occurred. It is clear from various indications in Lee's letter, that he was not an exact Spanish or French scholar. In general the interviews between Charles and the English ambassadors were carried on in French."]

[JOHN EVERAERTS, also called SECUNDUS NICOLAUS (b. 10 Nov. 1511, at the Hague; d. 8 Oct. 1536, at Tournay) was one of the great poets of the Renaissance. His works—all of them in Latin—were not published till after his death. His 19 poems, called 'Kisses,' Basia, were first published at Leyden in 1539. A collection of his works appeared at Utrecht in 1541, and again at Paris in 1582: in which among his book of poems, entitled Sylvæ are the Epithalamium referred to at p. 68; and 'The Palace of Money,' Regia Pecuniæ, the autographic copy of which is in Harl. MS. 4935, in the British Museum. Secundus wrote Elegies, Odes, Epigrams, &c.; and among other, 'A Monody on the death of Sir Thomas More.')

[This fixes the author's birth between 1529-1535. Taking a mean date, he may be assumed to have been born within a year, either way, of 1532.]
 'Specially in the Courtiers of forraigne countreyes, where in my youth I was brought vp, and very well obserued their maner of life and conuersation, for of mine owne country I haue not made so great experience.' p. 308.

 His foreign travels are referred to at pp. 216, 278, 279, 306.

1553. July 6. Mary succeeds to the crown.

1553. Oct. 5. (Thursday.) Parliament meets. By the first Motion and Nomination of Mr. Treasurer of the Queen's House, the Worshipful Mr. John Pollard, Esq.  1553. Oct. 9. On Monday afternoon, Mr. Speaker made an excellent Oration before the Queen's Highness sitting in the Royal Seat in the Parliament Chamber; all the Nobles and Commons assembled. Idem. See p. 151.

 1560-1574. [?] Charles IX. King of France.
 'In the time of Charles the ninth French king, I being at the Spaw waters, there lay a Marshall of Fraunce called Monsieur de Sifier' [who apparently dies there]. p. 285.

 [?] 'Quoth the Iudge [apparently dead at the time of writing] what neede of such eloquent termes [as violent persuasions] in this place?' p. 153.
 [At pp. 169-178 of Cott. MS. Vespasian E. viii., written in a small hand, is a copy of 17 poems, which were printed by Mr. Haslewood in his edition of the present work in 1811. The first is headed—
The principall addresse in nature of a new years gifte, seeminge thereby the author intended not to have his name knowne.
 These poems are the Partheniades of our author. The somewhat modern copy is apparently imperfect: as the 15th in its order is quoted as the 20th, and the 16th as the 18th. The following are also quoted—the 2d, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 12th. Three poems at least are therefore omitted, besides some transposition of the order in the copy. In the last poem are these lines, which fix the date at 1 Jan. 1579:—

‘ But O, nowe twentye yeare agon, Forsakinge Greece for Albion,
Where thow alone doost rule and raygne,
Empresse and Queene of great brittrayne. ]’

1579. Jan. 1. Our author presented these Partheniades to the Queen.
1558-1579, Authorities differ as to Sir J. Throgmorton's tenure of the or office of the Justice of the County Palatine of Chester. G.
1559-1564. Ormerod, Hist. of Chester, i. 59, 1819, states it to be from 1558-1579. In Chetham Misc. ii. 30, 1856, it is stated to be only from 1559-1564. Probably the former is more correct.
Our author wrote the Knight's Epitaph. See p. 189.

ence, laugh so dissolutely at some rare pastime or sport that

Poets and Poesye, the second of Proportion, and the third

[This important work appeared in 1859, “Printed by Richard Field, dwelling in the Black-Friars, neere Ludgate,” where he was then carrying on the business, to which he had succeeded from marrying Vautrollier's daughter. The authorship of the volume is doubtful, no name appearing in any part of the more than 250 quarto pages, although the writer over and over again mentions and quotes his own poems, and treats of the compositions of nearly all the writers of the day.—J. P. Collier in 'Notes and Queries,' 2d S., xii. 143.]

1589. Feb. 3. A second entry occurs in the Stationers' Co.'s Registers: Rich. Feild. Thart of English Poesie, beinge before entred for Tho. Orwin's copie, and is by his consent now put over to Rich. Field. vjd.
[See for the entry to Orwin, (above): the imprint of the edition, 4to, 1589, is "At London, printed by Richard Field, dwelling in the Black-Friars, neere Ludgate;" and Orwin does not appear to have had any interest in the work. Field, as already stated, was from Stratford-on-Avon, and was the typographer, employed by Shakespeare for his Venus and Adonis, 1593, and Lucrece, 1594; and by Spenser for the edit. of The Faerie Queen, in 1596. *J. 1 Sir JOHN HARRINGTON, in his Preface to Orlando Furioso, in English Heroical verses. London. fol. 1591: thus refers to our Author; and controverts his opinion as to translators being no Poets.

Neither do I suppose it to be greatly behoofull for this purpose, to trouble you with the curious definitions of a Poet and Poesie, and with the subtil distinctions of their sundrie kinds; nor to dispute how high and supernatural the name of a maker is, so christened in English by that vnknowne Godfather, that this last yeare saue one, viz. 1589. set forth a booke called the Arte of English Poetrie: and least of all do I purpose to bestow any long time to argue, whether Plato, Zenophon, and Erasmus, writing fictions and Dialogues in prose, may iustly be called Poets, or whether Lucan writing a story in verse be an historiographer, or whether Mayster Faire translating Virgil, Mayster Golding translating Ouids metamorphosis, and my selfe in this worke that you see, be any more then versifiers, as the same Ignoto termeth all translators: for as for all, or the most part of such questions, I will refer you to Sir Philip Sidney's Apologie [in MS. but not printed when Harrington thus quotes it. It was first published in 1595], who doth handle them right learnedly, or to the forenamed treatise where they are discoursed more largely, and where, as it were a whole receipt of Poetrie is prescribed, with so manie new figures, as would put me in great hope in this age to come, would breed manie excellent Poets; saue for one obseruation that I gather out of the verie same booke. For though the poore gentleman laboreth greatly to proue, or rather to make Poetrie an art, and reciteth as you may see in the plural number, some pluralities of patterns, and parcels of his owne Poetrie, with diuers pieces of Partheniads and hymnes in praise of the most praiseworthy; yet whatsoever he would proue by all these, sure in my poore opinion he doth proue nothing more plainly, then that which M. Sidney and all the learned sort that haue written of it, do pronounce, namely that it is a gift and not an art, I say he proueth it, because making himselfe and so manie others so cunning in the art, yet he sheweth himselfe so slender a gift in it; deseruing to be commended as Martiall praiseth one that he compares to Tully.

2 Mr. Haslewood [Cens. Lit. ii. 40. Ed. 1809] was of opinion, that FRANCIS MERES, M.A., derived from the present work (and especially Bk. I. Chap. 31) the greater portion of his Comparative discourse of our English Poets, with the Greeke, Latine and Italian Poets, at pp. 279-287 of his 'Palladis Tamia, Wits Treasury,' 1598: and that W. VAUGHAN, M.A., in The Golden Grove, 2d Ed. 1608; in Chap. 44, Book III. Of Poetry, and the excellencie thereof: and HENRY PEACHAM, M.A., in The Compleat Gentleman, 1622; in Chap. 10 Of Poetrie, pp. 78-96; also borrowed unacknowledged information from the present work.

Approximate date of birth of the Author.

Sir T. Elyot, in his dedication of The Education or bringinge vp of children, printed in 1535 'to his only entirely beloued syster Margaret Puttenham,' writes, 'I therefore in tymes vacant from busynes and other more serious study, as it were for my solace and recreation, have translated for you this lytell treatise entituled the Education of chyldren, and made by Plutarch the excellent philosopher and mayster of Traiane, moost vertuous and noble of all Emperours. . . . And it shall only suffice me, if I by this littel labour I may cause you myn entirely beloued syster to folowe the intente of Plutarche, in brynginge and inducynge my litell newewes into the trayne and rule of vertue, whereby they shall fynallye attayne to honour (god so disposynge) to the inestimable comforte of theyr naturall parents, and other theyr louynge friendes: and moste specially to the high pleasure of god, commoditie and profite of theyr country. Thus hartily fare ye well, and kepe with you this token of my tender loue to you, which with the vertue and towardnes of your children shall be continually augmented. From London the. xxvii. day of Novembre' [1534 or 1535.]

Can George and Richard Puttenham be these 'newewes' of Sir T. Elyot, for whom he wrote this book: and the children of Sir Thomas' 'only' entirely beloued syster Margaret, married to — Puttenham?]

ix. of No. Tho. Orwyn. Allowed unto him to prynte etc. The Arte of Englishe Poesie in Three Bookes, the first of Poets and Poesye, the second of Proportion, and the third of Ornamente. vjd.

[The most plausible claim [to the authorship] is that of George Puttenham, who had a brother one of the Queen's Yeomen of the Guard, named Richard Puttenham, who was buried at St. Clement Danes, on 2d July 1601. There is extant, under the date of 8 Feb. 1584-5, an order from the Lords of the Queen's Council in the following form, which we give because it has hitherto been passed over, and because it refers to a man of so much literary distinction:—

"The Order of the Lords. —Whereas George Puttenham, gent., hath been a long sutor to her Ma<sup>tie</sup> and us to be recompensed to the value of one thousand pounds, as well in respect that he did incurre so much loss in obeying her Ma<sup>ties</sup> commaundement, as for other causes conteyned in a scedule and order wherunto wee have sett to our hands. Now, at his humble sute and request we (having considered the equitie of the cause, and being desirouse to doe the said suppliant good aid and furtherance in his said sute in respect of his obedience) have ordered (and so require) that Mr. Secretarie in our name (and for the causes above said) doe prefer to her Ma<sup>tie</sup> the humble sute of the said suppliant with this recommendation from us; and that her Ma<sup>tie</sup> may be pleased to rest satisfied with our opinion in the equitie of the cause.

'Tho. Brumley, canc., Robert Leycester,
 H. Hunsden, William Burley, C. Howard,
 James Croftes.'

By a long explanatory paper annexed, it appears that the dispute was between George Puttenham and his brother Richard. From the Book of Decrees of the Court of Requests, we learn that in 28 Eliz., Richard Puttenham was in most distressed circumstances, having been four years in prison, and having had to maintain 'a proud stubborn woman, his wife, in unbridled liberty: he was thus worth no more than 'the simple garment on his back.' These particulars are as new as they are curious, and are derived from the original documents. —Mr. J. P. Collier, in Notes and Queries, 2nd S. xii. 143.]

[Mr. Haslewood in Ancient Critical Essays, i. 1 Ed. 1809, gives the following information:—"In the prerogative court of Canterbury there is a nuncupative will dated the first of September, 1590, of George Puttenham, of London, Esquire, and probably our author, whereby, "First and principallie he bequathed his soull vnto Almighty God, and his bodie to be buried in christian buriall. Item, he gaue and bequeathed vnto Marye Symes, wydowe, his servant, as well for the good service she did him as alsoe for the money which she had laid forth for him, all and singular, his goods, chattels, leases, plate, redie money, lynnens, wollen, brasse, peuter, stuff of houshold, bills, bonds, obligations, and all other his goodes and debts whatsoeuer, due or owinge vnto him. Alsoe his goods moueable or vnmoueable, of what kind nature qualitie or condicion, and in whose hands custodye or possession theye then were in, or remained, as well within his dwellinge howse as in anie other place or places within the realme of England. In the presence of Sebastian Archibould, scrivener: James Clerke, William Johnson, and diuers others." The probate act describes the defunct of Saint Bridgett's, in Fleet Street, London, Esq. There was also a Richard Puttenham, Esquire, whose will accords with the above as a scrivener's form, dated 16 Oct. 1597, he being "prisoner in her Majesty's Bench:" bequeaths all his property to his "verily reported and reputed daughter Katherine Puttenham." Considering the tenor of both Wills, the want of descendants of the name of Puttenham is no longer extraordinary.']

[Harl. MS. 831 is a clearly written copy, apparently of the seventeenth century, entitled—

An apologie, or true defens of her Maiesties honorable and good renoune against all such who haue sought or shall seek to blemish the same, with any iniustice, crueltie, or other unprincely behaviour in any partes of her Maiesties proceedings against the late Scottish Queene, Be it for her first surprinse, imprisonment, process attayneder or death.

By very firme reasons, authorities and examples, provinge that her Maiestie hath done nothing in the said action against the rules of honor or armes or otherwise, not warrantable by the law of God and of man.

Written by George Puttenham to the seruice of her Maiestie and for large satisfaction of all such persons both princely and private, who by ignorance of the case, or partiallitie of mind shall happen to be irresolute and not well satisfied in the said cause.]

1. WILLIAM CAMDEN, in his Remaines of a Greater Worke, concerning Britaine, &c., London, 1605, thus commences the section of Poems:—

'Of the dignity of Poetry much hath beene said by the worthy Sir Philipp Sidney, and by the gentleman which proued that Poets were the first Politicians, the first Philosophers, the first Historiographers.' Apparently Camden did not know who that gentleman was.

2. EDMUND BOLTON left behind him a MS. entitled Hypercritica, a Rule of Judgement for writing or reading our history's, in four addresses: the last of which is entitled Prime Gardens for gathering English: according to the true gage or standard of the Tongue, about 15 or 16 years ago. This address—though not published till 1722 by A. Hall—was undoubtedly written in the reign of James I., probably about 1620, not 1610, as A. Wood thought. The year 1605 should probably be associated with the following remark:—

'Q. Elizabeth's verses, whose which I have seen and read, some exstant in the elegant, witty and artificial Book of the Art of English Poetry, (the Work as the Fame is) of one of her Gentlemen Pensioners, Puttenham, are Princely, as her prose.'—Sect. iv., p. 236, ed. 1722.

This is the earliest trace at present of Puttenham's name being associated with The Arte of English Poesie.

3. In 1614, the second edition of Camden's Remaines, Reviewed, corrected and increased, appeared. It contained a paper of ten pages on The Excellencie of the English tongue, by R[ichard] C[arew] of [St.] Anthony, Esquire, to W[illiam] C[amden].

CAREW, at p. 42, says, 'And in a word, to close vp these proofs of our copiousnesse, looke into our Imitations of all sorts of verses afforded by any other language, and you shall finde that Sir Philipp Sydney, Master Putten- ham, Maister Stainhurst and diuers more haue made vse how farre wee are within compasse of a fare imagined possibilitie in that behalfe'—an allusion to Puttenham more as a versifier than a poetical critic.

This is all the evidence, by any contemporary of either Elizabeth or James.

A. à Wood, following Bolton, gives the following very short account of Puttenham:—A worthy gentleman, his [Dyer's] contemporary, called Puttenham, one of the gentlemen pensioners to qu. Elizabeth, who, according to fame, was author of The Art of English Poesie, accounted in its time an elegant, witty, and artificial book; in which are some of the verses, made by qu. Elizabeth, extant; but whether this Puttenham was bred in Oxon I cannot yet tell. Ath. Oxon. i. 742. Ed. 1813.

- 1 1589. London. Editio princeps: see title on opposite page. This edition has become very scarce. Messrs. Willis and Sotheran, in Bibliotheca Curiosa, 1867, offered a copy at £5, 5s. Mr. Joseph Lilly, in his Bibliotheca Anglo-Curiosa, is now offering a copy at £4, 14s. 6d. He states that copies of this edition sold at Col. Stanley's sale for £21, at Hibbert's for £13, 13s., and at the Roxburghe sale for £16, 5s. 6d.

Three copies of the original edition have been used in preparing the present reprint—Ben Jonson's copy in the Grenville Collection, and another also in the British Museum, (Press-mark 1077. f.): together with a third kindly lent me by J. P. Collier, Esq., F.S.A.

This last copy formerly belonged to Dr. Farmer. Inside its cover, are noted the following prices paid for it, long ago: which strongly contrast with the more recent figures quoted above:—

Sold at Mr. West's auction, No. 1815, for £1, 13s. Egerton, 1788, £2, 2s. While Mr. Collier bought it at Dr. Farmer's sale for £2, 14s.

(b) Issues since the Author's death.

I. As a separate publication.

- 3 10 April 1869. London. 1 vol. 8vo. English Reprints: see title at p. 1.

II. With other works.

- 2 1811-16. Lond. 2 vols. 4to. Ancient Critical Essays: Ed. by JOSEPH HASLEWOOD. Puttenham occupies the whole of the first volume published in 1811. In addition to The Arte of English Poesie is reprinted the Partheniades, from the Cottonian MS.

Mr. Lilly, in offering in his Bibliotheca Anglo-Curiosa, a copy of this edition at £2, 12s. 6d., states, 'Only 200 copies were printed, which were published at £3, 3s. each; but the greater part of them were destroyed at the fire at Mr. Bensley's printing office.'

It may be therefore fairly assumed that there are hardly more than three hundred copies of the present work in existence in any form, anterior to the present edition.

Printer wifheth health and prosperitie, with

*His Booke (right Honorable) comming to my handes, with his bare tittle without any Authours name or any other ordinarie addresse, I doubted how well it might become me to make you a present thereof, seeming by many expresse passages in the same at large, that it was by the Authour intended to our Soueraigne Lady the Queene, and for her recreation and seruice chiefly deuised, in which case to make any other person her highnes partener in the honour of his giuft it could not stand with my dutie, nor be without some preiudice to her Maiesties interest and his merrite. Perceyuing besides the tittle to purport so slender a subiect, as nothing almost could be more discrepant from the grauitie of your yeeres and Honorable function, whose contemplations are euery houre more seriously employed vpon the publicke administration and seruices: I thought it no condigne gratification, nor scarce any good satisfaction for such a person as you. Yet when I considered, that bestowyng vpon your Lordship the first veue of this mine impression (a feat of mine owne simple facultie) it could not scypher her Maiesties honour or prerogatiue in the giuft, nor yet the Authour of his thanks: and seeing the thing it selfe to be a deuice of some noueltie (which commonly giueth euery good thing a speciall grace) and a noueltie so highly tending to the most worthy prayses of her Maiesties most excellent name (deerer to you I dare conceiue them any worldly thing besides) mee thought I could not deuise to haue presented your Lordship any gift more agreeable to your appetite, or fitter for my vocation and abilitie to bestow, your Lordship beyng learned and a louer of learning, my present a Booke and my selfe a printer alwaies ready and desirous to be at your Honourable commaundement. # THE FIRST BOOKE, Of Poets and Poesie.

CHAP. I.

What a Poet and Poesie is, and who may be worthily fayd the most excellent Poet of our time.

Poet is as much to fay as a maker. And our English name well conformes with the Greeke word: for of ποιῆν to make, they call a maker Poeta. Such as (by way of resemblance and reuerently) we may fay of God: who without any trauell to his diuine imagination, made all the world of nought, nor also by any paterne or mould as the Platonicks with their Ideas do phantastically suppose. Euen so the very Poet makes and contriues out of his owne braine, both the verie and matter of his poeme, and not by any foreine copie or example, as doth the translator, who therefore may well be fayd a versifier, but not a Poet. The premises considered, it giueth to the name and profession no smal dignitie and preheminence, aboue all other artificers, Scientificke or Memechanicall. And neuerthelesse without any repugnancie at all, a Poet may in some fort be said a follower or imitator, because he can expresse the true and liuely of euery thing is set before him, and which he taketh in hand to describe: and so in that respect is both a maker and a counterfaior: and Poesie an art not only of making, but also of imitation. And this science in his perfection, can not grow, but by some diuine instinct, the Platonicks call it furor: or by excellencie of nature and complexion: or by great subtiltie of the spirits and wit, or by much experience and obseruation of the world, and course of kinde, or peradventure by all or most part of them. Otherwise how was it possible that Homer being but a poore priuate man, and as some say, in his later age blind, should so exactly set foorth and describe, as if he had bene a most excellent Captaine or Generall, the order and array of battels, the conduct of whole armies, the sieges and assaults of cities and townes? or as some great Princes maiordome and perfect Surueyour in Court, the order, sumptuousnesse and magnificence of royal bankets, feasts, weddings, and enteruewes? or as a Polititian very prudent, and much inured with the priuat and publique affaires, so grauely examine the lawes and ordinances Ciuill, or so profoundly discourse in matters of estate, and formes of all politique regiment? Finally how could he so naturally paint out the speeches, countenance and maners of Princely persons and priuate, to wit, the wrath of Achilles, the magnanimitie of Agamemnon, the prudence of Mene-laüs, the prowesse of Hector, the maiestie of king Priamus, the grauitie of Nestor, the pollicies and eloquence of Vlyffes, the calamities of the distressed Queenes, and valiance of all the Captaines and aduenturous knights in those lamentable warres of Troy? It is therefore of Poets thus to be conceiued, that if they be able to deuise and make all these things of them selues, without any subiect of veritie, that they be (by maner of speech) as creating gods. If they do it by instinct diuine or naturall, then surely much faouored from aboue. If by their experience, then no doubt very wise men. If by any president or paterne layd before them, then truly the most excellent imitators and counterfators of all others. But you (Madame) my most Honored and Gracious: if I should seeme to offer you this my deuise for a discipline and not a delight, I might well be reputed, of all others the most arrogant and iniurious: your selfe being already, of any that I know in our time, the most excellent Poet. Forsooth by your Princely purse fauours and countenance, making in maner what ye list, the poore man rich, the lewd well learned, the coward couragious, and vile both noble and valiant. Then for imitation no lesse, your person as a most cunning counterfator liuely representing Venus in countenance, in life Diana, Pallas for gouernement, and Iuno in all honour and regall magnificence.

CHAP. II.

That there may be an Art of our English Poesie, aswell as there is of the Latine and Greeke.

Then as there was no art in the world till by experience found out: so if Poesie be now an Art, and of al antiquitie hath bene among the Greeks and Latines, and yet were none, vntill by studious persons fashioned and reduced into a method of rules and precepts, then no doubt may there be the like with vs. And if th'art of Poesie be but a skill appertaining to vtterance, why may not the same be with vs aswel as with them, our language being no lesse copious pithie and significatiue then theirs, our conceits the same, and our wits no lesse apt to deuise and imitate then theirs were? If againe Art be but a certaine order of rules prescribed by reason, and gathered by experience, why should not Poesie be a vulgar Art with vs aswel as with the Greeks and Latines, our language admitting no fewer rules and nice diuersities then theirs? but peradventure moe by a peculiar, which our speech hath in many things differing from theirs: and yet in the generall points of that Art, allowed to go in common with them: so as if one point perchance which is their feete whereupon their measures stand, and in deede is all the beautie of their Poesie, and which feete we haue not, nor as yet neuer went about to frame (the nature of our language and wordes not permitting it) we haue in stead thereof twentie other curious points in that skill more then they euer had, by reason of our rime and tunable concords or simphonie, which they neuer obserued. Poesie therefore may be an Art in our vulgar, and that verie methodicall and commendable.

CHAP. III.

How Poets were the first priests, the first prophets, the first Legislators and politicians in the world.

HE profession and vse of Poesie is most ancient from the beginning, and not as manie erroneously suppose, after, but before any ciuill society was among men. For it is written, that Poesie was th'originall cause and occasion of their first assemblies, when before the people remained in the woods and mountains, vagarant and dispersed like the wild beasts, lawlesse and naked, or verie ill clad, and of all good and necessarie prouision for harbour or sustenance vtterly vnfurnished: so as they litle differed for their maner of life, from the very brute beasts of the field. Whereupon it is fayned that Amphion and Orpheus, two Poets of the first ages, one of them, to wit Amphion, builded vp cities, and reared walles with the stones that came in heapes to the sound of his harpe, figuring thereby the mollifying of hard and stonie hearts by his sweete and eloquent perswasion. And Orpheus assembled the wilde beasts to come in heards to harken to his musicke, and by that meanes made them tame, implying thereby, how by his discrete and wholsome lessons vttered in harmonie and with melodious instruments, he brought the rude and sauage people to a more ciuill and orderly life, nothing, as it seemeth, more preuailing or fit to redresse and edifie the cruell and sturdie courage of man then it. And as these two Poets and Linus before them, and Museus also and Hesiodus in Greece and Archadia: so by all likelihood had no Poets done in other places, and in other ages before them, though there be no remembrance left of them, by reason of the Records by some accident of time perished and failing. Poets therefore are of great antiquitie. Then forasmuch as they were the first that entended to the obseruation of nature and her works, and specially of the Celestiall courses, by reason of the continuall motion of the heauens, fearching after the first mouer, and from thence by degrees comming to know and consider of the substances separate and abstract, which we call the diuine intelligences or good Angels (Demonēs) they were the first that instituted sacrifices of placation, with inuocations and worship to them, as to Gods: and inuented and stablished all the rest of the obseruances and ceremonies of religion, and so were the first Priests and ministers of the holy misteries. And because for the better execution of that high charge and function, it behoued them to liue chaste, and in all holines of life, and in continuall studie and contemplation: they came by instinct diuine, and by deepe meditation, and much abstinence (the same asubtling and refining their spirits) to be made apt to receaue visions, both waking and sleeping, which made them vtter prophecies, and foretell things to come. So also were they the first Prophetes or seers, Videntes, for so the Scripture tearmeth them in Latine after the Hebrue word, and all the oracles and answers of the gods were giuen in meeter or verse, and published to the people by their direction. And for that they were aged and graue men, and of much wisedome and experience in th'affaires of the world, they were the first lawmakers to the people, and the first polititiens, deuising all expedient meanes for th'establishment of Common wealth, to hold and containe the people in order and duety by force and vertue of good and wholesome lawes, made for the pre-feruation of the publique peace and tranquillitie. The same peradventure not purposely intended, but greatly furthered by the aw of their gods, and such scruple of conscience, as the terrors of their late inuented religion had led them into.

CHAP. IIII.

How Poets were the first Philosophers, the first Astronomers and Historiographers and Oratours and Musitiens of the world.

Vtterance also and language is giuen by nature to man for perswasion of others, and aide of them selues, I meane the first abilitie to speake. For speech it selfe is artificiall and made by man, and the more pleasing it is, the more it preuaileth to such purpose as it is intended for: but speech by meeter is a kind of vtterance, more cleanly couched and more delicate to the eare then prose is, because it is more currant and slipper vpon the tongue, and withal tunable and melodious, as a kind of Musicke, and therefore may be tearmed a musicall speech or vtterance, which cannot but please the hearer very well. Another cause is, for that is briefer and more compendious, and easier to beare away and be retained in memorie, then that which is contained in multitude of words and full of tedious ambage and long periods. It is beside a maner of vtterance more eloquent and rethoricall then the ordinarie prose, which we vse in our daily talke: because it is decked and fet out with all maner of fresh colours and figures, which maketh that it sooner inuegleth the iudgement of man, and carieth his opinion this way and that, whither soeuer the heart by impressiion of the eare shalbe most affectionatly bent and directed. The vtterance in prose is not of so great efficacie, because not only it is dayly vsed, and by that occasion the eare is ouerglutted with it, but is also not so voluble and slipper vpon the tong, being wide and lose, and nothing numerous, nor contriued into measures, and sounded with so gallant and harmonical accents, nor in fine allowed that figuratiue conueyance, nor so great licence in choife of words and phrafes as meeter is. So as the Poets were alfo from the beginning the beft perfwaders and their eloquence the firft Rethoricke of the world. Euen fo it became that the high mysteries of the gods fhould be reuealed and taught, by a maner of vtterance and language of extraordinarie phrafe, and briefe and compendious, and aboue al others fweet and ciuill as the Metricall is. The fame alfo was meeteft to register the liues and noble gefts of Princes, and of the great Monarkes of the world, and all other the memorable accidents of time: fo as the Poet was alfo the firft hiftoriographer. Then forafmuch as they were the firft obferuers of all naturall caufes and effects in the things generable and corruptible, and from thence mounted vp to fearch after the celeftiall courfes and influences, and yet penetrated further to know the diuine effences and fubftances feperate, as is fayd before, they were the firft Astronomers and Philofophifts and Metaphificks. Finally, becaufe they did altogether endeuor them felues to reduce the life of man to a certaine method of good maners, and made the firft differences betweene vertue and vice, and then tempered all thefe knowledges and skillles with the exercife of a delectable Muficke by melodious instruments, which withall ferued them to delight their hearers, and to call the people together by admiration, to a plaufible and vertuous conuerfation, therefore were they the firft Philofophers Ethick, and the firft artificial Muficiens of the world. Such was Linus, Orpheus, Amphion and Mufeus the moft ancient Poets and Philofophers, of whom there is left any memorie by the prophane writers. King Dauid alfo and Salomon his fonne and many other of the holy Prophets wrate in meeters, and vfed to fing them to the harpe, although to many of vs ignorant of the Hebrue language and phrafe, and not obferuing it, the fame feeme but a profe. It can not bee therefore that anie fcorne or indignitie fhould iuftly be offered to fo noble, profitable, ancient and diuine a fciencie as Poefie is.

CHAP. V.

How the wilde and sauage people vsed a naturall Poesie in versicle and rime as our vulgar is.

AND the Greeke and Latine Poesie was by verse numerous and metricall, running vpon pleasant feete, sometmes swift, sometime slow (their words very aptly seruing that purpose) but without any rime or tunable concord in th'end of their verses, as we and all other nations now vse. But the Hebrues and Chaldees who were more ancient then the Greekes, did not only vse a metricall Poesie, but also with the same a maner of rime, as hath bene of late obserued by learned men. Wherby it appeareth, that our vulgar running Poesie was common to all the nations of the world besides, whom the Latines and Greekes in speciall called barbarous. So as it was notwithstanding the first and most ancient Poesie, and the most vniuersall, which two points do otherwise giue to all humane inuentions and affaires no small credit. This is proued by certificate of marchants and trauellers, who by late nauigations haue surueyed the whole world, and discovered large countries and strange peoples wild and sauage, affirming that the American, the Perusine and the very Canniball, do sing and also say, their highest and holiest matters in certaine riming versicles and not in prose, which proues also that our maner of vulgar Poesie is more ancient then the artificiall of the Greeks and Latines, ours comming by instinct of nature, which was before Art or obseruation, and vsed with the sauage and vnciuill, who were before all science or ciuilitie, euen as the naked by prioritie of time is before the clothed, and the ignorant before the learned. The naturall Poesie therefore being aided and amended by Art, and not vtterly altered or obscured, but some signe left of it, (as the Greekes and Latines haue left none) is no lesse to be allowed and commended then theirs.

CHAP. VI.

How the riming Poesie came first to the Grecians and Latines, and had altered and almost spilt their maner of Poesie.

BVt it came to passe, when fortune fled farre from the Greekes and Latines, and that their townes florished no more in traficke, nor their Vniuersities in learning as they had done continuing those Monarchies: the barbarous conquerers inuading them with innumerable swarmes of strange nations, the Poesie metricall of the Grecians and Latines came to be much corrupted and altered, in so much as there were times that the very Greekes and Latines themselues tooke pleasure in Riming verses, and vsed it as a rare and gallant thing: Yea their Oratours profes nor the Doctours Sermons were acceptable to Princes nor yet to the common people vnlesse it went in manner of tunable rime or metricall sentences, as appeares by many of the auncient writers, about that time and since. And the great Princes, and Popes, and Sultans would one salute and greet an other sometime in frendship and sport, sometime in earnest and enmitie by ryming verses, and nothing seemed clerkly done, but must be done in ryme: Whereof we finde diuers examples from the time of th'Emperours Gracian and Valentinian downwards: For then aboutes began the declination of the Romain Empire, by the notable inundations of the Hunnes and Vandalles in Europe, vnder the conduict of Totila and Atila and other their generalles. This brought the ryming Poesie in grace, and made it preuaile in Italie and Greece (their owne long time cast aside, and almost neglected) till after many yeares that the peace of Italie and of th'Empire Occidentall reuiued new clerkes, who recouering and perusing the bookes and studies of the ciuiler ages, restored all maner of arts, and that of the Greeke and Latine Poesie withall into their former puritie and netnes. Which neuerthelesse did not so preuaile, but that the ryming Poesie of the Barbarians remained still in his reputation, that one in the schole, this other in Courts of Princes more ordinary and allowable.

CHAP. VII.

How in the time of Charlemaine and many yeares after him the Latine Poetes wrote in ryme.

AND this appeareth evidently by the workes of many learned men, who wrote about the time of Charlemaines raigne in the Empire Occidentall, where the Christian Religion, became through the excessiue authoritie of Popes, and deepe deuotion of Princes strongly fortified and established by erection of orders Monastical, in which many simple clerks for deuotion fake and sanctitie were receiued more then for any learning, by which occasion and the solitarinesse of their life, waxing studious without discipline or instruction by any good methode, some of them grew to be historiographers, some Poets, and following either the barbarous rudenes of the time, or els their own idle inuentions, all that they wrote to the fauor or prayse of Princes, they did it in such maner of minstrelsie, and thought themselues no small fooles, when they could make their verses goe all in ryme as did the schoole of Salerne, dedicating their booke of medicinall rules vnto our king of England, with this beginning.

*Anglorum Rege scripsit tota schoia Salerni
Si vis incolumem, si vis te reddere sanum
Curas tolle graues, irasci crede prophanum
Nec retine ventrem nec stringas fortiter a num.*

And all therest that follow throughout the whole booke more curiously then cleanly, neuerthelesse very well to the purpose of their arte. In the same time king Edward the iij. him selfe quartering the Armes of England and France, did discouer his pretence and clayme to the Crowne of Fraunce, in these ryming verses.

Rex sum regnorum bina ratione duorum Anglorum regno sum rex ego iure paterno

Matris iure quidem Francorum nuncupor idem Hinc est armorum variatio facta meorum.

Which verses Phillip de Valois then possessing the Crowne as next heire male by pretexte of the law Salique, and holding out Edward the third, answered in these other of as good stufte.

*Prædo regnorum qui diceris esse duorum
Regno materno priuaberis atque paterno
Prolis ius nullum ubi matris non fuit vllum
Hinc est armorum variatio stulta tuorum.*

It is found written of Pope Lucius, for his great auarice and tyranny vsed ouer the Clergy thus in ryming verses.

*Lucius est piscis rex et tyrannus aquarum
A quo discordat Lucius iste parum
Deorat hic homines, his piscibus insidiatur
Efurit hic semper hic aliquando fatur
Amborum vitam si laus æquata notaret
Plus rationis habet qui ratione caret.*

And as this was vsed in the greatest and gayest matters of Princes and Popes by the idle inuention of Monasticall men then rainging al in their superlatiue. So did euery scho-ler and secular clerke or versifier, when he wrote any short poeme or matter of good lesion put it in ryme, whereby it came to passe that all your old Prouerbes and common sayinges, which they would haue plaufible to the reader and easie to remember and beare away, were of that sorte as these.

*In mundo mira faciunt duo nummus et ira

And this verse in disprays of the Courtiers life following the Court of Rome.

Vita palatina dura est animæque ruina.

And these written by a noble learned man.

*Ire redire sequi regum sublimia castra
Eximius status est, sed non sic itur ad astra.*

And this other which to the great iniurie of all women was written (no doubt by some forlorne louer, or els some old malicious Monke) for one womans fake blemishing the whole sexe.

*Fallere flere nere mentiri nilque tacere
Hæc quinque vere statuit Deus in muliere.*

If I might haue bene his Iudge, I would haue had him for his labour, ferued as Orpheus was by the women of Thrace. His eyes to be picket out with pinnes, for his so deadly belying of them, or worfe handled if worfe could be deuifed. But will ye see how God raifed a reuenger for the filly innocent women, for about the fame ryming age came an honeft ciuill Courtier fomewhat bookifh, and wrate thefe verfes againft the whole rable of Monkes.

*O Monachi veftri stomachi funt amphora Bacchi
Vos eftis Deus eft testis turpiffima peflis.*

Anon after came your secular Prieftes as iolly rymers as the reft, who being fore agreedeued with their Pope Calixtus, for that he had enioyned them from their wiues, and railed as faft againft him.

O bone Calixte totus mundus perodit te Quondam Presbiteri, poterant vxoribus vti Hoc destruxifti, postquam tu Papa fuifti.

Thus what in writing of rymes and regiftring of lyes was the Clergy of that fabulous age wholly occupied.

We finde fome but very few of thefe ryming verfes among the Latines of the ciuiller ages, and thofe rather hapning by chaunce then of any purpose in the writer, as this Distick among the difportes of Ouid.

Quot cælum stellas tot habet tua Roma puellas Pascua quotque hædos tot habet tua Roma Cynædos,

The posteritie taking pleasure in this manner of Simphonie had leasure as it seemes to deuife many other knackes in their versifying that the auncient and ciuill Poets had not vfed before, whereof one was to make euery word of a verfe to begin with the fame letter, as did Hugobald the Monke who made a large poeme to the honour of Carolus Caluus, euery word beginning with C. which was the first letter of the king name thus.

And this was thought no small peece of cunning, being in deed a matter of some difficultie to finde out fo many wordes beginning with one letter as might make a iust volume, though in truth it were but a phantasticall deuise and to no purpose at all more then to make them harmonickall to the rude eares of those barbarous ages.

Another of their pretie inuentions was to make a verse of such wordes as by their nature and manner of construction and situation might be turned backward word by word, and make another perfit verse, but of quite contrary sence as the gibing Monke that wrote of Pope Alexander these two verses.

Laus tua non tua fraus, virtus non copia rerum, Scandere te faciunt hoc decus eximium.

Which if ye will turne backwards they make two other good verses, but of a contrary sence, thus.

*Eximium decus hoc faciunt te scandere, rerum
Copia, non virtus, fraus tua non tua laus.*

And they called it Verse Lyon.

Thus you may see the humors and appetites of men how diuers and changeable they be in liking new fashions, though many tymes worse then the old, and not onely in the manner of their life and vse of their garments, but also in their learnings and arts and specially of their languages.

CHAP. VIII.

In what reputation Poesie and Poets were in old time with Princes and otherwise generally, and how they be now become contemptible and for what causes.

Or the respects aforesayd in all former ages and in the most ciuill countreys and commons wealthes, good Poets and Poesie were highly esteemed and much faouored of the greatest Princes. For prooffe whereof we read how much Amyntas king of Macedonia made of the Tragicall Poet Euripides. And the Athenians of Sophocles. In what price the noble poemes of Homer were holden with Alexander the great, in so much as euery night they were layd vnder his pillow, and by day were carried in the rich iewell cofer of Darius lately before vanquished by him in battaile. And not onely Homer the father and Prince of the Poets was so honored by him, but for his sake all other meaner Poets, in so much as Cherillus one no very great good Poet had for euery verse well made a Phillips noble of gold, amounting in value to an angell English, and so for euery hundreth verses (which a cleanly pen could speedely dispatch) he had a hundred angels. And since Alexander the great how Theocritus the Greeke poet was fauored by Tholomee king of Egipt and Queene Berenice his wife, Ennius likewise by Scipio Prince of the Romaines, Virgill also by th'Emperour Augustus. And in later times how much were Iehan de Mehune and Guillaume de Loris made of by the French kinges, and Geffrey Chaucer father of our English Poets by Richard the second, who as it was supposed gaue him the maner of new Holme in Oxfordshire. And Gouuer to Henry the fourth, and Harding to Edvard the fourth. Also how Francis the Frenche king made Sangelais, Salmonius, Macrinus, and Clement Marot of his priuy Chamber for their excellent skill in vulgare and Latine Poesie. And king Henry the 8. her Maiesties father for a few Pfalmes of Dauid turned into English meetre by Sternhold, made him groome of his priuy chamber, and gaue him many other good gifts. And one Gray what good estimation did he grow vnto with the same king Henry, and afterward with the Duke of Sommerfet Protec<sup>t</sup>our, for making certaine merry Ballades, whereof one chiefly was The hunte it [is?] vp, the hunte is vp. And Queene Mary his daughter for one Epithalamie or nuptiall song made by Vargas a Spanish Poet at her mariage with king Phillip in Winchester gaue him during his life two hundred Crownes pension: nor this reputation was giuen them in auncient times altogether in respect that Poesie was a delicate arte, and the Poets them selues cunning Princepleasers, but for that also they were thought for their vniuerfall knowledge to be very sufficient men for the greatest charges in their common wealthes, were it for counsell or for conduct, whereby no man neede to doubt but that both skilles may very well concurre and be most excellent in one person. For we finde that Iulius Cæsar the first Emperour and a most noble Captaine, was not onely the most eloquent Orator of his time, but also a very good Poet, though none of his doings therein be now extant. And Quintus Catulus a good Poet, and Cornelius Gallus treasurer of Egipt, and Horace the most delicate of all the Romain Lyrickes, was thought meete and by many letters of great instance prouoked to be Secretarie of estate to Augustus th'Emperour, which neuerthelesse he refused for his vnhealthfulnessie sake, and being a quiet mynded man and nothing ambitious of glory: non voluit accedere ad Rempublicam, as it is reported. And Ennius the Latine Poet was not as some perchance thinke, onely fauored by Scipio the Africane for his good making of verses, but vsed as his familiar and Counsellor in the warres for his great knowledge and amiable conuersation. And long before that Antimenides and other Greeke Poets, as Aristotle reportes in his Politiques, had charge in the warres. And Firtæus the Poet being also a lame man and halting vpon one legge, was chosen by the Oracle of the gods from the Athenians to be generall of the Lacedemonians armie, not for his Poetrie, but for his wisedome and graue persuasions, and subtile Stratagemes whereby he had the victory ouer his enemies. So as the Poets seemed to haue skill not onely in the subtilties of their arte, but also to be meete for all maner of functions ciuill and martiall, euen as they found fauour of the times they liued in, infomuch as their credit and estimation generally was not small. But in these dayes (although some learned Princes may take delight in them) yet vniuersally it is not so. For as well Poets as Poesie are despised, and the name become, of honorable infamous, subiect to scorne and derision, and rather a reproch than a prayse to any that vseth it: for commonly who so is studious in th'Arte or shewes him selfe excellent in it, they call him in disdayne a phantasticall: and a light headed or phantastical man (by conuersion) they call a Poet. And this proceedes through the barbarous ignoraunce of the time, and pride of many Gentlemen, and others, whose grosse heads not being brought vp or acquainted with any excellent Arte, nor able to contriue, or in manner conceiue any matter of subtiltie in any businesse or science, they doe deride and scorne it in all others as superfluous knowledges and vayne sciences, and whatfoeuer deuise be of rare inuention they terme it phantasticall, construing it to the worst side: and among men such as be modest and graue, and of litle conuersion, nor delighted in the busie life and vayne ridiculous actions of the popular, they call him in scorne a Philosopher or Poet, as much to say as a phantastical man, very iniuriously (God wot) and to the manifestation of their own ignoraunce, not making difference betwixt termes. For as the euill and vicious disposition of the braine hinders the sounde iudgement and discourse of man with busie and disordered phantasies, for which cause the Greekes call him φαντάσιος, so is that part being well affected, not onely nothing disorderly or confused with any monstrous imaginations or conceits, but very formall, and in his much multiformitie uniforme, that is well proportioned, and so passing cleare, that by it as by a glasse or mirrour, are represented vnto the soule all maner of bewtifull visions, whereby the inuentiue parte of the mynde is so much holpen, as without it no man could deuise any new or rare thing: and where it is not excellent in his kind, there could be no politique Captaine, nor any witty enginer or cunning artificer, nor yet any law maker or counsellor of deepe discourse, yea the Prince of Philosophers flickes not to say animam non intelligere absque phantasmate which text to another purpose Alexander Aphrodiscus well noteth, as learned men know. And this phantasie may be resembled to a glasse as hath bene sayd, whereof there be many tempers and manner of makes, as the perspectiues doe acknowledge, for some be false glasses and shew things otherwise than they be in deede, and others right as they be in deede, neither fairer nor fouler, nor greater nor smaller. There be againe of these glasses that shew things exceeding faire and comely, others that shew figures very monstrous and illfaored. Euen so is the phantasticall part of man (if it be not disordered) a representer of the best, most comely and bewtifull images or apparances of things to the soule and according to their very truth. If otherwise, then doth it breede Chimeres and monsters in mans imaginations, and not onely in his imaginations, but also in all his ordinarie actions and life which ensues. Wherefore such persons as be illuminated with the brightest irradiations of knowledge and of the veritie and due proportion of things, they are called by the learned men not phantastici but euphantasiote, and of this sorte of phantasie are all good Poets, notable Captaines stratagematique, all cunning artificers and enginers, all Legislators Politiciens and Counsellours of estate, in whose exercises the inuentiue part is most employed and is to the found and true iudgement of man most needful. This diuerfitie in the termes perchance euery man hath not noted, and thus much be said in defence of the Poets honour, to the end no noble and generous minde be discomforted in the studie thereof, the rather for that worthy and honorable memoriall of that noble woman twise French Queene, Lady Anne of Britaine, wife first to king Charles the viij. and after to Lewes the xij. who passing one day from her lodging toward the kinges side, saw in a gallerie Maister Allaine Chartier the kings Secretarie, an excellent maker or Poet leaning on a tables end a sleepe, and stooped downe to kisse him, faying thus in all their hearings, we may not of Princely courtesie passe by and not honor with our kisse the mouth from whence so many sweete ditties and golden poems haue issued. But me thinks at these words I heare some smilingly say, I would be loath to lacke liuing of my own till the Prince gaue me a maner of new

Elme for my riming. And another to say I haue read that the Lady Cynthia came once downe out of her skye to kisse the faire yong lad Endimion as he lay a sleep: and many noble Queenes that haue bestowed kiffes vpon their Princes paramours, but neuer vpon any Poets. The third me thinks shruggingly faith, I kept not to sit sleeping with my Poesie till a Queene came and kiffed me. But what of all this? Princes may giue a good Poet such conuenient countenance and also benefite as are due to an excellent artificer, though they neither kisse nor cokes them, and the discret Poet lookes for no such extraordinarie fauours, and aswell doth he honour by his pen the iust, liberall, or magnanimous Prince, as the valiaunt, amiable or bewtifull though they be euery one of them the good giftes of God. So it seemes not altogether the scorne and ordinarie disgrace offered vnto Poets at these dayes, is cause why few Gentlemen do delight in the Art, but for that liberalitie, is come to fayle in Princes, who for their largesse were wont to be accompted th'onely patrons of learning, and first founders of all excellent artificers. Besides it is not perceiued, that Princes them selues do take any pleasure in this science, by whose example the subiect is commonly led, and allured to all delights and exercises be they good or bad, according to the graue saying of the historian. Rex multitudinem religione impleuit, quæ semper regenti similis est. And peradventure in this iron and malicious age of ours, Princes are lesse delighted in it, being ouer earnestly bent and affected to the affaires of Empire and ambition, whereby they are as it were inforced to indeuour them selues to armes and practises of hostilitie, or to entend to the right pollicing of their states, and haue not one houre to bestow vpon any other ciuill or delectable Art of naturall or morall doctrine: nor scarce any leifure to thincke one good thought in perfect and godly contemplation, whereby their troubled mindes might be moderated and brought to tranquillitie. So as, it is hard to find in these dayes of noblemen or gentlemen any good Mathematician, or excellent Musitian, or notable Philosopher, or els a cunning Poet: becaufe we find few great Princes much delighted in the fame studies. Now alfo of fuch among the Nobilitie or gentry as be very well feene in many laudable sciences, and eſpecially in making or Poesie, it is fo come to paſſe that they haue no courage to write and if they haue, yet are they loath to be a knowen of their ſkill. So as I know very many notable Gentlemen in the Court that haue written commendably and ſuppreſſed it agayne, or els ſuffred it to be publiſht without their owne names to it: as if it were a discredit for a Gentleman, to ſeeme learned, and to ſhew him ſelfe amorous of any good Art. In other ages it was not ſo, for we read that Kinges and Princes haue written great volumes and publiſht them vnder their owne regall titles. As to begin with Salomon the wiſeſt of Kings, Iulius Cæſar the greateſt of Emperours, Hermes Trimegiſtus the holieſt of Prieſtes and Prophetes, Euax king of Arabia wrote a booke of precious ſtones in verſe, Prince Auicenna of Phiſicke and Philoſophie, Alphonſus king of Spaine his Aſtronomicall Tables, Almanſor a king of Marrocco diuerſe Philoſophicall workes, and by their regall example our late ſoueraigne Lord king Henry the eight wraite a booke in defence of his faith, then perſwaded that it was the true and Apoſtolicall doctrine, though it hath appeared otherwiſe ſince, yet his honour and learned zeale was nothing leſſe to be allowed. Queenes alſo haue bene knowen ſtudious, and to write large volumes, as Lady Margaret of Fraunce Queene of Nauarre in our time. But of all others the Emperour Nero was ſo well learned in Muſique and Poesie, as when he was taken by order of the Senate and appointed to dye, he offered violence to him ſelfe and ſayd, O quantus artifex perco! as much as to ſay, as, how is it poſſible a man of ſuch ſcience and learning as my ſelfe, ſhould come to this ſhamefull death? Th'emperour Oclavian being made executor to Virgill, who had left by his laſt will and teſta-ment, that his bookes of the Æneidos should be committed to the fire as things not perfited by him, made his excufe for infringing the deads will, by a number of verses most excellently written, whereof these are part.

Frangatur potiùs legum veneranda potestas, Quàm tot congestos noctesque diésque labores

Hauferit vna dies. And put his name to them.

And before him his vnclé and father adoptiue Iulius Cæsar, was not ashamed to publish vnder his owne name, his Commentaries of the French and Britaine warres. Since therefore so many noble Emperours, Kings and Princes haue bene studious of Poesie and other ciuill arts, and not ashamed to bewray their skills in the same, let none other meaner person despise learning, nor (whether it be in prose or in Poesie, if they them selues be able to write, or haue written any thing well or of rare inuention) be any whit squeimish to let it be publisht vnder their names, for reason serues it, and modestie doth not repugne.

CHAP. IX.

How Poesie should not be employed vpon vayne conceits or vicious or infamous.

Herefore the Nobilitie and dignitie of the Art considered aswell by vniuersalitie as antiquitie and the naturall excellence of it selfe, Poesie ought not to be abased and employed vpon any vnworthy matter and subiect, nor vsed to vaine purposes, which neuerthelesse is dayly seene, and that is to vtter conceits infamous and vicious or ridiculous and foolish, or of no good example and doctrine. Albeit in merry matters (not vnhonest) being vsed for mans solace and recreation it may be well allowed, for as I said before, Poesie is a pleasant maner of vtterance varying from the ordinarie of purpose to refresh the mynde by the eares delight. Poesie also is not only laudable, because I said it was a metricall speach vsed by the first men, but because it is a metricall speach corrected and reformed by discret iudgements, and with no lesse cunning and curiositie then the Greeke and Latine Poesie, and by Art bewtified and adorned, and brought far from the primitiue rudenesse of the first inuentors, otherwise it may be sayd to me that Adam and Eues apernes were the gayest garmentes, because they were the first, and the shepheardes tente or pauillion, the best housing, because it was the most auncient and most vniuerfall: which I would not haue so taken, for it is not my meaning but that Art and cunning concurring with nature, antiquitie and vniuersalitie, in things indifferent, and not euill, doe make them more laudable. And right so our vulgar riming Poesie, being by good wittes brought to that perfection we see, is worthily to be preferred before any other maner of vtterance in prose, for such vse and to such purpose as it is ordained, and shall hereafter be set downe more particularly.

CHAP. X.

HAuing sufficiently sayd of the dignitie of Poets and Poesie, now it is tyme to speake of the matter or subiect of Poesie, which to myne intent is, what soeuer wittie and delicate conceit of man meet or worthy to be put in written verse, for any necessary vse of the present time, or good instruction of the posteritie. But the chief and principall is: the laud honour and glory of the immortall gods (I speake now in phrase of the Gentiles.) Secondly the worthy gests of noble Princes: the memoriall and registry of all great fortunes, the praise of vertue and reproofe of vice, the instruction of morall doctrines, the reuealing of sciences naturall and other profitable Arts, the redresse of boistrous and sturdie courages by perswasion, the consolation and repose of temperate myndes, finally the common solace of mankind in all his trauails and cares of this transitorie life. And in this last fort being vsed for recreation onely, may allowably beare matter not alwayes of the graueſt, or of any great commoditie or profit, but rather in ſome fort, vaine, diffolute, or wanton, ſo it be not very ſcandalous and of euill example. But as our intent is to make this Art vulgar for all Engliſh mens vſe, and therefore are of neceſſitie to ſet downe the principal rules therein to be obſerued: ſo in mine opinion it is no leſſe expedient to touch briefly all the chief points of this auncient Poefie of the Greeks and Latines, ſo far forth as it conformeth with ours. So as it may be knowen what we hold of them as borrowed, and what as of our owne peculiar. Wherefore now that we haue ſaid, what is the matter of Poefie, we will declare the manner and formes of poemmes vſed by the auncients.

CHAP. XI.

AS the matter of Poefie is diuers, ſo was the forme of their poemmes and maner of writing, for all of them wrote not in one fort, euen as all of them wrote not vpon one matter. Neither was euery Poet alike cunning in all as in ſome one kinde of Poefie, nor vttered with like felicitie. But wherein any one moſt excelled, thereof he tooke a furname, as to be called a Poet Heroick, Lyrick, Elegiack, Epigrammatiſt or otherwiſe. Such therefore as gaue themſelues to write long histories of the noble geſts of kings and great Princes entermedling the dealings of the gods, halfe gods or Heroes of the gentiles, and the great and waighty conſequences of peace and warre, they called Poets Heroick, whereof Homer was chief and moſt auncient among the Greeks, Virgill among the Latines: Others who more delighted to write ſongs or ballads of pleaſure, to be ſong with the voice, and to the harpe, lute, or citheron and ſuch other muſical, inſtruments, they were called melodious Poets [melici] or by a more common name Lirique Poets, of which sort was Pindarus, Anacreon and Callimachus with others among the Greeks: Horace and Catullus among the Latines. There were an other sort, who fought the fauor of faire Ladies, and coueted to bemone their estates at large, and the perplexities of loue in a certain pitious verfe called Elegie, and thence were called Eligiack: such among the Latines were Ouid, Tibullus, and Propertius. There were also Poets that wrote onely for the stage, I meane playes and interludes, to rec[r]eate the people with matters of disporte, and to that intent did fet forth in shewes pageants, accompanied with speach the common behaiours and maner of life of priuate persons, and such as were the meaner sort of men, and they were called Comicall Poets, of whom among the Greekes Menander and Arislophanes were most excellent, with the Latines Terence and Plautus. Besides those Poets Comick there were other who serued also the stage, but medled not with so base matters: For they fet forth the dolefull falles of infortunate and afflicted Princes, and were called Poets Tragicall. Such were Euripides and Sophocles with the Greeks, Seneca among the Latines. There were yet others who mounted nothing so high as any of them both, but in base and humble stile by maner of Dialogue, vttered the priuate and familiar talke of the meanest sort of men, as shepheards, heywards and such like, such was among the Greekes Theocritus: and Virgill among the Latines, their poems were named Eglogues or shepheardly talke. There was yet another kind of Poet, who intended to taxe the common abuses and vice of the people in rough and bitter speaches, and their inuectiues were called Satyres, and them selues Satyr-icques. Such were Lucilius, Iuuenall and Persius among the Latines, and with vs he that wrote the booke called Piers plowman. Others of a more fine and pleafant head were giuen wholly to taunting and scoffing at vndecent things, and in short poemmes vttered pretie merry conceits, and these men were called Epigram- matistes. There were others that for the peoples good instruction, and triall of their owne witts vsed in places of great assembly, to say by rote numbers of short and sententious meetres, very pithie and of good edification, and thereupon were called Poets Mimistes: as who would say, imitable and meet to be followed for their wise and graue lessons. There was another kind of poeme, inuented onely to make sport, and to refresh the company with a maner of buffonry or counterfaying of merry speeches, conuerting all that which they had hard spoken before, to a certaine derision by a quite contrary sence, and this was done, when Comedies or Tragedies were a playing, and that betweene the actes when the players went to make ready for another, there was great silence, and the people waxt weary, then came in these maner of conteraite vices, they were called Pantomimi, and all that had before bene sayd, or great part of it, they gaue a crosse construction to it very ridiculouly. Thus haue you how the names of the Poets were giuen them by the formes of their poemes and maner of writing.

CHAP. XII.

In what forme of Poesie the gods of the Gentiles were prayed and honored.

He gods of the Gentiles were honoured by their Poetes in hymnes, which is an extraordinarie and diuine praise, extolling and magnifying them for their great powers and excellencie of nature in the highest degree of laude, and yet therein their Poets were after a sort restrained: so as they could not with their credit vntruly praise their owne gods, or vse in their lauds any maner of grosse adulation or vnueritable report. For in any writer vntruth and flatterie are counted most great reproches. Wherefore to praise the gods of the Gentiles, for that by authoritie of their owne fabulous records, they had fathers and mothers, and kinred and allies, and wiues and concubines : the Poets first commended them by their genealogies or pedegrees, their mariages and aliances, their notable exploits in the world for the behoofe of mankind, and yet as I sayd before, none otherwise then the truth of their owne memorials might beare, and in such fort as it might be well auouched by their old written reports, though in very deede they were not from the beginning all historically true, and many of them verie fictions, and such of them as were true, were grounded vpon some part of an historie or matter of veritie, the rest altogether figuratiue and misticall, couertly applied to some morall or natural sence, as Cicero setteth it foorth in his bookes de natura deorum. For to say that Iupiter was sonne to Saturne, and that he married his owne sister Iuno, might be true, for such was the guise of all great Princes in the Orientall part of the world both at those dayes and now is. Againe that he loued Danae, Europa, Leda, Calisto and other faire Ladies daughters to kings, besides many meaner women, it is likely enough, because he was reported to be a very incontinent person, and giuen ouer to his lustes, as are for the most part all the greatest Princes, but that he should be the highest god in heauen, or that he should thunder and lighten, and do manie other things very vnnaturally and absurdly : also that Saturnus should geld his father Celius, to th'intent to make him vnable to get any moe children, and other such matters as are reported by them, it seemeth to be some wittie deuise and fiction made for a purpose, or a very noble and impudent lye, which could not be reasonably suspected by the Poets, who were otherwise discreete and graue men, and teachers of wisdome to others. Therefore either to transgresse the rules of their primitiue records, or to seeke to giue their gods honour by belying them (otherwise then in that sence which I haue alledged) had bene a signe not onely of an vnskilfull Poet, but also of a very impudent and leude man. For vntrue praise neuer giueth any true reputation. But with vs Christians, who be better disciplined, and do acknowledge but one God Almighty, euerlasting, and in euery respect selfe suffizant [autharcos] reposed in all perfect rest and soueraigne blisse, not needing or exacting any forreine helpe or good. To him we can not exhibit ouermuch praise, nor belye him any wayes, vnlesse it be in abasing his excellencie by scarcitie of praise, or by misconceauing his diuine nature, weening to praise him, if we impute to him such vaine delights and peeuish affections, as commonly the frailest men are reprobued for. Namely to make him ambitious of honour, ialous and difficult in his worships, terrible, angrie, vindicatiue, a louer, a hater, a pitier, and indigent of mans worships: finally so passionate as in effect he shold be altogether Anthropopathis. To the gods of the Gentiles they might well attribute these infirmities, for they were but the children of men, great Princes and famous in the world, and not for any other respect diuine, then by some resemblance of vertue they had to do good, and to benefite many. So as to the God of the Christians, such diuine praise might be verified: to th'other gods none, but figuratiuely or in misticall sense as hath bene said. In which sort the ancient Poets did in deede giue them great honors and praifes, and made to them sacrifices, and offred them oblations of fundry fortes, euen as the people were taught and perswaded by such placations and worships to receaue any helpe, comfort or benefite to them selues, their wiues, children, possessions or goods. For if that opinion were not, who would acknowledge any God? the verie Etimologie of the name with vs of the North partes of the world declaring plainely the nature of the attribute, which is all one as if we sayd good, [bonus] or a giuer of good things. Therefore the Gentiles prayed for peace to the goddesse Pallas: for warre (such as thriued by it) to the god Mars: for honor and empire to the god Iupiter: for riches and wealth to Pluto: for eloquence and gayne to Mercurie: for safe nauigation to Neptune: for faire weather and prosperous windes to Eolus : for skill in musick and leechcraft to Apollo : for free life and chastitie to Diana : for bewtie and good grace, as also for issue and prosperitie in loue to Venus : for plenty of crop and come to Ceres : for seasonable vintage to Bacchus : and for other things to others. So many things as they could imagine good and desirable, and to so many gods as they supposed to be authors thereof, in so much as Fortune was made a goddesse, and the feuer quartaine had her aulters, such blindnes and ignorance raigned in the harts of men at that time, and whereof it first proceeded and grew, besides th'opinion hath bene giuen, appeareth more at large in our bookes of Ierotechni, the matter being of another consideration then to be treated of in this worke. And these hymnes to the gods was the first forme of Poesie and the highest and the stateliest, and they were song by the Poets as priests, and by the people or whole congregation as we sing in our Churchs the Psalmes of Dauid, but they did it commonly in some shadie groues of tall tymber trees : In which places they reared aulters of green turfe, and bestrewed them all ouer with flowers, and vpon them offred their oblations and made their bloody sacrifices, (for no kinde of gift can be dearer then life) of such quick cattaille, as euery god was in their conceit most delighted in, or in some other respect most fit for the misterie : temples or churches or other chappels then these they had none at those dayes.

CHAP. XIII.

In what forme of Poesie vice and the common abuses of mans life was reprehended.

Some perchance would thinke that next after the praise and honoring of their gods, should commence the worshippinges and praise of good men, and specially of great Princes and gouernours of the earth in foueraignety and function next vnto the gods. But it is not so, for before that came to passe, the Poets or holy Priests, chiefly studied the rebuke of vice, and to carpe at the common abuses, such as were most offensive to the publique and priuate, for as yet for lacke of good ciuility and wholesome doctrines, there was greater store of lewde lourdaines then of wise and learned Lords, or of noble and vertuous Princes and gouernours. So as next after the honours exhibited to their gods, the Poets finding in man generally much to reprove and litle to praise, made certaine poems in plaine meetres, more like to sermons or preachings then otherwise, and when the people were assembled together in those hallowed places dedicate to their gods, because they had yet no large halles or places of conuenticle, nor had any other correction of their faults, but such as rested onely in rebukes of wise and graue men, such as at these dayes make the people ashamed rather then afeared, the said auncient Poets vsed for that purpose, three kinds of poems reprehensue, to wit, the Satyre, the Comedie, and the Tragedie: and the first and most bitter inuectiue against vice and vicious men, was the Satyre: which to th'intent their bitterness should breede none ill will, either to the Poets, or to the recitours (which could not haue bene chosen if they had bene openly knowen) and besides to make their admonitions and reproofs seeme grauer and of more efficacie, they made wise as if the gods of the woods, whom they called Satyres or Siluanes, should appeare and recite those verses of rebuke, whereas in deede they were but disguised persons vnder the shape of Satyres as who would say, these terrene and base gods being conuersant with mans affaires, and spiers out of all their secret faults: had some great care ouer man, and desired by good admonitions to reforme the euill of their life, and to bring the bad to amendment by those kinde of preachings, whereupon the Poets inuentours of the deuise were called Satyristes.

CHAP. XIII.

How vice was afterward reprov'd by two other maner of poems, better reformed then the Satyre, whereof the first was Comedy, the second Tragedie.

BVt when these maner of solitary speaches and recitals of rebuke, vttered by the rurall gods out of bushes and briers, seemed not to the finer heads sufficiently perswasive, nor so popular as if it were reduced into action of many persons, or by many voyces liuely represented to the eare and eye, so as a man might thinke it were euen now a doing. The Poets deuised to haue many parts played at once by two or three or foure persons, that debated the matters of the world, fometimes of their owne priuate affaires, fometimes of their neighbours, but neuer meddling with any Princes matters nor such high personages, but commonly of marchants, souldiers, artificers, good honest housholders, and also of vnthrifty youthes, yong damfels, old nurses, bawds, brokers, ruffians and parasites, with such like, in whose behauiors, lyeth in effect the whole course and trade of mans life, and therefore tended altogether to the good amendment of man by discipline and example. It was also much for the solace and recreation of the common people by reason of the pageants and shewes. And this kind of poeme was called Comedy, and followed next after the Satyre, and by that occasion was somewhat sharpe and bitter after the nature of the Satyre, openly and by expresse names taxing men more maliciously and impudently then became, so as they were enforced for feare of quarell and blame to disguise their players with strange apparell, and by colouring their faces and carying hatts and capps of diuerse fashions to make them selues lesse knowen. But as time and experience do reforme euery thing that is amisse, so this bitter poeme called the old Comedy, being disused and taken away, the new Comedy came in place, more ciuill and pleasant a great deale and not touching any man by name, but in a certaine generalitie glancing at euery abuse, so as from thenceforth fearing none illwill or enmitie at any bodies hands, they left aside their disguifings and played bare face, till one Rofcius Gallus the most excellent player among the Romaines brought vp these vizards, which we see at this day vsed, partly to supply the want of players, when there were moe parts than there were persons, or that it was not thought meet to trouble and pester princes chambers with too many folkes. Now by the change of a vizard one man might play the king and the carter, the old nurse and the yong damfell, the marchant and the souldier or any other part he listed very conueniently. There be that say Rofcius did it for another purpose, for being him selfe the best Histrion or buffon that was in his dayes to be found, in somuch as Cicero said Rofcius contended with him by varietie of liuely gestures, to surmount the copy of his speach, yet because he was squint eyed and had a very vnpleasent countenance, and lookes which made him ridiculous or rather odious to the presence, he deuised these vizards to hide his owne ilfaured face. And thus much touching the Comedy.

CHAP. XV.

In what forme of Poesie the euill and outragious behaiours of Princes were reprehended.

BVt because in those dayes when the Poets first taxed by Satyre and Comedy, there was no great store of Kings or Emperors or such high estats (al men being yet for the most part rude, and in a maner popularly egall) they could not say of them or of their behaiours any thing to the purpose, which cases of Princes are sithens taken for the highest and greatest matters of all. But after that some men among the moe became mighty and famous in the world, soueraignetie and dominion hauing learned them all maner of lusts and licentioufnes of life, by which occasions also their high estates and felicities fell many times into most lowe and lamentable fortunes : whereas before in their great prosperities they were both feared and reuerenced in the highest degree, after their deathes when the posteritie flood no more in dread of them, their infamous life and tyrannies were layd open to all the world, their wickednes reproched, their follies and extreme infolencies derided, and their miserable ends painted out in playes and pageants, to shew the mutabilitie of fortune, and the iust punishment of God in reuenge of a vicious and euill life. These matters were also handled by the Poets, and represented by action as that of the Comedies: but because the matter was higher then that of the Comedies the Poets stile was also higher and more loftie, the prouision greater, the place more magnificent: for which purpose also the players garments were made more rich and costly and solemne, and euery other thing appertaining, according to that rate: So as where the Satyre was pronounced by rusticall and naked Syluanes speaking out of a bush, and the common players of interludes called Plampedes, played barefoote vpon the floore: the later Comedies vpon scaffolds, and by men well and cleanly hosed and shod. These matters of great Princes were played vpon lofty stages, and the actors thereof ware vpon their legges buskins of leather called Cothurni, and other solemne habits, and for a speciall preheminance did walke vpon those high corked shoes or pantofles, which now they call in Spaine and Italy Shoppini. And because those buskins and high shoes were commonly made of goats skinnes very finely tanned, and dyed into colours: or for that as some say the best players reward, was a goate to be giuen him, or for that as other thinke, a goate was the peculiar sacrifice of the god Pan, king of all the gods of the woodes: forasmuch as a goate in Greeke is called Tragos, therefore these stately playes were called Tragedies. And thus haue ye foure fundry formes of Poesie Drammatick reprehensiuē, and put in execution by the feate and dexteritie of mans body, to wit, the Satyre, old Comedie, new Comedie, and Tragedie, whereas all other kinde of poems except Eglogue whereof shalbe entreated hereafter, were onely recited by mouth or fong with the voyce to some melodious instrument.

CHAP. XVI.

In what forme of Poetrie the great Princes and dominators of the world were honored.

BVt as the bad and illawdable parts of all estates and degrees were taxed by the Poets in one fort or an other, and those of great Princes by Tragedie in especial, (and not till after their deaths) as hath bene before remembred, to th'intent that such exemplifying (as it were) of their blames and aduerfities, being now dead, might worke for a secret reprehension to others that were aliuie, liuing in the fame or like abufes. So was it great reason that all good and vertuous perfons should for their well doings be rewarded with commendation, and the great Princes aboue all others with honors and praifes, being for many respects of greater moment, to haue them good and vertuous then any inferior fort of men. Wherefore the Poets being in deede the trumpeters of all praise and also of flander (not flander, but well deserued reproch) were in confcience and credit bound next after the diuine praifes of the immortall gods, to yeeld a like ratable honour to all fuch amongst men, as most refembled the gods by excellencie of function, and had a certaine affinitie with them, by more then humane and ordinarie vertues shewed in their actions here vpon earth. They were therefore praised by a fecond degree of laude: shewing their high estates, their Princely genealogies and pedegrees, mariages, aliances, and fuch noble exploites, as they had done in th'affaires of peace and of warre to the benefit of their people and countries, by inuention of any noble science, or profitable Art, or by making wholfome lawes or enlarging of their dominions by honorable and iust conquests, and many other wayes. Such perfonages among the Gentiles were Bacchus,

Ceres, Perseus, Hercules, Theseus and many other, who thereby came to be accompted gods and halfe gods or goddesse[s] [Heroes] and had their commendations giuen by Hymne accordingly or by such other poems as their memorie was therby made famous to the posteritie for euer after, as shal be more at large sayd in place conuenient. But first we will speake somewhat of the play- ing places, and prouisions which were made for their pageants and pomps representatiue before remembred.

CHAP. XVII.

Of the places where their enterludes or poemes drammat- ticke were represented to the people.

As it hath bene declared, the Satyres were first vttered in their hallowed places within the woods where they honoured their gods vnder the open heauen, because they had no other housing fit for great assemblies.

The old comedies were plaid in the broad streets vpon wagons or carts vncouered, which carts were floored with bords and made for remouable stages to passe from one streete of their townes to another, where all the people might stand at their ease to gaze vpon the fights. Their new comedies or ciuill enterludes were played in open paulions or tents of linnen cloth or lether, halfe displayed that the people might see. Afterward when Tragidies came vp they deuised to present them vpon scaffoldes or stages of timber, shadowed with linen or lether as the other, and these stages were made in the forme of a Semicircle, wherof the bow serued for the beholders to sit in, and the string or forepart was appointed for the floore or place where the players vttered, and had in it fundrie little diuisions by curteins as trauerse[s] to serue for feuerall roomes where they might repaire vnto and change their garments and come in againe, as their speaches and parts were to be renewed. Also there was place appointed for musiciens to sing or to play vpon their instrumentes at the end of euery scene, to the intent the people might be refreshed, and kept occupied. This maner of stage in halfe circle, the Greekes called theatrum, as much to say as a beholding place, which was also in such fort contriued by benches and greeces to stand or sit vpon, as no man should empeach anothers fight. But as ciuilitie and withall wealth encreased, so did the minde of man growe dayly more haultie and superfluous in all his deuises, so as for their theaters in halfe circle, they came to be by the great magnificence of the Romain princes and people somptuously built with marble and square stone in forme all round, and were called Amphitheaters, whereof as yet appears one among the ancient ruines of Rome, built by Pompeius Magnus, for capacitie able to receiue at ease fourscore thousand persons as it is left written, and so curiously contriued as euery man might depart at his pleasure, without any annoyance to other. It is also to be knowne that in those great Amphitheaters, were exhibited all manner of other shewes and disports for the people, as their fence playes, or digladiations of naked men, their wrastring, runnings, leapings and other practises of actiuitie and strength, also their baitings of wild beasts, as Elephants, Rhinoceros[es], Tigers, Leopards and others, which fights much delighted the common people, and therefore the places required to be large and of great content.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of the Shepheards or pastorall Poesie called Eglogue, and to what purpose it vvas first inuented and vsed.

Some be of opinion, and the chiefe of those who haue written in this Art among the Latines, that the pastorall Poesie which we commonly call by the name of Eglogue and Bucolick, a tearme brought in by the Sicilian Poets, should be the first of any other, and before the Satyre comedie or tragedie, because, say they, the shepheards and haywards assemblies and meetings when they kept their cattell and heards in the common fields and forests. was the first familiar coruerfation, and their babble and talk vnder bushes and fhadie trees, the firft difputation and contentious reasoning, and their flefhly heates growing of eafe, the firft idle wooings, and their fongs made to their mates or paramours either vpon forrow or iolity of courage, the firft amorous muficks, fometime alfo they fang and played on their pipes for wagers, ftriuing who fhould get the beft game, and be counted cunningeft. All this I do agree vnto, for no doubt the fhepherds life was the firft example of honeft felowfhip, their trade the firft art of lawfull acquisition or purchafe, for at thefe daies robbery was a manner of purchafe. So faith Aristotle in his bookes of the Politiques, and that paf-turage was before tillage, or fifhing or fowling, or any other predatory art or cheuifance. And all this may be true, for before there was a fhepherd keeper of his owne, or of fome other bodies flocke, there was none owner in the world, quick cattel being the firft property of any forreine poffeffion. I fay forreine, becaufe alway men claimed property in their apparell and armour, and other like things made by their owne trauel and induftry, nor thereby was there yet any good towne or city or Kings palace, where pageants and pompes might be fhewed by Comedies or Tragedies. But for all this, I do deny that the Eglogue fhould be the firft and moft auncient forme of artificiall Poesie, being perfwaded that the Poet deuifed the Eglogue long after the other drammatick poems, not of purpofe to counterfait or represent the ruficall manner of loues and communication : but vnder the vaile of homely perfons, and in rude fpeeches to infinuate and glaunce at greater matters, and fuch as perchance had not bene fafe to haue bene difclofed in any other fort, which may be perceiued by the Eglogues of Virgill, in which are treated by figure matters of greater importance then the loues of Titirus and Corydon. Thefe Eglogues came after to containe and entorme morall difcipline, for the amendment of mans behaiour, as be thofe of Mantuan and other moderne Poets.

CHAP. XIX.

Of historicall Poesie, by which the famous aēts of Princes and the vertuous and worthy liues of our forefathers were reported.

Here is nothing in man of all the potential parts of his mind (reason and will except) more noble or more necessary to the actiue life then memory : because it maketh most to a sound iudgement and perfect worldly wisedome, examining and comparing the times past with the present, and by them both considering the time to come, concludeth with a stedfast resolution, what is the best course to be taken in all his actions and aduices in this world : it came vpon this reason, experience to be so highly commended in all consultations of importance, and preferred before any learning or science, and yet experience is no more than a masse of memories assembled, that is, such trials as man hath made in time before. Right so no kinde of argument in all the Oratorie craft, doth better perswade and more vniuerfally satisfie then example, which is but the representation of old memories, and like successes happened in times past. For these regards the Poesie historicall is of all other next the diuine most honorable and worthy, as well for the common benefit as for the speciall comfort euery man receiueth by it. No one thing in the world with more delectation reuiuing our spirits then to behold as it were in a glasse the liuely image of our deare forefathers, their noble and vertuous maner of life, with other things autentike, which because we are not able otherwise to attaine to the knowledge of, by any of our senses, we apprehend them by memory, whereas the present time and things so swiftly passe away, as they giue vs no leasure almost to looke into them, and much lesse to know and consider of them throughly. The things future, being also euent very vncertaine, and such as can not possibly be knowne because they be not yet, can not be vsed for example nor for delight otherwise then by hope. Though many promise the contrary, by vaine and deceitfull arts taking vpon them to reueale the truth of accidents to come, which if it were so as they furnise, are yet but sciences meere coniecturall, and not of any benefit to man or to the common wealth, where they be vsed or professed. Therefore the good and exemplarie things and actions of the former ages, were referued only to the historicall reportes of wise and graue men: those of the present time left to the fruition and iudgement of our senses: the future as hazards and incertaine euentues vtterly neglected and layd aside for Magicians and mockers to get their liuings by: such manner of men as by negligence of Magistrates and remisses of lawes euery countrie breedeth great store of. These historical men neuertheless vsed not the matter so precisely to wish that al they wrote should be accounted true, for that was not needefull nor expedient to the purpose, namely to be vsed either for example or for pleasure: considering that many times it is seene a fained matter or altogether fabulous, besides that it maketh more mirth than any other, works no lesse good conclusions for example then the most true and veritable: but often times more, because the Poet hath the handling of them to fashion at his pleasure, but not so of th' other which must go according to their veritie and none otherwise without the writers great blame. Againe as ye know mo and more excellent examples may be fained in one day by a good wit, then many ages through mans frailtie are able to put in vre, which made the learned and wittie men of those times to deuise many historicall matters of no veritie at all, but with purpose to do good and no hurt, as vsing them for a maner of discipline and president of commendable life. Such was the common wealth of Plato, and Sir Thomas Moores Vtopia, resting all in deuise, but neuer put in execution, and easier to be wished then to be performed. And you shall perceiue that histories were of three fortes, wholly true and wholly false, and a third holding part of either, but for honest recreation, and good example they were all of them. And this may be apparant to vs not onely by the Poeticall histories, but also by those that be written in prose: for as Homer wrote a fabulous or mixt report of the siege of Troy, and another of Ulysses errors or wandrings, so did Museus compile a true treatise of the life and loues of Leander and Hero, both of them Heroick, and to none ill edification. Also as Theucidides wrote a worthy and veritable historie, of the warres betwixt the Athenians and the Peloponeses: so did Zenophon, a most graue Philosopher, and well trained courtier and counselour make another (but fained and vntrue) of the childhood of Cyrus king of Perfia, neuertheles both to one effect, that is for example and good information of the posteritie. Now because the actions of meane and base personages, tend in very few cases to any great good example: for who passeth to follow the steps, and maner of life of a craftes man, shepheard or failer, though he were his father or dearest frend? yea how almost is it possible that such maner of men should be of any vertue other then their profession requireth? Therefore was nothing committed to historie, but matters of great and excellent persons and things that the fame by irritation of good courages (such as emulation causeth) might worke more effectually, which occasioned the story writer to chuse an higher stile fit for his subiect, the Prosaicke in prose, the Poet in meetre, and the Poets was by verse examer for his grauitie and flatelineffe most allowable: neither would they intermingle him with any other shorter measure, vnlesse it were in matters of such qualitie, as became best to be song with the voyce, and to some musicall instrument, as were with the Greeks, all your Hymnes and Encomia of Pindarus and Callimachus, not very histories but a maner of historicall reportes in which cases they made those poemes in variable measures, and coupled a short verse with a long to serue that purpose the better, and we our selues who compiled this treatise haue written for pleasure a litle brief Romance or historical ditty in the English tong of the Isle of great Britaine in short and long meetres, and by breaches or diuisions to be more commodiously song to the harpe in places of asssembly, where the company shalbe desirous to heare of old aduentures and valiaunces of noble knights in times past, as are those of king Arthur and his knights o. the round table, Sir Beuys of Southampton, Guy of Warwicke and others like. Such as haue not premonition hereof, and consideration of the causes alledged, would peradventure reprove and disgrace euery Romance, or short historical ditty for that they be not written in long meeters or verses Alexandrins, according to the nature and stile of large histories, wherein they should do wrong for they be fundry formes of poems and not all one.

CHAP. XX.

IN euerie degree and sort of men vertue is commendable, but not egally: not onely because mens estates are vnegall, but for that also vertue it selfe is not in euery respect of egall value and estimation. For continence in a king is of greater merit, then in a carter, th'one hauing all opportunities to allure him to lusts, and abilitie to ferue his appetites, th'other partly, for the basenesse of his estate wanting such meanes and occasions, partly by dread of lawes more inhibited, and not so vehemently caried away with vnbridled affections, and therefore deserue not in th'one and th'other like praise nor equall reward, by the very ordinarie course of distributiue iustice. Euen so parsimonie and illiberalitie are greater vices in a Prince then in a priuate person, and pusillanimitie and iniustice likewise: for to th'one, fortune hath supplied inough to maintaine them in the contrarie vertues, I meane, fortitude, iustice. liberalitie, and magnanimitie: the Prince hauing all plentie to vse largeffe by, and no want or neede to driue him to do wrong. Also all the aides that may be to lift vp his courage, and to make him stout and feareleffe (augent animos fortunæ) saith the Mimist, and very truly, for nothing pulleth downe a mans heart so much as aduerfitie and lacke. Againe in a meane man prodigalitie and pride are faultes more reprehensible then in Princes, whose high estates do require in their countenance, speech and expence, a certaine extraordinary, and their functions enforce them sometime to exceede the limites of mediocritie not excusable in a priuat person, whose manner of life and calling hath no such exigence. Besides the good and bad of Princes is more exemplarie, and thereby of greater moment then the priuate persons. Therefore it is that the inferiour persons, with their inferiour vertues haue a certaine inferiour praise, to guerdon their good with, and to comfort them to continue a laudable course in the modest and honest life and behaiour. But this lyeth not in written laudes so much as ordinary reward and commendation to be giuen them by the mouth of the superiour magistrate. For histories were not intended to so generall and base a purpose, albeit many a meane souldier and other obscure persons were spoken of and made famous in stories, as we finde of Irus the begger, and Thersites the glorious noddie, whom Homer maketh mention of. But that happened (and so did many like memories of meane men) by reason of some greater personage or matter that it was long of, which therefore could not be an vniuersall case nor chaunce to euery other good and vertuous person of the meaner sort. Wherefore the Poet in praising the maner of life or death of anie meane person, did it by some litle dittie or Epigram or Epitaph in fewe verses and meane stile conformable to his subiect. So haue you how the immortall gods were praised by hymnes, the great Princes and heroicke personages by ballades of praise called Encomia, both of them by historicall reports of great grauitie and maiestie, the inferiour persons by other slight poemes.

CHAP. XXI.

The forme wherein honest and profitable Artes and sciences were treated.

THe profitable sciences were no lesse meete to be imported to the greater number of ciuill men for instruction of the people and increase of knowledge, then to be reserved and kept for clerkes and great men onely. So as next vnto the things historicall such doctrines and arts as the common wealth fared the better by, were esteemed and allowed. And the same were treated by Poets in verse Exameter fauouring the Heroicall, and for the grauitie and comelinese of the meetre most vsed with the Greekes and Latines to sad purposes. Such were the Philosophicall works of Lucretius Carus among the Romaines, the Astronomicall of Aratus and Manilius, one Greeke th'other Latine, the Medicinall of Nicander, and that of Oprianus of hunting and fishes, and many moe that were too long to recite in this place.

CHAP. XXII.

In what forme of Poesie the amorous affections and allurements were vttered.

THe first founder of all good affections is honest loue, as the mother of all the vicious is hatred. It was not therefore without reason that so commendable, yea honourable a thing as loue well meant, were it in Princely estate or priuate, might in all ciuil common wealths be vttered in good forme and order as other laudable things are. And because loue is of all other humane affections the most puissant and passionate, and most generall to all fortes and ages of men and women, so as whether it be of the yong or old or wife or holy, or high estate or low, none euer could truly bragge of any exemption in that case: it requireth a forme of Poesie variable, inconstant, affected, curious and most witty of any others, whereof the ioyes were to be vttered in one forte, the forrowes in an other, and by the many formes of Poesie, the many moods and pangs of louers, throughly to be discovered: the poore soules sometimes praying, beseeching, sometime honouring, auancing, praising: an other while railing, reuiling, and cursing: then forrowing, weeping, lamenting: in the ende laughing, reioysing and solacing the beloued againe, with a thousand delicate deuises, odes, songs, elegies, ballads, sonets and other ditties, moouing one way and another to great compassion.

CHAP. XXIII.

The forme of Poeticall reioysings.

Leasure is the chiefe parte of mans felicity in this world, and also (as our Theologians say) in the world to come. Therefore while we may (yea alwaies if it coulede be) to reioyce and take our pleasures in vertuous and honest fort, it is not only allowable, but also necessary and very naturall to man. And many be the ioyes and consolations of the hart: but none greater, than such as he may vtter and discover by some conuenient meanes: euen as to suppress and hide a mans mirth, and not to haue therein a partaker, or at least wise a witnes, is no little griefe and infelicity. Therefore nature and ciuility haue ordained (besides the priuate solaces) publike reioysings for the comfort and recreation of many. And they be of diuerse forts and vpon diuerse occasions growne: one and the chiefe was for the publike peace of a countrie the greatest of any other ciuill good. And wherein your Maiestie (my most gracious Soueraigne) haue shewed your selfe to all the world for this one and thirty yeares space of your glorious raigne, aboue all other Princes of Christendome, not onely fortunate, but also most sufficient vertuous and worthy of Empire. An other is for iust and honourable victory achieved against the forraigne enemy. A third at solemne feasts and pompes of coronations and enstallments of honourable orders. An other for iollity at weddings and marriages. An other at the births of Princes children. An other for priuate entertainements in Court, or other secret disports in chamber, and such solitary places. And as these reioysings tend to diuers effects, so do they also carry diuerse formes and nominations: for those of victorie and peace are called Triumphall, whereof we our selues haue heretofore giuen some example by our Triumphals written in honour of her Maiesties long peace. And they were vsed by the auncients in like manner, as we do our generall proceffions or Letanies with bankets and bonafires and all manner of ioyes. Those that were to honour the persons of great Princes or to solemnise the pompes of any installment were called Encomia, we may call them carols of honour. Those to celebrate marriages were called songs nuptiall or Epithalamies, but in a certaine mysticall sense as shall be said hereafter. Others for magnificence at the natiuities of Princes children, or by custome vsed yearly vpon the same dayes, are called songs natall or Genethliaca. Others for secret recreation and pastime in chambers with company or alone were the ordinary Musickes amorous, such as might be song with voice or to the Lute, Citheron or Harpe, or daunced by measures as the Italian Pauan and galliard are at these daies in Princes Courts and other places of honourable or ciuill assembly, and of all these we will speake in order and very briefly.

CHAP. XXIIII.

The forme of Poeticall lamentations.

Lamenting is altogether contrary to reioysing, euery man saith so, and yet is it a peece of ioy to be able to lament with ease, and freely to poure forth a mans inward sorowes and the greifs wherewith his minde is furcharged. This was a very necessary deuise of the Poet and a fine, besides his poetrie to play also the Phisitian, and not onely by applying a medicine to the ordinary sicknes of mankind, but by making the very greef it felfe (in part) cure of the difeafe. Nowe are the caufes of mans forrowes many: the death of his parents, frends, allies, and children: (though many of the barbarous nations do reioyce at their burials and forrow at their birthes) the ouerthrowes and dif-comforts in battell, the subuerfions of townes and cities, the defolations of countreis, the loffe of goods and worldly promotions, honour and good renowne: finally the trauails and torments of loue forlorne or ill beftowed, either by difgrace, deniall, delay, and twenty other wayes, that well experienced louers could recite. Such of thefe greefs as might be refrained or holpen by wifedome, and the parties owne good endeuour, the Poet gaue none order to forrow them: for firft as to the good renowne it is loft, for the more part by fome default of the owner, and may be by his well doings recouered againe. And if it be vniuftly taken away, as by vntrue and famous libels, the offenders recantation may fuffife for his amends: fo did the Poet Stefichorus, as it is written of him in his Pallinoëie vpon the difprayfe of Helena, and recouered his eye fight. Alfo for worldly goods they come and go, as things not long proprietary to any body, and are not yet fubiect vnto fortunes dominion fo, but that we our felues are in great part accessarie to our own loffes and hinderaunces, by ouerfight and mifguiding of our felues and our things, therefore why should we bewaile our fuch voluntary detriment? But death the irre-couerable loffe, death the dolefull departure of frendes, that can neuer be recontinued by any other meeting or new acquaintance. Befides our vncertaintie and fufpition of their eflates and welfare in the places of their new abode, feemeth to carry a reasonable pretext of iuft forrow. Likewise the great ouerthrowes in battell and defolations of countreys by warres, aswell for the loffe of many liues and much libertie as for that it toucheth the whole flate, and euery priuate man hath his portion in the damage: Finally for loue, there is no frailtie in flesh and bloud so excusable as it, no comfort or discomfort greater then the good and bad successe thereof, nothing more naturall to man, nothing of more force to vanquish his will and to inuegle his iudgement. Therefore of death and burials, of th'aduersities by warres, and of true loue lost or ill bestowed, are th'onely sorrowes that the noble Poets fought by their arte to remoue or appease, not with any medicament of a contrary temper, as the Galenistes vse to cure [contraria contrarijs] but as the Paracelsians, who cure [similia similibus] making one dolour to expell another, and in this case, one short sorrowing the remedie of a long and grieuous sorrow. And the lamenting of deathes was chiefly at the very burials of the dead, also at monethes mindes and longer times, by custome continued yearely, when as they vsed many offices of seruice and loue towards the dead, and thereupon are called Obsequies in our vulgare, which was done not onely by cladding the mourners their friendes and seruauntes in blacke vestures, of shape dolefull and sad, but also by wofull countenances and voyces, and besides by Poeticall mournings in verse. Such funerall songs were called Epicedia if they were song by many, and Monodia if they were vttered by one alone, and this was vsed at the enterment of Princes and others of great accompt, and it was reckoned a great ciuilitie to vse such ceremonies, as at this day is also in some countrey vsed. In Rome they accustomed to make orations funerall and commendatorie of the dead parties in the publique place called Procostris: and our Theologians, in stead thereof vse to make sermons, both teaching the people some good learning, and also saying well of the departed. Those songs of the dolorous discomforts in battaile, and other defolations in warre, or of townes sacked and subuerted, were song by the remnant of the army ouerthrowen, with great skrikings and outcries, holding the wrong end of their weapon vpwards in signe of sorrow and dispaire. The cities also made generall mournings and offred sacrifices with Poeticall songs to appease the wrath of the martiall gods and goddeses. The third forrowing was of loues, by long lamentation in Elegie: so was their song called, and it was in a pitious maner of meetre, placing a limping Pentameter, after a lusty Exameter, which made it go dolourously more then any other meeter.

CHAP. XXV.

TO returne from sorrow to reioysing it is a very good hap and no vnwise part for him that can do it, I say therefore, that the comfort of issue and procreation of children is so naturall and so great, not onely to all men but specially to Princes, as duetie and ciuilitie haue made it a common custome to reioyse at the birth of their noble children, and to keepe those dayes hallowed and festiuall for euer once in the yeare, during the parentes or childrens liues: and that by publique order and consent. Of which reioysings and mirthes the Poet ministred the first occasion honorable, by presenting of ioyfull songs and ballades, prayeing the parentes by prooffe, the child by hope, the whole kinred by report, and the day it selfe with wishes of all good successe, long life, health and prosperitie for euer to the new borne. These poemes were called in Greeke Genetliaca, with vs they may be called natall or birth songs.

CHAP. XXVI.

AS the consolation of children well begotten is great, no lesse but rather greater ought to be that which is occasion of children, that is honorable matrimonie, a loue by al lawes allowed, not mutable nor encomb-

red with such vaine cares and passions, as that other loue, whereof there is no assurance, but loose and fickle affection occasioned for the most part by sodaine sights and acquaintance of no long triall or experience, nor vpon any other good ground wherein any suretie may be conceiued : wherefore the Ciuill Poet could do no lesse in conscience and credit, then as he had before done to the ballade of birth : now with much better deuotion to celebrate by his poeme the chearefull day of mariages aswell Princely as others, for that hath alwayes bene accompted with euery countrey and nation of neuer so barbarous people, the highest and holiest, of any ceremonie apperteining to man : a match forsooth made for euer and not for a day, a solace provided for youth, a comfort for age, a knot of alliance and amitie indissoluble : great reioysing was therefore due to such a matter and to so gladfome a time. This was done in ballade wise as the natall song, and was song very sweetely by Musicians at the chamber dore of the Bridegroome and Bride at such times as shalbe hereafter declared and they were called Epithalamies as much to say as ballades at the bedding of the bride : for such as were song at the borde at dinner or supper were other Musickes and not properly Epithalamies. Here, if I shall say that which apperteineth to th'arte, and disclose the misterie of the whole matter, I must and doe with all humble reuerence bespeake pardon of the chaste and honorable eares, least I should either offend them with licentious speach, or leaue them ignorant of the ancient guise in old times vsed at weddings (in my simple opinion) nothing reproveable. This Epithalamie was deuided by breaches into three partes to serue for three seuerall fits or times to be song. The first breach was song at the first parte of the night when the spouse and her husband were brought to their bed and at the very chamber dore, where in a large vtter roome vsed to be (besides the musiciens) good flore of ladies or gentlewomen of their kinsfolkes, and others who came to honor the mariage, and the tunes of the songs were very loude and shrill, to the intent there might no noise be hard out of the bed chamber by the skreeking and outcry of the young damosell feeling the first forces of her stiffe and rigorous young man, she being as all virgins tender and weake, and vnexpert in those maner of affaires. For which purpose also they vsed by old nurfes (appointed to that seruice) to suppress the noise by casting of pottes full of nuttes round about the chamber vpon the hard floore or pauement, for they vsed no mattes nor rushes as we doe now. So as the Ladies and gentlewomen should haue their eares so occupied what with Musicke, and what with their handes wantonly scambling and catching after the nuttes, that they could not intend to harken after any other thing. This was as I said to diminish the noise of the laughing lamenting spouse. The tenour of that part of the song was to congratulate the first acquaintance and meeting of the young couple, allowing of their parents good dicretions in making the match, then afterward to found cherfully to the onfet and first encounters of that amorous battaile, to declare the comfort of children, and encrease of loue by that meane chiefly caused: the bride shewing her self euery waies well disposed and still supplying occasions of new lustes and loue to her husband, by her obedience and amorous embracings and all other allurements. About midnight or one of the clocke, the Musicians came again to the chamber dore (all the Ladies and other women as they were of degree, hauing taken their leaue, and being gone to their rest.) This part of the ballade was to refresh the faint and weried bodies and spirits, and to animate new appetites with cherefull wordes, encoraging them to the recontinuance of the same entertainments, praising and commending (by supposall) the good conformities of them both, and their desire one to vanquish the other by such frendly conflictes: alledging that the first embracements neuer bred barnes, by reason of their ouermuch affection and heate, but onely made passage for children and enforced greater liking to the late made match. That the second assaults, were lesse rigorous, but more vigorous and apt to auance the purpose of procreation, that therefore they should persist in all good appetite with an inuincible courage to the end. This was the second part of the Epithalamie. In the morning when it was faire broad day, and that by liklyhood all tournes were sufficiently ferued, the last actes of the enterlude being ended, and that the bride must within few hours arise and apparrell her selfe, no more as a virgine, but as a wife, and about dinner time must by order come forth Sicut sponsa de thalamo, very demurely and stately to be sene and acknowledged of her parents and kinsfolkes whether she were the same woman or a changeling, or dead or aliue, or maimed by any accident nocturnall. The same Musicians came againe with this last part, and greeted them both with a Psalm of new applausions, for that they had either of them so well behaued them selues that night, the husband to rob his spouse of her maidenhead and saue her life, the bride so lustely to satisfie her husbandes loue and scape with so litle daunger of her person, for which good chaunce that they should make a louely truce and abstinence of that warre till next night sealing the placard of that louely league, with twentie maner of sweet kisses, then by good admonitions enformed them to the frugall and thriftie life all the rest of their dayes. The good man getting and bringing home, the wife sauing that which her husband should get, therewith to be the better able to keepe good hospitalitie, according to their estates, and to bring vp their children, (if God sent any) vertuously, and the better by their owne good example. Finally to perseuer all the rest of their life in true and inuiolable wedlocke. This ceremony was omitted when men married widowes or such as had tasted the frutes of loue before, (we call them weil experienced young women) in whom there was no feare of daunger to their persons, or of any outcry at all, at the time of those terrible approaches. Thus much touching the vsage of Epithalamie or bedding ballad of the ancient times, in which if there were any wanton or lasciuious matter more then ordinarie which they called Ficenina licentia it was borne withal for that time because of the matter no lesse requiring. Catullus hath made of them one or two very artificiall and ciuil: but none more excellent then of late yeares a young noble man of Germanie as I take it Iohannes fecundus who in that and in his poeme De basis, passeth any of the auncient or moderne Poetes in my iudgment.

CHAP. XXVII.

The manner of Poesie by which they vttered their bitter taunts, and priuy nips, or witty scoffes and other merry conceits.

BVt all the world could not keepe, nor any ciuill ordinance to the contrary so preuaile, but that men would and must needs vtter their splenes in all ordinarie matters also: or else it seemed their bowels would burst, therefore the poet deuised a prety fashioned poeme short and sweete (as we are wont to say) and called it Epigramma in which euery mery conceited man might without any long studie or tedious ambage, make his frend sport, and anger his foe, and giue a prettie nip, or shew a sharpe conceit in few verses: for this Epigramme is but an inscription or writting made as it were vpon a table, or in a windowe, or vpon the wall or mantell of a chimney in some place of common resort, where it was allowed euery man might come, or be fitting to chat and prate, as now in our tauernes and common tabling houses, where many merry heades meete, and scribe with ynke, with chalke, or with a cole such matters as they would euery man should know, and descant vpon. Afterward the same came to be put in paper and in bookes, and vsed as ordinarie missiues, some of frendship, some of defiaunce, or as other messages of mirth: Martiall was the cheife of this skil among the Latines, and at these days the best Epigrammes we finde, and of the sharpest conceit are those that haue bene gathered among the reliques of the two muet Satyres in Rome, Pasquill and Marphorir, which in time of Sede vacante, when merry conceited men listd to gibe and iest at the dead Pope, or any of his Cardinales, they fastened them vpon those Images which now lie in the open streets, and were tollerated, but after that terme expired they were inhibited againe. These inscriptions or Epigrammes at their begining had no certaine author that would auouch them, some for feare of blame, if they were ouer saucy or sharpe, others for modestie of the writer as was that dislicke of Virgil which he fet vpon the pallace gate of the emperour Augustus, which I will recite for the breifnes and quicknes of it, and also for another euento that fell out vpon the mater worthy to be remembred. These were the verses.

Nocte pluit tota, redeunt spectacula mane Diuisum imperium cum Ioue Cæsar habet.

Which I haue thus Englished,

*It raines all night, early the shewes returne
God and Cæsar, do raigne and rule by turne.*

As much to say, God sheweth his power by the night raines. Cæsar his magnificence by the pompes of the day.

These two verses were very well liked, and brought to th'Emperours Maiestie, who tooke great pleasure in them, and willed the author should be knowen. A fausie courtier profered him selfe to be the man, and had a good reward giuen him: for the Emperour him self was not only learned, but of much munificence toward all learned men: whereupon Virgill seing him self by his ouermuch modestie defrauded of the reward, that an impudent had gotten by abuse of his merit, came the next night, and fastened vpon the same place this halfe metre, foure times iterated. Thus.

*Sic vos non vobis
Sic vos non vobis
Sic vos non vobis
Sic vos non vobis*

And there it remained a great while becaufe no man wist what it meant, till Virgill opened the whole fraude by this deuife. He wrote aboute the same halfe metres this whole verfe Exameter.

Hos ego vericulos feci tulit alter honores.

And then finished the foure half metres, thus.

Sic vos non vobis Fertis aratra boues

Sic vos non vobis Vellera fertis oues

Sic vos non vobis Mellificatis apes

Sic vos non vobis Indificatis aues.

And put to his name Publius Virgilius Maro. This matter came by and by to Th'emperours eare, who taking great pleasure in the deuife called for Virgill, and gaue him not onely a present reward, with a good allowance of dyet a bonche in court as we vse to call it: but also held him for euer after vpon larger triall he had made of his learning and vertue in so great reputation, as he vouchsafed to giue him the name of a frend (amicus) which among the Romanes was so great an honour and speciall fauour, as all such persons were allowed to the Emperours table, or to the Senatours who had receiued them (as frendes) and they were the only men that came ordinarily to their boords, and folaced with them in their chambers, and gardins when none other could be admitted.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Of the poeme called Epitaph vsed for memoriall of the dead.

AN Epitaph is but a kind of Epigram only applied to the report of the dead persons estate and degree, or of his other good or bad partes, to his commendation or reproch: and is an inscription such as a man may commodiously write or engraue vpon a tombe in few verses, pithie, quicke and sententious for the passer by to peruse, and iudge vpon without any long tariaunce: So as if it exceede the measure of an Epigram, it is then (if the verse be correspondent) rather an Elegie then an Epitaph which errour many of these bastard rimers commit, because they be not learned, nor (as we are wont to say) catstes [craftes?] masters, for they make long and tedious discourfes, and write them in large tables to be hanged vp in Churches and chauncells ouer the tombes of great men and others, which be so exceeding long as one must haue halfe a dayes leasure to reade one of them, and must be called away before he come halfe to the end, or else be locked into the Church by the Sexten as I my selfe was once ferued reading an Epitaph in a certain cathedrall Church of England. They be ignorant of poesie that call such long tales by the name of Epitaphes, they might better call them Elegies, as I said before, and then ought neither to be engrauen nor hanged vp in tables. I haue seene them neuertheles vpon many honorable tombes of these late times erected, which doe rather disgrace then honour either the matter or maker.

CHAP. XXIX.

A certaine auncient forme of poesie by which men did vse to reproch their enemies.

As frendes be a rich and ioyfull possession, so be foes a continuall torment and canker to the minde of man, and yet there is no possible meane to auoide this inconuenience, for the best of vs all, and he that thinketh he liues most blamelesse, liues not without enemies, that enuy him for his good parts, or hate him for his euill. There be wise men, and of them the great learned man Plutarch tooke vpon them to perswade the benefite that men receiue by their enemies, which though it may be true in manner of Paradoxe, yet I finde mans frailtie to be naturally such, and alwayes hath beene, that he cannot conceiue it in his owne case, nor shew that patience and moderation in such greifs, as becometh the man perfite and accomplisht in all vertue: but either in deede or by word, he will seeke reuenge against them that malice him, or practife his harmes, ſpecially ſuch foes as oppoſe themſelues to a mans loues. This made the auncient Poetes to inuent a meane to rid the gall of all ſuch Vindicatiue men: ſo as they might be a wrecked of their wrong, and neuer bely their enimie with ſlaunderous vntruthes. And this was done by a maner of imprecation, or as we call it by curſing and banning of the parties, and wiſhing all euill to a light vpon them, and though it neuer the ſooner happened, yet was it great eaſment to the boiling ſtomacke: They were called Diræ, ſuch as Virgill made ag[a]inſt Battarus, and Ouide againſt Ibis: we Chriſtians are forbidden to uſe ſuch vncharitable faſhions, and willed to referre all our reuenges to God alone.

CHAP. XXX.

Here be alſo other like Epigrammes that were ſent vſually for new yeares giſtes or to be Printed or put vpon their banketting diſhes of ſuger plate, or of march paines, and ſuch other dainty meates as by the curteſie and cuſtome euery geſt might carry from a common feaſt home with him to his owne houſe, and were made for the nonce, they were called Nenia or apophoreta, and neuer contained aboue one verſe, or two at the moſt, but the ſhorter the better, we call them Poſies, and do paint them now a dayes vpon the backe ſides of our fruite trenchers of wood, or uſe them as deuifes in rings and armes and about ſuch courtly purpoſes. So haue we remembred and ſet forth to your Maieſtie very briefly, all the commended fourmes of the auncient Poefie, which we in our vulgare makings do imitate and uſe vnder theſe common names: enterlude, ſong, ballade, carroll and ditty: borrowing them alſo from the French al fauing this word (ſong) which is our naturall Saxon English word. The reſt, ſuch as time and vſurpation by cuſtome haue allowed vs out of the primitiue Greeke and Latine, as Comedie, Tragedie, Ode, Epitaphe, Elegie, Epigramme, and other moe.

And we haue purpofely omitted all nice or ſcholaſticall curioſities not meete for your Maieſties contemplation in this our vulgare arte, and what we haue written of the auncient formes of Poemes, we haue taken from the beſt clerks writing in the ſame arte. The part that next followeth to wit of proportion, becauſe the Greeks nor Latines neuer had it in uſe nor made any obſeruation, no more then we doe of their feete, we may truly affirme, to haue bene the firſt deuifers thereof our ſelues, as αυτοδιδακτοι, and not to haue borrowed it of any other by learning or imitation, and thereby truſting to be holden the more excuſable if any thing in this our labours happen either to miſlike, or to come ſhort of th'authors purpoſe, becauſe commonly the firſt attempt in any arte or engine artificiall is amendable, and in time by often experiences reformed. And ſo no doubt may this deuife of ours be, by others that ſhall take the penne in hand after vs.

CHAP. XXXI.

Who in any age haue bene the moſt commended writers in our Engliſh Poefie, and the Authors cenſure giuen vpon them.

IT appeareth by fundry records of bookes both printed and written, that many of our countrey men haue painfully trauelled in this part: of whoſe works ſome appeare to be but bare tranſlations, other ſome matters of their owne inuention and very commendable, whereof ſome recitall ſhall be made in this place, to th'intent chiefly that their names ſhould not be defrauded of ſuch honour as ſeemeth due to them for hauing by their thankfull ſtudies ſo much beautified our Engliſh tong, as at this day it will be found our nation is in nothing inferiour to the French or Italian for copie of language, ſubtiltie of deuice, good method and proportion in any forme of poeme, but that they may compare with the moſt, and perchance paſſe a great many of them. And I will not reach aboute the time of king Edward the third, and Richard the second for any that wrote in English meeter: because before their times by reason of the late Normane conquest, which had brought into this Realme much alteration both of our langage and lawes, and there withall a certain martiall barbarousnes, whereby the study of all good learning was so much decayd, as long time after no man or very few entended to write in any laudable science: so as beyond that time there is litle or nothing worth commendation to be founde written in this arte. And those of the first age were Chaucer and Gower both of them as I suppose Knightes. After whom followed John Lydgate the monke of Bury, and that nameles, who wrote the Satyre called Piers Plowman, next him followed Harding the Chronicler, then in king Henry th' eight times Skelton, (I wot not for what great worthines) furnamed the Poet Laureat. In the latter end of the same kings raigne sprong vp a new company of courtly makers, of whom Sir Thomas Wyat th'elder and Henry Earle of Surrey were the two chieftaines, who hauing trauailed into Italie, and there tasted the sweete and stately measures and stile of the Italian Poesie as nouices newly crept out of the schooles of Dante Arioste and Petrarch, they greatly pollished our rude and homely maner of vulgar Poesie, from that it had bene before, and for that cause may iustly be sayd the first reformers of our English meetre and stile. In the same time or not long after was the Lord Nicholas Vaux, a man of much facilitie in vulgar makings. Afterward in king Edward the sixths time came to be in reputation for the same facultie Thomas Sternehold, who first translated into English certaine Psalmes of Daud, and John Heywood the Epigrammatist who for the myrth and quicknesse of his conceits more then for any good learning was in him came to be well benefited by the king. But the principall man in this profession at the same time was Maister Edward Ferrys a man of no lesse mirth and felicitie that way, but of much more skil, and magnificence in his meeter, and therefore wrate for the most part to the stage, in Tragedie and sometimes in Comedie or Enterlude, wherein he gaue the king so much good recreation, as he had thereby many good rewardes. In Queenes Maries time florished aboute any other Doctour Phaer one that was well learned and excellently well translated into English verse Heroicall certaine bookes of Virgils Æneidos. Since him followed Maister Arthure Golding, who with no lesse commendation turned into English meetre the Metamorphosis of Ouide, and that other Doctour, who made the supplement to those bookes of Virgils Æneidos, which Maister Phaer left vndone. And in her Maiesties time that now is are sprung vp an other crew of Courtly makers Noble men and Gentlemen of her Maiesties owne seruantes, who haue written excellently well as it would appeare if their doings could be found out and made publicke with the rest, of which number is first that noble Gentleman Edward Earle of Oxford. Thomas Lord of Bukhurst, when he was young, Henry Lord Paget, Sir Philip Sydney, Sir Walter Rawleigh, Master Edward Dyar, Maister Fulke Greuell, Gafcon, Britton, Turberuille and a great many other learned Gentlemen, whose names I do not omit for enuie, but to auoyde tediousnesse, and who haue deserued no little commendation. But of them all particularly this is myne opinion, that Chaucer, with Gower, Lidgat and Harding for their antiquitie ought to haue the first place, and Chaucer as the most renowned of them all, for the much learning appeareth to be in him aboute any of the rest. And though many of his bookes be but bare translations out of the Latin and French, yet are they wel handled, as his bookes of Troilus and Cresseid, and the Romant of the Rose, whereof he translated but one halfe, the deuice was John de Mehunes a French Poet, the Canterbury tales were Chaucers owne inuention as I suppose, and where he sheweth more the naturall of his pleasant wit, then in any other of his workes, his similitudes comparifons and all other descriptions are such as can not be amended. His meetre Heroicall of Troilus and Cresseid is very graue and stately, keeping the staffe of feuen, and the verie of ten, his other verses of the Canterbury tales be but riding ryme, neuertheless very well becomming the matter of that pleasaunt pilgrimage in which euery mans part is playd with much decency. Gower fauouring for his good and graue moralities, had nothing in him highly to be commended, for his verse was homely and without good measure, his wordes strained much deale out of the French writers, his ryme wrested, and in his inuentions small subtiltie: the applications of his moralities are the best in him, and yet those many times very grossely bestowed, neither doth the substance of his workes sufficiently aunswere the subtiltie of his titles. Lydgate a translatour onely and no deuier of that which he wrate, but one that wrate in good verse. Harding a Poet Epick or Historicall, handled himselfe well according to the time and maner of his subiect. He that wrote the Satyr of Piers Ploughman, seemed to haue bene a malcontent of that time, and therefore bent himselfe wholly to taxe the disorders of that age, and specially the pride of the Romane Clergy, of whose fall he seemeth to be a very true Prophet, his verse is but loose meetre, and his termes hard and obscure, so as in them is litle pleasure to be taken. Skelton a sharpe Satirist, but with more rayling and scoffery then became a Poet Lawreat, such among the Greekes were called Pantomimi, with vs Buffons, altogether applying their wits to Scurrillities and other ridiculous matters. Henry Earle of Surrey and Sir Thomas Wyat, betweene whom I finde very litle difference, I repute them (as before) for the two chief lanternes of light to all others that haue since employed their pennes vpon English Poesie, their conceits were loftie, their stiles stately, their conueyance cleanly, their termes proper, their meetre sweete and well proportioned, in all imitating very naturally and studiously their Maister Francis Petrarcha. The Jord Vaux his commendation lyeth chiefly in the subtiltie of his meetre, and the aptnesse of his descriptions such as he taketh vpon him to make, namely in fundry of his Songs, wherein he sheweth the counterfait action very liuely and pleasantly. Of the later sort I thinke thus. That for Tragedie, the Lord of Buckhurst, and Maister Edward Ferrys for such doings as I haue sene of theirs do deserue the hiest price: Th'Earle of Oxford and Maister Edwardes of her Maiesties Chappell for Comedy and Enterlude. For Eglogue and pastorall Poesie, Sir Philip Sydney and Maister Challenner, and that other Gentleman who wrate the late shepherdes Callender. For dittie and amorous Ode I finde Sir Walter Raveleyghs vayne most loftie, insolent, and passionate. Maister Edward Dyar, for Elegie most sweete, solempne and of high conceit. Gafcon for a good meeter and for a plentifull vayne. Phaer and Golding for a learned and well corrected verse, specially in translation cleare and very faithfully answering their authours intent. Others haue also written with much facillitie, but more commendably perchance if they had not written so much nor so popularly. But last in recitall and first in degree is the Queene our soueraigne Lady, whose learned, delicate, noble Muse, easily surmounteth all the rest that haue written before her time or since, for sence, sweetnesse and subtiltie, be it in Ode, Elegie, Epigram, or any other kinde of poeme Heroick or Lyricke, wherein it shall please her Maiestie to employ her penne, euen by as much oddes as her owne excellent estate and degree exceedeth all the rest of her most humble vassalls.

THE SECOND BOOKE, OF PROPORTION POETICAL.

CHAP. I. Of Proportion Poeticall.

It is said by such as professe the Mathematicall sciences, that all things stand by proportion, and that without it nothing could stand to be good or beautiful. The Doctors of our Theologie to the same effect, but in other termes, say: that God made the world by number, measure and weight: some for weight say tune, and peradventure better. For weight is a kind of measure or of much conueniencie with it: and therefore in their descriptions be alwayes coupled together (statica et metrica) weight and measures. Hereupon it seemeth the Philosopher gathers a triple proportion, to wit, the Arithmetical, the Geometrical, and the Musical. And by one of these three is euerie other proportion guided of the things that haue conueniencie by relation, as the visible by light colour and shadow: the audible by stirres, times and accents: the odorable by smelles of sundry temperaments: the tastible by fauours to the rate: the tangible by his obiectes in this or that regard. Of all which we leaue to speake, returning to our poeticall proportion, which holdeth of the Musical, because as we sayd before Poesie is a skill to speake and write harmonically: and verses or rime be a kind of Musicall vtterance, by reason of a certaine congruities in founds pleasing the eare, though not perchance so exquisitely as the harmonicall contents of the artificiall Musicke, consisting in strained tunes, as is the vocall Musike, or that of melodious instruments, as Lutes, Harpes, Regals, Records and such like. And this our proportion Poeticall resteth in five points: Staffe, Measure, Concord, Scituation and figure all which shall be spoken of in their places.

CHAP. II.

Staffe in our vulgare Poesie I know not why it should be so called, vnlesse it be for that we vnderstand it for a bearer or supporter of a song or ballad, not vnlike the old weake bodie, that is stayed vp by his staffe, and were not otherwise able to walke or to stand vp-right. The Italian called it Stanza, as if we should say a resting place: and if we consider well the forme of this Poeticall staffe, we shall finde it to be a certaine number of verses allowed to go altogether and ioyned without any intermission, and doe or should finish vp all the sentences of the same with a full period, vnlesse it be in som speciall cases, and there to stay till another staffe follow of like sort: and the shortest staffe containeth not vnder foure verses, nor the longest about ten, if it passe that number it is rather a whole ditty then properly a staffe. Also for the more part the staues stand rather vpon the euen number of verses then the odde, though there be of both sorts. The first proportion then of a staffe is by quadrien or foure verses. The second of five verses, and is seldome vsed. The third by sezzine or fixe verses, and is not only most vsual, but also very pleasant to th'eare.

The fourth is in feuen verses, and is the chiefe of our ancient proportions vsed by any rimer writing any thing of historical or graue poeme, as ye may see in Chaucer and Lidgate th'one writing the loues of Troylus and Cresseida, th'other of the fall of Princes: both by them translated not deuised. The first [fifth?] proportion is of eight veries very stately and Heroicke, and which I like better then that of feuen, because it receaueth better band. The sixt is of nine verses, rare but very graue. The seuenth proportion is of tenne verses, very stately, but in many mens opinion too long: neuerthelesse of very good grace and much grauitie. Of eleuen and twelue I find none ordinary staues vsed in any vulgar language, neither doth it serue well to continue any historicall report and ballade, or other song: but is a dittie of it self, and no staffe, yet some moderne writers haue vsed it but very seldome. Then last of all haue ye a proportion to be vsed in the number of your staues, as to a caroll and a ballade, to a song, and a round, or virelay. For to an historicall poeme no certain number is limited, but as the matter fals out: also a distick or couple of verses is not to be accompted a staffe, but serues for a continuance as we see in Elegie, Epitaph, Epigramme or such meetres, of plaine concord not harmonically entangled, as some other songs of more delicate musick be.

A staffe of foure verses containeth in it selfe matter sufficient to make a full periode or complement of sence, though it doe not alwayes so, and therefore may go by diuisions.

A staffe of foue verses, is not much vsed because he that can not comprehend his periode in foure verses, will rather driue it into six then leaue it in foue, for that the euen number is more agreable to the eare then the odde is.

A staffe of fixe verses, is very pleasant to the eare, and also serueth for a greater complement then the inferior staues, which maketh him more commonly to be vsed.

A staffe of feuen verses, most vsuall with our auncient makers, also the staffe of eight, nine and ten of larger complement then the rest, are onely vsed by the later makers, and vnlesse they go with very good bande, do not so well as the inferiour staues. Therefore if ye make your staffe of eight, by two fowers not entangled, it is not a huitaine or a staffe of eight, but two quadreins, so is it in ten verses, not being entangled they be but two staues of fiae.

CHAP. III.

Meeter and measure is all one, for what the Greekes called μετρον, the Latines call Mensura, and is but the quantitie of a verse, either long or short. This quantitie with them consisteth in the number of their feete: and with vs in the number of fillables, which are comprehended in euery verse, not regarding his feete, otherwise then that we allow in scanning our verse, two fillables to make one short portion (suppose it a foote) in euery verse. And after that sort ye may say, we haue feete in our vulgare rymes, but that is improperly: for a foote by his sence naturall is a member of office and function, and serueth to three purposes, that is to say, to go, to runne, and to stand still: so as he must be sometimes swift, sometimes slow, sometime vnegally marching or peradventure stiddy. And if our feete Poeticall want these qualities it can not be fayd a foote in sence translatiue as here. And this commeth to passe, by reason of the euident motion and stirre, which is perceiued in the founding of our wordes not alwayes egall: for some aske longer, some shorter time to be vttered in, and so by the Philosophers definition, stirre is the true measure of time. The Greekes and Latines because their wordes hapned to be of many fillables, and very few of one fillable, it fell out right with them to conceiue and also to perceiue, a notable diuersitie of motion and times in the pronuntiation of their wordes, and therefore to euery bifillable they allowed two times, and to a trifillable three times, and to euery polifillable more, according to his quantitie, and their times were some long, some short according as their motions were flow or swift. For the found of some fillable stayd the eare a great while, and others slid away so quickly, as if they had not bene pronounced, then euery fillable being allowed one time, either short or long, it fell out that euery tetrafillable had foure times, euery trifillable three, and the bifillable two, by which obseruation euery word, not vnder that sise, as he ranne or stood in a verse, was called by them a foote of such and so many times, namely the bifillable was either of two long times as the spondeus, or two short, as the pirchius, or of a long and a short as the trocheus, or of a short and a long as the iambus: the like rule did they set vpon the word trifillable, calling him a foote of three times: as the dactylus of a long and two short: the mollossus of three long, the tribracchus of three short, the amphibracchus of two long and a short, the amphimacer of two short and a long. The word of foure fillables they called a foote of foure times, some or all of them, either long or short: and yet not so content they mounted higher, and because their wordes serued well thereto, they made feete of fixe times: but this proceeded more of curiositie, then otherwise: for whatsoeuer foote passe the trifillable is compounded of his inferiour as euery number Arithmetically aboue three, is compounded of the inferiour number as twise two make foure, but the three is made of one number, videl. of two and an vnitie. Now because our naturall and primitiue language of the Saxon English, beares not any wordes (at least very few) of moe fillables then one (for whatsoeuer we see exceede, commeth to vs by the alterations of our language growen vpon many conquestes and otherwise) there could be no such obseruation of times in the found of our wordes, and for that cause we could not haue the feete which the Greeks and Latines haue in their meetres: but of this stirre and motion of their deuifed feete, nothing can better shew the qualitie then these runners at common games, who setting forth from the first goale, one giueth the start speedely and perhaps before he come half way to th'other goale, decayeth his pace, as a man weary and fainting : another is slow at the start, but by amending his pace keepes euen with his fellow or perchance gets before him : another one while gets ground, another while loseth it again, either in the beginning, or middle of his race, and so proceedes vnegally sometimes swift somtimes slow as his breath or forces serue him : another sort there be that plod on, and will neuer change their pace, whether they win or lose the game : in this maner doth the Greeke daclilus begin slowly and keepe on swifter till th'end, for his race being deuided into three parts, he spends one, and that is the first slowly, the other twaine swiftly : the anapestus his two first parts swiftly, his last slowly : the Moloffus spends all three parts of his race slowly and egally. Bacchius his first part swiftly, and two last parts slowly. The tribrachus all his three parts swiftly : the antibacchius his two first partes slowly, his last and third swiftly : the amphimacer, his first and last part slowly and his middle part swiftly : the amphibracus his first and last parts swiftly but his midle part slowly, and so of others by like proportion. This was a pretie phantasticall obseruation of them, and yet brought their meetres to haue a maruelous good grace, which was in Greeke called  $\acute{\epsilon}\upsilon\theta\upsilon\mu\acute{o}\varsigma$  : whence we haue deriued this word ryme, but improperly and not wel because we haue no such feete or times or stirres in our meeters, by whose simpatie, or pleasant conueniencie with th'eare, we could take any delight : this rithmus of theirs, is not therefore our rime, but a certaine musicall numerositie in vtterance, and not a bare number as that of the Arithmetical computation is, which therefore is not called rithmus but arithmus. Take this away from them, I meane the running of their feete, there is nothing of curiositie among them more then with vs nor yet so much.

CHAP. III. [IV.]

How many sorts of measures we vse in our vulgar.

TO returne from rime to our measure againe, it hath bene sayd that according to the number of the fillables contained in euery verse, the same is sayd a long or short meeter, and his shortest proportion is of foure fillables, and his longest of twelue, they that vse it aboue, passe the bounds of good proportion. And euery meeter may be aswel in the odde as in the euen fillable, but better in the euen, and one verse may begin in the euen, and another follow in the odde, and so keepe a commendable proportion. The verse that containeth but two fillables, which may be in one word, is not vsuall: therefore many do deny him to be a verse, saying that it is but a foot, and that a meeter can haue no lesse then two feete at the least, but I find it otherwise aswell among the best Italian Poets, as also with our vulgar makers, and that two fillables serue wel for a short measure in the first place, and middle, and end of a staffe: and also in diuerse scituations and by fundry distances, and is very passionate and of good grace, as shalbe declared more at large in the Chapter of proportion by scituation.

The next measure is of two feete or of foure fillables, and then one word tetrafillable diuided in the middest makes vp the whole meeter, as thus

Rēūē rēntlie

Or a trifillable and one monofillable thus. Soueraigne God, or two bifillables and that is plesant thus, Restore againe, or with foure monofillables, and that is best of all thus, When I doe thinke, I finde no fauour in a meetre of three fillables nor in effect in any odde, but they may be vsed for varietie sake, and specially being enterlaced with others the meetre of six fillables is very sweete and delicate as thus.

*O God when I behold
This bright heauen so hye*

By thine owne hands of old Contriud fo cunningly.

The meter of feuen fillables is not vſual, no more is that of nine and eleuen, yet if they be well compoſed, that is, their Cefure well appointed, and their laſt accent which makes the concord, they are commendable inough, as in this ditty where one verſe is of eight an other is of feuen, and in the one the accent vpon the laſt, in the other vpon the laſt ſaue on[e].

*The ſmoakie ſighes, the bitter teares
That I in vaine haue waſted
The broken ſleepes, the woe and feares
That long in me haue laſted
Will be my death, all by thy guilt
And not by my deſeruing
Since ſo inconstantly thou wilt
Not loue but ſtill be ſweruing.*

And all the reaſon why theſe meeters in all fillable are allowable is, for that the ſharpe accent falles vpon the penultima or laſt ſaue one fillable of the verſe, which doth ſo drowne the laſt, as he ſeemeth to paſſe away in maner vnpronounced, and ſo make the verſe ſeeme euen: but if the accent fall vpon the laſt and leaue two flat to finiſh the verſe, it will not ſeeme ſo: for the odnes will more notoriously appeare, as for example in the laſt verſe before recited Not loue but ſtill be ſweruing, ſay thus Loue it is a maruelous thing. Both verſes be of egall quantitie, vidz. ſeauen fillables a peece, and yet the firſt ſeemes ſhorter then the later, who ſhewes a more odneſſe then the former by reaſon of his ſharpe accent which is vpon the laſt fillable, and makes him more audible then if he had ſlid away with a flat accent, as the word ſwéruing.

Your ordinarie rimers vſe very much their meaſures in the odde as nine and eleuen, and the ſharpe accent vpon the laſt fillable, which therefore makes him go ill fauouredly and like a minſtrels muſicke. Thus ſayd one in a meeter of eleuen very harſhly in mine care, whether it be for lacke of good rime or of good reaſon, or of both I wot not.

Her only sweete comfort, to drowne all annoy
For beauty surpassing the azured skie
I loue thee my darling, as ball of mine eye.*

This sort of composition in the odde I like not, vnlesse it be holpen by the Cesure or by the accent as I sayd before.

The meeter of eight is no lesse pleasant then that of fixe, and the Cesure fals iust in the middle, as this of the Earle of Surreyes.

When raging loue, with extreme payne.

The meeter of ten fillables is very stately and Heroicall, and must haue his Cesure fall vpon the fourth fillable, and leaue fixe behinde him thus.

I serue at ease, and gouerne all with woe.

This meeter of twelue fillables the French man calleth a verse Alexandrine, and is with our moderne rimers most vsuall: with the auncient makers it was not so. For before Sir Thomas Wiats time they were not vsed in our vulgar, they be for graue and stately matters fitter than for any other ditty of pleasure. Some makers write in verses of foureteene fillables, giuing the Cesure at the first eight, which proportion is tedious, for the length of the verse kepeth the eare too long from his delight, which is to heare the cadence or the tuneable accent in the ende of the verse. Neuerthelesse that of twelue if his Cesure be iust in the middle, and that ye suffer him to runne at full length, and do not as the common rimers do, or their Printer for sparing of paper, cut them of in the middest, wherin they make in two verses but halfe rime. They do very wel as wrote the Earle of Surrey translating the booke of the preacher.

Salomon Davids sonne, king of Ierusalem.

This verse is very good Alexandrine, but perchaunce woulde haue founded more musically, if the first word had bene a disyllable, or two monosyllables and not a trissyllable: hauing this sharpe accent vpon the Antepenultima as it hath, by which occasion it runnes like a

Daçtill, and carries the two later fillables away so speedily as it seemes but one foote in our vulgar measure, and by that meanes makes the verse seeme but of eleuen fillables, which odnesse is nothing pleasant to the eare. Iudge some body whether it would haue done better (if it might) haue bene sayd thus,

Robóham Dauids soune king of Ierusalem.

Letting the sharpe accent fall vpon bo, or thus

Reslóre king Dáuids súnne vntó Ierúsalem

For now the sharpe accent falles vpon bo, and so doth it vpon the last in reslóre, which was not in th'other verse. But because we haue seemed to make mention of Cesure, and to appoint his place in euery measure, it shall not be amisse to say somewhat more of it, and also of such pauses as are vsed in vtterance, and what commoditie or delectation they bring either to the speakers or to the hearers.

CHAP. IIII. [V.]
Of Cesure.

Here is no greater difference betwixt a ciuill and brutish vtterance then cleare distinction of voices: and the most laudable languages are alwaies most plaine and distinct, and the barbarous most confuse and indistinct: it is therefore requisite that leasure be taken in pronuntiation, such as may make our wordes plaine and most audible and agreable to the eare: also the breath asketh to be now and then releued with some pause or stay more or lesse: besides that the very nature of speech (because it goeth by claufes of feuerall construction and fence) requireth some space betwixt them with intermission of found, to th'end they may not huddle one vpon another so rudly and so fast that th'eare may not perceiue their difference. For these respects the auncient reformers of language, inuented, three maner of pauses, one of lesse leasure then another, and such feuerall intermissions of found to serue (besides easment to the breath) for a treble distinction of sentences or parts of speech, as they happened to be more or lesse perfect in sence. The shortest pause or intermission they called comma as who would say a peece of a speech cut of. The second they called colon, not a peece but as it were a member for his larger length, because it occupied twise as much time as the comma. The third they called periodus, for a complement or full pause, and as a resting place and perfection of so much former speech as had bene vttered, and from whence they needed not to passe any further vnles it were to renew more matter to enlarge the tale. This cannot be better represented then by example of these common trauailers by the hie ways, where they seeme to allow themselues three maner of staies or easements: one a horsebacke calling perchaunce for a cup of beere or wine, and hauing dronken it vp rides away and neuer lights: about noone he commeth to his Inne, and there baites him selfe and his horse an houre or more: at night when he can conueniently trauaile no further, he taketh vp his lodging, and rests him selfe till the morrow: from whence he followeth the course of a further voyage, if his businesse be such. Euen so our Poet when he hath made one verse, hath as it were finished one dayes iourney, and the while easeth him selfe with one baite at the least, which is a Comma or Cesure in the mid way, if the verse be euen and not odde, otherwise in some other place, and not iust in the middle. If there be no Cesure at all, and the verse long, the lesse is the makers skill and hearers delight. Therefore in a verse of twelue fillables the Cesure ought to fall right vpon the sixt fillable: in a verse of eleuen vpon the sixt also leauing fise to follow. In a verse of ten vpon the fourth, leauing fixe to follow. In a verse of nine vpon the fourth, leauing fise to follow. In a verse of eight iust in the midst, that is, vpon the fourth. In a verse of seauen, either vpon the fourth or none at all, the meeter very ill brooking any pause. In a verse of fixe fillables and vnder is needefull no Cesure

at all, because the breath asketh no reliefe: yet if ye giue any Comma, it is to make distinction of sense more then for any thing else: and such Cesure must neuer be made in the middest of any word, if it be well appointed. So may you see that the vse of these pawses or distinctions is not generally with the vulgar Poet as it is with the Prose writer because the Poetes cheife Musicke lying in his rime or concorde to heare the Simphonie, he maketh all the hast he can to be at an end of his verse, and delights not in many staves by the way, and therefore giueth but one Cesure to any verse: and thus much for the founding of a meetre. Neuerthelesse he may vse in any verse both his comma, colon, and interrogatiue point, as well as in prose. But our auncient rymers, as Chaucer, Lydgate and others, vsed these Cesures either very seldome, or not at all, or else very licentiously, and many times made their meetres (they called them riding ryme) of such vnshapely wordes as would allow no conuenient Cesure, and therefore did let their rymes runne out at length, and neuer stayd till they came to the end: which maner though it were not to be misliked in some sort of meetre, yet in euery long verie the Cesure ought to be kept precisely, if it were but to serue as a law to correct the licentiousnesse of rymers, besides that it pleateth the eare better, and sheweth more cunning in the maker by following the rule of his restraint. For a rymmer that will be tyed to no rules at all, but range as he list, may easily vtter what he will: but such maner of Poesie is called in our vulgar, ryme dogrell, with which rebuke we will in no case our maker should be touched. Therefore before all other things let his ryme and concord be true, cleare and audible with no lesse delight, then almost the strayned note of a Musicians mouth, and not darke or wrenched by wrong writing as many doe to patch vp their meetres, and so follow in their arte neither rule, reason nor ryme. Much more might be sayd for the vse of your three pauses, comma, colon, and periode, for perchance it be not all a matter to vse many com- mas, and few, nor colons likewise, or long or short perio-odes, for it is diuerfly vsed, by diuers good writers. But because it apperteineth more to the oratour or writer in prose then in verse, I will say no more in it, then thus, that they be vsed for a commodious and sensible distinction of clauses in prose, since euery verse is as it were a clause of it selfe, and limited with a Cesure howsoeuer the fence beare, perfect or imperfect, which difference is obseruable betwixt the prose and the meeter.

CHAP. V. [VI.]

Of Proportion in Concord, called Symphonie or rime.

BEcause we vse the word rime (though by maner of abusio) yet to helpe that fault againe we apply it in our vulgar Poesie another way very commendably and curiously. For wanting the currantnesse of the Greeke and Latine fete, in stead thereof we make in th' ends of our verses a certaine tunable sound: which anon after with another verse reasonably distant we accord together in the last fall or cadence: the eare taking pleasure to heare the like tune reported, and to feele his returne. And for this purpose serue the monosyllables of our English Saxons excellently well, because they do naturally and indifferently receiue any accent, and in them if they finish the verse, resteth the shrill accent of necessitie, and so doth it not in the last of euery bissyllable, nor of euery polisyllable word: but to the purpose, rime is a borrowed word from the Greeks by the Latines and French, from them by vs Saxon angles, and by abusio as hath bene sayd, and therefore it shall not do amisse to tell what this rithmos was with the Greekes, for what is it with vs hath bene already sayd. There is an accomptable number which we call arithmeticall (arithmos) as one, two, three. There is also a muscalle or audible number, fashioned by stirring of tunes and their sundry times in the vtterance of our wordes, as when the voice goeth high or low, or sharpe or flat, or swift or slow: and this is called rithmos or numerositie, that is to say, a certaine flowing vtterance by slipper words and fillables, such as the toung easily vtters, and the eare with pleasure receiueth, and which flowing of wordes with much volubilitie smoothly proceeding from the mouth is in some sort harmonicall and breedeth to th'eare a great compassion. This point grew by the smooth and delicate running of their feete, which we haue not in our vulgare, though we vse as much as may be the most flowing words and slippery fillables, that we can picke out: yet do not we call that by the name of ryme, as the Greekes did: but do giue the name of ryme onely to our concordes, or tunable consentes in the latter end of our verses, and which concordes the Greekes nor Latines neuer vsed in their Poesie till by the barbarous souldiers out of the campe, it was brought into the Court and thence to the schoole, as hath bene before remembred: and yet the Greekes and Latines both vsed a maner of speach, by clausof like termination, which they called ὁμοιοτέλευτον, and was the nearest that they approached to our ryme: but is not our right concord: so as we in abusing this terme (ryme) be neuerthelesse excusable applying it to another point in Poesie no lesse curious then their rithme or numerositie which in deede passed the whole verse throughout, whereas our concordes keepe but the latter end of euery verse, or perchaunce the middle and the end in meetres that be long.

CHAP. VI. [VII.]

Of accent, time and stir perceiued euidently in the distinction of mans voice, and which makes the flowing of a meeter.

OWE because we haue spoken of accent, time and stirre or motion in wordes, we will fet you downe more at large what they be. The auncient Greekes and Latines by reason their speech fell out originally to be fashioned with words of many fillables for the most part, it was of necessity that they could not vtter euery fillable with one like and egall founde, nor in like space of time, nor with like motion or agility: but that one must be more suddenly and quickly forsaken, or longer pawed vpon then another: or founded with a higher note and clearer voyce then another, and of necessitie this diuersitie of found, must fall either vpon the last fillable, or vpon the last faue one, or vpon the third and could not reach higher to make any notable difference, it caused them to giue vnto three different founds, three feuerall names: to that which was highest lift vp and most eleuate or shrillest in the eare, they gaue the name of the sharpe accent, to the lowest and most base because it seemed to fall downe rather then to rise vp, they gaue the name of the heauy accent, and that other which seemed in part to lift vp and in part to fall downe, they called the circumflex, or compast accent: and if new termes were not odious, we might very properly call him the (windabout) for so is the Greek word. Then bycause euery thing that by nature fals down is said heauy, and whatfoeuer naturally mounts vpward is said light, it gaue occasion to say that there were diuersities in the motion of the voice, as swift and slow, which motion also presupposes time, bycause time is mensura motus, by the Philosopher: so haue you the causes of their primitiue inuention and vse in our arte of Poesie, all this by good obseruation we may perceiue in our vulgar wordes if they be of mo fillables then one, but specially if they be trifillables, as for example in these wordes [altitude] and [heauinesse] the sharpe accent falles vpon [al] and [he] which be the antepenultimaes: the other two fall away speedily as if they were scarfe founded in this trifillable [forsaken] the sharp accent fals vpon [fa] which is the penultima, and in the other two is heauie and obscure. Again in these bifillables, endüre, vnüre, demüre: aspire, desire, retire, your sharpe accent falles vpon the last fillable: but in words monofillable which be for the more part our naturall Saxon English, the accent is indifferent, and may be vsed for sharp or flat and heauy at our pleasure. I say Saxon English, for our Normane English alloweth vs very many bissillables, and also trissillables as, reuerence, diligence, amorous, desirous, and such like.

CHAP. VII. [VIII.]

Of your Cadences by which your meeter is made Symphonicall when they be sweetest and most solemne in a verse.

AS the smoothnesse of your words and fillables running vpon feete of fundrie quantities, make with the Greekes and Latines the body of their verses numerous or Rithmicall, so in our vulgar Poesie, and of all other nations at this day, your verses answering eche other by couples, or at larger distances in good [cadence] is it that maketh your meeter symphonicall. This cadence is the fal of a verse in euey last word with a certaine tunable sound which being matched with another of like sound, do make a [concord.] And the whole cadence is contained sometime in one fillable, sometime in two, or in three at the most: for aboue the antepenultima there reacheth no accent (which is chiefe cause of the cadence) vnlesse it be by vsurpation in some English words, to which we giue a sharpe accent vpon the fourth as, Hónorable, mátrimonie, pátrimonie, míserable, and such other as would neither make a sweete cadence, nor easily find any word of like quantitie to match them. And the accented fillable with all the rest vnder him make the cadence, and no fillable aboue, as in these words, Agíllitie, facíllitie, subièctiion, dirèctiion, and these bissillables, Tènder, slènder, trístie, íustie, but alwayes the cadence which falleth vpon the last fillable of a verse is sweetest and most commendable: that vpon the penultima more light, and not so pleasant: but falling vpon the antepenultima is most vnpleasant of all, because they make your meeter too light and triuiall, and are fitter for the Epigrammatist or Comicall

Poet then for the Lyrick and Elegiack, which are accounted the sweeter Musickes. But though we haue sayd that (to make good concord) your feuerall verses should haue their cadences like, yet must there be some difference in their orthographie, though not in their sound, as if one cadence be [constraine] the next [restraine] or one [aspire] another [respire] this maketh no good concord, because they are all one, but if ye will exchange both these consonants of the accented syllable, or voyde but one of them away, then will your cadences be good and your concord to, as to say, restraine, refraine, remaine : aspire, desire, retire : which rule neuertheless is not well obserued by many makers for lacke of good iudgement and delicate eare. And this may suffice to shew the vse and nature of your cadences, which are in effect all the sweetnesse and cunning in our vulgar Poesie.

CHAP. VIII. [IX.]

Now there can not be in a maker a fowler fault, then to falsifie his accent to serue his cadence, or by vntrue orthographie to wrench his words to helpe his rime, for it is a signe that such a maker is not copious in his owne language, or (as they are wont to say) not halfe his crafts maister: as for example, if one should rime to this word [Reflore] he may not match him with [Doore] or [Poore] for neither of both are of like terminant, either by good orthography or in naturall found, therefore such rime is strained, so is it to this word [Ram] to say [came] or to [Beane] [Den] for they found not nor be written a like, and many other like cadences which were superfluous to recite, and are vsuall with rude rimers who obserue not precisely the rules of [profodie] neuertheless in all such cases (if necessitie constrained) it is somewhat more tollerable to help the rime by false orthographie, then to leaue an vnplefant diffonance to the eare, by keeping trewe orthographie and loofing the rime, as for example it is better to rime [Dore] with [Reftore] then in his truer orthographie, which is [Doore] and to this word [De-fire] to fay [Fier] then fyre though it be otherwise better written fire. For fince the cheife grace of our vulgar Poesie confisteth in the Symphonie, as hath bene already fayd, our maker muft not be too licentious in his concords, but fee that they go euen, iuft and melodious in the eare, and right fo in the numerositie or currantneffe of the whole body of his verfe, and in euery other of his proportions. For a licentious maker is in truth but a bungler and not a Poet. Such men were in effect the moft part of all your old rimers and fpecially Gower, who to make vp his rime would for the moft part write his terminant fillable with false orthographie, and many times not fticke to put in a plaine French word for an Englifh, and fo by your leaue do many of our common rimers at this day: as he that by all likelyhood, hauing no word at hand to rime to this word [ioy] he made his other verfe ende in [Roy] faying very impudently thus,

Who art the higheft God of any heauenly Roy.*

Which word was neuer yet receiued in our language for an Englifh word. Such extreme licentioufneffe is vtterly to be banifhed from our fchoole, and better it might haue bene borne with in old riming writers, bycaufe they liued in a barbarous age, and were graue morall men but very homely Poets, fuch alfo as made moft of their workes by tranflation out of the Latine and French tounge, and few or none of their owne engine as may eafely be knowen to them that lift to looke vpon the Poemes of both languages.

Finally as ye may ryme with wordes of all fortes, be they of many fillables or few, fo neuertheleffe is there a choife by which to make your cadence (before remembered) moft commendable, for fome wordes of exceeding great length, which haue bene fetched from the Latine inkhorne or borrowed of strangers, the vse of them in ryme is nothing pleasant, fauing perchaunce to the common people, who reioyse much to be at playes and enterludes, and besides their naturall ignoraunce, haue at all such times their eares so attentiuē to the matter, and their eyes vpon the shewes of the stage, that they take little heede to the cunning of the rime, and therefore be as well satisfied with that which is grosse, as with any other finer and more delicate.

CHAP. IX. [X.]

Of concorde in long and short measures, and by neare or farre distaunces, and which of them is most commendable.

Vt this ye must obserue withall, that bycause your concordes containe the chief part of Musicke in your meetre, their distaunces may not be too wide or farre a funder, lest th'eare should loofe the tune, and be defrauded of his delight, and whensoever ye see any maker vse large and extraordinary distaunces, ye must thinke he doth intende to shew himselfe more artificiall then popular, and yet therein is not to be discommended, for respects that shalbe remembred in some other place of this booke.

Note also that rime or concorde is not commendably vsed both in the end and middle of a verse, vnlesse it be in toyes and trifling Poesies, for it sheweth a certaine lightnesse either of the matter or of the makers head, albeit these common rimers vse it much, for as I sayd before, like as the Symphonie in a verse of great length, is (as it were) lost by looking after him, and yet may the meetre be very graue and stately: so on the other side doth the ouer busie and too speedy returne of one maner of tune, too much annoy and as it were glut the eare, vnlesse it be in small and popular Musickes song by these Cantabanqui vpon benches and barrels heads where they haue none other audience then boys or cuntry fellows that passe by them in the streete, or elſe by blind harpers or ſuch like tauerne minſtrels that giue a fit of mirth for a groat, and their matters being for the moſt part ſtories of old time, as the tale of Sir Topas, the reportes of Beuis of Southampton, Guy of Warwicke, Adam Bell, and Clymme of the Clough and ſuch other old Romances or historicall rimes, made purpoſely for recreation of the common peple at Chriſtmaffe diners and brideales, and in tauernes and alehouſes and ſuch other places of baſe refort, alſo they be vſed in Carols and rounds and ſuch light or laſciuious Poemes, which are commonly more commodiouſly vttered by theſe buffons or vices in playes then by any other perſon. Such were the rimes of Skelton (vſurping the name of a Poet Laureat) being in deede but a rude rayling rimer and all his doings ridiculous, he vſed both ſhort diſtaunces and ſhort meaſures pleaſing onely the popular eare: in our courtly maker we baniſh them vtterly. Now alſo haue ye in euery ſong or ditty concorde by compaſſe and concorde entangled and a mixt of both, what that is and how they be vſed ſhalbe declared in the chapter of proportion by ſituation.

CHAP. X. [XI.]
Of proportion by ſituation.

His proportion conſiſteth in placing of euery verſe in a ſtaffe or ditty by ſuch reaſonable diſtaunces, as may beſt ſerue the eare for delight, and alſo to ſhew the Poets art and variety of Muſick, and the proportion is double. One by marſhalling the meetres, and limiting their diſtaunces hauing regard to the rime or concorde how they go and returne: another by placing euery verſe, hauing a regard to his meaſure and quantitie onely, and not to his concorde as to ſet one ſhort meetre to three long, or foure ſhort and two long, or a ſhort meaſure and a long, or of diuers lengthes with relation one to another, which maner of Situation, euen without reſpect of the rime, doth alter the nature of the Poesie, and make it either lighter or grauer, or more merry, or mournfull, and many wayes passionate to the eare and hart of the hearer, seeming for this point that our maker by his measures and concordes of fundry proportions doth counterfait the harmonically tunes of the vocall and instrumentall Musickes. As the Dorien because his falls, fallies and compasse be diuers from those of the Phrigien, the Phrigien likewise from the Lydien, and all three from the Eolien, Miolidien and Ionien, mounting and falling from note to note such as be to them peculiar, and with more or lesse leasure or precipitation. Euen so by diuersitie of placing and scituation of your measures and concordes, a short with a long, and by narrow or wide distances, or thicker or thinner bestowing of them your proportions differ, and breedeth a variable and strange harmonie not onely in the eare, but also in the conceit of them that heare it : whereof this may be an ocular example.

Where ye see the concord or rime in the third distance, and the measure in the fourth, sixth or second distaunces, whereof ye may deuise as many other as ye list, so the staffe be able to beare it. And I set you downe an ocular example : because ye may the better conceiue it. Likewise it so falleth out most times your ocular proportion doeth declare the nature of the audible : for if it please the eare well, the same represented by delineation to the view pleafeth the eye well and è conuerso : and this is by a naturall simpathie, betweene the eare and the eye, and betweene tunes and colours, even as there is the like betweene the other fences and their obiects of which it appertaineth not here to speake. Now for the distances vsually obserued in our vulgar Poesie, they be in the first second third and fourth verfe, or if the verfe be very fhort in the fifth and fixt and in fome maner of Mufickes farre aboue.

And the firft diftance for the moft part goeth all by distick or couples of verfes agreeing in one cadence, and do paffe fo speedily away and fo often returne agayne, as their tunes are neuer loft, nor out of the eare, one couple fupplying another fo nye and fo fuddenly, and this is the moft vulgar proportion of diftance or fituation, fuch as vsed Chaucer in his Canterbury tales, and Gouuer in all his workes.

Second diftance is, when ye paffe ouer one verfe, and ioyne the firft and the third, and fo continue on till an other like diftance fall in, and this is alfo vsuall and common, as

Third diftance is, when your rime falleth vpon the firft and fourth verfe ouerleaping two, this maner is not fo common but pleafant and allowable inough.

In which cafe the two verfes ye leaue out are ready to receiue their concord by the fame diftance or any other ye like better. The fourth diftance is by ouer-fkiipping three verfes and lighting vpon the fifth, this maner is rare and more artificiall then popular, vnleffe it be in fome fpeciall cafe, as when the meetres be fo little and fhort as they make no fhew of any great delay before they returne, ye fhall haue example of both.

And thefe ten litle meeters make but one Exometer at length.

There be larger diftances alfo, as when the firft concord falleth vpon the fixt verfe, and is very pleafant if they be ioyned with other diftances not fo large, as

There be alfo, of the feuenth, eight, tenth, and twe[lf]th diftance, but then they may not go thicke, but two or three fuch diftances ferue to proportion a whole fong, and all betweene must be of other lesse distances, and these wide distaunces serue for coupling of staues, or for to declare high and passionate or graue matter, and also for art: Petrarch hath giuen vs examples hereof in his Canzoni, and we by lines of fundry lengths and distances as followeth,

And all that can be obiected against this wide distance is to say that the eare by loosing his concord is not satisfied. So is in deede the rude and popular eare but not the learned, and therefore the Poet must know to whose eare he maketh his rime, and accommodate himselfe thereto, and not giue such musicke to the rude and barbarous, as he would to the learned and delicate eare.

There is another fort of proportion vsed by Petrarche called the Seizino, not riming as other songs do, but by chusing fixe wordes out of which all the whole dittie is made, euery of those fixe commencing and ending his verse by course, which restraint to make the dittie sensible will try the makers cunning, as thus.

Besides all this there is in Situation of the concords two other points, one that it go by plaine and cleere compasse not intangled: another by enterweauing one with another by knots, or as it were by band, which is more or lesse busie and curious, all as the maker will double or redouble his rime or concords, and fet his distances farre or nigh, of all which I will giue you ocular examples, as thus.

And first in a Quadreine there are but two proportions, for foure verses in this last fort coupled, are but two Diflicks, and not a staffe quadreine or of foure.

The staffe of five hath feuen proportions as, whereof some of them be harsher and vnpleasaunter to the eare then other some be.

The Sixaine or staffe of fixe hath ten proportions, wherof some be vsuall, some not vsuall, and not so sweet one as another.

The staffe of feuen verses hath feuen proportions, whereof one onely is the vsuall of our vulgar, and kept by our old Poets Chaucer and other in their historicall reports and other ditties: as in the last part of them that follow next.

The huitain or staffe of eight verses, hath eight proportions such as the former staffe, and because he is longer, he hath one more than the settaine.

The staffe of nine verses hath yet moe then the eight, and the staffe of ten more then the ninth and the twelfth, if such were allowable in ditties, more then any of them all, by reason of his largeness receiving more compasses and enterweavings, alwayes considered that the very large distances be more artificiall, then popularly pleafant, and yet do giue great grace and grauitie, and moue passion and affections more vehemently, as it is well to be obserued by Petrarcha his Canzoni.

Now ye may perceiue by these proportions before described, that there is a band to be giuen euery verse in a staffe, so as none fall out alone or vncoupled, and this band maketh that the staffe is sayd fast and not loose: euen as ye see in buildings of stone or bricke the mason giueth a band, that is a length to two breadths, and vpon necessitie diuers other sorts of bands to hold in the worke fast and maintaine the perpendicularitie of the wall: so in any staffe of seuen or eight or more verses, the coupling of the more meeters by rime or concord, is the faster band: the fewer the looser band, and therefore in a huiteine he that putteth foure verses in one concord and foure in another concord, and in a dizaine fiue, sheweth himselfe more cunning, and also more copious in his owne language. For he that can find two words of concord, can not find foure or fiue or fixe, vnlesse he haue his owne language at will. Sometime also ye are driuen of necessitie to close and make band more then ye would, lest otherwise the staffe should fall afunder and seeme two staves: and this is in a staffe of eight and ten verses: whereas without a band in the middle, it would seeme two quadriens or two quintaines, which is an error that many makers slide away with. Yet Chaucer and others in the staffe of seuen and fixe do almost as much a misse, for they shut vp the staffe with a dislicke, concurring with none other verse that went before, and maketh but a loose rime, and yet bycause of the double cadence in the last two verses serue the eare well inough. And as there is in euery staffe, band, giuen to the verses by concord more or lesse busie: so is there in some cases a band giuen to euery flaffe, and that is by one whole verfe running alone throughout the ditty or ballade, either in the middle or end of euery flaffe. The Greekes called fuch vncoupled verfe Epimonic, the Latines Verfus intercalaris. Now touching the fituation of meafures, there are as manie or more proportions of them which I referre to the makers phantafie and choife, contented with two or three ocular examples and no moe.

Which maner of proportion by fituation of meafures giueth more efficacie to the matter oftentimes then the concords them felues, and both proportions concurring together as they needes muft, it is of much more beautie and force to the hearers mind.

To finifh the learning of this diuifion, I will fet you downe one example of a ditty written extempore with this deuife, fhewing not onely much promptneffe of wit in the maker, but alfo great arte and a notable memorie. Make me faith this writer to one of the companie, fo many ftrokes or lines with your pen as ye would haue your fong containe verfes: and let euery line beare his feuerall length, euen as ye would haue your verfe of meafure. Suppofe of foure, fiue, fixe or eight or more fillables, and fet a figure of euerie number at th'end of the line, whereby ye may knowe his meafure. Then where you will haue your rime or concord to fall, marke it with a compaft ftroke or femicircle paffing ouer thofe lines, be they farre or neare in diftance, as ye haue feene before defcribed. And bycaufe ye fhall not thinke the maker hath premeditated beforehand any fuch fashioned ditty, do ye your felfe make one verfe whether it be of perfect or imperfect fenfe, and giue it him for a theame to make all the rest vpon : if ye shall perceiue the maker do keepe the meafures and rime as ye haue appointed him, and besides do make his dittie sensible and en-fuant to the first verse in good reason, then may ye say he is his crafts maister. For if he were not of a plentiful discourse, he could not vpon the sudden shape an entire dittie vpon your imperfect theame or proposition in one verse. And if he were not copious in his language, he could not haue such store of wordes at commaundement, as should supply your concords. And if he were not of a maruelous good memory he could not obserue the rime and meafures after the distances of your limitation, keeping with all grauitie and good sense in the whole dittie.

CHAP. XI. [XII.]
 Of Proportion in figure.

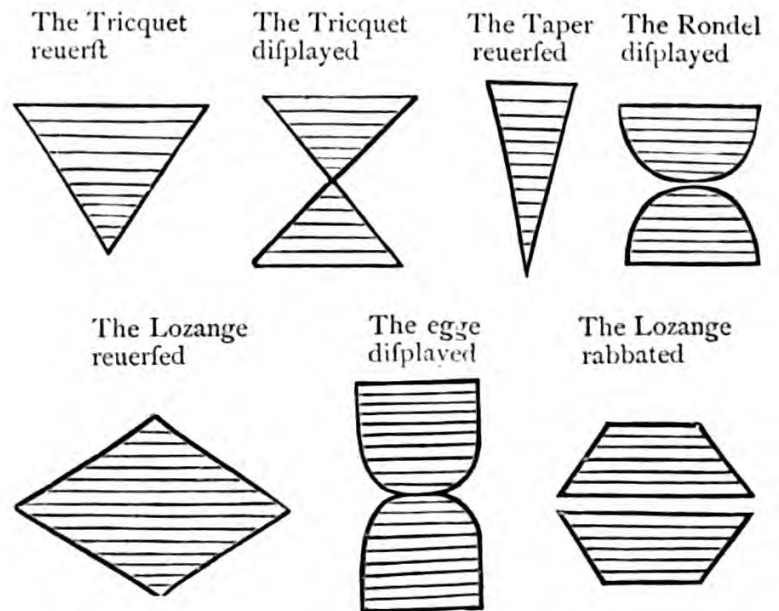

Our last proportion is that of figure, so called for that it yelds an ocular representation, your meeters being by good symmetrie reduced into certaine Geometricall figures, whereby the maker is restrained to keepe him within his bounds, and sheweth not onely more art, but serueth also much better for briefenesse and subtiltie of deuce. And for the same respect are also fittest for the pretie amourets in Court to entertaine their seruants and the time withall, their delicate wits requiring some commendable exercise to keepe them from idlenesse. I find not of this proportion vsed by any of the Greeke or Latine Poets, or in any vulgar writer, sauing of that one forme which they cal Anacreens egge. But being in Italie conuerfant with a certaine gentleman, who had long trauailed the Orientall parts of the world, and seene the Courts of the great Princes of China and Tartarie. I being very inquisitiue to know of the subtilties of those countreyes, and especially in matter of learning and of their vulgar Poesie, he told me that they are in all their inuentions most wittie, and haue the vse of Poesie or riming, but do not delight so much as we do in long tedious descriptions, and therefore when they will vtter any pretie conceit, they reduce it into metricall feet, and put it in forme of a Lozange or square, or such other figure, and so engrauen in gold, filuer or iuorie, and sometimes with letters of ametist, rubie, emeralde or topas curiously cemented and peeced together, they fende them in chaines, bracelets, collars and girdles to their mistresses to weare for a remembrance. Some fewe measures composed in this sort this gentleman gaue me, which I translated word for word and as neere as I could followed both the phraze and the figure, which is somewhat hard to performe, because of the restraint of the figure from which ye may not digresse. At the beginning they wil feeme nothing pleasant to an English eare, but time and vsage wil make them acceptable inough, as it doth in all other new guises, be it for wearing of apparell or otherwise. The formes of your Geometricall figures be hereunder reprinted.

Of the Lozange.

The Lozange is a most beautifull figure, and fit for this purpose, being in his kind a quadrangle reuerft, with his point vpward like to a quarrell of glasse the Greekes and Latines both call it Rombus which may be the cause as I suppose why they also gaue that name to the fish commonly called the Turbot, who beareth iustly that figure, it ought not to containe about thirteene or fifteene or one and twentie meetres, and the longest furnisheth the middle angle, the rest passe vpward and downward, still abating their lengthes by one or two fillables till they come to the point: the Fuzie is of the same nature but that he is sharper and slenderer. I will giue you an example or two of those which my Italian friend bestowed vpon me, which as neare as I could I translated into the same figure obseruing the phraze of the Orientall speach word for word.

A great Emperor in Tartary whom they cal Can, for his good fortune in the wars and many notable conquests he had made, was furnamed Temir Cutzclewe, this man loued the Lady Kermesine, who presented him returning from the conquest of Corafoon (a great kingdom adioyning) with this Lozange made in letters of rubies and diamants entermingled thus

Sound
O Harpe
Shril lie out
Temir the stout
Rider who with sharpe
Trenching blade of bright steele
Hath made his fiercest foes to feele
All such as wrought him shame or harme
The strength of his braue right arme,
Cleauing hard downe vnto the eyes
The raw skulles of his enemies,
Much honor hath he wonne
By doughtie deedes done
In Cora soon
And all the
Round.

To which Can Temir answered in Fuzie, with letters of Emeralls and Ametists artificially cut and entermingled, thus

Fine
Sore batailes
Mansfully fought
In bloudy fieldes
With bright blade in hand
Hath Temir won & forst to yeld
Many a Captaine strong & stoute
And many a king his Crowne to wayle,
Conquering large countreys and land,
Yet ne uer wanne I vi cto rie,
I speake it to my greate glo rie,
So deare and ioy full vn to me,
As when I did first con quere thee
O Kerme sine, of all myne foes
The most cruell, of all myne woes
The smartest, the sweetest
My proude Con quest
My ri chest pray
O once a daye
Lend me thy sight
Whose only light
Keepes me
Aliue.

Of the Triangle or Triquet.

The Triangle is an halfe square, Lozange or Fuzie parted vpon the croffe angles: and so his bafe being brode and his top narrow, it receaueth meetres of many fizes one shorter then another : and ye may vie this figure standing or reuerfed, as thus.

A certaine great Sultan of Perfia called Ribuska, entertaynes in loue the Lady Selamour, sent her this triquet reuest pitiously bemoning his estate, all fet in merquetry with letters of blew Saphire and Topas artificially cut and entermingled.

*Selamour dearer than his owne life,
To thy distressed wretch captiue,
Ribuska whome late by erst
Most cruelly thou perst
With thy dead ly dart,
That paire of starres
Shining a farre
Turne from me, to me
That I may and may not see
The smile, the loue
That lead and driue
Me to die to liue
Twise yea thrise
In one houre.*

To which Selamour to make the match egall, and the figure entire, answered in a standing Triquet richly engrauen with letters of like fluffe.

*Power Of death
Nor of life
Hath Selamour,
With Gods it is riye
To geue and bereue breath,
I may for pitie perchaunce
Thy lost libertie restore,
Vpon thine othe with this penaunce,
That while thou liuest thou neuer loue no more.*

This condition feeming to Sultan Ribuska very hard to performe, and cruell to be enioyned him, doeth by another figure in Taper, signifying hope, answere the Lady Selamour, which dittie for lack of time I translated not.

Of the Spire or Taper called Pyramis.

The Taper is the longest and sharpest triangle that is, and while he mounts vpward he waxeth continually more slender, taking both his figure and name of the fire, whose flame if ye marke it, is alwaies pointed, and naturally by his forme couets to clymbe : the Greekes

call him Pyramis of  $\pi\acute{\upsilon}\rho$ . The Latines in vse of Architecture called him Obeliscus, it holdeth the altitude of six ordinary triangles, and in metrifizing his base can not well be larger then a meetre of six, therefore in his altitude he wil require diuers rabates to hold so many sizes of meetres as shall ferue for his composition, for neare the toppe there wilbe roome litle inough for a meetre of two fillables, and sometimes of one to finish the point. I haue fet you downe one or two examples to try how ye can disgest the maner of the deuise.

The Pillar, Pillaster or Cillinder.

The Pillar is a figure among all the rest of the Geometrical most beautiful, in respect that he is tall and vpright and of one bignesse from the bottom to the toppe. In Architecture he is considered with two accessarie parts, a pedestall or base, and a chapter or head, the body is the shaft. By this figure is signified stay, support, rest, state and magnificence, your dittie then being reduced into the forme of the Pillar, his base will require to beare the breath of a meetre of six or seuen or eight fillables: the shaft of foure: the chapter egall with the base, of this proportion I will giue you one or two examples which may suffice.

The Roundell or Spheare.

The most excellent of all the figures Geometrical is the round for his many perfections. First because he is euen and smooth, without any angle, or interruption, most voluble and apt to turne, and to continue motion, which is the author of life: he conteyneth in him the commodious description of euery other figure, and for his ample capacitie doth resemble the world or vniuers, and for his indefinitenesse hauing no speciall place of beginning nor end, beareth a similitude with God and eternitie. This figure hath three principall partes in his nature and vse much considerable: the circle, the beame, and the center. The circle is his largest compasse or circumference: the center is his middle and indiuisible point: the beame is a line stretching directly from the circle to the center, and contrariwise from the center to the circle. By this description our maker may fashion his meetre in Roundell, either with the circumference, and that is circlewise, or from the circumference, that is, like a beame, or by the circumference, and that is ouerthwart and dyamettrally from one side of the circle to the other.

A generall resemblance of the Roundell to God, the world and the Queene.

All and whole, and euer, and one,
Single, simple, eche where, alone,
These be counted as Clerkes can tell,
True properties, of the Roundell.
His still turning by consequence
And change, doe breede both life and fence.
Time, measure of stirre and rest,
Is also by his course exprest.
How swift the circle stirre aboue,
His center point doeth neuer moue:
All things that euer were or be,
Are closde in his concauitie.
And though he be, still turnde and tost,
No roome there wants nor none is lost.
The Roundell hath no bouch nor angle,
Which may his course slay or entangle.
The furthest part of all his spheare,
Is equally both farre and neare.

*So doth none other figure fare
 Where natures chattels closed are :
 And beyond his wide compasse,
 There is no body nor no place,
 Nor any wit that comprehends,
 Where it begins, or where it ends :
 And therefore all men doe agree,
 That it purports eternitie.
 God aboute the heauens so hie
 Is this Roundell, in world the skie,
 Vpon earth she, who beares the bell
 Of maydes and Queenes, is this Roundell :
 All and whole and euer alone,
 Single, fans peere, simple, and one.*

A speciall and particular resemblance of her Maiestie to the Roundell.

First her authoritie regall
 Is the circle compassing all :
 The dominion great and large
 Which God hath geuen to her charge :
 Within which most spacious bound
 She enuirones her people round,
 Retaining them by oth and liegeance.
 Within the pale of true obeysance :
 Holding imparked as it were,
 Her people like to heards of deere.
 Sitting among them in the middes
 Where she allowes and bannes and bids
 In what fashon she list and when,
 The seruices of all her men.
 Out of her breast as from an eye,
 Issue the rayes incessantly
 Of her iustice, bountie and might Spreading abroad their beames so bright,
 And reflect not, till they attaine
 The fardest part of her domaine.
 And makes eche subiect clearly see,
 What he is bounden for to be*

*To God his Prince and common wealth,
 His neighbour, kinred and to himselfe.
 The same centre and middle pricke,
 Whereto our deedes are drest so thicke,
 From all the parts and outmost side
 Of her Monarchie large and wide,
 Also fro whence reflect these rayes,
 Twentie hundred maner of wayes
 Where her will is them to conuey
 Within the circle of her furuey.
 So is the Queene of Briton ground,
 Beame, circle, center of all my round.*

Of the square or quadrangle equilater.

The square is of all other accompted the figure of most folliditie and stedfastnesse, and for his owne stay and firmitie requireth none other base then himselfe, and therefore as the roundell or Spheare is appropriat to the heauens, the Spire to the element of the fire: the Triangle to the ayre, and the Lozange to the water: so is the square for his inconcussable stedinesse likened to the earth, which perchaunce might be the reason that the Prince of Philosophers in his first booke of the Ethicks, termeth a constant minded man, euen egal and direct on all sides, and not easily ouerthrowne by euery litle aduersitie, hominem quadratum, a square man. Into this figure may ye reduce your ditties by vsing no moe verses then your verse is of fillables, which will make him fall out square, if ye go aboue it will grow into the figure Trapezion, which is some portion longer then square. I neede not giue you any example, because in good arte all your ditties, Odes and Epigrammes should keepe and not exceede the number of twelue verses, and the longest verse to be of twelue fillables and not aboue, but vnder that number as much as ye will.

This figure taketh his name of an egge, and also as it is thought his first origine, and is as it were a bastard or imperfect rounde declining toward a longitude, and yet keeping within one line for his periferie or compasse as the rounde, and it seemeth that he receiueth this forme not as an imperfection by any impediment vn-naturally hindring his rotunditie, but by the wisdome and prouidence of nature for the commoditie of generation, in such of her creatures as bring not forth a liuely body (as do foure footed beasts) but in stead thereof a certaine quantitie of shapelesse matter contained in a vessell, which after it is sequestred from the dames body receiueth life and perfection, as in the egges of birdes, fishes, and serpents: for the matter being of some quantitie, and to issue out at a narrow place, for the easie passage thereof, it must of necessitie beare such shape as might not be sharpe and greuous to passe as an angle, nor so large or obtuse as might not essay some issue out with one part moe then other as the rounde, therefore it must be slenderer in some part, and yet not without a rotunditie and smoothnesse to giue the rest an easie deliuerie. Such is the figure Ouall whom for his antiquitie, dignitie and vse, I place among the rest of the figures to embellish our proportions: of this sort are diuers of Anacreons ditties, and those other of the Grecian Liricks, who wrate wanton amorous deuises, to solace their witts with all, and many times they would (to giue it right shape of an egge) deuide a word in the midst, and peece out the next verse with the other halfe, as ye may see by perusing their meetres.

There are two copies of The Arte of English Poesie in the British Museum: one in the general library, and the other in the Grenville collection. At the beginning of the Grenville copy is written as follows:—

This Copy, which had belonged to Ben Jonson and has his autograph on the Title-Page, is likewise remarkable for containing after p. 84 four cancelled leaves of text which, as far as I am informed, are not to be found in any other Copy of the book: yet, those leaves being cancelled, the 85th page certainly does not carry on the sentence which terminates p. 84.

The reason of this last observation is that the cancelled leaves contained exactly 8 pp.; which however did not begin at the top and so be imposed as so many separate pages, but at 14 lines from the bottom; the text running on as in other parts of the book. When these pages were withdrawn there were a corresponding number of lines uncanceled, commencing 'When I wrate,' as on p. 124, at the bottom of the last of them; so that page 84 of ordinary copies was easily completed by the addition of these lines. The cancelled pages are unnumbered.

AND besides all the remembred points of Metricall proportion, ye haue yet two other forts of some affinitie with them, which also first issued out of the Poets head, and whereof the Courtly maker was the principall artificer, hauing many high conceites and curious imaginations, with leasure inough to attend his idle inuentions: and these be the short, quicke and sententious propositions, such as be at these dayes all your deuices of armes and other amorous inscriptions which courtiers vse to giue and also to weare in liuerie for the honour of their ladies, and commonly containe but two or three words of wittie sentence or secrete conceit till they vnfolded or explained by some interpretation. For which cause they be commonly accompanied with a figure or purtraict of ocular representation, the words so aptly corresponding to the subtiltie of the figure, that aswel the eye is therwith recreated as the eare or the mind. The Greekes call it Emblema, the Italiens Impresa, and we, a Deuce, such as a man may put into letters of gold and sende to his mistresses for a token, or cause to be embrodered in scutchions of armes, or in any bordure of a rich garment to giue by his noueltie maruell to the beholder. Such were the figures and inscriptions the Romane Emperours gaue in their money and coignes of largesse, and in other great medailles of siluer and gold, as that of the Emperour Augustus, an arrow entangled by the fish Remora, with these words, Festina lento, signifying that celeritie is to be vsed with deliberation: all great enterprises being for the most part either ouerthrowen with hast or hindred by delay, in which case leasure in th'aduice, and speed in th'execution make a very good match for a glorious successe.

Th'Emperour Heliogabalus by his name alluding to the sunne, which in Greeke is Helios, gaue for his deuice, the cœlestial sunne, with these words [Soli inuictō] the subtiltie lyeth in the word [foli] which hath a double sence, viz. to the Sunne, and to him onely.

We our selues attributing that most excellent figure, for his incomparable beauty and light, to the person of our Soueraigne lady altring the mot, made it farre passe that of Th'Emperour Heliogabalus both for subtiltie and multiplicite of sence, thus, [Soli nunquam deficienti] to her onely that neuer failes, viz. in bountie and munificence toward all hers that deserue, or else thus, To her onely whose glorie and good fortune may neuer decay or wane. And so it inureth as a wish by way of resemblance in [Simile diffimile] which is also a subtiltie, likening her Maiestie to the Sunne for his brightnesse, but not to him for his passion, which is ordinarily to go to glade, and sometime to suffer eclipse.

King Edwarde the thirde, her Maiesties most noble progenitour, first founder of the famous order of the Garter, gaue this posie with it. Hony soit qui mal y pense, commonly thus Englished, Ill be to him that thinketh ill, but in mine opinion better thus, Dishonored be he, who meanes vn honorably. There can not be a more excellent deuise, nor that could containe larger intendment, nor greater subtiltie, nor (as a man may say) more vertue or Princely generositie. For first he did by it mildly and grauely reprove the peruers construction of such noble men in his court, as imputed the kings wearing about his neck the garter of the lady with whom he danced, to some amorous alliance betwixt them, which was not true. He also iustly defended his owne integritie, faued the noble womans good renowme, which by licentious speeches might haue bene empaired, and liberally recompenced her iniurie with an honor, such as none could haue bin deuifed greater nor more glorious or permanent vpon her and all the posteritie of her house. It inureth also as a worthy lesson and discipline for all Princely personages, whose actions, imaginations, countenances and speeches, should euermore correspond in all truth and honorable simplicitie.

Charles the fift Emperour, euen in his yong yeares shewing his valour and honorable ambition, gaue for his new order, the golden Fleece, vsurping it vpon Prince Iason and his Argonauts rich spoile brought from Cholos. But for his deuce two pillers with this mot Plus vltra, as one not content to be restrained within the limits that Hercules had fet for an vttermost bound to all his trauailes, viz. two pillers in the mouth of the straight Gibraltare, but would go further: which came fortunately to passe, and whereof the good successe gaue great commendation to his deuce: for by the valiancy of his Captaines before he died he conquered great part of the west Indias, neuer knowen to Hercules or any of our world before.

In the same time (seeming that the heauens and starres had conspired to replenish the earth with Princes and gouernours of great courage, and most famous conquerours) Selim Emperour of Turkie gaue for his deuce a croissant or new moone, promising to himself increase of glory and enlargement of empire, til he had brought all Asia vnder his subiection, which he reasonably well accomplished. For in lesse then eight yeres which he reigned, he conquered all Syria and Egypt, and layd it to his dominion. This deuce afterward was vsurped by Henry the second French king, with this mot Donec totum compleat orbem, till he be at his full: meaning it not so largely as did Selim, but onely that his friendes should knowe how vnable he was to do them good, and to shew beneficence vntil he attained the crowne of France vnto which he aspired as next successour.

King Lewis the twelfth, a valiant and magnanimous prince, who because hee was on euery side enuironed with mightie neighbours, and most of them his enemies, to let them perceiue that they should not finde him vnable or vnfurnished (in case they should offer any vn-lawfull hostilitie) of sufficient forces of his owne, aswell to offende as to defend, and to reuenge an iniurie as to repulse it. He gaue for his deuice the Porkepick with this posie pres et loign, both farre and neare. For the Purpentines nature is, to such as stand aloofe, to dart her prickles from her, and if they come neare her, with the same as they sticke fast to wound them that hurt her.

But of late yeares in the ranfacke of the Cities of Cartagena and S. Dominico in the West Indias, manfully put in execution by the prowesse of her Maiesties men, there was found a deuice made peradventure without King Philips knowledge, wrought al in massiue copper, a king sitting on horsebacke vpon a monde or world, the horse prauncing forward with his forelegges as if he would leape of, with this inscription, Non sufficit orbis, meaning, as it is to be conceaued, that one whole world could not content him. This immeasurable ambition of the Spaniards, if her Maiestie by Gods prouidence, had not with her forces, prouidently slayed and retransched, no man knoweth what inconuenience might in time haue insued to all the Princes and common wealthes in Christendome, who haue founde them selues long annoyed with his excessiue greatnesse.

Atila king of the Huns, inuading France with an army of 300000. fighting men, as it is reported, thinking vtterly to abbase the glory of the Romane Empire, gaue for his deuice of armes, a sword with a fire point and these words, Ferro et flamma, with sword and fire. This very deuice being as ye see onely accommodate to a king or conquerour and not a coillen or any meane

'ouldier, a certaine bafe man of England being knowen euen at that time a bricklayer or mafon by his science, gaue for his creft: whom it had better become to beare a truell full of mortar then a fword and fire, which is onely the reuenge of a Prince, and lieth not in any other mans abilitie to performe, vnleffe ye will allow it to euery poore knaue that is able to fet fire on a thacht houfe. The heraldes ought to vfe great difcretion in fuch matters: for neither any rule of their arte doth warrant fuch abfurdities, nor though fuch a coat or creft were gained by a prifoner taken in the field, or by a flag found in fome ditch and neuer fought for (as many times happens) yet is it no more allowable then it were to beare the deuice of Tamerlan an Emperour in 'Tartary, who gaue the lightning of heauen, with a pofie in that language purporting thefe words, Ira Dei, which alfo appeared well to anfwer his fortune. For from a flurdie fhepeheard he became a moft mighty Emperour, and with his innumerable great armies defolated fo many countreyes and people, as he might iuftly be called [the vvrath of God.] It appeared alfo by his ftrange ende: for in the midft of his greatneffe and prosperitie he died fodainly, and left no child or kinred for a fucceffour to fo large an Empire, nor any memory after him more then of his great puiffance and crueltie.

But that of the king of China in the fardeft part of the Orient, though it be not fo terrible is no leffe admirable, and of much sharpneffe and good implication, worthy for the greateft king and conqueror: and it is, two ftrange ferpents entertangled in their amorous congreffe, the leffer creeping with his head into the greater's mouth, with words purporting [ama et time] loue and feare. Which pofie with maruellous much reafon and fubtillity implieth the dutie of euery fubiect to his Prince, and of euery Prince to his fubiect, and that without either of them both, no fubiect could be fayd entirely to performe his liegeance nor the Prince his part of lawfull gouernement. For without feare and loue the foueraigne authority could not be vpholden, nor without iustice and mercy the Prince be renomed and honored of his subiect. All which parts are discouered in this figure: loue by the serpens amorous entangling: obedience and feare by putting the inferiours head into the others mouth hauing puissance to destroy. On th'other side, iustice in the greater to prepare and manace death and destruction to offenders. And if he spare it, then betokeneth it mercie, and a grateful recompence of the loue and obedience which the foueraigne receaueth.

It is also worth the telling, how the king vseth the fame in pollicie, he giueth it in his ordinarie lieries to be worne in euery vpper garment of all his noblest men and greatest Magistrats and the rest of his officers and seruants, which are either embrodered vpon the breast and the back with siluer or gold or pearle or stone more or lesse richly, according to euery mans dignitie and calling, and they may not presume to be seene in publick without them: nor also in any place where by the kings commission they vse to sit in iustice, or any other publike affaire, wherby the king is highly both honored and serued, the common people retained in dutie and admiration of his greatnesse: the noblemen, magistrats and officers euery one in his degree so much esteemed and reuerenced, as in their good and loyall seruice they want vnto their persons litle lesse honour for the kings sake, then can be almost due or exhibited to the king him selfe.

I could not forbear to adde this forraine example to accomplish our discourse touching deuices. For the beauty and gallantnesse of it, besides the subillitie of the conceit, and princely pollicy in the vse, more exact then can be remembred in any other of any European Prince, whose deuises I will not say but many of them be loftie and ingenious, many of them louely and beautifull, many other ambitious and arrogant, and the chiefeft of them terrible and ful of horror to the nature of man, but that any of them be comparable with it, for wit, vertue, grauitie, and if ye list brauerie, honour and magnificence, not vſurping vpon the peculiars of the gods. In my conceit there is none to be found.

This may ſuffice for deuices, a terme which includes in his generality all thoſe other, viz. liueries, cognizances, emblemes, enſeigns and imprefes. For though the termes be diuers, the vſe and intent is but one whether they reſt in colour or figure or both, or in word or in muet ſhew, and that is to inſinuat ſome ſecret, wittie, morall and braue purpoſe preſented to the beholder, either to recreate his eye, or pleaſe his phantaſie, or examine his iudgement or occupie his braine or to manage his will either by hope or by dread, euery of which reſpectes be of no litle moment to the intereſt and ornament of the ciuill life: and therefore giue them no little commendation. Then hauing produced ſo many worthy and wiſe founders of theſe deuices, and ſo many uiſſant patrons and proteſtours of them, I feare no reproch in this diſcourſe, which otherwiſe the venimous appetite of enuie by detraction or ſcorne would peraduenture not ſlicke to offer me.

out of another not altering any letter nor the number of them, but onely transposing of the same, wherupon many times is produced some grateful newes or matter to them for whose pleasure and seruice it was intended: and bicause there is much difficultie in it, and altogether standeth upon hap hazard, it is compted for a courtly conceit no lesse then the deuice before remembered. Lycophron one of the feuen Greeke Lyrickes, who when they met together (as many times they did) for their excellencie and louely concorde, were called the feuen starres [pleiades] this man was very perfit and fortunat in these transposes, and for his delicate wit and other good parts was greatly fauoured by Ptolome king of Egypt and Queene Arfinoe his wife. He after such fort called the king ἀπομελίτος which is letter for letter Ptolomæus and Queene Arfinoe, he called ἰον ἡρας, which is Arfinoe, now the subtilltie lyeth not in the conuersion but in the fence in this that Apomelitos, signifieth in Greek [honey sweet] so was Ptolome the sweetest natured man in the world both for countenance and conditions, and Iôneras, signifieth the the violet or flower of Iuno a stile among the Greekes for a woman endued with all bewtie and magnificence, which construction falling out grateful and so truly, exceedingly well pleased the King and the Queene, and got Lycophron no litle thanke and benefite at both their hands.

The French Gentlemen haue very sharpe witts and withall a delicate language, which may very easly be wrested to any alteration of words sententious, and they of late yeares haue taken this pastime vp among them many times gratifying their Ladies, and often times the Princes of the Realme, with some such thankfull noueltie. Whereof one made by François de Vallois, thus De façon suis Roy, who in deede was of fashon countenance and stature, besides his regall vertues a very king, for in a world there could not be feene a goodlier man of person. by Henry de Vallois [Roy de nulz hay] a king hated of no man, and was apparant in his conditions and nature, for there was not a Prince of greater affabilitie and mansuetude than he.

I my selfe seeing this conceit so well allowed of in Fraunce and Italie, and being informed that her Maiestie tooke pleasure sometimes in desciphring of names, and hearing how diuers Gentlemen of her Court had essayed but with no great felicitie to make some delectable transpofe of her Maiesties name, I would needs try my luck, for cunning I now not why I should call it, vnlesse it be for the many and variable applications of fence, which requireth peraduenture some wit and discretion more then of euery vnlearned man and for the purpose I tooke me these three wordes (if any other in the world) containing in my conceit greatest mysterie, and most importing good to all them that now be aliue, vnder her noble gouernement.

Which orthographie (because ye shall not be abused) is true and not mistaken, for the letter zeta, of the Hebrewes and Greeke and of all other toungs is in truth but a double ff. hardly vttered, and H. is but a note of aspiration onely and no letter, which therefore is by the Greeks omitted. Vpon the transposition I found this to redound.

fatallitie to her Maiestie appointed by Gods prouidence for all our comfortes. Also I imputed it for no litle good luck and glorie to my selfe, to haue pronounced to her so good and prosperous a fortune, and so thankfull newes to all England, which though it cannot be said by this euent any destinie or fatal necessitie, yet surely is it by all probabilitie of reason, so likely to come to passe, as any other worldly euent of things that be vncertaine, her Maiestie continuing the course of her most regal proceedings and vertuous life in all earnest zeale and godly contemplation of his word, and in the sincere administration of his terrene iustice, assigned ouer to her execution as his Lieutenant vpon earth within the compasse of her dominions.

This also is worth the noting, and I will assure you of it, that after the first search whereupon this transpote was fashioned. The same letters being by me tossed and tranlaced fise hundreth times, I could neuer make any other, at least of some sence and conformitie to her Maiesties estate and the case. If any other man by triall happen vpon a better omination, or what foeuer els ye will call it, I will reioyfe to be ouermatched in my deuise, and renounce him all the thanks and profite of my trauaile.

The text then immediately follows on thus :—

When I wrate of these deuices, I smiled with my selfe, thinking that the readers would do so to, and many of them say, that such trifles as these might well haue bene spared, considering the world is full inough of them, and that it is pitie mens heades should be fedde with such vanities as are to none edification nor instruction, either of morall vertue, or otherwise behooffull for the common wealth, to whose seruice (say they) we are all borne, and not to fill and replenish a whole world full of idle toyes. To which fort of repreh-dours, being either all holy and mortified to the world, and therefore esteeming nothing that fauoureth not of Theologie, or altogether graue and worldly, and therefore caring for nothing but matters of pollicie, and discourfes of estate, or all giuen to thrift and passing for none art that is not gainefull and lucratiue, as the sciences of the Law, Phisicke and marchaundise : to these I will giue none other answere then referre them to the many trifling poemes of Homer, Ouid, Virgill, Catullus and other notable writers of former ages, which were not of any grauitie or serioufnesse, and many of them full of impudicitie and ribaudrie, as are not these of ours, nor for any good in the world should haue bene : and yet those trifles are come from many former siecles vnto our times, vncontrolled or condemned or suppress by any Pope or Patriarch or other seuerer censor of the ciuill maners of men, but haue bene in all ages permitted as the conuenient folaces and recreations of mans wit. And as I can not denie but these conceits of mine be trifles : no lesse in very deede be all the most serious studies of man, if we shall measure grauitie and lightnesse by the wise mans ballance who after he had considered of all the profoundest artes and studies among men, in th'ende cryed out with this Epyphoneme, Vanitas vanitatum et omnia vanitas. Whose authoritie if it were not sufficient to make me beleue so, I could be content with Democritus rather to condemne the vanities of our life by derision, then as Heraditus with teares, faying with that merrie Greeke thus,

Res hominum cunclæ, nam ratione carent.

Thus Englished,

All is but a iest, all dust, all not vworth twvo peason :

For vwhy in mans matters is neither rime nor reason.

Now passing from these courtly trifles, let vs talke of our scholastical toyes, that is of the Grammaticall verifying of the Greeks and Latines and see whether it might be reduced into our English arte or no.

CHAP. XII. [XIII.]

How if all maner of fodaine innouations were not very scandalous, specially in the lawes of any langage or arte, the vse of the Greeke and Latine feete might be brought into our vulgar Poesie, and with good grace inough.

Now neuerthelesse albeit we haue before alledged that our vulgar Saxon English standing most vpon wordes monosyllable, and little vpon polyfilables doth hardly admit the vse of those fine inuented feete of the Greeks and Latines, and that for the most part wise and graue men doe naturally mislike with all fodaine innouations specially of lawes (and this the law of our auncient English Poesie) and therefore lately before we imputed it to a nice and scholasticall curiositie in such makers as haue sought to bring into our vulgar Poesie some of the auncient feete, to wit the Dactile into verses exameters, as he that translated certaine bookes of Virgils Eneydos in such measures and not vncommendably: if I should now say otherwise it would make me seeme contradictorie to my selfe, yet for the information of our yong makers, and pleasure of all others who be delighted in noueltie, and to th'intent we may not seeme by ignorance or ouersight to omit any point of subtillitie, materiall or necessarie to our vulgar arte, we will in this present chapter and by our own idle obseruations shew how one may easily and commodiously lead all those feete of the auncients into our vulgar langage. And if mens eares were not perchance to daintie, or their iudgementes ouer partiall, would peraduenture nothing at all misbecome our arte, but make in our meetres a more pleasant numerositie then now is. Thus farre therefore we will aduenture and not beyond, to th'intent to shew some singularitie in our arte that euery man hath not heretofore obserued, and (her maiesty good liking always had) whether we make the common readers to laugh or to lowre, all is a matter, since our intent is not so exactly to prosecute the purpose, nor so earnestly, as to thinke it should by authority of our owne iudgement be generally applauded at to the discredit of our forefathers maner of vulgar Poesie, or to the alteration or peradventure totall destruction of the same, which could not stand with any good discretion or curtesie in vs to attempt, but thus much I say, that by some leafurable trauell it were no hard matter to induce all their auncient feete into vs with vs, and that it should proue very agreable to the eare and well according with our ordinary times and pronounciation, which no man could then iustly mislike, and that is to allow euery word polifillable one long time of necessitie, which should be where his sharpe accent falls in our owne ydrome most aptly and naturally, wherein we would not follow the licence of the Greeks and Latines, who made not their sharpe accent any necessary prolongation of their times, but vsed such fillable sometimes long sometimes short at their pleasure. The other fillables of any word where the sharpe accent fell not, to be accompted of such time and quantitie as his ortographie would best beare hauing regard to himselfe, or to his next neighbour, word, bounding him on either side, namely to the smoothnes and hardnesse of the fillable in his vtterance, which is occasioned altogether by his ortographie and scituation as in this word [dáyly] the first fillable for his vsuall and sharpe accents sake to be alwayes long, the second for his flat accents sake to be alwayes short, and the rather for his ortographie, bycause if he goe before another word commencing with a vowell not letting him to be eclipsed, his vtterance is easie and currant, in this tri-fillable [daūngērōus] the first to be long, th'other two short for the same causes. In this word [dāngērōūsnēsse] the first and last to be both long, bycause they receiue both of them the sharpe accent, and the two middlemost to be short, in these words [remedic] and [remedileffe] the time to follow also the accent, so as if it please better to set the sharpe accent vpon [re] then vpon [dye]

that fillable should be made long and è conuerfo, but in this word [remedileffe] bycause many like better to accent the fillable [me] then the fillable [les] therefore I leaue him for a common fillable to be able to receiue both a long and a short time as occasion shall serue. The like law I fet in these wordes [reuocable] [recouerable] [irre-uocable] [irrecouerable] for fometime it sounds better to say rēuō cāblē then rē uōcāblē, rēcōuēr āblē then rēcōuēr āblē for this one thing ye must alwayes marke that if your time fall either by reason of his sharpe accent or otherwise vpon the penultima, ye shal finde many other words to rime with him, bycause such terminations are not geazon, but if the long time fall vpon the antepenultima ye shall not finde many wordes to match him in his termination, which is the cause of his concord or rime, but if you would let your long time by his sharpe accent fall aboute the antepenultima as to say [cōuērāblē] ye shall seldome or perchance neuer find one to make vp rime with him vnlesse it be badly and by abutē, and therefore in all such long polifillables ye doe commonly giue two sharpe accents, and thereby reduce him into two feete as in this word [rēmū nērātīōn] which makes a couple of good Daçills, and in this word [cōntribūtīōn] which makes a good spondeus and a good daçill, and in this word [recāpitūlātīōn] it makes two daçills and a fillable ouerplus to annexe to the word precedent to helpe peece vp another foote. But for wordes monofillables (as be most of ours) because in pronouncing them they do of necessitie retainē a sharpe accent, ye may iustly allow them to be all long if they will so best serue your turne, and if they be tailed one to another, or th'one to a disfillable or polyfillable ye ought to allow them that time that best serues your purpose and pleaseth your eare most, and truliest aunsweres the nature of the orthographie in which I would as neare as I could obserue and keepe the lawes of the Greeke and Latine versifiers, that is to prolong the fillable which is written with double consonants or by diphthong or with single consonants that run hard and harshly vpon the tcung :

and to shorten all fillables that stand vpon vowels, if there were no cause of elision and single consonants and such of them as are most flowing and slipper vpon the tounge as. n.r.t.d.l. and for this purpose to take away all aspirations, and many times the last consonant of a word as the Latine Poetes vsed to do, specially Lucretius and Ennius as to say [finibu] for [finibus] and so would not I stick to say thus [delite] for [delight] [hye] for [high] and such like, and doth nothing at all impugne the rule I gaue before against the wresting of wordes by false ortographie to make vp rime, which may not be falsified. But this omission of letters in the middest of a meetre to make him the more slipper, helps the numerositie and hinders not the rime. But generally the shortning or prolonging of the monosyllables dependes much vpon the nature of their ortographie which the Latin Gramariens call the rule of position, as for example if I shall say thus.

Nōt mānie dayēs pāst. Twentie dayes after,
This makes a good Dactill and a good spondeus, but if ye turne them backward it would not do so, as.

Many dayes, not past.

And the distick made all of monosyllables.

Būt nōne ōf ūs trūe mēn ānd frēe,
Could finde so great good lucke as he.

Which words serue well to make the verse all spondiacke or iambicke, but not in dactil, as other words or the same otherwise placed would do, for it were an illfaured dactil to say.

Būt nōne ōf, ūs āll trēwe.

Therefore whensoever your words will not make a smooth dactil, ye must alter them or their situations, or else turne them to other feete that may better beare their maner of sound and orthographie: or if the word be polyfillable to deuide him, and to make him serue by peeces, that he could not do whole and entierly. And no doubt by like consideration did the Greeke and Latine versifiers fashion all their feete at the first to be of fundry times, and the selfe same fillable to be sometime long and sometime short for the eares better fatisfaction as hath bene before remembred. Now also wheras I said before that our old Saxon English for his many monofyllables did not naturally admit the vse of the ancient feete in our vulgar measures so aptly as in those languages which stood most vpon polifyllables, I sayd it in a sort truly, but now I must recant and confesse that our Normane English which hath growen since William the Conquerour doth admit any of the auncient feete, by reason of the many polyfyllables euen to fixe and seauen in one word, which we at this day vse in our most ordinarie language: and which corruption hath bene occasioned chiefly by the peeuish affectation not of the Normans them selues, but of clerks and scholers or secreteraries long since, who not content with the vsual Normane or Saxon word, would conuert the very Latine and Greeke word into vulgar French, as to say innumerable for innumbrable, reuocable, irreuocable, irradiation, depopulation and such like, which are not naturall Normans nor yet French, but altered Latines, and without any imitation at all: which therefore were long time despised for inkehorne termes, and now be reputed the best and most delicat of any other. Of which and many other causes of corruption of our speach we haue in another place more amply discoursed, but by this meane we may at this day very well receiue the auncient feete metricall of the Greeks and Latines fauing those that be superflous as be all the feete about the trifyllable, which the old Grammarians idly inuented and distinguisht by speciall names, whereas in deede the same do stand compounded with the inferiour feete, and therefore some of them were called by the names of didactylus, dispondeus and disiambus: all which feete as I say we may be allowed to vse with good discretion and precise choise of wordes and with the faorable approbation of readers, and so shall our plat in this one point be larger and much surmount that which Stanihurst first tooke in hand by his exameters daclilicke and spondaicke in the translation of Virgills Eneidos, and such as for a great number of them my stomacke can hardly digest for the ill shapen sound of many of his wordes polifillable and also his copulation of monofillables supplying the quantitie of a trifillable to his intent. And right so in promoting this deuise of ours being (I feare me) much more nyce and affected, and therefore more misliked then his, we are to bespeake fauour, first of the delicate eares, then of the rigorous and seuerer dispositions, lastly to craue pardon of the learned and auncient makers in our vulgar, for if we should seeke in euery point to egall our speach with the Greeke and Latin in their metricall obseruations it could not possible be by vs perfourmed, because their fillables came to be timed some of them long, some of them short not by reason of any euident or apparant cause in writing or founde remaining vpon one more then another, for many times they shortned the fillable of sharpe accent and made long that of the flat, and therefore we must needes say, it was in many of their wordes done by preelection in the first Poetes, not hauing regard altogether to the ortographie, and hardnesse or softnesse of a fillable, consonant, vowell or diphthong, but at their pleasure, or as it fell out: so as he that first put in a verse this word [Penelope] which might be Homer or some other of his antiquitie, where he made [pē] in both places long and [nē] and [lō] short, he might haue made them otherwise and with as good reason, nothing in the world appearing that might moue them to make such (preelection) more in th'one fillable then in the other for pe. ne. and lo. being fillables vocals be egally smoth and currant vpon the toung, and might beare aswell the long as the short time, but it pleased the Poet otherwise: so he that first shortned, ca. in this word cano, and made long tro, in troia, and o, in oris, might haue aswell done the contrary, but because he that first put them into a verse, found as it is to be supposed a more sweetnesse in his owne eare to haue them so tymed, therefore all other Poets who followed, were fayne to doe the like, which made that Virgill who came many yeares after the first reception of wordes in their feuerall times, was driuen of necessitie to accept them in such quantities as they were left him and therefore said.

primŭs āb ōrìs.*

Neither truly doe I see any other reason in that lawe (though in other rules of shortning and prolonging a fillable there may be reason) but that it stands vpon bare tradition. Such as the Cabalists auouch in their mysticall constructions Theologicall and others, saying that they receaued the same from hand to hand from the first parent Adam, Abraham and others, which I will giue them leaue alone both to say and beleue for me, thinking rather that they haue bene the idle occupations, or perchaunce the malicious and craftie constructions of the Talmudists, and others of the Hebrue clerks to bring the world into admiration of their lawes and Religion. Now peradventure with vs Englishmen it be somewhat too late to admit a new inuention of feete and times that our forefathers neuer vsed nor neuer obserued till this day, either in their measures or in their pronuntiation, and perchaunce will seeme in vs a presumptuous part to attempt, considering also it would be hard to find many men to like of one mans choise in the limitation of times and quantities of words, with which not one, but euery eare is to be pleased and made a particular iudge, being most truly sayd, that a multitude or comminalltie is hard to please and easie to offend, and therefore I intend not to proceed any further in this curiositie then to shew some small subtility that any other hath not yet done, and not by imitation but by obseruation, nor to th'intent to haue it put in execution in our vulgar Poesie, but to be pleasantly scanned vpon, as are all nouelties so friuolous and ridiculous as it.

CHAP. XIII. [XIV.]

A more particular declaration of the metricall feete of the ancient Poets Greeke and Latine and chiefly of the feete of two times.

Heir Grammarians made a great multitude of feete, I wot not to what huge number, and of so many fizes as their wordes were of length, namely fixe fizes, whereas in deede, the metricall feete are but twelue in number, wherof foure only be of two times, and eight of three times, the rest compounds of the premised two forts, euen as the Arithmetically numbers aboue three are made of two and three. And if ye will know how many of these feete will be commodiously receiued with vs, I say all the whole twelue, for first for the foote spondeus of two long times ye haue these English wordes mōrnīng, mīdnīght, mīschāunce, and a number moe whose ortographie may direct your iudgement in this point: for your Trocheus of a long and short ye haue these wordes mānēr, brōkēn, tākēn, bōdiē, mēmbēr, and a great many moe if their last fillables abut not vpon the consonant in the beginning of another word, and in these whether they do abut or no wīttie, dīttie, sōrrōw, mōrrōw, and such like, which end in a vowell for your Iambus of a short and a long, ye haue these wordes [rēflōre] [rēmōrse] [dēsīre] [ēndūre] and a thousand besides. For your foote pirrichius or of two short fillables ye haue these words [mānīe] [mōnēy] [pēnīe] [sīlīe] and others of that constitution or the like: for your feete of three times and first your daclill, ye haue these wordes and a number moe pātīence, tēmpērānce, vōmānheād, iōlītīe, dāungērōus, dūctīfūll and others. For your moloffus, of all three long, ye haue a member [number?] of wordes also and specially most of your participles actiue, as pērsīstīng, dēspōlīng, ēndēntīng, and such like in ortographie: for your anapestus of two short and a long ye haue these words but not many moe, as mānīfōld, mōnīlēsse, rēmānēt, hōlīnēsse. For your foote tribracchus of all three short, ye haue very few trifillables, because the sharpe accent will always make one of them long by pronunciation, which els would be by ortographie short as, [*mēri*ly] [minion] and such like. For your foote bacchius of a short and two long ye haue these and the like words trifillables [lāmēnting] [rēquēsting] [rēnōūncing] [rēpēntānce] [ēnūrīng]. For your foote antibacchius, of two long and a short ye haue these wordes [fōrsākēn] [īmpūgnēd] and others many: For your amphimacer that is a long a short and a long ye haue these wordes and many moe [éxcēllēt] [īmīnēt] and specially such as be propre names of persons or townes or other things and namely Welsh wordes: for your foote amphibrachus, of a short, a long and a short, ye haue these wordes and many like to these [rēsistēd] [dēlightfūll] [rēprīfāll] [īnāūntēr] [ēnāmīll] so as for want of English wordes if your eare be not to daintie and your rules to precise, ye neede not be without the metricall feete of the ancient Poets such as be most pertinent and not superfluous. This is (ye will perchance say) my singular opinion: then ye shall see how well I can maintaine it. First the quantitie of a word comes either by (preelection) without reason or force as hath bene alledged, and as the auncient Greekes and Latines did in many wordes, but not in all, or by (election) with reason as they did in some, and not a few. And a sound is drawen at length either by the infirmitie of the tounge, because the word or fillable is of such letters as hangs long in the palate or lippes ere he will come forth, or because he is accented and tuned hier and sharper then another, whereby he somewhat obscureth the other fillables in the same word that be not accented so high, in both these cases we will establish our fillable long, contrariwise the shortning of a fillable is, when his founde or accent happens to be heauy and flat, that is to fall away speedily, and as it were inaudible, or when he is made of such letters as be by nature slipper and voluble and smoothly passe from the mouth. And the vowell is alwayes more easly deliuered then the consonant: and of consonants, the liquide more then the mute, and a single consonant more then a double, and one more then twayne coupled together: all which points were obserued by the Greekes and Latines, and allowed for maximes in versifying. Now if ye will examine these foure bifillables [rēmānt] [rēmāine] [rēndēr] [rēnēt] for an example by which ye may make a generall rule, and ye shall finde, that they aunswere our first resolution. First in [remnant] [rem] bearing the sharpe accent and hauing his consonant abbut vpon another, soundes long. The fillable [nant] being written with two consonants must needs be accompted the same, besides that [nant] by his Latin originall is long, viz [remanēns.] Take this word [remainē] because the last fillable beares the sharpe accent, he is long in the eare, and [re] being the first fillable, passing obscurely away with a flat accent is short, besides that [re] by his Latine originall and also by his ortographie is short. This word [render] bearing the sharpe accent vpon [ren] makes it long, the fillable [der] falling away swiftly and being also written with a single consonant or liquide is short and makes the trocheus. This word [rēnēt] hauing both fillables sliding and slipper make the foote Pirrichius, because if he be truly vttered, he beares in maner no sharper accent vpon the one then the other fillable, but be in effect egall in time and tune, as is also the Spondeus. And because they be not written with any hard or harsh consonants, I do allow them both for short fillables, or to be vsed for common, according as their situation and place with other words shall be: and as I haue named to you but onely foure words for an example, so may ye find out by diligent obseruation foure hundred if ye will. But of all your words bifillables the most part naturally do make the foote Iambus, many the Trocheus, fewer the Spondeus, fewest of all the Pirrichius, because in him the sharpe accent (if ye follow the rules of your accent, as we haue presupposed) doth make a litle oddes: and ye shall find verses made all of monosyllables, and do very well, but lightly they be Iambickes, bycause for the more part the accent falles sharpe vpon euery second word rather then contrariwise, as this of Sir Thomas Wiats.

*I finde nō peāce ānd yēt mē wārre is dōne,
I feare and hope, and burne and freefe like ise.*

And some verses where the sharpe accent falles vpon the first and third, and so make the verse wholly Trochaicke, as thus,

*Worke not, no nor, wish thy friend or foes harme
Try but, trust not, all that speake thee so faire.*

And some verses made of monosyllables and bissyllables enterlaced as this of th'Earles,

When raging loue with extreme paine

And this

A fairer beast of fresher hue beheld I neuer none.

And some verses made all of bissyllables and others all of trissyllables, and others of polisyllables egally increasing and of diuers quantities, and fundry situations, as in this of our owne, made to daunt the insolence of a beautifull woman.

*Brittle beauty blossome daily fading
Morne, noone, and eue in age and eke in eld
Dangerous disdainefull pleasantly perfwading Easie to gripe but combrous to weld
For slender bottome hard and heauy lading
Gay for a while, but little while durable Suspicious, incertaine, irreuocable,
O since thou art by triall not to trust
Wisedom it is, and it is also iust
To found the stemme before the tree be feld
That is, since death vwill driue vs all to dust
To leaue thy loue ere that vve be compeld.*

In which ye haue your first verse all of bissyllables and of the foot trocheus. The second all of monosyllables, and all of the foote Iambus, the third all of trissyllables, and all of the foote daclilus, your fourth of one bissyllable, and two monosyllables interlarded, the fift of one monosyllable and two bissyllables enterlaced, and the rest of other fortes and scituations, some by degrees encreasing, some diminishing: which example I haue set downe to let you perceiue what pleasant numerosity in the measure and disposition of your words in a meetre may be contriued by curious wits and these with other like were the obseruations of the Greeke and Latine versifiers.

CHAP. XIII. [XV.]

Of your feet of three times, and first of the Daçtil.

Our feete of three times by prescription of the Latine Grammariens are of eight sundry proportions, for some notable difference appearing in euery fillable of three falling in a word of that size: but because about the antepenultima there was (among the Latines) none accent audible in any long word, therefore to deuiſe any foote of longer measure then of three times was to them but superfluous: because all about the number of three are but compounded of their inferiours. Omitting therefore to speake of these larger feete, we say that of all your feete of three times the Daçtil is most vsuall and fit for our vulgar meeter, and most agreeable to the eare, specially if ye ouerlade not your verse with too many of them but here and there enterlace a Iambus or some other foote of two times to giue him grauitic and stay, as in this quadrein Trimeter or of three measures.

*Rendër ägainë mie libërtie
änd sët yoür cäptiue frëe
Glörïous is the victörie
Cönquëroürs üse with lënitie*

Where ye see euery verse is all of a measure, and yet vnegall in number of fillables: for the second verse is but of fixe fillables, where the rest are of eight. But the reason is for that in three of the same verses are two Daçtils a peece, which abridge two fillables in euery verse: and so maketh the longest euen with the thortest. Ye may note besides by the first verse, how much better some bisyllable becommeth to peece out an other longer foote then another word doth: for in place of [render] if ye had sayd [restore] it had marred the Daçtil, and of necessitie driuen him out at length to be a verse Iambic of foure feete, because [render] is naturally a Trocheus and makes the first two times of a daçtil. [Restore] is naturally a Iambus, and in this place could not possibly haue made a pleasant daçtil.

Now againe if ye will fay to me that these two words [libertie] and [conquerours] be not precise Daçtils by the Latine rule. So much will I confesse to, but since they go currant inough vpon the tongue, and be so vsually pronounced, they may passe wel inough for Daçtils in our vulgar meeters, and that is inough for me, seeking but to fashion an art, and not to finish it: which time only and custome haue authoritie to do, specially in all cafes of language as the Poet hath wittily remembered in this verse

-si volet vsus,
Quem penes arbitrium est et vis et norma loquendi.

The Earle of Surrey vpon the death of Sir Thomas Wiat made among other this verse Pentameter and of ten fillables,

What holy graue (alas) vvhath sepulcher

But if I had the making of him, he should haue bene of eleuen fillables and kept his measure of fve still, and would so haue runne more pleasantly a great deale: for as he is now, though he be euen he seemes odde and defectiue, for not well obseruing the natural accent of euery word, and this would haue bene soone holpen by inserting one monosyllable in the middle of the verse, and drawing another fillable in the beginning into a Daçtil, this word [holy] being a good [Pirrichius] and very well seruing the turne, thus,

Whāt hōlie grāue ā lās whāt fit sēpūlchēr.

Which verse if ye peruse throughout ye shall finde him after the first daçtil all Trochaick and not Iambic, nor of any other foot of two times. But perchance if ye would seeme yet more curious, in place of these foure Trocheus ye might induce other feete of three times, as to make the three fillables next following the daētil, the foote [amphimacer] the last word [Sepulcher] the foote [amphibracus] leauing the other midle word for a [Iambus] thus.

Whāt hōlle grāue ā lās whāt fīt sēpūlchēr.

If ye aske me further why I make (vwhat) first long and after short in one verse, to that I fatisfied you before, that it is by reason of his accent sharpe in one place and flat in another, being a common monofillable, that is, apt to receiue either accent, and so in the first place receiuing aptly the sharpe accent he is made long: afterward receiuing the flat accent more aptly then the sharpe, because the fillable precedent [lās] vtterly distaines him, he is made short and not long, and that with very good melodie, but to haue giuen him the sharpe accent and plucked it from the fillable [lās] it had bene to any mans eare a great discord: for euermore this word [alās] is accented vpon the last, and that lowdly and notoriously as appeareth by all our exclamations vsed vnder that terme. The same Earle of Surrey and Sir Thomas Wyat the first reformers and polishers of our vulgar Poefie much affecting the stile and measures of the Italian Petrarcha, vsed the foote daētil very often but not many in one verse, as in these,

Fūll mānie that in p̄sence of thy liuelie hēd,

Shed Cæsars teares vpon Pōmpēiūs hēd.

Thēnēmie to life destroi er of all kinde,

If āmō rōus faith in an hart vn fayned,

Myne old deēre ēnē my my froward master.

Thē fūrī ous gone in his most ra ging ire.

And many moe which if ye would not allow for daētils the verse would halt vnlesse ye would seeme to helpe it contracting a fillable by vertue of the figure Synerefsis which I thinke was neuer their meaning, nor in deede would haue bred any pleasure to the eare, but hindred the flowing of the verse. Howfoeuer ye take it the daētil is commendable inough in our vulgar meetres, but most plaufible of all when he is founded vpon the stage, as in these comicall verses shewing how well it becommeth all noble men and great perfonages to be temperat and modest, yea more then any meaner man, thus.

*Lēt nō nōbilitie rīchēs ōr hērītāge
Hōnōur ōr ěmpire ōr cārthlie dōmīnōn
Brēed īn yōur heād ānie pēcuīsh ōpīnōn
Thāt yē māy sāfēr āuōuch ānie ōutrāge.*

And in this distique taxing the Prelate symoniake standing all vpon perfect daētils.

*Nōvv mānie bīe mōnēy pūruēy prōmōtōn
For mony mooues any hart to deuotion.*

But this aduertisement I will giue you withall, that if ye vse too many daētils together ye make your musike too light and of no solemne grauitie such as the amorous Elegies in court naturally require, being alwaies either very dolefull or passionate as the affections of loue enforce, in which busines ye must make your choise of very few words daētilique, or them that ye can not refuse, to dissolue and breake them into other feete by such meanes as it shall be taught hereafter: but chiefly in your courtly ditties take heede ye vse not these maner of long polifillables and specially that ye finish not your verse with them as [retribution] restitution] remuneration [recapitulation] and such like: for they smatch more the schoole of common players than of any delicate Poet Lyricke or Elegiacke.

CHAP. XV. [XVI.]

Oall fyour other feete of three times and howv vvell they vwould fashion a meetre in our vulgar.

Al your other feete of three times I find no vse of them in our vulgar meeters nor no sweetenes at all, and yet words inough to ferue their proportions. So as though they haue not hitherto bene made artificiall, yet nowe by more curious obseruation they might be. Since all artes grew first by obseruation of natures proceedings and custome. And first your [Moloffus] being of all three long is evidently discovered by this word [pērmittīng] The [Anapestus] of two short and a long by this word [fūrīōus] if the next word beginne with a conſonant. The foote [Bacchius] of a ſhort and two long by this word [reſiſtance] the foote [Antibacchius] of two long a ſhort by this word [conquer- ing] the foote [Amphimacer] of a long a ſhort and a long by this word [conquer- ing] the foote of [Amphibrachus] of a ſhort a long and a ſhort by this word [remember] if a vowell follow. The foote [Tribrachus] of three ſhort times is very hard to be made by any of our trifillables vnles they be compounded of the ſmoothest ſort of conſonants or fillables vocals, or of three ſmooth mono- fillables, or of ſome peece of a long polyfillable and after that ſort we may with wreſting of words ſhape the foot [Tribrachus] rather by vſurpation then by rule, which neuertheles is allowed in euery primitiue arte and inuention: and ſo it was by the Greekes and Latines in their firſt verſifying, as if a rule ſhould be ſet downe that from henceforth theſe words ſhould be counted al Tribrachus. [enemie] remedie] ſeltnes] monies] penies] cruellie] and ſuch like, or a peece of this long word [recouerable] innumerable] readilie] and others. Of all which manner of apt wordes to make theſe ſtranger feet of three times which go not ſo currant with our eare as the daſtil, the maker ſhould haue a good iudgement to know them by their manner of orthographie and by their accent which ferue moſt fitly for euery foote, or elſe he ſhoulde haue alwaies a little calender of them apart to vſe readily when he ſhall neede them. But becauſe in very truth I thinke them but vaine and ſuperſtitious obſeruations nothing at all furthering the pleaſant melody of our Engliſh meeter, I leaue to ſpeake any more of them and rather wiſh the continuance of our old maner of Poefie, ſcanning our verſe by fillables rather than by feete, and vſing moſt commonly the word Iambique and ſometime the Trochaike which ye ſhall diſcerne by their accents, and now and then a daſtil keeping preciſely our ſymphony or rime without any other mincing meaſures, which an idle inuentiue head could eaſily deuife, as the former examples teach.

CHAP. XVI. [XVII.]

Of your verses perfect and defectiue, and that which the Græcians called the halfe foote.

He Greekes and Latines vsed verses in the odde fillable of two fortes, which they called Cataleëticke and Acataleëticke, that is odde vnder and odde ouer the iust measure of their verse, and we in our vulgar finde many of the like, and specially in the rimes of Sir Thomas Wiat, strained perchaunce out of their originall, made first by Francis Petrarcha: as these

Like vnto these, immeasurable mountaines,

So is my painefull life the burden of ire:

For hie be they, and hie is my desire

And I of teares, and they are full of fountaines.

Where in your first second and fourth verse, ye may finde a fillable superfluous, and though in the first ye will seeme to helpe it, by drawing these three fillables, (im mē sū) into a daētil, in the rest it can not be so excused, wherefore we must thinke he did it of purpose, by the odde fillable to giue greater grace to his meetre, and we finde in our old rimes, this odde fillable, sometime placed in the beginning and sometimes in the middle of a verse, and is allowed to go alone and to hang to any other fillable. But this odde fillable in our meetres is not the halfe foote as the Greekes and Latines vsed him in their verses, and called such measure pentimimeris and eptamimeris, but rather is that, which they called the cataleëtik or maymed verse. Their hemimeris or halfe foote serued not by licence Poeticall or necessitie of words, but to bewtifie and exornate the verse by placing one such halfe foote in the middle Cesure, and one other in the end of the verse, as they vsed all their pentameters elegiack: and not by coupling them together, but by accompt to make their verse of a iust measure and not defectiue or superflous: our odde fillable is not altogether of that nature, but is in a maner drowned and supprest by the flat accent, and shrinks away as it were inaudible and by that meane the odde verse comes almost to be an euen in euery mans hearing. The halfe foote of the auncients was reserued purposely to an vse, and therefore they gaue such odde fillable, wheresoeuer he fell the sharper accent, and made by him a notorious pause as in this pentameter.

Which in all make five whole feete, or the verse Pentameter. We in our vulgar haue not the vse of the like halfe foote.

CHAP. XIII. [XVIII.]

Of the breaking your bisyllables and polysyllables and when it is to be used.

Vt whether ye suffer your fillable to receiue his quantitie by his accent, or by his orthography, or whether ye keepe your bisyllable whole or whether ye breake him, all is one to his quantitie, and his time will appeare the selfe same still and ought not to be altered by our makers, vnlesse it be when such fillable is allowed to be common and to receiue any of both times, as in the dimeter, made of two fillables entier.

extrême desire

The first is a good spondeus, the second a good iambus, and if the same wordes be broken thus it is not so pleasant.

in ex trême de sire

And yet the first makes a iambus, and the second a trocheus ech fillable retayning still his former quantities. And alwaies ye must haue regard to the sweetenes of the meetre, so as if your word polysyllable would not found pleasantly whole, ye should for the nonce breake him, which ye may easily doo by inserting here and there one monosyllable among your polysyllables, or by chaunging your word into another place then where he foundes vnpleasantly, and by breaking, turne a trocheus to a iambus, or contrariwise: as thus:

Höllow vällcis ündër hiëst mōuntāines

Crāggie cliffes bring foörth thë fairëst föuntāines

These verses be trochaick, and in mine eare not so sweete and harmonicall as the iambicque, thus :

Thë höllöwst vāls lie ündër hiëst mōuntāines

Thë crāggist cliffs bring förth thë fairëst föuntāines.

All which verses bee now become iambicque by breaking the first bissyllables, and yet alters not their quantities though the feete be altered : and thus,

Reflesse is the heart in his desires

Rauing after that reason doth denie.

Which being turned thus makes a new harmonie.

The reflesse heart, renues his old desires

Ay rauing after that reason doth it deny.

And following this obseruation your meetres being builded with polyfillables will fall diuerfly out, that is some to be spondaick, some iambick, others daçilick, others trochaick, and of one mingled with another, as in this verse.

Hēauē is thë bürdē of Princēs ire

The verse is trochaick, but being altered thus, is iambicque.

Füll hēauē is thë pāise öf Princēs ire

And as Sir Thomas Wiat song in a verse wholly trochaick, because the wordes do best shape to that foote by their naturall accent, thus,

Fārewēll löue ānd āll thie lāwes för ēuēr

And in this ditty of th'Erle of Surries, passing sweete and harmonicall, all be Iambick.

So cruelly doth straine my hart,

And that the teares like fluds of raine

Beare witnesse of my wofull smart.

Which beyng disposed otherwife or not broken, would proue all trochaick, but nothing pleafant.

Now furthermore ye are to note, that al your monosyllables may receiue the sharp accent, but not so aptly one as another, as in this verse where they serue well to make him iambicque, but not trochaick.

Gōd graūnt thīs peāce māy lōng ēndūre

Where the sharpe accent falles more tunably vpon [graunt] [peace] [long] [dure] then it would by conuerſion, as to accent them thus :

Gōd graūnt-thīs peāce-māy lōng-ēndūre,

And yet if ye will aske me the reason, I can not tell it, but that it shapes ſo to myne eare, and as I thinke to euery other mans. And in this meeter where ye haue whole words bifillable vnbroken, that maintaine (by reason of their accent) fundry feete, yet going one with another be very harmonicall.

Where ye ſee one to be a trocheus another the iambus, and ſo entermingled not by election but by constraint of their feuerall accents, which ought not to be altered, yet comes it to paſſe that many times ye muſt of neceſſitie alter the accent of a fillable, and put him from his naturall place, and then one fillable, of a word polyfillable, or one word monofillable, will abide to be made ſometimes long, ſometimes ſhort, as in this quadreyne of ours playd in a mery moode.

*Gēue mē mīne owne and wēhē I dō dēſīre
Geue others theirs, and nothing that is mine
Nor giue mē thāt, wherto all men aſpire
Then neither gold, nor faire women nor wine.*

Where in your firſt verſe theſe two words [giue] and [me] are accented one high th'other low, in the third verſe the ſame words are accented contrary, and the reaſon of this exchange is manifeſt, becauſe the maker playes with theſe two clauſes of fundry relations [giue me] and [giue others] ſo as the monofillable [me] being reſpectiue to the word [others] and inferring a ſubtiltie or wittie implication, ought not to haue the ſame accent, as when he hath no ſuch reſpect, as in this diſtik of ours.

I rōue mē (Madame) ere ye rēprōue Meeke minds ſhould excuſe not accuſe.

In which verſe ye ſee this word [reprooue,] the fillable [prooue] alters his ſharpe accent into a flat, for naturally it is long in all his ſingles and compounds [reprooue][approdue][disprodue] and so is the fillable [cuse] in [excuse][accuse][recuse] yet in these verses by reason one of them doth as it were nicke another, and haue a certaine extraordinary fence with all, it behoueth to remoue the sharpe accents from whence they are most naturall, to place them where the nicke may be more exprefly discovered, and therefore in this verse where no fuch implication is, nor no relation it is otherwise, as thus.

*If ye rēpr̄oue my confancie
I will excūse you curtesly.*

For in this word [reprodue] because there is no extraordinary fence to be inferred, he keepeth his sharpe accent vpon the fillable [produe] but in the former verses because they seeme to encounter ech other, they do thereby merite an audible and pleafant alteration of their accents in those fillables that cause the subtiltie. Of these maner of nicetees ye shal finde in many places of our booke, but specially where we treat of ornament, vnto which we referre you, sauing that we thought good to fet down one example more to solace your mindes with mirth after all these scholasticall preceptes, which can not but bring with them (specially to Cour-tiers) much tediousnesse, and so to end. In our Comedie intituled Ginecocratia: the king was supposed to be a person very amorous and effeminate, and therefore most ruled his ordinary affaires by the aduise of women either for the loue he bare to their persons or liking he had to their pleafant ready witts and vtterance. Comes me to the Court one Polemon an honest plaine man of the country, but rich: and hauing a suite to the king, met by chaunce with one Philino, a louer of wine and a merry companion in Court, and praied him in that he was a stranger that he would vouchsafe to tell him which way he were best to worke to get his suite, and who were most in credit and fauour about the king, that he might seeke to them to furder his attempt. Philino perceyuing the plainnesse of the man, and that there would be some good done with him, told Polemon that if he would well confider him for his labor he would bring him where he should know the truth of all his demaundes by the fentence of the Oracle. Polemon gaue him twentie crownes, Philino brings him into a place where behind an arras cloth hee himfelfe fpake in manner of an Oracle in thefe meeters, for fo did all the Sybils and fothfaiers in old times giue their answers.

*Your beft way to worke - and marke my words well,
Not money : nor many,
Nor any : but any,
Not weemen, but weemen beare the bell.*

Polemon wift not what to make of this doubtful fpetch, and not being lawfull to importune the oracle more then once in one matter, conceyued in his head the pleafanter construction, and flacke to it : and hauing at home a fayre young damfell of eighteene yeares old to his daughter, that could very well behaue her felfe in countenance and alfo in her language, apparelled her as gay as he could, and brought her to the Court, where Philino harkning daily after the euent of this matter, met him, and recommended his daughter to the Lords, who perceiuing her great beauty and other good parts, brought her to the King, to whom ſhe exhibited her fathers ſupplication, and found fo great fauour in his eye, as without any long delay ſhe obtained her fute at his hands. Polemon by the diligent ſolliciting of his daughter, wanne his purpoſe : Philino gat a good reward and vſed the matter ſo, as howſoeuer the oracle had bene conſtrued, he could not haue receiued blame nor diſcredit by the ſucceſſe, for euery waies it would haue proued true, whether Polemons daughter had obtayned the fute, or not obtained it. And the ſubtiltie lay in the accent and Ortographie of theſe two wordes [any] and [weemen] for [any] being deuided founds [a nie or neere perſon to the king : and [weemen] being diuided foundes wee men, and not [weemen] and ſo by this meane Philino ſerued all turnes and ſhifted himfelfe from blame, not vnlike the tale of the Rattlemouſe who in the warres proclaimed betweene the foure footed beasts, and the birdes, beyng sent for by the Lyon to be at his musters, excused himselfe for that he was a foule and flew with winges: and beyng sent for by the Eagle to serue him, sayd that he was a foure footed beast, and by that craftie cauill escaped the danger of the warres, and shunned the seruice of both Princes. And euer since fate at home by the fires side, eating vp the poore husbandmans baken, halfe lost for lacke of a good hufwifes looking too.

THE THIRD BOOKE, OF ORNAMENT.

CHAP. I. Of Ornament Poeticall.

S no doubt the good proportion of any thing doth greatly adorne and commend it and right so our late remembered proportions doe to our vulgar Poesie : so is there yet requisite to the perfection of this arte, another maner of exornation, which resteth in the fashioning of our makers language and stile, to such purpose as it may delight and allure as well the mynde as the eare of the hearers with a certaine noueltie and strange maner of conueyance, disguising it no litle from the ordinary and accustomed : neuerthelesse making it nothing the more vnseemely or misbecomming, but rather decenter and more agreable to any ciuill eare and vnderstanding. And as we see in these great Madames of honour, be they for personage or otherwise neuer so comely and bewtifull, yet if they want their courtly habillements or at leastwise such other apparell as custome and ciuilitie haue ordained to couer their naked bodies, would be halfe ashamed or greatly out of countenance to be

feen in that fort, and perchance do then thinke themselves more amiable in euery mans eye, when they be in their richest attire, suppose of filkes or tyffewes and costly embroderies, then when they go in cloth or in any other plaine and simple apparell. Euen so cannot our vulgar Poesie shew it selfe either gallant or gorgeous, if any lymme be left naked and bare and not clad in his kindly clothes and coulours, such as may conuey them somewhat out of sight, that is from the common course of ordinary speach and capacitie of the vulgar iudgement, and yet being artificially handled must needes yeld it much more bewtie and commendation. This ornament we speake of is giuen to it by figures and figuratiue speaches, which be the flowers as it were and coulours that a Poet setteth vpon his language of arte, as the embroderer doth his stone and perle, or passements of gold vpon the stufte of a Princely garment, or as th'excellent painter bestoweth the rich Orient coulours vpon his table of pourtraite: so neuerthelesse as if the same coulours in our arte of Poesie (as well as in those other mechanicall artes) be not well tempered, or not well layd, or be vsed in excesse, or neuer so litle disordered or misplaced, they not onely giue it no maner of grace at all, but rather do disfigure the stufte and spill the whole workmanship taking away all bewtie and good liking from it, no lesse then if the crimson tainte, which should be laid vpon a Ladies lips, or right in the center of her cheekes should by some ouersight or mishap be applied to her forehead or chinne, it would make (ye would say) but a very ridiculous bewtie, wherfore the chief prayse and cunning of our Poet is in the discreet vsing of his figures, as the skilfull painters is in the good conueyance of his coulours and shadowing traits of his penfill, with a delectable varietie, by all measure and iust proportion, and in places most aptly to be bestowed.

CHAP. II.

How our writing and speeches publike ought to be figuratiue, and if they be not doe greatly disgrace the cause and purpose of the speaker and writer.

BVt as it hath bene alwayes reputed a great fault to vse figuratiue speeches foolishly and indiscretly, so is it esteemed no lesse an imperfection in mans vtterance, to haue none vse of figure at all, specially in our writing and speeches publike, making them but as our ordinary talke, then which nothing can be more vnfaourie and farre from all ciuilitie. I remember in the first yeare of Queenes Maries raigne a Knight of Yorkshire was chofen speaker of the Parliament, a good gentleman and wise, in the affaires of his shire, and not vnlearned in the lawes of the Realme, but as well for some lack of his teeth, as for want of language nothing well spoken, which at that time and businesse was most behooffull for him to haue bene: this man after he had made his Oration to the Queene; which ye know is of course to be done at the first assembly of both houses; a bencher of the Temple both well learned and very eloquent, returning from the Parliament house asked another gentleman his frend how he liked M. Speakers Oration: mary quoth th'other, me thinks I heard not a better alehouse tale told this feuen yeares. This happened because the good old Knight made no difference betweene an Oration or publike speech to be deliuered to th'eare of a Princes Maiestie and state of a Realme, then he would haue done of an ordinary tale to be told at his table in the countrey, wherein all men know the oddes is very great. And though graue and wise counsellours in their consultations doe not vse much superfluous eloquence, and also in their iudiciall hearings do much mislike all scholasticall rhetoricks: yet in such a case as it may be (and as this Parliament was) if the Lord Chancelour of England or Archbishop of Canterbury himfelfe were to fpeake, he ought to doe it cunningly and eloquently, which can not be without the vfe of figures : and neuertheleffe none impeachment or blemifh to the grauitie of their perfons or of the caufe : wherein I report me to them that knew Sir Nicholas Bacon Lord keeper of the great Seale, or the now Lord Treafurer of England, and haue bene conuerfant with their fpeeches made in the Parliament houfe and Starrechamber. From whose lippes I haue feene to proceede more graue and naturall eloquence, then from all the Oratours of Oxford or Cambridge, but all is as it is handled, and maketh no matter whether the fame eloquence be naturall to them or artificiall (though I thinke rather naturall) yet were they knowen to be learned and not vnskillfull of th'arte, when they were yonger men : and as learning and arte teacheth a fchollar to fpeake, fo doth it alfo teach a counfellour, and afwell an old man as a yong, and a man in authoritie, afwell as a priuate perfon, and a pleader afwell as a preacher, euery man after his fort and calling as beft becommeth : and that fpeech which becommeth one, doth not become another, for maners of fpeeches, fome ferue to work in exceffe, fome in mediocritie, fome to graue purpofes, fome to light, fome to be fhort and brief, fome to be long, fome to firre vp affections, fome to pacifie and appeafe them, and thefe common defpifers of good vtterance, which refteth altogether in figuratiue fpeeches, being well vfed whether it come by nature or by arte or by exercife, they be but certaine groffe ignorance of whom it is truly fpoken scientia non habet inimicum nifi ignorantem. I haue come to the Lord Keeper Sir Nicholas Bacon, and found him fitting in his gallery alone with the works of Quintilian before him, in deede he was a moft eloquent man, and of rare learning and wifedome, as euer I knew England to breed, and one that ioyed as much in learned men and men of good witts. A Knight of the Queenes priuie chamber, once intreated a noble woman of the Court, being in great fauour about her Maieftie (to th'intent to remoue her from a certaine displeasure, which by finifter opinion ſhe had conceiued againſt a gentleman his friend) that it would pleaſe her to heare him ſpeake in his own cauſe, and not to condemne him vpon his aduerſaries report : God forbid ſaid ſhe, he is to wife for me to talke with, let him goe and ſatisfie ſuch a man naming him : why quoth the Knight againe, had your Ladyſhip rather heare a man talke like a foole or like a wife man ? This was becauſe the Lady was a litle peruerſe, and not diſpoied to reforme her ſelfe by hearing reaſon, which none other can ſo well beate into the ignorant head, as the well ſpoken and eloquent man. And becauſe I am ſo farre waded into this diſcourſe of eloquence and figuratiue ſpeeches, I will tell you what hapned on a time my ſelfe being preſent when certaine Doctours of the ciuil law were heard in a litigious cauſe betwixt a man and his wife : before a great Magiſtrat who (as they can tell that knew him) was a man very well learned and graue, but ſomewhat ſowre, and of no plauſible vtterance : the gentleman's chauce, was to ſay : my Lord the ſimple woman is not ſo much to blame as her lewde abbettours, who by violent perſwaſions haue lead her into this wilfulneſſe. Quoth the iudge, what neede ſuch eloquent termes in this place, the gentleman replied, doth your Lordſhip miſlike the terme, [violent] and me thinkes I ſpeake it to great purpoſe : for I am ſure ſhe would neuer haue done it, but by force of perſwaſion : and if perſwaſions were not very violent, to the minde of man it could not haue wrought ſo ſtrange an effect as we read that it did once in Ægypt, and would haue told the whole tale at large, if the Magiſtrate had not paſſed it ouer very pleaſantly. Now to tell you the whole matter as the gentleman intended, thus it was. There came into Ægypt a notable Oratour, whoſe name was Hegefias who inueyed ſo much againſt the incommodities of this tranſitory life, and ſo highly commended death the diſpatcher of all euils ; as a great number of his hearers deſtroyed themſelues, ſome with weapon, some with poyson, others by drowning and hanging themfelues to be rid out of this vale of misery, in so much as it was feared least many moe of the people would haue miscaried by occasion of his perswasions, if king Ptolome had not made a publicke proclamation, that the Oratour should auoyde the countrey, and no more be allowed to speake in any matter. Whether now perswasions, may not be said violent and forcible to simple myndes in speciall, I referre it to all mens iudgements that heare the story. At least waies, I finde this opinion, confirmed by a pretie deuise or embleme that Lucianus alleageth he saw in the pourtrait of Hercules within the Citie of Marseills in Prouence: where they had figured a lustie old man with a long chayne tyed by one end at his tong, by the other end at the peoples eares, who stood a farre off and seemed to be drawen to him by the force of that chayne fastned to his tong, as who would say, by force of his perswasions. And to shew more plainly that eloquence is of great force (and not as many men thinke amisse) the propertie and gift of yong men onely, but rather of old men, and a thing which better becommeth hory haire than beardlesse boyes, they seeme to ground it vpon this reason: age (say they and most truly) brings experience, experience bringeth wisedome, long life yeldes long vse and much exercise of speach, exercise and custome with wisedome, make an assured and voluble vtterance: so is it that old men more than any other fort speake most grauely, wifely, assuredly, and plausibly, which partes are all that can be required in perfite eloquence, and so in all deliberations of importance where counsellours are allowed freely to opyne and shew their conceits, good perswasion is no lesse requisite then speach it selfe: for in great purposes to speake and not to be able or likely to perswade, is a wayne thing: now let vs returne backe to say more of this Poeticall ornament.

CHAP. III.

How ornament Poeticall is of two fortes according to the double vertue and efficacie of figures.

His ornament then is of two fortes, one to satisfie and delight th'eare onely by a goodly outward shew set vpon the matter with wordes, and speaches smothly and tunably running: another by certaine intendments or fence of such wordes and speaches inwardly working a stirre to the mynde: that first qualitie the Greeks called Enargia, of this word argos, because it geueth a glorious lustre and light. This latter they called Energia of ergon, because it wrought with a strong and vertuous operation; and figure breedeth them both, some seruing to giue glosse onely to a language, some to geue it efficacie by fence, and so by that meanes some of them serue th'eare onely, some serue the conceit onely and not th'eare: there be of them also that serue both turnes as common seruitours appointed for th'one and th'other purpose, which shalbe hereafter spoken of in place: but because we haue alleaged before that ornament is but the good or rather bewtifull habite of language or stile, and figuratiue speaches the instrument wherewith we burnish our language fashioning it to this or that measure and proportion, whence finally resulteth a long and continuall phraze or maner of writing or speach, which we call by the name of stile: we wil first speake of language, then of stile, lastly of figure, and declare their vertue and differences, and also their vse and best application, and what portion in exornation euery of them bringeth to the bewtifying of this Arte.

CHAP. IIII.

Of Language.

Speech is not naturall to man fauing for his onely habilitie to speake, and that he is by kinde apt to vtter all his conceits with founds and voyces diuerfified many maner of wayes, by meanes of the many and fit instruments he hath by nature to that purpose, as a broad and voluble tong, thinne and mouable lippes, teeth euen and not shagged, thick ranged, a round vaulted pallate, and a long throte, besides an excellent capacitie of wit that maketh him more disciplinable and imitatiue then any other creature: then as to the forme and action of his speach, it commeth to him by arte and teaching, and by vse or exercife. But after a speach is fully fashioned to the common vnderstanding, and accepted by consent of a whole countrey and nation, it is called a language, and receaueth none allowed alteration, but by extraordinary occasions by little and little, as it were insensibly bringing in of many corruptions that creepe along with the time: of all which matters, we haue more largely spoken in our bookes of the originals and pedigree of the English tong. Then when I say language, I meane the speach wherein the Poet or maker writeth be it Greek or Latine, or as our case is the vulgar English, and when it is peculiar vnto a countrey it is called the mother speach of that people: the Greekes terme it Idioma: so is ours at this day the Norman English. Before the Conquest of the Normans it was the Anglesaxon, and before that the British, which as some will, is at this day, the Walsh, or as others affirme the Cornish: I for my part thinke neither of both, as they be now spoken and p[r]onounced. This part in our maker or Poet must be heedyly looked vnto, that it be naturall, pure, and the most vsuall of all his countrey: and for the same purpose rather that which is spoken in the kings Court, or in the good townes and Cities within the land, then in the marches and frontiers, or in port townes, where straungers haunt for traffike sake, or yet in Vniuersities where Schollers vse much peeuissh affectation of words out of the primatiue languages, or finally, in any vplandish village or corner of a Realme, where is no resort but of poore rusticall or vnciuill people : neither shall he follow the speach of a craftes man or carter, or other of the inferiour sort, though he be inhabitant or bred in the best towne and Citie in this Realme, for such persons doe abuse good speaches by strange accents or ill shapen foundes, and false ortographie. But he shall follow generally the better brought vp sort, such as the Greekes call [charientes] men ciuill and graciously behauoured and bred. Our maker therefore at these dayes shall not follow Piers plowman nor Gower nor Lydgate nor yet Chaucer, for their language is now out of vse with vs : neither shall he take the termes of Northern-men, such as they vse in dayly talke, whether they be noble men or gentlemen, or of their best clarkes all is a matter : nor in effect any speach vsed beyond the riuer of Trent, though no man can deny but that theirs is the purer English Saxon at this day, yet it is not so Courtly nor so currant as our Southerne English is, no more is the far Westerne mans speach : ye shall therefore take the vsuall speach of the Court, and that of London and the shires lying about London within lx. myles, and not much aboue. I say not this but that in euery shyre of England there be gentlemen and others that speake but specially write as good Southerne as we of Middlefex or Surrey do, but not the common people of euery shire, to whom the gentlemen, and also their learned clarkes do for the most part condescend, but herein we are already ruled by th'English Dictionaries and other bookes written by learned men, and therefore it needeth none other direction in that behalfe. Albeit peradventure some small admonition be not impertinent, for we finde in our English writers many wordes and speaches amendable, and ye shall see in some many inkhorne termes so ill affected brought in by men of learning as preachers and schoolemasters: and many straunge termes of other languages by Secretaries and Marchaunts and trauailours, and many darke wordes and not vsuall nor well founding, though they be dayly spoken in Court. Wherefore great heed must be taken by our maker in this point that his choise be good. And peraduenture the writer hereof be in that behalfe no lesse faultie then any other, vsing many straunge and vnaccustomed wordes and borrowed from other languages: and in that respect him selfe no meete Magistrate to reforme the same errours in any other person, but since he is not vnwilling to acknowledge his owne fault, and can the better tell how to amend it, he may seem a more excusable correctour of other mens: he intendeth therefore for an indifferent way and vniuerfall benefite to taxe him selfe first and before any others.

These be words vsed by th'author in this present treatise, scientificke, but with some reason, for it answereth the word mechanicall, which no other word could haue done so properly, for when hee spake of all artificers which rest either in science or in handy craft, it followed necessarilie that scientificque should be coupled with mechanicall: or els neither of both to haue bene allowed, but in their places: a man of science liberall, and a handicrafts man, which had not bene so cleanly a speech as the other Maior-domo: in truth this word is borrowed of the Spaniard and Italian, and therefore new and not vsuall, but to them that are acquainted with the affaires of Court: and so for his iolly magnificence (as this case is) may be accepted among Courtiers, for whom this is specially written. A man might haue said in steade of Maior-domo, the French word (maistre d'hostell) but ilfauouredly, or the right English word (Lord Steward.) But me thinks for my owne opinion this word Maior-domo though he be borrowed, is more acceptable than any of the rest, other men may iudge otherwise. Politien, this word also is receiued from the

Frenchmen, but at this day vsuall in Court and with all good Secretaries: and cannot finde an English word to match him, for to haue said a man politique, had not bene so wel: bicause in trueth that had bene no more than to haue said a ciuil person. Politien is rather a surueyour of ciuilitie than ciuil, and a publique minister or Counseller in the state. Ye haue also this worde Conduict, a French word, but well allowed of vs, and long since vsuall, it foundes somewhat more than this word (leading) for it is applied onely to the leading of a Captaine, and not as a little boy should leade a blinde man, therefore more proper to the case when he faide, conduict of whole armies: ye finde also this word Idiome, taken from the Greekes, yet seruing aptly, when a man wanteth to expresse so much vnles it be in two words, which surpluffage to auoide, we are allowed to draw in other words single, and asmuch significatiue: this word significatiue is borrowed of the Latine and French, but to vs brought in first by some Noble-mans Secretarie, as I thinke, yet doth so well serue the turne, as it could not now be spared: and many more like vsurped Latine and French words: as, Methode, methodicall, placation, function, assubtiling, refining, compendious, prolixie, figuratiue, inueigle. A terme borrowed of our common Lawyers. impression, also a new terme, but well expressing the matter, and more than our English word. These words, Numerous, numerositee, metricall, harmonicall, but they cannot be refused, specially in this place for description of the arte. Also ye finde these words, penetrate, penetrable, indignitie, which I cannot see how we may spare them, whatsoever fault wee finde with Ink-horne termes: for our speach wanteth wordes to such sence so well to be vsed: yet in steade of indignitie, yee haue vnworthinesse: and for penetrate, we may say peerce, and that a French terme also, or broche, or enter into with violence, but not so well founding as penetrate. Item, sauage, for wilde: obscure, for darke. Item these words, declination, dē-incation, dimention, are scholasticall termes in deede.

and yet very proper. But peradventure (and I could bring a reason for it) many other like words borrowed out of the Latin and French, were not so well to be allowed by vs, as these words, audacious, for bold: facunditie, for eloquence: egregious, for great or notable: implete, for replenished: attemptat, for attempt: compatible, for agreeable in nature, and many more. But herein the noble Poet Horace hath said inough to satisfie vs all in these few verses.

*Multa renascentur quæ iam cecidere cadent quæ
Quæ nunc sunt in honore vocabula si volet usus
Quem penes arbitrium est et vis et norma loquendi.*

Which I haue thus englished, but nothing with so good grace, nor so briefly as the Poet wrote.

*Many a word yfalne shall est arise
And such as now bene held in hiest prise
Will fall as fast, when vse and custome will Onely vmpiers of speach, for force and skill.*

CHAP. V.

Of Stile.

Stile is a constant and continual phrase or tenour of speaking and writing, extending to the whole tale or processe of the poeme or historie, and not properly to any peece or member of a tale: but is of words speeches and sentences together, a certaine contriued forme and qualitie, many times naturall to the writer, many times his peculier by election and arte, and such as either he keepeth by skill, or holdeth on by ignorance, and will not or peradventure cannot easily alter into any other. So we say that Ciceroes stile, and Salusts were not one, nor Cesars and Liuius, nor Homers and Hesiodus, nor Herodotus and Theucidides, nor Euripides and Aristophanes, nor Erasmus and Budeus stiles. And because this continuall course and manner of writing or speech sheweth the matter and disposition of the writers minde, more than one or few words or sentences can shew, therefore there be that haue called stile, the image of man [mentis character] for man is but his minde, and as his minde is tempered and qualified, so are his speeches and language at large, and his inward conceits be the mettall of his minde, and his manner of vtterance the very warp and woofe of his conceits, more plaine, or busie and intricate, or otherwise affected after the rate. Most men say that not any one point in all Physiognomy is so certaine, as to iudge a mans manners by his eye: but more assuredly in mine opinion, by his dayly maner of speech and ordinary writing. For if the man be graue, his speech and stile is graue: if light-headed, his stile and language also light: if the minde be haughtie and hoate, the speech and stile is also vehement and stirring: if it be colde and temperate, the stile is also very modest: if it be humble, or base and meeke, so is also the language and stile. And yet peradventure not altogether so, but that euery mans stile is for the most part according to the matter and subiect of the writer, or so ought to be, and conformable thereunto. Then againe may it be said as wel, that men doo chuse their subiects according to the mettall of their minds, and therefore a high minded man chuseth him high and lofty matter to write of. The base courage, matter base and lowe, the meane and modest mind, meane and moderate matters after the rate. Howsoever it be, we finde that vnder these three principall complexions (if I may with leaue so terme them) high, meane and base stile, there be contained many other humors or qualities of stile, as the plaine and obscure, the rough and smoth, the facill and hard, the plentifull and barraine, the rude and eloquent, the strong and feeble, the vehement and cold stiles, all which in their euill are to be reformed, and the good to be kept and vsed. But generally to haue the stile decent and comely it behooueth the maker or Poet to follow the nature of his subiect, that is if his matter be high and loftie that the stile be so to, if meane, the stile also to be meane, if base, the stile humble and base accordingly: and they that do otherwise vse it, applying to meane matter, hie and loftie stile, and to hie matters, stile eyther meane or base, and to the base matters, the meane or hie stile, do vtterly disgrace their poesie and shew themselues nothing skilfull in their arte, nor hauing regard to the decencie, which is the chiefe praise of any writer. Therefore to ridde all louers o learning from that errour, I will as neere as I can set downe, which matters be hie and loftie, which be but meane, and which be low and base, to the intent the stiles may be fashioned to the matters, and keepe their decorum and good proportion in euery respect: I am not ignorant that many good clerkes be contrary to mine opinion, and say that the loftie stile may be decently vsed in a meane and base subiect and contrariwise, which I do in parte acknowledge, but with a reasonable qualification. For Homer hath so vsed it in his trifling worke of Batrachomyomachia: that is in his treatise of the warre betwixt the frogs and the mice. Virgill also in his bucolickes, and in his georgicks, whereof the one is counted meane, the other base, that is the husbandmans discourses and the shepheards, but hereunto serueth a reason in my simple conceite: for first to that trifling poeme of Homer, though the frog and the mouse be but litle and ridiculous beasts, yet to treat of warre is an high subiect, and a thing in euery respect terrible and daungerous to them that it alights on: and therefore of learned dutie asketh martiall grandiloquence, if it be set foorth in his kind and nature of warre, euen betwixt the basest creatures that can be imagined: so also is the Ante or pismire, and they be but litle creeping things, not perfect beasts, but insect, or wormes: yet in describing their nature and instinct, and their manner of life approaching to the forme of a common-welth, and their properties not vnlike to the vertues of most excellent gouernors and captaines, it asketh a more maiestie of speach then would the description of an other beastes life or nature, and perchance of many matters perteyning vnto the bafer fort of men, becaufe it refembleth the hiftorie of a ciuill regiment, and of them all the chiefe and moft principall which is Monarchie: fo alfo in his bucolicks, which are but paftorall fpeeches and the bafeft of any other poeme in their owne proper nature: Virgill vfed a fomewhat fwelling ftile when he came to infinuate the birth of Marcellus heire apparant to the Emperour Augustus, as child to his fiftter, aspiring by hope and greatnes of the houfe, to the fucceffion of the Empire, and eftablifhment thereof in that familie: whereupon Virgill could no leffe then to vfe fuch manner of ftile, whatfoeuer condition the poeme were of and this was decent, and no fault or blemifh, to confound the tennors of the ftiles for that caufe. But now when I remember me againe that this Eglogue, (for I haue read it fomewhere) was conceiued by Oftauian th'Emperour to be written to the honour of Pollio a citizen of Rome, and of no great nobilitie, the fame was miliked againe as an implicatiue, nothing decent nor proportionable to Pollio his fortunes and calling, in which refpect I might fay likewise the ftile was not to be fuch as if it had bene for the Emperours owne honour, and thofe of the bloud imperiall, then which fubieft there could not be among the Romane writers an higher nor grauer to treat vpon: fo can I not be remoued from mine opinion, but ftill me thinks that in all decencie the ftile ought to conforme with the nature of the fubieft, otherwife if a writer will feeme to obferue no decorum at all, nor paffe how he fafhion his tale to his matter, who doubteth but he may in the lighteft caufe fpeake like a Pope, and in the graueft matters prate like a parrat, and finde wordes and phrafes ynough to ferue both turnes, and neither of them commendably, for neither is all that may be written of Kings and Princes fuch as ought to keepe a high ftile, nor all that may be written vpon a fhepherd to keepe the low, but according to the matter reported, if that be of high or bafe nature: for euery pety pleasure, and vayne delight of a king are not to [be] accompted high matter for the height of his eftate, but meane and perchaunce very bafe and vile: nor fo a Poet or historiographer, could decently with a high stile reporte the vanities of Nero, the ribaudries of Caligula, the idlenes of Domitian, and the riots of Helio-gabalus. But well the magnanimitie and honorable ambition of Cæsar, the prosperities of Augustus, the grauitie of Tiberius, the bountie of Traiane, the wife-dome of Aurelius, and generally all that which concerned the highest honours of Emperours, their birth, alliaunces, gouernement, exploits in warre and peace, and other publike affaires: for they be matter stately and high, and require a stile to be lift vp and aduanced by choyse of wordes, phrases, sentences, and figures, high, loftie, eloquent, and magnifik in proportion: so be the meane matters, to be caried with all wordes and speaches of smothnesse and pleasant moderation, and finally the base things to be holden within their teder, by a low, myld, and simple maner of vtterance, creeping rather than clyming, and marching rather then mounting vpwardes, with the wings of the stately subiects and stile.

CHAP. VI.

Of the high, lowe, and meane subiect.

He matters therefore that concerne the Gods and diuine things are highest of all other to be couched in writing, next to them the noble gests and great fortunes of Princes, and the notable accidents of time, as the greatest affaires of war and peace, these be all high subiectes, and therefore are deliuered ouer to the Poets Hymnick and historically who be occupied either in diuine laudes, or in heroicall reports: the meane matters be those that concerne meane men, their life and busines, as lawyers, gentlemen, and marchants, good householders and honest Citizens, and which found neither to matters of state nor of warre, nor leagues, nor great alliances, but smatch all the common conuersation, as of the ciuill and better sort of men: the base and low matters be the doings of the common artificer, feruingman, yeoman, groome, husbandman, day-labourer, failer, shepheard, fwynard, and such like of homely calling, degree and bringing vp: so that in euery of the sayd three degrees, not the selfe same vertues be egally to be prayfed nor the same vices, egally to be dispraifed, nor their loues, mariages, quarels, contracts and other behaiours, be like high nor do require to be fet fourth with the like stile: but euery one in his degree and decencie, which made that all hymnes and histories, and Tragedies, were written in the high stile: all Comedies and Enterludes and other common Poesies of loues, and such like in the meane stile, all Eglogues and pastorall poemes in the low and base stile, otherwise they had bene vtterly disproportioned: likewise for the same cause some phrascs and figures be onely peculiar to the high stile, some to the base or meane, some common to all three, as shalbe declared more at large hereafter when we come to speake of figure and phrascs: also some wordes and speeches and sentences doe become the high stile, that do not become th'other two. And contrariwise, as shalbe said when we talke of words and sentences: finally some kinde of measure and concord, doe not befeeme the high stile, that well become the meane and low, as we haue said speaking of concord and measure. But generally the high stile is disgraced and made foolish and ridiculous by all wordes affected, counterfeit, and puffed vp, as it were a windball carrying more countenance then matter, and can not be better resembled then to these midfommer pageants in London, where to make the people wonder are set forth great and vglie Gyants marching as if they were aliue, and armed at all points, but within they are stuffed full of browne paper and tow, which the shrewd boyes vnderpeering, do guilefully discover and turne to a great derision: also all darke and vnaccustomed wordes, or rusticall and homely, and sentences that hold too much of the mery and light, or infamous and vnshamefast are to be accounted of the same sort, for such speeches become not Princes, nor great estates, nor them that write of their doings to vtter or report and intermingle with the graue and weightie matters.

CHAP. VII.

Of Figures and figuratiue speeches.

AS figures be the instruments of ornament in euery language, so be they also in a forte abuses or rather trespasses in speach, because they passe the ordinary limits of common vtterance, and be occupied of purpose to deceiue the eare and also the minde, drawing it from plainnesse and simplicitie to a certaine doublenesse, whereby our talke is the more guilefull and abusing, for what els is your Metaphor but an inuerfion of fence by transport; your allegorie by a duplicitie of meaning or dissimulation vnder couert and darke intendments: one while speaking obscurely and in riddle called Ænigma: another while by common prouerbe or Adage called Premia: then by merry skoffe called Ironia: then by bitter tawnt called Sarcasmus: then by periphraze or circumlocution when all might be said in a word or two: then by incredible comparison giuing credit, as by your Hyperbole, and many other waies seeking to inueigle and appassionate the mind: which thing made the graue iudges Arcopagites (as I find written) to forbid all manner of figuratiue speeches to be vsed before them in their consistorie of Iustice, as meere illusions to the minde, and wresters of vpriight iudgement, saying that to allow such manner of forraine and coulored talke to make the iudges affectioned, were all one as if the carpenter before he began to square his timber would make his squire [square?] crooked: in so much as the straite and vpriight mind of a Iudge is the very rule of iustice till it be peruerted by affection, This no doubt is true and was by them grauely considered: but in this case because our maker or Poet is appointed not for a iudge, but rather for a pleader, and that of pleasant and louely causes and nothing perillous, such as be those for the triall of life, limme, or liuelyhood; and before iudges neither fower nor feuere, but in the eare of princely dames, yong ladies, gentlewomen and courtiers, beyng all for the most part either meeke of nature, or of pleafant humour, and that all his abufes tende but to difpofe the hearers to mirth and follace by pleafant conueyance and efficacy of fpeech, they are not in truth to be accompted vices but for vertues in the poetical fcience very commendable. On the other fide, fuch trespaffes in fpeech (whereof there be many) as geue dolour and difliking to the eare and minde, by any foule indecencie or difproportion of founde, fituation, or fence, they be called and not without caufe the vicious parts or rather heresies of language: wherefore the matter refteth much in the definition and acceptance of this word [decorum] for whatfoeuer is fo, cannot iuftly be miliked. In which refpect it may come to paffe that what the Grammarian fetteth downe for a vicioufitee in fpeech may become a vertue and no vice, contrariwife his commended figure may fall into a reprochfull fault: the beft and moft affured remedy whereof is, generally to follow the faying of Bias: ne quid nimis. So as in keeping meafure, and not exceeding nor fhewing any defect in the vfe of his figures, he cannot lightly do amiffe, if he haue befides (as that muft needes be) a fpeciall regard to all circumftances of the perfon, place, time, caufe and purpofe he hath in hand, which being well obferued it eafily auoideth all the recited inconueniences, and maketh now and then very vice goe for a formall vertue in the exercife of this Arte.

CHAP. VIII.

Six points fet downe by our learned forefathers for a generall regiment of all good vtterance be it by mouth or by writing.

But before there had bene yet any precife obferuation made of figuratiue fpeeches, the firft learned artificers of language confidered that the bewtie and good grace of vtterance refted in no [fo] many pointes:

and whatfoeuer tranſgreſſed thoſe lymits, they counted it for vitious; and thereupon did ſet downe a manner of regiment in all ſpeech generally to be obſerued, conſiſting in ſixe pointes. Firſt they ſaid that there ought to be kept a decent proportion in our writings and ſpeech, which they termed Analogia. Secondly, that it ought to be voluble vpon the tongue, and tunable to the eare, which they called Tafis. Thirdly, that it were not tediously long, but briefe and compendious, as the matter might beare, which they called Syntomia. Fourthly, that it ſhould cary an orderly and good conſtruction, which they called Syntheſis. Fifthly, that it ſhould be a ſound, proper and naturall ſpeech, which they called Ciriologia. Sixtly, that it ſhould be liuely and ſtirring, which they called Tropus. So as it appeareth by this order of theirs, that no vice could be committed in ſpeech, keeping within the bounds of that reſtraint. But ſir, all this being by them very well conceiued, there remaind a greater difficultie to know what this proportion, volubilitie, good conſtruction, and the reſt were, otherwiſe we could not be euer the more relieued. It was therefore of neceſſitie that a more curious and particular deſcription ſhould bee made of euery manner of ſpeech, either tranſgreſſing or agreeing with their ſaid generall preſcript. Whereupon it came to paſſe, that all the commendable parts of ſpeech were ſet forth by the name of figures, and all the illaudable partes vnder the name of vices, or vicioſities, of both which it ſhall bee ſpoken in their places.

CHAP. IX.

He Greekes were a happy people for the freedome and liberty of their language, becauſe it was allowed them to inuent any new name that they liſted, and to peece many words together to make of them one entire, much more significant than the single word. So among other things did they to their figurative speeches devise certain names. The Latines came somewhat behind them in that point, and for want of convenient single words to expresse that which the Greeks could do by cobling many words together, they were faine to vse the Greekes still, till after many yeares that the learned Oratours and good Grammarians among the Romaines, as Cicero, Varro, Quintilian, and others strained themselves to giue the Greeke words Latin names, and yet nothing so apt and fitty. The same course are we driuen to follow in this description, since we are enforced to cull out for the vse of our Poet or maker all the most commendable figures. Now to make them knowne (as behoueth) either we must do it by th'original Greeke name or by the Latine, or by our owne. But when I consider to what sort of Readers I write, and how ill faring the Greeke terme would found in the English eare, then also how short the Latines come to expresse manie of the Greeke originals. Finally, how well our language serueth to supplie the full signification of them both, I haue thought it no lesse lawfull, yea peradventure vnder licence of the learned, more laudable to vse our owne naturall, if they be well chosen, and of proper signification, than to borrow theirs. So shall not our English Poets, though they be to seeke of the Greeke and Latin languages, lament for lack of knowledge sufficient to the purpose of this arte. And in case any of these new English names giuen by me to any figure, shall happen to offend. I pray that the learned will beare with me and to thinke the straungenesse thereof proceeds but of noueltie and disacquaintance with our eares, which in proceffe of tyme, and by custome will frame very well: and such others as are not learned in the primitiue languages, if they happen to hit vpon any new name of myne (so ridiculous in their opinion) as may moue them to laughter, let such persons, yet assure themselves that such names go as neare as may be to their originals, or els serue better to the purpose of the figure then the very originall, reseruing alwayes, that such new name should not be vnpleasant in our vulgar nor harsh vpon the tong: and where it shall happen otherwise, that it may please the reader to thinke that hardly any other name in our English could be found to serue the turne better. Againe if to auoid the hazard of this blame I should haue kept the Greeke or Latin still it would haue appeared a little too scholasticall for our makers, and a peece of worke more fit for clerkes then for Courtiers for whose instruction this trauaile is taken: and if I should haue left out both the Greeke and Latine name, and put in none of our owne neither: well perchance might the rule of the figure haue bene set downe, but no conuenient name to hold him in memory. It was therefore expedient we deuised for euery figure of importance his vulgar name, and to ioyne the Greeke or Latine originall with them; after that fort much better satisying aswel the vulgar as the learned learner, and also the authors owne purpose, which is to make of a rude rimer, a learned and a Courtly Poet.

CHAP. X.

A diuision of figures, and how they serue in exornation of language.

AND because our chiefe purpose herein is for the learning of Ladies and young Gentlewomen, or idle Courtiers, desirous to become skilful in their owne mother tongue, and for their priuate recreation to make now and then ditties of pleasure, thinking for our parte none other science so fit for them and the place as that which teacheth beau semblant, the chiefe profession aswell of Courting as of poesie: since to such manner of mindes nothing is more combersome then tedious doctrines and schollarly methodes of discipline, we haue in our owne conceit deuised a new and strange modell of this arte, fitter to please the Court then the schoole,

and yet not vnneccessarie for all such as be willing themselves to become good makers in the vulgar, or to be able to iudge of other mens makings: wherefore, intending to follow the course which we haue begun, thus we say: that though the language of our Poet or maker be pure and clenly, and not disgraced by such vicious parts as haue bene before remembered in the Chapter of language, be sufficiently pleasing and commendable for the ordinarie vse of speech; yet is not the same so well appointed for all purposes of the excellent Poet, as when it is gallantly arrayed in all his colours which figure can set vpon it, therefore we are now further to determine of figures and figuratiue speeches. Figuratiue speech is a noueltie of language euidently (and yet not absurdly) estranged from the ordinarie habite and manner of our dayly talke and writing and figure it selfe is a certaine liuely or good grace set vpon wordes, speeches and sentences to some purpose and not in vaine, giuing them ornament or efficacie by many manner of alterations in shape, in founde, and also in fence, sometime by way of surplufage, sometime by defect, sometime by disorder, or mutation, and also by putting into our speeches more pithe and substance, subtilitie, quicknesse, efficacie or moderation, in this or that sort tuning and tempring them, by amplification, abridgement, opening, closing, enforcing, meekening or otherwise disposing them to the best purpose: whereupon the learned clerks who haue written methodically of this Arte in the two master languages, Greeke and Latine, haue sorted all their figures into three rankes, and the first they bestowed vpon the Poet onely: the second vpon the Poet and Oratour indifferently: the third vpon the Oratour alone. And that first sort of figures doth serue th'eare onely and may be therefore called Auricular: your second serues the conceit onely and not th'eare, and may be called sensable, not sensible nor yet sententious: your third sort serues as well th'eare as the conceit and may be called sententious figures, because not only they properly appertaine to full sentences, for bewtifying them with a currant and pleafant numeroſitie, but alſo giuing them efficacie, and enlarging the whole matter beſides with copious amplifications. I doubt not but ſome buſie carpers will ſcorne at my new deuifed termes: auricular and ſenfable, ſaying that I might with better warrant haue vſed in their ſteads theſe words, orthographicall or ſyntacticall, which the learned Grammarians left ready made to our hands, and do importe as much as th'other that I haue brought, which thing peradventure I deny not in part, and neuertheleſſe for ſome cauſes thought them not ſo neceſſarie: but with theſe maner of men I do willingly beare, in reſpect of their laudable endeouour to allow antiquitie and flie innouation: with like beneuolence I truſt they will beare with me writing in the vulgar ſpeech and ſeeking by my nouelties to ſatiſſie not the ſchoole but the Court: whereas they know very well all old things ſoone waxe ſtale and lothſome, and the new deuifes are euer dainty and delicate, the vulgar inſtruction requiring alſo vulgar and communicable termes, not clerkly or vncouthe as are all theſe of the Greeke and Latine languages primitiuely receiued, vnleſſe they be qualified or by much uſe and cuſtome allowed and our eares made acquainted with them. Thus then I ſay that auricular figures be thoſe which worke alteration in th'eare by ſound, accent, time, and ſlipper volubilitie in vtterance, ſuch as for that reſpect was called by the auncients numeroſitie of ſpeech. And not onely the whole body of a tale in a poeme or hiftorie may be made in ſuch fort pleafant and agreeable to the eare, but alſo euery claufe by it ſelfe, and euery ſingle word carried in a claufe, may haue their pleafant ſweeteneſſe apart. And ſo long as this qualitie extendeth but to the outward tuning of the ſpeech reaching no higher then th'eare and forcing the mynde little or nothing, it is that vertue which the Greeks call Enargia and is the office of the auricular figures to performe. Therefore as the members of language at large are whole ſentences, and ſentences are compact of clauſes, and clauſes of words, and euery word of letters and fillables, so is the alteration (be it but of a fillable or letter) much materiall to the found and sweetenesse of vtterance. Wherefore beginning first at the smallest alterations which rest in letters and fillables, the first sort of our figures auricular we do appoint to single words as they lye in language; the second to clausfes of speach; the third to perfit sentences and to the whole masse or body of the tale be it poeme or historie written or reported.

CHAP. XI.

Of auricular figures apperteining to single wordes and working by their diuers foundes and audible tunes alteration to the eare onely and not the mynde.

Word as he lieth in course of language is many wayes figured and thereby not a little altered in found, which consequently alters the tune and harmonie of a meeter as to the eare. And this alteration is sometimes by adding sometimes by rabbating of a fillable or letter to or from a word either in the beginning, middle or ending ioyning or vniyning of fillables and letters suppressing or confounding their feuerall foundes, or by misplacing of a letter, or by cleare exchange of one letter for another, or by wrong ranging of the accent. And your figures of addition or surpluse be three, videl. In the beginning, as to say: I-doen, for doon, endanger, for danger, embolden, for bolden.

In the middle, as to say renuers, for reuers, mecterly, for meetly, goldylockes, for goldlockes.

In th'end, as to say [remembren] for [remembre] [spoken] for [spoke]. And your figures of rabbate be as many, videl.

From the beginning, as to say [twixt for betwixt] [gainfay for againfay :] [ill for euill :]

From the middle, as to say [paraunter for parauenture] [poortie for pouertie] [fouaigne for foueraigne] [tane for taken.]

From the end, as to say [morne for morning] [bet for better] and fuch like.

Your fwallowing or eating vp one letter by another is when two vowels meete, whereof th'ones sound goeth into other, as to fay for to attaine t'attaine] for forrow and smart for' and smart.]

Your displacing of a fillable as to fay [desier for desire.] fier for fire.]

By cleare exchange of one letter or fillable for another, as to fay euermare for euermore, wrang for wrong: gould for gold: fright for fraight and a hundred moe, which be commonly misused and strained to make rime.

By wrong ranging the accent of a fillable by which meane a short fillable is made long and a long short as to fay foueraïne for fouéraine: gratious for grátious: ëndure for endüre: Salómon for Sálonon.

These many wayes may our maker alter his wordes, and sometmes it is done for pleasure to giue a better sound, sometmes vpon necessitie, and to make vp the rime. But our maker must take heed that he be not to bold specially in exchange of one letter for another, for vnlesse vsuall speach and custome allow it, it is a fault and no figure, and because these be figures of the smallest importaunce, I forbear to giue them any vulgar name.

CHAP. XII.

Of Auricular figures pertaining to clausfes of speech and by them working no little alteration to the eare.

AS your single wordes may be many waies transfigured to make the meetre or verse more tunable and melodious, so also may your whole and entire clausfes be in such fort contriued by the order of their construction as the eare may receiue a certaine recreation, although the mind for any noueltie of fence be little or nothing affected. And therefore al your figures of grammaticall construction, I accompt them but merely auricular in that they reach no furdre then the eare. To which there will appeare some sweete or vnfaery point to offer you dolour or delight, either by some eident defect, or surplufage, or diforder, or immutation in the fame ſpeeches notably altering either the congruitie grammaticall, or the fence, or both. And firſt of thoſe that worke by defect, if but one word or ſome little portion of ſpeech be wanting, it may be ſupplied by ordinary vnderſtanding and vertue of the figure Eclipsis, as to ſay, ſo early a man, for [are ye] ſo early a man: he is to be intreated, for he is [eaſie] to be intreated: I thanke God I am to liue like a Gentleman, for I am [able] to liue, and the Spaniard ſaid in his deuife of armes acuerdo oluido, I remember I forget whereas in right congruitie of ſpeech it ſhould be. I remember [that I [doo] forget. And in a deuife of our owne [empechement pur a choiſon] a let for a furderance whereas it ſhould be ſaid [riſe] a let for a furderance, and a number more like ſpeeches defectiue, and ſupplied by common vnderſtanding.

Eclipsis
fault.

But if it be to mo claues then one, that ſome ſuch word be ſupplied to perfit the congruitie or fence of them all, it is by the figure [Zeugma] we call him the [ſingle ſupplie] becauſe by one word we ſerue many claues of one congruitie, and may be likened to the man that ſerues many maiſters at once, but all of one country or kindred: as to ſay.

Zeugma
or the Single ſupply.

Fellowes and friends and kinne forſooke me quite.

Here this word forſooke ſatiſfieth the congruitie and fence of all three claues, which would require euery of them aſmuch. And as we ſetting forth her Maieſties regall petigree, ſaid in this figure of [Single ſupplie.]

Her graundſires Father and Brother was a King

Her mother a crowned Queene, her Siſter and her ſelfe.

Whereas ye ſee this one word [was] ſerues them all in that they require but one congruitie and fence.

Yet hath this figure of [Single ſupply] another propertie, occaſioning him to change now and then his name: by the order of his ſupplie, for if it be placed in the forefront of all the severall clauses whom he is to ferue as a common feruitour, then is he Prozeugma, called by the Greeks Prozeugma, by vs the or the Ringleader. Ringleader : thus

Her beautie perst mine eye, her speach mine wofull hart :
Her presence all the powers of my discourse. etc.

Where ye see that this one word [perst] placed in the foreward, fatisfieth both in sence and congruitie all those other clauses that followe him.

And if such word of supplie be placed in the middle of all such clauses as he ferues :
Mezozzeugma it is by the Greekes called Mezozzeugma, by or the Middle mar- vs the [Midalemarcher] thus :

Faire maydes beautie (alack) with yeares it weares away.
And with wether and sicknes, and sorrow as they say.

Where ye see this word [weares] ferues one clause before him, and two clauses behind him, in one and the same sence and congruitie. And in this verfe,

Either the troth or talke nothing at all.

Where this word [talke] ferues the clause before and also behind. But if such supplie be placed after all the clauses, and not before nor in the mid-Hypozeugma dle, then is he called by the Greeks Hypo- or the Rerewarder. zeugma, and by vs the [Rerewarder] thus :

My mates that vont, to keepe me companie,
And my neighbours, who dwelt next to my wall,
The friends that serue, they would not slicke to die
In my quarrell : they are fled from me all.

Where ye see this word [fled from me] ferue all the three clauses requiring but one congruitie and sence.
 But if such want be in fundrie clauses, and of severall congruities or sence, and the supply be made to ferue them all, it is by the figure Sillepsis, whom for that respect we call the [double supplie]

Sillepsis, conceiuing, and, as it were, comprehending or the Double supply. vnder one, a supplie of two natures, and may be likened to the man that ferues many masters at once, being of strange Countries or kinreds, as in these verses, where the lamenting widow shewed the Pilgrim the graues in which her husband and children lay buried.

Here my sweete sonnes and daughters all my blisse, Yonder mine owne deere husband buried is.

Where ye see one verbe singular supplyeth the plural and singular, and thus

*Judge ye louers, if it be strange or no :
My Ladie laughs for ioy, and I for wo.*

Where ye see a third person supplie himselfe and a first person. And thus,

*Madame ye neuer shewed your selfe vntrue,
Nor my deserts would euer suffer you.*

Viz. to show. Where ye see the moode Indicatiue supply him selfe and an Infinitive. And the like in these other.

*I neuer yet failde you in constancie,
Nor neuer doo intend vntill I die.*

Viz. [to show.] Thus much for the congruities, now for the fence. One wrote thus of a young man, who slew a villaine that had killed his father, and rauished his mother.

*Thus valiantly and with a manly minde,
And by one feate of euerlasting fame,
This lustie lad fully requited kinde,
His fathers death, and eke his mothers shame.*

Where ye see this word [requite] serue a double fence: that is to say, to reuenge, and to satisfie. For the parents iniurie was reuenged, and the duetie of nature performed or satisfied by the childe. But if this supplie be made to fundrie claufes, or to one clause fundrie times iterated, and by feuerall words, so as euery clause hath his owne supplie: then is it called by the Greekes Hypozeuxis, we call him the substitute after his originall, and is a supplie with iteration, as thus:

*Vnto the king she went, and to the king she said,
Mine owne liege Lord behold thy poore handmaid.*

Here [went to the king] and [said to the king] be but one clause iterated with words of fundrie supply. Or as in these verses following.

My Ladie gaue me, my Ladie wist not vwhat,

*Geuing me leaue to be her Soueraine :
For by such gift my Ladie hath done that,
Which whilest she liues she may not call againe.*

Here [my Ladie gaue] and [my Ladie vvist] be supplies with iteration, by vertue of this figure.

Ye haue another auricular figure of defect, and is when we begin to speake a thing, and breake of in the middle way, as if either it needed no further to be spoken of, or that we were ashamed, or afraide to speake it out. It is also sometimes done by way of threatning, and to shew a moderation of anger. The Greekes call him Aposiopesis.
Aposiopesis.

If we doo interrupt our speech for feare, this may be an example, where as one durst not make the true report as it was, but staid halfe way for feare of offence, thus :

*He said you were, I dare not tell you plaine :
For words once out, neuer returne againe.*

If it be for shame, or that the speaker suppose it would be indecent to tell all, then thus : as he that said to his sweete hart, whom he checked for secretly whispering with a suspected person.

*And did ye not come by his chamber dore ?
And tell him that : goe to, I say no more.*

If it be for anger or by way of manace or to shew a moderation of wrath as the graue and discreeter sort of men do, then thus.

*If I take you with such another cast
I sweare by God, but let this be the last.*

Thinking to haue said further viz. I will punish you.

If it be for none of all these causes but vpon some sodaine occasion that moues a man to breake of his tale, then thus.

*He told me all at large : lo yonder is the man
Let himfelfe tell the tale that best tell can.*

This figure is fit for phantasticall heads and such as be sodaine or lacke memorie. I know one of good learning that greatly blemisheth his discretion with this maner of speach : for if he be in the graueſt matter of the world talking, he will vpon the ſodaine for the flying of a bird ouerthwart the way, or ſome other ſuch ſleight cauſe, interrupt his tale and neuer returne to it againe.

Ye haue yet another maner of ſpeach purporting at the firſt bluſh a defect which afterward is ſupplied, the Greekes call him Prolepsiſ, we the Propounder, or the Explainer which ye will : because he workes both effectes, as thus, where in certaine verſes we deſcribe the triumphant enter-view of two great Princeſſes thus.

Prolepsiſ.
or the Propounder.

*Theſe two great Queenes, came marching hand in hand,
Vnto the hall, where ſtore of Princes ſtand :
And people of all countreys to behold,
Coronis all clad, in purple cloth of gold :
Celiar in robes, of ſiluer tiſſew white,
With rich rubies, and pearles all bedighte.*

Here ye ſee the firſt propoſition in a fort defectiue and of imperfect fence, till ye come by diuiſion to expone and enlarge it, but if we ſhould follow the originall right, we ought rather to call him the foreſtaller, for like as he that ſtandes in the market way, and takes all vp before it come to the market in groſſe and ſells it by retaile, ſo by this maner of ſpeach our maker ſetts down before all the matter by a brief propoſition, and afterward explanes it by a diuiſion more particularly.

By this other example it appeares alſo.

*Then deare Lady I pray you let it bee,
That our long loue may lead vs to agree :
Me ſince I may not vved you to my wife,
To ſerue you as a miſtreſſe all my life :
Ye that may not me for your husband haue,
To clayme me for your ſeruant and your ſlaue.*

CHAP. XII[I].

Of your figures Auricular vvorking by disorder.

Hiperbaton,
or the Trespasser.

All their speaches which wrought by disorder the Greekes gaue a general name [Hiperbaton] as much to fay as the [trespasser] and because such disorder may be committed many wayes it receiueth sundry particulars vnder him, whereof some are onely proper to the Greekes and Latines and not to vs, other some ordinarie in our maner of speaches, but so foule and intollerable as I will not seeme to place them among the figures, but do raunge them as they deserue among the vicious or faultie speaches.

Your first figure of tollerable disorder is [Parenthesis] or by an English name the [Infertour] and is when ye will seeme for larger information or some other purpose, to peece or graffe in the middest of your tale an vnecessary parcell of speach, which neuerthelesse may be thence without any detriment to the rest. The figure is so common that it needeth none example, neuerthelesse because we are to teache Ladies and Gentlewomen to know their schoole points and termes appertaining to the Art, we may not refuse to yeeld examples euen in the plainest cases, as that of maister Diars very aptly.

*But now my Deere (for so my loue makes me to call you still)
That loue I say, that lucklesse loue, that vvorks me all this ill.*

Also in our Eglogue intituled Elpine, which we made being but eightene yeares old, to king Edvard the sixt a Prince of great hope, we furred that the Pilot of a ship answering the King, being inquistiue and desirous to know all the parts of the ship and tackle, what they were, and to what vse they serued, vsing this infertion or Parenthesis.

*Soueraigne Lord (for vvhy a greater name
To one on earth no mortall tongue can frame
No statelic stile can giue the praclifd penne:*

To one on earth conuersant among men.)

And so proceedes to answer the kings question?

The shippe thou seest sayling in sea so large, etc.

This insertion is very long and vtterly impertinent to the principall matter, and makes a great gappe in the tale, neuerthelesse is no disgrace but rather a bewtie and to very good purpose, but you must not vse such insertions often nor to thicke, nor those that bee very long as this of ours, for it will breede great confusion to haue the tale so much interrupted.

Ye haue another manner of disordered speach, when ye misplace your words or clausfes and set that before which should be behind, et è conuerso, we call it in English prouerbe, the cart before the horse, the Greeks call it Histeron proteron, we name it the Preposterous, and if it be not too much vsed is tollerable inough, and many times scarce perceiueable, vnlesse the fence be thereby made very absurd: as he that described his manner of departure from his mistresse, said thus not much to be misliked.

I kist her cherry lip and tooke my leaue :

For I tooke my leaue and kist her: And yet I cannot well say whether a man vse to kisse before hee take his leaue, or take his leaue before he kisse, or that it be all one busines. It seemes the taking leaue is by vsing some speach, intreating licence of departure: the kisse a knitting vp of the farewell, and as it were a testimoniall of the licence without which here in England one may not presume of courtesie to depart, let yong Courtiers decide this controuersie. One describing his landing vpon a strange coast, sayd thus preposterouly.

When we had climbde the clifs, and were a shore,

Whereas he should haue said by good order.

When vve vvere come a shore and clymed had the cliffs

For one must be on land ere he can clime. And as another said:

My dame that bred me vp and bare me in her vvombe.

Whereas the bearing is before the bringing vp. All your other figures of disorder because they rather seeme deformities then bewties of language, for fo many of them as be notoriously vndecent, and make no good harmony, I place them in the Chapter of vices hereafter following.

CHAP. XIII.

Of your figures Auricular that worke by Surplufage.

Our figures auricular that worke by surplufage, fuch of them as be materiall and of importaunce to the fence or bewtie of your language, I referre them to the harmonickall fpeeches of oratours among the figures rhetoricall, as be thofe of repetition, and iteration or amplification. All other forts of surplufage, I accompt rather vicious then figuratiue, and therefore not melodious as fhallbe remembered in the chapter of viciofities or faultie fpeeches.

Enallage.
change.

Our figures that worke auricularly by exchange, were more obseruable to the Greekes and Latines for the brauenesse of their language, ouer that our is, and for the multiplicite of their Grammaticall accidents, or verball affects, as I may terme them, that is to fay, their diuers cafes, moods, tenfes, genders, with variable terminations, by reason whereof, they changed not the very word, but kept the word, and changed the fhape of him onely, vſing one cafe for another, or tenſe, or perſon, or gender, or number, or moode. We, hauing no fuch varietie of accidents, haue little or no vſe of this figure. They called it Enallage.

But another fort of exchange which they had, and very prety, we doe likewise vſe, not changing one word for another, by their accidents or cafes, as the Enallage: nor by the places, as the [Prepoſterous] but changing their true conſtruction and application, whereby the fence is quite

or the Changeling.

peruerted and made very absurd: as, he that should say, for tell me troth and lie not, lie me troth and tell not. For come dine vvith me and slay not, come slay vvith me and dine not.

A certaine piteous louer, to moue his mistres to compassion, wrote among other amorous verses, this one.

For, mine woes before your eyes, spoken to th'intent to winne fauour in her sight.

But that was pretie of a certaine forrie man of law, that gaue his Client but bad counsell, and yet found fault with his fee, and said: my fee, good frend, hath deserued better counsel. Good master, quoth the Client, if your selfe had not said so, I would neuer haue beleued it: but now I thinke as you doo. The man of law perceiuing his error, I tell thee (quoth he) my counsel hath deserued a better fee. Yet of all others was that a most ridiculous, but very true exchange, which the yeoman of London vsed with his Sergeant at the Mace, who said he would goe into the countrie, and make merry a day or two, while his man plyed his busines at home: an example of it you shall finde in our Enterlude entituled Lustie London: the Sergeant, for sparing of hors-hire, said he would goe with the Carrier on foote. That is not for your worship, saide his yeoman, whereunto the Sergeant replied.

I vvot vvhath I meane Iohn, it is for to slay

And company the knaue Carrier, for loosing my vvay.

The yeoman thinking it good manner to soothe his Sergeant, said againe.

I meane vvhath I vvot Sir, your best is to hie,

And carrie a knaue vvith you for companie.

Ye see a notorious exchange of the construction, and application of the words in this: I vvot vvhath I meane; and I meane vvhath I vvot, and in the other, company the knaue Carrier, and carrie a knaue in your companie. The Greekes call this figure [Hipallage] the Latins Submutatio, we in our vulgar may call him the [vnder-change] but I had rather haue him called the [Change-

ling] nothing at all sweruing from his originall, and much more aptly to the purpose, and pleasanter to beare in memory: specially for your Ladies and pretie mistresses in Court, for whose learning I write, because it is a terme often in their mouthes, and alluding to the opinion of Nurfes, who are wont to say, that the Fayries vse to steale the fairest children out of their cradles, and put other ill faouered in their places, which they called changelings, or Elfs: so, if ye mark, doeth our Poet, or maker play with his wordes, vsing a wrong construction for a right, and an absurd for a sensible, by manner of exchange.

CHAP. XVI.

Of some other figures vvhich because they serue chiefly to make the meeters tunable and melodious, and affect not the minde but very little, be placed among the auricular.

Omoioteleton,
or the
Like loose.

He Greekes vsed a manner of speech or writing in their profes, that went by clauses, finishing the words of like tune, and might be by vsing like cafes, tenfes, and other points of consonance, which they called Omoioteleton, and is that wherein they neereft approched to our vulgar ryme, and may thus be expressed.

*Weeping creeping beseeching I vvan,
The loue at length of Lady Lucian.*

Or thus if we speake in prose and not in meetre.

*Mischaunces ought not to be lamented,
But rather by vvisedome in time preuented:
For such mishappes as be remedileffe,
To sorrow them it is but foolishnesse:
Yet are vve all so frayle of nature,
As to be greeued vvith euery displeasure.*

The craking Scotts as the Cronicle reportes at a certaine time made this bald rime vpon the English-men.

Long beards hartleffe, Painted hoodes vvitleffe:

*Gay coates gracelesse,
Make all England thriftlesse.*

Which is no perfit rime in deede, but claufes finishing in the self fame tune: for a rime of good fimphonie should not conclude his concords with one and the fame terminant fillable, as less, less, less, but with diuers and like terminants, as les, pres, mes, as was before declared in the chapter of your cadences, and your claufes in prose should neither finish with the fame nor with the like terminants, but with the contrary as hath bene shewed before in the booke of proportions; yet many vse it otherwise, neglecting the Poeticall harmonie and skill. And th'Earle of Surrey with Syr Thomas Wyat, the most excellent makers of their time, more peraduenture respecting the fitnesse and ponderositie of their wordes then the true cadence or fimphonie, were very licencious in this point. We call this figure following the originall, the [like loofe] alluding to th'Archers terme who is not said to finish the feate of his shot before he giue the loofe, and deliuer his arrow from his bow, in which respect we vse to say marke the loofe of a thing for marke the end of it.

Ye do by another figure notably affect th'eare when ye make euery word of the verse to begin with a like letter, as for example in this verse written in an Epithaphe of our making.

Parimion,
letter.

*Time tried his truth his trauailes and his trust,
And time to late tried his integritie.*

It is a figure much vsed by our common rimers, and doth well if it be not too much vsed, for then it falleth into the vice which shalbe hereafter spoken of called Tautologia.

Ye haue another fort of speach in a maner defectiue because it wants good band or coupling, and is the figure [Afyndeton] we call him [loofe language] and doth not a litle alter th'eare as thus.

Afyndeton,
or the Loofe language.

I sawv it, I said it, I vwill foveare it.

Cæsar the Dictator vpon the victorie hee obtained against Pharnax king of Bithinia shewing the celeritie of his conquest, wrate home to the Senate in this tenour of speach no lesse swift and speedy then his victorie.

Veni, vidi, vici,

I came, I saw, I ouercame.

Meaning thus I was no sooner come and beheld them but the victorie fell on my side.

The Prince of Orenge for his deuise of Armes in banner displayed against the Duke of Alua and the Spaniards in the Low-countray vsed the like maner of speach.

Pro Rege, pro lege, pro grege,

For the king, for the commons, for the countrey lawres.

It is a figure to be vsed when we will seeme to make hast, or to be earnest, and these examples with a number more be spoken by the figure of [lose language.]

Quite contrary to this ye haue another maner of construction which they called [Polisindeton] Polisindeton,
or the
Coople clause. we may call him the [couple clause] for that euery clause is knit and coupled together with a coniunctiue thus.

And I saw it, and I say it and I

Will sweare it to be true.

So might the Poesie of Cæsar haue bene altered thus.

I came, and I saw, and I ouercame.

One wrote these verses after the same sort.

For in her mynde no thought there is,

But how she may be true iwis :

And tenders thee and all thy heale,

And wisheth both thy health and vveale :

And is thine owne, and so she sayes,

And cares for thee ten thousand wayes.

Ye haue another maner of speach drawn out at length and going all after one tenure and with an im-

Irmus,
or the Long loose.

perfit sence till you come to the last word or verse which concludes the whole premisses with a perfit sence and full periode, the Greeks call it Irmus, I call him the [long loose] thus appearing in a dittie of Sir Thomas Wyat where he describes the diuers distempers of his bed.

*The restlesse state renuer of my smart,
The labours salue increasing my sorrow :
The bodies ease and troubles of my hart,
Quietour of mynde mine vnquiet foe :
Forgetter of paine remembrer of woe,
The place of sleepe wherein I do but wake :
Besprent with teares my bed I thee forsake.*

Ye see here how ye can gather no perfection of fence in all this dittie till ye come to the last verse in these wordes my bed I thee forsake. And in another Sonet of Petrarcha which was thus Englished by the same Sir Thomas Wyat.

*If weaker care if sodaine pale collour,
If many sighes with little speach to plaine :
Now ioy now woe, if they my ioyes distaine,
For hope of small, if much to feare therefore,
Be signe of loue then do I loue againe.*

Here all the whole fence of the dittie is suspended till ye come to the last three wordes, then do I loue againe, which finisheth the song with a full and perfit fence.

When ye will speake giuing euery person or thing besides his proper name a qualitie by way of addition whether it be of good or of bad it is a figuratiue speach of audible alteration, so is it also of fence as to say.

*Epitheton,
or the Qualifier.*

*Fierce Achilles, wise Nestor wilie Vlyffes, Diana the chaste and thou louely Venus :
With thy blind boy that almost neuer misses,
But hits our hartes when he leuels at vs.*

Or thus commending the Isle of great Brittain.

*Albion hugest of Westerne Ilands all,
Soyle of sweete ayre and of good store :
God send we see thy glory neuer fall,
But rather dayly to grow more and more.*

Or as we sang of our Soueraigne Lady giuing her these Attributes besides her proper name.

Elizabeth regent of the great Brittain Ile, Honour of all regents and of Queenes.

But if we speake thus not expressing her proper name Elizabeth, videl.

The English Diana, the great Britton mayde.

Then it is not by Epitheton or figure of Attribution but by the figures Antonomasia, or Periphrasis.

Ye haue yet another manner of speach when ye will seeme to make two of one not thereunto constrained, which therefore we call the figure of Twynnes, the Greekes Endiadis thus.

Endiadis,
Figure of Twynnes.

Not you coy dame your lowers nor your lookes.

For [your lowering lookes.] And as one of our ordinary rimers said.

*Of fortune nor her frowning face,
I am nothing agast.*

In stead, of [fortunes frowning face.] One praying the Neapolitans for good men at armes, said by the figure of Twynnes thus.

*A proud people and wise and valiant,
Fiercely fighting with horses and with barbes :
By whose provues the Romain Prince did daunt,
Wild Affricanes and the lavvlesse Alarbes :
The Nubiens marching vwith their armed cartes,
And sleaing a farre vwith venim and vwith dartes.*

Where ye see this figure of Twynnes twise vsed, once when he said horses and barbes for barbd horses : againe when he saith with venim and with dartes for venomous dartes.

CHAP. XVI[I].

Of the figures which we call Sensable, because they alter and affect the minde by alteration of sence, and first in single wordes.

He eare hauing receiued his due fatisfaction by the auricular figures, now must the minde also be serued, with his naturall delight by figures sensible such as by alteration of intendmentes affect the courage, and geue a good liking to the conceit. And first, single words haue their sence and vnderstanding altered and figured many wayes, to wit, by transport, abuse, crosse-naming, new naming, change of name. This will seeme very darke to you, vnlesse it be otherwise explained more particularly: and first of Metaphora, Transport. There is a kinde of wresting or the Figure of transport. of a single word from his owne right signification, to another not so naturall, but yet of some affinitie or conueniencie with it, as to say, I cannot digest your unkinde words, for I cannot take them in good part: or as the man of law said, I feele you not, for I vnderstand not your case, because he had not his fee in his hand. Or as another said to a mouthy Aduocate, why barkest thou at me so fore? Or to call the top of a tree, or of a hill, the crowne of a tree or of a hill: for in deede crowne is the highest ornament of a Princes head, made like a close garland, or els the top of a mans head, where the haire windes about, and because such terme is not applyed naturally to a tree, or to a hill, but is transported from a mans head to a hill or tree, therefore it is called by metaphore, or the figure of transport. And three causes moues vs to vse this figure, one for necessitie or want of a better word, thus:

*As the drie ground that thirstes after a shower
Seemes to reioyce when it is well iwet,
And speedely brings foorth both grasse and flower,
If lacke of sunne or season doo not let.*

Here for want of an apter and more naturall word to declare the drie temper of the earth, it is said to thirst and to reioyce, which is onely proper to liuing creatures, and yet being so inuerted, doth not so much swerue from the true sence, but that euery man can easilie conceiue the meaning thereof.

Againe, we vse it for pleasure and ornament of our speach, as thus in an Epitaph of our owne making, to the honourable memorie of a deere friend, Sir John Throgmorton, knight, Iustice of Chester, and a man of many commendable vertues.

*Whom vertue rerde, enuy hath ouerthrowen
And lodged full low, vnder this marble flone:
Ne neuer were his values so well knowen,
Whilest he liued here, as now that he is gone.*

Here these words, rerde, ouerthrowen, and lodged, are inuerted, and metaphorically applyed, not vpon necessitie, but for ornament onely, afterward againe in these verses.

*No funne by day that euer saw him rest
Free from the toyles of his so busie charge,
No night that harbourd rankor in his breast,
Nor merry moode, made reason runne at large.*

In these verses the inuersion or metaphore, lyeth in these words, saw, harbourd, run: which naturally are applyed to liuing things, and not to infensible: as, the funne, or the night: and yet they approach so neere, and so conueniently, as the speech is thereby made more commendable. Againe, in moe verses of the same Epitaph, thus.

*His head a source of grauitie and sence,
His memory a shop of ciuill arte:
His tongue a streame of sugred eloquence,
Wisdom and meekenes lay mingled in his harte,*

In which verses ye see that these words, source, shop, flud, sugred, are inuerted from their owne signification to another, not altogether so naturall, but of much affinitie with it.

Then also do we it sometimes to enforce a sence and make the word more significatiue: as thus,

*I burne in loue, I freeze in deadly hate
I swimme in hope, and sinke in deepe disfaire.*

These examples I haue the willinger giuen you to fet forth the nature and vse of your figure metaphore, which of any other being choisly made, is the most commendable and most common.

But if for lacke of naturall and proper Catachresis, terme or worde we take another, neither or the naturall nor proper and do vntruly applie Figure of abuse. it to the thing which we would feeme to expresse, and without any iust inconuenience, it is not then spoken by this figure Metaphore or of inuerfion as before, but by plaine abufe, as he that bad his man go into his library and fet him his bowe and arrowes, for in deede there was neuer a booke there to be found, or as one should in reproch fay to a poore man, thou raskall knaue, where raskall is properly the hunters terme giuen to young deere, leane and out of feason, and not to people : or as one faid very pretily in this verfe.

I lent my loue to loffe, and gaged my life in vaine.

Whereas this worde lent is properly of mony or fome fuch other thing, as men do commonly borrow, for vfe to be repayed againe, and being applied to loue is vtterly abufed, and yet very commendably spoken by vertue of this figure. For he that loueth and is not beloued againe, hath no leffe wrong, than he that lendeth and is neuer repayde.

Now doth this vnderstanding or secret conceyt reach many times to the only nomination of persons or things in their names, as of men, or mountaines, feas, countries and fuchlike, in which respect the wrong naming, or otherwise naming of them then is due, carieth not onely an alteration of fence but a neceffitie of intendment figuratiuely, as when we cal loue by the name of Venus, flefhly luft by the name of Cupid, bicaufe they were fupposed by the auncient poets to be authors and kindlers of loue and luft : Vulcane for fire, Ceres for bread : Bacchus for wine by the fame reason ; also if one should fay to a skilfull craftesman knowen for a glutton or common drunkard, that had fpend all his goods on riot and delicate fare.

Thy hands they made thee rich, thy pallat made thee poore.

It is ment, his trauaile and arte made him wealthie, his riotous life had made him a beggar : and as one that boasted of his houfekeeping, faid that neuer a yeare passed ouer his head, that he drank not in his houfe euery moneth foure tonnes of beere, and one hoghead of wine, meaning not the caskes or veffels,

Metonimia,

but that quantitie which they conteyned. These and such other speaches, where ye take the name of the Author for the thing it selfe; or the thing conteining, for that which is contained, and in many other cases do as it were wrong name the person or the thing. So neuerthelesse as it may be vnderstood, it is by the figure metonymia, or misnamer.

And if this manner of naming persons or things be not by way of misnaming as before, but by a conuenient difference, and such as is true or esteemed and likely to be true, it is then called not metonymia, but antonomasia, or the Surnamer, (not the misnamer, which might extend to any other thing aswell as to a person) as he that would say: not king Philip of Spaine, but the Westerne king, because his dominion lieth the furdest West of any Christen prince: and the French king the great Vallois, because so is the name of his house, or the Queene of England, The maiden Queene, for that is her hiest peculiar among all the Queenes of the world, or as we said in one of our Partheniades, the Bryton mayde, because she is the most great and famous mayden of all Brittain: thus,

But in chaste stile, am borne as I weene

To blazon forth the Bryton mayden Queene.

So did our forefathers call Henry the first, Beauclerke, Edmund Ironside, Richard cœur de lion: Edward the Confessor, and we of her Maiestie Elisabeth the peafible.

Then also is the fence figuratiue when we deuise a new name to any thing consonant, as neere as we can to the nature thereof, as to say: flashing of lightning, clashing of blades, dinking of fetters, chinking of mony: and as the poet Virgil said of the founding a trumpet, ta-ra-tant, tara-tantara, or as we giue special names to the voices of dombe beasts, as to say, a horse neigheth, a lyon brayes, a swine grunts, a hen cackleth, a dogge howles, and a hundreth mo such new names as any man hath libertie to

Onomatopœia,
or the New namer.

deuife, fo it be fittie for the thing which he couets to exprefse.

Your Epitheton or qualifier, whereof we fpake before, placing him among the figures auricular, now becaufe he ferues alfo to alter and enforce the fence, we will fay fomewhat more of him in this place, and do conclude that he muft be apt and proper for the thing he is added vnto, and nōt difagreable or repugnant, as one that faid: darke difdaine, and miferable pride, very abfurdly, for difdaine or difdained things cannot be faid darke, but rather bright and cleere, becaufe they be beholden and much looked vpon, and pride is rather enuied then pitied or miserable, vnleffe it be in Chriftian charitie, which helpeth not the terme in this cafe. Some of our vulgar writers take great pleasure in giuing Epithets and do it almoft to euery word which may receiue them, and fhould not be fo, yea though they were neuer fo propre and apt, for ſometimes wordes fuffered to go fingle, do giue greater fence and grace than words qualified by attributions do.

Epitheton,
or the Qualifier otherwife the figure of Attribution.

But the fence is much altered and the hearers conceit ſtrangely entangled by the figure Metalepsis, which I call the farfet, as when we had rather fetch a word a great way off then to vſe one nerer hand to exprefse the matter afwel and plainer. And it ſeemeth the deuifer of this figure, had a defire to pleaſe women rather then men: for we vſe to fay by manner of Prouerbe: things farrefet and deare bought are good for Ladies: fo in this manner of ſpeech we vſe it, leaping ouer the heads of a great many words, we take one that is furdeſt off, to vtter our matter by: as Medea curſing hir firſt acquaintance with prince Iafon, who had very vnkindly forfaken her, faid:

Metalepsis,
or the Farrefet.

*Woe worth the mountaine that the maſſe bare
Which was the firſt cauſer of all my care.*

Where ſhe might afwell haue faid, woe worth our firſt meeting, or woe worth the time that Iafon arriued with his ſhip at my fathers cittie in Colchos, when he tooke me away with him, and not so farre off as to curse the mountaine that bare the pinetree, that made the mast, that bare the failes, that the ship failed with, which caried her away. A pleafant Gentleman came into a Ladies nurfery, and faw her for her owne pleasure rocking of her young child in the cradle, and fayd to her :

*I fpeake it Madame without any mocke,
Many a fuch cradell may I fee you rocke.*

Gods paffion hourfon fayd fhe, would thou haue me beare mo children yet, no Madame quoth the Gentleman, but I would haue you liue long, that ye might the better pleasure your friends, for his meaning was that as euery cradle fignified a new borne childe, and euery child the leasure of one yeares birth, and many yeares a long life : fo by wishing her to rocke many cradels of her owne, he wished her long life. Virgill fayd :

Post multas mea regna videns mirabor aristas.

Thus in English.

*After many a stubble shall I come
And wonder at the fight of my kingdome.*

By stubble the Poet vnderflooded yeares, for haruefts come but once euery yeare, at least wayes with vs in Europe. This is spoken by the figure of farre-fet. Metalepsis.

And one notable meane to affect the minde, is to enforce the fence of any thing by a word of Emphasis, or the Renforcer. more than ordinary efficacie, and neuertheless is not apparant, but as it were, secretly implied, as he that fayd thus of a faire Lady.

O rare beautie, ô grace, and curtesie.

And by a very euill man thus.

O sinne it selfe, not wretch, but wretchednes.

Whereas if he had fayd thus, O gracious, courteous and beautifull woman: and, O sinfull and wretched man, it had bene all to one effect, yet not with such force and efficacie, to speake by the denominatiue, as by the thing it selfe.

As by the former figure we vse to enforce our fence, so by another we temper our fence with wordes of such moderation, as in appearaunce it abateth it but not in deede, and is by the figure Liptote, which therefore I call the Moderator, and becomes vs many times better to speake in that sort quallified, than if we spake it by more forcible termes, and neuertheles is equipolent in fence, thus.

Liptote,
Moderatour.

I know you hate me not, nor wish me any ill.

Meaning in deede that he loued him very well and dearely, and yet the words doe not expresse so much, though they purport so much. Or if you would say, I am not ignorant, for I know well inough. Such a man is no foole, meaning in deede that he is a very wife man.

But if such moderation of words tend to flattery, or soothing, or excusing, it is by the figure Paradiastole, which therefore nothing improperly we call the Curry-fauell, as when we make the best of a bad thing, or turne a signification to the more plausible fence: as, to call an vnthrift, a liberall Gentleman: the foolish-hardy, valiant or courageous: the niggard, thriftie: a great riot, or outrage, an youthfull pranke, and such like termes: moderating and abating the force of the matter by craft, and for a pleasing purpose, as appeareth by these verses of ours, teaching in what cases it may commendably be vsed by Courtiers.*

Curry fauell.

But if you diminish and abbase a thing by way of spight and mallice, as it were to depraue it, such speech is by the figure Meiosis or the disabler spoken of hereafter in the place of sententious figures.

Meiosis,
or the Disabler.

A great mountaine as bigge as a molehill,

A heauy burthen perdy, as a pound of fethers.

But if ye abase your thing or matter by ignorance or error in the choise of your word, then is it by vicious maner of speech called Tapinosis, whereof ye shall haue examples in the chapter of vices hereafter folowing.

Tapinosis,
Abbaser.

* These verses of the Author do not appear in the Text.—ED.

Then againe if we vse such a word (as many times we doe) by which we driue the hearer to conceiue more or lesse or beyond or otherwise then the letter expresseth, and it be not by vertue of the former figures Metaphore and Abase and the rest, the Greeks then call it Synecdoche, the Latines sub intellectu or vnderstanding, for by part we are enforced to vnderstand the whole, by the whole part, by many things one thing, by one, many, by a thing precedent, a thing consequent, and generally one thing out of another by maner of contrariety to the word which is spoken, aliud ex alio, which because it seemeth to aske a good, quick, and pregnant capacitie, and is not for an ordinarie or dull wit so to do, I chose to call him the figure not onely of conceit after the Greeke originall, but also of quick conceite. As for example we will giue none because we will speake of him againe in another place, where he is ranged among the figures senfable appertaining to claufes.

CHAP. XVIII.

Of senfable figures altering and affecting the mynde by alteration of sense or intendements in whole claufes or speeches.

By the last remembred figures the sense of single wordes is altered, so by these that follow is that of whole and entier speech: and first by the Courtly figure Allegoria, which is when we speake one thing and thinke another, and that our wordes and our meanings meete not. The vse of this figure is so large, and his vertue of so great efficacie as it is supposed no man can pleasantly vtter and perswade without it, but in effect is sure neuer or very seldome to thriue and prosper in the world, that cannot skilfully put in vre, in somuch as not onely euery common Courtier, but also the grauest Counsellour, yea and the most noble and wisest Prince of them all are many times enforced to vse it, by example (say they) of the great Emperour who had it vsually in his mouth to say, Qui nescit difsimulare nescit regnare. Of this figure therefore which for his duplicitie we call the figure of [false semblant or dissimulation] we will speake first as of the chief ringleader and captaine of all other figures, either in the Poeticall or oratorie science.

And ye shall know that we may disse- Allegoria, ble, I meane speake otherwise then we or the thinke, in earnest aswell as in sport, vnder Figure of false couert and darke termes, and in learned and apparant semblant.
 speaches, in short sentences, and by long ambage and circumstance of wordes, and finally aswell when we lye as when we tell truth. To be short euery speach wrested from his owne naturall signification to another not altogether so naturall is a kinde of dissimulation, because the wordes beare contrary countenance to th'intent. But properly and in his principall vertue Allegoria is when we do speake in sence translatiue and wrested from the owne signification, neuerthelesse applied to another not altogether contrary, but hauing much conueniencie with it as before we said of the metaphore: as for example if we should call the common wealth, a shippe; the Prince a Pilot, the Coun-fellows mariners, the stormes warres, the calme and [hauen] peace, this is spoken all in allegorie: and because such inuersion of sence in one single worde is by the figure Metaphore, of whom we spake before, and this manner of inuersion extending to whole and large speaches, it maketh the figure allegorie to be called a long and perpetuall Metaphore. A noble man after a whole yeares absence from his ladie, sent to know how she did, and whether she remayned affected toward him as she was when he left her.

Loudly Lady I long full fore to heare,

If ye remaine the same, I left you the last yeare.

To whom she answered in allegorie other two verses:

My louing Lorde I will well that ye wist,

The thred is spon, that neuer shall vntwist.

Meaning, that her loue was so stedfast and constant toward him as no time or occasion could alter it. Virgill in his shepeherdly poemes called Eglogues vsed as rusticall but fit allegorie for the purpose thus :

Claudite iam riuos pueri sat prata biberunt.

Which I English thus :

[fill.

Stop vp your streames (mylads) the medes haue drunk their

As much to say, leaue of now, yee haue talked of the matter inough : for the shepheards guise in many places is by opening certaine sluces to water their pastures, so as when they are wet inough they shut them againe : this application is full Allegoricke.

Ye haue another manner of Allegorie not full, but mixt, as he that wrate thus :

The cloudes of care haue coured all my coste,

The stormes of strife, do threaten to appeare :

The waues of woe, wherein my ship is toste.

Haue broke the banks, where lay my life so deere.

Chippes of ill chance, are fallen amidst my choise,

To marre the minde that ment for to reioyce.

I call him not a full Allegorie, but mixt, bicause he discouers withall what the cloud, storme, waue, and the rest are, which in a full allegorie should not be discouered, but left at large to the readers iudgement and coniecture.

We dissembles againe vnder couert and darke speeches, when we speake by way of riddle (Enigma) of which the fence can hardly be picked out, but by the parties owne affoile, as he that said :

Enigma.
or the Riddle.

It is my mother well I wot,

And yet the daughter that I begot.

Meaning it by the ise which is made of frozen water, the same being molten by the funne or fire, makes water againe.

My mother had an old woman in her nurserie, who in the winter nights would put vs forth many pretty riddles, whereof this is one :

I haue a thing and rough it is

And in the midst a hole I wis :

*There came a yong man with his ginne,
And he put it a handfull in.*

The good old Gentlewoman would tell vs that were children how it was meant by a furd glooue. Some other naughtie body would peradventure haue construed it not halfe so mannerly. The riddle is pretie but that it holdes too much of the Cachemphaton or soule speach and may be drawn to a reprobate fence.

We dissemble after a fort, when we speake by common prouerbs, or, as we vse to call them, old said sawes, as thus :

Parimia,
or Prouerb.

As the olde cocke crowes so doeth the chick :

A bad Cooke that cannot his owne fingers lick.

Meaning by the first, that the young learne by the olde, either to be good or euill in their behaiours : by the second, that he is not to be counted a wise man, who being in authority, and hauing the administration of many good and great things, will not serue his owne turne and his friends whilest he may, and many such prouerbiall speeches : as Totnesse is turned French, for a strange alteration : Skarborow warning, for a sodaine commandement, allowing no respect or delay to be thinke a man of his busines. Note neuerthelesse a diuerfitie, for the two last examples be prouerbs, the two first prouerbiall speeches.

Ye doe likewise dissemble, when ye speake in derision or mockerie, and that may be many waies : as sometime in sport, sometime in earnest, and priuily, and apertly, and pleasantly, and bitterly : but first by the figure Ironia, which we call the drye mock : as he that said to a bragging Ruffian, that threatened he would kill and slay, no doubt you are a good man of your hands : or, as it was said by a French king, to one that praide his reward, shewing how he had bene cut in the face at a certain battell fought in his seruice : ye may see, quoth the king, what it is to runne away and looke backwards. And as Alphonso king of Naples, said to one that profred to take his ring when he washt before dinner,

Ironia,
Drie mock.

this wil serue another well: meaning that the Gentlemen had another time taken them, and because the king forgot to aske for them, neuer restored his ring againe.

Or when we deride with a certaine seueritie, we may call it the bitter taunt [Sarcasmus], as Charles the fift Emperour answered the Duke of Arskot, beseeching him recompence of seruice done at the siege of Renty, against Henry the French king, where the Duke was taken prisoner, and afterward escaped clad like a Colliar. Thou wert taken, quoth the Emperour, like a coward, and scapedst like a Colliar, wherefore get thee home and liue vpon thine owne. Or as king Henry the eight said to one of his priuy chamber, who sued for Sir Anthony Rowse, a knight of Norfolke that his Maiestie would be good vnto him, for that he was an ill begger. Quoth the king againe, if he be ashamed to beg, we are ashamed to geue. Or as Charles the fift Emperour, hauing taken in battaile John Frederike Duke of Saxon, with the Lantgraue of Hesse and others: this Duke being a man of monstrous bignesse and corpulence, after the Emperor had seene the prisoners, said to those that were about him, I haue gone a hunting many times, yet neuer tooke I such a swine before.

Or when we speake by manner of pleafantry, or mery skoffe, that is by a kinde of mock, whereof the fence is farre fet, and without any gall or offence. The Greekes call it [Asteismus] we may terme it the ciuill iest, because it is a mirth very full of ciuilitie, and such as the most ciuill men doo vse. As Cato said to one that had geuen him a good knock on the head with a long peece of timber he bare on his shoulder, and then bad him beware: what (quoth Cato) wilt thou strike me againe? for ye know, a warning should be geuen before a man haue receiued harme, and not after. And as king Edward the sixt, being of young yeres, but olde in wit, saide to one of his priuie chamber, who sued for a pardon for one that was condemned for a robbie,

Sarcasmus,
or the Bitter taunt.

Asteismus.
or the Merry scoffe.
otherwise
The ciuill iest.

telling the king that it was but a small trifle, not past fixteene shillings matter which he had taken : quoth the king againe, but I warrant you the fellow was forrie it had not bene fixteene pound : meaning how the malefactors intent was as euill in that trifle, as if it had bene a greater summe of money. In these examples if ye marke there is no grieffe or offence ministred as in those other before, and yet are very wittie, and spoken in plaine derision.

The Emperor Charles the fift was a man of very few words, and delighted little in talke. His brother king Ferdinando being a man of more pleasant discourse, fitting at the table with him, said, I pray your Maiestie be not so silent, but let vs talke a little. What neede that brother, quoth the Emperor, since you haue words enough for vs both.

Or when we giue a mocke with a scornfull countenance as in some smiling fort looking aside or by drawing the lippe awry, or shrinking vp the nose ; the Greeks called it Mictetismus, we may terme it a fleering frumpe, as he that said to one whose wordes he beleued not, no doubt Sir of that. This fleering frumpe is one of the Courtly graces of hicke the scorner.

Or when we deride by plaine and flat contradiction, as he that saw a dwarfe go in the streete said to his companion that walked with him : See yonder gyant : and to a Negro or woman blackemoore, in good sooth ye are a faire one, we may call it the broad floute.

Or when ye giue a mocke vnder smooth and lowly wordes as he that hard one call him all to nought and say, thou art fure to be hanged ere thou dye : quoth th'other very soberly. Sir I know your maistership speakes but in iest, the Greeks call it (charientismus) we may call it the priuy nippe, or a myld and appeasing mockery : all these be fouldiers to the figure allegoria and fight vnder the banner of dissimulation.

Neuerthelesse ye haue yet two or three other figures that H. perbole.
or the Ouer reacher, otherwise
called the loud
lyer. smatch a spice of the same falfe semblant,
 but in another sort and maner of phrase, whereof one is when we speake in the superlatiue and beyond the limites of credit, that is by the figure which the Greeks call Hiperbole, the Latines Dementiens or the lying figure. I for his immoderate excesse cal him the ouer reacher right with his originall or [loud lyer] and me thinks not amisse: now when I speake that which neither I my selfe thinke to be true, nor would haue any other body beleue, it must needs be a great dissimulation, because I meane nothing lesse then that I speake, and this maner of speach is vsed, when either we would greatly aduaunce or greatly abase the reputation of any thing or person, and must be vsed very discreetly, or els it will seeme odious, for although a prayse or other report may be allowed beyond credit, it may not be beyond all measure, specially in the profeman, as he that was speaker in a Parliament of king Henry the eights raigne, in his Oration which ye know is of ordinary to be made before the Prince at the first assembly of both houses, [sh]ould seeme to prayse his Maiestie thus. What should I go about to recite your Maiesties innumerable vertues, euen as much as if I tooke vpon me to number the starres of the skie, or to tell the sands of the sea. This Hyperbole was both ultra fidem and also ultra modum, and therefore of a graue and wise Counsellour made the speaker to be accompted a grosse flattering foole: peraduenture if he had vsed it thus, it had bene better and neuerthelesse a lye too, but a more moderate lye and no lesse to the purpose of the kings commendation, thus. I am not able with any wordes sufficiently to expresse your Maiesties regall vertues, your kingly merites also towardes vs your people and realme are so exceeding many, as your prayses therefore are infinite, your honour and renowne euerlasting: And yet all this if we shall measure it by the rule of exact veritie, is but an vntruth, yet a more cleanly commendation

then was maister Speakers. Neuerthelesse as I said before if we fall a praying, specially of our mistresses vertue, bewtie, or other good parts, we be allowed now and then to ouer-reach a little by way of comparison as he that said thus in prayse of his Lady.

*Giue place ye louers here before,
That spent your boasts and braggs in vaine :
My Ladies bewtie passeth more,
The best of your I dare well sayne :
Then doth the sunne the candle light,
Or brightest day the darkest night.*

And as a certaine noble Gentlewomen lamenting at the vnkindnesse of her louer said very pretily in this figure.

*But since it will no better be,
My teares shall neuer blin :
To moist the earth in such degree,
That I may drowne therein :
That by my death all men may say,
Lo weemen are as true as they.*

Then haue ye the figure Periphrasis, holding somewhat of the dissembler, by reason of a secret intent not appearing by the words, as when we go about the bush, and will not in one or a few words expresse that thing which we desire to haue knowen, but do chose rather to do it by many words, as we our selues wrote of our Soueraigne Lady thus :

*Whom Princes serue, and Realmes obey,
And greatest of Bryton kings begot :
She came abroade euen yesterday,
When such as saw her, knew her not.*

And the rest that followeth, meaning her Maiesties person, which we would seeme to hide leauing her name vnspoken, to the intent the reader should gesse at it : neuerthelesse vpon the matter did so manifestly disclose it, as any simple iudgement might easily perceiue by whom it was ment, that is by Lady Elizabeth, Queene of England and daughter to king Henry the eight,

Periphrasis,
bage.

and therein resteth the dissimulation. It is one of the gallantest figures among the poetes so it be vsed discretely and in his right kinde, but many of these makers that be not halfe their craftes maisters, do very often abuse it and also many waies. For if the thing or person they go about to describe by circumstance, be by the writers improuidence otherwise bewrayed, it loofeth the grace of a figure, as he that said :

*The tenth of March when Aries receiued,
Dan Phæbus raies into his horned hed.*

Intending to describe the spring of the yeare, which euery man knoweth of himselfe, hearing the day of March named: the verses be very good the figure nought worth, if it were meant in Periphrase for the matter, that is the season of the yeare which should haue bene couertly disclosed by ambage, was by and by blabbed out by naming the day of the moneth, and so the purpose of the figure disapointed, peradventure it had bin better to haue said thus :

*The month and daie when Aries receiud,
Dan Phæbus raies into his horned head.*

For now there remaineth for the Reader somewhat to studie and gesse vpon, and yet the spring time to the learned iudgement sufficiently expressed.

The Noble Earle of Surrey wrote thus :

*In winters iust returne, when Boreas gan his raigne,
And euery tree vnclothed him fast as nature taught them plaine.*

I would faine learne of some good maker, whether the Earle spake this in figure of Periphrase or not, for mine owne opinion I thinke that if he ment to describe the winter season, he would not haue disclosed it so broadly, as to say winter at the first worde, for that had bene against the rules of arte, and without any good iudgement: which in so learned and excellent a personage we ought not to suspect, we say therefore that for winter it is no Periphrase but language at large: we say for all that, hauing regard to the seconde verse that followeth it is a Periphrase, seeming that thereby he intended to shew in what part of the winter his loues gaue him anguish, that is in the time which we call the fall of the leafe, which begins in the moneth of October, and stands very well with the figure to be vttered in that fort notwithstanding winter be named before, for winter hath many parts: such namely as do not shake of the leafe, nor vnclath the trees as here is mencioned: thus may ye iudge as I do, that this noble Erle wrate excellently well and to purpose. Moreouer, when a maker will seeme to vse circumlocution to fet forth any thing pleasantly and figuratiuely, yet no lesse plaine to a ripe reader, then if it were named expressely, and when all is done, no man can perceyue it to be the thing intended. This is a foule ouersight in any writer as did a good fellow, who weening to shew his cunning, would needs by periphraze expresse the realme of Scotland in no lesse then eight verses, and when he had said all, no man could imagine it to be spoken of Scotland: and did besides many other faults in his verse, so deadly belie the matter by his description, as it would pitie any good maker to heare it.

Now for the shutting vp of this Chapter, Synecdoche.
 will I remember you farther of that manner <sup>or the</sup> of speech which the Greekes call Synecdoche, <sup>Figure of quick</sup> and we the figure of [quicke conceite] who for the reasons <sup>conceite.</sup> before alledged, may be put vnder the speeches allegoricall, because of the darkenes and duplicitie of his sence: as when one would tell me how the French king was ouerthrowen at Saint Quintans, I am enforced to think that it was not the king himselfe in person, but the Constable of Fraunce with the French kings power. Or if one would say, the towne of Andwerpe were famished, it is not so to be taken, but of the people of the towne of Andwerp, and this conceit being drawen aside, and (as it were) from one thing to another, it encombers the minde with a certaine imagination what it may be that is meant, and not expressed: as he that said to a young gentlewoman, who was in her chamber making her selfe vnready.

Mistresse will ye geue me leaue to vnlace your peticote, meaning (perchance) the other thing that might follow such vnlasing. In the olde time, whofoeuer was allowed to vndoe his Ladies girdle, he might lie with her all night: wherefore, the taking of a womans maydenhead away, was said to vndoo her girdle. Virgineam dissoluit zonam, faith the Poet, conceiuing out of a thing precedent, a thing subsequnt. This may suffice for the knowledge of this figure [quicke conceit.]

CHAP. XIX.

Of Figures sententious, otherwise called Rhetoricall.

Now if our presupposall be true, that the Poet is of all other the most auncient Orator, as he that by good and pleasant perswasions first reduced the wilde and beastly people into publicke societie and ciuillitie of life, insinuating vnto them, vnder fictions with sweete and coloured speeches, many wholesome lessons and doctrines, then no doubt there is nothing so fitte for him, as to be furnished with all the figures that be Rhetoricall, and such as do most beautifie language with eloquence and sententiousnes. Therefore, since we haue already allowed to our maker his auricular figures, and also his senfable, by which all the words and claufes of his meeters are made as well tunable to the eare, as stirring to the minde, we are now by order to bestow vpon him those other figures which may execute both offices, and all at once to beautifie and geue fence and sententiousnes to the whole language at large. So as if we should intreate our maker to play also the Orator, and whether it be to pleade, or to praise, or to aduise, that in all three cases he may vtter, and also perswade both copiously and vehemently.

And your figures rhethoricall, besides their remembered ordinarie vertues, that is, sententiousnes, and copious amplification, or enlargement of language, doe also containe a certaine sweet and melodious manner of speech, in which respect, they may, after a fort, be said

auricular: because the eare is no lesse rauished with their current tune, than the mind is with their sententiousnes. For the eare is properly but an instrument of conueyance for the minde, to apprehend the sence by the sound. And our speech is made melodious or harmonicall, not onely by strayned tunes, as those of Musick, but also by choise of smoothe words: and thus, or thus, marshalling them in their comeliest construction and order, and aswell by sometimes sparing, sometimes spending them more or lesse liberally, and carrying or transporting of them farther off or neerer, setting them with sundry relations, and variable formes, in the ministry and vse of words, doe breede no little alteration in man. For to say truely, what els is man but his minde? which, whosoeuer haue skil to compasse, and make yeelding and flexible, what may not he commaund the body to perfourme? He therefore that hath vanquished the minde of man, hath made the greatest and most glorious conquest. But the minde is not assailable vnlesse it be by sensible approaches, whereof the audible is of greatest force for instruction or discipline: the visible, for apprehension of exterior knowledges as the Philosopher saith. Therefore the well tuning of your words and claufes to the delight of the eare, maketh your information no lesse plaufible to the minde than to the eare: no though you filled them with neuer so much sence and sententiousnes. Then also must the whole tale (if it tende to perswasion) beare his iust and reasonable measure, being rather with the largest, than with the scarcest. For like as one or two drops of water perce not the flint stone, but many and often droppings doo: so cannot a few words (be they neuer so pithie or sententious) in all cafes and to all manner of mindes, make so deepe an impression, as a more multitude of words to the purpose discretely, and without superfluitie vttered: the minde being no lesse vanquished with large loades of speech, than the limmes are with heauie burden. Sweetenes of speech, sentence, and amplification, are therefore necessarie to an excellent Orator and Poet, he may in no wise be spared from any of them.

And first of all others your figure that worketh by iteration or repetition of one word or clause doth much alter and affect the eare and also the mynde of the hearer, and therefore is counted a very braue figure both with the Poets and rhetoriciens, and this repetition may be in seuen fortes.

Repetition in the first degree we call the figure of Anaphora, or the Figure of Report. Report according to the Greeke originall, and is when we make one word begin, and as they are wont to say, lead the daunce to many verses in suite, as thus.

*To thinke on death it is a miserie,
To thinke on life it is a vanitie:
To thinke on the world verily it is,
To thinke that heare man hath no perfit blisse.*

And this written by Sir Walter Raleigh of his greatest mistresse in most excellent verses.

*In vayne mine eyes in vaine you wast your teares,
In vayne my sighs the smokes of my despaires:
In vayne you search th'earth and heauens aboue,
In vayne ye seeke, for fortune keeps my loue.*

Or as the buffon in our enterlude called Lustie London said very knauishly and like himselfe.

*Many a faire lasse in London towne,
Many a bawdie basket borne vp and downe:
Many a broker in a thridbare gowne.
Many a bankrowte scarce worth a crowne.*

In London.

Ye haue another fort of repetition quite contrary to the former when ye make one word finish many verses in suite, and that which is harder, to finish many clauses in the midst of your verses or dittie (for to make them finish the verse in our vulgar it should hinder the rime) and because I do finde few of our English makers vse this figure, I haue fet you down two litle ditties which our selues in our yonger yeares played vpon the Antistrophe, for so is

Antistrophe,
or the Counter turne.

the figures name in Greeke: one vpon the mutable loue of a Lady, another vpon the meritorious loue of Christ our Sauour, thus.

*Her lowly lookes, that gaue life to my loue,
With spitefull speach, curstnesse and crueltie:
She kild my loue, let her rigour remoue,
Her cherefull lights and speaches of pitie
Reuiue my loue: anone with great disdaine,
She shunnes my loue, and after by a traine
She seekes my loue, and faith she loues me most,
But feing her loue, so lightly wonne and lost:
I longd not for her loue, for well I thought,
Firme is the loue, if it be as it ought.*

The second vpon the merites of Christes passion toward mankind, thus,

*Our Christ the sonne of God, chief authour of all good,
Was he by his allmight, that first created man:
And vwith the costly price, of his most precious bloud,
He that redeemed man: and by his instance vvan
Grace in the sight of God, his onely father deare,
And reconciled man: and to make man his peere
Made himselfe very man: brief to conclude the case,
This Christ both God and man, he all and onely is:
The man brings man to God and to all heauens blisse.*

The Greekes call this figure Antistrophe, the Latines, conuersio, I following the originall call him the counterturne, because he turnes counter in the midst of euery meetre.

Take me the two former figures and put them into one, and it is that which the Greekes call symploche, the Latines complexio, or conduplicatio, and is a maner of repetition, when one and the selfe word doth begin and end many verses in sute and so wrappes vp both the former figures in one, as he that sportingly complained of his vntrustie mistresse, thus.

*Who made me shent for her loues sake?
Myne owne mistresse.
Who would not seeme my part to take.
Myne owne mistresse.*

What made me first so well content

Her curtesie.

What makes me now so fore repent

Her crueltie.

The Greekes name this figure Symploche, the Latins Complexio, perchance for that he seemes to hold in and to wrap vp the verses by reduplication, so as nothing can fall out. I had rather call him the figure of replie.

Anadiplosis,
or the Redouble.

Ye haue another sort of repetition when with the worde by which you finish your verse, ye beginne the next verse with the same, as thus:

Comforte it is for man to haue a wife,

Wife chaste, and wise, and lowly all her life.

Or thus:

Your beutie was the cause of my first loue,

Looue while I liue, that I may fore repent.

The Greeks call this figure Anadiplosis, I call him the Redouble a; the originall beares.

Epanalepsis,
or the Eccho sound.
otherwise,
the slow return.

Ye haue an other sorte of repetition, when ye make one worde both beginne and end your verse, which therefore I call the flow retourne, otherwise the Eccho sound, as thus:

Much must he be beloued, that loueth much,

Feare many must he needs, whom many feare.

Vnlesse I called him the eccho sound, I could not tell what name to giue him, vnlesse it were the flow retourne.

Epizeuxis,
the Vnderlay,
or Coocko-spel.

Ye haue another sort of repetition when in one verse or clause of a verse, ye iterate one word without any intermission, as thus:

It was Maryne, Maryne that wrought mine woe.

And this bemoaning the departure of a deere friend.

The chiefest staffe of mine assured stay,

With no small grieffe, is gon, is gon away.

And that of Sir Walter Raleighs very sweet.

With wisdomes eyes had but blind fortune seene,

Than had my looue, my looue for euer beene.

The Greeks call him Epizeuxis, the Latines Subiunctio, we may call him the vnderlay, me thinks if we regard his manner of iteration, and would depart from the originall, we might very properly, in our vulgar and for pleasure call him the cuckowespell, for right as the cuckow repeats his lay, which is but one manner of note, and doth not infert any other tune betwixt, and sometimes for hast flammers out two or three of them one immediatly after another, as cuck, cuck, cuckow, so doth the figure Epizeuxis in the former verses, Maryne, Maryne, without any intermission at all.

Yet haue ye one forte of repetition, which we call the doubler, and is as the next before, a speedie iteration of one word, but with some little intermission by inferting one or two words betweene, as in a most excellent dittie written by Sir Walter Raleigh these two closing verses:

Floche,
or the Doubler.

Yet vwhen I sarve my felfe to you vvas true,
I loued my felfe, bycause my felfe loued you.

And this spoken in common Prouerbe.

An ape vvilbe an ape, by kinde as they say,
Though that ye clad him all in purple array.

Or as we once sported vpon a fellowes name who was called Woodcock, and for an ill part he had plaid entreated fauour by his friend.

I praie you intreate no more for the man,
Woodcocke vvilbe a vvoodcocke do vvhat ye can.

Now also be there many other fortes of repetition if a man would vse them, but are nothing commendable, and therefore are not obserued in good poesie, as a vulgar rimer who doubled one word in the end of euey verse, thus:

adieu, adieu,
my face, my face.

And an other that did the like in the beginning of his verse, thus:

To loue him and loue him, as finners should doo.

These repetitions be not figuratiue but phantastical, for a figure is euer vsed to a purpose, either of beautie or of efficacie: and these last recited be to no purpose, for neither can ye fay that it vrges affection, nor that it beautifieth or enforceth the fence, nor hath any other subtilitie in it, and therefore is a very foolish impertinency of speech, and not a figure.

Ye haue a figure by which ye play with a couple of words or names much refembling, and because the one feemes to anfwere th'other by manner of illufion, and doth, as it were, nick him, I call him the Nicknamer. If any other man can geue him a fitter Englifh name, I will not be angrie, but I am fure mine is very neere the originall fence of the Profonomafia, and is rather a by-name geuen in fport, than a furname geuen of any earneft purpofe. As, Tiberius the Emperor, because he was a great drinker of wine, they called him by way of derifion to his owne name, Caldius Biberius Mero, in fleade of Claudius Tiberius Nero: and fo a iefling frier that wrate againft Erafmus, called him by refemblance to his own name, Errans mus, and are maintained by this figure Profonomafia, or the Nicknamer. But euery name geuen in iefl or by way of a furname, if it do not refemble the true, is not by this figure, as, the Emperor of Greece, who was furnamed Conflantinus Cepronimus, because he befhit the foont at the time he was chriftened: and fo ye may fee the difference betwixt the figures Antonomafia and Profonomatia. Now when fuch refemblance happens betweene words of another nature, and not vpon mens names, yet doeth the Poet or maker finde prety fport to play with them in his verfe, fpecially the Comicall Poet and the Epigrammatift. Sir Philip Sidney in a dittie plaide very pretily with thefe two words, Loue and liue, thus.

*And all my life I will confefse,
The leffe I loue, I liue the leffe.*

And we in our Enterlude called the woer, plaid with thefe two words, lubber and louer, thus, the countrey clowne came and woed a young maide of the Citie, and being agreeued to come fo oft, and not to haue his anfwere, faid to the old nurfe very impatiently.

Iche pray you good mother tell our young Woer.
dame,

Whence I am come and what is my name,
I cannot come a woing euery day.

Quoth the nurse.

They be lubbers not louers that so vse to fay. Nurse.

Or as one replied to his mistresse charging him with some disloyaltie towards her.

Proue me madame ere ye fall to reproue,
Meeke mindes should rather excuse than accuse.

Here the words proue and reproue, excuse and accuse, do pleasantly encounter, and (as it were) mock one another by their much resemblance: and this is by the figure Profonomatia, as wel as if they were mens proper names, alluding to each other.

Then haue ye a figure which the Latines call Traduclio, and I the tranlacer: which is when ye turne and tranlace a word into many fundry shapés as the Tailor doth his garment, and after that fort do play with him in your dittie: as thus,

Traduclio,
or the Tranlacer.

Who liues in loue his life is full of feares,
To lose his loue, liuelode or libertie
But liuely sprites that young and recklesse be,
Thinke that there is no liuing like to theirs.

Or as one who much gloried in his owne wit, whom Perfius taxed in a verse very pithily and pleasantly,
thus.

Scire tuum nihil est nisi te scire, hoc sciat alter.

Which I haue turned into English, not so briefly, but more at large of purpose the better to declare the nature of the figure: as thus,

Thou vveeneest thy vvit nought vworth if other vweet it not

As vvel as thou thy selfe, but o thing vvell I vvot,
Who so in earnest vveenes, he doth in mine aduise,
Shewv himselfe vvittleesse, or more vvittie than vvise.

Here ye see how in the former rime this word life is tranlaced into liue, liuing, liuely, liuelode: and in the latter rime this word wit is translated into weete, weene, wotte, witleffe, witty and wife : which come all from one originall.

Antipophora,
sponce.

Ye haue a figuratiue speach which the Greeks cal Antipophora, I name him the Responce, and is when we will seeme to aske a question to th'intent we will aunswere it our selues, and is a figure of argument and also of amplification. Of argument, because proponing such matter as our aduerfarie might obiect and then to answere it our selues, we do vnfurnish and preuent him of such helpe as he would otherwise haue vsed for himselfe: then because such obiection and answere spend much language it serues as well to amplifie and enlarge our tale. Thus for example.

*Wylie vworldling come tell me I thee pray,
Wherein hopest thou, that makes thee so to feruell?
Riches? alack it taries not a day,
But vwhere fortune the fickle list to dwell:
In thy children? how hardlie shalt thou finde,
Them all at once, good and thriftie and kinde:
Thy vwife? ô faire but fraile mettall to trust,
Seruants? what theeues? what treachours and iniust?
Honour perchance? it restes in other men:
Glorie? a smoake: but wherein hopest thou then?
In Gods iustice? and by what merite tell?
In his mercy? ô now thou speakest vvel,
But thy lewd life hath lost his loue and grace, Daunting all hope to put dispaire in place.*

We read that Crates the Philosopher Cinicke in respect of the manifold discommodities of mans life, held opinion that it was best for man neuer to haue bene borne or soone after to dye, [Optimum non nasci vel citò mori] of whom certaine verses are left written in Greeke which I haue Englished, thus.

*What life is the liefest? the needy is full of woe and awe,
The wealthie full of brawle and brabbles of the law:
To be a married man? how much art thou beguild,
Seeking thy rest by carke, for household wife and child:*

*To till it is a toyle, to grafe some honest gaine,
 But fuch as gotten is with great hazard and paine :
 The fayler of his fhippe, the marchant of his ware,
 The fouldier in armes, how full of dread and care ?
 A fhrewd wife brings thee bate, wiue not and neuer thriue,
 Children a charge, childeffe the greatest lacke aliue :
 Youth wittleffe is and fraile, age ficklie and forlorne,
 Then better to dye foone, or neuer to be borne.*

Metrodorus the Philofopher Stoick was of a contrary opinion reuerfing all the former fuppositions againft Crates, thus.

What life list ye to lead? in good Citie and towne Is wonne both wit and wealth, Court gets vs great renowne :

*Country keepes vs in heale, and quietneffe of mynd, [find:
 Where holefome aires and exercife and pretie sports we Traffick it turnes to gaine, by land and eke by feas,
 The land-borne liues fafe, the forreine at his eafe :
 Houfholder hath his home, the roge romes with delight,
 And makes moe merry meales, then doth the Lordly wight :
 Wed and thou haft a bed, of folace and of ioy,
 Wed not and haue a bed, of rest without annoy :
 The fetled loue is fafe, fweete is the loue at large,
 Children they are a flore, no children are no charge,
 Luftie and gay is youth, old age honourd and wife :
 Then not to dye or be vnborne, is beft in myne aduife.*

Edvard Earle of Oxford a moft noble and learned Gentleman made in this figure of refponce an emble of defire otherwife called Cupide which from his excellencie and wit, I fet downe fome part of the verfes, for example.

*When wert thou borne desire ?
 In pompe and pryme of May,
 By whom fweete boy wert thou begot ?
 By good conceit men fay,
 Tell me who was thy nurfe ?
 Fresh youth in fugged ioy.
 What was thy meate and dayly foode ?
 Sad fighes with great annoy.*

What hadst thou then to drinke?

Vnfayned louers teares.

What cradle wert thou rocked in?

In hope deuoyde of feares.

Ye haue another figure which me thinkes may well be called (not much fweruing from his originall in fence) the Crosse-couple, because Syneciosis, or the Crosse copling. it takes me two contrary words, and tieth them as it were in a paire of couples, and so makes them agree like good fellowes, as I saw once in Fraunce a wolfe coupled with a mastiffe, and a foxe with a hounde. Thus it is.

The niggards fault and the vnthrifts is all one,

For neither of them both knoweth how to vse his owne.

Or thus.

The couetous miser, of all his goods ill got,

Aswell wants that he hath, as that he hath not.

In this figure of the Crosse-couple we wrate for a forlorne louer complaining of his mistresse crueltie these verses among other.

Thus for your sake I dayly dye,

And do but seeme to liue in deede:

Thus is my blisse but miserie,

My lucre losse without your meede.

Ye haue another figure which by his nature we may call the Rebound, alluding Atanacsis, or the Rebounde. to the tennis ball which being smitten with the racket reboundes backe againe, and where the last figure before played with two wordes somewhat like, this playeth with one word written all alike but carrying diuers fences as thus.

The maide that soone married is, soone marred is.

Or thus better because married and marred be different in one letter.

To pray for you euer I cannot refuse,

To pray vpon you I should you much abuse.

Or as we once sported vpon a countrey fellow who came to runne for the best game, and was by his occupation a dyer and had very bigge swelling legges.

*He is but course to runne a course,
Whose shankes are bigger then his thye:
Yet is his lucke a little worfe,
That often dyes before he dye.*

Where ye see this word course and dye, vsed in diuers fences, one giuing the Rebounde vpon th'other.

Ye haue a figure which as well by his Greeke and Latine originals, and also by allusion to the maner of a mans gate or going may be called the marching figure, for after the first steppe all the rest proceede by double the space, and so in our speach one word proceedes double to the first that was spoken, and goeth as it were by strides or paces; it may aswell be called the clyming figure, for Clymax is as much Clymax.
or the Marching figure. to say as a ladder, as in one of our Epitaphes shewing how a very meane man by his wisedome and good fortune came to great estate and dignitie.

His vertue made him wise, his wisedome brought him wealth,

His wealth wan many friends, his friends made much supply:

*Of aides in weale and woe in sicknesse and in health,
Thus came he from a low, to sit in seate so hye.*

Or as Ihean de Mehune the French Poet.

*Peace makes plentie, plentie makes pride,
Pride breeds quarrell, and quarrell brings warre:
Warre brings spoile, and spoile pouertie,
Pouertie pacience, and pacience peace:
So peace brings warre, and warre brings peace.*

Ye haue a figure which takes a couple of words to play with in a verse, and by making them to chaunge and shift one into others place they do very pretily exchange and shift the sence, as thus.

*We dwell not here to build vs boures,
And halles for pleasure and good cheare:
But halles we build for vs and ours,
To dwell in them whilst we are here.*

Meaning that we dwell not here to build, but we build to dwel, as we liue not to eate, but eate to liue, or thus.

*We wish not peace to maintaine cruell warre,
But we make vvarre to maintaine vs in peace.*

Or thus,

*If Poesie be, as some haue said,
A speaking picture to the eye:
Then is a picture not denaid,
To be a muet Poesie.*

Or as the Philosopher Musonius wrote.

*With pleasure if we worke vnonestly and ill,
The pleasure passeth, the bad it bideth still:
Well if we worke with trauaile and with paines,
The paine passeth and still the good remains.*

A wittie fellow in Rome wrate under the Image of Cæsar the Dictator these two verses in Latine, which because they are spoken by this figure of Counterchange I haue turned into a couple of English verses very well keeping the grace of the figure.

Brutus for casting out of kings, was first of Consuls past, Cæsar for casting Consuls out, is of our kings the last.

Cato of any Senatour not onely the grauest but also the promptest and wittiest in any ciuill scoffe, misliking greatly the engrossing of offices in Rome that one man should haue many at once, and a great number goe without that were as able men, said thus by Counterchange.

*It seemes your offices are very litle worth,
Or very few of you worthy of offices.*

Againe :

*In trifles earnest as any man can bee,
In earnest matters no such trifler as hee.*

Insultatio,
Disdainefull.

Yee haue another figure much like to the Sarcasmus, or bitter taunt wee spake of before: and is when with proud and insolent words, we doo vpbraid a man, or ride him as we terme it: for which cause the Latines also call it Insultatio, I choose to name him the Reprochfull or

scorner, as when Queene Dido saw, that for all her great loue and entertainements bestowed vpon Aeneas, he would needs depart, and follow the Oracle of his destinies, she brake out in a great rage and said very disdainfully.

*Hye thee, and by the wild waues and the wind,
Seeke Italie and Realmes for thee to raigne,
If piteous Gods haue power amidst the mayne,
On ragged rocks thy penaunce thou maist find.*

Or as the poet Iuuenall reproched the couetous Merchant, who for lucre sake passed on no perill either by land or sea, thus :

*Goe now and giue thy life vnto the winde,
Trusting vnto a piece of bruckle wood,
Foure inches from thy death or seauen good
The thickest planke for shipboord that we finde.*

Ye haue another figure very pleasant and fit for amplification, which to answer the Greeke terme, we may call the encounter, but following the Latine name by reason of his contentious nature, we may call him the Quarreller, for so be al such persons as delight in taking the contrary part of whatsoeuer shalbe spoken : when I was a scholler at Oxford they called euery such one Iohannes ad oppositum.

*Good haue I doone you, much, harme did I neuer none,
Ready to ioy your gaines, your losses to bemone,
Why therefore should you grutch so sore at my welfare:
Who onely bred your blisse, and neuer causd your care.*

Or as it is in these two verses where one speaking of Cupids bowe, deciphered thereby the nature of sensual loue, whose beginning is more pleasant than the end, thus allegorically and by antitheton.

*His bent is sweete, his loose is somewhat sowre,
In ioy begunne, ends oft in wofull howre.*

Maister Diar in this quarrelling figure.

*Nor loue hath now the force, on me which it ones had,
Your frownes can neither make me mourne, nor fauors make me glad.*

*Antitheton,
or the
The renconter.*

Ifocrates the Greek Oratour was a litle too full of this figure, and so was the Spaniard that wrote the life of Marcus Aurelius, and many of our moderne writers in vulgar, vse it in excesse and incurre the vice of fond affectation: otherwise the figure is very commendable.

In this quarrelling figure we once plaid this merry Epigrame of an importune and shrewd wife, thus :

*My neighbour hath a wife, not fit to make him thriue,
But good to kill a quicke man, or make a dead reuiue.
So shrewd she is for God, so cunning and so wise,
To counter vvith her goodman, and all by contraries.
For vvhen he is merry, she lurcheth and she loures,
When he is sad she singes, or laughs it out by houres.
Bid her be still her tongue to talke shall neuer cease, [peace,
When she should speake and please, for spight she holds her Bid spare and she vvill spend, bid spend she spares as fast,
What first ye vvould haue done, be sure it shalbe last.
Say go, she comes, say come, she goes, and leaues him all alone,*

Her husband (as I thinke) calles her ouerthvvart Ione.

There is a kinde of figuratiue speach when we aske Erortema. many questions and looke for none or the answere, speaking indeed by interrogation, Questioner. which we might as well say by affirmation.

This figure I call the Questioner or inquisitiue, as whan Medea excusing her great crueltie vsed in the murder of her owne children which she had by Iason, said :

*Was I able to make them I praie you tell,
And am I not able to marre them all asvvell?*

Or as another wrote very commendably.

*Why striue I vvith the streame, or hoppe against the hill,
Or searck that neuer can be found, and loose my labour still?*

Cato vnderstanding that the Senate had appointed three citizens of Rome for embassadours to the king of Bithinia, whereof one had the Gowte, another the Meigrim, the third very little courage or discretion to be employd in any such businesse, said by way of skoffe in this figure.

*Must not (trouve ye) this message be well sped,
That hath neither heart, nor heeles, nor hed?*

And as a great Princesse answered her seruitour, who distrusting in her fauours toward him, praised his owne constancie in these verses.

No fortune base or frayle can alter me :

To whome she in this figure repeting his words :

No fortune base or frayle can alter thee.

And can so blind a wvitch so conquere mee?

The figure of exclamation, I call him [the outcrie] because it vtters our minde by all such words as do shew any extreme passion, Ecphonisis.
or the
Outery. whether it be by way of exclamation or crying out, admiration or wondering, imprecation or cursing, obtestation or taking God and the world to witnes, or any such like as declare an impotent affection, as Chaucer of the Lady Cresseida by exclamation.

*O soppe of sorrow soonken into care,
O caytife Cresseid, for now and euermare.*

Or as Gascoigne wrote very passionatly and well to purpose.

*Ay me the dayes that I in dole consume,
Alas the nights which vvitnesse vvelt mine vvoe :
O vvrongfull vvorlde vvhich makest my fancie fume,
Fie fickle fortune, fie, fie thou art my foe :
Out and alas so frowvard is my chance,
No nights nor daies, nor vvorldeas can me auance.*

Petrarche in a sonet which Sir Thomas Wiat Englished excellently well, said in this figure by way of imprecation and obtestation : thus,

*Perdie I said it not,
Nor neuer thought to doo :
Aswell as I ye wot,
I haue no power thereto :
“ And if I did the lot
That first did me enchaine,
May neuer slake the knot
But strait it to my paine.*

“ *And if I did each thing,
That may do harme or woe :
Continually may wring,
My harte where so I goe.*
“ *Report may alwaies ring :
Of shame on me for aye,
If in my hart did spring,
The wordes that you doo say.*
“ *And if I did each starre,
That is in heauen aboue.*

And so forth, &c.

We vse sometimes to proceede all by single words, without any close or coupling, fauing that a little pause or comma is geuen to euery word. This figure for pleasure may be called in our vulgar the cutted comma, for that there cannot be a shorter diuision then at euery words end. The Greekes in their language call it short language, as thus.

Enuy, malice, flattery, disdain, Auarice, deceit, falshed, filthy gaine.

If this loose language be vsed, not in single words, but in long claufes, it is called Afindeton, and in both cases we vtter in that fashion, when either we be earnest, or would seeme to make hast.

Ye haue another figure which we may call the figure of euen, because it goeth by claufes of egall quantitie, and not very long, but yet not so short as the cutted comma: and they geue good grace to a dittie, but specially to a prose. In this figure we once wrote in a melancholike humor these verses.

Parison,

*The good is geason, and short is his abode,
The bad bides long, and easie to be found :
Our life is loathsome, our sinnes a heauy lode,
Conscience a curst iudge, remorse a priuie goade.
Disease, age and death still in our care they round,
That hence we must the sickly and the found :
Treading the steps that our forefathers troad,
Rich, poore, holy, wise, all flesh it goes to ground.*

In a prose there should not be vsed at once of such euen claufes past three or foure at the most.

When so euer we multiply our speech by many words or claufes of one fence, the Greekes call it Sinonimia, as who would say, <sup>Sinonimia,</sup> like or consenting names: the Latines <sup>or the</sup> Figure of store. hauing no fitte terme to giue him, called it by a name of euent, for (said they) many words of one nature and fence, one of them doth expound another. And therefore they called this figure the [Interpreter] I for my part had rather call him the figure of [store] because plenty of one manner of thing in our vulgar we call so. Aeneas asking whether his Captaine Orontes were dead or aliue, vsed this store of speeches all to one purpose.

*Is he aliue,
Is he as I left him queauing and quick,
And hath he not yet geuen vp the ghost,
Among the rest of those that I haue lost?*

Or if it be in single words, then thus.

*What is become of that beautifull face,
Those louely lookes, that fauour amiable,
Those sweete features, and visage full of grace,
That countenance which is alonly able
To kill and cure?*

Ye see that all these words, face, lookes, fauour, features, visage, countenance, are in fence all but one. Which store, neuerthelesse, doeth much beautifie and inlarge the matter. So said another.

My faith, my hope, my trust, my God and eke my guide, Stretch forth thy hand to saue the soule, vwhat ere the body bide.

Here faith, hope and trust be words of one effect, allowed to vs by this figure of store.

Otherwhiles we speake and be sorry for it, as if we had not wel spoken, so that we seeme to call in our word againe, and to put in another fitter for the purpose: for which respects the Greekes called this manner of speech the <sup>Metanoic,</sup> <sup>or the</sup> Penitent.

figure of repentance: then for that vpon repentance commonly follows amendment, the Latins called it the figure of correction, in that the speaker seemeth to reforme that which was said amisse. I following the Greeke originall, choose to call him the penitent, or repentant: and finging in honor of the mayden Queene, meaning to praise her for her greatnesse of courage, ouershooting my selfe, called it first by the name of pride: then fearing least fault might be found with that terme, by and by turned this word pride to praise: refembling her Maiesty to the Lion, being her owne noble armory, which by a flie construction purporteth magnanimitie. Thus in the latter end of a Parthemiade.

O peerles you, or els no one aliue,

“ Your pride serues you to seaze them all alone :

“ Not pride madame, but praise of the lion.

To conquer all and be conquerd by none.

And in another Parthemiade thus insinuating her Maiesties great constancy in refusall of all marriages offred her, thus :

“ Her heart is hid none may it see,

“ Marble or flinte folke vveene it be.

Which may imploy rigour and cruelty, than correcteth it thus.

Not flinte I trowe I am a lier,

But Siderite that feelles no fire.

By which is intended, that it proceeded of a cold and chaste complexion not easily allured to loue.

We haue another manner of speech much like to the repentant, but doth not as the same recant or vsfay a word that hath bene said before, putting another fitter in his place, but hauing spoken any thing to deprauē the matter or partie, he denieth it not, but as it were helpeth it againe by another more fauourable speech: and so seemeth to make amends, for which cause it is called by the originall name in both languages, the Recompencer, as he that was merily asked the question, whether his wife were not a shrewe as well as others of his neighbours wiues, answered in this figure as pleasantly, for he could not well denie it.

*I must needs say, that my wife is a shrewve,
But such a hufvife as I knowv but a ferve.*

Another in his first preposition giuing a very faint commendation to the Courtiers life, weaning to make him amends, made it worfer by a second proposition, thus:

*The Courtiers life full delicate it is,
But vvhete no vvise man vvill cuer fet his blis.*

And an other speaking to the incoragement of youth in studie and to be come excellent in letters and armes, said thus:

*Many are the paines and perils to be past,
But great is the gaine and glory at the last.*

Our poet in his short ditties, but specially playing the Epigrammatist will vse to conclude and shut vp his Epigram with a verse Epithonema.
or the
Surclose. or two, spoken in such fort, as it may seeme a manner of allowance to all the premisses, and that with a ioyfull approbation, which the Latines call Acclamatio, we therefore call this figure the surclose or consenting close, as Virgill when he had largely spoken of Prince Eneas his successe and fortunes concluded with this close.

Tanta molis erat Romanam condere gentem.

In English thus:

*So huge a peece of vvorke it vvas and so hie,
To reare the house of Romane progenie.*

Sir Philip Sidney very pretily closed vp a dittie in this fort.

*What medicine then, can such disease remoue,
Where loue breedes hate, and hate engenders loue.*

And we in Partheniade written of her Maiestie, declaring to what perils vertue is generally subiect, and applying that fortune to her selfe, closed it vp with this Epiphoneme.

*Than if there bee,
Any so cancard hart to grutch,
At your glories: my Queene: in vaine,*

*Repining at your fatall raigne :
It is for that they feele too much,
Of your bountee.*

As who would say her owne ouermuch lenitie and goodnesse, made her ill willers the more bold and presumptuous.

Lucretius Carus the philosopher and poet inueighing fore against the abuses of the superstitious religion of the Gentils, and recompting the wicked fact of king Agamemnon in sacrificing his only daughter Iphigenia, being a yoong damfell of excellent bewtie, to th'intent to please the wrathfull gods, hinderers of his nauigation, after he had said all, closed it vp in this one verse, spoken in Epiphonema.

In English thus :

*Lo what an outrage, could cause to be done,
The peeuissh scruple of blinde religion.*

Auxesis,
Auancer.

It happens many times that to vrge and enforce the matter we speake of, we go still mounting by degrees and encreasing our speech with wordes or with sentences of more waight one then another, and is a figure of great both efficacie and ornament, as he that declaring the great calamitie of an infortunate prince, said thus :

*He lost besides his children and his wvife,
His realme, ronovvne, liege, libertie and life.*

By which it appeareth that to any noble Prince the losse of his estate ought not to be so greeuous, as of his honour, nor any of them both like to the lacke of his libertie, but that life is the dearest detriment of any other. We call this figure by the Greeke originall the Auancer or figure of encrease because euery word that is spoken is one of more weight then another. And as we lamented the crueltie of an inexorable and vnfaithfull mistresse.

*If by the lawves of loue it be a falt,
The faithfull friend, in absence to forget :
But if it be (once do thy heart but halt,)*

*A secret sinne: what forfet is so great:
 As by despite in view of euery eye,
 The solemne vowes oft sworne vvith teares so salt,
 And holy Leagues fast seald vvith hand and hart:
 For to repeale and breake so vvilfully?
 But nowv (alas) vvithout all iust defart,
 My lot is for my troth and much good vvill,
 To reape disdaine, hatred and rude refuse,
 Or if ye vvould vvorke me some greater ill:
 And of myne earned ioyes to feele no part,
 What els is this (o cruell) but to vse,
 Thy murdring knife the guiltlesse bloud to spill.*

Where ye see how she is charged first with a fault, then with a secret sinne, afterward with a foule forfet, last of all with a most cruell and bloody deede. And thus againe in a certaine louers complaint made to the like effect.

*They say it is a ruth to see thy louer neede,
 But you can see me vveepe, but you can see me bleede:
 And neuer shrinke nor shame, ne shed no teare at all,
 You make my wounds your selfe, and fill them vp with gall:
 Yea you can see me found, and faint for want of breath,
 And gaspe and grone for life, and struggle still with death,
 What can you now do more, sweare by your maydenhead,
 Then for to flea me quicke, or strip me being dead.*

In these verses you see how one crueltie surmounts another by degrees till it come to the very slaughter and beyond, for it is thought a despite done to a dead carcas to be an euidence of greater crueltie then to haue killed him.

After the Auancer followeth the abbafer working by wordes and sentences of extenuation or diminution. Whereupon we call him the Disabler or figure of Extenuation: and this extenuation is vsed to diuers purposos, sometimes for modesties fake, and to auoide the opinion of arrogancie, speaking of our selues or of ours, as he that disabled himselfe to his mistresse, thus.

Not all the skill I haue to speake or do,

*Meiosis,
 or the Disabler.*

*Which litle is God wot (set loue apart :)
Liueload nor life, and put them both thereto,
Can counterpeise the due of your defart.*

It may be also done for despite to bring our adufaries in contempt, as he that sayd by one (commended for a very braue souldier) difabling him scornefully,
thus.

*A iollie man (forfooth) and fit for the warre,
Good at hand gripes, better to fight a farre :
Whom bright weapon in shevv as it is said,
Yea his owne shade, hath often made afraide.*

The subtiltie of the scoffe lieth in these Latin wordes [eminus et cominus pugnare]. Also we vse this kind of Extenuation when we take in hand to comfort or cheare any perillous enterprise, making a great matter seeme small, and of litle difficultie, and is much vsed by captaines in the warre, when they (to giue courage to their souldiers) will seeme to difable the persons of their enemies, and abase their forces, and make light of euery thing that might be a discouragement to the attempt, as Hanniball did in his Oration to his sould-diers, when they should come to passe the Alpes to enter Italie, and for sharpnesse of the weather, and steepnesse of the mountaines their hearts began to faile them.

We vse it againe to excufe a fault, and to make an offence seeme lesse then it is, by giuing a terme more fauorable and of lesse vehemencie then the troth requires, as to say of a great robbery, that it was but a pilfry matter: of an arrant ruffian that he is a tall fellow of his hands: of a prodigall foole, that he is a kind hearted man: of a notorious vnthrift, a lustie youth, and such like phrafes of extenuation, which fall more aptly to the office of the figure Curry fauell before remembred.

And we vse the like termes by way of pleasant fami-liaritie, and as it were for a Courtly maner of speach with our egalls or inferiours, as to call a young Gentlewoman Mall for Mary, Nell for Elner: Jack for John,

Robin for Robert: or any other like affected termes spoken of pleasure, as in our triumphals calling familiarly vpon our Muse, I called her Moppe.

But vwill you vveet,

My litle muse, my prettie moppe:

If vve shall algates change our stoppe,

Chose me a fveet.

Vnderstanding by this word [Moppe] a litle prety Lady, or tender young thing. For so we call litle fishes, that be not come to their full growth [moppes,] as whiting moppes, gurnard moppes.

Also such termes are vsed to be giuen in derision and for a kind of contempt, as when we say Lording for Lord, and as the Spaniard that calleth an Earle of small reuenue Contadilio: the Italian calleth the poore man, by contempt pouerachio, or pouerino, the little beast animalculo or animaluchio, and such like diminutives appertaining to this figure, the [Difabler] more ordinary in other languages than in our vulgar.

This figure of retire holds part with the propounder of which we spake before (prolepsis) because of the resumption of a former proposition vttered in generalitie to explane the same better by a particular diuision. But their difference is, in that the propounder resumes but the matter only. This [retire] resumes both the matter and the termes, and is therefore accompted one of the figures of repetition, and in that respect may be called by his originall Greeke name the [Resounde] or the [retire] for this word [ὀδοῦς] serues both fences resound and retire. The vse of this figure, is seen in this dittie following,

Loue hope and death, do stirre in me much strife,

As neuer man but I lead such a life:

For burning loue doth wound my heart to death:

And vwhen death comes at call of inward grief,

Cold lingring hope doth feede my fainting breath:

Against my vwill, and yeelds my wound relief,

So that I liue, and yet my life is such:

As neuer death could greeue me halfe so much.

Epanodis,
or the figure of Retire.

Then haue ye a maner of speach, not so figuratiue Dialisis, as fit for argumentation, and worketh not or the Dismem- vnlike the dilemma of the Logicians, bebrer. cause he propones two or moe matters entierly, and doth as it were fet downe the whole tale or rekoning of an argument and then cleare euery part by it felfe, as thus.

*It can not be but nigardship or neede,
 Made him attempt this foule and vicked deede:
 Nigardship not, for alwayes he vvas free,
 Nor neede, for vwho doth not his richesse see?*

Or as one that entreated for a faire young maide who was taken by the watch in London and carried to Bridewell to be punished.

*Now gentill Sirs let this young maide alone,
 For either she hath grace or els she hath none:
 If she haue grace, she may in time repent,
 If she haue none vwhat bootes her punishment.*

Or as another pleaded his deserts with his mistresse.

*Were it for grace, or els in hope of gaine,
 To say of my deserts, it is but vaine:
 For vwell in minde, in case ye do them beare,
 To tell them oft, it should but irke your eare:
 Be they forgot: as likely should I faile, [uaile.
 To vwinne vwith vvordes, vwhere deedes can not pre-*

Then haue ye a figure very meete for Orators or eloquent perfwaders such as our maker or Merismus, Poet must in some cafes shew him felfe to or the Distributer. be, and is when we may conueniently vtter a matter in one entier speach or proposition and will rather do it peecemeale and by distribution of euery part for amplification sake, as for example he that might say, a house was outrageously plucked downe:
 will not be satisfied so to say, but rather will speake it in this sort: they first vndermined the groundfills, they beate downe the walles, they vnfloored the loftes, they vtiled it and pulled downe the rooffe. For so in deede is a house pulled downe by circumstances, which this

and therefore I name him the distributor according to his originall, as wrate the Tuscane Poet in a Sonet which Sir Thomas Wyat translated with very good grace, thus.

*Set me vvhereas the sunne doth parch the greene,
Or vvhether his beames do not dissolue the yce:
In temperate heate vvhether he is felt and seene,
In presence prest of people mad or vvise:
Set me in hye or yet in low degree,
In longest night or in the shortest day:
In clearest skie, or vvhether clouds thickest bee,
In lustie youth or when my heares are gray:
Set me in heauen, in earth or els in hell,
In hill or dale or in the foming flood:
Thrall or at large, aliue where so I dwell,
Sicke or in health, in euill fame or good:
Hers will I be, and onely with this thought,
Content my selfe, although my chaunce be naught.*

All which might haue bene said in these two verses.

*Set me wheresoeuer ye vvill,
I am and vvill be yours still.*

The zealous Poet writing in prayse of the maiden Queene would not seeme to wrap vp all her most excellent parts in a few words them entierly comprehending, but did it by a distributor or merismus in the negatiue for the better grace, thus.

*Not your beawtie, most gracious foueraine,
Nor maidenly lookes, mainteind vvith maiestie:
Your stately port, vvhich doth not match but staine,
For your presence, your pallace and your traine,
All Princes Courts, mine eye could euer see:
Not your quicke vvits, your sober gouernaunce:
Your cleare foresight, your faithful memorie,
So sweete features, in so staid countenance:
Nor languages, vvith plentuous vtterance,
So able to discourse, and entertaine:
Not noble race, farre beyond Cæsars raigne,
Runne in right line, and bloud of nointed kings:
Not large empire, armies, treasurs, domaine,
Lustie liueries, of fortunes dearest darlings:*

*Not all the skilles, fit for a Princely dame,
Your learned Muse, vwith vse and studie brings.
Not true honour, ne that immortall fame
Of mayden raigne, your only owne renowne
And no Queenes els, yet such as yeeldes your name Greater glory than doeth your treble crowne.*

And then concludes thus.

*Not any one of all these honord parts
Your Princely happes, and habites that do moue,
And as it were, enforcell all the hearts
Of Christen kings to quarrell for your loue,
But to possesse, at once and all the good Arte and engine, and euery starre aboute
Fortune or kinde, could farce in flesh and bloud,
Was force inough to make so many striue
For your person, which in our world floode
By all consents the minionst mayde to wiue.*

Where ye see that all the parts of her commendation which were particularly remembred in twenty verses before, are wrapt vp in the two verses of this last part, videl.

*Not any one of all your honord parts,
Those Princely haps and habites, &c.*

This figure serues for amplification, and also for ornament, and to enforce perswasion mightely. Sir Geffrey Chaucer, father of our English Poets, hath these verses following the distributor.

*When faith failes in Priestes sawes,
And Lords hestles are holden for lawes,
And robberie is tane for purchase,
And lechery for folace
Then shall the Realme of Albion
Be brought to great confusion.*

Where he might haue said as much in these words: when vice abounds, and vertue decayeth in Albion, then &c. And as another said,

*When Prince for his people is wakefull and wise,
Peeres ayding with armes, Counfellors with aduise,
Magistrate sincerely vsing his charge,
People prest to obey, nor let to runne at large,*

*Prelate of holy life, and with deuotion
 Preferring pietie before promotion,
 Priest still preaching, and praying for our heale:
 Then blessed is the state of a common-weale.*

All which might haue bene said in these few words, when euery man in charge and authoritie doeth his duety, and executeth his function well, then is the common-wealth happy.

The Greeke Poets who made musicall ditties to be song to the lute or harpe, did vse to linke their staues together with one verse running throughout the whole song by equall distance, and was, for the most part, the first verse of the staffe, which kept so good fence and conformitie with the whole, as his often repetition did geue it greater grace. They called such linking verse Epimone, the Latines versus intercalaris, and we may terme him the Loue-burden, following the originall, or if it please you, the long repeate: in one respect because that one verse alone beareth the whole burden of the song according to the originall: in another respect, for that it comes by large distances to be often repeated, as in this ditty made by the noble knight Sir Philip Sidney,

*My true loue hath my heart and I haue his,
 By iust exchange one for another geuen:
 I holde his deare, and mine he cannot misse,
 There neuer was a better bargaine driuen.*

*My true loue hath my heart and I haue his.
 My heart in me keepes him and me in one,
 My heart in him his thoughts and fences guides:
 He loues my heart, for once it was his owne,
 I cherish his because in me it bides.*

My true loue hath my heart, and I haue his.

Many times our Poet is caried by some occasion to report of a thing that is maruelous, and then he will seeme not to speake it simply but with some signe of admiration, as in our enterlude called the Woer.

I woonder much to see so many husbands thriue,

*Epimone,
 or the Loueburden.*

*Paradoxon,
 or the Wondrer.*

*That haue but little wit, before they come to wiue:
For one would easily weene who fo hath little wit,
His wife to teach it him, vvere a thing much vnfit.*

Or as Cato the Romane Senatour said one day merily to his companion that walked with him, pointing his finger to a yong vnthrift in the streete who lately before sold his patrimonie, of a goodly quantitie of salt marshes, lying neere vnto Capua shore.

*Now is it not, a wonder to behold,
Yonder gallant skarce twenty winter old,
By might (marke ye) able to doo more?
Than the mayne sea that batters on his shore?
For what the waues could neuer wash away,
This proper youth hath wasted in a day.*

Not much vnlike the vondrer haue ye another figure called the doubtfull, because oftentimes we will seeme to cast perils, and make doubt of things when by a plaine manner of speeche wee might affirme or deny him, as thus of a cruell mother who murdred her owne child.

Aforia,
or the Doubtfull.

*Whether the cruell mother were more to blame,
Or the shrewd childe come of so curst a dame:
Or whether some smatch of the fathers blood,
Whose kinne vvere neuer kinde, nor neuer good.

This manner of speeche is vsed when we will not seeme, either for manner sake or to auoid tediousnesse, to trouble the iudge or hearer with all that we could say, but hauing said inough already, we referre the rest to their consideration, as he that said thus:

Epitropis,
ference.

*Me thinkes that I haue said, what may well suffice,
Referring all the rest, to your better aduise.*

The fine and subtile perfwader when his intent is to sting his aduerfary, or els to declare his mind in broad and liberal speeches, which might breede offence or scandall, he will seeme to bespeake pardon before hand, whereby his licentiousnes may be the better borne withall, as he that said:

Parisia,
or the Licentious.

*If my speech hap I offend you any way,
Thinke it their fault, that force me so to say.*

Not much vnlike to the figure of reference, is there another with some little diuersitie which we call impartener, because many times in pleading and perswading, we thinke it a very good pollicie to acquaint our iudge or hearer or very aduerfarie with some part of our Counsell and aduice, and to aske their opinion, as who would say they could not otherwise thinke of the matter then we do. As he that had tolde a long tale before certaine noble women, of a matter somewhat in honour touching the Sex.

*Tell me faire Ladies, if the case were your owne,
So foule a fault would you haue it be knowen?*

Maister Gorge in this figure, said very sweetly.
All you who read these lines and skanne of my defart, Iudge whether was more good, my hap or els my hart.

The good Orator vseth a manner of speach in his perswasion and is when all that should seeme to make against him being spoken by th'other side, he will first admit it, and in th'end auoid all for his better aduantage, and this figure is much vsed by our English pleaders in the Star-chamber and Chancery, which they call to confesse and auoid, if it be in case of crime or iniury, and is a very good way. For when the matter is so plaine that it cannot be denied or trauerfed, it is good that it be iustified by confessall and auoidance. I call it the figure of admittance. As we once wrate to the reproofe of a Ladies faire but crueltie.

*I know your witte, I know your pleasant tongue,
Your some sweete smiles, your some, but louely lowers:
A beautie to enamour olde and yong.
Those chaste desires, that noble minde of yours,
And that chiefe part whence all your honor springs,
A grace to entertaine the greatest kings.
All this I know: but sinne it is to see,
So faire partes spilt by too much crueltie.*

*Anachinosis,
or the Impartener.*

*Paramologia,
mittance.*

In many cafes we are driuen for better perfuafion to tell the caufe that mooues vs to fay thus or thus: or els when we would fortifie our allegations by rendring reasons to euery one, this affignation of caufe the Greekes called Etiologia, which if we might without fcorne of a new inuented terme call [Tell caufe] it were right according to the Greeke originall: and I pray you why should we not? and with as good authoritie as the Greekes? Sir Thomas Smith, her Maiefties principall Secretary, and a man of great learning and grauitie, feeking to geue an English word to this Greeke word ἀγαμος called it Spited, or wedfpite. Master Secretary Wilfon geuing an English name to his arte of Logicke, called it Witcraft, me thinke I may be bolde with like liberty to call the figure Etiologia [Tell caufe.] And this manner of fpeech is alwayes contemned, with thefe words, for, becaufe, and fuch other confirmatiues. The Latines hauing no fitte name to geue it in one fingle word, gaue it no name at all, but by circumlocution. We alfo call him the reafon-rendrer, and leaue the right English word [Tel caufe] much better anfwering the Greeke originall. Aristotle was moft excellent in vfe of this figure, for he neuer propones any allegation, or makes any furmife, but he yeelds a reafon or caufe to fortifie and proue it, which geues it great credit. For example ye may take thefe verfes, firft pointing, than confirming by fimilitudes.

*When fortune shall haue spit out all her gall,
I trust good luck shall be to me allowde,
For I haue feene a shippe in hauen fall,
After the storme had broke both mafte and shrowde.*

And this.

*Good is the thing that moues vs to desire,
That is to ioy the beauty we behold:
Els were we louers as in an endleffe fire,
Alwaies burning and euer chill a colde.*

And in thefe verfes.

Accused though I be without defart,

*Sith none can proue belecue it not for true:
For neuer yet since first ye had my hart,
Entended I to false or be vnttrue.*

And in this Disticque.

And for her beauties praise, no wight that with her warres: [the stars.

For where she comes she shewes her felse like sun among

And in this other dittie of ours where the louer complains of his Ladies crueltie, rendring for euery surmise a reason, and by telling the cause, seeketh (as it were) to get credit, thus.

*Cruel you be who can say nay,
Since ye delight in others wo:
Unwise am I, ye may well say,
For that I haue, honourd you so.
But blamelesse I, who could not chuse,
To be enchanted by your eye:
But ye to blame, thus to refuse
My seruice, and to let me die.*

Sometimes our error is so manifest, or we be so hardly prest with our aduerfaries, as we cannot deny the fault layd vnto our charge: in which case it is good pollicie to excuse it by some allowable pretext, as did one whom his mistresse burdened with some vnkinde speeches which he had past of her, thus.

*Dichologia,

*I said it: but by lapse of lying tongue,
When furie and iust grieffe my heart opprest:
I sayd it: as ye see, both fraile and young,
When your rigor had ranckled in my brest.
The cruell wound that smarted me so fore,
Pardon therefore (sweete sorrow) or at least Beare with mine youth that neuer fell before,
Least your offence encrease my grieffe the more.*

And againe in these,

*I spake amyffe I cannot it deny
But caused by your great discourtesie:
And if I said that which I now repent,
And said it not, but by misgouernment
Of youthfull yeres, your felse that are so young*

*Pardon for once this error of my tongue,
And thinke amends can neuer come to late:
Loue may be curst, but loue can neuer hate.*

Speaking before of the figure [Synecdoche] wee called Noema, him [Quicke conceit] because he inured in or the a single word onely by way of intendment Figure of or large meaning, but such as was speedily close conceit. discouered by euery quicke wit, as by the halfe to vnderstand the whole, and many other waies appearing by the examples. But by this figure [Noema] the obscurity of the fence lieth not in a single word, but in an entier speech, whereof we do not so easily conceiue the meaning, but as it were by coniecture, because it is wittie and subtile or darke, which makes me therefore call him in our vulgar the [Close conceit] as he that said by himselfe and his wife, I thanke God in fortie winters that we haue liued together, neuer any of our neighbours fet vs at one, meaning that they neuer fell out in all that space, which had bene the directer speech and more apert, and yet by intendment amounts all to one, being neuerthelesse dissemblable and in effect contrary. Pawlet Lord Treasorer of England, and first Marques of Winchester, with the like subtile speech gaue a quippe to Sir William Gyfford, who had married the Marques sister, and all her life time could neuer loue her nor like of her company, but when she was dead made the greatest moane for her in the world, and with teares and much lamentation vttered his grieffe to the L. Treasorer, ô good brother quoth the Marques, I am right fory to see you now loue my sister so well, meaning that he shewed his loue too late, and should haue done it while she was a liue.

A great counsellour somewhat forgetting his modestie, vsed these words: Gods lady I reckon my selfe as good a man as he you talke of, and yet I am not able to do so. Yea sir quoth the party, your L. is too good to be a man, I would ye were a Saint, meaning he would he were dead, for none are shrined for Saints before they be dead.

The Logician vsfeth a definition to expresse the truth or nature of euery thing by his true kinde and difference, as to say wisedome is a prudent and wittie foresight and consideration of humane or worldly a $\text{c}$ tions with their euentes. This definition is Logicall. The Oratour vsfeth another maner of definition, thus: Is this wisedome? no it is a certaine subtill knauish craftie wit, it is no industrie as ye call it, but a certaine busie brainficknesse, for industrie is a liuely and vnueried sear $\text{c}$ h and occupation in honest things, egernesse is an appetite in base and small matters.

Orismus,
or the Definer of difference.

It serueth many times to great purpose to preuent our aduerfaries arguments, and take vpon vs to know before what our iudge or aduerfary or hearer thinketh, and that we will seeme to vtter it before it be spoken or alleaged by them, in respect of which boldnesse to enter so deeply into another mans conceit or conscience, and to be so priuie of another mans mynde, gaue cause that this figure was called the [presumptuous] I will also call him the figure of presupposall or the preuenter, for by reason we suppose before what may be said, or perchance would be said by our aduerfary, or any other, we do preuent them of their aduantage, and do catch the ball (as they are wont to say) before it come to the ground.

Procatalepsis,
or
the presumptuous,
otherwise
the figure of Presupposall.

It is also very many times vsed for a good pollicie in pleading or perswasion to make wise as if we set but light of the matter, and that therefore we do passe it ouer slightly when in deede we do then intend most effectually and despightfully if it be inuectiue to remember it: it is also when we will not seeme to know a thing, and yet we know it well inough, and may be likened to the maner of women, who as the common saying is, will say nay and take it.

Paralepsis,
or the Passager.

*I hold my peace and will not say for shame,
The much vnruth of that unciuill dame:*

*For if I should her coullours kindly blaze,
It would so make the chaste eares amaze. &c.*

It is said by maner of a prouerbiall speach that he who findes himselfe well should not wagge, euen so the perfwader finding a substantiall point in his matter to serue his purpose, should dwell vpon that point longer then vpon any other lesse assured, and vse all endeouour to maintaine that one, and as it were to make his chief aboad thereupon, for which cause I name him the figure of aboad, according to the Latine name: Some take it not but for a course of argument and therefore hardly may one giue any examples thereof.

Now as arte and good pollicy in perfwasion bids vs to abide and not to stirre from the point of our most aduantage, but the same to enforce and tarry vpon with all possible argument, so doth discretion will vs sometimes to flit from one matter to another, as a thing meete to be forsaken, and another entred vpon, I call him therefore the flitting figure, or figure of remoue, like as the other before was called the figure of aboad.

Euen so againe, as it is wisdome for a perfwader to tarrie and make his aboad as long as he may conueniently without tediousnes to the hearer, vpon his chiefe proofes or points of the cause tending to his aduantage, and likewise to depart againe when time serues, and goe to a new matter seruing the purpose aswell. So is it requisite many times for him to talke farre from the principall matter, and as it were to range aside, to th'intent by such extraordinary meane to induce or inferre other matter, aswell or better seruing the principal purpose, and neuertheles in season to returne home where he first strayed out. This maner of speech is termed the figure of digression by the Latines, following the Greeke originall, we also call him the straggler by allusion to the souldier that marches out of his array, or by those that keepe no order in their marche, as the battailes well

figure of abode.

Metastasis,
flitting figure.
or the Remoue.

Parecnasis,
or the Straggler.

ranged do: of this figure there need be geuen no example.

Occasion offers many times that our maker as an oratour, or perswader, or pleader should go roundly to worke, and by a quick and swift argument dispatch his perswasion, and as they are wont to say not to stand all day trifling to no purpose, but to rid it out of the way quickly. This is done by a manner of speech, both figuratiue and argumentatiue, when we do briefly set downe all our best reasons seruing the purpose, and reiect all of them sauing one, which we accept to satisfie the cause: as he that in a litigious case for land would prooue it not the aduerfaries, but his clients.

*No man can say its his by heritage,
Nor by Legacie, or Testatours deuice:
Nor that it came by purchase or engage,
Nor from his Prince for any good seruice.
Then needs must it be his by very wrong,
Which he hath offred this poore plaintife so long.*

Though we might call this figure very well and properly the [Paragon] yet dare I not so to doe for feare of the Courtiers enuy, who will haue no man vse that terme but after a courtly manner, that is, in praying of hofes, haukes, hounds, pearles, diamonds, rubies, emerodes, and other precious stones: specially of faire women whose excellencie is discouered by paragonizing or setting one to another, which moued the zealous Poet, speaking of the mayden Queene, to call her the paragon of Queenes. This considered, I will let our figure enioy his best beknownen name, and call him stil in all ordinarie cases the figure of comparifon: as when a man wil feeme to make things appeare good or bad, or better or worfe, or more or lesse excellent, either vpon spite or for pleasure, or any other good affection, then he sets the lesse by the greater, or the greater to the lesse, the equall to his equall, and by such confronting of them together, driues out the true ods that is betwixt them, and makes it better appeare, as when we fang of our Soueraigne Lady thus, in the twentieth Partheniade.

*As falcon fares to buffards flight,
As egles eyes to owlates fight,
As fierce faker to coward kite,
As brightest noone to darkest night :
As summer funne exceedeth farre,
The moone and euery other starre :
So farre my Princeffe praise doeth passe,
The samoust Queene that euer was.*

And in the eighteene Partheniade thus.

*Set rich rubie to red esmayle,
The rauens plume to peacocks tayle,
Lay me the larkes to lizards eyes,
The duskie cloude to azure skie,
Set shallow brookes to furging seas,
An orient pearle to a white pease :*

&c. Concluding.

*There shall no lesse an ods be seene
In mine from euery other Queene.*

We are sometimes occasioned in our tale to report Dialogismus, some speech from another mans mouth, as <sup>or</sup> what a king said to his priuy counsell or <sub>the right rea-</sub> subiect, a captaine to his souldier, a souldiar to his captaine, a man to a woman, and contrariwise : in which report we must alwaies geue to euery person his fit and naturall, and that which best becommeth him. For that speech becommeth a king which doth not a carter, and a young man that doeth not an old : and so in euery fort and degree. Virgil speaking in the person of Eneas, Turnus and many other great Princes, and sometimes of meaner men, ye shall see what decencie euery of their speeches holdeth with the qualitie, degree and yeares of the speaker. To which examples I will for this time referre you.

So if by way of fiction we will seem to speake in another mans person, as if king Henry were aliue, and should say of the towne of Bulleyn, what we by warre to the hazard of our person hardly obtained, our young sonne without any peril at all, for litle mony deliuered vp againe. Or if we should faine king Edward the thirde, vnderstanding how his successeur Queene Marie had lost the towne of Calays by negligence, should say: That which the sword wanne, the distaffe hath lost. This manner of speech is by the figure Dialogismus, or the right reafoner.

In waigtie caufes and for great purposes, wise persuaders vse graue and weighty speeches, specially in matter of aduise or counfel, for which purpose there is a maner of speech to alleage textes or authorities of wittie sentence, such as smatch morall doctrine and teach wisdom and good behaiour, by the Greeke originall we call him the directour, by the Latin he is called sententia: we may call him the sage sayer, thus.

Nature bids vs as a louing mother,
To loue our felues first and next to loue
another.

Gnome,
 or the
Director.

Sententia,
 or the Sage sayer.

The Prince that couets all to know and see,
Had neede full milde and patient to bee.
Nothing sliques faster by vs as appeares,
Then that which we learne in our tender yeares.

And that which our foueraigne Lady wrate in defiance of fortune.

Neuer thinke you fortune can beare the sway,
Where vertues force, can cause her to obay.

Heede must be taken that such rules or sentences be choisly made and not often vsed least excesse breed lothfomnesse.

Arte and good pollicie moues vs many times to be earnest in our speech, and then we lay on such load and so go to it by heapes as if we would winne the game by multitude of words and speeches, not all of one but of diuers matter and fence, for which cause the Latines called it Congeries and we the heaping figure, as he that said

To muse in minde how faire, how vvise, how good,

Sinathrismus.
Heaping figure.

*Hovv braue, hovv free, hovv curteous and hovv true,
My Lady is doth but inflame my blood.*

Or thus.

I deeme, I dreame, I do, I tast, I touch, Nothing at all but smells of perfit blisse.

And thus by maister Edvard Diar, vehement swift and passionatly.

*But if my faith my hope, my loue my true intent,
My libertie, my seruice vowed, my time and all be spent,
In vaine, &c.*

But if such earnest and hastie heaping vp of speaches be made by way of recapitulation, which commonly is in the end of euery long tale and Oration, because the speaker seemes to make a collection of all the former materiall points, to binde them as it were in a bundle and lay them forth to enforce the cause and renew the hearers memory, then ye may geue him more properly the name of the [colleclour] or recapitulatour, and serueth to very great purpose as in an hymphne written by vs to the Queenes Maiestie entituled (Minerua) wherein speaking of the mutabilitie of fortune in the case of all Princes generally, wee seemed to exempt her Maiestie of all such casualtie, by reason she was by her destinie and many diuine partes in her, ordained to a most long and constant prosperitie in this world, concluding with this recapitulation.

*But thou art free, but were thou not in deede,
But were thou not, come of immortall feede:
Neuer yborne, and thy minde made to blisse, Heauens mettall that euerlasting is:
Were not thy vvit, and that thy vertues shall,
Be deemd diuine thy fauour face and all:
And that thy loze, ne name may neuer dye,
Nor thy state turne, stayd by destinie:
Dread were least once thy noble hart may feele,
Some rufull turne, of her vnsteady vvhcele.*

*Apostrophe,
or
the turne tale.*

Many times when we haue runne a long race in our tale spoken to the hearers, we do sodainly flye out and either speake or exclaime at some other perfon or thing, and therefore the Greekes call fuch figure (as we do) the turnway or turnetale, and breedeth by fuch exchange a certaine recreation to the hearers minds, as this vsed by a louer to his vnkind miftresse.

*And as for you (faire one) fay now by prooffe ye finde,
That rigour and ingratitude foone kill a gentle minde.*

And as we in our triumphals, fpeaking long to the Queenes Maieftie, vpon the fodaine we burft out in an exclamation to Phebus, feeming to draw in a new matter, thus.

*But O Phebus,
All gliftering in thy gorgious gowne,
Wouldft thou vvitfaffe to flide a doovne :
And dwell with vs,*

*But for a day,
I could tell thee clofe in thine care,
A tale that thou hadft leuer heare
I dare vvell fay :*

*Then ere thou vvert,
To kiffe that vnkind runneaway,
Who was transformed to boughs of bay :

And fo returned againe to the firft matter.

The matter and occafion leadeth vs Hypotipofis, many times to describe and fet foorth <sup>or</sup> the counterfeit many things, in fuch fort as it should ap-<sub>representation.</sub>peare they were truly before our eyes though they were not prefent, which to do it requireth cunning : for nothing can be kindly counterfeit or represented in his abfence, but by great difcretion in the doer. And if the things we couet to describe be not naturall or not veritable, than yet the fame axeth more cunning to do it, becaufe to faine a thing that neuer was nor is like to be, proceedeth of a greater wit and fharper inuention than to describe things that be true.

And thefe be things that a poet or Prosopographia. maker is woont to describe fometimes as true or naturall, and sometimes to faine as artificiall and not true. viz. The visage, speach and countenance of any person absent or dead: and this kinde of representation is called the Counterfait countenance: as Homer doth in his Iliades, diuerse personages: namely Achilles and Thersites, according to the truth and not by fiction. And as our poet Chaucer doth in his Canterbury tales set forth the Sumner, Pardoner, Manciple, and the rest of the pilgrims, most naturally and pleasantly.

Prosopopeia.
Counterfait in personation. But if ye wil faine any person with such features, qualities and conditions, or if ye wil attribute any humane quality, as reason or speech to dombe creatures or other insensible things, and do studey (as one may say) to giue them a humane person, it is not Profopographia, but Prosopopeia, because it is by way of fiction, and no prettier examples can be giuen to you thereof, than in the Romant of the rose translated out of French by Chaucer, describing the persons of auarice, enuie, old age, and many others, whereby much moralitie is taught.

So if we describe the time or season of the yeare, as winter, summer, haruest, day, midnight,
Cronographia,
or the Counterfait
time. noone, euening, or such like: we call such description the counterfait time. Cronographia examples are euery where to be found.

And if this description be of any true
Topographia,
or the Counterfait
place. place, citie, castell, hill, valley or sea, and such like: we call it the counterfait place Topographia, or if ye fayne places vntrue, as heauen, hell, paradise, the house of fame, the pallace of the funne, the denne of sheep, and such like which ye shall see in Poetes: so did Chaucer very well describe the country of Saluces in Italie, which ye may see, in his report of the Lady Gryfyll.

Pragmatographia.
or the Counterfait
action. But if such description be made to represent the handling of any busines with the circumstances belonging therevnto as the manner of a battell, a feast, a marriage, a buriall or any other matter that lieth in feat and actiuitie: we call it then the counterfait action [Pragmatographia.]

In this figure the Lord Nicholas Vaux a noble gentleman, and much delighted in vulgar making, and a man otherwise of no great learning but hauing herein a maruelous facillitie, made a dittie representing the battayle and assault of Cupide, so excellently well, as for the gallant and propre application of his fiction in euery part, I cannot choose but fet downe the greatest part of his ditty, for in truth it can not be amended.

*When Cupid scaled first the fort,
Wherein my hart lay wounded fore
The battrie was of such a fort,
That I must yeeld or die therefore.
There saw I loue vpon the wall,
How he his banner did display,
Alarme alarme he gan to call,
And bad his souldiers keepe aray.*

*The armes the which that Cupid bare,
Were pearced harts with teares besprent:
In siluer and fable to declare
The stedfast loue he alwaies meant.*

*There might you see his band all drest
In colours like to vvhite and blacke,
With powder and vwith pellets prest,
To bring them forth to spoile and sacke,
Good vwill the maister of the shot,
Stood in the Rampire braue and proude,
For expence of powder he spared not,
Assault assault to crie aloude.*

There might you heare the Canons rore, Eche peece discharging a louers looke, &c.

As well to a good maker and Poet as to an excellent perfwader in prose, the figure of Similitude is very necessary, by which we not onely bewtifie our tale, but also very much inforce and inlarge it. I say inforce because no one thing more preuaileth with all ordinary iudgements than perfwasion by similitude. Now because there

are fundry forts of them, which also do worke after diuerse fashions in the hearers conceits, I will fet them all foorth by a triple diuision, exempting the generall Similitude as their common Aunceflour, and I will cal him by the name of Refemblance without any addition, from which I deriue three other forts: and I giue euey one his particular name, as Refemblance by Pourtrait or Imagery, which the Greeks call Icon, Refemblance morall or misticall, which they call Parabola, and Refemblance by example, which they call Paradigma, and first we will speake of the generall refemblance, or bare similitude, which may be thus spoken.

*But as the watrie showres delay the raging wind, [mind.
So doeth good hope cleane put away dispaire out of my*

And in this other likening the forlorne louer to a striken deere.

*Then as the striken deere, withdrawes himselfe alone,
So do I seeke some secreet place, where I may make my mone.*

And in this of ours where we liken glory to a shadow.

*As the shadow ( his nature beyng such, ) Followeth the body, vvhether it vvill or no,
So doeth glory, refuse it nere so much,
Wait on vertue, be it in vveale or vvo.
And euen as the shadow in his kind,
What time it beares the carkas company,
Goth oft before, and often comes behind :
So doth renoume, that raiseth vs so hye,
Come to vs quicke, sometime not till vve dye.
But the glory, that growth not ouer fast,
Is euer great, and likeliest long to last.*

Againe in a ditty to a mistresse of ours, where we likened the cure of Loue to Achilles launce.

*The launce so bright, that made Telephus vvound,
The same rusty, salued the fore againe,
So may my meede ( Madame ) of you redownd,
Whose rigour vvas first authour of my paine.*

The Tuskan poet vseth this Refemblance, inuring as well by Diffimilitude as Similitude, likening himselfe (by Implication) to the flie, and neither to the eagle nor to the owle: very well Englished by Sir Thomas Wiat after his fashion, and by my selfe thus:

*There be some fowles of sight so proud and starke,
As can behold the sunne, and neuer shrinke,
Some so feeble, as they are faine to vwinke,
Or neuer come abroad till it be darke:
Others there be so simple, as they thinke,
Because it shines, to sport them in the fire,
And feele vnware, the wrong of their desire,
Fluttring amidst the flame that doth them burne,
Of this last ranke (alas) am I aright,
For in my ladies lookes to stand or turne
I haue no pover, ne find place to retire,
Where any darke may shade me from her sight
But to her beames so bright whilst I aspire,
I perish by the bane of my delight.*

Againe in these likening a wife man to the true louer.

*As true loue is content with his enioy,
And asketh no witnesse nor no record,
And as faint loue is euermore most coy,
To boast and brag his troth at euery vword:
Euen so the wise vwithouten other meede:
Contents him with the guilt of his good deede.*

And in this resembling the learning of an euill man to the feedes sown in barren ground.

*As the good feedes sown in frutefull foyle,
Bring forth foyson when barren doeth them spoile:
So doeth it fare when much good learning hits,
Vpon shrewde willes and ill disposed wits.*

And in these likening the wife man to an idiot.

*A sage man said, many of those that come
To Athens schoole for wisdome, ere they went
They first seem'd wise, then louers of wisdome,
Then Orators, then idiots, which is meant That in wisdome all such as profite most,
Are least furlie, and little apt to boast.*

Againe, for a louer, whose credit vpon some report had bene shaken, he prayeth better opinion by similitude.

After ill crop the foyle must eft be sown,

*And fro shipwracke we fayle to seas againe,
Then God forbid whose fault hath once bene knowen,
Should for euer a spotted wight remaine.*

And in this working by resemblance in a kinde of dissimilitude betweene a father and a master.

*It fares not by fathers as by masters it doeth fare,
For a foolish father may get a wise sonne,
But of a foolish master it haps very rare
Is bread a wise seruant where euer he wonne.*

And in these, likening the wise man to the Giant, the foole to the Dwarfe.

*Set the Giant deepe in a dale, the dwarfe vpon an hill, Yet will the one be but a dwarfe, th'other a giant still.
So will the wise be great and high, euen in the lowest place:
The foole when he is most aloft, will seeme but low and base.*

Icon. But when we liken an humane person to
OR
 Resemblance another in countenance, stature, speech by imagerie. or other qualitie, it is not called bare resemblance, but resemblance by imagerie or pourtrait, alluding to the painters terme, who yeldeth to th'eye a visible representation of the thing he describes and painteth in his table. So we commending her Maiestie for wisdom bewtie and magnanimitie likened her to the Serpent, the Lion and the Angell, because by common vsurpation, nothing is wiser then the Serpent, more couragious then the Lion, more bewtiful then the Angell. These are our verses in the end of the seuenth Partheniade.

*Nature that seldome vvorkes amisse,
In vvomans brest by passing art:
Hath lodged safe the Lyons hart,
And featly fixt vvith all good grace,
To Serpents head an Angels face.*

And this maner of resemblance is not onely performed by likening of liuely creatures one to another, but also of any other naturall thing, bearing a proportion of similitude, as to liken yealow to gold, white to filuer, red to the rose, soft to filke, hard to the stone and such like. Sir Philip Sidney in the description of his mistresse excellently well handled this figure of resemblance by imagerie, as ye may see in his booke of Archadia: and ye may see the like, of our doings, in a Partheniade written of our soueraigne Lady, wherein we resemble euery part of her body to some naturall thing of excellent perfection in his kind, as of her forehead, browes and hair, thus.

Her browes two bowes of hebenie,
Her tresses trust were to behold
Frized and fine as fringe of gold.*

And of her lips.

*Two lips wrought out of rubie rocke,
Like leaues to shut and to vnlock.
As portall dore in Princes chamber:
A golden tongue in mouth of amber.*

And of her eyes.

*Her eyes God wot what stufte they are,
I durst be sworne each is a starre:
As cleere and bright as woont to guide
The Pylot in his vvinter tide.*

And of her breasts.

*Her bosome sleake as Paris plaster,
Helde vp two balles of alabaster,
Eche byas was a little cherrie:
Or els I thinke a strawberie.*

And all the rest that followeth, which may suffice to exemplifie your figure of Icon, or resemblance by imagerie and portrait.

But whensoever by your similitude ye will seeme to teach any moralitie or good lesson by speeches mysticall and darke, or farre fette, vnder a sence metaphoricall applying one naturall thing to another, or one case to another, inferring by them a like consequence in other cases the Greekes call it Parabola, which terme is also by custome accepted of vs: neuertheless we may call him in English the resemblance mysticall: as when we liken a young childe to a greene twigge which ye may

OR Resemblance
misticall

easlie bende euery way ye list: or an old man who laboureth with continuall infirmities, to a drie and drickie oke. Such parables were all the preachings of Christ in the Gospell, as those of the wise and foolish virgins, of the euil steward, of the labourers in the vineyard, and a number more. And they may be fayned aswell as true: as those fables of *Æsop*e, and other apologies inuented for doctrine sake by wise and graue men.

Finally, if in matter of counsell or perswasion we Paradigma, will seeme to liken one case to another, OR a resemblance
by example. such as passe ordinarily in mans affaires, and doe compare the past with the present, gathering probabilitie of like successe to come in the things wee haue presently in hand: or if ye will draw the iudgements precedent and authorized by antiquitie as veritable, and peradventure fayned and imagined for some purpose, into similitude or dissimilitude with our present actions and affaires, it is called resemblance by example: as if one should say thus, Alexander the great in his expedition to Asia did thus, so did Hanniball comming into Spaine, so did Cæsar in Egypt, therefore all great Captains and Generals ought to doe it.

And consulting vpon the affaires of the low countreis at this day, peradventure her Maiestie might be thus aduised: The Flemings are a people very vnthankfull and mutable, and rebellious against their Princes, for they did rise against Maximilian Archduke of Austria, who had married the daughter and heire of the house of Burgundie, and tooke him prisoner, till by the Emperour Frederike the third his father, he was set at libertie. They rebelled against Charles the fifth Emperour, their naturall Prince. They haue falsed their faith to his sonne Philip king of Spaine their foueraign Lord: and since to Archduke Matthias, whom they elected for their gouernor, after to their adopted Lord Monsieur of Fraunce, Duke of Aniou: I pray you what likelihood is there they should be more assured to the Queene of England, than they haue bene to all these princes and gouernors, longer than their distresse continueth, and is to be relieued by her goodnes and puiffance.

[PASSAGE SUBSTITUTED FOR THE ABOVE, IN SOME COPIES.

And thus againe, It hath bene alwayes vsuall among great and magnanimous princes in all ages, not only to repulse any iniury and inuasion from their owne realmes and dominions, but also with a charitable and Princely compassion to defend their good neighbors Princes and Potentats, from all oppression of tyrants and vsurpers. So did the Romaines by their armes restore many Kings of Asia and Affricke expulged out of their kingdoms. So did K. Edward I. reestablish Baliol rightfull owner of the crowne of Scotland against Robert le brus no lawfull King. So did king Edward the third aide Dampeter king of Spaine against Henry bastard and vsurper. So haue many English Princes holpen with their forces the poore Dukes of Britaine their ancient friends and allies, against the outrages of the French kings: and why may not the Queene our foueraine Lady with like honor and godly zeale yeld protection to the people of the Low countries, her neereft neighbours to rescue them a free people from the Spanish feruitude.]

And as this resemblance is of one mans action to another, so may it be made by examples of brute beastes, aptly corresponding in qualitie or euent, as one that wrote certaine prety verses of the Emperor Maximinus, to warne him that he should not glory too much in his owne strength, for so he did in very deede, and would take any common fouldier to taske at wrastring, or weapon, or in any other actiuitie and feates of armes, which was by the wiser fort misliked, these were the verses.

*The Elephant is strong, yet death doeth it subdue,
The bull is strong, yet cannot death eschue.*

*The Lion strong, and slaine for all his strength:
The Tygar strong, yet kilde is at the length.
Dread thou many, that dreatest not any one,
Many can kill, that cannot kill alone.*

And so it fell out, for Maximinus was slaine in a mutinie of his souldiers, taking no warning by these examples written for his admonition.

*CHAP. XX.

The last and principall figure of our poetick Ornament.

Exargasia,
The Gorgious.

Or the glorious lustre it setteth vpon our speech and language, the Greeks call it (Exargasia) the Latine (Expolitio) a terme transferred from these polishers of marble or porphirite, who after it is rough hewen and reduced to that fashion they will, fet vpon it a goodly glasse, so smoth and cleere, as ye may see your face in it, or otherwise as it fareth by the bare and naked body, which being attired in rich and gorgious apparell, seemeth to the common vsage of th'eye much more comely and bewtifull then the naturall. So doth this figure (which therefore I call the Gorgious) polish our speech and as it were attire it with copious and pleasant amplifications and much varietie of sentences, all running vpon one point and one intent: so as I doubt whether I may terme it a figure, or rather a masse of many figuratiue speaches, applied to the bewtifying of our tale or argument. In a worke of ours intituled Philocalia we haue strained to shew the vse and application of this figure and al others mentioned in this booke, to which we referre you. I finde none example [in English meetre] that euer I could see, so well maintayning this figure in English meetre as that ditty of her Maieslies owne making passing sweete and harmonicall, which figure beyng as his very originall name purporteth the most bewtifull [and gorgious] of all others, it asketh in reason to be referued for a laft complement, and desciphred by the arte of a ladies penne, her selfe beyng the most gorgious and bewtifull, or rather bewtie of Queenes: and this was th'actiō [the occasion], our foueraigne Lady perceiuing how by the Sc. Q. residence within this Realme at so great libertie and ease, as were skarce worthy of [meete for] so great and dangerous a prysoner, bred secret factiōs among her people, and made many of her [the] nobilitie incline to fauour her partie: many [some] of them desirous of innouation in the state: some of them [others] aspiring to greater fortunes by her libertie and life. The Queene our foueraigne Lady to declare that she was nothing ignorant in [of] those secret fauours [practizes], though she had long with great wisdom and pacience dissembled it, writeth this ditty most sweet and sententious, not hiding from all such aspiring minds the daunger of their ambition and disloyaltie, which afterward fell out most truly by th'exemplary chastisement of sundry persons, who in fauour of the said Sc. Q. . derogating [declining] from her Maiestie, sought to interrupt the quiet of the Realme by many euill and vndutifull practizes. The ditty is as followeth.

And wit me warnes to shun such snares as threaten mine annoy.*

*For falshood now doth flow, and subiect faith doth ebbe,
Which would not be, if reason rul'd or wisdom weu'd the webbe.*

*But cloudes of tois vntried, do cloake aspiring mindes,
Which turne to raigne of late repent, by course of changed windes.*

*The topp'e of hope supposed, the roote of ruth vvil be,
And frutelesse all their graffed guiles, as shortly ye shall see.
Then dazeld eyes vwith pride, vvhich great ambition blinds, Shalbe vnseeld by vworthy wights, vvhose foresight falshood finds,*

The daughter of debate, that eke discord doth forue Shal reap no gaine where formor rule hath taught stil peace to growe.

*No forreine bannisht vright shall ancre in this port,
Our realme it brookes no strangers force, let them elſewhere reſort.*

*Our rusty ſworde vvith reſt, ſhall firſt his edge employ,
To polle their toppes that ſeeke, ſuch change and gape for ioy.*

In a worke of ours entituled [Philo Calia] where we entreat of the loues betwene prince Philo and Lady Calia, in their mutual letters, meſſages, and ſpeeches: we haue ſtrained our muſe to ſhew the uſe and application of this figure, and of all others.

CHAP. XXI.

Of the vices or deformities in ſpeech and vvriting principally noted by auncient Poets.

T hath bene ſaid before how by ignorance of the maker a good figure may become a vice, and by his good diſcretion, a vicious ſpeech go for a vertue in the Poeticall ſcience. This ſaying is to be explained and qualified, for ſome maner of ſpeeches are alwayes intollerable and ſuch as cannot be vſed with any decencie, but are euer vndecent namely barbarouſneſſe, incongruitie, ill diſpoſition, fond affectation, ruſticitie, and all extreme darkneſſe, ſuch as it is not poſſible for a man to vnderſtand the matter without an interpretour, all which partes are generally to be baniſhed out of euery language, vnleſſe it may appeare that the maker or Poet do it for the nonce, as it was reported by the Philoſopher Heracitus that he wrote in obſcure and darke termes of purpoſe not to be vnderſtood, whence he merited the nickname Scotinus, otherwiſe I ſee not but the reſt of the common faultes may be borne with ſometimes, or paſſe without any great reproofe, not being vſed ouermuch or out of ſeaſon as I ſaid before: ſo as euery ſurpluſage or prepoſterous placing or vndue iteration or darke word, or doubtfull ſpeech are not ſo narrowly to be looked vpon in a large poeme, nor ſpecially in the pretie Poefies and deuifes of Ladies, and Gentlewomen makers, whom we would not haue too precise Poets least with their shrewd wits, when they were married they might become a little too phantasticall wiues, neuertheless because we seem to promise an arte, which doth not iustly admit any wilful error in the teacher, and to th'end we may not be carped at by these methodicall men, that we haue omitted any necessary point in this businesse to be regarded, I will speake somewhat touching these viciosities of language particularly and briefly, leauing no little to the Grammarians for maintenaunce of the scholasticall warre, and altercations: we for our part condescending in this deuise of ours, to the appetite of Princely personages and other so tender and queisie complexions in Court, as are annoyed with nothing more then long lessons and ouermuch good order.

CHAP. XXII.

Some vices in speeches and writing are alwayes intollerable, some others now and then borne vwithall by licence of approved authors and custome.

He foulest vice in language is to speake barbarously: this terme grew by the great pride of the Greekes and Latines, when they were dominatours of the world reckoning no language so sweete and ciuill as their owne, and that all nations beside them selues were rude and vnciuill, which they called barbarous: So as when any straunge word not of the naturall Greeke or Latin was spoken, in the old time they called it barbarisme, or when any of their owne naturall wordes were founded and pronounced with straunge and ill shapen accents, or written by wrong ortographie, as he that would say with vs in England, a doufand for a thousand, isterday, for yesterday, as commonly the Dutch and French people do, they said it was barbarously spoken. The Italian at this day by like arrogance calleth the Frenchman, Spaniard, Dutch, English, and all other breed behither their mountaines Appennines, Tramontani, as who would say Barbarous. This terme being then so vsed by the auncient Greekes, there haue bene since, notwithstanding who haue digged for the Etimologie somewhat deeper, and many of them haue said that it was spoken by the rude and barking language of the Affricans now called Barbarians, who had great trafficke with the Greekes and Romanes, but that can not be so, for that part of Affricke hath but of late receiued the name of Barbarie, and some others rather thinke that of this word Barbarous, that countrey came to be called Barbaria and but few yeares in respect agone. Others among whom is Ihan Leon a Moore of Granada, will seeme to deriue Barbaria, from this word Bar, twise iterated thus Barbar, as much to say as flye, flye, which chaunced in a persecution of the Arabians by some seditious Mahometanes in the time of their Pontif. Habdul mumi, when they were had in the chafe, and driuen out of Arabia Westward into the countreys of Mauritania, and during the pursuite cried one vpon another flye away, flye away, or passe passe, by which occasion they say, when the Arabians which were had in chafe came to slay and fettle them selues in that part of Affrica, they called it Barbar, as much to say, the region of their flight or pursuite. Thus much for the terme, though not greatly pertinent to the matter, yet not vnpleasant to knowe for them that delight in such niceties.

Your next intollerable vice is solecismus or incongruitie, as when we speake false English, Solecismus. that is by misusing the Grammaticall rules
or Incongruitie. to be obserued in cases, genders, tenfes and such like, euery poore scholler knowes the fault, and cals it the breaking of Priscians head, for he was among the Latines a principall Grammarian.

Ye haue another intollerable ill maner of speach, Cacozelia. which by the Greekes originall we may
or
Fonde affectation. call fonde affectation, and is when we affect new words and phrascs other then the good speakers and writers in any language, or then custome hath allowed, and is the common fault of young schollers not halfe so well studied before they come from the Vniuersitie or schooles, and when they come to their friends, or happen to get some benefice or other promotion in their countreys, will seeme to coigne fine wordes out of the Latin, and to vse new fangled speaches, thereby to shew themselues among the ignorant the better learned.

Another of your intollerable vices is that which the Greekes call Soraismus, and we may call the [mingle mangle] as when we make our speach or writings of sundry languages vsing some Italian word, or French, or Spanish, or Dutch, or Scottish, not for the nonce or for any purpose (which were in part excusable) but ignorantly and affectedly as one that said vsing this French word Roy, to make ryme with another verse, thus.

O mightie Lord of loue, dame Venus onely ioy,

Whose Princely pouer exceedes ech other heauenly roy.

The verse is good but the terme peeuisly affected.

Another of reasonable good facilitie in translation finding certaine of the hymnes of Pyndarus and of Anacreons odes, and other Lirickes among the Greekes very well translated by Rounfard the French Poet, and applied to the honour of a great Prince in France, comes our minion and translates the same out of French into English, and applieth them to the honour of a great noble man in England (wherein I commend his reuerent minde and duetie) but doth so impudently robbe the French Poet both of his prayse and also of his French termes, that I cannot so much pitie him as be angry with him for his iniurious dealing (our sayd maker not being ashamed to vse these French wordes freddon, egar, superbous, filanding, celest, calabrois, thebanois and a number of others, for English wordes, which haue no maner of conformitie with our language either by custome or deriuation which may make them tollerable. And in the end (which is worst of all) makes his vaunt that neuer English finger but his hath toucht Pindars string which was neuerthelesse word by word as Rounfard had said before by like braggery. These be his verses.

Whereas the French word is enfante as much to say borne as a child, in another verse he saith.

I will freddon in thine honour.

For I will shake or quiuer my fingers, for so in French is freddon, and in another verse.

*But if I will thus like pindar,
In many discourfes egar.*

This word egar is as much to say as to wander or stray out of the way, which in our English is not receiued, nor these wordes calabrois, thebanois, but rather calabrian, theban [filanding sisters] for the spinning sisters: this man deserues to be endited of pety larceny for pilfering other mens deuises from them and conuerting them to his owne vse, for in deede as I would wish euery inuentour which is the very Poet to receaue the prayfes of his inuention, so would I not haue a translation to be ashamed to be acknoven of his translation.

Another of your intollerable vices is ill disposition or placing of your words in a clause or sentence: as when you will place your adiec̄tiue after your substantiue, thus: Mayde faire, vidouu riche, priest holy, and such like, which though the Latines did admit, yet our English did not, as one that said ridiculoufly.

In my yeares lustie, many a deed doughtie did I.

All these remembred faults be intollerable and euer vndecent.

Now haue ye other vicious manners of speech, but sometimes and in some cafes tollerable, and chiefly to the intent to mooue laughter, and to make sport, or to giue it some prety strange grace, and is when we vse such wordes as may be drawn to a foule and vnshamefast fence, as one that would say to a young woman, I pray you let me iape with Cacemphaton.

speech.

you, which in deed is no more but let me sport with you. Yea and though it were not altogether so directly spoken, the very founding of the word were not commendable, as he that in the presence of Ladies would use this common Prouerbe,

*Iape vvith me but hurt me not,
Bourde vvith me but shame me not.*

For it may be taken in another peruerfer fence by that sorte of persons that heare it, in whose eares no such matter ought almost to be called in memory, this vice is called by the Greekes Cacemphaton, we call it the vnshamefast or figure of foule speech, which our courtly maker shall in any case shunne, least of a Poet he become a Buffon or rayling companion, the Latines called him Scurra. There is also another sort of ill-fauoured speech subiect to this vice, but resting more in the manner of the ilshapen sound and accent, than for the matter it selfe, which may easily be auoyded in choosing your wordes those that bee of the pleasantest orthography, and not to rime too many like founding words together.

Ye haue another manner of composing your metre nothing commendable, specially if it be too much used, and is when our maker takes too much delight to fill his verse with wordes beginning all with a letter, as an English rimer that said :

Do daily drench my due defartes.*

And as the Monke we spake of before, wrote a whole Poeme to the honor of Carolus Caluus, euery word in his verse beginning with C, thus :

Carmina clarifonæ Caluis cantate camenæ.

Many of our English makers use it too much, yet we confesse it doth not ill but pretily becomes the meetre, if ye passe not two or three words in one verse, and use it not very much, as he that said by way of Epithete.

The smoakie sighes : the trickling teares.

And such like, for such composition makes the meetre runne away smoother, and passeth from the lippes with more facilitie by iteration of a letter then by alteration, which alteration of a letter requires an exchange of miniftery and office in the lippes, teeth or palate, and so doth not the iteration.

Histeron, pro-
teron.
or the
Preposterous. Your misplacing and preposterous placing is not all one in behaiour of language, for the misplacing is alwaies intollerable, but the preposterous is a pardonable fault, and many times giues a pretie grace vnto the speech. We call it by a common saying to set the carte before the horse, and it may be done, eyther by a fingle word or by a claufe of speech: by a fingle word thus:

And if I not performe, God let me neuer thriue.

For performe not: and this vice is sometime tollerable inough, but if the word carry away notable fence, it is a vice not tollerable, as he that said praising a woman for her red lippes, thus:

A corral lippe of hew.

Which is no good speech, because either he should haue sayd no more but a corral lip, which had bene inough to declare the rednesse, or els he should haue said, a lip of corral hew, and not a corral lip of hew. Now if this disorder be in a whole claufe which carieth more sentence then a word, it is then worst of all.

Acyron,
or the
Vncouth. Ye haue another vicious speech which the Greekes call Acyron, we call it the vncouth, and is when we vse an obscure and darke word, and vtterly repugnant to that we would expresse, if it be not by vertue of the figures metaphore, allegorie, abusio, or such other laudable figure before remembred, as he that said by way of Epithete.

A dongeon deepe, a dampe as darke as hell.

Where it is euident that a dampe being but a breath or vapour, and not to be discerned by the eye, ought not to haue this epithete (darke), no more then another that praying his mistresse for her bewtiful haire, said very improperly and with a vncouth terme.

*Her haire furmounts Apollos pride,
In it such beauty raignes.*

Whereas this word raigne is ill applied to the bewtie of a womans haire, and might better haue bene spoken of her whole perfon, in which bewtie, fauour and good grace, may perhaps in some fort be said to raigne as our felues wrate, in a Partheniade praising her Maiesties countenance, thus :

A cheare vwhere loue and Maiestie do raigne, Both milde and sterne, &c.

Because this word Maiestie is a word expressing a certaine Soueraigne dignitie, as well as a quallitie of countenance, and therefore may properly be said to raigne, and requires no meaner a word to set him forth by. So it is not of the bewtie that remains in a womans haire, or in her hand or in any other member : therefore when ye see all these improper or harde Epithets vsed, ye may put them in the number of [vncouths] as one that said, the fouds of graces : I haue heard of the fouds of teares, and the fouds of eloquence, or of any thing that may resemble the nature of a water-courfe, and in that respect we say also, the streames of teares, and the streames of vtterance, but not the streames of graces, or of beautie. Such manner of vncouth speech did the Tanner of Tamworth vse to king Edward the fourth, which Tanner hauing a great while mistaken him, and vsed very broad talke with him, at length perceiuing by his traine that it was the king, was afraide he should be punished for it, said thus with a certaine rude repentance.

I hope I shall be hanged to morrow.

For [I feare me] I shall be hanged, wherewith the king laughed a good, not only to see the Tanners vaine feare, but also to heare his ill shapen terme, and gaue him for recompence of his good sport, the inheritance of Plumton parke, I am afraid the Poets of our time that speake more finely and correctedly will come too short of such a reward.

Also the Poet or makers speech becomes vicious

The vice of Surplusage. and vnpleasant by nothing more than by vſing too much furpluſage: and this lieth not only in a word or two more than ordinary, but in whole clauſes, and peraduenture large ſentences im-pertinently ſpoken, or with more labour and curioſitie than is requiſite. The firſt furpluſage the Greekes call Pleonafmus, I call him [too full ſpeech] and is no great fault, as if one ſhould ſay, I heard it with mine eares, and ſaw it with mine eyes, as if a man could heare with his heeles, or ſee with his noſe. We our ſelues vſed this ſuperfluous ſpeech in a verſe written of our miſtreſſe, neuertheles, not much to be miſliked, for euen a vice ſometime being ſeaſonably vſed, hath a pretie grace.

Pleonasmus,
or
Too full ſpeech

*For euer may my true loue liue and neuer die
And that mine eyes may ſee her crownde a Queene.*

As, if ſhe liued euer. ſhe could euer die, or that one might ſee her crowned without his eyes.

Another part of furpluſage is called Macrologia, or Macrologia,
or Long language

long language, when we vſe large clauſes or ſentences more than is requiſite to the matter: it is alſo named by the Greeks Periſſologia, as he that ſaid, the Ambaſſadours after they had receiued this anſwere at the kings hands, they tooke their leaue and returned home into their countrey from whence they came.

So ſaid another of our rimers, meaning to ſhew the great annoy and difficultie of thoſe warres of Troy, cauſed for Helenas ſake.

*Nor Menelaus vvas vnwiſe,
Or troupe of Troians mad,
When he vwith them and they vwith him,
For her ſuch combat had.*

Theſe clauſes (he vwith them and they vwith him) are furpluſage, and one of them very impertinent, becauſe it could not otherwiſe be intended, but that Menelaus, fighting with the Troians, the Troians must of necessitie fight with him.

Another point of surplufage lieth not so much in superfluitie of your words, as of your trauaile to describe the matter which yee take in hand, and that ye ouerlabour your selfe in your bufinesse. And therefore the Greekes call it Periergia, we call it ouerlabor, iumpe with the originall: or rather [the curious] for his ouermuch curiositie and studie to shew himselfe fine in a light matter, as one of our late makers who in the most of his things wrote very well, in this (to mine opinion) more curiously than needed, the matter being ripely considered: yet is his verse very good, and his meetre cleanly. His intent was to declare how vpon the tenth day of March he crossed the riuer of Thames, to walke in Saint Georges field, the matter was not great as ye may suppose.

Periergia,
or Ouer labour, otherwise called the curious.

*The tenth of March when Aries receiued
Dan Phæbus raies into his horned head,
And I my selfe by learned lore perceiued
That Ver approcht and frosty winter fled
I crost the Thames to take the cheerefull aire,
In open fields, the vweather was so faire.*

First, the whole matter is not worth all this solemne circumstance to describe the tenth day of March, but if he had left at the two first verses, it had bene inough. But when he comes with two other verses to enlarge his description, it is not only more than needes, but also very ridiculous, for he makes wise, as if he had not bene a man learned in some of the mathematickes (by learned lore) that he could not haue told that the x. of March had fallen in the spring of the yeare: which euery carter, and also euery child knoweth without any learning. Then also, when he saith [Ver approcht, and frosty winter fled] though it were a surplufage (because one season must needes geue place to the other) yet doeth it well inough passe without blame in the maker. These, and a hundred more of such faultie and impertinent speeches may yee finde amongst vs vulgar Poets, when we be carelesse of our doings.

It is no small fault in a maker to vse such wordes and termes as do diminish and abbase the matter he would seeme to set forth, by Tapinosis, imparing the dignitie, height vigour or or the maiestie of the cause he takes in hand, as one that Abbaser. would say king Philip shrewdly harmed the towne of S. Quintaines, when in deede he wanne it and put it to the sacke, and that king Henry the eight made spoiles in Turwin, when as in deede he did more then spoile it, for he caused it to be defaced and razed flat to the earth, and made it inhabitable. Therefore the historiographer that should by such wordes report of these two kings gestes in that behalfe, should greatly blemish the honour of their doings and almost speake vntruly and iniuriously by way of abbasement, as another of our bad rymers that very indecently said.

A lewd terme to be giuen to a Princes treasure (pelfe) and was a little more manerly spoken by Seriant Bendlowes, when in a progresse time comming to salute the Queene in Huntingtonshire he said to her Cochman, slay thy cart good fellow, slay thy cart, that I may speake to the Queene, wherent her Maiestie laughed as she had bene tickled, and all the rest of the company although very graciously (as her manner is) she gaue him great thanks and her hand to kisse. These and such other base wordes do greatly disgrace the thing and the speaker or writer: the Greekes call it [Tapinosis] we the [abbaser.]

Bomphiologia, Others there be that fall into the contrary or vice by vsing such bombasted wordes, as Pompious seeme altogether farced full of winde, being speech. a great deale to high and loftie for the matter, whereof ye may finde too many in all popular rymers.

Then haue ye one other vicious speach with which we will finish this Chapter, and is when we speake or write doubtfully and that the fence may be taken two wayes, such ambiguous termes they call Amphibologia, we call it the ambiguous, or figure of fence incertaine, as if one should say Thomas Tayler saw William Tyler dronke, it is indifferent to thinke either th'one or th'other dronke. Thus said a gentleman in our vulgar pretily notwithstanding because he did it not ignorantly, but for the nonce.

Amphibologia
Ambiguous.

*I sat by my Lady foundly sleeping,
My mistresse lay by me bitterly weeping.*

No man can tell by this, whether the mistresse or the man, slept or wept: these doubtfull speaches were vsed much in the old times by their false Prophets as appeareth by the Oracles of Delphos and of the Sybilles prophecies deuised by the religious persons of those dayes to abuse the superstitious people, and to encomber their busie braynes with vaine hope or vaine feare.

Lucianus the merry Greeke reciteth a great number of them, deuised by a coofening companion one Alexander, to get himselfe the name and reputation of the God Æsculapius, and in effect all our old Brittish and Saxon prophecies be of the same fort, that turne them on which side ye will, the matter of them may be verified, neuerthelesse carryeth generally such force in the heades of fonde people, that by the comfort of those blind prophecies many insurrections and rebellions haue bene stirred vp in this Realme, as that of Iacke Straw, and Iacke Cade in Richard the seconds time, and in our time by a seditious fellow in Norffolke calling himselfe Captaine Ket and others in other places of the Realme lead altogether by certaine propheticall rymes, which might be constred two or three wayes as well as to that one whereunto the rebelles applied it, our maker shall therefore auoyde all such ambiguous speaches vnlesse it be when he doth it for the nonce and for some purpose.

CHAP. XXIII.

What it is that generally makes our speech well pleasing and commendable, and of that which the Latines call Decorum.

IN all things to use decencie, is it onely that giueth euery thing his good grace and without which nothing in mans speech could seeme good or gracious, in so much as many times it makes a bewtiful figure fall into a deformitie, and on th'other side a vicious speech seeme pleasaunt and bewtiful: this decencie is therefore the line and leuell for al good makers to do their busines by. But herein resteth the difficultie, to know what this good grace is, and wherein it consisteth, for peraduenture it be easier to conceaue then to expresse, we wil therefore examine it to the bottome and say: that euery thing which pleaseth the mind or senses, and the mind by the senses as by means instrumentall, doth it for some amiable point or qualitie that is in it, which draweth them to a good liking and contentment with their proper obiects. But that cannot be if they discover any illfauorednesse or disproportion to the partes apprehensiuē, as for example, when a sound is either too loude or too low or otherwise confuse, the eare is ill affected: so is th'eye if the colour be sad or not liminous and recreatiue, or the shape of a membred body without his due measures and simmetry, and the like of euery other sense in his proper function. These excesses or defectes or confusions and disorders in the sensible obiects are deformities and vnseemely to the sense. In like sort the mynde for the things that be his mentall obiects hath his good graces and his bad, whereof th'one contents him wonderous well, th'other displeaseth him continually, no more nor no lesse then ye see the discordes of musicke do to a well tuned eare. The Greekes call this good grace of euery thing in his kinde, το πρεπον, the Latines [decorum] we in our vulgar call it by a scholasticall terme [decencie] our owne Saxon English terme is [feemelyneffe] that is to say, for his good shape and vtter appearance well pleasing the eye, we call it also [comelyneffe] for the delight it bringeth comming towards vs, and to that purpose may be called [pleasant approche] so as euery way seeking to expresse this  $\pi\rho\epsilon\pi\tau\omicron\nu$  of the Greekes and decorum of the Latines, we are faine in our vulgar tounge to borrow the terme which our eye onely for his noble prerogatiue ouer all the rest of the fences doth vsurpe, and to apply the same to all good, comely, pleasant and honest things, euen to the spirituall obiectes of the mynde, which stand no lesse in the due proportion of reason and discourse than any other materiall thing doth in his sensible bewtie, proportion and comelyneffe.

Now because his comelyneffe resteth in the good conformitie of many things and their fundry circumstances, with respect one to another, so as there be found a iust correspondencie betweene them by this or that relation, the Greekes call it Analogie or a conuenient proportion. This louely conformitie, or proportion, or conueniencie betweene the fence and the sensible hath nature her selfe first most carefully obserued in all her owne workes, then also by kinde graft it in the appetites of euery creature working by intelligence to couet and desire: and in their actions to imitate and performe: and of man chiefly before any other creature aswell in his speeches as in euery other part of his behaiour. And this in generalitie and by an vsuall terme is that which the Latines call [decorum.] So albeit we before alleaged that all our figures be but transgressions of our dayly speech, yet if they fall out decently to the good liking of the mynde or eare and to the bewtifying of the matter or language, all is well, if indecently, and to the eares and myndes misliking (be the figure of it selfe neuer so commendable) all is amisse, the election is the writers, the iudgement is the worlds, as theirs to whom the reading apperteineth. But since the actions of man with their circumstances be infinite, and the world likewise replenished with many iudgements, it may be a question who shal haue the determination of such controuerfie as may arise whether this or that action or speech be decent or indecent: and verely it seemes to go all by discretion, not perchaunce of euery one, but by a learned and experienced discretion, for otherwise seemes the decorum to a weake and ignorant iudgement, then it doth to one of better knowledge and experience: which sheweth that it resteth in the discerning part of the minde, so as he who can make the best and most differences of things by reasonable and wittie distinction is to be the fittest iudge or sentencer of [decencie.] Such generally is the discreetest man, particularly in any art the most skilfull and discreetest, and in all other things for the more part those that be of much obseruation and greatest experience. The case then standing that discretion must chiefly guide all those businesse, since there be fundry fortes of discretion all vnlike, euen as there be men of action or art, I see no way so fit to enable a man truly to estimate of [decencie] as example, by whose veritie we may deeme the differences of things and their proportions, and by particular discussions come at length to sentence of it generally, and also in our behaiours the more easily to put it in execution. But by reason of the fundry circumstances, that mans affaires are as it were wrapt in, this [decencie] comes to be very much alterable and subiect to varietie, in[so]much as our speech asketh one maner of decencie, in respect of the person who speakes: another of his to whom it is spoken: another of whom we speake: another of what we speake, and in what place and time and to what purpose. And as it is of speech, so of al other our behaiours. We wil therefore set you down some few examples of euery circumstance how it alters the decencie of speech or action. And by these few shal ye be able to gather a number more to confirme and establish your iudgement by a perfit discretion.

This decencie, so farfoorth as apperteineth to the consideration of our art, resteth in writing, speech and behaiour. But because writing is no more then the image or character of speech, they shall goe together in these our obseruations. And first wee wil fort you out diuers points, in which the wise and learned men of times past haue noted much decency or vndecencie, euery man according to his discretion, as it hath bene said afore : but wherein for the most part all discrete men doe generally agree, and varie not in opinion, whereof the examples I will geue you be worthie of remembrance : and though they brought with them no doctrine or institution at all, yet for the solace they may geue the readers, after such a rable of scholastical precepts which be tedious, these reports being of the nature historicall, they are to be embraced : but olde memories are very profitable to the mind, and serue as a glasse to looke vpon and behold the euent of time, and more exactly to skan the trueth of euery case that shall happen in the affaires of man, and many there be that haply doe not obserue euery particularitie in matters of decencie or vndecencie : and yet when the case is tolde them by another man, they commonly geue the same sentence vpon it. But yet whofoeuer obserueth much, shalbe counted the wisest and discreetest man, and whofoeuer spends all his life in his owne vaine actions and conceits, and obserues no mans else, he shal in the end prooue but a simple man. In which respect it is alwaies said, one man of experience is wiser than tenne learned men, because of his long and studious obseruation and often triall.

And your decencies are of fundrie sorts, according to the many circumstances accompanying our writing, speech or behaiour, so as in the very found or voice of him that speaketh, there is a decencie that becometh, and an vndecencie that misbecommeth vs, which th'Emperor Anthonine marked well in the Orator Philifeus, who spake before him with so small and shrill a voice as the Emperor was greatly annoyed therewith, and to make him shorten his tale, said, by thy beard thou shouldst be a man, but by thy voice a woman.

Phauorinus the Philosopher was counted very wise and well learned, but a little too talkatiue and full of words: for the which Timocrates reprobued him in the hearing of one Polemon. That is no wonder quoth Polemon, for so be all women. And besides, Phauorinus being knowen for an Eunuke or gelded man, came by the same nippe to be noted as an effeminate and degenerate person.

And there is a measure to be vsed in a mans speech or tale, so as it be neither for shortnesse too darke, nor for length too tedious. Which made Cleomenes king of the Lacedemonians geue this vnpleasent answere to the Ambassadors of the Samiens, who had tolde him a long message from their Citie, and desired to know his pleasure in it. My maisters (saith he) the first part of your tale was so long, that I remember it not, which made that the second I vnderstoode not, and as for the third part I doe nothing well allow of. Great princes and graue counsellors who haue little spare leifure to hearken, would haue speeches vsed to them such as be short and sweete.

And if they be spoken by a man of account, or one who for his yeares, profession or dignitie should be thought wise and reuerend, his speeches and words should also be graue, pithie and sententious, which was well noted by king Antiochus, who likened Hermogenes the famous Orator of Greece, vnto these fowles in their moulting time, when their feathers be sick, and be so loose in the flesh that at any little rowse they can easilie shake them off: so saith he, can Hermogenes of all the men that euer I knew, as easilie deliuer from him his vaine and impertinent speeches and words.

And there is a decencie, that euery speech should be to the appetite and delight, or dignitie of the hearer and not for any respect arrogant or vndutifull, as was that of Alexander sent Embassadour from the Athenians to th'Emperour Marcus, this man seing th'emperour not so attentive to his tale, as he would haue had him, said by way of interruption, Cæsar I pray thee giue me better eare, it seemest thou knowest me not, nor from whom I came: the Emperour nothing well liking his bold malapert speech, said: thou art deceyued, for I heare thee and know well inough, that thou art that fine, foolish, curious, sawcie Alexander that tendest to nothing but to combe and cury thy haire, to pare thy nailes, to pick thy teeth, and to perfume thy selfe with sweet oyles, that no man may abide the sent of thee. Prowde speeches, and too much finesse and curiositie is not commendable in an Embassadour. And I haue knowen in my time such of them, as studied more vpon what apparell they should weare, and what countenances they should keepe at the times of their audience, then they did vpon th'effect of their errant or commission.

And there is decency in that euery man should talke of the things they haue best skill of, and not in that, their knowledge and learning serueth them not to do, as we are wont to say, he speaketh of Robin hood that neuer shot in his bow: there came a great Oratour before Cleomenes king of Lacedemonia, and vttered much matter to him touching fortitude and valiancie in the warres: the king laughed: why laughest thou quoth the learned man, since thou art a king thy selfe, and one whom fortitude best becommeth? why said Cleomenes would it not make any body laugh, to heare the swallow who feeds onely vpon flies, to boast of his great pray, and see the eagle stand by and say nothing? if thou wert a man of warre or euer hadst bene day of thy life, I would not laugh to here thee speake of valiancie, but neuer being so, and speaking before an old captaine I can not choose but laugh.

And some things and speeches are decent or indecent in respect of the time they be spoken or done in. As when a great clerk presented king Antiochus with a booke treating all of iustice, the king that time lying at the siege of a towne, who lookt vpon the title of the booke, and cast it to him againe : saying, what a diuell tellest thou to me of iustice, now thou seeest me vsf force and do the best I can to bereeue mine enimie of his towne? euery thing hath his season which is called Oportunitie, and the vnfitnesse or vndecency of the time is called Importunitie.

Sometime the vndecen[c]y ariseth by the indignitie of the word in respect of the speaker himselfe, as whan a daughter of Fraunce and next heyre generall to the crowne (if the law Salique had not barred her) being fet in a great chaufe by some harde words giuen her by another prince of the bloud, said in her anger, thou durst not haue said thus much to me if God had giuen me a paire of, etc. and told all out, meaning if God had made her a man and not a woman she had bene king of Fraunce. The word became not the greatnesse of her person, and much lesse her sex, whose chiefe vertue is shamefastnesse, which the Latines call Verecundia, that is a naturall feare to be noted with any impudicitie: so as when they heare or see any thing tending that way they commonly blush, and is a part greatly praised in all women.

Yet will ye see in many cafes how pleasant speeches and fauouring some skurrillity and vnshamefastnes haue now and then a certaine decencie, and well become both the speaker to say, and the hearer to abide, but that is by reason of some other circumstance, as when the speaker himselfe is knowne to be a common iester or buffon, such as take vpon them to make princes merry, or when some occasion is giuen by the hearer to induce such a pleasaunt speech, and in many other cafes whereof no generall rule can be giuen, but are best knowen by example: as when Sir Andrew Flamock king Henry the eights standerbearer, a merry conceyted man and apt to skoffe, waiting one day at the kings heeles when he enterd the parke at Greenwich, the king blew his horne, Flamock hauing his belly full, and his tayle at commaundement, gaue out a rappe nothing faintly, that the king turned him about and said how now firra? Flamock not well knowing how to excuse his vnmanerly act, if it please you Sir quoth he, your Maiesty blew one blast for the keeper and I another for his man. The king laughed hartily and tooke it nothing offensiue: for indeed as the case fell out it was not vndecently spoken by Sir Andrew Flamock, for it was the cleaneliest excuse he could make, and a merry implicatiue in termes nothing odious, and therefore a sporting satisfaction to the kings mind, in a matter which without some such merry answere could not haue bene well taken. So was Flamocks acting most vncomely, but his speech excellently well becomming the occasion.

But at another time and in another like case, the same skurrillitie of Flamock was more offensiue, because it was more indecent. As when the king hauing Flamock with him in his barge, passing from Westminster to Greenwich to visite a fayre Lady whom the king loued and was lodged in the tower of the Parke: the king comming within sight of the tower, and being disposed to be merry, said, Flamock let vs rime: as well as I can said Flamock if it please your grace. The king began thus:

*Within this towre,
There lieth a flowre,
That hath my hart.*

Flamock for aunswer: Within this hower, she will, etc. with the rest in so vncleanly termes, as might not now become me by the rule of Decorum to vtter writing to so great a Maiesty, but the king tooke them in so euill part, as he bid Flamock auant varlet, and that he should no more be so neere vnto him. And wherein I would faine learne, lay this vndecencie? in the skurrill and filthy termes not meete for a kings eare? perchance so. For the king was a wise and graue man, and though he hated not a faire woman, yet liked he nothing well to heare speches of ribaudrie: as they report of th'emperour Oclavian: Licet fuerit ipse incontinentissimus, fuit tamen incontinente seuerissimus vltor. But the very cause in deed was for that Flamocks reply answered not the kings expectation, for the kings rime commencing with a pleasant and amorous proposition: Sir Andrew Flamock to finish it not with loue but with lothfomnesse, by termes very rude and vnciuill, and feing the king greatly fauour that Ladie for her much beauty by like or some other good partes, by his fastidious aunswer to make her seeme odious to him, it helde a great disproportion to the kings appetite, for nothing is so vnpleasent to a man, as to be encountred in his chiefe affection, and specially in his loues, and whom we honour we should also reuerence their appetites, or at the least beare with them (not being wicked and vtterly euill) and whatfoeuer they do affect, we do not as becommeth vs if we make it seeme to them horrible. This in mine opinion was the chiefe cause of the vndecencie and also of the kings offence. Aristotle the great philosopher knowing this very well, what time he put Calistenes to king Alexander the greats seruice gaue him this lesson. Sirra quoth he, ye go now from a scholler to be a courtier, see ye speake to the king your maister, either nothing at all, or else that which pleaseth him, which rule if Calistenes had followed and forborne to crosse the kings appetite in diuerse speeches, it had not cost him so deeply as afterward it did. A like matter of offence fell out betweene th'Emperour Charles the fifth, and an Embassadour of king Henry the eight, whom I could name but will not for the great opinion the world had of his wisdom and sufficiency in that behalfe, and all for misusing of a terme. The king in the matter of controuersie betwixt him and Ladie Catherine of Castill the Emperours awnt, found himselfe grieued that the Emperour should take her part and worke vnder hand with the Pope to hinder the diuorce: and gaue his Embassadour commission in good termes to open his griefes to the Emperour, and to expostulat with his Maiestie, for that he seemed to forget the kings great kindnesse and friendship before times vsed with th'Emperour, aswell by disbursing for him sundry great summes of monie which were not all yet repayd: as also by furnishing him at his neede with flore of men and munition to his warres, and now to be thus vsed he thought it a very euill requitall. The Embassadour for too much animositie and more then needed in the case, or perchance by ignorance of the proprietie of the Spanish tongue, told the Emperour among other words, that he was Hombre el mas ingrato en el mundo, the ingratest person in the world to vse his maister so. The Emperour tooke him suddainly with the word, and said: callest thou me ingrato? I tell thee learne better termes, or else I will teach them thee. Th'Embassadour excused it by his commission, and said: they were the king his maisters words, and not his owne. Nay quoth th'Emperour, thy maister durst not haue sent me these words, were it not for that broad ditch betweene him and me, meaning the sea, which is hard to passe with an army of reuenge. The Embassadour was commanded away and no more hard by the Emperour, til by some other means afterward the grief was either pacified or forgotten, and all this inconuenience grew by misuse of one word, which being otherwise spoken and in some fort qualified, had easly holpen all, and yet the'Embassadour might sufficiently haue satisfied his commission and much better aduanced his purpose, as to haue said for this word [ye are ingrate,] ye haue not vsed such gratitude towards him as he hath deserued: so ye may see how a word spoken vndecently, not knowing the phraze or proprietie of a language, maketh a whole matter many times miscarrie. In which respect it is to be wished, that none Ambassadour speake his principall commandements but in his own language or in another as naturall to him as his owne, and so it is vsed in all places of the world sauing in England. The Princes and their commissioners fearing least otherwise they might vtter any thing to their disaduantage, or els to their disgrace: and I my selfe hauing seene the Courts of Fraunce, Spaine, Italie, and that of the Empire, with many inferior Courts, could neuer perceiue that the most noble peronages, though they knew very well how to speake many forraine languages, would at any times that they had bene spoken vnto, answere but in their owne, the Frenchman in French, the Spaniard in Spanish, the Italian in Italian, and the very Dutch Prince in the Dutch language: whether it were more for pride, or for feare of any lapse, I cannot tell. And Henrie Earle of Arundel being an old Courtier and a very prince'y man in all his actions, kept that rule alwaies. For on a time passing from England towards Italie by her maiesties licence, he was very honorably entertained at the Court of Bruffels, by the Lady Duches of Parma, Regent there: and sitting at a banquet with her, where also was the Prince of Orange, with all the greatest Princes of the state, the Earle, though he could reasonably well speake French, would not speake one French word, but all English, whether he asked any question, or answered it, but all was done by Truchemen. In so much as the Prince of Orange maruelling at it, looked a side on that part where I stood a beholder of the feast, and sayd, I maruell your Noblemen of England doe not desire to be better languaged in forraine languages. This word was by and by reported to the Earle. Quoth the Earle againe, tell my Lord the Prince, that I loue to speake in that language, in which I can best vtter my minde and not mistake.

Another Ambassadour vsed the like ouersight by ouerweening himselfe that he could naturally speake the French tongue, whereas in troth he was not skilfull in their termes. This Ambassadour being a Bohemian, sent from the Emperour to the French Court, where after his first audience, he was highly feasted and banqueted. On a time, among other, a great Princesse sitting at the table, by way of talke asked the Ambassadour whether the Empreffe his mistresse when she went a hunting, or otherwise trauailed abroad for her solace, did ride a horsback or goe in her coach. To which the Ambassadour answered vnwares and not knowing the French terme, Par ma foy elle cheuauche fort bien, et si en prend grand plaisir. She rides (faith he) very well, and takes great pleasure in it.

There was good smiling one vpon another of the Ladies and Lords, the Ambaffador wist not whereat, but laughed himfelfe for companie. This word Cheu-aucher in the French tongue hath a reprobate fence, fpecially being fpoken of a womans riding.

And as rude and vnciuill fpeaches carry a marueilous great indecencie, fo doe fometime thofe that be ouermuch affected and nice : or that doe fauour of ignorance or adulation, and be in the care of graue and wife perfon no leffe offenfue than the other : as when a futor in Rome came to Tiberius the Emperor and faid,
I would open my cafe to your Maieftie, if it were not to trouble your facred bufineffe, facras veftas occupa-tiones as the Historiographer reporteth. What meaneft thou by that terme quoth the Emperor, fay laboriofas
I pray thee, and fo thou maift truely fay, and bid him leau off fuch affected flattering termes.

The like vndecencie vfed a Herald at armes fent by Charles the fifth Emperor, to Fraunces the firft French king, bringing him a message of defiance, and thinking to qualifie the bitterneffe of his message with words pompous and magnificent for the kings honor, vfed much this terme (facred Maieftie) which was not vfually geuen to the French king, but to fay for the moft part [Sire] The French king neither liking of his errant, nor yet of his pompous fpeech, faid fomewhat fharpely,
I pray thee good fellow clawe me not where I itch not with thy facred maieftie, but goe to thy bufineffe, and tell thine errand in fuch termes as are decent betwixt enemies, for thy mafter is not my friend, and turned him to a Prince of the bloud who floode by, faying, me thinks this fellow fpeakes like Bifhop Nicholas, for on Saint Nicholas night commonly the Scholars of the Countrie make them a Bifhop, who like a foolifh boy, goeth about bleffing and preaching with fo childifh termes, as maketh the people laugh at his foolifh counterfaite fpeeches.

And yet in speaking or writing of a Princes affaires and fortunes there is a certaine Decorum, that we may not vse the same termes in their busines, as we might very wel doe in a meaner persons, the case being all one, such reuerence is due to their estates. As for example, if an Historiographer shal write of an Emperour or King, how such a day hee ioyned battel with his enimie, and being ouer-laide ranne out of the fielde, and tooke his heeles, or put spurre to his horse and fled as fast as hee could: the termes be not decent, but of a meane souldier or captaine, it were not vndecently spoken. And as one, who translating certaine bookes of Virgils Æneidos into English meetre, said that Æneas was fayne to trudge out of Troy: which terme became better to be spoken of a beggar, or of a rogue, or a lackey: for so wee vse to say to such maner of people, be trudging hence.

Another Englishing this word of Virgill [fato profugus] called Æneas [by fate a fugitiue] which was vndecently spoken, and not to the Authours intent in the same word: for whom he studied by all means to auauance aboue all other men of the world for vertue and magnanimitie, he meant not to make him a fugitiue. But by occasion of his great distresses, and of the hardnesse of his destinies, he would haue it appeare that Æneas was enforced to flie out of Troy, and for many yeeres to be a romer and a wandrer about the world both by land and sea [fato profugus] and neuer to find any resting place till he came into Italy, so as ye may euidently perceiue in this terme [fugitiue] a notable indignity offred to that princely person, and by th'other word (a wanderer) none indignitie at all, but rather a terme of much loue and commiseration. The same tranflatour when he came to these wordes: Insignem pietate virum, tot voluere casus tot adire labores compulit. Hee turned it thus, what moued Iuno to tugge so great a captaine as Æneas, which word tugge spoken in this case is so vndecent as none other coulde haue bene deuifed, and tooke his first originall from the cart, because it signifieth the pull or draught of the oxen or horses, and therefore the leathers that beare the chiefe stresse of the draught, the cartars call them tugges, and so wee vse to say that shrewd boyes tugge each other by the eares, for pull.

Another of our vulgar makers, spake as illfaringly in this verse written to the dispraise of a rich man and couetous. Thou hast a misers minde (thou hast a princes pelfe) a lewde terme to be spoken of a princes treasure, which in no respect nor for any cause is to be called pelfe, though it were neuer so meane, for pelfe is properly the scrappes or shreds of taylors and skinners, which are accompted of so vile price as they be commonly cast out of dores, or otherwise bestowed vpon base purposes: and carrieth not the like reason or decencie, as when we say in reproch of a niggard or vsurer, or worldly couetous man, that he setteth more by a little pelfe of the world, than by his credit or health, or conscience. For in comparison of these treasours, all the gold or siluer in the world may by a skornefull terme be called pelfe, and so ye see that the reason of the decencie holdeth not alike in both cases. Now let vs passe from these examples, to treat of those that concerne the comelineffe and decencie of mans behauiour.

And some speech may be whan it is spoken very vndecent, and yet the same hauing afterward somewhat added to it may become pretie and decent, as was the slowte worde vsed by a captaine in Fraunce, who sitting at the lower end of the Duke of Guyfes table among many, the day after there had bene a great battaile foughten, the Duke finding that this captaine was not seene that day to do any thing in the field, taxed him priuily thus in al the hearings. Where were you Sir the day of the battaile, for I saw ye not? the captaine answered promptly: where ye durst not haue bene: and the Duke began to kindle with the worde, which the Gentleman perceiuing, said spedily: I was that day among the carriages, where your excellencie would not for a thousand crownes haue bene seene. Thus from vndecent it came by a wittie reformation to be made decent againe.

The like hapned on a time at the Duke of Northumberlandes bord, where merry John Heywood was allowed to sit at the tables end. The Duke had a very noble and honorable mynde alwayes to pay his debts well, and when he lacked money, would not sticke to sell the greatest part of his plate: so had he done few dayes before. Heywood being loth to call for his drinke so oft as he was dry, turned his eye toward the cupbord and sayd I finde great misse of your graces standing cups: the Duke thinking he had spoken it of some knowledge that his plate was lately sold, said somewhat sharpely, why Sir will not those cuppes serue as good a man as your selfe. Heywood readily replied. Yes if it please your grace, but I would haue one of them stand still at myne elbow full of drinke that I might not be driuen to trouble your men so often to call for it. This pleafant and speedy reuers of the former wordes holpe all the matter againe, whereupon the Duke became very pleafaunt and dranke a bolle of wine to Heywood, and bid a cup should alwayes be standing by him.

It were to busie a peece of worke for me to tell you of all the parts of decencie and indecency which haue bene obserued in the speeches of man and in his writings, and this that I tell you is rather to solace your eares with pretie conceits after a sort of long scholasticall preceptes which may happen haue doubled them, rather then for any other purpose of institution or doctrine, which to any Courtier of experience, is not necessarie in this behalfe. And as they appeare by the former examples to rest in our speach and writing: so do the same by like proportion consist in the whole behaiour of man, and that which he doth well and commendably is euer decent, and the contrary vndecent, not in euery mans iudgement alwayes one, but after their seuerall discretion and by circumstance diuerfly, vs by the next Chapter shalbe shewed.

CHAP. XXIII.

Of decency in behaiour which also belongs to the consideration of the Poet or maker.

And there is a decency to be obserued in euery mans action and behaiour aswell as in his speach and writing which some peradventure would thinke impertinent to be treated of in this booke, where we do but informe the commendable fashions of language and stile: but that is otherwise, for the good maker or poet who is in decent speach and good termes to describe all things and with prayse or dispraise to report euery mans behaiour, ought to know the comelineffe of an action aswell as of a word and thereby to direct himselfe both in praise and perswasion or any other point that pertaines to the Oratours arte. Wherefore some examples we will fet downe of this maner of decency in behaiour leauing you for the rest to our booke which we haue written de Decoro, where ye shall see both partes handled more exactly. And this decencie of mans behaiour aswell as of his speach must also be deemed by discretion, in which regard the thing that may well become one man to do may not become another, and that which is seemely to be done in this place is not so seemely in that, and at such a time decent, but at another time vndecent, and in such a case and for such a purpose, and to this and that end and by this and that euent, perusing all the circumstances with like consideration. Therefore we say that it might become king Alexander to giue a hundreth talentes to Anaxagoras the Philosopher, but not for a beggerly Philosopher to accept so great a gift, for such a Prince could not be impouerished by that expence, but the Philosopher was by it excesssiuely to be enriched, so was the kings action proportionable to his estate and therefore decent, the Philosophers, disproportionable both to his profession and calling and therefore indecent.

And yet if we shall examine the same point with a clearer discretion, it may be said that whatsoever it might become king Alexander of his regal largesse to bestow vpon a poore Philosopher vnasked, that might aswell become the Philosopher to receiue at his hands without refusal, and had otherwise bene some enpeachment of the kings abilitie or wisedome, which had not bene decent in the Philosop[h]er, nor the immoderatnesse of the kinges gift in respect of the Philosophers meane estate made his acceptance the lesse decent, since Princes liberalities are not measured by merite nor by other mens estimations, but by their owne appetits and according to their greatnesse. So said king Alexander very like himselfe to one Perillus to whom he had geuen a very great gift, which he made curtesy to accept, saying it was too much for such a mean person, what quoth the king if it be too much for thy selfe, hast thou neuer a friend or kinsman that may fare the better by it? But peradventure if any such immoderat gift had bene craued by the Philosopher and not voluntarily offred by the king it had bene vndecent to haue taken it. Euen so if one that standeth vpon his merite, and spares to craue the Princes liberalitie in that which is moderate and fit for him, doth as vndecently. For men should not expect till the Prince remembred it of himselfe and began as it were the gratification, but ought to be put in remembrance by humble folicitations, and that is duetifull and decent, which made king Henry th'eight her Maiesties most noble father, and for liberality nothing inferiour to king Alexander the great, aunswere one of his priuie chamber, who prayd him to be good and gracious to a certaine old Knight being his seruant, for that he was but an ill begger, if he be ashamed to begge we wil thinke scorne to giue. And yet peradventure in both these cases, the vndecencie for too much crauing or sparing to craue, might be easily holpen by a decent magnificence in the Prince, as Amasis king of Ægypt very honorably considered, who asking one day for one

Diopithus a noble man of his Court, what was become of him for that he had not sene him wait of long time, one about the king told him that he heard fay he was sicke and of some conceit he had taken that his Maieslie had but slenderly looked to him, vsing many others very bountifully. I beshrew his fooles head quoth the king, why had he not sued vnto vs and made vs priuie of his want, then added, but in truth we are most to blame our selues, who by a mindeful beneficence without fute should haue supplied his bashfulnesse, and forthwith commaunded a great reward in money and pension to be sent vnto him, but it hapned that when the kings messengers entred the chamber of Diopithus, he had newly giuen vp the ghost: the messengers forrowed the case, and Diopithus friends fate by and wept, not so much for Diopithus death, as for pitie that he ouerliued not the comming of the kings reward. Therupon it came euer after to be vsed for a prouerbe that when any good turne commeth too late to be vsed, to cal it Diopithus reward.

In Italy and Fraunce I haue knowen it vsed for common pollicie, the Princes to differre the bestowing of their great liberalities as Cardinalships and other high dignities and offices of gayne, till the parties whom they should seeme to gratifie be so old or so sicke as it is not likely they should long enioy them.

In the time of Charles the ninth French king, I being at the Spaw waters, there lay a Marshall of Fraunce called Monsieur de Sipier, to vse those waters for his health, but when the Phisitions had all giuen him vp, and that there was no hope of life in him, came from the king to him a letters patents of six thousand crownes yearely pension during his life with many comfortable wordes: the man was not so much past remembraunce, but he could say to the messenger trop tard, trop tard, it should haue come before, for in deede it had bene promised long and came not till now that he could not fare the better by it.

And it became king Antiochus, better to bestow the faire Lady Stratonica his wife vpon his sonne Demetrius who lay sicke for her loue and would else haue perished, as the Physitions cunningly discouered by the beating of his pulse, then it could become Demetrius to be inamored with his fathers wife, or to enioy her of his giuft, because the fathers act was led by discretion and of a fatherly compassion, not grutching to depart from his deereft possession to faue his childes life, where as the sonne in his appetite had no reason to lead him to loue vnlawfully, for whom it had rather bene decent to die, then to haue violated his fathers bed with safetie of his life.

No more would it be seemely for an aged man to play the wanton like a child, for it stands not with the conueniency of nature, yet when king Agefilaus hauing a great fort of little children, was one day disposed to folace himself among them in a gallery where they plaied, and tooke a little hobby horfe of wood and bestrid it to keepe them in play, one of his friends seemed to mislike his lightnes, ô good friend quoth Agefilaus, rebuke me not for this fault till thou haue children of thine owne, shewing in deede that it came not of vanitie but of a fatherly affection, ioying in the sport and company of his little children, in which respect and as that place and time serued, it was dispenceable in him and not indecent.

And in the choise of a mans delights and maner of his life, there is a decencie, and so we say th'old man generally is no fit companion for the young man, nor the rich for the poore, nor the wife for the foolish. Yet in some respects and by discretion it may be otherwise, as when the old man hath the gouernment of the young, the wife teaches the foolish, the rich is wayted on by the poore for their reliefe, in which regard the conuersation is not indecent.

And Proclus the Philosopher knowing how euery indecencie is vnpleasent to nature, and namely, how vncomely a thing it is for young men to doe as old men doe (at leastwise as young men for the most part doe take it) applyed it very wittily to his purpose: for hauing his sonne and heire a notable vnthrif, and delighting in nothing but in haukes and hounds, and gay apparrell, and such like vanities, which neither by gentle nor sharpe admonitions of his father, could make him leaue. Proclus himselfe not onely bare with his sonne, but also vsed it himselfe for company, which some of his frends greatly rebuked him for, saying, ô Proclus, an olde man and a Philosopher to play the foole and lasciuious more than the sonne. Mary, quoth Proclus, and therefore I do it, for it is the next way to make my sonne change his life, when he shall see how vndecent it is in me to leade such a life, and for him being a yong man, to keepe companie with me being an old man, and to doe that which I doe.

So is it not vnseemely for any ordinarie Captaine to winne the victory or any other auantage in warre by fraud and breach of faith: as Hanniball with the Romans, but it could not well become the Romaines managing so great an Empire, by examples of honour and iustice to doe as Hanniball did. And when Parmenio in a like case perswaded king Alexander to breake the day of his appointment, and to set vpon Darius at the sodaine, which Alexander refused to doe, Parmenio saying, I would doe it if I were Alexander, and I too quoth Alexander if I were Parmenio: but it behoueth me in honour to fight liberally with mine enemies, and iustly to ouercome. And thus ye see that was decent in Parmenios action, which was not in the king his masters.

A great nobleman and Counfeller in this Realme was secretlie aduised by his friend, not to vse so much writing his letters in fauour of euery man that asked them, specially to the Iudges of the Realme in cases of iustice. To whom the noble man answered, it becomes vs Councillors better to vse instance for our friend, then for the Iudges to sentence at instance: for whatfoeuer we doe require them, it is in their choise to refuse to doe, but for all that the example was ill and dangerous.

And there is a decencie in chusing the times of a mans busines, and as the Spaniard sayes, es tiempo de negociar, there is a fitte time for euery man to performe his businesse in, and to attend his affaires, which out of that time would be vndecent: as to sleepe al day and wake al night, and to goe a hunting by torch-light, as an old Earle of Arundel vsed to doe, or for any occasion of little importance, to wake a man out of his sleepe, or to make him rise from his dinner to talke with him, or such like importunities, for so we call euery vnseasonable action, and the vndecencie of the time.

Callicratides being sent Ambassador by the Lacedemonians, to Cirus the young king of Persia to contract with him for money and men toward their warres against the Athenians, came to the Court at such vnseasonable time as the king was yet in the midst of his dinner, and went away againe saying, it is now no time to interrupt the kings mirth. He came againe another day in the after noone, and finding the king at a rere-banquet, and to haue taken the wine somewhat plentifully, turned back againe, saying, I thinke there is no houre fitte to deale with Cirus, for he is euer in his banquets: I will rather leaue all the busines vndone, then doe any thing that shall not become the Lacedemonians: meaning to offer conference of so great importaunce to his Countrey, with a man so distempered by surfet, as hee was not likely to geue him any reasonable resolution in the cause.

One Eudamidas brother to king Agis of Lacedemonia, comming by Zenocrates schoole and looking in, saw him sit in his chaire, disputing with a long hoare beard, asked who it was, one answered, Sir it is a wise man and one of them that searches after vertue, and if he haue not yet found it quoth Eudamidas when will he vse it, that now at this yeares is seeking after it, as who would say it is not time to talke of matters when they should be put in execution, nor for an old man to be to seeke what vertue is, which all his youth he should haue had in exercife.

Another time comming to heare a notable Philosopher dispute, it happened, that all was ended euen as he came, and one of his familiers would haue had him requested the Philosopher to beginne againe, that were indecent and nothing ciuill quoth Eudamidas, for if he should come to me supperlesse when I had supped before, were it seemely for him to pray me to suppe againe for his companie.

And the place makes a thing decent or indecent, in which consideration one Euboidas being sent Embassadour into a forraine realme, some of his familiars tooke occasion at the table to praise the wiues and women of that country in presence of their owne husbands, which th'embassadour misliked, and when supper was ended and the guesstes departed, tooke his familiars aside, and told them it was nothing decent in a strange country to praise the women, nor specially a wife before her husbands face, for inconueniencie that might rise thereby, aswell to the prayser as to the woman, and that the chiefe commendation of a chaste matrone, was to be knowne onely to her husband, and not to be obserued by straungers and guesstes.

And in the vse of apparell there is no litle decencie and vndecencie to be perceiued, as well for the fashion as the stufte, for it is comely that euery estate and vocation should be knowne by the differences of their habit: a clarke from a lay man: a gentleman from a yeoman: a souldier from a citizen, and the chiefe of euery degree from their inferiours, because in confusion and disorder there is no manner of decencie.

The Romaines of any other people most feuerely censurers of decencie, thought no vpper garment so comely for a ciuill man as a long playted gowne, because it sheweth much grauitie and also pudicitie, hiding euery member of the body which had not bin pleafant to behold. In somuch as a certain Proconfull or Legat of theirs dealing one day with Ptolome king of Egipt, seeing him clad in a straite narrow garment very lasciuiously, discouering euery part of his body, gaue him a great checke for it: and said, that vnlesse he vsed more sad and comely garments, the Romaines would take no pleasure to hold amitie with him, for by the wantonnes of his garment they would iudge the vanitie of his mind, not to be worthy of their constant friendship. A pleasant old courtier wearing one day in the sight of a great councellour, after the new guise, a french cloake skarce reaching to the wast, a long beaked doublet hanging downe to his thies, and an high paire of filke netherstocks that couered all his buttockes and loignes, the Councillor maruelled to see him in that fort disguised, and otherwise than he had bin wont to be. Sir quoth the Gentleman to excuse it: if I should not be able when I had need to pisse out of my doublet, and to do the rest in my netherstocks (vsing the plaine terme) all men would say I were but a lowte, the Councillor laughed hartily at the absurditie of the speech, but what would those sower fellowes of Rome have said trowe ye? truely in mine opinion, that all such persons as take pleasure to shew their limbes, specially those that nature hath commanded out of sight, should be inioyned either to go starke naked, or else to resort backe to the comely and modest fashion of their owne countrie apparell, vsed by their old honorable auncestors.

And there is a decency of apparel in respect of the place it is to be vsed: as, in the Court to be richely apparrelled: in the countrey to weare more plain and homely garments. For who would not thinke it a ridiculous thing to see a Lady in her milke-house with a veluet gowne, and at a bridall in her cassock of mockado: a Gentleman of the Countrey among the bushes and briers, goe in a pounced dublet and a paire of embrodered hosen, in the Citie to weare a frise Ierkin, and a paire of leather breeches? yet some such phantasticals haue I knowen, and one a certaine knight, of all other the most vaine, who commonly would come to the Sessions, and other ordinarie meetings and Commissions in the Countrey, so bedect with buttons and aglets of gold and such costly embroderies, as the poore plaine men of the Countrey called him (for his gaynesse) the golden knight. Another for the like cause was called Saint Sunday: I thinke at this day they be so farre spent, as either of them would be content with a good cloath cloake: and this came by want of discretion, to discern and deeme right of decencie, which many Gentlemen doe wholly limite by the person or degree, where reason doeth it by the place and presence: which may be such as it might very well become a great Prince to weare courser apparrell than in another place or presence a meaner person.

Neuerthelesse in the vse of a garment many occasions alter the decencie, sometimes the qualitie of the person, sometimes of the case, otherwhiles the countrey custome, and often the constitution of lawes, and the very nature of vse it selfe. As for example a king and prince may vse rich and gorgious apparell decently, so cannot a meane person doo, yet if an herald of armes to whom a king giueth his gowne of cloth of gold, or to whom it was incident as a fee of his office, do were the same, he doth it decently, because such hath alwaies bene th'allowances of heraldes: but if such herald haue worne out, or fold, or lost that gowne, to buy him a new of the like stuffe with his owne mony and to weare it, is not decent in the eye and iudgement of them that know it.

And the country custome maketh things decent in vse, as in Asia for all men to weare long gownes both a foot and horsebacke: in Europa short gaberdins, or clokes, or iackets, euen for their vpper garments. The Turke and Persian to weare great tolibants of ten, fifteene, and twentie elles of linnen a peece vpon their heads, which can not be remooued: in Europe to were caps or hats, which vpon euery occasion of salutation we vse to put of, as a signe of reuerence.

In th'East partes the men to make water couring like women, with vs standing at a wall. With them to congratulat and falute by giuing a becke with the head, or a bende of the bodie, with vs here in England, and in Germany, and all other Northerne parts of the world to shake handes. In France, Italie, and Spaine to embrace ouer the shoulder, vnder the armes, at the very knees, according to the superiors degree. With vs the wemen giue their mouth to be kissed, in other places their cheek, in many places their hand, or in steed of an offer to the hand, to say these words Bezo los manos. And yet some others surmounting in all courtly ciuilitie will say, Los manos e los pides. And aboue that reach too, there be that will say to the Ladies, Lombra de sus pisadas, the shadow of your steps. Which I recite vnto you to shew the phraze of those courtly seruitours in yeelding the mistresses honour and reuerence.

And it is seen that very particular vse of it selfe makes a matter of much decencie and vndecencie, without any countrey custome or allowance, as if one that hath many yeares worne a gowne shall come to be seen weare a iakquet or ierkin, or he that hath many yeares worne a beard or long haire among those that had done the contrary, and come sodainly to be pold or shauen, it will seeme onely to himselfe, a deshight and very vndecent, but also to all others that neuer vsed to go so, vntill the time and custome haue abrogated that mislike.

So was it here in England till her Maiesties most noble father for diuers good respects, caused his owne head and all his Courtiers to be polled and his beard to be cut short. Before that time it was thought more decent both for old men and young to be all shauen and to weare long haire either rounded or square. Now againe at this time the young Gentlemen of the Court haue taken vp the long haire trayling on their shoulders, and thinke it more decent: for what respect I would be glad to know.

The Lacedemonians bearing long bushes of haire, finely kept and curled vp, vsed this ciuill argument to maintaine that custome. Haire (say they) is the very ornament of nature appointed for the head, which therefore to vse in his most sumptuous degree is comely, specially for them that be Lordes, Maisters of men, and of a free life, hauing abilitie and leasure inough to keepe it cleane, and so for a signe of seignorie, riches and libertie, the maisters of the Lacedemonians vsed long haire. But their vassals, seruants and slaues vsed it short or shauen in signe of seruitude and because they had no meane nor leasure to kembe and keepe it cleanly. It was besides comberfome to them hauing many businesse to attende, in some seruices there might no maner of filth be falling from their heads. And to all souldiers it is very noysome and a daungerous disauantage in the warres or in any particular combat, which being the most comely profession of euery noble young Gentleman, it ought to perswade them greatly from wearing long haire. If there be any that seeke by long haire to helpe or to hide an ill featured face, it is in them allowable so to do, because euery man may decently reforme by arte, the faultes and imperfections that nature hath wrought in them.

And all singularities or affected parts of a mans behaiour seeme vndecent, as for one man to march or iet in the street more stately, or to looke more sol-empnely, or to go more gayly and in other colours or fashioned garments then another of the same degree and estate.

Yet such singularities haue had many times both good liking and good succeffe, otherwise then many would haue looked for. As when Dinocrates the famous architect, desirous to be knowen to king Alexander the great, and hauing none acquaintance to bring him to the kings speech, he came one day to the Court very strangely apparelled in long skarlet robes, his head compast with a garland of Laurell, and his face all to be flicked with sweet oyle, and stode in the kings chamber, motioning nothing to any man: newes of this stranger came to the king, who caused him to be brought to his presence, and asked his name, and the cause of his repaire to the Court. He answered, his name was Dinocrates the Architect, who came to present his Maiestie with a platforme of his owne deuising, how his Maiestie might buylde a Citie vpon the mountaine Athos in Macedonia, which should beare the figure of a mans body, and tolde him all how. Forfooth the breast and bulke of his body should rest vpon such a flat: that hil should be his head, all set with foregrowen woods like haire: his right arme should stretch out to such a hollow bottome as might be like his hand: holding a dish conteyning al the waters that should serue that Citie: the left arme with his hand should hold a valley of all the orchards and gardens of pleasure pertaining thereunto: and either legge should lie vpon a ridge of rocke, very gallantly to behold, and so should accomplish the full figure of a man. The king asked him what commoditie of foyle, or sea, or nauigable riuer lay neere vnto it, to be able to sustaine so great a number of inhabitants. Truly Sir (quoth Dinocrates) I haue not yet considered thereof: for in trueth it is the barest part of all the Countrey of Macedonia. The king smiled at it, and said very honourably, we like your deuice well, and meane to vse your seruice in the building of a Citie, but we wil chuse out a more commodious scituation: and made him attend in that voyage in which he conquered Asia and Egypt, and there made him chiefe Surueyour of his new Citie of Alexandria. Thus did Dinocrates singularitie in attire greatly further him to his aduancement.

Yet are generally all rare things and such as breede maruell and admiration somewhat holding of the vnde-cent, as when a man is bigger and exceeding the ordinary stature of a man like a Giaunt, or farre vnder the reasonable and common size of men, as a dwarfe, and such vndecencies do not angre vs, but either we pittie them or scorne at them.

But at all insolent and vnwoonted partes of a mans behaiour we find many times cause to mislike or to be mistrustfull, which proceedeth of some vndecency that is in it, as when a man that hath alwaies bene strange and vnacquainted with vs, will suddently become our familiar and domestick: and another that hath bene alwaies sterne and churlish, wilbe vpon the suddaine affable and curteous, it is neyther a comely sight, nor a signe of any good towards vs. Which the subtill Italian well obserued by the successes thereof, saying in Prouerbe.

Tradito me ha o tradir me vuole.*

*He that speakes me fairer, than his woont was too
Hath done me harme, or meanes for to doo.*

Now againe all maner of conceites that stirre vp any vehement passion in a man, doo it by some turpitude or euill and vndecency that is in them, as to make a man angry there must be some iniury or contempt offered, to make him enuy there must proceede some vnderferued prosperitie of his egall or inferiour, to make him pitie some miserable fortune or spectacle to behold.

And yet in euery of these passions being as it were vndecencies, there is a comelineffe to be discerned, which some men can keepe and some men can not, as to be angry, or to enuy, or to hate, or to pitie, or to be ashamed decently, that is none otherwise then reason requireth. This surmise appeareth to be true, for Homer the father of Poets writing that famous and most honourable poeme called the Illiades or warres of Troy: made his commencement the magnanimous wrath and anger of Achilles in his first verse thus: μενην αιδε θεα πηλιαδεου ἀχιλλείου. Sing foorth my muse the wrath of Achilles Peleus sonne: which the Poet would neuer haue done if the wrath of a prince had not beene in some fort comely and allowable. But when Arrianus and Curtius historiographers that wrote the noble gestes of king Alexander the great, came to prayse him for many things, yet for his wrath and anger they reproched him, because it proceeded not of any magnanimitie, but vpon surfet and distemper in his diet, nor growing of any iust causes, was exercised to the destruction of his dearest friends and familiers, and not of his enemies, nor any other waies so honorably as th'others was, and so could not be reputed a decent and comely anger.

So may al your other passions be vsed decently though the very matter of their originall be grounded vpon some vndecencie, as it is written by a certaine king of Egypt, who looking out of his window, and seing his owne sonne for some grieuous offence, carried by the officers of his iustice to the place of execution: he neuer once changed his countenance at the matter, though the sight were neuer so full of ruth and atrocitie. And it was thought a decent countenance and constant animositie in the king to be so affected, the case concerning so high and rare a peece of his owne iustice. But within few daies after when he beheld out of the same window an old friend and familiar of his, stand begging an almes in the streete, he wept tenderly, remembering their old familiarity and considering how by the mutabilitie of fortune and frailtie of mans estate, it might one day come to passe that he himselfe should fall into the like miserable estate. He therefore had a remorse very comely for a king in that behalfe, which also caused him to giue order for his poore friends plentiful reliefe.

But generally to weepe for any sorrow (as one may doe for pitie) is not so decent in a man: and therefore all high minded persons, when they cannot chuse but shed teares, wil turne away their face as a countenance vndecent for a man to shew, and so will the standers by till they haue suppressed such passion, thinking it nothing decent to behold such an vncomely countenance. But for Ladies and women to weepe and shed teares at euery little greefe, it is nothing vncomely, but rather a signe of much good nature and meeknes of minde, a most decent propertie for that sexe; and therefore they be for the more part more deuout and charitable, and greater geuers of almes than men, and zealous relieuers of prifoners, and befeechers of pardons, and fuch like parts of commiferation. Yea they be more than fo too: for by the common prouerbe, a woman will weepe for pitie to fee a golling goe barefoote.

But moft certainly all things that moue a man to laughter, as doe thefe fcurrilities and other ridiculous behauiours, it is for fome vndecencie that is found in them: which maketh it decent for euery man to laugh at them. And therefore when we fee or heare a natural foole and idiot doe or fay any thing foolifhly, we laugh not at him: but when he doeth or fpeaketh wifely, becaufe that is vnlike him felfe: and a buffonne or counterfet foole, to heare him fpeake wifely which is like himfelfe, it is no fport at all, but for fuch a counterfait to talke and looke foolifhly it maketh vs laugh, becaufe it is no part of his naturall, for in euery vncomlineffe there muft be a certaine abfurditie and difproportion to nature, and the opinion of the hearer or beholder to make the thing ridiculous. But for a foole to talke foolifhly or a wifeman wifely, there is no fuch abfurditie or difproportion.

And though at all abfurdities we may decently laugh, and when they be no abfurdities not decently, yet in laughing is there an vndecencie for other refpectes fometime, than of the matter it felfe, which made Philippus fonne to the firft Chriften Emperour, Philippus Arabicus fitting with his father one day in the theatre to behold the fports, giue his father a great rebuke becaufe he laughed, faying that it was no comely countenance for an Emperour to bewray in fuch a publicke place, nor fpecially to laugh at euery foolifh toy: the pofteritie gaue the fonne for that caufe the name of Philippus Agelaftos or without laughter.

I haue feene forraine Embaffadours in the Queenes prefence laugh fo diffolutely at fome rare paftime or fport that hath beene made there, that nothing in the world could worfe haue becomen them, and others very wise men, whether it haue ben of some pleasant humour and complexion, or for other default in the spleene, or for ill education or custome, that could not vtter any graue and earnest speech without laughter, which part was greatly discommended in them.

And Cicero the wisest of any Romane writers, thought it vncomely for a man to daunce: saying, Saltantem sobrium vidi neminem. I neuer saw any man daunce that was sober and in his right wits, but there by your leaue he failed, nor our young Courtiers will allow it, besides that it is the most decent and comely demeanour of all exultations and reioycements of the hart, which is no lesse naturall to man then to be wise or well learned, or sober.

To tell you the decencies of a number of other behauiours, one might do it to please you with pretie reportes, but to the skilfull Courtiers it shalbe nothing necessary, for they know all by experience without learning. Yet some few remembraunces wee will make you of the most materiall, which our selues haue obserued, and so make an end.

It is decent to be affable and curteous at meales and meetings, in open assemblies more solemne and straunge, in place of authoritie and iudgement not familiar nor pleasant, in counsell secret and sad, in ordinary conferences easie and apert, in conuersation simple, in capitulation subtile and mistrustfull, at mournings and burials sad and sorrowfull, in feasts and bankets merry and ioyfull, in household expence pinching and sparing, in publicke entertainment spending and pompous. The Prince to be sumptuous and magnificent, the priuate man liberall with moderation, a man to be in giuing free, in asking spare, in promise slow, in performance speedy, in contract circumspect but iust, in amitie sincere, in ennimitie wily and cautious [dolus an virtus quis in hoste requirit, saith the Poet] and after the same rate euery sort and maner of businesse or affaire or action hath his decencie and vndecencie, either for the time or place or person or some other circumstance, as Priests to be sober and sad, a Preacher by his life to give good example, a Judge to be incorrupt, solitary and unacquainted with Courtiers or Courtly entertainments, and as the Philosopher saith Oportet iudicem esse rudem et simplicem, without plaite or wrinkle, fower in looke and churlish in speech, contrariwise a Courtly Gentleman to be lofty and curious in countenance, yet sometimes a creeper, and a curry fauell with his superiours.

And touching the person, we say it is comely for a man to be a lambe in the house, and a Lyon in the field, appointing the decencie of his qualitie by the place, by which reason also we limit the comely parts of a woman to consist in foure points, that is to be a shrew in the kitchin, a faint in the Church, an Angell at the board, and an Ape in the bed, as the Chronicle reportes by Mistresse Shore paramour to king Edward the fourth.

Then also there is a decency in respect of the persons with whom we do negotiate, as with the great personages his egals to be solemne and furly, with meaner men pleafant and popular, floute with the sturdie and milde with the meek, which is a most decent conuersation and not reprochfull or vnseemely, as the prouerbe goeth, by those that vse the contrary, a Lyon among sheepe and a sheepe among Lyons.

Right so in negotiating with Princes we ought to seeke their fauour by humilitie and not by sternnesse, nor to trafficke with them by way of indent or condition, but frankly and by manner of submission to their wils, for Princes may be lead but not driuen, nor they are to be vanquisht by allegation, but must be suffred to haue the victorie and be relented vnto: nor they are not to be chalenged for right or iustice, for that is a maner of accusation: nor to be charged with their promises, for that is a kinde of condemnation: and at their request we ought not to be hardly entreated but easily, for that is a signe of deffidence and mistrust in their bountie and gratitude: nor to recite the good seruices which they haue receiued at our hands, for that is but a kind of exprobration, but in crauing their bountie or largeffe to remember vnto them all their former beneficences, making no mention of our owne merites, and so it is thankfull, and in praying them to their faces to do it very modestly : and in their commendations not to be exceffiue for that is tedious, and alwayes fauours of futtelty more then of sincere loue.

And in speaking to a Prince the voyce ought to be lowe and not lowde nor shrill, for th'one is a signe of humilitie th'other of too much audacitie and presumption. Nor in looking on them seeme to ouerlook them, nor yet behold them too stedfastly, for that is a signe of impudence or litle reuerence, and therefore to the great Princes Orientall their seruitours speaking or being spoken vnto abbase their eyes in token of lowlines, which behaiour we do not obserue to our Princes with so good a discretion as they do : and such as retire from the Princes presence, do not by and by turne taylor to them as we do, but go backward or sideling for a reasonable space, til they be at the wal or chamber doore passing out of sight, and is thought a most decent behaiour to their soueraignes. I haue heard that king Henry th'eight her Maiesties father, though otherwise the most gentle and affable Prince of the world, could not abide to haue any man stare in his face or to fix his eye too steedily vpon him when he talked with them : nor for a common suter to exclame or cry out for iustice, for that is offense and as it were a secret impeachment of his wrong doing, as happened once to a Knight in this Realme of great worship speaking to the king. Nor in speeches with them to be too long, or too much affected, for th'one is tedious th'other is irksome, nor with lowd acclamations to applaude them, for that is too popular and rude and betokens either ignoraunce, or seldome accesse to their presence, or little frequenting their Courts : nor to shew too mery or light a countenance,

And in gaming with a Prince it is decent to let him sometimes win of purpose, to keepe him pleafant, and neuer to refuse his gift, for that is vndutifull: nor to forgiue him his losses, for that is arrogant: nor to giue him great gifts, for that is either infolence or follie: nor to feast him with exceffiue charge for that is both vaine and enuious, and therefore the wise Prince king Henry the feuenth her Maiesties grandfather, if his chaunce had bene to lye at any of his subiects houses, or to passe moe meales then one, he that would take vpon him to defray the charge of his dyet, or of his officers and houghold, he would be marueloufly offended with it, faying what priuate subiect dare vndertake a Princes charge, or looke into the secret of his expence? Her Maiestie hath bene knowne oftentimes to mislike the superfluous expence of her subiects bestowed vpon her in times of her progresfes.

Likewise in matter of aduise it is neither decent to flatter him for that is feruile, neither to be rough or plaine with him, for that is daungerous, but truly to Counsell and to admonish, grauely not greuoufly, sincerely not fourely: which was the part that so greatly commended Cineas Counsellour to king Pirrhus, who kept that decencie in all his perswasions, that he euer preuailed in aduice, and carried the king which way he would.

And in a Prince it is comely to giue vnasked, but in a subiect to aske vnbidden: for that first is signe of a bountifull mynde, this of a loyall and confident. But the subiect that craues not at his Princes hand, either he is of no desert, or proud, or mistrustfull of his Princes goodnesse: therefore king Henry th'eight to one that entreated him to remember one Sir Anthony Rouse with some reward for that he had spent much and was an ill beggar: the king aunswered (noting his infolencie,) If he be ashamed to begge, we are ashamed to giue, and was neuerthelesse one of the most liberall Princes of the world.

And yet in some Courts it is otherwise vsed, for in Spaine it is thought very vndecent for a Courtier to craue, supposing that it is the part of an importune: therefore the king of ordinarie calleth euery second, third or fourth yere for his Checker roll, and bestoweth his mercedes of his owne meere motion, and by discretion, according to euery mans merite and condition.

And in their commendable delights to be apt and accommodate, as if the Prince be geuen to hauking, hunting, riding of horses, or playing vpon instruments, or any like exercise, the seruitour to be the same: and in their other appetites wherein the Prince would seeme an example of vertue, and would not mislike to be egalled by others: in such cases it is decent their seruitours and subiects studie to be like to them by imitation, as in wearing their haire long or short, or in this or that sort of apparrell, such excepted as be only fitte for Princes and none els, which were vndecent for a meaner person to imitate or counterfet: so is it not comely to counterfet their voice, or looke, or any other gestures that be not ordinary and naturall in euery common person: and therefore to go vpright, or speake or looke assuredly, it is decent in euery man. But if the Prince haue an extraordinarie countenance or manner of speech, or bearing of his body, that for a common seruitour to counterfet is not decent, and therefore it was misliked in the Emperor Nero, and thought vncomely for him to counterfet Alexander the great, by holding his head a little awrie, and neerer toward the tone shoulder, because it was not his owne naturall.

And in a Prince it is decent to goe slowly, and to march with leysure, and with a certaine granditie rather than grauitie: as our soueraine Lady and mistresse, the very image of maiestie and magnificence, is accustomed to doe generally, vnlesse it be when she walketh apace for her pleasure, or to catch her a heate in the colde mornings.

Neuertheleffe, it is not fo decent in a meaner perfon, as I haue obserued in some counterfet Ladies of the Countrey, which vse it much to their owne derision. This Comelines was wanting in Queene Marie, otherwise a very good and honourable Princeffe. And was some blemish to the Emperor Ferdinando, a most noble minded man, yet fo carelesse and forgetfull of himselfe in that behalfe, as I haue seene him runne vp a paire of staires so swift and nimble a pace, as almost had not become a very meane man, who had not gone in some hastie businesse.

And in a noble Prince nothing is more decent and welbeseeming his greatnesse, than to spare foule speeches, for that breedes hatred, and to let none humble suiters depart out of their presence (as neere as may be) discontented. Wherein her Maiestie hath of all others a most Regall gift, and nothing inferior to the good Prince Titus Vespasianus in that point.

Also, not to be passionate for small detriments or offences, nor to be a reuenger of them, but in cases of great iniurie, and specially of dishonors: and therein to be very sterne and vindicatiue, for that fauours of Princely magnanimitie: nor to seeke reuenge vpon base and obscure persons, ouer whom the conquest is not glorious, nor the victorie honourable, which respect moued our foueraign Lady (keeping alwaies the decorum of a Princely perfon) at her first comming to the crowne, when a knight of this Realme, who had very insolently behaued himselfe toward her when she was Lady Elizabeth, fell vpon his knee to her, and besought her pardon: suspecting (as there was good cause) that he should haue bene sent to the Tower, she said vnto him most mildly: do you not know that we are descended of the Lion, whose nature is not to harme or pray vpon the mouse, or any other such small vermin?

And with these examples I thinke sufficient to leaue, geuing you information of this one point, that all your figures Poeticall or Rhethoricall, are but obseruations of strange speeches, and such as without any arte at al we should vse, and commonly do, euen by very nature without discipline. But more or lesse aptly and decently, or scarcely, or aboundantly, or of this or that kind of figure, and one of vs more then another, according to the disposition of our nature, constitution of the heart, and facilitie of each mans vtterance: so as we may conclude, that nature her selfe fuggesteth the figure in this or that forme: but arte aydeth the iudgement of his vse and application, which geues me occasion finally and for a full conclusion to this whole treatise, to enforme you in the next chapter how art should be vsed in all respects, and specially in this behalfe of language, and when the naturall is more commendable then the artificiall, and contrariwise.

CHAP. XXV.

That the good Poet or maker ought to dissemble his arte, and in what cases the artificiall is more commended then the naturall, and contrariwise.

ND now (most excellent Queene) hauing largely said of Poets and Poesie, and about what matters they be employed: then of all the commended fourmes of Poemes, thirdly of metricall proportions, such as do appertaine to our vulgar arte: and last of all set forth the poeticall ornament consisting chiefly in the beautie and gallantnesse of his language and stile, and so haue apperelled him to our seeming, in all his gorgeous habilliments, and pulling him first from the carte to the schoole, and from thence to the Court, and preferred him to your Maieslies seruice, in that place of great honour and magnificence to geue entertainment to Princes, Ladies of honour, Gentlewomen and Gentlemen, and by his many moodes of skill, to serue the many humors of men thither haunting and resorting, some by way of solace, some of ferious aduise, and in matters aswell profitable as pleasant and honest. Wee haue in our humble conceit sufficiently performed our promise or rather dutie to your Maiestie in the description of this arte, so alwaies as we leaue him not vn furnisht of one peece that best befeemes that place of any other, and may serue as a principall good lesson for al good makers to beare continually in mind, in the vsage of this science: which is, that being now lately become a Courtier he shew not himself a craftsman, and merit to be disgraded, and with scorne sent back againe to the shop, or other place of his first facultie and calling, but that so wisely and discreetly he behaue himselfe as he may worthily retaine the credit of his place, and profession of a very Courtier, which is in plaine termes, cunningly to be able to dissemble. But (if it please your Maiestie) may it not seeme inough for a Courtier to know how to weare a fether, and set his cappe a flaunt, his chaine en echarpe, a straight buskin alingleffe, a loose alo Turquesque, the cape alla Spaniola, the breech a la Françoise, and by twentie maner of new fashioned garments to disguise his body, and his face with as many countenances, whereof it seemes there be many that make a very arte, and studie who can shew himselfe most fine, I will not say most foolish and ridiculous? or perhaps rather that he could dissemble his conceits as well as his countenances, so as he neuer speake as he thinkes, or thinke as he speaks, and that in any matter of importance his words and his meaning very seldome meete: for so as I remember it was concluded by vs setting forth the figure Allegoria, which therefore not impertinently we call the Courtier or figure of faire semblant, or is it not perchance more requisite our courtly Poet do dissemble not onely his countenances and conceits, but also all his ordinary actions of behauiour, or the most part of them, whereby the better to winne his purposes and good aduantages, as now and then to haue a journey or sicknesse in his sleeue, thereby to shake of other importunities of greater consequence, as they vse their pilgrimages in Fraunce, the Diet in Spaine, the baines in Italy? and when a man is whole to faine himselfe sicke to shunne the businesse in Court, to entertaine time and ease at home, to false offences without discredite, to win purposes by mediation in absence, which their presence would eyther impeach or ton greatly preferre, to harken after the popular opinions and speech, to entend to their more priuate folaces, to practize more deeply both at leasure and libertie, and when any publique affaire or other attempt and counsaile of theirs hath not receaved good successe, to auoid therby the Princes present reproofe, to coole their chollers by absence, to winne remorse by lamentable reports, and reconciliation by friends in-treatie. Finally by sequestring themselues for a time fro the Court, to be able the freelier and cleerer to discerne the factions and state of the Court and of al the world besides, no lesie then doth the looker on or beholder of a game better see into all points of auantage, then the player himselfe? and in dissembling of diseases which I pray you? for I haue obserued it in the Court of Fraunce, not a burning feuer or a plurisie or a palsie, or the hpdropick and swelling gowte, or any other like disease, for if they be such as may be either easily discerned or quickly cured, they be ill to dissemble and doo halfe handsomly ferue the turne.

But it must be either a dry dropisie, or a megrim or letarge, or a fistule in ano, or some such other secret disease, as the common conuerfant can hardly discover, and the Phisition either not speedily heale, or not honestly bewray? of which infirmities the scoffing Pasquil wrote, Vlcus vesicæ renum dolor in pene scirrus. Or as I haue seene in diuers places where many make themselues hart whole, when in deede they are full sicke, bearing it stoutly out to the hazard of their health, rather then they would be suspected of any lothsome infirmity, which might inhibit them from the Princes presence, or entertainment of the ladies. Or as some other do to beare a port of state and plentie when they haue neither penny nor possession, that they may not seeme to droope, and be reiected as vnworthy or insufficient for the greater seruices, or to be pitied for their pouertie, which they hold for a marueilous disgrace, as did the poore Squire of Castile, who had rather dine with a sheepes head at home and drinke a cruse of water to it, then to haue a good dinner giuen him by his friend who was nothing ignorant of his pouertie. Or as others do to make wise they be poore when they be riche, to shunne thereby the publicke charges and vocations, for men are not now a dayes (specially in states of Oligarchie as the most in our age) called somuch for their wisedome as for their wealth, also to auoyde enuie of neighbours or bountie in conuersation, for whosoever is reputed rich cannot without reproch, but be either a lender or a spender. Or as others do to seeme very busie when they haue nothing to doo, and yet will make themselves so occupied and ouerladen in the Princes affaires, as it is a great matter to haue a couple of wordes with them, when notwithstanding they lye sleeping on their beds all an after noone, or sit solemnly at cardes in their chambers, or enterteyning of the Dames, or laughing and gibing with their familiars foure houres by the clocke, whiles the poore futer desirous of his dispatch is answered by some Secretarie or page il fault attendre, Monsieur is dispatching the kings businesse into Languedock, Prouence, Piemont, a common phraze with the Secretaries of France. Or as I haue obserued in many of the Princes Courts of Italie, to seeme idle when they be earnestly occupied and entend to nothing but mischieuous practizes, and do busily negotiat by coulor of otiation. Or as others of them that go ordinarily to Church and neuer pray to winne an opinion of holinesse: or pray still apace, but neuer do good dede, and geue a begger a penny and spend a pound on a harlot, to speake faire to a mans face, and foule behinde his backe, to set him at his trencher and yet sit on his skirts for so we vse to say by a fayned friend, then also to be rough and churlish in speach and apparance, but inwardly affectionate and fauouring, as I haue fene of the greateſt poſtates and graueſt iudges and Preſidentes of Parliament in Fraunce.

Theſe and many ſuch like diſguiſings do we find in mans behaiour, and ſpecially in the Courtiers of forraine Countreyes, where in my youth I was brought vp, and very well obſerued their maner of life and conuerſation, for of mine owne Countrey I haue not made ſo great experience. Which parts, neuertheleſſe, we allow not now in our English maker, becauſe we haue geuen him the name of an honeſt man, and not of an hypocrite: and therefore leauing theſe manner of diſſimulations to all baſe-minded men, and of vile nature or miſterie, we doe allow our Courtly Poet to be a diſſembler only in the ſubtilties of his arte: that is, when he is moſt artificiall, ſo to diſguiſe and cloake it as it may not appeare, nor ſeeme to proceede from him by any ſtudie or trade of rules, but to be his naturall: nor ſo euidently to be deſcried, as euery ladde that reades him ſhall ſay he is a good ſcholler, but will rather haue him to know his arte well, and little to vie it.

And yet peraduenture in all points it may not be ſo taken, but in ſuch onely as may diſcouer his groſſenes or his ignorance by ſome ſchollerly affectation: which thing is very irkeſome to all men of good trayning, and ſpecially to Courtiers. And yet for all that our maker may not be in all caſes reſtrayned, but that he may both uſe, and alſo manifeſt his arte to his great praiſe, and need no more be aſhamed thereof, than a ſhomaker to haue made a cleanly ſhoe, or a Carpenter to haue buylt a faire houſe. Therefore to diſcuſſe and make this point ſomewhat cleerer, to weete, where arte ought to appeare, and where not, and when the naturall is more commendable than the artificiall in any humane action or workmanſhip, we wil examine it further by this diſtinction.

In ſome caſes we ſay arte is an ayde and coadiutor to nature, and a furtherer of her actions to good effect, or peraduenture a meane to ſupply her wants, by renforcing the causes wherein shee is impotent and defectiue, as doth the arte of phisicke, by helping the naturall concoction, retention, distribution, expulsion, and other vertues, in a weake and vnhealthie bodie. Or as the good gardiner seasons his soyle by fundrie forts of compost: as mucke or marle, clay or sande, and many times by bloud, or lees of oyle or wine, or stale, or perchance with more costly drugs: and waters his plants, and weedes his herbes or floures, and prunes his branches, and vnleaves his boughes to let in the sunne: and twentie other waies cheriseth them, and cureth their infirmities, and so makes that neuer, or very seldome any of them miscarry, but bring forth their flours and fruites in season. And in both these cases it is no smal praise for the Phisition and Gardiner to be called good and cunning artificers.

In another respect arte is not only an aide and coadiutor to nature in all her actions, but an alterer of them, and in some fort a surmounter of her skill, so as by meanes of it her owne effects shall appeare more beautifull or straunge and miraculous, as in both cases before remembred. The Phisition by the cordials hee will geue his patient, shall be able not onely to restore the decayed spirites of man, and render him health, but also to prolong the terme of his life many yeares ouer and aboue the flint of his first and naturall constitution. And the Gardiner by his arte will not onely make an herbe, or flouwr, or fruite, come forth in his season without impediment, but also will embellish the same in vertue, shape, odour and taste, that nature of her selfe woulde neuer haue done: as to make single gilliflowre, or marigold, or daisie, double: and the white rose, redde, yellow, or carnation, a bitter mellon sweete, a sweete apple, foure, a plumme or cherrie without a stone, a peare without core or kernell, a goord or cucumber like to a horne, or any other figure he will: any of which things nature could not doe without mans help and arte. These actions also are most singular, when they be most artificiall.

In another respect, we say arte is neither an aider nor a surmounter, but onely a bare immitatour of natures works, following and counterfeyting her actions and effects, as the Marmesot doth many countenances and gestures of man, of which forte are the artes of painting and keruing, whereof one represents the naturall by light colour and shadow in the superficial or flat, the other in a body massife expressing the full and emptie, euen, extant, rabbated, hollow, or whatsoever other figure and passion of quantitie. So also the Alchimist counterfeits gold, siluer, and all other mettals, the Lapidarie pearles and pretious stones by glasse and other substances falsified, and sopplicate by arte. These men also be praised for their craft, and their credit is nothing empayred, to say that their conclusions and effects are very artificiall. Finally in another respect arte is as it were an encounter and contrary to nature, producing effects neither like to hers, nor by participation with her operations, nor by imitation of her paternes, but makes things and produceth effects altogether strange and diuerse, and of such forme and qualitie (nature alwaies supplying stufte) as she neuer would nor could haue done of her selfe, as the carpenter that builds a house, the ioyner that makes a table or a bedstead, the tailor a garment, the Smith a locke or a key, and a number of like, in which case the workman gaineth reputation by his arte, and praise when it is best expressed and most apparant, and most studiously. Man also in all his actions that be not altogether naturall, but are gotten by study and discipline or exercise, as to daunce by measures, to sing by note, to play on the lute, and such like, it is a praise to be said an artificiall dauncer, singer, and player on instruments, because they be not exactly knowne or done, but by rules and precepts or teaching of schoolemasters. But in such actions as be so naturall and proper to man, as he may become excellent therein without any arte or imitation at all, (custome and exercise excepted, which are requisite to euery action not numbred among the vitall or animal) and wherein nature should seeme to do amisse, and man suffer reproch to be found destitute of them: in those to shew himselfe rather artificiall then naturall, were no lesse to be laughed at, then for one that can see well enough, to vse a paire of spectacles, or not to heare but by a trunke put to his eare, nor feele without a paire of ennealed glooues, which things in deede helpe an infirme sence, but annoy the perfit, and therefore shewing a disabilitie naturall mooue rather to scorne then commendation, and to pitie sooner then to prayse. But what else is language and vtterance, and discourse and perswasion, and argument in man, then the vertues of a well constitute body and minde, little lesse naturall then his very sensuall actions, sauing that the one is perfit by nature at once, the other not without exercise and iteration? Peradventure also it wilbe granted that a man sees better and discernes more brimly his colours, and heares and feesles more exactly by vse and often hearing and feeling and feing, and though it be better to see with spectacles then not to see at all, yet is their praise not egall nor in any mans iudgement comparable: no more is that which a Poet makes by arte and precepts rather then by naturall instinct: and that which he doth by long meditation rather then by a suddaine inspiration, or with great pleasure and facillitie then hardly (and as they are woont to say) in spite of Nature or Minerua, then which nothing can be more irksome or ridiculous.

And yet I am not ignorant that there be artes and methodes both to speake and to perswade and also to dispute, and by which the naturall is in some forte relieued, as th'eye by his spectacle, I say relieued in his imperfection, but not made more perfit then the naturall, in which respect I call those artes of Grammer, Logicke, and Rhetorick not bare imitations, as the painter or keruers craft and worke in a forraine subiect viz. a liuely purtraite in his table of wood, but by long and studious obseruation rather a repetition or reminiscens naturall, reduced into perfection, and made prompt by vse and exercife. And so whatfoeuer a mans speakes or perfwades he doth it not by imitation artificially, but by obseruation naturally (though one follow another) because it is both the same and the like that nature doth suggest: but if a poppingay speake, she doth it by imitation of mans voyce artificially and not naturally being the like, but not the same that nature doth suggest to man. But now because our maker or Poet is to play many parts and not one alone, as first to deuise his plat or subiect, then to fashion his poeme, thirdly to vse his metricall proportions, and last of all to vtter with pleasure and delight, which restes in his maner of language and stile as hath bene said, whereof the many moodes and straunge phrascs are called figures, it is not altogether with him as with the crafts man, nor altogether otherwise then with the crafts man, for in that he vfeth his metricall proportions by appointed and harmonical measures and distaunces, he is like the Carpenter or Ioyner, for borrowing their tymber and stufte of nature, they appoint and order it by art otherwise then nature would doe, and worke effects in apparence contrary to hers. Also in that which the Poet speakes or reports of another mans tale or doings, as Homer of Priamus or Vlisses, he is as the painter or keruer that worke by imitation and representation in a forrein subiect, in that he speakes figuratiuely, or argues subtilly, or perfwades copiously and vehemently, he doth as the cunning gardiner that vsing nature as a coadiutor, furders her conclusions and many times makes her effects more absolute and straunge. But for that in our maker or Poet, which restes onely in deuise and issues from an excellent sharpe and quick inuention, holpen by a cleare and bright phantasie and imagination, he is not as the painter to counterfaite the naturall by the like effects and not the same, nor as the gardiner aiding nature to worke both the same and the like, nor as the Carpenter to worke effectes vtterly vnlike, but even as nature her felfe working by her owne peculiar vertue and proper instinct and not by example or meditation or exercise as all other artificers do, is then most admired when he is most naturall and least artificiall. And in the feates of his language and vtterance, because they hold aswell of nature to be suggested and vttered as by arte to be polished and reformed. Therefore shall our Poet receaue prayse for both, but more by knowing of his arte then by vnseasonable vsing it, and be more commended for his naturall eloquence then for his artificiall, and more for his artificiall well disabled, then for the same ouermuch affected and grossely or vndiscretly bewrayed, as many makers and Oratours do.

The Conclusion.

And with this (my most gracious soueraine Lady) I make an end, humbly beseeching your pardon, in that I haue presumed to hold your eares so long annoyed with a tedious trifle, so as vnlesse it proceede more of your owne Princely and naturall mansuetude then of my merite, I feare greatly least you may thinck of me as the Philosopher Plato did of Aniceris an inhabitant of the Citie Cirene, who being in troth a very actiue and artificiall man in driuing of a Princes Charriot or Coche (as your Maiestie might be) and knowing it himselfe well enough, comming one day into Platos schoole, and hauing heard him largely dispute in matters Philosophicall, I pray you (quoth he) geue me leaue also to say somewhat of myne arte, and in deede shewed so many trickes of his cunning how to lanche forth and slay, and chaunge pace, and turne and winde his Coche, this way and that way, vphill downe hill, and also in euen or rough ground, that he made the whole assemblie wonder at him. Quoth Plato being a graue perfonage, verely in myne opinion this man should be vtterly vnfit for any seruice of greater importance then to driue a Coche. It is a great pitie that so prettie a fellow, had not occupied his braynes in studies of more consequence. Now I pray God it be not thought so of me in describing the toyes of this our vulgar art. But when I consider how euery thing hath his estimation by opportunitie, and that it was but the studie of my yonger yeares in which vanitie raigned. Also that I write to the pleasure of a Lady and a most gracious Queene, and neither to Priestes nor to Prophetes or Philosophers. Besides finding by experience, that many times idleneffe is lesie harmefull then vnprofitable occupation, dayly seeing how these great aspiring myndes and ambitious heads of the world seriously searhing to deale in matters of state, be often times so busie and earnest that they were better be vnoccupied, and peraduenture altogether idle, I presume so much vpon your Maiesties most milde and gracious iudgement howsoever you conceiue of myne abilitie to any better or greater seruice, that yet in this attempt ye wil allow of my loyall and good intent alwayes endeavouring to do your Maiestie the best and greatest of those seruices I can.
