

Bodleian Libraries

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

This book is part of the collection held by the Bodleian Libraries and scanned by Google, Inc. for the Google Books Library Project.

For more information see:

<http://www.bodleian.ox.ac.uk/dbooks>

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 2.0 UK: England & Wales (CC BY-NC-SA 2.0) licence.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF ENGLISH

CONFINED TO THE LIBRARY.

27377

XE 179 SPE

E MS. in Bibl. Bodl.

*Thou shalt raise up the Foundations of many Generations; and thou shalt be called, the Repairer of the Breach, the Restorer of Paths to dwell in.
ISAIAH LVIII. 12.*

THE L I F E
OF ÆLFRED THE GREAT,
By Sir JOHN SPELMAN Kt.
FROM THE Original Manuscript in the BODLEJAN Library:
WITH CONSIDERABLE ADDITIONS,
And
SEVERAL HISTORICAL REMARKS,
By the Publisher
THOMAS HEARNE, M. A.

O X F O R D,
Printed at the THEATER for Maurice Atkins at the Golden-Ball in St Paul's Church-Yard, Lond. MDCCIX.

Imprimatur,

GUIL. LANCASTER,

VICE-CAN. OXON.

March 5. 1709.

a 1

TO THE PRINCE.

S I R,

I Here present unto YOUR HIGH-NESS a Repaired Image of one of YOUR Ancestors. Not according to the perfect Life and Beauty: for it was never so well taken. Nor is it

a 3

one,

The Author's Dedication.

one, that to the best Advantage renders what those Traces of his Pourtrait (which to this Day preserve his Resemblance to us) do seem they should express. For they having for the most part been the accidental Touches of divers Hands, and never put together before, they have neither been able to save themselves intire from the Violence of Time; neither does that, which remains of them, hold one and the same Air of Expression. So the Pieces we have being mangled, and wanting the Joints and Edges wherewith they should agree among themselves, they seem rather the Rubbish of a Broken Statue, than the whole Parts of a Perfect Image. But, SIR, he was of that Merit, that even the Dust of his Feet was not unworthy the Collecting, nor did the most Venerable of all the Romans Ashes deserve a more sacred Urn.

In Representations by Picture, though the outward Lineaments of the Feature be exactly hit, yet is there ever some Fail in the Expression of the Life it

The Author's Dedication.

it self; because the Pencil, following the Exterior, can go no further than that is able to carry it. And the same Defect is always in History, especially when, for want of Discovery of the Reasons and Affections, whereupon the Things and Actions moved, the bare done Deed represents not the Spirit nor Genius that was the Powerfull Agent in them. This, SIR, has been the unhappy Fortune of this YOUR Glorious Ancestor, and by it his Name has undeservedly suffered a Loss not to be recovered. But, SIR, while I present YOUR HIGHNESS with an Object apt to move a pious Indignation in YOU, for that it so meanly expresses the Virtues of so Glorious an Ancestor, YOUR HIGHNESS (who deriving from him in Bloud derive with all a Genuine Capacity of all Royall Endowments) shall one Day from hence take Incitement, by an happy Imitation of his Virtues, to represent unto the World a more lively Figure of Him than by any other can be given.

GOD

The Author's Dedication.

GOD give YOUR HIGHNESS in Merit and Glory to exceed the Line of all YOUR Famous Ancestors.

Ælfred

Ælfred the Great,

First Founder of the English

MONARCHY.

BOOK I.

Containing His Wars and Troublesome Reign.

I. IF I had taken in hand to have writ the particular Reign of any of our Kings since the full Growth and Consistence of the Crown, I should have needed no more than immediately from the Death of the Predecessor to have pursued the Actions of the Successor. The general Knowledge of the Story of those Times, and the little difference of any of them from the Times immediately going before, were Aim enough to mind the Reader what he should expect. But being now to collect the life of a King long since out of mind, and, as I must say, the First of our Kings, and consequently the Birth of the Kingdom too; and to relate the Carriage of Things in an Age much different from the present, and not particularly enough delivered to us: it cannot be less than necessary for the Work it self that we a little cast our Eye upon the condition of those Times so long before pass'd: seeing that in a Course never so little out of the Common tract the Apprehension is very easily misled, unless that by the Help of some Light (although but small and general) it be in some measure rectify'd. Withal, the Expectation of the Reader would, for his own better fatisfaction, be somewhat prepared, least, fancying to himself another Manner of Frame and Carriage of things than indeed those Times could bear, he reject the Knowledge of the Actions then in hand; for that they were not of that Nature, nor managed in the Garbe, that he looked for, and so, unsatisfy'd in his Fancy, loose the benefit his Judgment might otherwise perhaps have made in Knowing them.

2. Therefore we must not expect such a solemn and steddly manage of Affairs then, as now in a full grown state, furnished with the ministry of all her necessary Members: neither must we attribute so little to the Person of Ælfred (the Prince whose life we here endeavour to collect) as to judge the Actions no otherwise his, than as the Actions of States are ordinarily ascribed to the Prince their Head. Besides we must know that the War it self (which at this time was the whole Affair) moved not on either side with that Design, nor yet with so deliberate Advice, as at this Day (we know) it is necessary that it must do. The Policies and Cunning of the former Ages were, through the Barbarism that generally overran all Europe, long before this time buried. And though by the Benefit of Letters they have been again revived to us, yet were they but little known, until the Discovery of Printing (long time after this) divulged them. So as the World (at the time we speak of) was from her own Actions to get again Experience, whence for after Ages she might draw Conclusions to hold as Rules and Principles of her Proceedings; but unfurnished of them for the present, their Business went an open and a simple way: in which as

1 Tho', through Barbarism, the Policies of Former Ages were unknown at this Time; yet the Saxons us'd a great deal of Art in their Wars, as appears from the Relations given by Witichind [Annal. Saxon. pag. I. Ed. Franc. MDCXXI. fol.] and several other Authors: which seem the rather to be credited, because the German Nation (of which the Saxons were a Part) was never wholly conquer'd by the Romans, as were Gallia, Spain, &c.

necessity

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

3

Necessity (for the most part) did advise them, so fortune generally did determine of the Event.

3. Here was as then but little Correspondence with Forreign Parts, indeed no great Intelligence of either them or their Affairs; whereby it often happened that an unexpected Enemy was encountred by an unprepared People, infinite Numbers were to be resisted by a few and them taken on a sudden, continual new Supplies of Assailants, sustained by the indefatigable Valour and Industry of the same Defendants, not otherwise provided than Necessity and the present Advice of the Commander taught them. To say the truth, it cannot properly be termed a War, but rather a continual and universal Rage of Misery that the times brought forth, through the Spoil and Rapine of a barbarous and cruel People, who, being as destitute of Faith and Honour as of Humanity and Religion, followed no other Rule of their Proceeding, than as their licentious Appetite did lead them; naturally false and fierce, bred in Hardness, and put upon Necessities, unsatiably greedy of the Booty that was before them, and accordingly their Assaults every where, and the continuance of them (at least in expectation) perpetual. No Truce, no Peace, (the common Respits or Periods of an Honourable War) but only when an overthrow had rendred them too weak without new Supplies to assail, or when a prosperous Depredation had a while delaid the Appetite of their insatiable Covetousness. And then although (as to the Form) they often came unto the Conclusion of a Peace, yet were they but Peaces in name and not in deed, the barbarous Enemy never suffering himself in any thing to be restrain'd, but by the want of present Will or Power.

4. Now we must know that of five great Plagues or Scourges, wherewith they remember this Island to have been afflicted, that is to say the Romans, Picts and Scots, Saxons, Danes, and Normans, this of the Danes (with whom our Ælfred had so much to do) is judged to have been beyond Comparison the most miserable. In truth that of the Romans had more of Benefit than of Calamity in it. The Britains (we may imagine) were then in the lowest Declension of corrupted Nature, captivate Slaves of all vile Affections, mutually practising and suffering in them. It pleased God in them, as well as in other Nations, first to make Trial how the Light of Reason (which the Romans in great measure brought them) would work upon their Hearts for reclaiming them from so gross and savage Barbarism. And though that Light was not introduced without War and Bloodshed, yet was it more tolerable than that intestine War which it diverted. As for the subjection that followed the Britains overthrow, it was not (of a long time) very grievous in it self, and when it was, it was recompensed with Peace, Civility, and Letters: until such time, as that the Divine Justice (after the fulness of long Suffering and Patience) began to enter into Judgment with either Nation, for 'not conforming themselves to the Rule of Light they had, nor glorifying him in that

The Life of King Ælfred the Great. Book I.

I This ought rather to be attributed to the Contempt of the Christian Religion, and the Persecution of the Professors thereof; it having been Planted in Britain, (and the greatest Part of the Roman Empire) long before the Arrival of the Saxons. And that the Christians were not more secure here than in any other Place, appears particularly from the tenth General Persecution, wherein such a Prodigious Number perished in this Island under Maximian, who was resolved to be as cruel in the West as Diocletian was in the East; an Account whereof Robert of Gloucester has left us [MS. in Bibl. Bodl. Digb. ccv. fol. 34. b.] in these old Rymes:

Two Empours were of Rome. that one higt Dioclician
 And another his felawe. that higt Maximian
 Thei weren bothe at one tyme. the one in the Est ende
 And the other in the West half. Cristendom to schende
 For the luther Maximian. Westwarde hider sougt And Cristen men that he fonde. to luther deth he brought Chirches he feld adon. that none ne mygt stonde
 And alle the Wokes that he fonde. owher in eny londe
 He wolde hem late brenne. amydde the heige strete
 And Cristen men alle fle. and none on lyve lete
 Sithe God was brone. ther ne was for Cristendom
 In so litel astounde ydo. so gret Martirdom

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

5

that degree that they had knowledge of him. And then the Roman Empire soon finding the Approach of her fatal Ruin, (like as in a violent Oppression of the Heart, the Spirits, drawn from all the parts of the Body, leave them destitute to go and succour it, but not prevailing perish there together, so the Roman Empire in desperate Sowndings and Distractions labouring now for Life) in great and sundry Expeditions drew from the Britains, not only all the Choice and Flower of the Nation, but, in a manner, all the Men, who either perishing with the Roman Affairs, or at least never returning, the residue, that were the Dregs, the simple and unserviceable of the People, of abject Minds, and destitute of Wit and Courage for their own Defence, by occasion of their Weakness, gave opportunity to the Picts and Scots (that were the second Scourge) with great and often Incurfions for a time to afflict them.

for ther was in one Monthe seventene thousand and mo for Goddis love martired. was here nougt gret wo Withoute gret halowen. that thei longe helde in torment
As Seynt Cristyne, Seynt Feyth. and eke Seynt Vincent
And Sebastian and other many. as men may in Chirche rede
And many one ther turnede ageyn. to hethenesse for drede Amonge alle thise in this Londe. ther were many one Chilke tyme martired. and Seynt Albon was that one
That was the first martyr. to Englonde that come Dere hath many one. ybougnt trewe Cristendome.

I know indeed that the Learned Mr. DODWELL, [Diff. Cypr. de paucitate Martyrum, §. 75.] Bp. Fleetwood, [Præf. ad Part. II. Syllog. Inscript.] and Mr. Tyrrell [Preface to the first Vol. of his General Hist. of England, p. 24.] do think that there was no Persecution in Britain at this time; but since Gildas, [lib. de Excid. & Conq. Brit. c. VI, VII.] Bede, [de sex Ætatibus mundi, p. 112. Tom. II. Opusculum ejus Ed. Col. Agr. MDCXII. and H. E. c. VI.] and divers Authors besides are express against them, I must profess my self to decline this Opinion 'till these Authors are confuted by better Arguments than those drawn from Inconsistence in Chronology; because we know the Monks were very bad Chronologers, being content to put down Things as they found them related without observing the strict Rules of Time: And consequently the Proofs taken from thence must be reckoned very unconvulsive.

The Life of King Ælfred the Great. Book I.

5. The Britains then came to partake of a greater Blessing: true Religion shined on them, and for a while they took pleasure in the light thereof: but soon forgetting what became the Receivers of so great a Benefit, God's Hand then more heavy upon the Prophaners and Trampers of Grace, than before of Reason, brought upon them the heaviest and most exemplary Judgment that has almost befallen any Nation; when by the People, whom they invited for their Aid against their Enemies, after 400 years War and Affliction with them, they were in the End, not overcome or expelled only, but in a manner extirpate and cut off from their Inheritance, a Remnant only in a Corner of the Land reserved to keep on foot the Memory both of the long Sufferance and Justice shewed on them.

6. This fatal Scourge (the third in Number) was by the Hand of the Saxons and the Angles, who both drove out the Britains and succeeded in their place, and who after as great a light falling again into as foul a Relapse were (though in a different manner) counted to have suffered a greater Affliction than the Britains did.

7. The Saxons, after they had served the Britains turn, enticed by the sweetness of the Land to make further use of the footing they had got (to which their Differences with the Britains gave them an occasion) and augmenting evermore with new Arrivals, made good unto themselves such portions of the Land as was necessary for their present Entertainment, planted themselves in Colonies, and each Colonie grew at length into a little Kingdom; and having soon received Christianity, (which the Saxons did embrace with great Devotion) it flourished with them, and their Kingdoms seemed established with it. So that it was

1 These Differences proceeded from the unreasonable Demands of the Saxons, being not content with the Conditions agreed upon first with the Britains, who were punctual in their Performance till such time as they perceived that the Saxons main Design in their Coming over was to get the whole Island into their own Hands.

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

not long¹ e're all that part of Britain, which we properly call England, became the Dividend of the Saxon Heptarchy, namely Kent their Kingdom of Kent: Sussex and Surrey the Kingdom of South-Saxons: Cornwall, Devonshire, Dorsetshire, Somersetshire, Wiltshire, Hampshire and Berkshire the Kingdom of West-Saxons: Essex and Middlesex of the East-Saxons: Yorkshire, Durham, Lancashire, Westmorland, Cumberland, Northumberland, and the Northerly part of Lincolnshire the Kingdom of the Northumbrians: Huntingdon, Rutland, the Southerly part of Lincolnshire, Northamptonshire, Leicestershire, Darbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Oxfordshire, Cheshire, Shropshire, Glocestershire, Worcestershire, Staffordshire, Warwickshire, Buckinghamshire, Bedfordshire, and Hartfordshire, these made the Kingdom of the Mercians; And Norfolk, Suffolk, Cambridgeshire and the Isle of Ely the Kingdom of East-Angles. The Midland-Angles, and the Middle-Saxons, never had distinct Kingdoms of their own, but were subject the first to the Mercians, and the other to the East-Saxons at first, and after to the Mercians also.

8. And so while the Saxons present success yet satisfying their Minds kept them off from falling upon new Temptations, they grew so zealous in Religion, that their Devotion was conspicuous throughout the Church; 'till the Encrease and Popularity of every Kingdom, making their own Territories seem too straight for themselves, and their Neighbours too far extended. And then they quarrel with one another about their Confines and afterward (according to the Ambition of their Princes) for Superiority, 'till at the last they wholly became the seed-plotts of an Intestine War, of all other the most to be abhorred. For fraternal Wars, having little of honourable to justify them, and consequently to yield Repose to the Mind (that naturally affects the glory of an honest Action as her proper rest) they drive the Mind (as Achitophel did Absalom) to fortify it self with obduracy against the sense of Guilt. And then War, (which is not good but by permission; nor honourable, but when the End is reasonable, and the Manner fair) wanting in civil Broils those due Boundaries, gives such a loose to all Licentiousness, as that nothing can be more pernicious to a State than it. To say truth, the success of the Saxons Discord was, that they did not more waste and consume, every one the Potency of his Neighbour, than corrupt and ruin the Manners of their own People. So that in process of time (saith Hoveden) all Virtue became so wholly abolished in them, as no Nation whatsoever might compare with them for Treachery and Villany. So precipitate a Depravation did the Licentiousness of mutual Rapine bring upon them.

¹ This Account is not accurate, the Division into Counties being made after the Union, without any respect to the Heptarchy. For the South Parts of Oxford and Gloucester-shires belong'd to the West-Saxons; so that Dorchester in Oxford-shire was the Seat of their Bishop. Northumberland also contain'd the South Part of Scotland, not to mention the Uncertainty of the Bounds by reason of continual Wars.

The Life of King Ælfred the Great. Book I.

9. In this sort did their sin and punishment both increase together, 'till the worse weed outstripping far the other put the Divine Justice to seek a smarter Rod, who punishing not so much for Vengeance as Amendment, (that the Correspondence of the Chastisement with the Offence might the better bring them to the knowledge of their fault) brings in the Danes (the fourth of the 5 Scourges) as it were on purpose to¹ afflict the

1 The Saxons had now arrived at the very Height of Wickedness; which so far provok'd the Wrath of God as to bring so dreadfull a Judgment upon this Nation, that for above cc years this barbarous People hardly ever ceas'd to come over in whole Swarms, and to destroy all before them. That this Decay of Religion and Piety, and Indulging all manner of Vice, was the cause of so severe Punishment, is generally asserted by our Historians, and amongst the rest by John Hardyng, who gives [Chron. fol. xciii. a. Impr. Lond. MDXLIII.] us this Relation of the Corruption of those Times:

Thus in Defaute of lawe and peace conserved
 Common profyte, was wasted and devoured
 Percvall [1. parcial e MS. Bodl.] profyte, was sped and ob-
 And Venus also, was commonly honoured (served
 For lechery and aduoutry, was moſte adoured
 Amonge them was common, as the carte waye
 Wyot, robbery, oppreſſyon, nyght and daye.

Saxons

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

Saxons in the same manner that they had vexed one another.

10. Now though the Britains were to a very small part cut off and chased from their Native Soil, and the residue being driven into a Corner were not otherwise secure there, than by the wild and mountainous site thereof, and the best of their Country possess'd by Enemies even before their Eyes: yet was it wonne from them but by parts, at several times, and many years intervenient. It was possess'd by those who first at the Britains Request left their own Country, and came and helped them in their Miseries, had in Kent and in the Northern Parts (which then lay wast by reason of the Picts) their first Plantation by permission, served the Britains as Bulwarks, and, by exposing themselves, long time secured them against their feared Enemy. Neither did the other accessions of the Saxons want a reasonable ground (at least by the rule of War) in that they were necessary for securing themselves against the Britains, who, after their turns served, sought again to have expelled them. So as the Saxons saw themselves in a manner pressed, they must invade or hazard to be excluded; whereupon quarrelling, and coming to the trial of the Sword, the Saxons, in the course of War, first maintained their own Right, and then invaded that of their Assailants, and in both prevailing, used their Victory fairly, planted, built, manured and inhabited, established Laws of Equity and Peace, and lived a more reclaimed life than at that time the Britains themselves had done: which present, and before their Eyes condemning them of their enormous life, must needs take off, though not the Sense, yet the Aggravation of their great Calamity; in that their fortune had subjected them to those that had already freed them from the slavery of a more savage Enemy and were of life and merit better than themselves.

11. But the Danes (whose turn it was now to be the Scourgers of the Saxons, as the Saxons had been lately of the Britains) though as Germans they were all
one

The Life of King Ælfred the Great. Book I.

one Nation with the Saxons, yet were they a People of another manner of Condition, and the most baneful afflictors and subverters of a settled State, that ever Kingdom could be overrun withal. They were not all of them Colonies sent forth by lot (as most of the Saxons had been) to seek their seats of new Plantation, but the promiscuous Vent of all Germany, and for the most part the Refuse-Scum of all the Maritime Parts thereof, Goths, Danes, Norwegians, Suedes, Frisians, and others here and there from about the Banks of Rhine, who rejecting Labour and civil Habitation gave themselves to no other Course of Life, nor sought they other Sustainment, than only Theft, Robbery, and Violence, practising the using of Shipping for the love of Piracie, and like flights of Wasps and Hornets coasting all about, whatsoever fertile place by any was discovered the whole swarm soon seized upon it, and made a Prey of the Plenty, sucking out the sweet of others Labours, and devouring whatsoever others industry had with their sweat prepared. And yet (like Pharaoh's leane Kine, nothing fatter for the Fatlings they had eaten) their Booty tended not to their Enrichment, nor ever minded they, from the advantage of their abundant Purveyance, to augment the manner and condition of their present life, but as their Home was alway where they themselves were, so what they got was ever there devoured. As for their Wives and Children, that usually followed them whereso'er they went, we learn of Tacitus it was the manner of the Germans Life and Warfare to have them with them in Tacitus is to be understood of the Germans Excursions by Land only, not of their Expeditions by Sea. For we do not find that the Danes had any Women or Children with them, it being contrary to their Custom of Exercising Piracie to be troubled with such unnecessary Companions; tho' it must be allow'd that if they had us'd to travel in a great number of Ships, the extraordinary Affection there generally was between Husband, Wife and Children (of which Cluver in his Germ. Antiqua has given a particular Relation) would have oblig'd them to go together.

their

their Army, and that the sight of Wife and Children was their great Incentive unto Courage and to Resolution, not any argument of their design or purpose of Plantation. When once they arrived where they hoped to speed, their manner was to fortify some place, or (if they could) surprize some Town or City for their Rendezvous, and when they had devoured it and all that was about it, they made Excursions wheresoe're new hopes invited them, 'till all being wast within the reach of their Inroads, they quitted that place, and made a new and unexpected seizure of another, divers bands of them at the same time using in several places the same or such like Course of Rapine that some of them did in others.

12. Nor was the Wealth and Plenty only of the Land thus made a Prey unto them, but the People themselves, without Regard of Sex or of Condition, their Cities, Towns and Houses, went all to Sword, to Fire and to Ruin, 'till at last there was not any place left so entire unto the Saxons as that they might reckon that there yet they had a place of settled Habitation. And after all their Misery was not more in what they suffer'd at the hand of the Enemy, than in the ensuing Barbarism and general Impiety that with it entred in among themselves.

13. For lighting on the time that the Saxons, wholly given to Violence and the mutual Spoil of one another, had so far made their own way to Barbarism, as that they had rejected Literature and all good Studies, and even abandoned both Justice and Religion, the Danes seconding of them, in that impious Work of theirs, for a matter of fourscore years together (from the 10th year of Brihttric the West Saxon 793. to the sixt year of Ælfred 878.) did at last introduce it in so great a Height, as that after the spoil of the Country, slaughter of the Men, their Wives and Children, or Captivating of them, burning their Cities, sacking their Monasteries (the few, and in those times the almost only Nurseries and Bulwarks of Religion, of Letters, and Civility)
 prophaning

prophaning their Churches and appropriating to themselves their Treasure, (their chiefest Riches of the Land) they not only laid the Country in a manner wast and at once deprived it both of Religion, Learning, Virtue, Beauty, Strength and Plenty, but took away all means in humane judgment from any sudden change to good, either of themselves or of the People they had so subdued.

14. Thus the Saxons first weakened and laid open with their Discords, and then depraved and lost in themselves with their ensuing Vitioufness, became in the end a common Prey unto a People so far at first inferiour to themselves, as to say truth they neither had the Design, the Discipline, the Judgment, nor the Courage, that otherwise had been necessary to have made a Conquest of them. Till Ælfred happily surviving the fate of all his Neighbour Kingdoms and (in a manner) likewise of his own, and becoming sole head of the few that remained undevoured of the War and unrevolted to the Enemy, did not only for his time give a stop and countermand to the Dane his licentious Courses, and repair in all Kinds what his barbarous Cruelty had ruined, but so mightily broke and subdued the Power of him, as that from being Lord and in a manner sole Possessor of the Country he brought him at last to be no more than a Colonie, and a Vassal of his own Kingdom. Nevertheless after his Grandchild's Death obtaining again with somewhat more liberty the Channel of their wonted Current, for almost 300 years together (although with various fortune) they held on their Course even to the coming in of the Norman, the last of those five Plagues that have before been reckoned.

15. But now how deplorable soever the Condition of the Natives at those times were, and how admirable soever the Spirit of that Man, by whose Abilities the Peace and Liberty of the Country were restored, yet shall the Relator hardly find the means to make so handsome a Delivery of the Matter, as not to become soon soon irksome to the Reader ; seeing the Actions on both parts always prosecuted in the same manner, and much what with the same Event, with little more variety wherewith to entertain the Reader, than only the variety of Names and Numbers, Time and Place : And even of them also the Originals have been too too sparing.

16. That excellent Historian Tacitus in the Life of Tiberius ¹, quarrels with his Subject as beating too much upon the same thing. Nobis in arcto & inglorius labor, saith he. — Easdem exitu causas conjungimus obvia rerum similitudine & satietate. But with how much greater and more just cause might I complain of the Times I now collect, when the War (for so much as remains to us) with all the Changes and Closes thereof, affords but little more than what is every day represented to us by Children in their Playing at Prison-Ball? IncurSIONS, Rapine and Depredations, on the one side, sometime repulsed, sometime intercepted with Recovery of the Booty by those of the other side. The War never interested more than the two Parties, assailing and defending : there was no third, that might be gained by the one, or provoked by the other, or perhaps indifferently feared of them both ; therefore there were no solemn Embassies, nor sought Confederations, no forreign Aids, nor By-designs of the Associates, that make more business than the War it self which they pretend to quiet. And as for the Virtues themselves, that in these wars did ever do the service, to wit, constant Courage, Vigilance, and never fainting Industry, they afford not always Matter pleasant in Discourse, though always Matter worthy of true Admiration. Other business than in this manner there was not any. So as the singleness of the Affair affording very seldom any Ground for strange, or unexpected Accident, and the Nakedness of Matter, not being accompanied with the Cause and Reason of the Action, must needs make the Relation, not only to want variety enough wherewith to please, but, thorough the similitude of things done, incur the same Tedioufness and Distaste, that Iteration and Tautology would do.

¹ Annal. lib. 4to.

The Life of King Ælfred the Great. Book I.

17. And as simple as the Affairs were in themselves, the Particulars of them have not yet remained to us, but time in them likewise has bereft us of the Variety of Circumstances, and rather given us to understand, that there were such and such things done worthy enough of Note, than instructed us in the Particulars what they were.

18. For the Writers of those Times, although that living, some of them in Ælfred's Life time, some of them near after, are presumed to have had Knowledge particular enough of all the Passages of the King's Life and Actions, yet as if they had more feared Posterity should loose the Judgment, how to value the Actions of the King, than the means to come to the full and perfect knowledge of them, they have rather declaimed in Commendation of him, than writ the Actions of his Life, extolling in general his Wisdom, and his Courage, and admiring his admirable Victories in such and such places, when in the mean time they omit the Particulars, the Manner, Danger, Odds of Numbers, Difference of Provisions, and other Circumstances that made the business difficult, the Counsel, Vigilance, and Magnanimity of the King, which known had not only edged the Reader's Affection with a more thirsty desire after the event of such ambiguous streights, but beyond the reach of their weak Acclamations have eternized him in the same height of Honour, that he was then beheld in the just Mirrour of the Age he lived in.

19. But as for the prejudice of the Writer, it is not much material; for having no aim of thought, by the benefit of a choice Subject to steal into the repute of an Historian, it shall be more than sufficient recompence for my good Will, if in any sort I may be able (for much is not to be expected) to bring again to Life the Honour of that Prince, who having been the happy
Founder

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

15

Founder of our Monarchy and Lineal Ancestor (in Male or Female Line) of all our Monarchs, and an Eternal Honour to them both, has too too early been obscured if not buried in forgetfulness.

20. And now having briefly toucht upon the Course and Fashion of those times, that the Reader, levelling his Expectation with the Pitch of their Affairs, may upon evener Terms fall upon the Perusal of the Story, I shall forthwith enter into the Relation, which (according to our scant Memorials) was as followeth.

21. The Saxon Heptarchy having through their Disorders (as we toucht before) run diverse fortunes, ^{The decline of the Heptarchy.} tending all to Change and Diminution, came at last to be contracted into the form of a Tetrarchy, to wit into the Kingdoms of the West-Saxons, of the Mercians, of the East-Angles and of the Northumbrians, the other Kingdoms being all swallowed up of these. And as in the time of the Heptarchy the most Active and Powerful of the seven Kings was for the time being counted as Sovereign of the whole, and by those that derive and continue the Line of Succession from the British Kings ^{Potency of the West-Saxons.} unto the Norman, reckoned as sole Monarchs of the English, so that Potency at last resided in the Kingdom of the West-Saxons; which including then within it the Kingdom of Kent and South-Saxons, contained all that Part of England which lieth Southward of the Thames and Severn until you come to Wales. As for the Kingdom of the Northumbrians, although at times it had often born the Sway and Sovereignty among the other, yet came it at length to be the weakest of the four, and the Kings it had rather Reguli than Reges, in comparison of what it formerly had been. Mercia and East-Anglia were likewise in their Decline, their Princes given wholly to devotion, and but little Active, their Countries annoyed with the Danes, and their People much in Disorder through that occasion.

22. Æthelwolf the Son of Echbright was at this time ^{Æthelwolf.} King of the West-Saxons, a Prince of the prime Bloud and Lineage of all the Saxon Kings, deriving lineally from from Woden, who among the Ancient Germans had not only the Repute of a Sovereign, but of a Deity, as by the two Week-Days Wednesday and Friday, consecrate to him and to his Wife Frea, is notorious enough. Æthelwolf, from them descended by Ancestors, that for diverse Descents together had now been Christians, became a most Zealous Professor; and having in his Father's Life time entred into Sacred Orders, he was at first made ¹ Bishop of Winchester, but afterward, upon his Father's death, and failance (perhaps) of other Issues, he was necessitate cogente (saith Huntington) deraigned and made King of the West-Saxons. And taking to Wife a pious Lady named Osburg, Daughter of the famous Earl Oslac, (whose Ancestors of the same Lineage were by Cerdic, first King of West-Saxons, made Governours of the Isle of Wight) he had by her five Sons, ² Æthelstan, Æthelbald, Æthelbright, Æthelred and Ælfred. These in their several times were all of them Kings, the first of Kent in his Father's Life time, the other of West-Saxons, successively after his Death. He had also a Daughter named ³ Æthelswitha, whom he married to Burrhed King of Mercia.

His Children.

23. Ælfred though last and least of the five Sons had yet the first place in his Parents Affection, there from his Infancy appearing in him not only a sweetness of Favour and Countenance above the rest, but also an Excellence of Spirit, of Wit and Disposition. And being therefore their Darling he was in his tender years brought up with them in the Court, (a thing not usual in those days, the Saxons perhaps observing somewhat

¹ He was only Subdean not Bishop, as is well observed by Bishop Godwin, [de Præs. Angl. pag. 262. Lond. MDCXVI.] and is more evident from Tho. Rudborne's Historia Major, lately publish'd by Mr. Wharton. [Vide p. 200. Vol. I. Angliæ Sacræ.]

² Mathew Westm. says [Flor. Hist. sub an. DCCCXXXVII.] he was his Bastard-son, and several other of our Historians call him his Brother.

³ She died in the year 888, and was buried at Pavia. See the Saxon Chron. See more of her towards the end of this History.

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

of the fashion of the *Gauls*¹, not publickly to admit their Children to their presence till they were grown up and able to bear Arms,) where while the towardliness of the Child fed Æthelwolf's Thoughts with the Expectation of something more than ordinary in him, to give the best furtherance he could unto his Hopes, he bethinks himself of sending him to Rome, there to receive the Benediction Apostolical of that Chair, of which he (having once been of the Clergy) was ever a great Adorer.

sent to Rome.

24. What was Æthelwolf's direct purpose herein, we may diversly conjecture but not determine. It is possible he might judge it available for Ælfred's future Establishment in some Kingdom (as Kent or Suffex) that he particularly intended to bestow upon² him.

Yet

¹ Cæs. lib. VI.

² Mr. Tyrrell [Gen. Hist. of Eng. Vol. I. l. V. p. 262.] is of Opinion, that he was not Anointed King of any Present Dominions, which he also thinks plain from an Old MS. in the Cononian Library, which says he was Anointed in successorem paterni regni. But since the Welch Annals, publish'd by Percy Enderbie in the year MDCLXI, affirm [see lib. I. pag. 216.] that King Æthelwolf subdued a great Part of Wales, and since Huntingdon [Hist. lib. V. p. 348. Ed. Franc. MDCI.] asserts, that this happened the very year wherein Ælfred was sent to Rome, I believe he was Anointed King of South-Wales; which seems also plain from the Saxon Chronicle, which mentions this Conquest of the Welch. Now though it be commonly reckoned that Ælfred was the first Anointed King of England, and therefore Robert of Gloucester thus expresses [fol. 73. b.] his Journey and Inunction at Rome,

Alfred this good man. in the Vere of grace nome
Eigt hundred and sixty. and twelf the kyngdome
First he hadde at Rome be. and for his gret wildome
The Pope Lyonn him blisfed. when he thider come. [is
And the kynges Crowne of this Londe. that in this londe yit
Sette him on and oyled him. or he kyng were I wis
And he was kyng of Englonde. of alle that there come
That ever first anoiled was. of the Pope of Rome
And lithe other attir him. of the Archbischope echone
So that bifore him. kyng anoiled was ther none.

[Agreeably to which it is said in a certain MS. in the Bodlejan Library, (Laud. C. 22.) ISTE ALVREDVS FVIT PRIMVS IOEX ANGL. QVI REGIAM VNCTIONEM ACCEPTIT (for unctio-

Yet I find in the Apology¹ for Oxford (for the MS. it self I have not seen) that an incertain Author in his Marginal Notes upon Ranulph Higden affirms, that Æthelwolf had such Direction from an Angel in a Dream, in these words: Atulphe Rex dilecte Dei, quid moraris? mitte filium post-genitum ad Rom. Pontificem, ut ab ipso inungatur in Regem Anglorum, & sic ab ipso procedat unctio Regalis ad ceteros Reges ipsius regni in perpetuum duratura. Omnipotens Dominus filium tuum elegit in principem super Anglos, quia regnum Angliæ est regnum Dei in illo, & dic Swihuno quod ipse vadat cum filio tuo ad Rom. Pont. quod ipse homo justus est in conspectu Domini, &c. And this saith that Note is in the life of St. Alfred, writt by St. Neotus.

25. That Æthelwolf's purpose might be promoted by some Dream that he had, is not unlikely; but whether we may receive the whole particulars of this Dream in such sort as the Note delivers them, I know not: if yea, then must we refer the first Nomination of this Kingdom by the Name of Anglia or England to the Angel's Auspication of King Ælfred's Reign. But I must confess I am very much to seek, whom he there meant by² St. Alfred; for besides that I no where find *nem accepit in another MS. of Archbishop Laud's, f. 10. b. 'tis coronatus erat.) ROMÆ A LEONE III.] I say tho' this be the common opinion, yet there is mention in some Authors of Kings being Anointed before. For Gildas, [de Excidio Brit. c. XIX.] speaking of the Errors in Religion and of the Wickedness of the old Britains, hath this Passage of the British Kings of that Age: ungebantur reges. & non per Deum, sed qui ceteris crudeliores exstarent. & paullo post ab unctoribus non pro veri examinatione trucidabantur, aliis electis trucidoribus. He flourished above MC. Years since, and therefore could not [Selden's Titles of Honour Part I. c. VIII. p. 149. Ed. Lond. MDCXXXI.] deceive us herein by using the Phrase of a later Time, as perhaps it may be thought the Monk of Malmshury doth in his Relation of King Egbert, Son and Successor of King Offa in the Kingdom of Mercia, about the year DCXC. Dulci, saith he, [de Gestis Reg. Angl. lib. I. c. IV.] tamen vitam consumpsit otio, & Egbertum filium ante mortem suam in regem inunctum successorem dimisit.*

¹ Lib. II. Sect. 197.

² Archbishop Usher [in his Chronological Index to his Anti-

find our Ælfred so stiled, I cannot but marvel that St. Neots should write his Life and stile him a Saint, when he lived not to see but the former part of his Reign, which in St. Neots his Judgment was not such as should demerit that Title, as we shall after shew. But leaving Conjectures, it is of all agreed that Æthelwolf de facto, while Ælfred was yet but five years old, sent him with an Honourable Attendance to Rome. And Leo the 4th then Pope, whether carried with the Reverence of the Thing, (he understanding it an especial Mission from God, which the Extraordinary Spirit and Genius of the Child, promising a fortune beyond the condition of a common person, did confirm him in) or whether moving upon Advice, that the Favour sued for (were it available to the Suit or not) did well enough conduce to his own Affairs, his Authority receiving more in conferring the Honour, than the Party himself in accepting of it, in those his tender years, in his Father's Life time, and while three of his Elder Brothers were yet living, anoynts him for a King, crowns him, stiles him his Adopted Son, and plentifully bestows his Apostolick Blessings on him.

Anointed
King in his Infancy.

26. Some have been of Opinion, that this Unction of Ælfred by Leo 4th was not that Ceremony of Anointing Kings, (as at their Coronations) but rather the Chrisme used in Confirmation, and, by mistake of the Monks, taken and related for Regal Unction: which going in Diminution of that which is generally reputed to have been intended and done as an especial Honour to this our Ælfred, I must so far oppose as offer it to Judgment, whether likely the Religious that have writ that quitates Brit. Eccl[esi]e, sub an. DCCCLXXXIII.] reads Regis for Sancti; but which is the right I cannot tell, because I know not where the MS. Copy of Hen. Huntingdon now is, from whence the said Note was taken; tho' the greatest part of the MSS. of Mr. Thomas Allen, to whom that also belong'd, came into the Bodlejan Library after his Death by the Care of Sir Kenelm Digby.

Infantem Ælfredum oppido ordinans, unxit in Regem, & in filium adoptionis sibi met accipiens confirmavit. Ass. Men. Ælfredus that passage could be so far mistaken, as not to distinguish betwixt Regal Unction and the Chrisme, a Ceremony of the Church at that time common and in frequent use? especially Aster a Learned Bishop, then living, and Malmesbury an understanding and most judicious Monk? both which affirm that it was Regal Unction, and Malmesb. that it was accompanied with Coronation. Besides I conceive it was not agreeable with the practice of the Church that Ælfred at that Minority should receive Confirmation, when as they² confirmed none till they were grown of Maturity of years and Understanding to give an Account of their qui unctionem regalem & coronam à Papa Leone olim Romæ suscepit. & alibi, qui Ælfr. regem inunxerat. Quem Leo P. (sui Patris rogatu) oppido ordinans unxit in Regem. Flor. Wig. Quem Leo in regem benedixit. Hunt. & Hoved. Quem & sanctificat in Regem, & filium à charismate nominavit, ut modo sub manu Episcopi solemus accipientes parvulos filios nominare. Æthelwerd. Regiæ coronæ honore ab Adriano II. Rom. Pontifice rursus honestatur. Edwardus Higgon, lib. IV. cap. 8. MS. as if he had been twice crowned as well by Adrian as by Leo. SPELMAN.

1 And agreeably to this, an Anonymus Author in Sir Kenelm Digby's MS. num. 196. tells us, that Ælfred was crown'd again afterwards at Winchester, plainly signifying that he was of opinion, that this Unction (which he is just before speaking of) was Regal. And that's the reason that in the Margin of Robert of Gloucester in the Bodlejan Library (inter Codd. Digb. 205.) f. 73. b. a later hand has told us, that K. Ælfred's being anointed is nothing else than that he was crowned. Alfred (saith he) the King of England first anointed of the Pope with a creme, that it is crowned him. And in a MS. of Sir Thomas Bodley's [NE. B. 1. 6. f. 8. a. and f. 50. a.] 'tis expressly call'd coronacio. To the same purpose likewise in MS. NE. D. 2. 12. f. 42. a. and in another NE. f. 3. 9. and in others which I have seen.

2 The Ceremony of Confirmation [Ham. L'Estrange's Alliance of Divine Offices p. 262.] was consider'd by the Apostles and succeeding Fathers, as the Completoary and Close of Baptism, not that Baptism was ineffectual without it, but an Assistant to it; and therefore in Persons Adult it immediately succeeded the very Act of Baptizing and Dipping. In others it did not follow 'till they came to years of Discretion; which being later in some than others, there was no set number of Years: which is exactly agreeable to the Rule of our Church. But whether this was observed in the Time of K. Ælfred is very uncertain, the Romanists having in this as well as other matters

their Faith and Religion, which Ælfred at 5 years old (though he were a forward Child) could not well be supposed to do. But Æthelwerd makes it clear, when he tells, that after Leo had consecrated him for a King, he from that Act stiled Ælfred his Son, as we after Bishoping (saith he) use to call the little ones our Sons; so that taking expreis Notice of both Ceremonies, and comparing them, he yet concludes Ælfred's Anointing to be Regal. Therefore pursuing the Question no further, I shall confidently receive for Truth that which the Writers all consent in, that is, that Ælfred was anointed for a King, and so return again unto our purpose.

27. Ælfred was but newly returned home with this Honour, when his Father Æthelwolf, with the Advice and Consent of his Clergy and Nobles, first giving the Tenth part of all his Kingdom unto the Church free and discharged of all secular Duty and Service, and adding ters very much alter'd the most Ancient Custom; insomuch that about cccc Years since we find that in England [Comber's Companion to the Temple Part III. p. 220. Ed. MDCLXXXIV.] Children were usually confirm'd at five years of age: And Aquinas informs us [Sum. 3. p. quæst. 72. Artic. 9.] that in the Roman Church Infants were confirm'd very soon after Baptism, upon perswasion, that they were not perfect Christians without it.

I This he did in a Council at Westminster in the Year DCCCLV, or DCCCLV; but whereas our Historians differ in their Accounts, some saying that it was before his Journey to Rome, others that 'twas after, I believe with Sir Hen. Spelman that this Grant was made twice, once before he went to Rome, where 'twas confirm'd by the Pope, and again afterwards in a Great Council. The Words of the Charter are, as printed by Sir H. Spelman out of Ingulfus &c. cum consilio Episcoporum ac Principum meorum consilium salubre ac uniforme remedium affirmantes, consensimus, ut aliquam portionem terrarum hereditariam antea possidentibus omnibus gradibus, sive famulis & famulabus Dei Deo servientibus, sive laicis miseris semper decimam mansionem, ubi minimum sit, cum decimam partem omnium bonorum in libertatem perpetuam donari sanctæ Ecclesiæ adjudicari, ut sit iuta & munita ab omnibus secularibus servitiis, imo regalibus tributis majoribus, & minoribus, sive taxationibus, quæ nos dicimus Winterden, sique libera omnium rerum remissione animarum, & peccatorum nostrorum ad serviendum Deo soli, sine expeditione, & pontis exstructione, & arcis munitione, ut eo diligentius pro nobis ad Deum sine cessatione preces fundant, quo eorum servitutem in aliqua parte levigamus. But since, as Mr. Selden says, [Hist. of Tythes p. 205.] it is very hard from hence to collect, what the exact Meaning was, from this Passage added by Ingulfus [p. 17. Ed. Oxon.] omnium Prælatorum ac Principum suorum, qui sub ipso variis provinciis totius Angliæ præerant, gratuito consensu, tunc primo cum decimis omnium terrarum, ac honorum aliorum siue catallorum, universam dotaverat Ecclesiam Anglicanam per suum Regium chirographum confectum, he doth conjecture [Ibid. p. 206.] that the purpose of the Charter was to make a general Grant of Tythes payable freely; because it seems before, that the [Ibid. p. 207.] Payment of all Tythes had commonly been omitted. Which as it is against the Concurrent Testimony of the Greatest Part of our Ancient Writers, so is it contrary to the very Words of the Statute, and the following Reasons, [Rich. Tillesley's Animadversions upon Mr. Selden's History of Tythes, Lond. MDCCXI. p. 186.] which evidently shew that this Grant was of the Tenth Part of Lands, not of Tythes properly. For (1) Æthelwolf could not give that first which had been given before by Ethelbert upon the Preaching of Augustin the Monk, [see the Laws of Ed. Confessor,] Offa King of Mercia, [see Selden ibid. pag. 201.] and Ælswold King of Northumberland. [Ibid. p. 200.] (2) Whereas those Kings gave Tythes properly, and that not only in themselves, but also in their Subjects, and so should give more than Æthelwolf, who gave but this Decima of his own Land of Inheritance, as appears from his Passing it per Regium Chirographum, (his Royal Charter only, not any Act of Parliament,) from Æthelwerd's de omni possessione sua, the Word hereditariam in the Charter, his Testament in Florence of Worc. &c. yet Æthelwolph is extoll'd by King Edgar [in his Speech to the Clergy in Aitredo Ricwallens de Genealogia Regum Anglorum p. 359. apud decem Scriptorum] and William of Malmesbury, [de Gestis Pontificum Ang. p. 242.] as doing something extraordinary; and therefore this must be more than Tythes. (3) There was no need for Æthelwolf to have ask'd the Consent of his Bishops and Nobles, to give Tythes out of his own Lands, though it might seem requisite to ask Consent to convey so much Land. (4) Æthelwolph gave such a Decima as was lyable not only to Taxes and Exactions of State then, but also to that Trimoda necessitas, of Pontis constructio, expeditio, & Arcis munitio; to which Service Lands only, and not annual Profits, were lyable. (5) If Æthelwolf gave [Seld. p. 207.] the Tythes of prædial and mixt profits, and the Tythe of every Man's personal Possessions were at that time also included in the Gift; then how could there be any newly consecrated Tythes after? (as he endeavours to prove from Charularies in the XIth Chapter,) since all were now given by a Charter in Parliament, nay by Parliamentarie Authority, as he calleth it. (6) If Monasteries and Nunneries (for so the Charter and Edgar's Speech do express) did not at that time enjoy any Tythes, (as his History tells us they did not) then nothing can be more certain than that King Æthelwolf did not give them: And therefore our Author had good reason to say, that he gave the Tenth Part of all his Kingdom unto the Church, &c.

adding

adding thereunto out of his particular Estate a Gift of 300 Marks per annum to the Church of Rome, (which² afterward augmented, and made general over the whole Land, was the same, it seems, which was called Romesbott or Peter-Pence) he himself makes thither a Voyage in Person, and carries back with him his Son Ælfred, (when as yet he was not above seven years old) continuing with him there the space of a whole year. And (as he was altogether addicted to Piety, and Devotion,) he during the time of his Continuance there repairs the Saxon College, which built by one of his Predecessors was by Casualty then burnt down. It is the very same (I take it) which is now the House of the English Jesuits there.

Carried the second time to Rome by Æthelwolf.

28. Æthelwolf returning home again with his Son

1 William of Malmesbury says [De Regibus Angl. l. II. c. 2. fol. 22. a. 27.] trecentas auri marcas, and Brompton [Chron. col. 802, 27.] trecenta talenta. Our Author is mistaken in asserting, that they were employ'd to the same use that Peter-Pence were: for, if we believe Brompton and other Authors, (as well MSS. as printed) one Hundred was given to the Light of St. Peter, a second to the Light of St. Paul, and the third to the Use of the Pope himself. And 'twas after this that he rebuilt the English College; for the Maintenance of which, in Imitation of King Ina and King Offa, he order'd Peter-Pence to be duly paid; which I wonder why Polydore Vergil [Hist. lib. IV. pag. 89, 40, 43.] should call vectigal, as if it were paid to the Pope, as an Acknowledgment, that England was Tributary to him and his Successors; whereas 'tis plain both from the Primitive Institution of it, and the Accounts our Writers give, that 'twas only an Alms: [See Mr. Richard James's Decanizatione Thomæ Cantuariensis & suorum, p. 26, 27. MS. in Bibl. Bodl.] And though Malmesbury calls it tributum, yet no body [See Sir Roger Twysden's Historical Vindication of the Church of England in Point of Schism, c. VI.] ever understood by it, that the Pope became a Superior Lord of the Lay-Fee, but used the word Metaphorically; as we do to this day term a Constant Rent a Kind of Tribute, and to those who pay it, and over whom we have in some sort a Command, we give the Title of Subjects; not as being Princes over them, but in that particular being under us, they are for it styled our Inferiors.

2 Hollingshed fol. 121.

3 It was credibly told me in Rome, that the Revenues of that House were 13000 l. per annum, till Sixtus 5. upon occasion of the Spanish Invasion 1588, took from it 8000 l. per an. saying he should make a wooden Bridg to go into England. SPELMAN.

through France, falls by the way upon a second Match, and takes to Wife ¹ Judith, Daughter to Charles Sir-named the Bald, to the great Discontent of his own Nobility: the Circumstance whereof was thus.

29. One Eadburg, Wife to Brietrick, sometime King of the West-Saxons, had in so high a measure possess the Favour of the King her Husband, as in a Manner to administer the whole Affairs of the Kingdom; but growing licentious with it, while either with false Criminations, or secret Empoisonings, she ordinarily removed the Obstacles of her Designs, aiming by the latter Means to do it, in a faithful and dear Servant of the King's, the Plot so miscarried as that the King first tasted the prepared Cup, and both he and his Servant perished of the same. Eadburg flies, and the Saxons (to pursue her with Infamy that had otherwise escaped their Fury) combine together for her sake, never to suffer any King to Reign over them, that admitted his Wife to sit in the Throne with him. Hence ² grew it to be a Custom among the West-Saxons, that the Wives

West-Saxons
no Queen.

1. Leo Sexte in the Saxon Chron. an. DCCCLIV.
2. So Alex. Menervensis [De Gestis Ælfredi Regis, p. 3. Ed. Franc. MDCIL.] Matthew Westminster, [sub an. DCCCLV.] and Florence of Worcester, [sub an. DCCCLV.] But though [Selden's Titles of Honour, Part I. c. VI. p. 116. Ed. fol.] Æthelwolf broke this Custom, and the Law against the King's Wife did not continue long in force; yet in the Times of some of his Successors there was often a Respect had unto it. For in some Memoirs of the Reign of King Edgar, the Queen is stiled only his Wife, or legitima Regis CONJUX, or Cynninges GEMÆCCA, that is, the King's Wife, and not Queen. In the Subscriptions of King Edgar's Charter of Privileges to Hide Abby by Winchester, yet remaining in Sir Robert Cotton's Library, [sub Effigie Vespasiani A. VIII. See the Learned Dr. SMITH's Catalogue thereof, p. 106.] and written in Letters of Gold in a Hand of the same Age, his Wife Elfhriuh subscribes thus: + Ego Elfhriuh [or Elfrid, see Monastic. Anglic. Vol. I. p. 211.] legitima prefati Regis CONJUX, mea legatione (or concessione, as in the Monast. Angl.) Monachos eodem loco, Rege annuente, constituens crucem impressi, or, as in the Mon. eodem loco + donum regis crucem impressi and also, + Ego Edgisa, predicti Regis AVA, hoc opus egregium crucis taurate consolidavi: or, as in the Mon. Ego Ediva, predicti regis AVA, + hoc donum regis crucis taurate consolidavi. and there are others of that nature of the same time, as

with

Book. I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

25 will appear by consulting the Monasticon. This Ælfthrith is the same that our Historians commonly call Elfrida or Elfthrida, Daughter to Orgar then Earl or Duke (for those Titles were not then distinguished) of Cornwal. And Edgisa was the 3d and last Wife of King Edward, Son to King Ælfred, and Grandfather to Edgar; yet perhaps by reason of this severe Law she durst not stile her self otherwise than the King's Grandmother: for so Ava as well as Avia in those Times denoted. In the same Librarie is also extant a Reformation of the Monastick Life of both Sexes, intituled, Regularis concordia Anglicæ Nationis Monachorum Sanctimonialiumque, [Dr. SMITH, who tells us 'tis a very fair MS. gives us another Title, in his Cat. p. 151. sub Faustina B. III.] and written in Edgar's Time, wherein he takes care of the Monks, and his Wife of the Nuns, that is, his GEMÆCCEAN Ælfþriðe, or his Wife Ælfthrith. And perhaps hence it was, that the Wives of Great Dukes or Earls of that Time in the West-Saxon Kingdom, which after Egbert quickly swallowed up the rest, subscribed by the Name also of Coniux, and not by any Name of Dignity, as if they would abstain from Receiving any Communication of Title from their Lords, as well as the King's Wives did from the Kings. For An. DCCCLXXX, when Ethelred or Eihered, Duke or Earl of Mercia under King Ælfred, by his Charters [Regist. MS. vetustiss. Eccles. Wigorn. fol. 7. 29. 3. 1. 2. 11. &c. in Bibl. Cott.] gave Lands to the Church of Worcester, he subscribed by the Name of Dux and Patricius; but his Wife, being otherwise a Princess and Daughter to King Ælfred, expresses her self in them only thus: † Ego Athelstred CONIUX subscribens confirmavi. and in other Charters: † Ego Æthelstred consensi. Yet they are both together stiled: Æþriæð Aldorman ⁊ Æþelþeo Mercna hlafordas. that is, Ethred the Alderman, or Duke, and Ethelstred the Lords of Mercia, in an Instrument of Werfrid, Bishop of Worcester, in the year DCCCLIV made to the same Church. However notwithstanding in Expressing the Title of the King's Wife, such Respect were sometime after Ethelwolf had to that old Law; yet it also appears, that under the same K. Edgar the Wife was likewise sometimes stiled Queen or Regina: which shews that the use of Regina, or legitima Coniux, without the Addition of Regina, was grown by this time promiscuous in the West-Saxon Kingdom. For the same Queen in a Charter to the Church of Worcester subscribes [in Pat. I. Ed. IV. part. 6. memb. 23.] † Ego Elfyred, or Ælfthriðe, (as in the Monasticon Vol. I. p. 141.) REGINA consensi ⁊ signo crucis confirmavi, which was in DCCCLXIV; and in another to the Church of Ely occurs Ælfthrith REGINA. [Cart. Antiq. in Arce Lond. B. num. 11.] In other Kingdoms of the Hierarchy of that Age, the Title of Regina was still given to the King's Wives. † Ego Ælfthrith REGINA is subscribed with Kenulph King of Mercia in the Subscriptions, [Regist. Wigorn. MS. in Bibl. Cott. and Mon. Angl. Tom. I. p. 122, &c.] of his Charters to the Church of Worcester, and † Sæthriðe, or Sæthryth, REGINA often subscribes with King Bertulph to the same Church. So † Ego Cynethryth Dei gratia REGINA Merciorum, in some other, with King Offa. And of their Kings were neither Crowned, nor stiled Queens, nor had other Title than only The King's Wife given them. But Athelwulf, detesting that Custom of his Country as altogether Barbarous, having married a Daughter of France, omitted not, it seems, to honour her with all the Dues of Right belonging to a Queen.

among

among the Coins of that Age in Sir Rob. Cotton's Library [see the Excellent Dissertation upon the Saxon Coins written and publish'd by the very Curious and Learned Sir ANDREW FOUNTAINE at the End of Dr. HICK'S Thesaurus Linguarum Septentrionalium, Tab. 3.] is one, subscrib'd with CYNEDRYD, (not CENEDRYD, as Mr. Selden reads it) REGIN, and with EOBA, (not EOPA with Selden) on the other side. And Athelwulf's Daughter to King Athelwulf, frequently subscribes, Athelwulf's REGINA with Burghred King of Mercia, or Mercland, in the old Register of Worcester. And at her Marriage, saith Matth. Westm. [sub an. DCCCLII.] Regine nomen promeruit. There is also a singular Example of her in the Chartularie of the Abbey [Bibl. Cotton, fol. 4. and in Col. Ed. Christi Oxon.] of Abbingdon, where she alone by Charter gives to one Cuthwulf her Seruant Lands in Lacing, in these words, † Ego Athelwulf's REGINA, Deo largiente, Merciorum cum consensu meorum seniorum concedens donabo Cuthwulfo, &c. which is very properly us'd by some [Sir Ed. Coke in Prefat. ad lib. IV.] to shew that the Law of England then was, that the Queen in this Island might, as at this day, give or contract as a femme sole. After King Edgar, it seems, the Law of the West-Saxons also utterly vanished, and the Wives of the Saxon Kings were always stiled Queens or Regine. In an Instrument [Regist. Wigorn, Eccles. vetust. fol. 166. MS. in Bibl. Cotton.] that testifies how Agelwin Dean of Worcester (Decanus Wigorniensis Ecclesie; so is his Title of that Time, but a Prior and Convent then supply'd what now the Dean and Chapter do) and his Brother Ordric gave III Cassats of Land in Cundicoran to the Monks there, Edward the Confessor ad confirmationem sermonum illorum subscribes, and then his Queen Edgith thus; † Ego Edgith REGINA consentio. So in a Charter of King Chout to the Abbey of [Cart. 4. Ed. III. num. 53.] St. Edmondsbury, his Wife Alfgisa calls her self, Ego Alfgisa (or Elfgiva, as in Monast. Angl. Tom. I. p. 287.) REGINA. and in a Saxon Charter of his to the same Church he styles her [See Mon. Angl. Vol. I. p. 288.] myne QUEEN ALFGIF, and REGINA mea Alfgisa in the Latin of it, where he speaks of her giving to the Church a Revenue of 4000 Eeles in Lakinghith. It appears also clearly, that the Saxon Queens were always in the later Times of that Kingdom crowned, anointed, and set with the Kings in their Seats of State, as other Queens, and so that Law or Custom which proceeded from Queen Eadburg was soon abrogated.

nom:

And

And this understood at home gave there occasion to a great Conspiracy against him.

30. Ethelbald, his second Son, being, upon the death of Ethelstan his Elder Brother, become Heir Apparent to the Crown, and very acceptable to the People, for that he was a Warlike Prince, and of a great and active Spirit, having drawn unto his Party Alstane, Bishop of Shirburn, (who was always Ethelwolf's Right Hand in Manage of the Affairs of the Kingdom) conspires with him and with Enulph, Earl of Somerset, to keep his Father out, as one too weak for the present Necessity of the State, and to invest him in the Throne. Ethelwolf returns, and finding his Son in Possession, and himself Excluded, (though a Party sufficient of his faithul Subjects offered to have expelled the Usurper and have reinvested him,) yet he wholly carried with pious Regards, and fearing by intestine Discord to give more opportunity to the Pagan Armies, (who, having got Footing on every side of the Island, began to be very busy about him) descends to divide the Kingdom with Ethelbald, and so unequally, as to leave him the Western Part, which was the principal, and contained all that was properly called West-Saxony, contents himself with the Eastern Part, which contained no more than Kent, Suffex and Surrey; and soon after, thinking more of providing for a better Life, and of settling Love and Peace among his Children, by an Hereditary Epistle (saith Florentius) he sets out their several Portions, leaving the Kingdom (parted as it was) to his two Eldest Sons; his private Inheritance he distributes among his Children and near Allyes, and his Money partly to them and partly to pious uses, and so dyes about the space of two years after his Return from Rome.

Ethelbald
conspires.

Ethelwolf's Return.

His Death.

31. The Provision he made for Ælfred now at his Death, was nothing answerable to the Care he had had of him in his Life Time: yet it appears in the Testament of Ælfred, that it was Ethelwolf's Will at his Death, that his Sons, that survived, should succeed them them that died; but that was accidental and nothing certain to Ælfred. The truth was (the troublesome-ness of the Times consider'd) Ælfred's Minority at Æthelwolf's Death was enough to put by any purpose that Æthelwolf had of bestowing a Kingdom on him, it being ordinarily (at that time) cause sufficient to prefer the Cousin before the Son, and a base Issue before the Legitimate. So as Ælfred was in a manner left unto his Fortune, not being above Nine years old at the time of his Father's Death.

Æthelbald.

32. No sooner was Æthelwolf dead, but Æthelbald, infamously sharing with him in his Bed, as well as in his Kingdom, marries Juditha his Mother-in-Law, and after a short Reign of five years and an half dyes a violent Death, and leaves his part of the Kingdom to his next Brother Æthelbert, who being posselt of the other Part from his Father, the West Saxon Kingdom and the Kingdom of Kent became again entired in one, in his Hand. And he likewise Reigning about five years and dying, Æthelred.

Æthelbert.

the Kingdom came to Æthelred,² the fourth of Æthelwolf's Sons.

33. The

¹ A MS. Chronicle in the Publick Library at Oxon. (Digb. 196.) says five years, and so also Rob. of Gloucester, MS. Digb. 205. f. 72. b. After [pag. 4.] two years and an half. Ingulphus two years. Polydore Vergil only five months: I suppose from some MS. History that he had seen. For I find no longer time allow'd to his Reign in a MS. which I have consulted in the Bodleian Library, super Art. D. 19. f. 250. a. After seems to be most exact; for if King Æthelwolf return'd from Rome in the year DCCCLV, and liv'd about two years after, 'tis plain Ethelbald could not Reign above two years and an half: for the Saxon Annals tell us, that he died in the next year but two, namely An. D. DCCCLX, and that his Body was buried at Shireburn. Thomas Rudburn [Hist. Maj. p. 204. Vol. I. Hist. Sacr.] varies but half a year from the Saxon Annals, Æthelweard and Malmesbury (who make him to have reign'd five years and an half;) but then he tells us, that two and an half of them were spent in Debauchery, and the Remainder in Virtue and Piety, being perswaded to Repent by the Exhortations of Swihune Bishop of Winchester. This he had from Girardus Cornubiensis de Gestis Regum West-Saxonum, lib. II. A book which seems now to be lost.

² The third Son in a MS. of Sir Ken. Digby's, n. 196. and in a MS. of Sir Thomas Bodley's, super Art. D. 19. f. 250. a. in which 'tis

sa id

33. The Education that Ælfred in the mean time had, was, according to the usage of the Saxon Nobles, only in Hunting of Wild Beasts, and other Pleasures of the Field; which they the more affected, for that their Children being therewith inured to Labour, Hunger, Watching, Patience and Trial of their Wits, it did both awaken their Industry, and make them the hardier toward the Toleration of any Fortune: but Ælfred soon growing past those Elements of Manhood, being once come to the Age of 18 years, he began to make Demonstration of so full Maturity, as that his Brother Æthelbert (now King) highly esteeming his Assistance, to gain him the more wholly to his Aid in his Wars, promised him, that what Pieces of the Kingdom soever he should by Ælfred's Aiding him recover from the Enemy, should be divided equally between them. To which Ælfred easily agreeing, from time to time faithfully rendered the King the utmost of his Assistance.

The D. D. T.

Ælfred
active and powerfull:

34. But more Thirsting after Literature than either Possessions or Sovereignty, in secret he laments unto himself the unhappiness of his Country, (indeed of the Age he lived in) that could not to a studious Prince afford one Man that was able to teach him the liberal Arts and Sciences, which he perhaps so much the more affected, for that having seen the Court of Rome, (where, and where only in a manner, Letters then flourished) the simplicity of his Native Country apbut addited to Literature.

said that Æthelwolf had but four Sons. And Ælfred is call'd the fourth Son in a MS. Parchment Roll in the same Library, Arch. A. 189. writ almost 300 years since, and in other MSS. which I have seen.

1 For in Imitation of the old Romans, whom we find to have had a great Respect to Learning (and after the Decay thereof in Ægypte and Greece were only celebrated for it) here were divers Statutes for Encouragement of all those, whether Natives or Strangers, who were studiously inclined: upon which Account we do not read that there was ever any great Interruption since it was first profess'd, however some of the Emperors and Popes were notoriously ignorant, and made it their Business to destroy Literature. See Middendorp de Academia lib. III. p. 415. Colon. MDXCIV. 8vo.

peared

peared as Barbarism in his Eyes, in comparison of the Impressions that Rome had put into him. But he that had a Work for him to do, of which he little ever thought, had provided him a School, which, though nothing acceptable in Appearance, was far more proper to enable him for the service that he was to do, than were the Schools of Letters: And that was the School of Travel and Adversity.

The Danes

35. The Land, much wast and weakened with Civil Wars, began abundantly to be annoyed with Flights of Pagan Forreigners, especially the Islands and coasterly Parts of the Land. For Germany, labouring with a surcharge of her own Children, not because that vast Continent was too little for them, but, being wild and overgrown with Woods and Fenns, it could not yield her strength unto the Natives, (who were then careless of Husbandry and of Improvement of their Country:) And therefore from the Baltic Sea and other Maritime Parts thereof so plentifully disburthened her self, as that in England, and in the Western Parts of France and Spain, the Countries to the Coasts lay almost wast, by reason of the frequent Incurfions of Danes, Norwegians, Goths, Swedes, Frisons, and others that here promiscuously went by the Name of Danes.

Great Arrival

36. Among the rest, in the year 866, there came a great Fleet of them under the Command of Hinguar and Hubba, Sons of Lodebroch, a Danish King, (as he is said to be) and these (if there be no Mistake, and that Danubius and Danubia be not miswritten for Dania) are expressly said to have come from the Danube or Donnaw hither into England. And though I could easily enough believe there were no more intended in the word Danubia than only the Country of the Danes (as also that Norici may be mistaken for Norwegi) yet will I not take upon me to determine it so, seeing it may also with probability enough be meant of the River Danubius: neither does the Naming of Lode-

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

31

broch a Danish King very much cross it; because that by a common Name they called all Danes that arrived in that sort, of what Country soever they were. And Rollo, the famous Norman, who is said to be of the same Nation with these, and came over with them (or not long before or after) is expressly said by Nation to be of the Norici. Now the Norici were a People inhabiting either side of the Donnarw about the Head thereof, and there being not far from Basil, where the Rhine grows passable, they might with facility enough find ready passage down the Rhine, the Mouth whereof presenteth them full against the Kingdom of the East-Angles, in which they first Landed. And then if we understand Zeland and the other Islands thereabouts to be the same Islands in which Lodebroch went a Hawking, we shall make an Accident concerning him (which we shall hear anon) far more probable than can be, if we take him to have been a Hawking in any Islands in Denmark.

37. But whence soever they were and which way soever they came, they took (as I said) their first Footing in the Kingdom of East-Angles, and there, at first dissembling the secret Purpose and Resolution which they had, they agreed with the E. Angles that so as they would furnish them with a certain Number of Horse, they without any spoil of the Country would forthwith depart from them, of which the East-Angles being glad, so abundantly provided them, as that (saith the Author) their whole Army was on the sudden become all Horse-men.

It was after, viz. in the year DCCLXXV, according to Bromton [Chron. in vita Aluredi.] or DCCLXXVI, according to Asser and the Saxon Annals. But being warmly receiv'd by King Ælfred [See §. 61. of this Book] he went over into France, where he settled; though in the time of King Athelstan he made a second Expedition into England, being called in by that King to Assist him [Tho. Walsingham's Hypodigma Neustrie, sub initium] against some Potent Rebels that had taken Arms against him, whom after he had vanquish'd 'tis probable those Stones, upon the Borders of Oxfordshire, call'd Holl-rich Stones might be erected in Memory of the Fact. Dr. Plot's Natural History of Oxfordshire cap. X. §. 81. &c.

38. The

38. The use that the Germans made of their Horse was much like that the Britains did of their little Charriots the Effeda , by their speed to get Advantages and to give sudden and unexpected Assaults, of which when once they found the opportunity, then quitting their Horse and casting themselves into the order of a foot Army (which they ever preferred to try their Fortune, in committing their safety rather to their own Manhood, than the Casualty of their Horse) they so (as Cæsar speaketh) attained a great Difficulty to have at once both the Speed of Horse men and the Stability of a Foot Army. And this Kind of mixed Practice aptly served the Turn of these Rovers: for their War being mostly Inroads, Foraging, and Spoil, subject to Skirmishes and unexpected Preliations, this Changeable Service was agreeable to their uncertain Occasions. But for service on Horseback, it had been impossible for the Champion and Coasterly Parts of the Kingdom (where they Landed) to furnish such Numbers of them with Horses, for Strength and Manage fitting for the Occasions of the Field: neither had these Kind of People that Manner of service in Practice. So that whereas it often occurs in the stories of these Rovers that they got Horse and became Horse men, we must understand it, only for their Speedy Transport, and that their Service was like their Ancestors for the most part ever on Foot. The manner is somewhat to this day to be observed in the German Wars in the Service of the Horsemen called Dragoons .

Anno 867.
They surprisè York.

39. The Danes being thus furnished, in the Beginning of the year following, suddenly, and unsuspect of any such Design, march to York , and by surprisè possess

1 They took this Occasion to invade Northumberland , not doubting of Success from these Civil Dissensions between the two Kings. But because John Bromton [Chron. col. 802, 803.] hath given us a quite different Relation of the Cause of this Invasion upon the Northumbers from other Authors, which Sir John Spelman has not taken notice of, I shall put down the whole Story at large as I find it there told. "It seems Osbert King of Northumberland , who had
" his

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

33

his Residence at York, going one day a hunting in a Forrest not far distant, in his Return call'd at the House of one of his Principal Nobles nam'd Bruern Brocard, to Refresh himself, Bruern knowing nothing of the King's Coming, was gone to the Sea-side, according to his Custom, to secure the Shore against Pyrats. However his Wife, who was a Lady of Incomparable Beauty, and Adorn'd with all the Accomplishments due to her Sex, entertain'd the King at Dinner very Splendidly. Osbert was so charm'd with her Wondrous Beauty and Carriage, that, Dinner being ended, he took her by the Hand, and led her to her Chamber, upon pretence of some secret Business of great Importance, being attended to the Door by some of his own Servants, (who were only privy to the Design,) where by Force and Violence he lay with her. Having thus had his Will, he speedily return'd to York, whilst she so lamented and wept, that her Face was extremely alter'd; which caus'd her Husband at his Return to ask the Cause of so sudden a Change, and such an unusual Sadness? Whereupon she told him the whole Matter, how the King had forced her. Which having heard, he comforted her, bidding her not to afflict her self, since she was not able to resist a Man of so great Power; assuring her, because she had told him the Truth, he would not love her less than he had done before; and if GOD gave him leave, he would Revenge both himself, and her, upon him that had Committed the Crime. Immediately after this he sends for all his Kindred and Allies, to whom he Reveal'd the Affront put upon him, and his Intention speedily to Revenge it. To which they all Consenting, and Approving his Purpose, he with them took Horse and rode to York. The King, upon Sight of him, call'd him to him very Civilly; but he, having all his Relations at his back, defied him, renouncing his Allegiance, giving up his Land, and whatsoever else he held of him. This done, without any more words, he withdrew, making no Stay at all at Court. So taking Leave of his Friends, he Sail'd straitways into Denmark, where he made a great Complaint to Codrin, King of the Country, of the Affront offer'd to him and his Wife by Osbert, desiring his speedy Relief and Supplies to put him into a Capacity to Revenge himself. At this News, Codrin and his Danes were very glad, having now some Reason to induce them to invade the English, and Revenge the Injury offer'd to Bruern, who was descended of his Bloud; whereupon raising a vast Army and Navy, he appointed for his Commanders Hinguar and Hubba, who Landed in the Northern Parts, and, taking their way thro' Holderness, destroy'd all the Towns with their Inhabitants; and coming to York provok'd Osbert to come out and fight them, where he was slain with Ælla his Brother King, as is here related by our Author. From which Account we may learn that Roderick was at most but Regulus, or a Petty-King, the chief King being Codrin.

sefs themselves of that City; but being hardly assailed by the two Kings of Northumbria, (Ælla and Osbert) who in the common Danger had laid aside their private Quarrel, and, joyning together against the publick Enemy, had broken the Walls of the City; the Danes then pressed with Despair (that doubles the Spirits which Fear at first takes from one) issued forth, slew both the Kings and most of the Nobility, and forced the Residue to the Conclusion of a Dishonourable Peace. That done, they thence descend the year following to Nottingham, within the Kingdom of Mercia, where Burrhed the King, distrusting of his own sole Resistance against so great an Enemy, sollicites Æthelred and Ælfred (whose Sister he had married) to give him Aid against them. This they readily affording him, came with a fair Army in great Expedition to Nottingham; but the Enemy being secure there by the strength of the Place that was not to be forced, and refusing to be drawn to venture Battle, all that the Brothers could do was to procure an Accord between Burrhed and them, and so returned with their Army:

869.
Return to York;

40. The Pagans¹ return again to York, and there by the space of an whole year entertain themselves in all licentious

1 The Saxon Annals do not mention these Cruelties of the Danes at York; but Matt. Westminster is very particular in them, telling us that they slew both young and old, not sparing the Lives or Chastities so much as of the Nuns; and amongst the rest he gives us a strange Example of an Heroick (if not too great a) Love of Chastity. For Ebba, (afterwards Sainted) then Abbess of Coldingham Nunnery in York-shire, being more afraid of the Loss of her Virginity, than her Life, calling her Nuns into the Chapter-House, made there a most Pathetical Speech to them, setting forth the Lust and Cruelty of the Danes, and also exhorting them to follow her Example in avoiding it; which they all unanimously promising to observe, she then took a Razor, and cut off her own Nose and Upper Lip, in which she was immediatly followed by all the Sisters; which being done, those Cruel Tyrants coming thither the next day with their Forces, and seeing so horrible a Spectacle, they not only ran out of the Monastery and left them, but also gave order to their Followers, that they should set the House on Fire, which was punctually put in execution: so it was burnt to Ashes, together with the Abbess,

licentious and inhumane Cruelties, rioting in the Bloud of Men, Women and Children, and making Spoil as well as Prey of every Thing that came unto their Hands. And their Body being then encreased by the Accession of many Thousands, and driving themselves by their Wast from staying any longer there, they the next Summer set fire on the Town, and so leaving it enter the Kingdom of the E. Angles.

870.
Thence int-to East-Anglia.

41. Now were they both provided and resolved to execute a long intended and dissembled Revenge upon the Abbes, and all her Nunnus, who thought themselves happy in thus suffering Martyrdom for the Preservation of that which was dearer to them than their Lives. Nor did they discharge their Fury upon this Nunnery alone, but upon all the other Monasteries in the Kingdom of Northumberland, having not long before destroyed the Monastery and Church of Lindisfarne, with those of Girwy and Weremuth, besides the famous Nunneries of Sreambale and Tinnouth; most of which were never afterwards rebuilt, and those that were not till several Ages after.

1 Heþ þaþ Ƴe heþe of þoþ Mýnce innan East-Engle. and þæþ þintep Ƴecl namon æt Deodoforþa. And þý þintep Ƴce. Eaðmund cýning him Ƴeþ þeahþ. Ƴ þa Deniscan Ƴige namon. Ƴ þone cýning Ƴce. Eaðmund of-Ƴlogon. Ƴ þ lond eall Ƴeododon. Ƴ þon-diden ealle þa mýnctpe þa hi to comen. On þa ilcan tíma þa comon hi to Meþerhamstede. beorndon and bþæcon. Ƴlogon abbot Ƴ múnecap. and eall þ hi þæþ funþon. Mæcedon hit þa þ æþ þær ful Ƴice. þa hit þeapþ to nan þing. So the Saxon Annals. But since they, as well as our Author, are too concise in the Affairs of this Year, I shall give you a more particular and exact Relation of their Cruelties before the Martyrdom of King Edmund, from Ingulfus, who tells us [pag. 14. Ed. Oxon.] That Winter being ended, the Danes took Shipping and went into Lindise in Lincolnshire, and Landing at Fumberstan, spoiled all that Country, at which time the famous and ancient Monastery of Bardney was destroyed, the Monks and all others being massacred in the Church without Mercy; and when they had stayed there all Summer, wasting the Country, they at last came into Kesteven, in the same Province, where they committed the like Murders and Desolations. Upon which Count Algar drew together all the Youth of Holland, with two Knights his Seneschals, call'd Wibert and Leofric, who marched in the Head of them, together with a brave Body of 200 Men belonging to Croyland Abbey, who being all stout lusty Fellows, were led by one Toly, then a Monk, but formerly a famous Souldier among the Mercians. These taking with them about 300 stout and warlike Men more from Deping, Lantost, and Boston, (to whom also joyned Morchar, Lord of Brunne, with his strong and numerous Family) and being met by the Sheriff of Lincoln, (a valiant and ancient Souldier,) with the Lincolnshire Forces, they muster'd together in Kesieven on St. Maurice's day, gave the Pagans Battle, vanquish'd them, with the Slaughter of three of their Kings, and a great number of Common Souldiers, and afterwards pursued them to their very Camp, where finding a stout Resistance, Night at last parted them, and the Earl drew back his Army. But it seems the same Night there returned to the Danish Camp all the rest of the Princes of that Nation, who dividing the Country among them, had marched out to plunder. Their Names are Barbarous, and too many to be all particularly mention'd, but their chief Kings were Godrum and Basseg, and their Earls or Leaders Hinguar and Hubba, with others, who then came very seasonably with great Forces, a multitude of Captives, and a great deal of Spoil. Their Return being known, the greatest part of the Christians struck with Terror fled away; whilst those that were left, early in the Morning, after hearing divine Service, and receiving the Sacrament, being resolved to dye for Christ, and in Defence of their Country, marched into the Field against their Enemies: but the Earl, perceiving his Forces to be too much weaken'd, appointed Fryer Toly with his five Hundred Men to fight in the Right Wing, because they were the strongest; and Earl Morchar with those that followed him, as also the Sheriff of Lincoln, making other five Hundred Men, in the Left Wing; resolving himself, with his Seneschals, to keep the Main Body, as being most convenient for assisting either Wing if there were occasion. The Danes being now exasperated at the slaughter of their Men, (having buried their three Kings at a place then call'd Laundon, but afterwards from this Burial Trekyngham,) two of their Kings and eight Counts march'd out, whilst the rest guarded the Camp and Captives. But the Christians, because of the smalness of their Number, drawing themselves up in one Body, made with their Shields a strong Tesudo against the Force of their Enemies Arrows, and kept off the Horse with their Pikes. And thus, being well ordered by their Commanders, they kept their Ground all day; but Night coming on, notwithstanding 'till then they had remain'd unbroken, and had withstood the Force of their Enemies Arrows, whose Horses being tired began to flag; yet they very imprudently left an intire Victory to the Pagans. For they feigning a Flight on purpose, seem'd to quit the Feild; which the Christians had no sooner perceiv'd, however their Commanders forbid and opposed it, than they broke their Ranks, and were all dispers'd through the Plain without any Order or Command. So that the Pagans returning like Lions upon a Flock of Sheep, made a most prodigious Slaughter amongst them; whilst the stout Count Algar, and Frier Toly, with some Souldiers, getting upon a rising Ground, and being drawn up into a round Body, did for a long time endure their Insults, till at last the said Earl and other Captains, seeing the stoutest Men of their their small Army slain, got upon the thickest Heaps of the Christians dead Bodies, and, being resolv'd to sell their Lives as dear as they could, after having receiv'd many Wounds, died honourably in the Field. There now only remain'd a few Young Men of Sutton and Gedeney; but these flinging away their Arms, fled into a Neighbouring Wood, and by that means escaping came the Night following to the Monastery of Croyland, where they related the Slaughter of the Christians, and the Loss of their whole Company: which when they had told at the Church Door with great Lamentations, the Abbot and Monks, being extremely confounded at this ill News, resolv'd to keep with them only the Elder Monks, and some few small Children to provoke Compassion, and so sent away all the Younger Men, together with the Reliques, Jewells, and Charters of their Monasterie, by Boat to the Wood of Ancaryg, adjoining to their Island; where they staid with one Toret an Anchorite four Days, being thirty in number, whereof ten were Priests. But the Abbot with the rest of his Brethren, (after they had hid the rest of the Plate, with the rich Table of the Altar) expecting nothing less than to be made a Sacrifice to the Fury of the Enemy, put on their sacred Vestments, said Mass and Communicated; which they had scarce finished, when the Pagans breaking into the Church, slew Abbot Theodore at the Altar, who perished by the Hands of their King Osketule. After which they proceeded to dispatch the rest, which they did in so butcherly a manner, that there was not of old or young any that escap'd, except one handsome Boy of about ten Years old, who (being intended for a Monk) was saved by Count Sidrocs the younger, who strip'd him of his Habit, put on him a Danish Coat, and ordered him to follow him wherever he went. When they had made an end of the Slaughter, they broke open the Tombs of St. Guthlac, and the Princes there buried; but finding a far more inconsiderable Plunder than they expected, they set the Church on Fire, and burnt the dead Bodies that were in it together. Four days after the Destruction of Croyland, the Danes march'd towards the Monastery of Medeshamsted, since call'd Peterborough, where finding the Gates lock'd, they began to make an Assault upon it; but receiving a Repulse, at the second Assault Tuba the Brother of Count Hubba was knock'd down with a Stone and carried off for Dead; whereat Hubba was so enraged, that breaking into the Monastery he slew all the Monks that came in his way, whilst the rest of them destroy'd the other's, till at last all perish'd. So that, in short, the Monastery and the Church with the Charters belonging to them were wholly destroy'd, together with a noble Library of Books which was reduc'd to Ashes. When they had continued here the space of four days, they got together all the Spoil they could and march'd towards Huntington; but in their way thither, as the two Counts Sidrocs brought up the Rear of their Army, which had now passed the River Nene, two Waggon Loads of Rich Moveables happen'd to be sunk in the Ford, as also the Beasts that drew them, in getting out of which whilst the younger Sidrocs and his Men were the Person of a Prince altogether innocent and deserving the contrary, and had entred the place where their bloody Intention was to be performed. The Matter briefly was thus.

Lodebroch.

42. Lodebroch, of whom we spake, being somewhere beyond Sea on Hawking among certain small Ilands in a little Boat with only a Dog with him, was by the violence of a sudden Tempest carried out to Sea, and cast upon the Coast of East-Anglia in some part not far from Yarmouth in Norfolk; where coming safe to Land, and presented to Edmund, then King of the E. Angles, the Fashion of the Man, the strange Fortune of his Arrival, and his Dexterity in all Manner of Sports, made the King so much delight in him, that his Falconer one Bern envying of it, while they were together one day in a Wood, secretly (as is believed) murdered him, and coming home makes strange what was become of him. Within a day or two Lodebroch's Dog comes to the King's House half famish'd, and being fed, was presently gone again; but coming soon after upon the same Er-bused, the Boy Turgar slipt away into the next Wood, and walking all Night about break of Day he got to Croyland, where he found the Monks return'd again, and very active in quenching the Fire as well as they could; to whom he related all that had happened, and discovering where the Body of the Abbot and most of the Monks lay, they removed the Rubbish, and buried them. This done, they first chose Godric, one of the Monks that escaped, for Abbot, and then resolv'd to go, and do the like pious Office for the late Prior and Monks of Medeshamsted; where arriving, they buried the Bodies of above fourscore Monks in one Grave in the Church-Yard, placing over them a Pyramidal Stone of about a yard high, whereon were carved the Images of the Abbot and Monks about him, which was to be seen in the time of Ingulfus. In the mean time the Danes spoiling the Country as far as Grant-bridge (now Cambridge) they then fell upon, and burnt the famous Nunnery of Ely, killing all that were therein both Men and Women, and carrying away a great deal of Riches, which had been brought thither from all Parts for their better security, they pass'd over thence into the Country of the East-Angles, where they slew Earl Wulkenie, who came against and stoutly resisted them. And now meeting with little or no opposition they march'd against King Edmund himself, who being overthrown was martyr'd by them in the manner related by our Author.

rand,

rand, and watched by the King's Command, he brought them to the dead Body. The Circumstances by the King's especial care being examined, Bern is judged guilty of the Fact, and condemned to be put into the same Boat in which Lodebroch arrived, and so without Food or Tackle to be committed to the Mercy of the Sea: which being done, Fortune iterated the Accident, and as safely delivered Bern on the other side as it had brought Lodebroch hither. The Boat arriving in the same Parts from whence it first came, was presently known, and Bern being prest to tell what was become of the Owner, told them how he had arrived in E. Anglia, and was there slain by the Command of K. Edmund.

43. Upon this his Sons Hinguar and Hubba, vowing the Revenge of their Father's Death, came with such an Army as they could make into E. Anglia: but finding themselves too weak then to grapple with the power of the King, they made use of the Present as you have heard, and timing it out in other Parts till (with the Adherence of divers of their Nation) they were grown a mighty Number, they then again enter E. Anglia, and by their Outrages and Cruelties declare the purpose of their Coming, abusing ne'rtheless the King with Treaties while their Forces were drawing down together. The King seeing the long-gathering Storm fall so full upon him, contrary to the Perswasion of his Nobles, prepares to meet them, and being forced in some place about Thetford to give Battel before he could be ready, was overthrown, his Army cut in pieces, himself taken, and in Contempt of Christianity first stripp'd and whipp'd, and in the end tyed to a Stake and shot to death with Arrows. K. Edmund slain.

44. The Exceeding Piety and Devotion of this King accompanied with such a Death caused him to be Canonized for a Saint and a Martyr, and to have had one of the goodliest Monasteries in all the Eastern Parts of this Kingdom dedicated to his Honour.

45. But so deadly was the Blow that was given in this Overthrow of K. Edmund as that the Kingdom of E.

Angles

871.

Angles expiring therewithal, the Country thenceforth became the Footing and Possession of the Danes, in which they after planted and inhabited. But these Victors, minding nothing less than Settling and Plantation, made every year new Inroads into several Parts of the Land, and in their Course of Prey and Rapine in the year 871. came to Reading in Berkshire, a Town of the proper Demeasns of the Kings of West-Saxons. So as the School of War, which Ælfred and his Brother fought e'rewhile abroad, was now brought home unto them to their very Doors.

The Danes
take Reading.

46. This year their arrives another Flight of Danes as it were (saith Huntingdon) a mighty Floud under the Conduct of two other Leaders Bagsæg and Haldene. These being a very great Army stood a while by themselves as it were upon their own Design; but upon further Consideration they at last joyned with the former and came to Reading, where they took the Town and the Castle. And then cutting a great Cross Trench between the Kennet and the Thames, (so that in a manner they made an Island of the place) they there with part of their Army kept their Works, and another part they sent abroad under the Command of two of their Earls to forrage and overrun the Rich Level that lyes between the two Rivers; but they being met withal at Englefeild by the Earl of *Berkshire*¹ were overthrown and one of the Earls slain.

They are besieged.

47. In the mean time Æthelred the King assisted with his Brother Ælfred made all the Speed they could to assemble their People, and with an Army came down to Reading within seven Days after that the Danes had taken it; and like Men in their first Heat (both being young and their Army fresh) they force the Out-works and Passages, and made a great Discomfiture of the disordered Enemy, slaughtering on every hand those they met withal, and none escaping their Fury except they could recover the Town or Castle before them.

¹ Whose Name was Ethelwulf or Eadulf. See more of him in Sir Will. Dugdale's Baronage, Vol. I. pag. 16.

48. There when they had beaten the Enemy into his Holds thinking themselves sure of him, and not warily enough considering that there were too many entred to be long pent up either in the Town or Castle, while they with too much Security relyed on that Advantage, the Enemy from Despair grew desperate, and brake forth upon them with that unexpected Resolution, and Audacity, that they much daunted the King's Party; yet along time they maintained the Conflict with equal Fortune, 'till at last, many of the West Saxons being slain, and among them the valiant Earl of Berkshire, the Residue in divers places began to incline, and in the end betook them all to flight. But touched with sense of that Dishonour, and full of Stomach to recover their lost Repute, they all again within four Days (with great forwardness and alacrity) assemble in a place called ^{Force their Beliegers and} Ashtowne, not far from Reading, whither the ^{come to} Dane (putt up with his late success, new reinforced Ashtowne. with Men, and now as forward to fight as the Saxons) had drawn down with his whole Body, and divided himself into two parts, the one under the Command of their two Kings, the other of their Earls.

49. Ethelred observing the Course of the Enemy, divides likewise his Forces into two Battalions, the one ^{Ethelred's Preparation and} for himself to lead against the Kings, the other for his Brother Ælfred to conduct against the Earls. The Day being come, and both sides eager for the Fight, while Ethelred, being yet at service in his Tent, would not for any Alarms be brought like ^{Devotion.} Saul to break off his Devotions, (saying that while he lived no worldly occasion should make him forsake the Service of

1 Now Aston as is commonly allow'd. And that is the Opinion too of Mr. Leland in his MSS. Collections, Vol. I. f. 199. a. Yet Dr. Kennet [Parochial Antiquities, p. 35.] says Ashtendon in the Forrest of Bernwood in Buckinghamshire. He might perhaps as well have said Ashtowne near Henley in Oxfordshire. Dr. Talbot seems to have been of Opinion, that 'twas Aschdune Forrest in Southsex, as I gather from some MSS. Notes of his preserv'd by Mr. Leland, in Coll. MSS. Vol. III. f. 194. b.

2 1 Sam. XIV.

Alfred's Heat and Rashness.

The Danes
are overthrown.

God) the Danish Army so far provoked the Heat and Youth of Alfred with their Braves, that having long attended his Brother's Coming, and not able longer to endure their Provocation, while the King was not yet ready to second him, he joined Battle with them, and though it were with the Disadvantage of the Place (for the Danes had the upper Ground) he alone for a good while maintained a hard Encounter with them. But at last the odds of Place and Number being both so much against him, his Men began a little to decline and give Ground: which the Enemy perceiving and hard pursuing his Advantage, Alfred's Army was in a manner put to flight, when Aethelred (whose coming Alfred thought could not have been so late) at last appearing, and opportunely Rendering his Saxons their due Succour, so well Restored Alfred's Army, and overthrew the Fortune of the Danes, that after a mighty Slaughter of them the Residue were put to flight.

50. In this Battle were slain ¹ Bagsæg one of their Kings, and five of their Earls, by name the two Sidrocks, Osbern, Fræne and Harold. As for the Number of the slain, we seldom in those times meet with any mention, neither yet with the Numbers of the Armies; but that we may know it was a very great overthrow, the Christians slew Thousands of them (saith Affer) and had the Chace and Spoil of the Rest over all the Forrest and Champion of Ashdowne ², and the Country thereabouts, both that day and the next, 'till they got again into the Town of Reading.

51. Howsoever the King's Gardiners made Alfred seem to have had the Overthrow, and the Victory to have followed the King, yet an old Poët, cited by Mr. Camden in his Description of Reading, looking nearer perhaps into the Deed of either than we are able now to do, ascribes the Victory unto Alfred, where speaking of Reading he saith,

¹ Jo. Brompton [col. 809.] and Mat. Westminster [sub. an. 871.] tell us both their Kings were slain.

² Per totam campestram Æscodum latitudinem. Affer.

Redingum nitidum, texendis nobile pannis.
 Hoc docet Ælfredi nostri victricia signa, Begſcegi cædem, calcata cadavera Dani;
 Utque ſuperfuſo maduerunt ſanguine campi.

But this Victory (rather a Prefage of the Manner of Ælfred's future Succeſs than any real Progreſs of the preſent Affairs) was inſtantly croſſed with an Overthrow of the Chriſtians within 14. Days after at Baſing The Saxons overthrown at Baſing in Hampſhire, where the King and Ælfred were both again overthrown of the ſame Enemy, having had his Companies reinforced with freſh Supplies: as likewiſe with another overthrow at ¹ Mertune (or Merden by at Merden. the Deviſes in Wiltſhire) where the Danes, being routed and chaced by them, again recollected themſelves and got the Victory of the Saxons. But moſt of all was it croſſed by the great Supplies of the Enemy with a new Income of their Country-Men, who arriving from Forreign Parts upon the Cloſe of theſe two laſt Victories joined themſelves unto them. And to give better opportunity to their Fortune (which now they were well provided to entertain,) Æthelred (the only King that made Head againſt them) dyes² of a Wound he Æthelred dyeth.

¹ Some ſay Merton in Surrey. See the Account of Places at the End of Dr. Gibſon's Edition of the Saxon Annals. Others Mertune in Oxfordſhire, particularly Dr. Plot, [Nat. Hiſt. of Oxfordſhire, cap. X. ſ. 77.] and Dr. Kennett, [Parochial Antiq. p. 36.] who lay great ſtreſs upon a Daniſh Spur found here, which is now to be ſeen in the Phyſick-School at Oxford; but ſince this is but a very indifferent Argument, (there having been ſeveral of theſe Spurs found in other Places of England;) and ſince moſt of our Hiſtorians place it in Wiltſ, I cannot very readily yield to either, eſpecially the latter of theſe Opinions.

² He died at Wittingham and was buried at Winburn in Dorſeſhire, where before the Civil Wars was a Plate with this Inſcription: IN HOC LOCO QUIESCIT CORPUS SANCTI ÆTHELDREDI REGIS WEST-SAXONUM, MARTIRIS, QUI ANNO DOMINI DCCCLXXII. XXIII. DIE [Mr. Camden, Brit. pag. 158. Ed. ult. omitts die] APRILIS PER MANUS DANORUM PAGANORUM OCCUBUIT. But Aſſer, the Saxon Annals, Florence of Worc. &c. tell us 'twas Anno 871. that he died in; who are rather to be believed, becauſe the Inſcription ſeems to be modern.

received

received at Merden, having by the Space of 5 years performed the office of a very brave Prince.

Anno 871.
Æt. Ælf. 22.
Ælfred succeedeth.

52. Æthelred being dead, it was now Ælfred's turn to succeed, both by the will of Æthelwolf their Father, and likewise by the Appointment of the last King Æthelred. For before that Æthelred came to the Crown there had been Treaty between him and Ælfred concerning their two Fortunes. And Æthelred in the Presence of divers of the Nobility (acknowledging Ælfred's Right in certain Demeasns left him by his Father, which were then it seems withholden from him) gave his faithful word, that if ever he came to be King he would not only permit Ælfred quietly to enjoy the Lands bequeathed him, but further would make him sharer with himself of all such Territories as with his Help he should at any time recover from the Enemy. Yet afterwards when the Crown fell unto Æthelred, and that with Ælfred's Assistance he had got divers Pieces to the Crown, being then demanded by Ælfred to perform the Agreement, Æthelred refused, alledging Reasons that he could break nothing of what he had, but as he kept all entire, so at his Death he would (if Ælfred survived) leave all entirely to him. And Ælfred though still delayed in his Right (yet contenting himself) did ne'rtheless faithfully assist Æthelred in all occasions of the Kingdom, so long as Æthelred lived: but when at his Death the Crown should have made Ælfred Satisfaction for all his Sufferings under his several Brothers, that mightily shaken, and in present Danger to be rent in Pieces, fell as short in performing the long expected Recompence as his Brother's Promises had formerly done. So as Ælfred, though with the great Instance and labouring of the Arch-Bishop and Nobles of West Saxony, and with the Earnest Suit of the Commons (whose present Condition required to have an able Man in the Throne, and they him above all other) was yet but unwillingly prevailed withal to take the Government upon him: but at last, preferring the Necessity of the State before his own
Likeing

Likeing, he did accept thereof. And accordingly was the second time Crowned at Winchester to the great Joy and Satisfaction of the Commons. This was (indeed) the thing that they especially desired; but as for the King it was entertained by him with no other Affection than as an inevitable Diversion from the Pursuit of his Dearer Contentments. It was an assured Ingaging of him in infinite Broyles. So at the best, it was rather an Entertainment of a Title, than an Acceptance of a Crown. For the Strength of the Enemy considered, the Kingdom was more to be expected from his own Virtues, than the Favour and Election of the Commons: and indeed so difficult was the Redemption of the Crown from out the Weak Estate it now was in, as that howsoever Courage failed not the King, yet was there in Appearance neither Way nor Means that might make the Recovery of it probable, this very year having in eight Set Battles (beside Skirmishes) well nigh exhausted the Forces of the Saxons. As for the Enemy, he (like Hydra's Heads as oft renewing as cut off) was ready again with a fresh Charge to give him Welcome to the Crown.

53. The King's Hand was now at the Plough, and his Fortunes lay upon it, there was no looking back, neither was there any Difficult in what he had to chose. He had only to hazard whether he would be overthrown or devoured, and therefore assembling all the Power he could make (which came too unequally short of the Number of the Enemy) he was constrained, before he had yet been King a Month, to take the Field yet once more in the same Year against the whole Power of the Danes, who, gathering on Wilton Hills in Wiltshire, in great Pride now fought who durst encounter with them. Thither Ælfred repaired, and joyning Battle with them, Fortune for the greatest Part of the Raiseth an Army.

The Battle of Wilton.

1. Chron. MS. de Regibus Ang. in man. illust. com. Arundel.
 2. Æibelwerd [lib. IV. c. 3.] seems to intimate, that Ælfred, being taken up in providing for the Ceremonies of his Brother's Funeral, was not in this Battle.

Day dealt her self indifferently between them, toward the end inclined to the King; so that he put them all to flight: but then turning, while the Saxons, with too much desire of performing their Work, over eagerly pursued their Success (their Inequality more appearing in the Chace, than it had before done in the Battle) the Danes recollected themselves, and setting afresh upon the tired Saxons robbed them of the Victory, when they were in a manner possessed of it.

The King is overthrown.

§4. What was the Execution then done by the Danes, appeareth not, but the overthrow they gave was (it seems) not very great; and though they were reputed to have the better Title to the Victory, yet might it well enough be a Question whose indeed it was. For as Ælfred carried the Matter, he found the means to bring the Victors to the Conclusion of a Peace, and upon such Terms as that they themselves should, notwithstanding their Victory, forthwith withdraw and depart out of his Dominion.

and conditioneth with the Danes.

§5. For all this the Danes discerned that they were grown the Masters of the Field, and all things in a manner began to be at their Discretion, (which was enough with them to have driven away the Regard of any Agreement) but whether their hard Escape so lately out of Ælfred's Hands yet stook by them, or whether their Eye, fixed elsewhere, drew them another way, they, according to their Agreement, left West-Saxony, and came to London, which (though properly within the Precincts of the Kingdom of East-Saxons) was at that Time under the obedience of Burhed King of Mercia, or Middle-Saxons, and has from thence been ever since reckoned within the County of Middlesex. There they winter, and, notwithstanding their Peace formerly made with Burhed, they spoiled his Country all thereabout. Then made they Peace with him the second Time, and, leaving London, went and wintered at Forksey in Lindsey, in the North part of Lincolnshire, within the Kingdom of the Northumbrians; but those parts having been too much wasted to hold them long, they

They come to London. §72.

Thence to Torksey. 873. Æcat. 24. Reg. 1.

the

the year following went from thence to Repton in Dar- Thence to byshire within the Kingdom of Mercia, where, for all Repton 874.
their Peace with Burrhed, they again make Havock of his Country during the time of their Wintering there.
Three several times did they make Composition with him, and yet so continually infested his Country the whilst, as in the end they drave him to forsake it, and go to Rome, where dying they entirely possess them- and expell selves thereof, and gave it to one Ceolwolfe (an Infa- Burrhed. mous Renegado of the Saxons) to hold it only at their Discretion.

56. There was not now of all the Saxon-Heptarchy but only the West-Saxons that could any more oppose against their Power, and even they (though at this time the most potent, and in whom the Danes had ever found the greatest Resistance) being with continual Travels overlaid, and forced, after nine set Battles in one year given, to give way to the infinite Supplies of the Invader. As for the Kingdoms of the East-Angles, of the Northumbrians and the Mercians, they were now in a manner either depopulate, or in absolute Subjection to the Danes, who in every place abounded, and, no where awed or checked by any Power of the Natives, tyrannized to the height, many of them preparing now to settle and inhabit the places that before they had but only prey'd upon. For by this time they discern'd from their own Experience, that when they had devoured all the People, upon whose Labours they had lived before, they must in the end set down and begin to learn to labour for themselves.

57. This year also there was an Excessive Income of more of this Kind of People under the Command of three Kings, Gothrum, Oscitell and Amund, (that were but newly come unto them whilst they were at Repton) and therefore finding their Body too big to live together in one place (were it by Industry or by Rapine) they divide themselves into several Parts, and divers of them under the Command of Haldene in the Year

i H. Hum.

875. æt. 26.
Reg. 3.

875. return into the Country of the Northumbrians, and soon possessing that which (as we said) was before subdued, they part it among themselves and settle there, preying the whiles upon the Picts, the Straduttons, and Natives round about them.

1109. 9

58. The last Danes that came over with the three Kings (under the name of which went as many of the others as listed) being free of the Articles concluded betwixt Ælfred and the former, hovering up and down in the Kingdom of Mercia, came the same year to Cambridge, and timing out the Residue of that Year there, they the next Year rise from thence by night, and went and surpris'd the strong Castle and Nunnery of Wereham upon the Rive Were in Dorsetshire in the Kingdom of West-Saxony. And thither as to a convenient Road they bring down the Shipping that they came over in.

The Danes
surprife
Wereham.
876. æt. 26.
Reg. 4.

The King
compoundeth for their Departure.

59. This set so hard to the King, as it put him to seek a Peace and a Composition with them. Which upon what Terms soever obtained, was with that Caution, that these likewise as well as the other should depart out of his Kingdom and wholly abstain from his Territories, and the Conditions being agreed on, the Peace was, in the most Sacred Form of Religion then in Use, Ratified and Confirmed by the Solemn Oaths of the Pagans upon the Holy Reliques of the Church, the great Confidence of King Ælfred, (saith the Book) not that he thought the Infidels would make so great a Conser-

Their solemn Oath
and

1 They are call'd in the Saxon Annals Stræcleopeallay, and Stræcleopeallay. by Matt. Westm. Wallensis: by Florence of Worcester. Straidutenfes: and by Æthelwerd, Cumbri. They were certain Britains [see Sommer's Lexicon.] sometime inhabiting Galloway in Scotland, but were driven thence by the Picts into Wales, where they seated themselves about the Banks and Borders of the River Cluid.

2 The most solemn Manner of Swearing, amongst the Danes and other Northern Nations, was by their Arms, as appears from M. Adamus, [Eccles. Hist. lib. I. cap. 33.] Olaus Magnus, [lib. 8. c. 2.] and the Annals of Fulda. [sub an. DCCCLXXIII.] But since they had broke these Oaths already, K. Ælfred forced them to swear upon the most sacred Reliques of the Church.

ence

ence of them, nor had he 'till then ever admitted them to swear upon them; but being now as it were in his last Plunge, and not expecting any other Help, his only Hope was, That if in this they brake their Faith with him, God himself would even in them assuredly punish such a solemn Perjury.

60. They having sworn the Peace, without any Difficult gave him what Hostages he did demand, and presently, like right Barbarians, without Regard of Faith, or Oath, or Pledges given, or so much as a Colour for what they were about to do, suddenly set upon all the King's Sea-Horse, (which in their Removals evermore marvellously annoyed them, and whose Service was therefore, in these Multiplicities of Invasion, of great use unto the King) and putting the Keepers and Riders¹ all to the Sword, they served themselves of the Horse, and presently fell down into Devonshire, and surpris'd² Exeter upon the River Wiske in one of the freshest Parts of Ælfred's Dominion, whither as to the Rendezvous they appoint their Forces that yet remained at Wereham by Shipping to repair.

61. Ælfred, seeing the Faithfulness of the Enemy no more to be relyed on, returns to his own Arms, and rests on this, that in the utmost of his own Endeavour he must attend the good Will and Pleasure of

¹ So the Story is told by Aser and Florence of Worcester. But Hemington and the Sax. Annals give us a more true Relation, namely that in the End of the year [viz. DCCCLXXVI.] that Part of the Army which had Horses rode to Exeter, and that the rest, which remain'd at Wereham, were in the beginning of the year following mostly destroy'd by Ship-wreck at Swanawic, and the others escap'd on foot to Exeter, whither they came before the King could overtake them. But upon his Arrival he laid close Siege to the City, which reduc'd the Danes to such Extremity, that they were forc'd to Surrender, and retire into Mercia, which they took possession of, and gave part thereof to Ceolwolf. Yet 'twas not long that they kept the Articles. For immediately after the Feast of Epiphany, they set themselves down at Chippenham, one of the King's Seats, and laid wast almost all West-Saxony.

² Verfusque inde Domnaniam ad locum, qui dicitur Saxonice Eaxancestre, Britannie amem Cairwisc. Aser.

Many Conflicts with them.

God. Therefore encouraging his People heartily to put on the Virtue that Necessity had put upon them, they, armed now with that last and most effectual Resolution, not to expect Safety otherwise than in the utmost Hazard of their Lives, cheerfully offer themselves to all occasions. And though we have not been so happy as to have known the Order and Particulars of their Actions here immediatly ensuing, yet do we credibly find (though indeed beyond all Credit) That in seven several Battles again fought in this Year with the Danes, Ælfred so desperately struggled with them, as that with the Effusion of a world of Blood he again extorted an Agreement from them, containing among other Things this new Article, That the Danes should admit no more of their Nation to arrive in the Island.

Rollo.

62. This was the year 876. which is further memorable for the first Entry of the Famous Rollo into France: which I the rather note, because he is reckoned not only one of the same Nation with those that entered and harrowed this Land, but one of their Number also and an Actor with them in their Invasion here: and that he and his Companies, being sharply entertained and disciplined by Ælfred in the School of War, put over (in this year) from hence into Normandy, and there laid the Foundation of that Goodly Dukedom, of which our Kings at this Day are the Lineal Descendants. Also this Departure of Rollo argues not only the hard and busy time that Ælfred now had with the Danes, but the abundant Surcharge of them at this time within the Land, and the Misery that the Natives the whilst endured. For howsoever Rollo's Departure hence is fathered on a Dream, whereby he is said to be called into France, yet questionless the great and secret Motive was, the infinite Numbers of his Country-men here in the Land, and the universal Wast he saw in every part thereof committed by them, whereby he might well reckon, he should have but a slender Booty among such a Multitude of Sharers. And not unlikely he might judge (and that with great reason) that in some new Place,

Place, less obvious to the Visitation of those Rovers, he should find the first and unbroken Bulk of Plenty more weakly guarded than here the Bottoms of their rifled Coffers were.

63. Nor was the Business of this troublesome Year within Land only, but at Sea also. For Ælfred having seen the Increase of Pagan Forreigners to grow so mightily upon him, as that (saith Affer) if thirty thousand of them were in one day slain, there arrived as many more of them the next Day, he sought by Counsel to prevent what by Force he saw he should not long be able to resist; and therefore he would no longer attend their Coming safe on Land (which if they did, he was sure his Country should maintain them with the Spoil thereof) but would rather venture the Fortune of Encounter first upon the Sea, where, for the most part, the new Incomers (being stowed up in Vessels built on the sudden for present Transportation, and not for other Service) would not willingly be prest to fight: and as for the Pyrates that were strong in Shipping, if they should chance to have the better, yet after an hard Encounter they would be the weaker to attempt any thing by Land. Therefore the King, well advising of the Benefit of that Course, caused a good Provision of Long Boats and Gallies fit for Service to be built along the Coast; and withal took order to have them well furnished both with Men and with the Ammunition of those times, and so appointed them to the Keeping of the common Roads against the Arrival of Strangers, with an expresse Command to grant no Quarter to them, nor receive any of their Condition unto Mercy.

64. Some of these Ships of the King's the same Year Sea-Fights. 876, meeting with six ¹ great Forreign Gallies, coming in with Strangers, fought with them, took one of them,

¹ Our Author is here somewhat confus'd. The true order, according to the Saxon Annals, is this. An. DCCCLXXV. King Ælfred fought with seven Danish Ships at Sea, took one of them and chased the them, and chased the rest away. Others of his Shipping, meeting with 120. Sail of smaller Ships, seeking to arrive with fresh Supplies, Sea-beaten, weary and unfit for fight, set upon them and sunk them every one.

877.

65. It also happened the next year after the Taking of Exeter, that an 120 of the Vessels, belonging to the Army of the three Kings, (which were remaining at Wereham when they from thence went and surprised Exeter, and which were to wete the Residue of their Army from Wereham thither) in their Passage perished by the way, and Ælfred, taking hold of the occasion, made after the Horse to Exeter, and before they could have Succour from the other Parts compelled them yet once more to give both Faith and Holtages to depart out of his Territories: and so that part of the Danish Army quitted Exeter, and entring into Mercia went and joined themselves with the Danes that were already late down at Glocester, who, weary of trying their Fortune any more, had now taken Mercia into their own Hands: and appointing unto Ceolwolf their Tributary a certain Portion of their Country for his Part, the Residue they divided among themselves, and diverse of them began to plant and settle thereupon.

as set Hen

66. But all these were but few in Comparison of the great Multitudes of them, which scatteringly filled every Corner of the Land, who after diverse Dispersings the rest away. An. DCCCLXXVI. the Danes possess Wereham, and make Peace with the King. An. DCCCLXXVII. they break the Agreement, come to Exeter, loole 120 of their Ships at Swanawic, and at last go into Mercia. An. DCCCLXXVIII. they come to Chippenham, &c.

I Sir John should have here added the Place where they perished, which was Swanawic (now Swanwick in Hampshire) as appears from the Saxon Chronicle. And so I find it added in the Margin of our Author's Original Copy, with a design to be inserted upon a Review. 'Tis call'd Snanauine in Affer. Men. of Mr. Camden's Edition, tho' omitted in Archbishop Parker's, perhaps more truly, as being Part of Affer's Annals publish'd by Dr. Gale, where however 'tis printed Swanawic. But in a Fragment of the same Annals preserv'd by Mr. Leland in the second Vol. of his MSS. Coll. f. 191. b. (where he calls it the Chronicle of St. Neots, and professes himself ignorant of the Author's Name) 'tis written Snanauine.

by

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

13

by little and little gathering together entired themselves into one Body, and being besides so much increased with new Incomes, as that they were become a mighty Army, like Locusts (saith Huntington) covering the Face of the Earth, they despise any longer to be resisted by so poor an handfull as the Saxons now were grown unto, and therefore, contrary to Faith, and Oath, and the security of their Hostages, they enter the King's Country, and, like a raging Floud, bearing all before it, they chace away the Natives. And at Chippenham in Wiltshire, at that time a principal Town of the Kings of West-Saxons, and in the Heart of the Country, they set them down, not intending a Wintering only (as at other times) and away, but seeing the other Parts of the Kingdom either wast or already in Dividend among their Countrymen, and this the only fresh Part of the Island, and most to be desired for Receipt of so great a Plantation, they choose that to be the lot of their Residence.

The Danes
surprife
Chippenham.
878. æt. 27.
Reg. 5.

67. The Saxons were before quite spent and done, their late Actions had utterly overthrown them, only for the present they subsisted, rather in the Reputation of their Prince, and Credit of their former Deeds, than any real Power that at this time survived in them, and the Danes (as it were afraid of the Lyon's Skin) had made a stand a while, and forbore to attempt any further against the King; but that fear quickly vanishing, they no sooner now enter'd the King's Country, but the Saxons (that knew they wanted no more to make an end of them, than that the Enemy should insist upon the Advantage that he had) giving all gone, began to think it time to look every one unto his own Safety, those of the best condition and truest to their Prince to fly into ¹ Wales, or to hide themselves in the Woods and safest Places of the Kingdom: the rest, looking only on the present Face of Things, and pre-

The Saxons
fly or revolt.

¹ Transpellunt Gallias mare in oras, Æthelwerd. Open ræ, Chron. Sax. Trans mare, Mat. West. & Flor. Wig.

ferring Security, though upon the vilest Terms whatsoever, before Trouble and Danger, revolted from the King, and submitted themselves to the Barbarous Enemy, doubly augmenting him thereby, to what like Number of others could have done; because it was with his Adversary's equal Diminution.

The King
conceals himself.

68. Ælfred seeing his Subjects fly, the Enemy in the midst of his Country, and no means left either to unite or sollicit the few that remained unto him, being forced to give way unto the Rage of Fortune and comply with it, lays aside all Kingly State and Shew of being Prince, disposes of his Family according to present Necessity, and taking the Disguise of an obscure and common Souldier, he at first commits himself and his Safety to one who (according to the manner of those Times) had the Charge and Keeping of some of the King's Cowes. Whether as a Souldier only, and unknown, or whether as King, and known unto the Neat-herd himself, appeareth not: but as to Neat-herd's Wife, it is clear by a Tale they tell of her, that she had no suspicion who he was. For being busied one day in going to the Oven with Bread, and having set a Cake thereof before the fire, (where the King set trimming of his Bow and Arrows, and fitting his other Weapons) while she went elsewhere about her Business, the Cake burnt, and the King, wholly intent to the fitting of his Tackle, minded it not, 'till the rude Huswife coming in, and finding the Cake burning, in a great Chafe fell on scolding at the King, (as Asser tells it) Heus Homo!

*Urere quos cernis panes gyrare moraris,
Quum nimium gaudes hos manducare calentes?
Canst set and see the Bread burn thus (thou sot)
And canst not turn what thou so well lov'st hot?*

However the matter stood betwixt him and his Neat-herd-Hoste, the Concealment was so sure, as that neither Subjects nor Enemies, for a while, knowing what was become of him, his Substance in every place became a common Prey, as well to the Revolted Saxon as the Dane.

1 Flo. Wig.

69. Upon

69. Upon this great Depression of Sovereignty in so brave a Prince, the Religious of those Times have given their Judgments, as if it had not befallen him without his apparent Desert, and that God, having been greatly offended by him, and therefore in Justice necessitate to call him to Account for it, out of an especial Mercy toward him, took in this sort that severe Account here by way of Acquittal in the world to come.

70. For as they tell it, *Ælfred*¹ howsoever otherwise of great Merit and eminent Virtues, yet as of himself he had no great desire to the Crown, so neither could he in the beginning of his Reign well frame himself to attend the function of so great a Charge, his vehement Affectation of Literature, (to which he had so natural an Inclination and so little Means of Satisfaction) his Desire of Knowledge and Experience, in all the Faculties of an Universal Wit, and again his Hawking, Hunting, and other Exercises, to which his youth and the Active vigour more of Mind than Body did incline him, and in which he was ever inventing or experimenting something or other, these in that Vacancy of Molestation (which after the Battle of Wilton he for a year or two had at the Beginning of his Reign) so much took up his Mind and Thoughts, as that he but a little attended to the Occasions and Complaints of his poor Subjects. And though (as they say) he were often admonished thereof by one Neotus, a Kinsman of his of Reverend Esteem in those Days for Exemplar Life and Holiness, yet so little did it work upon him as that the holy Man, having much lamented the King's Averseness, Sorrow at length resolving it self into a Spirit of Prophecy, foretold the King what Crosses and Afflictions he should for that Cause certainly encounter: That he should be deprived of his Kingdom, and live as it were an Exile in his own Country. And these howsoever predicted, did assuredly (by the Consent of all that have writ his Actions) now abundantly befall the King.

¹ Ælf. Men.

71. But howsoever presented in the Shew of Punishments, yet (as God's Chastisements ever prove in the upshot) they rather became so many real Blessings, not only in a spiritual Consideration, as they mould them, that suffer in them, into a fitter Temper for receiving the renewed Impressions of the Divine Image once Defaced: but even in human Respects also; clearing the Understanding; sharpening the Wit; taking off the Mind from hurtful and unprofitable Affections; disposing the Will resolutely to undertake what only now remained to be done; and strengthening both the Heart and Hands to struggle with all obstacles of the Difficult work. Neither came this Discipline too late to do him good; insomuch as God had as yet left one Door open to his Hopes, in that he had withheld from the Enemy's Discerning, that it was but to little purpose that ever they overthrew him, unless they pursued that Overthrow with his Final Extirpation.

72. Certain it is that during the time that the King (thus overpowred with those ever-increasing Multitudes of Danes) was forced to withdraw and shelter himself from the open violence of such a Storm, that yet even then, like one as inexhaustible in Courage, as they in Numbers, he with a small handful of Men, sometimes in one place, sometimes in another, stealing upon them, often presented himself in so smart Demonstrations of his Valour, as gave them to understand, that, howsoever overlaid with their Multitudes, they were not as yet to count him overcome: cum Ælfredo enim etiam victo, etiam jacente, luctandum (saith Malmesb.): adeo ut, quum omnino contritum putares, velut anguis lubricus de manu tenentis elapsus, è cavernis subitus emergebat, sponte inimicos insultantes adoriens: plerumque post fugam importabilis &c. Ælfred (saith he) even when he was overthrown, and cast down, was always new to be encountred with: so that when one would think him trod in pieces, he like a Snake slipping out of the Hands of them that held him, would from his hiding Places on the sudden set upon the Triumphant Enemy:

Enemy: and after an overthrow, his Fury was for the most part insupportable.

73. Unto his Advantage in this kind of Dealing with the Enemy, the Site and Habit of the Country (at that time every where abounding with vast Woods and Fens, the Passages whereof were scarcely known but to the Natives) did much conduce, especially that mighty Fenny Karre of *Æthelny*¹, between the Rivers Thone and Parret, in Somersetshire, which then, having not much above two Acres of Solid Ground in it, contained a vast Quantity of Alderkarre that nourished great Store of Dear and other Game, and all inclosed every way with water, was no way to be entered but by Boat, or Wadeing, save that in Height of Summer it on the one side afforded some Difficult Access unto a Foot-man. This the King found so fitting to his purpose, that, with some little help, he made himself a small Hold or Receptacle, from whence issuing secretly he often made such Sallies out upon the Dane, as had been worthy enough to have lived unto Posterity, had they not with other Particulars of his Life together perished; because in the Monks Account they were² inextricabiles laborum labyrinthi, which were utter madness (saith Malmesbury) for one to think he could particularly recount. This is apparently to be collected, that when for the main the Writers all follow the first, and yet not one but has Particulars not touched upon by others, much more of his Actions long survived by Fame and by Tradition, than are contained in their Writings all together.

74. A full Year well nigh lay Ælfred clouded under this Adversity of Fortune. A long Eclipse it was of so great a Light, and which in humane Judgment had been fatal to him, had it not then pleased God to have looked with a more favourable Eye upon him: and as he had descended so far as to let him understand his Offence and Punishment aforehand; so likewise was he pleased now to let him know, that he was pacified towards him, and had determined his Restitution.

1 Or Æthelinge. 2 Malmesb.

75. It happened one day, while the King was in his Fort in Æthelinge, it being Winter, and the Waters all shut up with Ice, that having sent abroad his People to get them Fish, or Fowl, or some such Purveyance as they sustained themselves withall, none being excused from that Imployment but himself and his¹ Mother only, (whereby it seems that either the Queen was dead, or in some other Place with the Children) the King took a Book, and (after his constant wont whensoever he had opportunity) he fell on reading. In the mean while there knocks a poor Man² at the Gate, and begs for Christ his sake, that they would give him somewhat. The King called³ to his Mother, and desired her to look in the Cupboard and give the poor Man something for to eat. She going to do accordingly, found that there was but one only Loaf in the House, and comes and shews the King the slender Provision he had, telling him that that was all his Store, and that it was not enough to suffice his hungry Family, when anon they should come home from Fishing. The King hearing of it, like one whose Heart was right, gave God humble thanks, using those words⁴ Benedictus Deus in donis suis, and prayed his Mother for Christ's sake to give the poor Christian one half of the Loaf, saying withall that he, that could feed 5000 Men with five Loaves and two Fishes, could (if it pleased him) make that half of the Loaf suffice for more than his Occasions. His Mother therefore did accordingly, and the poor Man being served and departed,

Ælfred's exceeding Charity.

1 I cannot see how this can be true: because his Mother had been dead long since; and tho' his Mother-in-Law Judith out-liv'd Æthelwolf, and was married to Æthelbald, (Brother of Ælfred) yet she return'd again soon after into France. For which reason 'tis most likely that K. Ælfred's Wife was now present with him in Æthelinge.

2 By Name Nider. See a MS. History of England from Brute to the 14th year of Hen. VI. in Bibl. Bodl. NE. D. 2. 12. f. 43. a.

3 In the said MS. there is no mention of the King's Mother, but instead of that 'tis said he commanded his Man-Servant to serve the Poor Man, and besides the Loaf, there is mention there of a little Wine.

4 Ingulf.

the

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

the King went on with his Reading, and wearied at length, and wanting other Relief of his Cares and Solitariness, he fell asleep, and dreamt that St. Cuthbert,¹ Bishop of Lindisfarn, now Holly-Island (from whence the Episcopal See was after transferred to Durham) came to him and told him that² he was sent by God to let him know, That the long and sharp Afflictions of the English for their Sins had now at length moved him to Compassion, and that taking in good part his Liberal Alms that Day, when he himself was in so great want, he had determined to restore him to his Crown, and that, in Token thereof, his Servants, who in that unseasonable Weather were (without Hope of getting any great Matter) gone a fishing, should anon come home with so great a Quantity of Fish, as should be wonderful unto him. The King awaking herewithal called his Mother, and told her his Dream, she likewise having at the same Instant fallen asleep, and but then waked by the King's Calling her, assured him that she had then Dreamt the same thing: and while they sat there counting of the matter unto one another, their Servants came home with so incredible a Quantity of Fish, as were in their Seeming sufficient to have fed an Army.

59,
His Dream.

76. Whether we shall think the Dream to have proceeded from a natural Cause only, as presented by the Fancy according to the Current of Thoughts precedent; or whether we shall believe it a supernatural and immediate Revelation from God, it is not here very much material. The one as well as the other serves at God's Appointment, by raising or dejecting of the Mind with Hopes or Fears, to lead Man to the Resolution of those Things whereof he has before ordained the Event.

¹ In the Life of St. Neot, as I find by some Excerpta out of it in the third Vol. of Mr. Leland's Collections (f. 11. a.) 'tis said that 'twas not St. Cuthbert, but St. Neot who appear'd to Ælfred, which Mr. Leland has noted to be a mistake, and contrary to the Authority of other Writers.

² Ingulph. Malmesh.

Hubba overthrown.
878.

77. While Ælfred was full of the Thought of his Dream, and what the Consequence thereof would prove, News was brought him, that Hubba the Dane, who with his Brother Hinguar had been one of the Martyrers of King Edmund, returning out of Wales, (where he had wintered and made a miserable Slaughter of the Welsh) and coming into Devonshire with three and twenty Sail of Ships, fell into the Hands of some of the King's Subjects, and was with 1200. of his Men slain before the Castle of ¹ Kinwith.

78. This Kinwith was then a Hold of some Strength, it seems, not far from the Mouth of the Tau, whither Oddune Earl of Devonshire with many of the King's Party had, upon Hubba's Arrival there, betaken themselves. And Hubba, understanding that they of the Castle were unprovided of Victuals, and nothing well furnished of other Necessaries for their Defence, more than in the bare walls and natural Situation of the Castle, confident that they were a Prey fallen into his Hands, he presently lays Siege to the Castle, assuring himself that, through the wants of the besieged, especially of Water, he should soon compell them to render; but the besieged, early apprehending the Necessity before they came to be bitten with it, put on the Resolution, to take their Fortune, either of Death or Victory; and while their Strength and Courage was yet fresh and whole, they betimes in the Morning, and when the Besiegers little looked for it, made a Sally on them, overthrew them, slew ² Hubba, and cut in Pieces the whole Army, unless it were some few, that were able

¹ Cynuit Aſer.

² John Bromton [col. 809. a.] and most of our other Historians tell us Hubba was slain at Chippenham; and yet they say his Body was buried in Devonshire. Dani vero cadaver Hubbæ inter occisos invenientes, illud cum clamore maximo sepelierunt, cumulum apponentes, quem Hubba belowe vocaverunt, unde sic usque in hodiernum diem locus ille appellatus est, et est in comitatu Devonix. Agreeably to which, abating only that it mentioneth Hinguar also amongst the slain, an old Chronicle in English call'd Brute of England, [MS. in Bibl. Bodl. inter codd. Digb. num. CLXXXV.] thus expresseth it: And when the Danes fond Hun-able to recover their Ships. In this Defeat among the Spoil (which was not small) was taken that famous Danish Standard called Reafan, or the Raven, the great Confidence of those Pagans. It was a Banner with the The Raven taken.

Image

gar and Hubba deid thei bare theym to a MOUNTAYN thei bylyde, and made upon hym a logge and lete call it Hubbslugh.
And so itt is to this Day in Debenshir. Here it must be noted, that 'twas the common way of Burial with the Danes to raise Tumuli upon the Bodies, of which there were three Sorts, [Olai Wormii Monsan. Dan. p. 40.] the first whereof was with Heaps of great Stones, which was proper only to their Kings. These Tumuli were call'd Lowes in the old English Language, either from the British word Llehan, id est, locare, vel collocare, [see Dr. Davies's Brit. Dictionary; or from the Saxon word leg, lig, lige, or (according to the Pronunciation of the Danes) loge, signifying flame. As therefore Buſium denoted the place where a Man was burn'd and buried, so did our Ancestors in imitation of them call the Place of Burial Lowe, whether the Bodies were burn'd or not. And this latter seems to be the more true Etymology; because in Scotland and the Northern Parts of England, the Flame of any Fire is called low to this day;
the common People [see Sir Will. Dugdale's Antiq. of Warwicksh.
p. 4. Dr. Skinner's Etymolog. vocum omnium antiquarum Anglic. and Mr.
Ray's Collection of English Words not generally us'd, Lond. 1691. 8vo.
Ed. second.] usually saying that the fire lows, when it blazeth or flameth. For which reason Gavin Douglas, Bilhop of Dunkel, in his old Scotch Translation of Virgil's Æn. [lib. VII. fol. CLIV. b. printed at Lond. MDLIII. 4to.] useth the word in the same sense:

As King Latynus kindyllis on there gyle
Upon the Altaris for the Sacrifice
The clere chidris [corrected schidris by Junius in his Copy in Bibl. Bodl.] of the dry fyre brandis,
Quhare that also by hir fader standis
Lavinia the maid, his Doughter fare,
Ane selcouth thing to se, in hir hare
It semyt the hate fyre kindillit bricht,
And hir gay cleithing, all with lowis licht
Gan glete and sperkilland, birn up in anc bleis.

Atque omnem orna-tum flamma

And for the same reason without doubt it is that Law signifies an Hill amongst the hither Scotchmen, as Mr. Camden observes. [Remains, crepitante cremari.
pag. 98.]

1 Ræfen Sax. Annal. DCCCLXXVIII. But in one Copy hþeþn.
From this famous Banner in all probability Anlaf, King of Northumberland, afterwards had a Raven upon his Banner, as appears from a Coyne publish'd by Sir ANDREW FOUNTAINE, Tab. III. And
the

Image of a Raven magically wrought by the three Sisters of Hinguar and Hubba, on purpose for their Expedition in Revenge of their Father Lodebroch's Murder, made, they say, almost in an instant, being by them at once begun and finished in a noon-tyde, and believed by the Danes to have carried great Fatality with it; for which it was highly esteemed of them. It is pretended that being carried in Battle, toward good Success it would always seem to clap the Wings, and do as if it would fly, but toward the Approach of Mishap it would hang right down and not move. Whatsoever it was, the Imposture was now betrayed: for being taken by Surprise, they had lost their Oracle before they had time to consult with it.

79. Of what Credit soever the Omination of the Standard was in it self, the Prifal of it by the Christians was of no little Consequence. For the Pagans having once (how well it matters not) placed a more than ordinary Opinion and Belief therein, when after they came to loose it, they could not but loose withal their Hearts and Confidence, and the Victors, though they regarded it not as auspicious, did notwithstanding rise in Reputation with the heart-fallen Enemy, the matter standing between them as with things put together in Ballance, where the only taking away from the weight of the one does as much contribute to the other, as if when they were both equal that other's weight alone had been increased.

80. Ælfred, upon the Intelligence of this Success in Devonshire, raising his Hopes to the Expectation of a better Change, bethinks himself what Course to take to make some happy Attempt upon the Enemy, who had not only chased him out of the chiefest Part of his Country, but, by possessing the middle Part, kept him there.

the Story of the Atchievements perform'd by the help of it was so remarkable, that it gave Original to a Family, RÆFEN being the name of one of the Monetarii in King Canute's Coyns (Tab. IV.) publish'd by the same ingenious Gentleman.

I Ælfred. Men.

by

by from making head any more against him. First therefore he fortifies his Place of Residence in Æthelney, and as he had a dextrous Wit, every way contrivable according to his occasions, wanted no Heart to entertain the least probability that Industry might work upon; nor Courage to put in Execution what he once resolved to be done: so he makes use of every Faculty to compass the End that he desired. He knew the Enemy so much too hard for him both in Numbers, and th' Advantage of his Fortunes, as that, in an ordinary way, it would not be to any great purpose to venture on him. And to hope for an Advantage without particular Information of the state of the Enemy, was a thing unlikely. And for means of Intelligence, he neither had the Instruments about him; and if he had had, others Eyes and Ears were not always sufficient Spyzals to prompt the Apprehension of him that by Stratagem must supply the Defect of his Power. Therefore taking a Harp, and fitting himself like one that went about to shew Tricks, and make Sport, with one only Confident with him, he goes into the Danish Army, and by the Privilege of that Disguise, had free Admittance every where even into the King's Tents, and there for many Days he so entertain'd himself among them, as that while he humoured them with his Mirth, he gave himself the fullest satisfaction he could desire.

The King like an Harper enters the Danes Camp.

81. Returning back to Æthelney, he privily sends for such of his Nobles and Principal Men as readily could be got together, tells them what he had done and seen, how careless and secure the Enemy was, and how easily he could find the way to give him a Blow. While his Nobles could but wonder at what he told them, he admonishes them of what was fit to be done, and pressing to take the opportunity, he made so good

1 This Relation is to be found in Ingulfus, Malmshury, and most of the more modern Authors; but it does not appear either in Affer or Æthelwerd.

The Saxons
assembled.

use of that Meeting and Conference, as that all the Hampshire, Wiltshire and Somersetshire Men (that were not fled nor revolted to the Enemy) upon some secret and diligent Sollicitation (as is to be supposed) in a military manner repaired presently to an assigned place on the East side of the great Wood (now Sellwood Forrest) in Wiltshire, and thence conducted to a place called ¹ Egbrichtston (I conceive ² it Brixston beside the Forrest) they there were presented to the King.

They come to Athanhane.

Ælfred encourageth
the Saxons.

82. The very Sight ³ of Ælfred, after so great a Suppression, and so long Concealment of him, as much rejoiced the Saxons as if they had received him from the dead, (it more than any worldly thing conducing to their Comforts and Encouragement;) but the King, making what use he could of the day for ordering of his Affairs, that he might neither loose time himself, nor give more than needs must to the Enemy, (who startled with the Alarm of his so publick Revival, and with the gathering together of his Subjects, began at Eddington to order a very great Army) he the next Morning betimes marches to ⁴ Okely, and the Morning after to Eddington, where though he found the Host of the Danes very great, yet taking them in disorder, or having discovered them mainly defective in some necessary Provisions, or what happier Inspiration else inclined him, he encouraged his Souldiers, giving them to understand ⁵, “ That howsoever they had suffered “ much, yet was all their Suffering short of the Demerit
“ of their Sins. That God had not dealt with them “ otherwise than after the Rule of a faithfull and lov“ ing Father, whose Chastisements once over, he would
“ the readier return in Favour and Compassion toward “ them. That now he had already begun to lay his

1 Egbyphter-rtane Chron. Sax.

2 Of this Opinion is also Dr. Gibson in his Interp. of Place Names at the End of the Sax. Chron.

3 Flo. Wig.

4 Iglea, or Æglea, Chron. Sax. Æglea and Eglea in others.

5. Hist. Eccl. Ang. Nic. Harpesfeldi, Secul. 9. c. 4.

“Hand upon the Enemy, and had stricken him with “Fear and Astonishment. That on the contrary he had
 “by Dreams and otherwise given unto him great Encou“ragements. That not only the Justness of their Cause, “(who had to do with none but Pyrats and Robbers, “never injured by them, and who had 600 times broken “Faith with them) gave them good Assurance of their “Hopes; but also the very Consequence of the present “Action, they being now to dispute whether Christia- “nity, or Barbarous and Heathenish Impiety, should “be established in the Land. That therefore they should “raise their Spirits answerable to so great a Work, no“thing doubting but that God would graciously assist “them in it.

83. Having ended his Speech, and being answered The Battle of Edding-
ton. with the great Alacrity of the whole Army, he presently charged the Enemy, forcing him to fight, and though, through the Greatness of their Numbers, they along time sustain'd the utmost of the King's Power, yet he in the End prevailing gave them a mighty Over- The Danes overthrown.
 throw, and that with so great a Slaughter of them, as if that Field alone had been appointed for the Recompence of all the bloody and inhumane Cruelties they had before committed in the Land. The Danes fly, and fall on every hand: and the King, being advertised, that in the Flight the chief of those that escaped had recovered a Castle not far off, to make an end of the work he had so well begun, he straightly besieged it, well Besieged.
 advised that the Provisions of the Place were nothing answerable to the time they must expect for Succour.

84. Scarcely had he there besieged them a Fortnight, when pinched with Cold and Hunger, and broken with Terror and Distraction, they in great Humiliation, and with Tears in their Eyes, desired Mercy upon any Submit.
 Conditions it should please the King to propound; for Performance whereof they offered to give what Hostages he would demand, without any Counter-Hostages on his part to be delivered unto them.

1 Hoveden. 2 Ass. Men. and Flo. Wig.

85. Ælfred, naturally inclined to Mercy, condescends to their Requests; but to make the best use he could of their broken and much softened Hearts, both to their good and his own, he demands that ¹ Guthrum their King, (for it seems the other two Kings Oscitell and Amund were slain) the Chiefs of the Army, and all the rest of the People should receive Christianity and be baptized, and should at his pleasure depart out of his Dominion. To all that the King demanded they agreed, and for Performance gave both Oath and such Hostages (both for Number and Quality) as the King himself did think sufficient for him.

Guthrum
and the Danes baptized.

86. Guthrum, according to the Agreement, attended with 30 of the Chiefest of the Army, and divers others of the Common Souldiers, came within a short time after to the King to ² Alre, and there in ³ Weadmor they were baptized, where Guthrum was by Ælfred his Godfather named Æthelstan, and both he and his new Christened Company with much Honour entertained by the space of 12 Days, whom also at their Departure ⁴ Ælfred in a royal manner presented with Gifts according to their occasion and the present store he then had.

East-Anglia and North- umberland assigned to them.

87. But desirous by all means yet further to oblige Guthrum, (whom he made reckoning he had not only overcome, but wonn and made his own,) he gave him the Kingdoms of East-Anglia and Northumberland to hold of him for ever, determining the Bounds of his own distinct Possessions from those of Guthrum's in this

¹ Gordinus in MS. D. Ken. Digbæi, n. 196. ² Alny. Æthelw.

³ In the Saxon Annals 'tis said they were baptized at Alre, and that his Christm (or rather Christmal) was pull'd off at Wedmor. This was a white Linnen Cloath put upon their Heads presently after they had been baptized & anointed, that the Oyl might stay on, and taken off 8 days after. In MS. Digb. n. 196. The place is call'd Westm, i. e. Wesimer, or Wesiminsier, which one might conclude to be a Mistake of the Librarian, for Wedm, i. e. Wedmer or Wedmor, if immediately after the Author himself did not tell us that Guthrum and his Company were entertain'd thse 12 days at London.

⁴ Cui rex cum suis omnibus multa & optima ædificia largiter dedit. Affer. Men. & Flo. Wig.

this fort, viz. ¹ Along the Thames (from the Mouth thereof) to the River Lea, from thence to the Head of Lea, thence streight to Bedford, and then down the Ouse to WatlingStreet, with which it meeteth at Huntingdon. As for any further Bounds there is no mention; because that from thence Westward toward St. David's, that well known way was still the Boundary between them.

88. The Gift of these Kingdoms necessarily drew on a Treaty and Articles between the King and Guthrum,^{Ælfred giveth them Laws.} for the well governing of the Territories he was to hold of him: which being then agreed on are in part to this day extant with us (among the Laws of the Saxon Kings set forth by Mr. Lambard) in two severall Capitulations. The first whereof, there entituled Fœdus Aluredi & Guthrumni, is only a short Provision for the present Stay of Things untill some further Order might be taken for a fuller Union and Security between their People; where setting down the Bounds and Division of their distinct Territories, (as is already rehearsed) it then provides, that there shall be but one and the same Estimation of Person both of English and Dane, and the Mulct for Slaughter of them both alike. That a Thane (or 'Man) of the King's being question'd for Man-Slaughter, or any Offence above four Marks, shall be try'd by twelve of his Peers, and others by eleven of their Peers and one of the King's Men. That no Buying of Men, Horse or Oxen shall be justifiable without Voucher of the Seller, and his Avowing the Sale. And lastly that there shall be no Licentious Enter-course of the Souldiers of the one with those of the other Army.

¹ The Saxon Words are: Æþeȝc ymb upe landgemeþra up on Temeȝe. 7 ðonne up on Ligan. 7 andlang Ligan oð hipe æpȝlm. ðonne on ȝepihte to Bedanforða. ðon up on Uȝan oppætlinga-ȝcpæt. Which is thus to be understood, viz. That King Ælfred did hereby grant him East-England and Essex; so that the Bounds of their Dominions were first the Thames, then the River Lee, as far as Hertsford, whereabouts it riseth: then from Hertsford to Bedford, all along WatlingStreet, and from Bedford all along the Ouse to the Sea. Which is sufficient Proof that the Eastern Parts of England then belonged to the Danes; notwithstanding which Polydore Vergil, calling this King by the Name of Gormon, vehemently contends, that that Country was not bestowed upon him, as is noted by Mr. Leland in the second Vol. of his MSS. Collections in the Bodlejan Library, f. 192. a. Krantzius likewise denies that this Gormon was converted to the Christian Faith; yet grants [De Regibus Daniæ, lib. IV. c. 15.] that about this Time one Froto was converted. But whatever these Authors say, the Agreement it self plainly distinguisheth their Territories, and the Testimony of Aſer, who lived at this Time, (not to mention the Saxon Annals, and the Passage of John Picus, who lived in the Reign of Hen. I. cited by Mr. Lambard) is uncontrollable as to Guthrum's Baptism.

89. The other Capitulation, which soon followed the first, is by Mr. Lambard entituled, Fœdus Edouardi & Guthrumni. The Scope whereof is chiefly a giving of Law to the Dane, and tying him to observe the Rules of Christianity, though (as the great Licentiousness at that time required) they were made general, including the Saxons as well as the Danes, and for the most part in a greater Penalty. The Tenor of them is after this sort: That forsaking Heatheness, they shall worship God, one, and him alone. That the Peace of the Church shall be inviolate, and the Peace of the King's hand unbroken. That if any shall renounce Christianity, or promote Heatheness, he shall according to the Offence be punished with Fine, Ransom, or Confiscation. Then follow Ordinances against Misdemeanours in Religious Men, against Incest, against withholding of Tythes, against buying, selling, or working on Sundays, against Breach of the Fasts of the Church, against Tryals of Men on Holy-Days and Solemn Fasts, and Executing of Men on Sundays, against Witches, them that forswear themselves, &c.

90. Now though this Ordinance is by Mr. Lambard called Fœdus Edouardi, yet is it Ælfred's Law and not Edward's, though that (for the more shew of Authority) Edward joyned in the Making of it: for the Title in the Saxon Original is, The Ordinance that first K. Ælfred and K. Guthrum, and then K. Edward and K.

I Or Baron.

Guthrum

Guthrum made &c. when the English and Danes fully betook them to Peace and Friendship. Now that was in Ælfred's Life time, and, to be sure, Guthrum died at least ten years before Edward came to the Crown. But as Edward's joining in this Ordinance hath perhaps occasioned the Mistake of some, that Guthrum was not subdued by Ælfred, so Mr. Lambard's Translation hath confirmed the Error: for he does not only ascribe the latter of the two Ordinances to Edward only; but he calleth those Laws Leagues, Fœdus Ælfrædi &c. and Fœdus Edwardi &c. as if Ælfred had not given Law to Guthrum, but divided the Land with him, and made a League, as with a Party absolute and independent. And where the Saxon Copy of these Laws hath these words in the Title, viz. On the day that the Men swore, meaning the Danes, the Translation in the Person of the Kings renders it die quo in hæc juravimus, as if Ælfred swore as well as the Danes, when it was their especial offer to take what Conditions he pleased without any Caution on his part to be given them; and Aſer saies, that they, according to their Promise, came and swore to him, but speaks not a word of his swearing to them: for indeed Guthrum and his Danes (as we have shewed) were at this time brought unto the lowest and most abject degree of Subjection that an Enemy could be, in all things to refer themselves unto the pleasure of the Conqueror.

91. And further to shew the manner of Guthrum's holding of the Kingdoms of E. Anglia and Northumbria, Malmsbury tells expressly That they were given him by Ælfred, ut eas sub fidelitate regis jure hereditario foveret, quas pervaserat latrocinio. To this may be added, That the very joining in the Laws, shews That the one was a Vassal. For had they both been absolute, their joining had been idle; because neither had had power of more than his own Kingdom. And when upon Guthrum's Misgovernment, the Northumbrians (according to St. Cuthbert's Counsel in a Vision) made Guthred King over them, and he therefore granted the Privilege of Sanctuary to St. Cuthbert's Shrine, and made a Donation of all the Country between Tine and Tise unto the Episcopal See of ¹ York, we see that *Ælfred*² as the Sovereign joined with him in either Grant. And the Abbot³ of Croyland (within Guthrum's Limit also) reckons not that he enjoyed the Possessions of that Abbey under Guthrum, so much as under Ælfred. Neither is there any doubt to be made but that Ælfred was now absolute Sovereign of Guthrum and all the Danes that at this time were in England, and so by them acknowledged.

The Danes
remove to Circhester.
879. 28. æt.
6. regni.

A new Arrival.

And Return.

Guthrum
enters E.
Anglia.
880. 29. æt.
7. regni.

92. The Accord being fully made and finished, the Danes rise from Chippenham, and leisurely enough they come to Circhester in Glocestershire; where, because it was out of the Bounds of West-Saxony, (though otherwise within the Precinct of Ælfred's particular Dominions) they make no scruple to entertain themselves all that Year. And now again comes over another new Arrival of them; who searching up the Thames set them down at Fulbam, and winter there; during which time, they apply themselves in correspondence to Guthrum, and at first joined with him; but finding him upon a Course not agreeable to their Desires, they presently again fall off from him: and with all perceiving the way, which they had design'd to take, was now more difficult than they expected, through the late Provisions that Ælfred had made against them, they in the Spring put over into Flanders and set them down at Gaunt, putting there in practise the barbarous Outrages that they intended to have acted here.

93. Guthrum rising from Circhester went straight and took possession of his Kingdom of E. Anglia, distributed it among his Souldiers, and the greatest part of them there settled and inhabited; but such of them as at the

1 Of Durham rather.

2 Tam rex Guthredus quam Ælfredus. Et post, præfati duo reges addiderunt. Rog. Howeden.

3 Ingulf. Saxa.

Overthrow and Accord at Eddington refused to become Christians, not fancying Rest nor the Course of Plantation, fell likewise off from Guthrum, and fitting themselves for another Fortune, they, ¹ under the Conduct of one Hastings, the year following put over into East-France or Flanders, where speeding well in their first Encounter with the Francks, they made their wonted use of their good Fortune, and furnished themselves so well with Horfe, that they are reported to have become all Horfe-Men, and then one while with their Horfe by Land, and another while with their Boats by Water, searching up the Meuse, the Scheld, the Sonne, &c. they, and those others that were before set down at Gaunt, for four years together committed great Spoils in all those Countries, Flanders, Brabant, Haynault, Artois, Picardy, &c. and having afterward (in the divers ways of Forraging that they took) met all at Amiens, upon the Sonne, they there divided themselves into two Parts, whereof the one again took back into Flanders more diligently to visit those late overrun Parts, and the other into England, yet once again, as they thought, made work for Ælfred as we shall hear anon.

881. 30. æt.
8. regni.
Hastings enters France.

885. 34. æt.
12. regni.

94. Ælfred, in the mean time, (while the Division of his Enemy gave him a little Leisure) failing in nothing, wherein his Care and Vigilance might advantage him, to make the best Improvement of his late Return of Fortune, had kept a wary Eye upon the Coasts against the Approach of Strangers, encreased his Shipping (whereof he had now with great Labour and Diligence made an extraordinary Provision) and in the year 882. had had a notable Encounter with a great Fleet of Danes, that were seeking where to arrive; the Success whereof was that his Ships, grappeling with those of the Enemy, after a long Conflict, forced two of the Danish Vessels, and took them, and, according to the Order given in that Behalf, presently put all the Men to the Sword; other two, (wherein were two of the Danes chief Conductors) having most of their Men either slain or made unserviceable, cast themselves upon the King's Mercy. The Residue, maimed and shattered in the Fight, were, upon that Disadvantage, driven to pursue their wonted Course in a new Quest of their Fortunes.

The King encreaseth Shipping.

¹ Malmesb.

The Danes
return out of France.

Attempt Rocheſter.

Leave their Booty and return.

95. Many Encounters and to very good purpose had the King's Shipping in that kind. And yet so frequent was the Arrival of Strangers, because so little Knowledge beforehand of either their Preparation or Coming, that all that could be done could not prevent, but that while the King's Forces were busied in the Resistance of some of them in one Place, others had the Fortune to land quietly in another. And among the rest, that Part of the once departed Army, which, after their Dividing themselves at Amiens, made again for England, landing safely in Kent, came up the River Medway, and besieged Rocheſter, where they presently raised a great and a high Tower of Timber against one of the Gates of the City, as also divers other lesser Works in sundry Parts about it. But the Citizens standing manfully upon their Defence, Ælfred came with great speed to their Succour, and the Pagans (that of old Experience had found it good, to make no Trial of his Sword, in case they could make any shift to escape it) no sooner understood his speedy Approach, but distrustful themselves they gave over their Attempt, and headlong fled to their Ships, lest Ælfred seizing on them might happily have prevented them of the means of Retiring. And so much were their Thoughts fixed upon their Safety in that kind, as that their Booty, (which they preferred before all other things in the World) to expedite their Flight, they in great Abundance left behind them, especially their Horse, (whereof they had good store) and also their Captives, both which were left as a Prey to the Saxon Army. And so, having made but a short stay there, and only lightened themselves of their Baggage, they are yet once again sent over Sea, and forced a second time to entertain themselves in France.

96. Ælfred

96. Ælfred, rid of these, sooner than he himself expected, diligently pursues the Course he was upon, in intercepting the Arrival of new Forces. And apprehending more and more the ground of his Disadvantage, that, being altogether imployed in a Defensive War, he stood meerly upon his Guard, wherein the State of the Country did but ill befriend him, for that, being to the Coasts side every where wast and unpeopled through the Frequentation of Pirates, it gave easy Footing to any that could get safe on Shoar: which many amongst such Swarms of Invaders continually did, if at any time the King's Shipping failed in their Service, or were entertained in resisting such as by chance they fell upon. And he himself never disturbed the Enemy, but when he was either assailed by him, or immediately threatned: when if he prevailed he had but an empty victory; if he were overcome, he was not only beaten at Sea, but suffered likely in his Country also. Therefore now he resolves he would himself attempt the Enemy, who though he were not near at hand, nor had any certain Country where he might annoy him, yet considering that the Kingdoms of E. Anglia and Northumbria, given in Fee to Guthrum and his Danes, by reason they were open to the Coasts of Germany, were very obnoxious to the footing of Strangers, and that all along those Coasts there were continual Incomes of them, who easily finding Entrance among their Country-Men sat down under Guthrum's Protection, and yet gave themselves freely to Robbery and Piracy, held Correspondence with those that invaded Ælfred's Territories. And Guthrum either had not the Power, or not the Will to restrain them; (for his Fidelity was never answerable to his Obligation:) so as these did not only with continual Damage molest the King and disturb the Quiet of his Country, but, if ever any Invasion or general Distemper of the State should happen, they, like a Cloud in the Wind, on every side threatned him with a Storm. Therefore putting good Store of Souldiers on Board in certain of his Ships

The King
pursues the Guard of the Coasts.

Sets upon the new & unsubdued Danes.

Ships he had prepared in Kent, he gave them Directions to fall upon the Shipping of the East-Angle Pyrates in their Harbours, and to forrage and spoil their Habitations, putting their own warfare in practise against themselves. These addressing them to do the King's Command, in their very going out happened about the Mouth of the River Stoure † to meet with sixteen Ships of those Danish Pyrates well prepared for fight, and bound for some wanted Adventure. And though the King's Ships had Commission to another End, yet seeing it was the same Enemy, and the service of one and the same Importance, they presently set upon those Pyrates, and they, like Men of War, a long time stoutly maintained Fight with the King's Ships: but in the end they were all overcome and boarded, the Men slain, and their Ships with good store of Money taken and brought home by the victorious Navy.

97. This Encounter and Victory so stirred the new-come and unsubjected East-Angle Pagans, that forth-with assembling what Shipping they could procure, and mightily manning of them, they suddenly set upon some of the King's Ships in the Mouth of the Tbames; where his Ships, being rather surpris'd than encountered, (for it seems to have been before day) when yet the Mariners were almost all asleep, the Pagans (saith the Author, not mentioning any other Particulars) had the Victory.

98. But by the Victory I understand no more than the better of the Assault; for that it seems that those East-Angle Armies, (as well as the other that were obedient unto Guthrum's Command) notwithstanding the

† Our Author is mistaken in supposing it to be the Mouth of the River Stoure in Kent. For he that attentively reads the Story, as related by Aſſer and the Saxon Annals, will conclude that 'twas in East-Anglia, which contained Norfolk, Suffolk, &c. Therefore Mr. Lambard [Perambulation of Kent, p. 262.] thinks it happened at the same Place now called Harwich Haven. For that River which is of the same Name with this in Kent divideth Essex from Suffolk, and not far from the Head thereof in Essex standeth a Town yet called Sturmere.

Book I. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

75

Success they had in that Action, were ne'rtheless glad, instantly upon the doing of it, to make Peace with King Ælfred; which again the very same year they most opprobriously brake, (saith the Author :) but wherein, or with what Advantage to themselves, appeareth not; only this is manifest enough through the sequel of the King's Affairs, that his Success received little Diminution by any thing they did. For ' though the Firing of Towns and great Slaughters of People in this Place, spoken on by most of the Writers, do not obscurely infer that this year (886) was a very 886.13.reg. busy year unto the King, yet so little did it interrupt the Course that he was now in hand withall for reducing and settling of his Affairs, as that, like a Palm-Tree, rather flourishing the more with his Depression than yielding to it, he, notwithstanding those Broiles Rebuilds his wasted Towns. (like one abounding rather with Peace and Leisure than in continual Wars) with his Sword in his Hand plies the Repair and Fortifying of his wasted Towns, and especially London, which having (in Æthelwolp's time) been taken and wasted by the Danes then, and now again (it seems) by others of them lately seized and held against the King, he with a strong Siege wrung out of their Hands; and whether he judged it an opportune Bulwark for his Dominions against the Rovers that came up the Thames, or whether the Advantages of Situation even then in his Eye gave it the Preheminence for a Mother-City to the whole Island, above all other he most carefully reedifies that, building it in a nobler sort of Habitation than formerly; and having done, he committs it to the Custody and Protection of Æthelred his Valiant Son-in-Law, whom also he made Earl of Mercia, from thenceforth no more a Kingdom, but a Province of his new-designed Monarchy.

99. The King's late Success against the Danes, and his Provisions made against the Arrival of Strangers, had now reasonably well diverted the Current of the Danes, shitting them over into France, and other Places.

1 Ælfred. Men.

Yet

Fortifies his Borders.

Orders his Levies of Men.

Yet considering that the vicious Humour, howsoever diverted for the present, if it continues still, is always in danger to return to the Place first visited, unless that it be some way fortified against it, the King forced all that might be to be prepared for the Change of Fortune, and did not only repair (as we said before) his wasted Towns, but build^d new Cities and Forts in opportune Places of his Borders: and further also ordered his Levies of Men in such a sort as was both more to the Ease of the Subject, and more ready and proper for the Service that he had in hand. It formerly had often happened, That when the King had raised what Power he could make against the Enemy, approaching one way, before his Forces could meet with that Enemy, they were called back by Tidings of the Approach of a greater Host another way; and ere they could resolve which to pursue, News came they must leave both, and go against a third more dangerous than either of them. And when their Presence perhaps had been sufficient to have overcome the Enemy, they themselves were overthrown of their own Toil, Distraction, and Harrowing up and down. Therefore Ælfred, having in all his Cities and Forts placed sufficient and constant Garrisons, the Residue of the People, that were to serve as occasion required, he so distributed into Divisions, that what Levy soever was in any Place to be made, an answerable Part remained unlevied at present, which was ready at a set time in an ordinary Course to Relieve them, by supplying their Turn, or (being hastened upon occasion) to render them a timely Succour. Withall his Men being well disciplined and exercised in their Courses, they not only knew the certain Times and Duty of their Service, but finding both their Ease and Benefit by it, did it with that Alacrity, that much advanced the Service that they went about.

100. So notable was the Manage of the King's Affairs, during the time that the War was a little remis, as that the Natives (whereof many hitherto did still adhere unto the Enemy, many chaced away by him lived in Exile abroad, hidden and disperfed where they could find any Place) upon fo manifest Effects of Wisdom and good Conduct in the King, now wholly from all Parts came in and rendred themselves and their Fidelity unto their common Lord. So as now confidering that the English (henceforth the common Name of all the feveral Saxons) had entirely as it were attuned to him, the Danes, wheresoe're fettled in the Kingdom, were upon Terms of affured Subjection, acknowledging Sovereignty in Ælfred, and giving Hoftages to fecure him of their Fidelity, the Forreigner, after fundry Affairs of Entrance, voluntarily quitting the Ifle again, as a Place not affording him any safe Footing, and the Land for 10 or 12 Years together enjoying a reasonable Measure of Rest and Quiet. One would have thought that Peace had now undertaken the Founding of the Monarchy, and, wholly intent to that great Work, had fhut the Doors againft any farther Disturbance from abroad.

1 This was in the Year DCCCLXXXVII.

adhere

101. But fo sweet it feems was the Relifh of the Country to thofe that had once tafte of it, that how well foever they fped in other Places, what they got abroad they defired to have enjoyed here. And therefore when thofe great Armies of Prey, that from hence had put over into East and West France, and, there (by daily Accessions and Union of divers of their Country and Condition) from time to time augmented, had, under the Leading of Hastings, by the fpace of 12 or 13 years together, to and fro ravaged all thofe Countries up the Meufe, the Scheld, &c. and again the Sene, the Marne, the Sonne, the Ione, &c. and confumed to Afhes in that Wafte of theirs above '900 Houses of Religion, were now grown fo formidable to all the Provinces of France, as that Arnulph the Emperor, then King of the Franks, to free his Country from fo great a Mifery, was driven (befides the Power of the French,) to come with his Imperial Forces the Saxons and Ba-

330 sail of Danes from France.
893.

vations to resist them, when he with their Help had once or twice prosperously and with great Slaughters warred upon them, and still bent himself to their Prosecution, the Danes in the End, having had the Spoil of all the Towns upon the forenamed Rivers, (Paris only excepted) and wonderfully provided of Horse and Shipping, assemble at Bulloigne, and thence in the year 893 with 330 Sail of Ships, and with greater Hopes than ever yet, they put again for England, 250 of them land in Kent, in the Mouth of the Rowther, where Rhy stands, and searching up the River as far as Appledore, they there surprize an Old Fort, kept with a small Garrison, raze it, and in the place make themselves a strong and more capacious Fortification.

80 Parones. 102. The other 80 Sail, conducted by Hastings himself (who was now grown a Man of great Eminence and Repute) arrive in the Mouth of the Thames, and coming on Land at Middleton upon the Wells in Kent,

I The Sax. Chron. calls it Limene. And so, with a little variation, the other old Writers. Which however is not denied to be the same with what is now call'd the Rother. But our Author is certainly mistaken in supposing the Mouth of it in those Times to be where Rhy now stands. For there is no doubt to be made that 'twas at New Romney, the Channel being alter'd by a violent Tempest in the Reign of Edw. I. Indeed Antoninus places pons Lemanis [or rather portus Lemanis, as in the MSS. Lectiōns placed in a Copy of Swita's Edition, in Bibl. Bodl. 8vo D. 116. Linc. which came out of Dr. Bernard's Study. I find it also portus Lemanis in the Editions before Swita; and so 'twas also in the Copies of Antoninus made use of by Dr. Rob. Talbot in his Annotationes in eam partem Itinerarii Antonini quæ ad Britanniam spectat, MS. in Bibl. Bodl. Mus. 243. which is the very Copy made use of by Mr. Burton in his Commentary upon the same Part of Antoninus, who likewise reads portus Lemanis, pag. 193.] but XVI. Miles from Durovernum [Duraveruo in the said MSS. Lectiōns in Swita's Edition] or Canterbury, whereas New Romney is XXI. But 'twas easy for the Transcriber to put an V for an X. And tho' Appledore be VI Miles distant from Romney, yet the Æstuary was then so very large (however alter'd since by the Change of the Channel) that Appledore was not above IV Miles, as hinted in the Saxon Annals, [p. 92. Ed. Gibsonianæ] from the River's Mouth. [See more in Mr. Somner's History of the Roman Ports and Forts in Kent, pag. 37, &c.

they

they there make themselves a very strong ¹ Entrenchment.

103. It should seem by Mr. Fox (who, as he says himself, had other manner of Particularities concerning Ælfred's Life than now are extant) that there were also at this very time other Arrivals of the Danes, in several Places of the Kingdom, and that Ælfred, upon occasion of Guthrum's Death, (which was about this time) and, upon some Complaints of his Subjects against the In-land Danes, was himself in East-Anglia, when the Tydings of these Arrivals came unto him: but neither has Mr. Fox gone so far as to relate any thing of their Doings, neither find we elsewhere any mention of them, the Actions of Ælfred, and his time, being from the year 886, in which Affer Menevensis left them, more scanted and interruptedly delivered than before. But taking them as they are, we find, That, Guthrum being dead, Ælfred ² opportunely caused the Northumbrian and East-Angle Danes to renew their Oaths of Fidelity, and to that end took six new ³ Hostages of them.

894

104. The Noise of the Arrival of these so great ^{The Danes} Forces of Danes unties all Bonds of Faith and Obedi-^{rebell.} ence between those that were settled here before and Ælfred their Sovereign, the Hope of Gain and Booty prevailing more with them than the Remembrance of Faith and Oath, (though in many of them sealed with Baptism) more than the Forfeiture of their Hostages, and (which in nobler Minds would have prevailed till Death) more than their Gratitude to the King, that had so oft obliged them in the Pardon of their Lives,

¹ Part of it is still remaining, being called Kemfley-Castle, on Kemfley-Doxon in the Parish of Milton or Middleton, which is not far distant from Sittingburne, so named from the Wells arising there, call'd by our Author the Wells in Kent. See Lambard's Perambulation of Kent, p. 204, 238.

² Flo. Wig.

³ According to the Saxon Chron. Guthrum died an. 890. according to Florence of Worc. an. 891; yet both agree that these Hostages were given to Ælfred an. 894.

The Life of King Ælfred the Great. Book I.

in the Restoring them their Wives, their Children, and their Goods with Liberty of Habitation among his Subjects : which when with continual Treacheries they had often forfeited, and the Chance of War had sundry times delivered into the Power of the King, he notwithstanding had remitted, and with his continual Pity multiplied their Obligations to him.

105. But all those Regards were wholly drowned now in the Expectation of some greater Matter, and not unlikely of some such Change as should have turned the Scale, and brought the Saxons wholly under their Subjection ; therefore diligently complying with their new-come Country-men in Kent, whensoever they began to stir, some of these were always in a readiness, and either joyned with them, or at the same time gave in upon some other Parts of the King's Territories, thereby to distract and weaken his Resistance.

The King attends the Danish Army.

106. But Ælfred, knowing it better to assail the Danger rather in the Head than the inferior Parts, with a Competent Levy of Men hastens into Kent, where, the Armies being drawn somewhat nearer together, he with his Body incamps between¹ them both in such a sort, as that he was ready provided, either to give Battle, (if the Danes would be drawn out of their Trenches) or otherwise to fall upon the Parties that first should give the venture to break in and forrage any further up into his Country.

107. In this sort stood they a while at gaze, neither of their Armies daring (for all their great Multitudes) to venture upon the King's Army : only by stealth, as they thought themselves out of his Reach, some with their Horse, where the Country was open, others on Foot, through the Covert of the Woods, ventured

¹ There are yet remaining the Ruins of a small Castle call'd Be-word-Castle on the other side of the River opposite to Kensley-Castle; where some think 'tis probable Ælfred incamp'd. But others believe that 'tis more likely that 'twas towards the Midland Parts of Kent, perhaps near Bocton, as being between both Armies, and affording a convenient prospect into the two Plains.

here

here and there to thieve and pillage, but, contrary to their old Success, they were from time to time so cut short by the Army, the Garrisons, or the Inhabitants, as that, finding a great Difference betwixt the Provision of the Country now, and that which formerly they had known, they found that their Expectation had deceived them. Besides, the King's well plying of his Business with the Inland-Danes, in renewing the Bonds of Oath and Pledges, for assurance of their Fidelity; although it had not prevailed so far as to keep them wholly within the Bounds of perfect Duty, yet it so far bridled their Perfidiousness, as that, it not ripening soon enough to afford unto these new-come Danes so full an Aid, in Manner, Time, and Quantities, as they relied on, it in a manner frustrated their Design. Therefore neither daring all together assail the King's Army, nor go in small Troops any more on Forrageing as before, they first dispatch their Shipping to Mersey-Island, in the Mouth of Colchester River, and then in an instant rising all together (thereby to illude the Guard that was upon them) they all at once in sundry Places fall upon the King's Country. And having for all the Army made a great Prey of Cattle upon it, they hasten by Land with their Booty toward Essex, that there they might meet with their Shipping.

They rise and forrage Kent.

108. The King seeing their Course, and that it was as impossible for his Forces to have restrained them, as to contain a River when in a swelling Rage she has broken down her Banks, warily minded their way and gathering together, and, in their going off, he meets at Farnham with the Body of the great Army that sat down at Appledore, suddenly sets upon them, overthrew them, forced many of them without Shipping to pass the Thames, where it was not Fordable, rescued the Prey, and took a good Part of the Horse which they had provided them in France. And that done, he sends on the Army to pursue the flying Enemy, while he himself was fain to attend some such Occasions in another Place.

Part intercepted at Farnham.

Hastins

109. Hastins with his Army, either met by Ælfred, and constrained, or else voluntarily (and perhaps deceitfully to abuse him with a Treaty, while the others foraged his Country) came to an Accord with the King, and took an Oath that he would in nothing damnify him, delivered him Hostages, and at his Request baptized his two Sons, for which Ælfred and Æthelred his Son-in-law answered at the Font. And thereupon the King bestowed many Gifts upon them, and let them peaceably depart, supposing that Hastins would now quietly set down in some Part of the Danish Plantation, as also he did: but being got over the Thames into Essex, he went no further than Bemflete upon the River's side, and having strongly, as he thought, entrenched himself there, he presently with all the Power he could make enters the King's Territories in Mercia, and forrages them.

Entrenched at Bemflete:

Forrageth Mercia.

110. The King's Army, that was sent in Pursuit of the Routed Danes, followed after them as far as Mersey in Essex, and there sat down and besieged them in the Island; but falling into want of Victuals, and the Date of their Service expiring, they return home, and Ælfred with a fresh Supply out of the West-Country hastens the whilst to succeed them. As for the Pagans they were resolved there to abide by it, because their King (or Commander of that Part of the Army) lay wounded in the Town, and could not thence be stirred, neither held they any Law with more Religious Observance, than not to desert their Commanders until Death. But scarcely was Ælfred well on his way after them, when News was brought him that the Northumbrian and East-Angle Danes (that by no Tyes could be restrained when such Hopes as they now had invited them) had by this time assembled 240. Ships; and that coming upon the Southern Coast with 100 Sail of them, they had put to land and besieged Exeter, and that 40. Sail more of them, having fetcht a Northerly Course about the Island, had put on Shoar some Forces, that were set down before a Castle in Devonshire,

The Inland-Danes enter the West-Country.

Shire, the Residue hovering yet about sought likewise where they best might put on shore.

111. The King, no whit troubled with the News, express'd only some Sorrow for the forces that were to go to Mersey, as fearing they might perhaps suffer for want of timely Relief, enflamed with desire of Rending the Danes the Merit of their perfidious Outrage, presently takes back his Horse, and sending the Foot to pursue the siege at Mersey, hastens himself with all the speed he could to Exeter, and, coming thither much sooner than he was expected, so mightily interrupted the Enemies Design, as that with Amazement and Terror they gave over the Siege, made all possible Hast to their Ships, and got away to Sea.

The King
relieves Exeter.

112. The truth was, they were too late in the Thing that they intended: for neither these, nor the new come Danes in Kent, expected any prosperous Fishing but in the Troubled Waters, which the One should mutually have procured for the other: and the King, (that never suffered time to slip in vain) having by their Slackness Leisure enough to encounter each severally, did his Work with that Expedition, as that he overthrew them, as much by their Disappointment as by Force.

113. But neither the Miscarriage of the present Action, nor fear of any Consequence of their unprosperous Rebellion, could make them forget their innate Desire of Spoil and Robbery: and therefore no sooner were these that left Exeter out at Sea, and believed (as they thought) to be returned back, but suddenly they put on shore again in Suffex, and fell on Forraging the Country about Chichester; but there likewise deceived in their Expectation, a great Part of them were by the Citizens and Inhabitants of the Towns thereabouts overthrown and cut in pieces, many wounded, and many of their Ships taken.

114. The Forces, that were left to go to Mersey, held on their Course to London, and there being supplied with Citizens, and some other Aids that came from the Western Parts, they came to Bemflete, in Essex; for by the way they understood that not only Hastins was entrenched there, but the greatest Remainder of the Army that rose from Appledore (not liking, it seems, to attend the Recovery of their wounded King at Mersey, during whose Infirmitie they were not to expect any profitable Employment there) had, upon notice of Hastins his Intrenchment at Bemflete, and the Strength of the Place, gathered together thither to him, and united themselves with Hastins his Body, and that Hastins himself was at that very Instant with a strong Hand entered into the King's Country and Forraging of it. Therefore thinking that opportunity not to be let pass, they resolutely set upon the Intrenched, and Forcing the Defendants out of their Trenches, they put them to sword or flight, razed their Works, seized upon whatsoever they found, took many of their Wives and Children Prisoners, and amongst them Hastins his Wife and his two Sons, and brought them away to London. And having likewise seized on much of their Shipping, what they thought not for their Turn they brake or set on fire, and the Residue they brought away with them to London and to Rocheſter.

Hastins's Wife and Sons Prisoners.

115. What became of the Danes at Mersey we find no further mention, save that in all likelihood we conjecture that as they were before one with those at Bemflete, so they again united and went together on the same Design: but Hastins being returned from Freebooting, and finding his Treachery fallen upon his own Head, in all Humiliation again applies himself unto the King. And he that was not easier any way to be overcome, looking on his Prisoners with the Eye of Compassion, as on Christians, in whom as Godfather he had particular Interest, suffers himself to be overcome of Hastins his Importunity, makes a new Agreement with him, takes more Hostages of him, and not only restores him his Wife and Children, but sweetens that Mercy with a Liberal Taſt of his Munificence and Bounty.

Upon new Caution set at liberty.

116. But the beaten and scattered Danes (who serving ing chiefly for Booty expected their Pay only from their own Hands) howsoever they subjected themselves to their Leaders in their successfull Actions, they yet held themselves free, and not tyed to partake of their Adversity; and therefore like Snow-balls in a Snow gathering more of their Kind by their Dispersing, grew again to a great Body, and, making head anew, came down to Shobury upon the Thames Mouth, not far from Bemflet, where by the Advantage of the Place they make themselves a Work of good Strength, and, being supplied with Aids out of Northumberland and other Parts of East-Anglia, they with a very strong hand fall into Mercia, coasting all along the Bank of the Thames, and stayed not 'till they came at the Severn, forraging and making Drifts of the Cattle that they could lay Hands on; but soon the Earls of the Counties, through which they passed, Æthelred, Athelme and Athelnoth, with the Captains of Garrisons and other Ministers of the King, appointed for the ordinary Defence of those Provinces, rose upon them, who having gathered together no small Army, and ¹ further aided with the Help of the Welsb, upon the other side of the Severn, put them to intrench themselves at *Buttington*² or Boddington upon a little Branch of the same River in Glocestershire, and

The Danes
at Shobury forrage.

Besieged at Buttington,

¹ Flo. Wig.

² Buttington, or Buttington on Sæfenn rtaðe, Chron. Sax. Budingtune juxta Severnam, Hunt. Ad villam quandam super flumen Sabrinae sitam Buttingedune appellatam, Mass. Westm. Mr. Walker and Mr. Somner correct our Author, the former telling us that 'tis in Shropshire and the latter in Montgomeryshire. Upon which Account Dr. Gibson [in Explicatione nominum locorum ad calcem Chronici Sax.] asserts that he knows of no Town of this Name upon the Severn in Glocestershire. IN QUO TAMEN AGRO NULLUM (QUOD QUIDEM EGO SCIO) EJUS NOMINIS OPPIDUM AD SABRINÆ RIPAM REPERITUR. But upon consulting Mr. Adams's Index Villaris and Mr. Speed's Table of this County, I find two Towns in this Shire answering to this Name in the old Historians, one call'd Boddington in Tewksbury-Hundred, and the other Bodendon upon a little Branch of the Severn in Cheltenham-Hundred, which is the Town Sir John Spelman means. I do not deny that Buttington in Shropshire, or rather Montgomeryshire, is the Place and overthrown.

Leicester surprised by them.

and there they straitly besieged them divers Weeks together, untill that the Danes, having first eaten their Cattle and then their Horse, began at last to dye of Hunger and other Wants, and then, too late growing desperate, made Sallies out and set upon the Besiegers, supposing to have forced their Passage, slew divers of the King's Servants, but not able to effect what they endeavoured, were all overthrown¹ at last, many Thousands of them slain, and the Residue forced to save themselves by flight, in which the wild woodiness of the Land at that time, and the wastness of a great Part of Mercia Northward, did very much befriend them.

117. Those that thence escaped, at last recovering their old Works in Essex, are yet once again augmented with great Supplies out of the other Parts of East-Anglia and Northumbria. And whether they understood by some of their Stragglers how weakly Leicester was at that time guarded, (having as it happened neither Garrison nor many Inhabitants) or whether rather those few that were in the Town held Correspondence and had secret Intelligence with the Danes; but at the Coming on of Summer they leave their Trenches, and with a direct Course march to² Leicester, and possess themselves of the Town, before that Ælfred and Earl Æthelred (that followed them hard) could overtake them: yet the Hindmost of their Army with their Baggage, and some Booty gotten by the way, fell into the King's Hand, and were cut short. But having got into the Town, which afforded them better means of Defence, than Sustainance, (for, it seems, the Country thereabouts where the Danes intrenched themselves, there being some evident Tokens of Fortification yet to be seen there; but He would have done well to have made farther enquiry, before he had given his Judgment against Sir John. I Flo.

2 By some Authors nam'd Wirheale, by others Chester, which is most likely; unless we allow that here was formerly a distinct City of this Name, from whence the Hundred of Wirheale was denominated. Which yet I do not see how it can well be; since this Hundred, as appears from Doomsday-Book, was more Anciently call'd Witabeston, lay wast, save only that there was some little Corn and Cattle near about the City) the King besieged them two Days in it, and then, either called back upon other occasion, or advised that it was not worth their further Attendance, they give the Corn that there was growing in Forrage to their Horses, or set fire on it, drive away the Cattle all thereabout, and gave the Siege over.

lay

118. The Pagans being at liberty quickly leave the Town, and fall down upon the Britains in North-Wales, and wasting a large Space of their Country return with a very great Booty; but not daring to venture back through the Province of Mercia, they drive about with their Prey by the Borders of Northumbria into E. Anglia, and so again to Mersey; where being now flesht, and refresht with their Prosperous Booty, they resolve to bring their Nestling a little nearer the King's Territories; and therefore coming about with their Shipping up the Thames as far as the River Lea, they then tough them up that River, and begin to make themselves a very strong and great Fortification, about the Place where Hartford now stands, within 20 Miles of the City of London. This the Londoners understanding, and fearing their so near Neighbourhood would be very troublesome unto them, they thought it best by all means to disturb their Works and not to suffer them to settle there. And getting some Aids from their Neighbours, they with a good strong hand assailed the Danes, and would have beaten them out of their Trenches; but it fell out to be a Work of more difficult than they expected, they received Loss in the Action, two or three of the King's Servants of good note were slain, and the Londoners forced to give over the Attempt.

119. They having failed of what they intended, the King himself with some small Forces comes and views the Place and Preparation of the Danes, and finding (it seems) the Danes betaken to their Hold, he disposes of his Forces in some convenient Places, for the Guard and Security of the Corn growing about the City, and

And re-
linquished,

The Danes
come to Hartford.
895.

Are in vain assailed by the Londoners.

896.

The King sets a Guard upon them.

the Parts near adjoining to the Danish Army, least (Harvest being near at hand) they might on the sudden either burn their Corn or carry it away. And then viewing well the Course of the River Lea as he rode along the Banks, he alters the Channel of the River, and, as the Monk of Worcester reports, caused it to be straitened with Dams and Peires that the Danes might not bring out their Ships again; but H. Huntington (to whose Opinion I rather incline) saith that he caused the Mouth of the Lea to be opened and divided into three Parts, there being (it seems) some Straitness before toward the Mouth which kept up the waters above, and at a low water made a great Descent of the Current, as we may perceive by the Danes toughing of their Ships up against it.

And moares their Ships. 120. The Mouth being opened into three several Branches, it laid the Stream so low as moared their Ships, so as they could not at their pleasure have them forth again. And (by the way) it is not improbable, that the Cutting of the River Lea ¹ in this sort might be the first winning of that great Level of rich Meadow and Pasture from Hartford unto Bow, which divers ways now beneficial, through the Fertility thereof both to the City and the Towns adjoining, is likely enough to have been formerly but only Fens and Waters, and to have had the Improvement of it first occasioned by this Act of the King's.

The Danes leave Hartford. 121. The Danes being hereby not only bereaved of the use of their Ships, but also of their free Access with Succours and Supplies unto their Castle, quit them both, and suddenly make another Outroad into the Western Parts of England, unto a Town upon the Severn's side called ² Quatbridge, (perhaps Quatford by Bridgenorth) north) and there with all the Expedition that they could they made themselves a Place of Defence, in which with much ado that year they wintered, while the Londoners seise their Ships and Works they left upon the Lea in Essex.

And enter Quatford in Shropshire.

¹ Concerning which see more in Sir Will. Dugdale's History of Imbanking and Draining, p. 74.

² Cpat-bmice, Chron. Sax. Cambridge, Æthelw. Quatbrig, Flo. Wig. Quantebrige, Matt. Westm. [as in the printed Copies; but Cantebrige in MS. Laud. L. 44. Cantebrege in MS. 193. Musei Bodl. Cantebregge in MS. Hatton. 97.] Quadrugge, Hunt. Brugges, Bromt. Mr.

122. The Saxons now began to find a little Ease in that the War abated somewhat of the Toile that it had formerly given them. But long it was not before there followed a marvellous Plague and Mortality both of Man and Beasts, which for three years together at this time raged throughout the Land in such fort, as that it much disadvantaged the King's Affairs, by setting so fore among his Officers and chief Ministers of State: of whom were the two Bishops, Suitbulf of Rocheſter and Elheard Bishop of Dorcheſter; Ceolmond Earl of Kent, and Beorthulf Earl of Essex; the Prefect of Surry, and the Prefect of Wiltſhire, and many other.

A fore Mor: tality.

123. The Danes having hardly enough wintered at Quatbridge, and not knowing where to bestow themselves, at the Coming on of Summer they disband and sever, some of them into Northumbria, some into East-Anglia, as their Fortunes gave them Entertainment; but a great many of them, finding no Place of Rest, again put over Sea to try what better Fortune they could make in France.

897.
The Danes disband.

124. The Danes that remained yet unsettled being now utterly broken and beaten out of heart in all their

The last Remainder of them exercise Pi-

Mr. Sommer is of opinion that 'tis the same Town that is now call'd Cambridge in Gloceſterſhire, not far from a Branch of the River Severn, call'd Cam. But this Conjecture, as Dr. Gibson [in Explicat. nom. locor. ad fin. Chron. Sax.] has very well observ'd, seems improbable from the Distance between the Severn and Cambridge, which is at least two Miles, and consequently very badly situated to answer the End of the Danes in raising this Fortrefs, which was to obstruct the Passage of the King's Ships up this River. Upon which Account, considering that one MS. of the Saxon Chron. calls it Bpicge, which is the Name 'tis vulgarly call'd by now, and that Quatford is not above a mile from it, he inclines to our celebrated Author's Opinion that 'tis the same with Bridge-North and Quatford in Shropſhire. And of this Opinion likewise was Mr. Leland, as appears from the first Vol. of his Collections, f. 199. a.

Attempts

Attempts on Land, and becoming a Pestre and Surcharge unto their own Plantations, they provide them Shipping, repair certain long swift Vessels, that they had formerly used for Piracy, and making themselves as strong at Sea as possibly they could, they for a while anew annoy the Coasterly Parts of the English Territories, under the Leading of one Sigefert, a famous Northumbrian Pirate, until such time as that Ælfred, having understood the Advantage of the Pirates Shipping, caused other Shipping forthwith to be built, that (say the Authors) were as long again, as tall again, as swift again, and withal more stiddy in Sail than those of the Pagans. And having caused them to be well manned and put to Sea, he took the same year 20 Sail of the Pirates Ships, whereof the Men that were taken alive being brought to Land, and in exemplar Terrour hanged on the Coasts, the Pirates found that Course likewise as unprosperous as their former, and therefore soon gave over that unsuccessful Trade.

But without Success.

125. By this time Ælfred had not only overthrown, but wholly subdued the Danes. And though (according to the Fiction of Achelous, who often changed his Shape in his Combat with Hercules) they with their Fallshood and Shiftings did often in Variety of Courses renew their War and Fightings with the King, yet he again as truly personating Hercules mastered them in all their Changes both by Sea and Land, and did not only get, but also keep the Mastery of them, reducing the over large Extent of their first granted Dominion to a less and more fitting Circuit. For all Northumbria ¹ was at once taken from them and given to Guthred ² a Christian and a Saxon, though of Danish Original. And

¹ Ingulf.

² Yet for all this Guthred was subject to the Commands of Ælfred, and had no Power of Acting any Matters of greater Moment without his Authority. For tho' he granted Peace to the Church of Durham for 37 Days, and annexed to it for ever the Lands between the Fife and the Tine, yet this was not done without the Confirmation of King Ælfred, as appears both from Simeon of Durham, and the Monasticon Anglicanum.

the¹ Province of Essex (which was Part of their Kingdom of East-Anglia) was it seems taken into the King's own Hands, of which he made the forenamed Bertheolf, a Saxon, Duke or Earl. The Residue he assured to himself by Hostages and sufficient Caution.

126. And lest that there should want any thing to the Entireing of Ælfred in the Monarchy of the whole Kingdom of England, The Welsh, that hitherto (for all the Victories that Egbert, Ælfred's Grandfather, had had of them) held out still, and could not be won unto the English Subjection, they now came in and submitted themselves unto his Government ; that is to say² the several Kings of the whole Region of South-Wales, called Pars dextralis Britannia, (which being the Ancient Seat of the Silures and of the Demetæ contained eight of the fourteen Counties of Wales) some of them seeking Protection against the Sons of Rother (who seems to have been a Potent King in North-Wales) and³ others of them flying the Persecution of *Eadred*⁴, a fierce Mercian Leader, whom it seems they provoked to their own Hurt. These had long before put themselves under the King's Obedience. And then at last Anaraut also, the said Rother's Son, with all his Brethren, forsaking the Confederation of the Northumbrian Danes, (with whom they had long time in secret combined) of their own Accord came unto the King, and being honourably entertained by him, Anaraut there received Confirmation of his Christianity under the Hands of a Bishop, and yielded⁵ to be in the same Sub-

The welsh subject themselves to the King.

1 Flo. Wig. 2 Asser. Men. Camden. 3 Asser.

4 These Affairs of the Welch fell out about the year DCCCLXXXIV ; but our Author has not inserted them in due order of Time, that he might not break off the Thread of his former Discourse. The Welch had been subdu'd long before ; but observing Ælfred to be engag'd in other Wars, they thought it a convenient Season now to break off their Obedience. Eadred was not Earl of Mercia but Devonshire ; as is plain from John Bromton's Chron. and seems also confirm'd from Asser, who tells us that the Welch were assisted by Eadred and the Mercians, without acquainting us what Place he was Earl of.

5 Asser. Men.

jection

jection unto the King, both he and his People, that Æthered the Earl of Mercia (the King's Son-in-Law) and the Mercians were.

127. And thus at last have we beheld Ælfred, by his own Act and Personal Virtue, first subduing the overpowerfully Enemy, and making way to the Reducing of the broken Reliques of the Saxon-Heptarchy into an intire and absolute Monarchy. Next we see him constant and successful in that Course. And in the end (as it is an usual Consequent of great and eminent Virtues) we see him by the Reputation of his Doings brought unto the End of his work, and become sole Sovereign of the whole Island; as also we see him styl'd in his Life Time by Affer of St. David's in the Title Dedicatory of his Annals, viz. To my Venerable Lord, and the most pious Governour of all the Christians of the Isle of Britain, Ælfred King of the English-Saxons, &c.

128. Neither is this any thing contradicted by that which we have shewn that Ælfred in the Title of his Laws, in his Preface to Gregorie's Pastoral, and in his Will, useth no other Title than King of West-Saxons only. For (beside that he was slow to assume great Titles) it appeareth both by Persons named in them, and by other Circumstances, that all they were made before he had yet wholly reduced the Kingdom under his Obedience. Neither was he only Potentially Sovereign of all, in the sense that Ulysses makes himself the Overthrower of Troy,

Pergama tunc vici quum vinci posse cœgi;

but he was indeed more Actually Sovereign than he seem'd to be. He not only prepared the Ground, but he planted the Tree, though it flourished more in the Times of his Successours, and therefore Malmesbury

1. Geograp. Edw. Higgon's lib. 6. cap. 8. Hollingsbed fol. 121. That he reigned over the whole Monarchy of Great Britain, and expressly That Gregour King of Scots obeyed him and served him in all his Wars, and likewise his Successour Donald served him with 5000 Horse and dyed in his Service. SPELMAN.

(one of the most Judicious of our Monkish Writers) recounting the Extent and Glory of his Son Edward the Elder's Reign, he adds, De his licet merito Edwardus laudetur, palma tamen potissimum debetur patri per meum arbitrium qui tanta potentia fecit auspiciis. Though Edward (saith he) in these things is to be commended, yet the Glory of all (in my Judgment) belongs to his Father (Ælfred), who prosperously first made the way to all that Greatness.

129. Yet when we speak of Ælfred's Absoluteness, it must always be understood of such a Kind of Absoluteness and Sovereignty as was agreeable to the Condition of those Warlike Times. Otherwise it will perhaps be as hard to find the Kingdom of England to be wholly reduced under the Obedience of any Monarch whatsoever before the Conquest, as under K. Ælfred; nay not perfectly perhaps reduced under divers Monarchs that were after the Conquest. For the Ordovices or Inhabitants of North Wales, being naturally of troublesome Spirits, and seconded thereto by the apt Site of their Country, are scarce accounted to have been absolutely reduced before Edward the First his Time, which was above 200 years after the Conquest.

1. Camden's.

(The text in this section is extremely faint and largely illegible due to bleed-through from the reverse side of the page. It appears to be a historical note or commentary.)

Ælfred

Ælfred the Great,
 First Founder of the English
 MONARCHY.

BOOK II.

Containing His Laws and Political Government.

1. AS God, (after the first Creation perfected) in the greatest of all his ensuing Works in the World, to wit, the Founding, Rearing and Perfecting of States, Kingdoms, Monarchs and the Like, seldom or never wrought by his Omnipotent Power alone, but with the Service and Ministry of Man; so again (that in all Ages his Omnipotence might ne'retheless appear) he never had an extraordinary Work in hand, but that he provided himself of Men, fitted with Gifts so proper for the Service, and some of them endowed with such a superlative Measure of Spirit above the ordinary, as that it is not readily to be determined, whether his Power, considered in the Work it self, appeared more excellent, or in the Men that were his Instruments. A marvelous Instance, among many other, is the Life of this Prince, in whom, as toward a new Creation, we may discern the Spirit of God moving upon the Face of the Universal Chaos of this State, and giving it Being and Form, together with the first Principles of that Life, Beauty, and Perfections, that after Ages have since ripened it into.

2. What

2. What Difficult Ælfred had to recover the Land from the Usurpation of the Pagan Danes, and to make it a Platform fit and capable of an Imperial State, is all that hitherto we have endeavoured to set forth, and (according to the scant Memorials thereof remaining) we have made such Representation as you have already seen. It shall not be unworthy of our Labour now, to cast an Eye a little to behold with what Industry, Care, and Providence, he proceeded to the Planting, and Furnishing of the State in such a Sort, as that it should neither be defective in any thing, conducing to the Felicity of the Subject, neither yet to the eternal Glory of an Empire. And while we shew the Imperial State of this Land to have received the first Modeling from the Act of his Hand, it is fit that we also observe the Justice of that Act in his particular; for that it does not always fall out, that Founders of Empires do well observe the Rule of Justice, neither are smaller Kingdoms, or Signories, always brought into the Form of one entire Imperial State under one and the same common Laws and Policy, without some Injustice to the particular Subject.

3. But Ælfred having prevailed over a War, that had destroyed all the other Kingdoms of the Saxon Heptarchy; there were no Surviving Rights of any of them against which he could be a Trespasser. And as there is no Authority more absolute than that which necessarily follows the Manage of the Sword, so he, winning the Land with his Sword out of the Hand of an Enemy, had his Dominion, for Extent, as large as the Land it self; and, for Jurisdiction, at the Determination of his own will. And being become not only greater than all his Ancestors, but even the most absolute that a Sovereign could be, and all by his own Acquisition, it was now in a manner to proceed from him, what should be Law and Right. But as he had in himself a strong Impression of that Rule, which gives both Life and Regulation to all warrantable Laws, and which the more he Subjected himself unto, the more truly free, Ælfred a most Absolute Monarch.

free, and absolute indeed he was; so fought he by the Communion of the same to his Subjects, to establish unto them a fit and a reasonable Liberty, and by subjecting them only to the equitable Tryal of a known and certain Law, so make himself Sovereign of a Free People.

He maketh Laws.

4. While therefore his Sword had scarce well enough cleared the way unto his Scepter, he bestowed his Thoughts in nothing more than in preparing of Laws: wisely foreseeing, that as good and proper Laws have a material Effect in the first Forming of the People's Manners, so nothing is of greater Consequence to the future Glory and Prosperity of any State, than are the fit and right framed Manners of the People. And for attaining of this, his Aim was wholly to have his Laws pursue the Rule of Equity, and the Word of God, and not any Propriety of Frame, which either the general Rule of Empire or the peculiar Condition of the Kingdom might require: always magnifying Justice, and rightly understanding, That Justice is the Establishment of a Kindom, as well in the Practise of it by the People, as in the Administration of it by the Prince.

Seeketh
those that are most equal.

5. In the Composing of his Laws, he so much desired to find out those that were best and most equal, as that he is said to have made search into all Laws, both Divine and Humane, that he could light on; and first and chiefly those of the Old and New Testaments, and, after them, the Laws of the *Trojans*¹, Grecians, Britains, and Danes; some of which he translated, and out

¹ Ælfred Aluredc, [Alured (& sic mox) MS. Seld. in Bibl. Bodl. Arch. B. 26.] the Laws of Troye and Brute [Laws Moluntynes, [Moluntyne's MS.] and Marcians congregate With Danische [Danische MS.] Laws, that were well [Grekius wele, ut in MS.] constitute And Grekiſhe [Grekiſhe als wele MS.] also, well made and approbate In Engliſhe [Engliſhe tong he doo hem alle MS.] tongue, he them all translate out of others he made Collections, and from them he composed (I cannot say a Digest or Perfect Body of Whiche yet [yt ben MS.] bee called, the Lawes of Alurede At Westminster, [Westmynstre MS.] remembered [yt addit MS. recte.] in Deed.

Whiche

So John Harding, [Chron. fol. III. b.] relying upon the Authority of Geoffry of Monmouth. But there are some, (amongst whom is the Anonymous Author of certain Observations in MS. upon K. Ælfred in Univerſity College Library, which were shew'd me by my most worthy Friend and Patron Dr. HUDSON) who are of Opinion that this is false; since 'tis certain what Geoffry has deliver'd is for the most part fabulous, and Gildas complains of the small Number of British Monuments in his Time, not to insist upon the gross Ignorance in the Time of Nimius. Sir Hen. Spelman also [Gloss. voc. Lex] seems to agree with these Authors. And the thing it self is plainly contradicted by Ælfred himself, who in the Conclusion of his Laws informs us that whatsoever he found worthy of Observation in the Time of King Ina his Kinsman, of Offa King of the Mercians, or of Æshelbert the first Christen'd King, he had gathered them all together and committed those to writing which he thought most deserving, omitting the rest which appear'd to be of less moment. So that his Laws were nothing as it were but a Transcript of those of Æshelbert, &c. I must confess that this is a very plausible Supposition; but as I do not altogether reject the Story of Geoffry, so do I believe that here is a great deal of Truth in this particular. For tho' Æshelbert was the first that reduc'd the Saxon Laws into Writing, yet it does not hence follow that they were wholly ignorant before of the Laws here mention'd. The Greeks frequented this Island, as Mr. Camden has evidently made out. And divers Roman Colonies had been planted here. Agricola had Establish'd Civility amongst the Britains whilst he was Lientenant. The Druids were celebrated for their Learning. And Julius Cesar himself has given us an Excellent Account of their Constitutions, which shew they were good Lawyers. I know he tells us they had no Books for their Scholars to learn by; but however he withall affirms that they had divers Writings, which Strabo [Geogr. lib. IV.] very well explains, acquainting us that the Gauls writ their Contracts and Covenants, Bargains and Agreements, in Greek, a Language they affected by reason Marseilles, a City of France, was a Greek Colony of the Phœnicians. Upon which Account notwithstanding Ælfred for the most part followed the Laws of his foresaid Saxon Predecessors, (if we may guess from what are now extant, which however were only those made whilst he was King of the West-Saxons, as our Author observes) yet he also consider'd the Laws of other Countries, especially those mention'd by our Author, and so far made use of them, as he found would be most agreeable to his New Constitution of the English Governments.

Law Universal, though he seemeth to have had that in Design, but) some such Additions (at the least) to those that were already generally known and received, as might make them perfect, and authorize them to become a Common-Law to the whole Nation: allowing, abolishing, and altering the former, according to the Exigence of the Times, and the present Condition of the People, which now required other Provisions, than were in use in the time of the divided Heptarchy.

Most of his Collections of that kind lost.

6. But howsoever it be apparent, that the King took no small Pains for the Composing of Laws, and has in all Ages since been celebrated for the great Founder of our English Laws; yet find we not extant a Work of such a nature as can give Satisfaction, that it was the true and proper Result of those his Travels. As for his Laws that are extant, and published by Mr. Lambard in his Collection of the Laws of the Saxon Kings, though by way of Preamble they make a solemn Recital of the Decalogue, as also of such of the Apostolical Constitutions, as are found in the Acts of the Apostles, yet doth it appear by the Preface that they were Laws that were made while he was yet King of the West-Saxons only. And Mr. Lambard (as appeareth by his placing of them) taketh them to have preceded the Laws that were made upon the Occasion of the first subjection of the Danes, before which Ælfred had little Leisure to make any great Provision for any thing but the present Safety of himself and People. Nor is it to be doubted but that if they had been made, after that Ælfred alone had had the Administration of the whole Kingdom, they would have contained Ordinances concerning the Regulating and Establishing of divers things that necessarily followed the Matters then in Action: as namely, Provisions for the constant Defence of the Kingdom and Resistance of the Enemy, not temporary, as those that in a martial way had only Respect to present Necessity, but in a civil and perpetual Establishment. They would likely also have contained something concerning the Division of the Kingdom into
*
Shires,

Book II. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

99

Shires, and his Institution of Frebourgs and Decennaries, which we see they do not ; neither find we among them any mention of the Laws for tying of Men of Ability to set their Sons to School, nor for disabling of Persons ¹ Excommunicate from suing for any thing. Neither find we where he confirmed the Liberties which his Father granted to the Church, and enlarged the Grant and made it general ² over all England. Yet these things are ascribed to him. And that we may be assured that we have not Memorials of all that he did in this kind, Mr. Lambard in his Epistle to his Saxon Laws gives us notice that there were Saxonicarum Legum Æluredi fragmenta recondita, which also he put the world in hope, he would seek out and publish ³. By all which we may judge, that either he lived not to perfect a Work of so great Weight and Travel, or else he found not the Times able to comport so great an Innovation, as perhaps would follow the Introducing of them all at once at one entire Act ; in which Regard we may conceive that some of them only (and those by divers Ordinances and at several times) were put in Execution ; but for the main of them, they have so perished (as well to Remembrance as to Execution) as that there is neither Original, nor Copy of them, now found among us.

¹ Hollingshed. Def. Brit.

² The Granting of Tythes and Establishing the Rights of the Church over all England must needs be Ælfred's Work. For when no one but he could do it universally, we find no mention of the Heptarchs that did it in their several Kingdoms but only his Ancestors. And we see that Ælfred with his first Accord with the Dane (whose Plantation was clean without the Kingdom of West-Saxons, viz. in Norfolk and Torkshire) ties him to the Payment of Tythes, and keeping the Peace and Rights of the Church, which had been very strange he should have tyed a Heathen Stranger unto, if they had not been first established universally over all the Christian Natives among whom the Stranger lived. SPELMAN.

³ If we may credit the Mirror of Justices written by Andrew Horne, who liv'd at that Time, not only the Laws of King Ælfred, but a History of his Judgments also were extant in the Reign of King Edw. I. (post Conquest.) His Laws were likewise made use of at Westminster in the Reign of Edw. IV. as appears from the above cited Passage of John Harding.

7. It would not be passed over unobserved that in the Recitation of the Decalogue before spoken of, the second Commandment concerning the making of Graven Images is (according to the usage that followed the second Nicene Council, about an 100 years before celebrated) wholly omitted in the proper place. But then (as if supplied out of the Text it self, to make perfect that that was imperfect before) after the Recital of the tenth Commandment, there follows for a tenth, Thou shalt not make to thy self any Golden Gods: which being inserted by the King himself remains as a Note of the Corruption of the Church at that time, and of the Uprightness of the King's Profession notwithstanding.

8. For those Laws of Ælfred that are extant, they are of three several Heads: of which the first only do (in Mr. Lambard's Edition) bear the Title of Ælfred's Laws. The other are the beforementioned Constitutions which we have already spoken of, and bear the Titles, the one Fædus Ælfredi & Guthrumni; the other Fædus Edwardi & Guthrumni.

9. Now all these Laws, though (compared with the Laws of later times) they seem plain and simple, yet are they of the same Tenour and as elaborate as any of the Laws of the Times, that they were made in; witness the published Laws¹ of the Ancient Saxons, of the Goths, Longobards, and other Northern Nations inhabiting the Western Parts of Europe. And this we must note by the way, That the Curiosity and Intricacy of Laws grew not 'till settled Peace and Increase of Falshood and Contention extended the Laws to the Regulating of the Course of Suits; and to the Determination of divers things concerning Interest, whether Possessory or of Inheritance; whereas at these Times the Laws for the general extended only to Manners, to Matters criminal, to Force, and to Trespafs. And certainly as to that Point, the Rule of Equity has in these been well pursued: neither have succeeding Ages receded from them (for they were once the Laws of this Kingdom) upon any better Advice of what was more equal, but rather upon the sole consideration of the Consequence of Things; wherein Fear being the Agent has, for prevention sake, oftentimes enacted more severely, than Equity, for meer Punishment of the Fact, would of it self have done.

1 A Body of them was published in Folio first by Heroldus at Bas. MDLVII, and afterwards by Lindenbrogius at Franc. MDCXIII. Those who are vers'd in the Saxon Language are against our Author's Opinion about the Stile of Ælfred's Laws.

10. In these Laws¹ therefore we may observe, a great Regard to be had of Life, in comparison of what we find in the Laws of later Ages, which, for Remedy of very small Offences, have too ready a Resort to Bloud; whereas in Ælfred's Laws the severest Punishments were, The Cutting off of the Tongue in false and Seditious Speeches, The Loss of the Hand in Sacrilege, The Loss of Life in the Attempt of Treason, whether it were High Treason against the Prince, or inferiour Treason against the Person of an Earl, or other Meaner Lord. Likewise Fighting, or Drawing of a Weapon in the King's Hall, was Forfeiture of Life unto the Mercy of the King.

Those that are extant are merciful.

11. But in all these Offences, the Punishment might for the most part have been redeemed, if the Party delinquent were of Ability to make a Ransom. For the Rule of Justice in those Days was this. The Person of every one from the King to the Bondman, and every Limb and Member of every Person, was valued at a certain Estimation. Whosoever then killed a Man, or did him Violence, he could but make Recompence according to the valuation of the Person slain or injured. And in case of Slaughter, that Recompence or Mulet was called the Weregild, which if the Slayer paid, the King had the first Part, which was called Friþ-bote for the Breach of his Peace, and loss of his Subject. The

¹ They are not so mild as our Author makes them, being much severer than those of the German-Saxons publish'd by Lindenbrogius.

Lord had another, for the loss of his Man, which was called Man-bote. And the Kin of the slain the third, for their Loss and Diminution, called Mag-bote, or Gengild. And this if it were not paid, the Life of the Delinquent was exposed to the Kinsmen of the slain, as to the Avengers of Blood, according to the Law of Moses. And as the Kindred had Reparation for their Loss, so were they subject to Payment for their Kinsman, if, when he had killed a Man, he were not able to pay the Weregild; for then he fled for his own Safety, and the Kindred, or sometimes (as the Case stood) the ¹ Neighbourhood, or Household, paid the Kindred of the slain a third part of the Weregild, and sometimes the half. If the Forfeiture of an inferiour Offence, that were less than Manslaughter, were not paid, the final Punishment was, according to the Law of Taliation, Limb for Limb and Tooth for Tooth, sometimes Imprisonment, and the most frequent or rather only Punishment for Bondmen was the Whip.

12. There is not among all these Laws of Ælfred but one only Law that medleth any thing with Right or Inheritance, and that is, That ² no Man that had Land left him by any Kinsman, with Condition that he should not alien it, whether the Condition appeared by Writing or by Witness, might sell that Land to any but his Kindred; whence probably arose the use of ³ Inhe[r]itances not always following the Heirs themselves in perpetuity, but some certain Persons, unless any cutting off intervenē.]

13. It is very remarkable for those Times, That in the Laws that were made upon occasion of the Danish Subjection, the which in every Article are Religious, namely, for Maintaining the true Worship of God, the Peace of the Church, and the Rights and Duties of the same, as Tythes and the like, it is there ordained, That if any one in orders steal, fight, forswear, or committ Fornication, beside his Penance and Spiritual Satisfaction according to the Canon, he should make temporal Satisfaction according to the Law, by Weregild, Fine and Law-slight, as the Case required; and should find Sureties of his good Behaviour or go to Prison. And that if a Priest did committ abuse in bidding of Fasts or Holy-days, fayled in preparing the Chrism, or denyed Baptism: if he were an Englismen he should be grievously fined to the King; if a Dane he should pay his Law-slight.

¹ Da gexy' dan gilden, i.e. Solvant contubernales. LL. Ælfr. c. 27.

² See Selden's Analec'ta, l. II. c. 5. p. 102. Ed. MDCLIII. and Sommer's Treatise of Gavel-kind, p. 84. Lond. MDCLX. 4to.

³ Uncis inclusa defunt autographo.

14. These Laws (I say) are thus far remarkable, that it appears in them, that even in those times the Saxon Kings, *Ælfred*¹ and Edward, understood themselves to be the proper Sovereigns, as well of the Cler-

1 As King Ælfred by his great Knowledge in the Scriptures was very sensible of the gross Error of the Council of Nice in ordering the II Commandment to be left out; so also was he and his Successor Edw. sufficiently convinc'd of the Incroachment of the Pope in claiming a Superiority over the Emperor and all other Christian Princes, there being no ground for it in Scripture, and the pretended Donation from Constantine the Great being a meer Forgery, and never insisted upon till after the Time of Gregory VII. This has been evidently prov'd by several eminent Protestant Writers; and Cardinal Bellarmino himself, after all his great Learning shewn in behalf of the Pope, has been forc'd in divers Places to acknowledge the Sovereign Power of Kings and Princes over the Bishop of Rome as well as other Bishops. As this is built upon the Doctrine deliver'd by our Saviour and his Apostles in the New Testament, so is it likewise exactly agreeable to what was practis'd in the Jewish Church, where we always find that the Priests and Levites were subject to their Princes, Judges, and Kings. And therefore in the Convocation of the Province of Camberbury, first call'd An. MDCLII. primo Jac. and continued by Adjournments and Prorogations to MDCX, among other Canons this following was agreed upon, [See Bishop Overall's Convocation Book Lond. MDCXC, lib. I. can. XVIII.] viz. IF ANY MAN THEREFORE SHALL AFFIRM, EITHER THAT THE PRIESTS IN THE OLD TESTAMENT WERE NOT AS RIGHTLY AND PROPERLY SUBJECTS TO THE CIVIL GOVERNOURS, AS THE REST OF THE PEOPLE; OR THAT WHEN THEY ANY WAYS OFFENDED, THEY MIGHT NOT BE PUNISHED AS LAWFULLY BY THEM AS ANY OTHERS; HE DOTH GREATLY ERRE.

gy as of the Laity : and that the Church in their Dominions was not a forreign thing, subject only to an Universal Ecclesiastick Sovereign abroad, and exempt from the Jurisdiction of the State at home, (as Anselm, Beckett, [and] others afterward contended) but that the Clergy, as they were Part of the King's Subjects, so were their Persons and Fortunes under his only Protection, and answerable to the King for the Breach of his Laws. Nor did they account, that to question a Clergy-man, according to the Kings Law, did any whit infringe the Peace of the Church. For in the first Article of their Law, they solemnly confirm the Peace of the Church, and in the subsequent Articles do ne'retheless ordain, as we have already alledged. And truly though Edgar, the Grandchild of Ælfred, was a Prince altogether swayed by the Clergy of his Time, to the great Advancement of the Romish Ordinances : yet (as it appeareth by a Speech of his to the Clergy, and which they say was made by the Clergy themselves) he took¹ the animadversion into the manners of the Ecclesiasticks to belong unto himself, and so there telleth them. See the Councils, fol. 477. Afterwards the Clergy (growing more Romish than native) with a Fallacy wrought upon the Piety of our succeeding Monarchs, and setting forth under the name of the Church's Honour the Excellencies of the Church of Christ (rather invisible than visible) and the Preheminence of it in Dignity and Merit above the Dominions of this World, they then converted all the Prerogatives and Privileges, which might seem rightly belonging to the invisible Church, (which we know consists as well of Lay as Clergy) unto the Body of the Clergy only : when the Clergy are neither all of them Members of the invisible Church, neither if they were, were they all the Members : And so insisting upon a wrong assumed Preheminence, they imagined themselves a Body by themselves, exempt from the Laws and Jurisdiction of their native Prince and State ; an Immunity no whit agreeable to the Condition of those, that either were to be the Subjects of a well-founded Kingdom, or the Fellow-Members of the Body of the Militant-Church. And they further appropriating to themselves, and their Ecclesiastick Head, the whole Honour, Power, and Authority of the Church of God, they at once invaded the Rights both of Christ's Kingdom, and of all Christian Princes. Now this Usurpation having in this Kingdom been questioned and exploded, the Papals, to defend it by the Antiquity thereof, have very much insisted upon King Ælfred's Acknowledgment and Submission to the Ecclesiastick Sovereignty of Rome; whenas by these Laws of his it appears, that the Romish Supremacy was not in those times extended to the Restraint of the Authority of Christian Princes, in such sort as now it is: or if it were, K. Ælfred never submitted so far unto it. Therefore whereas *Nicholas Harpessfeld*¹ (out of Aluredus Rivallensis rather than Aßer Menevensis whom he citeth) saith of King Ælfred: Germanam & genuinam esse regis dignitatem, dicere solebat, si in regno Christi, quæ est Ecclesia, se non Regem sed civem agnosceret; si non supra sacerdotum leges se elate efferret, sed legibus Christi per sacerdotes promulgatis submisso se atque humili animo subderet: we may see, by the ill coherence of Ælfred's words there cited, (in the Sence that the Papals would have them understood) with his Laws here beforementioned, how corruptly the Author of that Passage, and they, that so much insist upon it, do mistake some pious Saying of the King's, when, instead of making known unto us, with what true Christian Moderation and Lowliness of Mind the King did execute that high and sacred Function, they have endeavoured to make us believe, that the King disclaimed all Sovereignty over his Ecclesiastick Subjects in the Church, and that he held himself rather a Subject of the Clergys than their Sovereign, to which End they also made a Resemblance of him in this saying of his to Constantine the Great; who being displeased, that some of his Bishops (when Christianity first put on the Imperial Crown) did by written Complaints publicly question one another before him, and admonishing the Bishops of the Scandal that such publishing of their Quarrels among Infidels would give unto the Church, and willing them therefore (as St. Paul does) to keep the Judgment of their Affairs among themselves, the Papals, with like misinterpretation of the Emperor's words then, do make his Answer (uttered in a pious Zeal and tender care of the Church) to amount to a Disclaimer of Jurisdiction over the Persons of the Clergy, to an Acknowledgment of Authority in them over him, and to a Submission of himself unto it.

¹ De quorum omnium moribus ad nos spectat examen, &c. that

¹ In Hist. Angl. Secul. 9. c. 5.

15. There is further observable, that from these, and other Constitutions of this King's, many notable Parts of our Law, yet in Practise, derive their first Original. For Example: that Law, which, with so much satisfaction to our selves, we gratulate to our Country, and prefer before the Laws of all our Neighbour-Nations, in Point of Equality of Tryal, (I mean the Law of Tryal by the Verdict of 12 of our Peers or Equals) was here (we see) first instituted, in the Purgation of the King's Thaines, by 12 of their Peers, and other Thaines by 11 of their Peers, and one of the King's Thaines, and again in the Purging of Borsholders by the Oath of 12 Borsholders, as we shall shew anon, all being the first Institution of King Ælfred.

Original of Tryal by Peers, and by a Jury of 12 Men.

16. From his Institution also is the Original of Putting men to find Sureties of the Good Behaviour, and of Committing them to Prison for want of Sureties.

Original of Sureties for the Good Behaviour.

Orig. of Vouchers upon Sale of Horses,
&c.

17. It likewise seemeth that the Authority of the Law of Change of Property upon a Sale in open Market, rose originally from a Law of this King's. When the Danes were first subdued and permitted to reside in the Kingdom, it was a common Practise between the two Nations, to steal, not only Horse and Oxen and other Cattle, but also Men and Women, and sell them one to another, and by this means Owners did not only loose their Cattle, but Men were wrongfully made Bond-slaves, and it was a tedious Matter to enquire after him that that sold them, and how he came by them; for Remedy of which Disorders the King made a Law, that whosoever sold either Man, Horse, or Oxen, should be sure of one to vouch for his Right in the things he sold, otherwise the Sale was not to bind. Afterward Fairs and Markets, because they were publick, obtained the same Authority that Vouchers had, 'till Fraud came to be practised in them, especially in selling of Horses, which, by reason of their speedy Carriage, were more readily bargained and sold than other things. And then the Statute of 31 Eliz. 12. did, as to Horses, revive the Express Law of Ælfred and tye the Seller to produce a Vouchee.

18. Lastly, The Original of the Law, that Persons Excommunicate should not be permitted to sue or claim Property, is by Mr. *Hollingshed*¹ ascribed unto Ælfred and divers other Things there be, in the Forms of the Law, and Government of the Kingdom, (some of which we shall have occasion to touch upon) which had their first Institution from the Ordinance of King Ælfred. And I know not whether I may well omit, that, in all probable conjecture, the very name of Common-Law originally sprung from his Constitutions. For whether it were so called, because it was made a Common-Law to all the Inhabitants of the several Kingdoms of the Heptarchy, now expired and grown into one Kingdom; or whether it was so called, because it was made a Common-Law to the two several Nations then residing in the Kingdom, that is to say, the Saxon and the Dane; Ælfred (that was the Law-giver) was in both Cases the Author of that Common-Law. And though the Danes had Laws that endured to the Confessor's Time, to which the Saxons were not subject, and was therefore called Dane-Law, yet was that Law of an after Growth, and differing but in some things: for the main they had one Common-Law given to them.

Orig. of disabling of Persons Excommunicate.

Orig. of the Common-Law.

19. But now, though with these, and the like Provisions, the King had well regulated the Disorders of the

¹ Hollingsh. Desc. of Brit. fol. 121.

State,

State, and (according to what it was then capable of receiving) furnished the Kingdom with good and proper Laws, yet was all that he had hitherto done far short of effecting that which either he desired or the Times stood much in need of.

20. War had so long reigned in the Land, and in so licentious a manner, as that there was no Part sincere in the Common-wealth. And in the Close of the War, the Disorder was greater than in the Continuance of it; which though it be usual, at the Breaking up of Armies, yet this was beyond all that was usual. The Armies severall Nations; and both of them after the Cessation residing in the Land together: the Danes destitute of any present Fortunes to betake themselves unto, at their Retireing; and the Saxons generally deprived of theirs by the Danes: the Danes Infidels and Barbarous; and the Saxons long inured to the practise of the same Impieties with them: and both of them by their Necessities prest to dare the utmost, whensoever there was the least offer of any Means of Supply; whether warrantable, or unwarrantable. So that Violence, Robberies, and Murthers did infinitely abound. And though the Laws were stricter than formerly, yet the means of Prosecution and Discovery was not answerable to what the Condition of the times as then required.

Orig. of Shires,
Hundreds,
and Tyth-
ings.

21. In this bad case stood the Land, when the King (desirous to find Remedy for so great an Evil) caused first a Survey to be made of the whole Kingdom; and finding it parted into many small Divisions, (according to the diverse Settling of the Saxons Plantations) he, pretermittting them as being of little use, divided the whole Kingdom into Shires, every Shire he divided into

1 He has forgot to mention the Division of Counties into Tribings. For such matters as could not be adjusted in the Hundred or Wapentake Court were referred to a Superior one consisting generally of three Hundreds, the chief Heads whereof were named Ɔpthingepesay. This Division indeed was almost discontinued upon the Norman Conquest; however there are some Remains of it to this day in the Ridings of Yorkshire, *Lathe*s of Kent, and the three Parts of Lincolnshire, viz. Lindsey, Kestoven, and Holland.

Hundreds

Book II. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

109

Hundreds or Wapentakes, and them again he subdivided into Decennaries or Tythings, that is to say into Societies of ten Men, (were they more or less) who being the Householders in every Decennary stood mutually Pledges to the King for the good Abbearing and Appearance (if need were) both of themselves and of all the Hand-boroughs of their Decennaries. And there was no man to be accounted a Liege Man, ¹ or one that lived legally, but was comprehended within a certain Hundred and a certain Tything or Decennary: otherwise (as it seemeth) he was to be taken for a Forraigner and an Invader, who was either presently to abjure the Kingdom, or else his Life and Fortunes were at the Mercy of every one that would lay hands on him.

22. If any one of any Decennary were suspected and questioned of any Offence, and the Headboroughs or Chief Pledges of the Freebourg, (for so were the Decennaries also called, because they were Suretyships of Freemen mutually tyed one for the other) if they, I say, would not undertake for his Appearance and Acquittall of himself, he was to be imprisoned and to expect his Tryal and the Severity of the Law. If he fled (whether before his Finding of Sureties or after) and were not brought into Answer, both the Hundred and the Tything that he was of incurred a Mulct or Fine unto the King.

23. The manner hereof appears more at large by the Laws of Edward the Confessor to have been thus. The Delinquent flying, the Freebourg or Tything had 31 Days given them to find him and bring him forth. If they failed of this, then the Headborough or Chiefpledge of that Freebourg, with two more of the Freebourg, procured three Chiefpledges of three of the next Freebourgs, with two more out of each of those Freebourgs (which made 12 in all) to swear with them, that in their Conscience the Freebourg was innocent, both from Privity of the Fault and Flight of the Delinquent. If the Neighbour Freebourgs could not be drawn to this, then the Freebourg, whence the suspected fled, was by a good round Fine compelled to make Satisfaction to the King according to the Quality of the Fact committed, to which Fine the Goods of the Delinquent (if any he had) were in the first place lyable as far as they would go; but they failing, the Residue was to be supplied by a general Levy upon all the whole Freebourg, who besides were put man by man to purge themselves by their Corporal Oath from being privy either to the Fault or Flight, and to swear that they would bring forth the Delinquent to Judgment whensoever they could find him out.

¹ Legaliter duntaxat vivens. Malm.

the

24. If it happened, that a way-faring Man (Friend or Stranger) lodged in any Man's House, and grew to be suspect of any Offence, if when he was sought for he could not be found, it was enquired how long he had stayed in the House. If it appeared he had not stayed above two Nights, the Householder might by the Oath of himself and two of his Neighbours purge himself from Suspition of Privity with the Delinquent, which if he did he were discharged; but if the Guest had lodged three Nights in the House, the Master was then to have him forthcoming, or to answer for him as for one of his own Family. Whereupon (as appears in those Laws¹) it was a Saxon Proverb τῷ αὐτῷ ἡμέραν ἢ δύο νύκτας ἀγὼν ἑστίν, ἢ τῷ οἴκῳ ἡμέραν ἢ δύο νύκτας ἀγὼν ἑστίν. i. e. two nights a Guest, and the third one's own Servant or one of the Family.

Question of the first Division.

25. I cannot but take notice, that it is the Opinion of some, that Ælfred was not the first that divided the Kingdom into Shires, but that it was done by some other before his time, and I may the less decline the notice because the Reasons are good and probable. There were not only several Parts of the Land called Shires before Ælfred's time, but there were divers Shires then, and in the same Parts of the Land, known by the same Names that they are at this day: as Berrockshire, (or Barkshire) Wiltunshire, and others, mentioned in Affer Menevensis. The Laws of Ina (before Ælfred's time) ordain that an Alderman that suffers an Escape shall forfeit his Shire. And there is in Affer Men. further Mention of the Countries or Shires of Kent, Sussex, Sutbry, Thornset, (or Dorset) Hantune, Somertune, Domnania, Cornubia, as also of the Earls of many of them; by which it appears that there were Shires or Counties before K. Ælfred's time. But notwithstanding all these Reasons, I do not conceive it reasonable that we should recede from the current Tradition of Writers, that Ælfred was the first Author of the Division of the Kingdom into Shires: and that, for the Reasons here following.

¹ LL. Ed. Conf. cap. 27. de Hospit.

tioned

26. First, the Opinion is not ancient, but new; of a late, and perhaps a subitane Apprehension. Secondly, Though it were granted that the Shires, before mentioned, were the same before Ælfred's time, that they are at this day, yet would it not disprove, but that Ælfred, as to the main, was the first Divider of the Land into Shires. For the forementioned Counties are only those we see, which, lying on the South side of the Tbames, were sometime the Kingdom of West-Saxons: in which though there were then the same Divisions of Shires that now are, yet makes that nothing to the Division of the Kingdom on the North Side of the Tbames (which was the greatest Part of the Land) but that Ælfred did first begin the Division there: and to be sure of it there was no West-Saxon King before him that could do it; neither have we mention before Ælfred's time of any of our Shires on that side. For though we have then Subscriptions of Egga Comes Lincoln. and Leucitus Comes Lecestriae, yet those do denote no more than Prefect or Alderman of the Town of Lincoln, and of the Town of Leycester. There wants the addition of Page Lincoln. &c. to shew they were Earls of Counties or Shires. Yet I deny not, that there were Earls on the Northside Parts, as Æthered Muchil, or great Earl of the Gaynes in Lincolnshire, but no Earls of any Shires then that are to this day in Being. Thirdly, though,

Though, as to the name, we have divers Shires now, which are found to have been in being before Ælfred's time, yet does it not follow that they held then the same Bounds of Division that they do now, but that Ælfred, after his universal Invitation of Strangers for Re-peopling of the Land, his Building of Cities and Villages, and Division of the Countries into Hundreds and Tythings, though he continued the Names of some of the Countries as they were before, yet he tyed not himself to their former Bounds, but settled them as fell out most convenient for their Distribution into Tythings and Hundreds. Fourthly, Wheresoever there were Earls before Ælfred's time, they were not so properly Earls of Counties or Shires, of any Regulate Jurisdiction, as rather Martial Leaders and Commanders of the People of those Countries, and were styled as well from the People as from the Country, Comes Hantunensium, Comes Merciorum, Comes Gainorum, Dux Dorsetum, &c. and these as their Authority grew from the Sword, so they using it with much Liberty, while they themselves followed the Occasions of the War, they let¹ their Deputies (if they that were then the Prefects of the Counties were Deputies to the Earls) administer the Government of the Countries rather as Rights of Lordship, than Offices of Charge and Duty, and by their Irregularities gave occasion to Ælfred, to think of Reducing the Government to some better Form: which to effect he was fain wholly to take away that Kind of Officer, which the Earls had then as their Deputies, and were from their Lordlike Carriages called Vice-Domini or Vidomes: and having erected a County or Shire in the Place (subdivided into Hundreds and Tythings) he then substituted unto the Earl there, that Officer, which, properly relating to the Shire, was called Shire-Reeve or Vice-Comes, and circumscribed his Authority with Certainty of Limit and Jurisdiction: from whence there growing the first conjugate Relation of those three Terms Comes, Vice comes, and Comitatus; the Shires that were before were not Shires in that true

¹ Vide Inglif. p. 870.

Propriety of Condition that we require in a Shire at this Day ; but the first Division of the Kingdom into such Shires, was truly the Institution of K. Ælfred. Fifthly, and Lastly, whereas (Hen. Huntington and G. Malmesbury referring the first Division of Counties unto the Union of the Heptarchy under the West-Saxon Kings :) it is affirmed that that Union was 70 years before Ælfred's time; it will (under favour) manifestly appear, that the Union 'fell out so just in Ælfred's Reign, as that those Authorities must inevitably fix the Act of Division upon K. Ælfred. For (as we have shewn already) Aella and Osbert, the two jarring Kings that were the last of the Northumbrian Kingdom, were slain but three or four years before the Death of Æthelred, Ælfred's immediate Predecessor. St. Edmund, the most pious and last King of the East-Angles, was slain but in the Year 871, which was the last of Æthelred and first year of Ælfred's Reign. And Burrhed, the last King of the Mercians, or Middle-Saxons, was not expelled by the Danes 'till about the third year of K. Ælfred; so as 'till then there was no Union of the Heptarch-Kingdoms : and then not only Ingulfus, but Huntington and G. Malmesbury are express Authorities in the very Point, and those credited and followed by all that have since written upon that Point.

27. When the King had distributed the Subject into distinct Shires, Hundreds and Tythings, and thereby obtained a ready means of discovering Delinquents ; he took away, as we have said, the Use of Vidomes from the Earls, because that Officer had not only the Charge of all things, privately and ministerially belonging to the Earl, but had also (as it seemeth) the sole Administration of Justice under him, and instead of the Vidome he in the Affairs of the County substituted the Sheriff or Reeve of the Shire, who from that Institution has ever since continued first as a Deputy to the Earl, and

Orig. of Under-Sheriffs.

1. Egbert was the first Monarch, tho' he did not exercise so Absolute Power as King Ælfred.

since as an immediate Officer of the Crown. And besides the Sheriff, he, for the better Administration of Justice, ordained in every Shire peculiar Justices, by what Names and with what Jurisdiction we cannot expressly say; but we may guess they were the same which were called the King's Aldermen, and ¹*Aldermen of the Shires*, who were the supreme Judges in the Scire-gemot or County-Court, and held Consuance of the Greater Matters not determinable in the Hundred Courts: breaking thereby the Prefecture of the Vidome into the Offices of a Judge or Justiciar, and a Sheriff; the first of which seems to have had a meer juridical Function, the other either a Ministerial only or a Mixed,

Orig. of Writs.

28. When so he had reduced the Quality of the Officer to a Condition more agreeable to the due Execution of Justice; he settled also (as it seemeth) the Means of Suit and ready Prosecution of Right: ordaining, that, for the better Ease of the Subject ², Original Writs ³ should, without any special Petition to the King, be of course granted by the Officer, as things of Duty and not of Grace.

29. So strange and sudden a Change did these Institutions produce in the Kingdom, that whereas before there was no Travelling without a safe Convoy of Arms; presently there was not only safe Passage, but all Places became so secure, that, when the King, for Experience sake, caused Golden Bracelets to be hung up in the Cross ways, they seemed to deride the Passenger, for that no man durst lay his hands on them. Virgins

¹ The Aldermen of the Shires were generally accounted the Comites or Earls themselves. But they whom our Author means were those who are stiled in the Saxon Laws Wites or Wisemen. See Mr. Selden's Titles of Honour, Spelman's Gloss. voc. Aldermannus, Dr. Brady's Glossary at the End of his Introduction to the old English History, p. 66. Mr. Tyrrell's Gen. Hist. of Eng. Vol. I. in Introd.

² Mirror aux Justices, cited by Sir Ed. Coke in his Preface to the ninth Report.

³ In the first Chapter of the Laws of K. Edward the Elder there is mention made of home-boc or the Judicial Book, wherein 'tis very likely that, besides the Survey he made, the Forms of such Writs were contained.

might

¹ might safely travel any where alone. Nay (saith In-gulfus ²) if one left his Money all night in the Highways, he might come the next Morning and be sure to find it all, whole and untouched. A marvellous Effect of a notable Ordinance, and such as perhaps one would hardly believe either so suddenly to have ensued, or so far to have prevailed. But who can imagine that so exact a Distribution of People, under so severe a Rule, and so strict a Subordination of Government, should produce less than an extraordinary Effect?

30. This great work of the King's gave Original to two very remarkable things in this Land. The one is that famous Survey of the Kingdom made by William the Conqueror, now called Domesday-Book, the Circumstance whereof was this. When Ælfred had made the Survey that we spake of, he caused it to be ingrossed and kept at Winchester, where his Court was, and from thence it first had the Name of the Roll or Book of Winchester; and being extant at the Conqueror's Coming, it not only gave him occasion of doing the like, but gave him such furtherance in it, as that the Survey, which the Conqueror made, was but like the second Edition of the same Work, auetior & locupletior, but otherwise all one with that of Ælfred's; in ³ which regard it was also by the same name called Winchester-Book. Afterwards either by Corruption from Dome-Book (by which name the Saxons called all Books of Laws, and Constitutions) or by Affectation for the Authenticalness and Universality of it, it obtained the name which to this day it holds of ⁴ Domesday-Book.

31 The

¹ Speed. ² Ingulf. ³ Ingulf.

⁴ 'Tis the Opinion of the Author of the Black-Book of the Exchequer, (who is commonly said to be Gervasius Tilburienfis, who flourish'd in the Reign of Hen. II.) Sir Hen. Spelman, Mr. Lambard, Mr. Sommer, and several good Antiquaries, that 'twas call'd Domesday-Book, because 'tis no more lawfull to depart, or appeal from what is in it, than from the Day of Doom, or last Judgment. Yet others will have it call'd Domesday-Book, quasi Liber Domus Dei; as if it had been originally deposited in the House of God. But Dr. Kennet runs counter to these opinions, and calls them TRIFLING DERI-

H 2

VATIONS,

Orig. of Hundred-Courts, County-Courts and Leets.

31. The other is the Institution of Hundred Courts, County-Courts, and of those inferiour Courts of Justice in every Town, which at this day are called by the name of Leets, of which we have now not only lost the right Use and Practise, but even the true Knowledge of them and of their Rights.

32. View of Frank-Pledge (which we at this Day call the Leet) is a Liberty properly belonging to none but the Crown. The Subject can neither by Prescription, nor Patent, have greater Interest in them, than only a Liberty (in certain Places) to take, in the King's behalf, the View of the Frank-Pledges by a Steward of his own Appointment, and by him to take Presentment of Matters within the Jurisdiction of the Court, and to have the Fines and Amerciaments that fall within the same to his own Use. But the Court still remains the King's.

33. For the Institution of Frank-Pledges anciently (as we may see in Edward the Confessor's Laws confirmed by the Conqueror) was accounted ¹ the great Security and Establishment of the Kingdom, and was the whole and sole Administration of Justice criminal in inferior Matters (as Force, Trespais, and Misbehaviour) that was in the Kingdom: and the proper Judge thereof was the Sheriff or Justice in the Hundred-Court. But when the Lords of Mannors, for the Ease of their Tenants, and for the better Countenance and Backing of their Mannor-Courts, purchased the Liberties of the Hundred-Courts within Precinct of their Mannors, while they advanced thereby the Repute of their own, they impaired the Authority of the other. And at last, when Mannors, through Alienations, Forfeitures, Partitions, Manumissions, special Customs, and the like,

VATIONS, telling us from Dr. Hammond that the Addition of Dey or Day does not augment the Sense of the Word, but only doubles and confirms it; and that therefore Doomsday-book is no more than the Book of judicial Verdict, or decretory Sentence, or dooming of Judgment: which agrees with our Author's first Derivation. See the Glossary to his Parochial Antiquities.

¹ Est quadam summa & maxima securitas, &c. tit. Friborg. Lamb.
became

became every where mangled and dismembred, many half extinguished, and some of them altogether, there growing generally then a great Defect in the serving also of the Leets, much of their Jurisdiction came by little and little to be transferred to Courts of a superiour Nature since them erected, and to the Determination of the King's Justices, at the Assizes, and at the Sessions, so as the Leets now bear little more than a Shadow of their first Institution.

34. It is not then to be expected that we should describe them according to the first Original of their Use, neither (if we could) would our present Purpose suffer it. But that we may the better conceive of their Excellence, we may observe, that had they been continued in Practice according to their Ancient Use, they been in many things even unto this day would not have unprofitable to the Common-wealth; and, for Instance, the continual Trouble and Contention, that is daily raised between Town and Town, about the Settling of People chargeable, or feared to be chargeable, the universal Complaint of the Licentiousness and Unruliness of Servants, who (for the Liberty, which they now have, of changing at their pleasure) will stay in no Place, nor serve, but upon such Conditions both for Work and Wages as is grievous to Masters, and gives Trouble to all the Justices in the Kingdom to regulate; the Pester and Annoyance of the Kingdom with such a Surcharge of vagrant and disorderly Persons, that more and more now adays abound, and many other such like Inconveniencies had all been avoided, or in a great part remedied by the Observance of the Law of Frank-Pledge. For when one could not leave the Freebourg of which he was, without the Allowance and Testimonial of the Borsholder, nor enter any new Freebourg, that would not warily examine the Condition of their new-come Decennar, whom they were to receive, and might perhaps be put to answer for all Evils that consequently follow the Liberty and Facility of Shifting up and down, must needs be undoubtedly prevented: besides

The benefit of Decennaries and Leets,

that the continual Suspect and Eye that was upon such People, and the ready Prosecution even at home of the least Offences, that could be committed against Neighbourhood and good Manners, (which was strictly then exercised in those Courts) did prevent the very Disposition of ill minded Men from the Attempt of dissolute Courses.

Fit for Plantations.

35. But as many things have concurred to the Remissness and Decay of this strict Institution, so is it not to be denied, but that, among other Causes, the numerous Increase of the Common-wealth must be assigned for a principal one; for that it is very difficult to hold a full grown populous State to so strict a Distribution, and to enjoin the due Observance of the Law of Frank-Pledge. But to a beginning Common-wealth, it is both more easy and of more Importance. And therefore to a new Plantation there cannot possibly be a more profitable Ordinance for the Government thereof, than such as after the Reason of the Law of Frank-Pledge may fitly be composed. But to return.

Provision for able Officers.

36. When the King had applied these Remedies unto the present Wants, then had he to encounter with a Difficult, that for the present was beyond them all. For though he had made Laws, and set on foot a Course that might constrain Obedience, yet wanted he fit Men to be the Ministers of Justice, and to hear and determine according to the Dictate of his Laws; and this was a Difficult not readily helped, (for that he could not suddenly make the Men he had fit, or provide himself of better otherwise:) and it was the greater, for that when the Defect of able Men was so notorious, Justice was instituted in such a Form, as that it must be administered in the Counties, Hundreds, and Freebourgs, by the Earls, Aldermen, Sheriffs, and Borsholders, in the Counties and Freebourgs severally residing. And though a reasonable Information might serve a Borsholder, yet neither they, the Sheriffs, the Justices, nor the Earls, were then of Erudition answerable to their Charges. For whereas formerly (and afterward again for divers Ages) the Knowledge ledge of the Laws was the proper Study of the Earls and Nobles, they the chief Oracles of Law, and personally in the several Counties the Highest Judges thereof; the barbarous War had then so changed the Course of all things, that now they had given over the Care of the Laws (as of things without a Bayte) and fought by Might only to defend themselves and theirs from Violence: so as they, on the one side, from their Infancy illiterate and ignorant, and the People, on the other side, rude and ill perswaded of their Judgments, would seldom rest satisfied with any Sentence of theirs, (were it just or unjust) untill by the King's own Hearing it were by him confirmed; so as the greatest part of the Justice of the Kingdom came, as it were, by Appeal to be administred by the King himself.

37. How unreasonable a Burthen this was, is to all Men's discerning sufficiently apparent. But the King, whose infinite Zeal and Minding of the People's Need, made him easily pass over his own Cumber, judging his Help the more necessary the more it was called upon, with incredible Pains and Patience, daily heard again the Judgments whereof there was Complaint made unto him, and when with doing Right he had given Satisfaction to the Parties, then, as occasion served, he so dealt with the Earls or Justices about their misgiven Sentence, as that he provided for Redress, not only where he found Corruption, but also where there was Mistaking through Ignorance and Want of Knowledge of the Laws. For though their Ignorance were excusable, yet the King pressed hard that they ought not to have accepted of the Earldom or Prefecture, to which Judicature was incident, without Care of Applying themselves to learn the Duty, and enjoined them either to give such Diligence to Learning, as might render them capable of the Place, or to forgo the Dignity to the Function of which they were altogether unfitting. As for the Places that were void, he refused absolutely to confer them upon any, unless they were in a reasonable manner qualified for them, and gave good hope of their future

future Improvement. It was a hard Task was then imposed upon Officers; but of such Authority was the King's Command, and such the Consequence of it, that the Earls, and Justices, and Officers, in every Shire, rather than they would hazard the being put from their Places, betook them diligently to the Study of the Laws, the King permitting to some of the aged Earls only, to use the Assistance of some Kinsman or Officer, whom they for that purpose maintained to apply themselves to the Knowledge of the Law. And soon there ensued such a wonderfull Change in the Commonwealth, as if one should imagine it from a Camp to have become an Inns-of-Court, whereby the Administration of Justice became more speedily amended than one could think possible in so short a time to be effected.

Inward Means of Reclaiming the People
fought.

38. Yet all this Providence and Care, which the King thus had of the Government of the People, and which he pursued with so much of his own Personal Travell, was not enough to quiet his ever-working Spirit, nor to satisfy him that he had done enough, for the perfect Restoring of his People's Manners. But considering with himself, how weak the Reformation was, that depended only upon outward Terrour and Constraint; he applyed all his Thoughts to find some means, whereby he might inwardly reclaim their depraved Minds, and take them off from the greedy Pursuit of their vile Affections. And whereas this was not otherwise to be effected, than by Instruction, and by Infusion of Precepts, both Divine and Moral, that so they might become Law-givers unto themselves, and out of Conscience abstain from the things that were evil; there wanted those that should be the Instruments of such a Work, Preachers and Teachers of the Word of God, who with continual Pains, in Instructing, Exhorting, and Admonishing of them, might in time beget a Reformation.

39. Howsoever it was, the King having apprehended the Necessity of such a Work, no Difficult whatsoever, nor Want of Means, could so discourage him, but that the Desire and Hope of doing an happy Office unto his
People

People did much more set him forward in the Endeavour. At last he fell upon the way whereby it pleased God, in the old World, to infuse into Barbarous People better thoughts, namely of Religion, of Justice, of Civility, and of Honour, not by Writings, (for the Barbarians could not read) neither yet so much by Preaching, (for they were giddy and perverse in Hearing) but divine Wits, inspired with more than Human Faculties, did in Parables, in Fables, in Songs, in Proverbs, and the like, (which they fitted to the Humour and Pleasure of the People) so lively expose either the Deformity of the present reigning Vice, or the Beauty and Loveliness of the contrary Virtue, as that while the savage Hearers (taken with Delight of the witty Expressions) did retain and communicate them to one another, they by little and little consented to the Truth that was contained in them; and in the end became no less captivate of the reason which they so propounded, than delighted with the Wittiness of their Delivery.

40. Hence was it, that among the ancient Heathenish Founders of Common-wealths, such as Jupiter, Bacchus, Hercules, Orpheus, Amphion, Arion, and others, while some have been infamous for making of Rigorous Laws, and have been feigned therefore to have become Judges in Hell, yet nothing worthy of Note recorded of any Reformation wrought by them, these have for the most part been ever famous, and happy in the Success of Milder Courses, and in the Change, that through their wisdom they have wrought in the manners of their People, for which they have been feigned, some to draw whole Multitudes by Chains fastened from their Tongues unto the People's Ears; others with their Musick to draw savage Beasts after them, or so to charm wild Woods and Rocks, that even the senseless Trees and Stones were made to follow them. The Poët sets it very well forth:

*Silvestres homines sacer interpretæque Deorum
Cædibus & victu fædo deterruit Orpheus;*

1 Horat. art. Poët.

Dictus

*Dictus ob hoc lenire tygres rabidosque leones :
 Dictus & Amphion, Thebanæ conditor arcis,
 Saxa movere sono testudinis, & prece blanda Ducere quo vellet.*

And another ¹ Poët to the same purpose:

*Quod mare non novit, quæ nescit Ariona tellus ?
 Carmine currentes ille tenebat aquas.
 Sæpe sequens agnum &c.*

41. Through such means did the Founders of Common-wealths in old time reclaim their loose and wild Savages, and make them subject to the Laws of Civil Government : amongst whom when (for the most part) all Erudition was traditional and not communicated but by Word of Mouth, (as in the Britains time it was here wont to be by the Druids) they, for the easier communicating of it, delivered it in Ryme or Verse. And from thence Poëtry (which in our later Ages for the too frequent Levity thereof hath scarcely had a reasonable Esteem) was anciently in great Veneration. And the Poët performing the Office and Part of a Preacher, or Prophet, had also the Sacred Esteem of a Prophet³.

Sic honor & nomen divinis vatibus, atque Carminibus venit. ———

42. And though this way of Instruction seem rather proper for times of Barbarism, yet hath it not been un-useful in the times of greatest Light. Yea in the Church of God we may see, that after the Decalogue written, the Law pronounced, Moses his Testamentary Exhortations, the oft appearing of the Visible Majesty of God, and an Eternal Impression thereby (as one would think) of his Fear, God, willing to add something of peculiar Efficacy for restraining, commanded³ Moses to frame the Contents of what he would have delivered to his People into the Form of a Song : that it being easily learnt and communicated, it might universally be received ; and Men, bearing in their Mouths the Sentence due unto their own Transgression, might neither want a Bridle in their Sins, nor a Domestick Incitement to observance of their Duty.

¹ Ovid. ² Ho. ³ Dent. XXXI. 19.

43. As for Parables and Fables we may likewise see how proper and effectual they are to the Introducing of a Change in Manners, or Religion: when by them especially our Saviour exploded the inveterate Corruptions, wherewith the Pharisees had for a long Time together falsified the Doctrine, and perverted the Manners of the Church of God. And Salomon, though (being the wisest Man that ever was, and of most universal natural Parts) he could have done as much as any Man in the way of Oratory whether by Writing or Personal Delivery; yet, when returning to himself he was desirous to make his ill-got Experience most generally profitable unto all Men, he left not his Speculations digested into a Methodical Treatise, but into Compendious Sentences, and Parables, easy to every Capacity and portable to every Tongue. Nor did he look only to the Matter, but to the Manner of the Delivery, and as he searched out and prepared many Parables, so also he sought to find out pleasant Words: to subdue men (as it were) by their own Affections to such Obedience, as without some Interest first gained by something that pleased them, and then a Conviction by Reason admitted upon that Interest, they would never have yielded themselves unto.

44. Certainly, Familiar Tales, Fables, Proverbs, Parables, Rithmes, and the like, composed with Judgment and with Life, have in themselves more Efficacy than a naked Precept, and (which is more) they find acceptance, when a bare Precept is rejected. For though Reason cannot but prevail when it is heard, yet Sensuality at every hand so powerfully preoccupates the Way, that Reason comes not always to have due Audience. For men naturally abhor the Bridle and the Precept that is offered to no other End than to restrain; but when the force of the Precept (infused in the Disguise of some other thing) goes the way of our

our Affections, it is then fully received, and afterward we easily yield unto the Rule whose Truth we have once with full Consent acknowledged. And as Fables and Parables are powerfull and winning towards the particular Hearer, so (being most speedy Means to disperse and publish any thing that one desires to possess a Multitude withall) they are effectual Means to a general Reformation as well as to a particular.

To which the K. applies his own Endeavours.

45. Now as Ælfred in many Passages of his Life appears to have much contemplated the Life and Actions of Salomon; so finding that after his Conversion he of a King became a zealous Teacher and Instructor of the People, and that (as he said himself) the wiser he was the more he taught them and searched out Parables, and pleasant Words, Ælfred, in all likelihood, in this point propounded to himself the Example of Salomon; and having a natural Delight in wise and witty Sayings, so that from his Youth he was ever a diligent Collector of them, he now pursues his natural Inclination, and with a studious Endeavour labours to store himself with all such Passages of Instruction as tended to the Reformation of Manners, especially such as were extant in Verse in the Saxon Tongue, in respect whereof there is a note upon him that he was Saxonicorum poematum peritissimus.

46. As he collected what others had written, so he composed much himself, and obtained the Name of an Excellent Poët, for his admired Natural Parts, joyned with so pious an Use, and so happy Effects of them. Whereby indeed he became a Poët of the Rank of those that in ancient time have been so honourable, and who were as well the Heroes of their times, as the Poëts. As for his Abilities that way, though the Event of his Labours hath made a sufficient Demonstration of them, because it must needs be a powerfull Faculty that works a Change in the Manners of Men contrary to their own Affections; whereas to have done but indifferently well in Poëtry had been as good as to have done nothing:

— mediocribus

mediocribus esse poëtis

Non Dii, non homines, non concessere columnæ:

And again,

Non satis est pulcra esse poemata; dulcia sunt,

Et quocunque volunt animum auditoris agunt:

Yet the Monk of Malmsbury has expressly testified of him, that no Man was more sharp and quick of Apprehension than King Ælfred, nor more elegant in the Delivery of what he had conceived. And Æthelwerd avoucheth that his Translation of Boëtius was such as that it would passionately and even to Tears affect the Hearers of it.

47. The King thus endowed by Nature, and furnished by his own Industry ceased not to hunt out and pursue all Occasions of Instructing his People, descending often from the Awe and Terrour of a Sovereign to give the Hearer more freedom in the way of Learning, with great Judgment intermixing Mildness and Reproof, Pleasantness and Seriousness, untill he either won or compelled all Sorts of People, young and old, ignoble and noble, yea his Bishops, Earls, and Prefects of Counties to receive the Impressions of his Teaching, and in a short time brought it to pass that Learning and Civility, which formerly had been in Contempt, became the only Thing in request and generally desired of every Man.

48. There is in that well known Library, now Sir Thomas Cotton's, a Manuscript Collection of diverse Precepts and Instructions of King Ælfred's, tending to the Purpose we now speak of; and by the Courtesy of St. Thomas I am provided of a Copy of them. But as they are I cannot think it fit to offer them unto the World, as an Instance of what the King composed. For they are not his very Work in the Saxon Tongue, but a Miscellany Collection of some later Author, who, according to his own Faculty, hath in a broken English put together such of the sayings of King Ælfred, as he met withal, some of them Rimeing, and others (as perhaps perhaps the Original was) in Prose : and besides that in their Order they somewhat argue the Collector's want of Judgment. For marshalling them no better, the copy is so faulty and ill writ, in a mungrel Hand, (as well as Language) as that unless I should, without Regard, venture to trespass against the Truth, I dare not publish it according to the Copy I have taken. Therefore whereas there are 31 Heads of the Sayings of the King, all beginning with these words, Thus quoth Ælfred, I take them not all, onely the Beginning of them, and three or four of the first only (which are the perfectest) I have (to shew the Style and Manner of them) set down, in the words that I have copied them, together with the current Sense they have in Speech at this Day. For the Residue I have taken such as I presume I read right and understand, and I have only set them down in English, noting them with Figures, according to the number or place they hold among the rest.

49. The Beginning of them is very much to be considered ; for that it importeth as if there were some Assembly of the Chief of both Orders of the Kingdom called together at ¹ Sifford (or Seafford) in Oxfordshire, and as if the King had there consulted with his Clergy, Nobles, and Others, about the Manners and Government of the People, and had there delivered some grave Admonitions and Instructions concerning the same, to be (as one would think) divulged throughout the Kingdom. For it first mentioning the Assembly and commending the King, it saith that he began to teach those that could hear him how they should lead their Lives, and then setteth down those 31 Heads as Particulars of his Teaching, confirming thereby that which we have already (from other Authorities) alledged, concerning his Care and Travel for the Instruction and

¹ Commonly call'd Shifford, being situated in the Parish of Bampton, six miles west from Oxford. A small Village at present, but formerly a considerable Town, as appears from divers Ruins. See Dr. Plot's Nat. Hist. of Oxfordshire, Ch. II. §. 5.

Reformation of his People. The words of the Manuscript¹ are these :

At Sifford seten² Thaines manie, Fele Wiscopes,³ and " fele boclered,
 Erles prude,⁴ Knihetes egloche.
 Ther was Erle Alfrich, of the Lage swuth wise,
⁵ And ec Alfréd, Engle-herde, Engle darling.
 On⁶ Englonde he was King. hem he gan⁷ leren
 Swo⁸ him heren mihten, hu hi here lif leden scolden.

Alfred he was on Englonde a King wel swithe strong.
 He was King and Clerk. wel he⁹ luued Gods wezk.
 He was wise on his word, and war on his Speche.
 He was the wiseste man that was on¹⁰ Englonde.

I. Thus qwach¹¹ Alued engle frofre.
 Wolde¹² ye nu liben and lusten pure louerd,
 And he¹³ ye wolde wisen wiseliche¹⁴ winges,
 Hu ye mihten werldos¹⁵ wurtheipe welden,
 And ec pure soule samne to Criste.
 Wise weren the cwethen the saide the King Alfred.

Gildeliche I mune ye mine dere frend, arme
 And epiledde luuende, that ye all drede pure Drithen Crist, luuend him and licen. for he is

¹ I have seen an extract of some of these Precepts made by Mr. Rich. James from a MS. in the Hands of Mr. Tho. Allen. 'Tis in the sixth Vol. of the said Mr. James's Coll. in Bibl. Bodl. pag. 68. and from that I shall put down the Variations from Sir John Spelman's Transcript. Which MS. however seems to have been the same with this used by Sir John Spelman. See Mr. James's Coll. Vol. 18. p. 28. and Mr. Selden's Preface to the X Scriptores, pag. 4.

² þciney manie Jam. and in Mr. Wanley's Edit. of the beginning of this MS. p. 231. of his Cat. of the Saxon, and other Septentrional, MSS. ³ Deest Jam. & Wanl. ⁴ 7 cnihetes egleche Jam. but the 7 is omitted in Mr. Wanl. ⁵ And deest in Edit. Wanl. ⁶ Englonde Wanl. ⁷ lapen Wanl. ⁸ hi Jam. & Wanl. ⁹ luvede Jam. & Wanl. ¹⁰ On additur in Ed. Wanl. ¹¹ Aluped Jam. & Wanl. & sic deinceps. ¹² 7e nu liben 7 lusten 7upe Jam. & Wanl. ¹³ 7u Jam. & Wanl. ¹⁴ þinger Wanl. recte. His Edition reaches no further. ¹⁵ purþycipe Jam.

Louerd of Lif. he is one God ouer all Godnesse.
 He is one blisse ouer alle blessedness.
 He is one manne, milde maister. he one folce fader,
 And frofre. he is one riht wis and riche King,
 That him ne scal be pane noht of his will
 Who him here on werlde wuzthend and eth.

II. Thus cwath Aluerd engle frofre.
 He mai no riht cing ben under Crist self,
 But he be boc-lered, and wis o' loage,
 And he hise² writes wel icweme, and he tunne
 Lettres locen him selue hu he scal his lond Lagelice helden.

III. Thus cwath Aluerd, engle frofre. The Erl
 And te atheling tho ben under the cing,
 The lond to lepen mid lagelic deden.
 Bothe the clerc and te cniht demen euenliche riht;
 For after that te man soweth
 Ther after he scal mowen;
 And efrilces mannes Dom to his ogen dure charigeth.

IV. Thus cwath Aluerd. the cniht behobeth
 Ceneliche to⁴ mowen or to werce the lond
 Hunger, and of heregong, that the Chureche haue Grith, and te cherl be in frith,
 His sedes to sowen, hise medes to mowen,
 His Blowes to driven to ure alre billif.
 This is the cnihtes lage to locen that it wel fare. &c.

Thus is the Original, but according to our more current English thus:

*There sate at Sifford many Thaines,
 Many Bishops, many learned men,
 Wise Earles, and awfull Knights.
 There was Earl Alfrich very learned in the Law:*

¹ loape Jam. ² Deest Jam. ³ pitter Jam. ⁴ cnopen
 uop to pepie þe lond of hungen Jam.

There was present also Alfred, England's Heardman, England's Darling.

*He was King of England : he taught them
That could bear him, how they should lead their lives.*

*Alfred was a King of England, that was very strong.
He was both a King and a Scholar : he loved well God's
He was wise, and advised of his talk. [work.
He was the wisest Man that was in all England.*

I. Thus quoth Alfred, England's Comfort :
*O that you would now love and long after your Lord,
He would govern you wisely,
That you might have Honour in this world,
And yet unite your Souls to Christ.
Wise were the Sayings of King Alfred.*

*I mildly admonish thee my dear friend, and beloved,
Beest thou poor or rich, that thou wholly dread Thy Lord Christ, love him and delight in him : for he is Lord of Life : he is one God above all Goodness :
He is a Blisse above all Blessedness :
He is one Man, a Mild Master : he one common Father,
And Comfort of all People: he one so wise and rich a King
That he that in this World shall serve him, Shall not fail ought of his Will.*

II. Thus quoth Alfred, England's Comfort :
*One can be no right ruling King under Christ himself,
Unless he have Learning, know the Law,
And understand the use of his writts,
And be able by his own Reading to inform himself how According to Law. [to govern his Land*

III. *Thus quoth Alfred, England's Comfort: The Earl
And the Atheling are under the King,
To govern the Land according to Law. [rightly :
The Clergyman and the Knight must both alike judg up-
For as a man sows,
So shall he reap; [own doors.
And every Man's Judgment comes upon him home to his*

IV. Thus quoth Alfred : It behoveth the Knight Advisedly to look to provide Against Death and Famine, and to have care of the Military Expedition, that the Church have Quiet, and the Husbandman be in peace, His seed to sow, his Meadows to mow, And to follow his ploughing to the behoof of us all. This is the Duty of the Knight to see that these things go as they should.

V. Thus quoth Alfred : without Wisdom Wealth is worth little. Though a man had an hundred and seventy Acres sown with Gold, and all grew like Corn, yet were all that Wealth worth nothing, unless that of an Enemy one could make it become his Friend. For what differs Gold from a Stone, but by discreet using of it?

VI. Thus quoth Alfred : A young man must never give himself to Evil, though good befals him not to his mind, nor though he enjoys not every thing he would : for Christ can when he will give good after Evil and Wealth after Grace. Happy is he that is made for it.

XIII. Thus quoth Alfred : A wise Child is the Blessing of his Father. If thou hast a Child, while it is yet but little, teach it the Precepts that belong to a Man, and when it is grown up it will follow them ; then shall thy Child become such as shall recompense thee : but if thou lettest him go after his own Will, when he cometh to age it will grieve him sore, and he shall curse him that had the tuition of him : then shall thy Child transgress thy Admonition, and it would be better for thee that thou hadst no Child ; for a Child unborn is better than one unbeaten.

XXVII. Thus quoth Alfred : If thou growest into Age, hast Wealth, and canst take no Pleasure, nor hast Strength to govern thy self, then thank thy Lord for all that he hath sent thee, for thy own Life, and for the Day's Light, and for all the Pleasure he hath made for Man ; and whatsoever becometh of thee, say thou, come what come will, God's will be welcom.

XXVIII.

XXVIII. Thus quoth Alfred: worldly Wealth at last cometh to the Worms, and all the Glory of it to Dust, and our Life is soon gone. And though one had the Rule of all this middle world, and of the Wealth in it; yet could he keep his Life but a short while. All thy Happiness would but work thy misery, unless thou couldst purchase thee Christ. Therefore when we lead our Lives as God hath taught us, we then best serve our selves. For then be assured that he will support us: for so said Salomon, that wise Man; well is he that doth good in this world, for at last he cometh where he findeth it.

XXIX. Thus quoth Alfred: My dear Son, set thee now beside me, and I will deliver thee true Instructions. My Son I feel that my Hour is coming. My Countenance is wan. My ----- My Days are almost done. We must now part. I shall to another World, and thou shalt be left alone in all my Wealth. I pray thee (for thou art my Dear Child) strive to be a Father, and a Lord to thy People, be thou the Children's Father, and the Widow's Friend, comfort thou the poor and shelter the weak; and with all thy might, right that which is wrong. And Son govern thy self by Law, then shall the Lord love thee, and God above all things shall be thy Reward. Call thou upon him to advise thee in all thy need, and so he shall help thee, the better to compass that which thou wouldst.

50. This Remnant (though but an imperfect Collection of something more perfectly delivered by the King) is yet enough to give us a sufficient Taste of his Affection, Care, and Pains in the Point of Instruction and Reforming of the People's Manners. And whatsoever these are now, we may yet see by the Collector's Affection, that the original Delivery had that Life and Quickness as that it took with more than an ordinary Impression.

51. But

1 Amongst Sir Kenelm Digby's MSS. (num. IV.) in the Bodleian Library is another Tract, call'd Ælfred's Proverbs; which however is of a late date, and contains certain Rhapsodies about the different Conditions of Man's Life. The learned Dr. HICKS has printed

The King
seeketh to restore Learning.

51. But the King having tryed the uttermost in these Ways, and done almost beyond Example for the present Repair of the Evil, he proceeded in the next place to provide for the better Condition of the Kingdom in after times, and by Restoring of Letters to have Civility (as from a Natural Fountain) diffused through the whole Land. But that Work also was here made very difficult ; for that the barbarous Dane had not only accidentally destroyed Learning, while through his Covetousness he made Prey of all Places in which there was any Provision for it, but had with a particular Malignance toward Learning, Civility, and Religion, raged not only against the Professors of them, but even against the Profession it self, giving as well the Books and Houses of such Men to the Fire, as their Persons to the Sword ; and that with so universal a Persecution, as that when now the King should go about Restoring of Letters, he had not in all his Kingdom of West-Saxony (which is all that Part of the Island that lyeth on the South side of the Thames) a Man that could translate a Latin Epistle, or understand the English of the Latin Service ; nor were there at that time but very few in any other Part of England that could do it. And though by that Scarcity at home the King were forced to seek for Learned Men abroad, yet even there also (in all Places on this side the Alpes) Scholars and Men of Learning were very scarce, by reason of the like Irruptions of those Northern Nations into the South West Parts of Europe, which in every place produced much what the same Effects. But wheresoever the King could light of any Men for his purpose, by all the means he could he procured them to come over to him, and help him in setting again on foot the Knowledge of Letters here in this Land : and such was his exceeding Liberality in the Entertainment of them, as that, notwithstanding some part of it in his Thesaurus Lingg. Sept. p. 222. to whom I refer you, for a further Account of it. This I take to be the same sort of Book that is mention'd in MS. Laud. G. 9. f. 43. b. where 'tis said that K. Ælfred's Proverbs were extant at that time.

ing

ing their Scarfity, he soon furnished himself with very choice Men, of whom there are some that are to this Day remembred unto us.

52. Joannes Erigena, ¹ an ² Irish man, (as also his ^{John Eri-} Name signifies) but better known by the name of Scotus, ^{gena.} which in those times was a common Appellation both to the Scotish and the Irish, a man of a very sharp Wit, and of singular Learning ³ (for the time he lived in) both in Arts and Tongues, especially the Greek, the Chaldee,

1 Bale. Malm.

2 So some Authors, Eri or Erin being the old Name for Ireland. Others say he was born at Aire in Scotland. And a third sort think his Birth-Place was Ergene, Erigene, Erinven, Erymug or Ereinnuc in the Confines of Wales.

3 This appears from his Works, which are (1) De Eucharistia lib. I. Written by Command of Carolus Calvus, and condemn'd by the Council of Verceils An. ML. [Berengarii Epist. ad Richardum edit. à Dacherio Spicileg. Tom. II. p. 510.] 'Tis now lost; tho' there are some who affirm that 'tis the same with that, which goes under the Name of Raeram or Bertram: but Mabillon [Præf. ad Part. II. Sec. IV. Act. Bened. p. 44.] has prov'd this to be a Mistake. (2) Versiones Dionysii Areop. lib. IV. viz. I. De Cœlesti Hierarchia. II. De Ecclesiastica Hierarchia. III. De Divinis Nominibus. IV. De Mystica Theologia. This was a Literal Translation, and was dedicated also by him to Carolus Calvus. A great Part of it was published in Dionysius's Works at Colon. MDXXXVI. [see Dr. Cave's Hist. Lit. Vol. I. p. 549.] There are two very Ancient Copies of it in the Bodlejan Library, [Mus. 148. and Laud. I. 58.] with diverse Epistles of Dionysius, translated likewise perhaps by Scotus. To both which, besides some Verses and a Preface written by Scotus, and published by Archbishop Usher, [in Epistolarum Hibernicarum Sylloge, pag. 57.] is prefixed Anastasius Bibliothecarius's Epistle to Carolus Calvus, giving an Account of his Translation of the Greek Scholia of Maximus Confessor and Joannes Scythopolitanus upon these Pieces of Dionysius; which Scholia I find added in the Margin of Laud's MS. (3) De Prædestinatione adversus Goteschalcum, lib. I. Publish'd at Paris an. MDCL. 4to. by Gilbertus Mauguinus in pag. 103. of the first Tome of Veterum Auctorum qui IX seculo de Prædestinatione & Gratia scripserunt opera & fragmenta. 'Twas answered by Prudentius Bishop of Troyes, as also by Florus Magister and the Church of Lyons. See there p. 191, and 575. (4) Versiones S. Maximi de Ambiguis S. Dionysii & Gregorii Theologi, publish'd by Dr. Gale in fol. Oxon. 1681. (5) De Visione Dei. Mabillon found it in a MS. at Claramarisc near St. Omer's, with this Title, TRACTATUS Joannis Scoti DE VISIONE DEI. Omnes sensus corporei ex conjunctione nascuntur animæ & corporis. Never yet publish'd. (6) De Divisione

Chaldee, and the Arabick, for attaining of which he had spent many years both in Athens and other Eastern Parts, and thence returning into Italy and so into France, he was for his Peerless Learning highly Honour'd by the Emperor *Carolus Calous*¹, who called him Master, and took it well enough that setting with him at Meat on the other side of the Table, and being merrily asked by him, quid interest inter Scottum & Sottum? he should answer him mensa tantum. What difference is there between a Scot and a Sott, quoth the Natura, lib. V. publish'd by Dr. Gale, with the foresaid Ambigua. (7) Epistolæ. What these Epistles were is not known. We find none but what are præfix'd to his Books by way of Dedication. (8) Versus. What these were it does not appear. For we know of no Collection; only there are certain which are scattered amongst his other Writings. (9) In Martianum Cappellam Commentarii. In the Cottonian Library there are Commentaries upon this Author in a very old hand; but there is no Author's Name to them. Dr. Gale takes them to be Dunchantus's an Irish Bishop. Indeed in the Library of Mr. Charles Theyer of Gloucestershire there is a MS. Commentary upon Cappella, which is ascrib'd to Dunchantus; but who this Prelate was I cannot yet tell: he being not (if I am not mistaken) so much as mentioned by Sir James Ware either in his Book about the Irish Bishops or in that of the Writers. (10) Excerpta ex Macrobio. These Excerpta are thought to be the same with that Treatise, de Differentiis & Societatibus Græci Latiniq; verbi, which is commonly printed at the End of Macrobius's Works. (11) De Disciplina Scholarium, lib. I. Bulens [Tomo primo Historiæ Academiæ Parisiensis in Catalogo Scriptorum] attributes it to Scotus, but it generally goes amongst Boëtius's Works. (12) Disputatio quædam cum Theodoro Studita. It cannot be genuine; because Theodorus liv'd long before, and could not reach to the Time of Erigena. Besides this Dispute seems to be about the Worship of Images, which was controverted in the Time of Alcwin and Joannes Scotus Mailros. Without doubt therefore 'twas written by Mailros, who is confounded by some Authors with Erigena. 'Tis in MS. in the King of France's Library. (13) Versio Moralium Aristotelis. (14) Versio libri Aristotelis de Regimine Principum. Both these are doubtfull, especially the latter, which in the MSS. is ascrib'd to Joannes Patricius Hispanensis. (15) Commentarii in Aristotelis Prædicamenta. Thought to be written by another Scotus. (19) Dogmata Philosophorum. (17) Homiliæ. (18) De Fide contra Barbaros. These three last are also doubtfull, notwithstanding they are said to be Erigena's by Bale, who if he had seen them would have given us the Beginning of them. I Hoved.

Emperor?

Emperor? There is but a Table between them, quoth Scotus.

53. This Scotus afterward, at the Instance of King Ælfred, came into England, and having first been helpful to him, for his own Instruction both in Language and Arts, he after at the King's Procurement taught publicly in the Monastery at Malmsbury, where (upon some Faction) he was murdered in a little Church by his Scholars with their Penknives, and his Body obscurely buried until that (as they write) a frequent Light was observed to shine upon the Place of his Burial, and then his Cause being better considered, he was reputed for a Martyr, and his Body being taken up was buried again in the greater Church with this Inscription:

*Clauditur hoc tumulo sanctus sophista Joannes,
Qui ditatus erat jam vivens dogmate miro:
Martyrio tandem Christi conscendere regnum,
Quo meruit. Sancti regnant per secula cuncti.*

54. There was another also of some note that he likewise had out of France, one Grimbald, a Man of singular good Life; who, besides that he was very Learned, was skilful in Musick, and an Excellent Church man. It is said, that the King first came to the Knowledg of him by his Courtesy, he having made very much of him in his Childhood at Rhemes, when he was in his Passage toward Rome, and that ¹ the Archbishop ² there, at Ælfred's Entreaty, did after send this Grimbald to him into England.

55. Others there were ³ that he had from other Places, but whence appeareth not. The first Abbot of New-Abby in Ætheliny was of Old Saxony, and most of the Monks there were Priests and Deacons that were Forreigners. Two notable Monks he light upon in the Monastery of St. David's, in the furthest Corner of South-Wales, who being wholly devoted to their Monastick Profession, and much in fear of the Danes, and of their own Tyrannous Kings, lived so concealed in obscurity, thereby to avoid the being made a frequent Prey, as that they were not easily found; and when they were found they were as hardly won (although at the Importunity of the King) to quit their House and come and live at Court.

¹ Malmsb.

² His Name was Fulco. In Nic. Harpsfeld's History there are extant the Heads of a Speech, made by Grimbald in a Synod at London (not mention'd by Sir Hen. Spelman) before King Ælfred and Archbishop Æthelred or Ældred; wherein he discoursed gravely and wisely of the Primitive Dignity of Human Nature, and of it's Corruption by the Fall of Adam. The whole is said to be in the Annals of Winchester.

³ Æser.

Affer Menevensis.

56. The one was Affer, surnamed from that place Menevensis; who though he apprehended that the Interest he might have in the King's Favour might much redound to the Good of their Monastery, and that he himself might thereby likely do more good Offices to the House, than ever he should be able to do by living in it, yet could he not be drawn to more than to divide with the King between the Monastery and him, and to yield to be six Months at once (at the most) with the King, and six again in his own House. This was that Affer in whom the King so much delighted, whom he made Bishop of Shirburn, and beside many other things bestowed on him Amersbury, Banwell and Exeter. He in the King's Life time wrote that Summary of his Actions² that is now extant, and dedicated it unto the King himself, but lived not to continue it unto the End of his Reign.

John of St. David's.

57. The other Monk which he had from St. David's was likewise in great esteem with him for his Learning, especially for his Skill in Logick, Musick and Arithmetick. He is not known by any other Name than John the Monk, and likely he is the same, whom in the Preface to Gregorie's Pastoral Ælfred calleth John his Mass Priest, who among others taught him (as he there saith) to understand and be able to translate the same.

¹ Malmsb. & Ingulfus.

² 'Twas not written by Affer Bishop of Shirburn, but by Affer, his Uncle, Archbishop of St. David's. For in the Book it self it is said that he writ An. 893, which was ten years after the Death of the former, as appears from William of Malmsbury. I know indeed in another Book of Affer's, call'd his Annals, publish'd by Dr. Gale in the second Vol. of the Oxford Historians, 'tis expressly said that Affer Bishop of Shirburn died An. 909; but that being an Addition of a later Hand, I suppose it to be an ignorant Mistake for Affer Archbishop of St. David's.

58. Others he had of noted Learning who were Saxons, Natives of the Kingdom, and yet, in regard of the Circumstances of their Procurement, many of them may justly be numbred among those whom he had from Forreign Parts.

59. *Werefrid*² Bishop of Worcester, who held that Bishoprick in the Life of Burrhed King of Mercia; <sup>Werefrid
Bishop of Worcester.</sup> but the Danes invading Mercia and expelling Burrhed, Werefrid (whose Province was in Mercia) was faine to provide for himself beyond the Seas, until he was restored by Ælfred. He is by Leland and Capgrave termed the Antesignanus of all the Learned Men of Ælfred's Court. Him the King set to translate Gregorie's Dialogues. He was a very Venerable Man while he lived, and after his death he was honoured with the Title of Saint.

60. *Plegmond*³, whom Ælfred made Arch-Bishop <sup>Plegmond of Archbishop.</sup>

1 Some confound him with Joannes Scotus Erigena.

2 Werfrithus Aser. Werfrichus Malmsb. p. 45. de Gestis Regum Angl. But Hensferdsh p. 279. de Gestis Pontif. Angl. as I find it in the Print; tho' in our MS. (in Bibl. Bodl. Arch. D. 30.) 'tis Hereferih, just as Mr. Wharton found it in an Index at the End of a MS. Copy of Florence of Worc. cited by him, Angl. Sacr. Vol. I. p. 471. where he also notes that he is called Averefredus by some. Warfridus Sim. Dun. ap. X. Script. 131. 9. Werefridus in Leland de Scriptoribus, Vit. Alfredi Magni; and so also in his Life of this Bishop as corrected by his own hand in the MS. tho' at first writ Wirofridus. Some Authors call him Wirebertus, as is noted by Bishop Godwin de Præsulib. p. 503. But whereas he there, with Leland and Bale, makes him to have died an. 911. it ought to be corrected 915. as is very well observ'd by Mr. Wharton. Under the Number 911. in Leland was formerly put something, which is since eras'd by the Author (as it seems) himself.

3 He is generally said to have sate Arch-Bishop 34 years; but Authors being not agreed about the Time of his Death, there is some Dispute was his Duty (for Latin they understood not, neither was there any to teach it, and Saxon Books of that Subject, it seemeth, there were none,) the King made such use both of the Advice and Travel of these Learned Men, and so well bestirred himself, as that what with diligent Search after Men of Capacity, (both for Life and Understanding) and what with infinite Pains in teaching such as were found capable, he ere it were long got all his Bishopricks furnished with Men, that if not learned, were yet competently instructed and qualified for a Reasonable Function of so great a Charge.

66. But because the Making of Bishops was but a Temporary Provision, and (how mean soever they were) it was uncertain whether when they were gone there should as fitting Men be found to supply their Places; therefore, to provide for the worst, the King held it necessary to cause some Books (such as might be profitable and of most use to Church Men) to be translated into the Saxon Tongue, and accordingly set his Bishops and Clerks to the present Translating of them. He himself (among other things) translated Gregorie's Pastoral concerning the Duty of Bishops and Priests, and causing many Copies thereof to be written, sent to every Bishop's Son one, to the End, that if, through the like occasions, the Church hereafter should be constrained again to confer the Ecclesiastical Dignities upon unlearned Men, and such as understood not the Latin Tongue, they yet in their Mother Tongue might have means to read the Duty belonging to their Charge, and Pastoral Function, as by the Preface to the Translation of Gregorie's Pastoral, directed to Wulfsig, then Bishop of London, more at large appeareth, the Tenour whereof (well near word for word with the Saxon; which by way of Appendix I have also added with other like Particulars¹ at the End of the Book) you may here behold.

And in Translating Books.

¹ Neither the said Preface, nor any other of these Particulars appear in the Original.

67. Ælfred King wifeth Greeting to Wulfīg Bishop his Beloved and Friendlike, and thee to know I wif, that to me it cometh very often in mind, what manner of Wife Men long ago were throughout the Englifh Nation, both of the Spiritual Degree, and of the Temporal, and how happy the Times then were among all the Englifh, and how the Kings, which then the Government had of the People, God, and his written Will obeyed, how well they behaved themselves both in War¹ and Peace, and in their home-Government, how their Nobleneſs was ſpread abroad, and how they prospered in² Knowledge and in Wiſdom. Alſo the Divine Orders how earneſt they were, as well about Preaching, as about Learning, and about all the Services that they ſhould do to God, and how Men from abroad Wiſdom and Doctrine here in this Land ſought, and how we the ſame now muſt get abroad if we would have them. So clean has Learning fallen among the Englifh Nation, as that there has been very few on this ſide Humber, that were able to underſtand the Englifh of their Service or turn an Epiftle from Latin into Englifh, and I wot there were not many beyond Humber that could do it. There were ſo few as that I cannot bethink me of one on the South ſide of the Thames, when I firſt came to Reign. God Almighty be thanked that we have ever a Teacher in Pulpit now. Therefore I pray thee that thou do (as alſo I believe thou wilt) that thou that Wiſdom, that God has given thee, beſtow all about on them thou canſt beſtow it, think what Punifhment ſhall for this World befall us, when as neither we our ſelves have loved [Wiſdom] nor left it to others; we have only loved the Names that we were Chriſtians and very few of us the Duties. When I minded all this, me thought alſo that I ſaw (before all was ſpoyled and burnt) how all the Churches throughout the Englifh Nation ſtood filled with Books, and Ornaments, and a great multitude of God's Servants, and at that Time they wiſt very little Fruit of their Books, becauſe they could underſtand no-

1 ge heopa ribbe, ge heopa rýðo. 2 piſe:

thing

thing of them, for that they were not written in their own Language. So they told us, that our Ancestors, that before us held those Places, loved Wisdom, and through the same got ¹ Wealth and left it us. A Man may here yet see their Swath, but we cannot enquire after it, because we have let goe both ² Wealth and Wisdom; for that we would not stoop with our Minds to the seeking of it. When I thought of all this, then wondred I greatly that their Godly Wisemen, that were every where throughout the English Nation, and had fully learned all those Books, would turn no Part of them into their own Language; but I then again quickly answered my self, and said, they weened not that ever men should become so reckless, nor that this Learning would so decay, therefore they willingly let it alone, and wot that here would be the more Wisdom in the Land, the more Languages that we understood. Then I called to mind how that the Law was first found written in the Ebrew Speech, and after that the Greeks had learned it, then turned they it into their own Speech wholly, and also all other Books. And then the Latin People, a little after they had learned it, they translated all through wise ³ Interpreters into their own Language, and all other Christian People also have turned some Part thereof into their own Tongue. Therefore me thinketh it better, if you so think, that we also some Books, that be deemed most needfull for all men to understand, into that Language turn, that we all know, and that we bring to pass (as we easily may with God's Help, if we have Quietness) that all the Youth of Freeborn English-men (such as have Wealth that they may maintain them) be committed to Learning, that, while they no other Note can, they first learn well to read English Writing, afterward let men further teach in the Latin Tongue those that they will further teach and have to a higher degree. When I minded how this Learning of the Latin Tongue heretofore was fallen throughout the English Nation, though many could skill to read English Writing, then began I, among divers and manifold Businessses of this Kingdom, to turn into English this Book, which in Latin is named Pastoralis, and in English the Heard-Man's Book, sometime word for word, sometime understanding for understanding, even as I learned them of Plegmond my Archbishop, of Affer my Bishop, and Grimbald my Mass-Priest, and John my Mass-Priest. After that I had learned of them how I might best understand them, I turned them into English, and will send one to each Bishop's See in my Kingdom, and upon each there is a Stile that is of fifty Marks, and I command, on God's Name, that no man the Stile from the Books, nor the Books from the Minster take, seeing we know not how long there shall be so learned Bishops, as now, God be thanked, every where there are. Therefore I would they should always remain in their Places, except the Bishop will have them with him, or that they be lent somewhither untill that some other be written out.

¹ pelan. Understanding. pealhȝtoday. Interpreters. ² pela. Understanding. ³ pealhȝtoday

68. The Preface containeth many very remarkable Things, in which, above all other, we may behold the King's Zealous Care to revive Religion, and to restore the true Knowledge and Service of God, and to increase the Prosperity of his People. But there being in this no more than a cautelous Provision for the worst, in case he should be prevented of bringing his more perfect Work to pass, (as we may discern by the Contents of the Preface) therefore dispatching it as soon as he could, he proceeds to that, which was his chiefest Aim, to wit, to found perpetual Schools and Seed-Plots of Learning, from whence, as from constant Store-Houses, the Kingdom should for ever be furnished of her own with Men of Quality, sufficient in all Sciences, both Divine and Human, to serve the Occasions of the State. And in sundry Parts of the Kingdom, (as it seemeth) he erected Schools for Youth, ordaining, as in the Preface is declared, That every Free-

The King
foundeth Schools.

man

man of Ability sufficient should bring up their Children to Learning. But for accomplishment of a full and perfect Supply, he determined to found an University for the Publick Profession of Arts and Sciences generally.

And an University
at Oxford.

69. For this cause he made Choice of Oxford, that it should be the Seat of his University, rather than any Town within the Kingdom of West-Saxony: in which the Policy of the King seems to have had a double Regard unto the Occasion of the State. For whereas that Part of the Land¹, which was the Borders of the Kingdom of Mercia, lay almost wast, by reason of the Neighbour-

¹ The Reason that our Author has given for the King's fixing upon Oxford discovers a great deal of Partiality, and, if he had not had a respect to the University built here before, would have been a stronger Inducement for him to have contain'd himself within the Kingdom of West-Saxony; where were several Towns not far distant from Oxford, of great Pleasure, wherein the King seem'd to take particular delight, namely Wantage, (the Place of his Nativity) Abbingdon and Dorchester. Either of these Places would have been as convenient as Oxford for Inviting a Conflux of People to Replant the Borders of the Kingdom of Mercia. And then, if he had had a Regard to Security from the Northumbrian and East-Angle Danes, there were Northampton, Warwick, Bedford, and several other Towns more fit for that purpose, as being situated more near the Heart of the Island. So that the chief Reason why he chose Oxford without all doubt was because Letters had flourish'd here so much before, that it had obtain'd a very great Name upon that Account. And tho' it must be confess'd that the Place at present was deserted by it's Students, by reason of the Tyranny of the Danes, yet here were Houses, Inns, Schools, Churches, and all Things else, that might be quickly made fit for Reception of them again. That this is not only conjectural is plain as well from what Asher has inserted in his Life of Ælfred, (which I shall have occasion to consider particularly hereafter) as from what is related in the Annals of Hyde, [MSS. See Wood's Hist. & Antiq. Oxon. lib. I. p. 8. and Dr. Plot's Nat. Hist. of Oxfordshire, c.X. §. 30. See also a Transcript from a Peice of John Rowse's Book de Academiis, in a Collect. of Mr. Leland's, given to the Bodlejan Library by Dr. Plot, inter Codd. NE. F. 11. 18. f. 28. b.] concerning the old Bellofitum, or Beaumont, being placed somewhat more North than the University is at present: Quæ Universitas Oxoniæ quondam (says he, having before discours'd of it's Restoration by K. Ælfred) erat extra portam Borealem ejusdem Urbis, & erat principalis ecclesia totius cleri ecclesia Sancti Ægidii extra eandem portam. Here it had continued

Neighbourhood of the Northumbrian and East Angle Danes, the King, by Founding the University there, provided as well for Repeopling the wasted Parts of the Land, by drawing a Confluence of People thither, as for the Restoring again of Letters. For Oxford being in the outward Parts of Mercia it was the furthest Place, in which, with any reasonable Security, an University could be placed; because that further off (whether Northerly or Easterly) it would have fallen either within the Territory of the Dane, or at least too near their Border, (as Cambridge was) and so obnoxious to their Inroads, and too remote for any present Succeeded for a great Number of Years, having had it's Original from divers Greek Philosophers, who prefer'd it for it's Healthy Situation to any other Place, as we are assur'd by Walter Burley, Fellow of Merton College, (Tutor to the Famous King Edw. III. and deservedly styled Doctor Profundus) who upon the Problem [Complexio rara quare sanior?] has these Words: Notanda sunt tria, quod civitas sana est in Borea & in Oriente si plantata est aperta, & in Austro & Occidente si montosa; propter puritatem Boreæ & Orientis, & putrefactionem Austri & Occidentis: sicut Oxonia, quæ per industriam Philosophorum de Græcia fuerat ordinata. [In Problematis Aristot. secundum laborem Magistri Walter Burley ad ordinem Alphabeti. MS. 65. in Bibl. Coll. B. M. Magdal. Oxon. fol. 12. b.] When it was that these Philosophers arriv'd is uncertain; tho' 'tis probable they were some of those Græcians brought over by Theodorus the Greek Archbishop of Canterbury about the Year DCLXVIII. For we find Venerable Bede, and St. John de Beverlaco (always reputed of this University) to have been his Scholars; as likewise were Tobias Bishop of Rochester, and Albinus Abbot of St. Augustin's Cam. who are said to have understood the Greek Tongue as well as their Native one. [Matth. Parker de Antiquitate Eccles. Britan. in Vita Theod.] As this Conjecture is not disliked by several Cantabrigians themselves, [See Mr. Wheelock's Notes upon Bede] so Bishop Godwin [De Episcopis, in Theodoro] and Mr. Burton [Græcæ linguæ Hist. p. 52.] have particularly insisted upon it, and take Notice that at the same time was erected an Excellent Library, wherein were repositied a vast Number of valuable Greek Books by Theodorus. But now there are others who carry the Antiquity of Oxford much higher than Theodorus, as our Author himself also takes notice hereafter, even to the Time of Brute [See the foresaid MS. of Mr. Leland's, f. 28. b.]; which whether it be true or no is not very material: since, as will appear anon, we have no reason at all to collect all the Arguments that may be produced in behalf of Oxford, when the Controversy may be so easily decided from undoubted Authority.

cour from the King. At Oxford therefore did the King found ¹ his University. And in founding of it followed not the Example of what he had formerly heard or seen in other Places: but with great Judgment forecasting what might best conduce unto his Ends that he desired, he did not only make a perpetual Provision for Teachers, such as should constantly read to those, that at their own Discretion would there maintain themselves at Study; but giving Entertainment both for Teachers and Learners, and dividing them, according to their Differing Studies, into three several Colleges, he settled perpetual Maintenance for about 80 Scholars; who, for their better Breeding, as well in good Manners as Learning, were tyed to an Orderly Society, and enjoyned every Day, before their going to their Studies, either in their Turns to say Prayers themselves, or to be present at them. Which though at this Day in our Universities is an ordinary thing, yet was it not so formerly, neither is it yet so in many Places beyond the Seas. And therefore we find it observed by ² Edward Higgons (who is no very late Author) as a note of Preheminence in this University of K. Ælfred. And questionless as men are ready to imitate that which another has well discovered, so our succeeding Founders of Colleges in our Universities, seconding Ælfred in providing likewise for the orderly Cohabitation of their Students, and for their Ruliness in Civil and good Manners, as well as for their Learning, have even in that been a great Occasion of the Eminence and Flourishing of our Universities, before those of other Parts, which (what Provision soever they have for teaching) have so little

¹ This was about the year 800, according to a Memorand. (transcrib'd from an antient Book) which I saw in the Treasury of University Coll. by the Favour of the Learned Dr. HUDSON. But in a MS. amongst Archbishop Laud's (E. 3. f. 10. b.) 'tis said expressly that 'twas A. D. 873.

² MS. lib. 6. cap. 8. Et quum abunde in eisdem suppeditentur facultates, communiter vivunt, ac quotidie mane aut sacris operam dant aut intersunt priusquam ad studium aggrediantur. SPELMAN.

provided

provided for Government (while the Students, being mostly at their own finding are likewise Governed at their own Discretion) as that the Scholars in their Universities are generally so dissolute, and disordered, so that in many Places they bring a Scandal upon Religion, and make the Name of Scholars ignominious.

70. For the Buildings and Endowment of the University, what and how it was we shall have further occasion to speak, when we come to treat of the King's Magnificence. In this Place we meddle no further with it than as it concerns the well Disposing and Policying of the State.

71. As the King made Laws for civil Government, and ordered Matters of the Church, so find we also, that he improved the Use and Practice of Arms, to the great Advancement of Military Discipline ; and had the Particulars of his Ordinances in that behalf remained unto us, there is no doubt but they would have afforded Matter both to his Glory, and to the Delight (and Use perhaps) of Posterity : but such Particulars failing, there yet are manifest Demonstrations, that he did much in that kind, and to very good purpose. For, as we have partly already mentioned, in every of the Counties he ordained several Prefects or Commanders, took view of the Souldiery in the Counties, and apportioned some, like Garrison Souldiers, to the Custody of the Forts and Castles, that the King had built, and others to the Service of Occasion in the Field : who being divided into two Parts, the one went first and served a certain time, and then (if need were) was relieved by the other, that had stayed at home ; and over all, as his Generalissimo, was his Princeps Militiæ, who, under the King, commanded in chief, and by that Name the King himself in his Will stileth Æthelred, Earl of Mercia, his Son-in-Law, who (it seems) did then bear that Office.

72. It should also seem, that, besides those, that, as professed Souldiers, and proper Parts of the Militia, had Charge of the Military Service, the King, by way of a Collateral Security, did constitute other Guardians of the Kingdom against the Irruptions of the Danes. These were Persons of great Trust, Repute, and Power; who, being constantly resident in the Places of their Charge, had, in Defect of the Ordinary Provisions, some extraordinary Commission (as it seemeth) for the Common Safety of the Country. For so we find ¹ Ceolmund the Earl constituted a Guardian in Kent; in Rochester Swithulf the Bishop; in Essex Earl Brithulf; in London Earl Æthelred; in Dorchester Halard the Bishop; in Sussex Eadulf; in Winchester the Bishop Bertulf; and in several Places divers others², though not by particular Name.

73. A further Note of his Regulating of the Use of Arms is that which we have from Malmsbury, who thus saith of him: Ille inter stridores lituorum, inter fremitus armorum, leges tulit, quibus sui & divino cultui, & disciplinæ militari assuescerent. But nothing can either more demonstrate or commend it, than the Success and Consequence of his Discipline, which we before have shown. For the Danes, that in the beginning of his Reign had left the Island, (not so much for Fear of the Natives, as for the Multitude of Invaders, because they feared there would not be Booty enough for so many Sharers) when they, for divers years together, had overrun and harrowed the greatest Part of France, and questionless had improved their own Arms with long Experience and Exercise in Forreign Warfare, yet returning hither, and being safely landed, and intrenched, were ne'retheless with so great facility repulsed and sent away again, as that they never put the State to a greater Levy of Men, than only the present Forces of the Counties next about their Landing. Yea the Natives had so well found what they had to do, and had got so much Allurance in their Course and Way, as that, whereas before they were backward, and so faint as not to be put on without much Heartening and Encouragement, they grew, on the contrary, so forward, as hardly to be restrained from setting on the Enemy, without attending the Direction of a Commander; and, on the other Side, the Enemy from being terrible was now become ridiculous unto them.

¹ Math. Westm. an. 197. Godwin. fol. 337.

² Such perhaps was Edred, Duke or Earl of Dorsetshire, who died [Bromton col. 832. n. 10.] An. DCCCC, a month before the Death of King Ælfred, to whom he had been a Faithfull Assistant [H. Hunt. f. 202. n. 20.] in many Battles.

74. I need not further urge, that he must of necessity have used some good Discipline, or otherwise that it had not been possible for him to have effected what he did. But let the Reader¹ remember what we have shewn, and judge upon the whole. The King and his Saxons were not only overthrown, but well nigh extinguished; the Land almost depopulate of the Natives, and possessed by the Enemy; and how then should a

¹ John Hardyng sums up the King's Military Performances in the following Words: [Chron. f. 108. b.]

And in the yere (a) viii. c. lxxx, and eightene
 Then Alurede [(a)eght hundred foure score and fiftene Whan Alured MS. Seld.] this noble Kyng so died When [whan MS.] he had reigned xxx [regned nyne and twenty yere MS.] yere clene And with the Danes, in battailes [batails MS. & sic mox infra.] multiplied
 He faught often [faughten ofte MS.] as Colman notified
 In his Chronicle, and in his cathologe Entitled well, as [wele, als MS. recte als pro also] in his Dialogue.
 That fiftie [fifty, & mox sex, MS.] Wattailes, and six he smote
 Somtyme [some tyme divilim, MS.] the worse, and somtyme had the better [and ofte tyme had the bettre MS.]
 Somtyme [some tyme MS.] the felde, he had at his note [Re-ctius in MS. he had as it is note] Somtyme he fled awate, as saith the letter [some tyme he fledde a way as saithe the lettre MS.]
 Like as fortune, his cause left unfeter [Versus iste deest in MS.]
 But neverthelesse [... lees MS.] as oft [ofte whan so they MS.] when so thei came He countred theim [rectius hem, & mox lond in MS.] and kepte the lande fro shame.

poor handful of Men against such infinite renewing Multitudes be able to subsist, much less prevail without Discipline, and that very exact? Truly were his Discipline as exact as that of the Romans, and had his Men the Virtue of Cæsar's Veterans, and he Cæsar himself in the Conduct of the war and them, he yet had had task enough to overmatch all those Advantages, and the more, for that his War, being at home, was so much worse than Cæsar's, as it is easier with small Numbers to break into others Labours, and maintain themselves by Forragings, than with a few to labour for their own Support, and when they have done defend both their Labours and themselves against a far greater Enemy, on every side attempting of them: to which Difficult also that Part of his Military Constitution seems to point, when he provided, that no Levy in any Place should be made, but that an equal Part should be left behind, as well (doubtless) to follow the Business of the Country, (for the Souldier at that time was fain to be both Souldier, Artificer, and Husbandman too) and to be at hand for a present Defence against Inroads, as to be reserved for a timely Succour of the others that were before abroad on Service.

And ordaineth a standing Navy for Mastery of the Seas.

75. It was not his Military Affairs at Land only that found Improvement, but his Care extended unto Sea Service, and that was likewise bettered by him. He was the first that put to Sea such a Navy as was awful unto Strangers, begun the first Mastery of the Seas, and in the Service of his Shipping, and found both Quiet and Reputation; his Navy being not only, for Number of Ships, so great as to keep Watch upon all the Coasts of the Kingdom, but, for the Quality of them, such as overmatched any of those that at any time infested the Seas.

76. What manner of Vessel they were, whether Ships or Gallies, does not fully appear, nor will I determine; but that they were of divers Sorts, and that some of them were nearer Ships, and others nearer the form of Gallies, that I may safely avow; and that some of them were of an especial Building by his own Appointment, we have already shewed, where it is not hard to collect, that those were after the manner of great long Gallies; for they were rowed¹ with 40² Oars a-peice, and above, and were as long again, as high again, as swift again, and more stedly in Sail than the best of the Enemies Ships.
of

77. How they should be so exceeding high (as to double the Height of the Danish Ships, (when they went not with Sails but Oars) I cannot well imagine, unless that, for the better Receipt of Souldiers, and their greater Advantage in Fighting, (which in those grappling Sea-Fights consisted wholly in the Superiority of Standing) they had a plain level Deck above the Room that the Rowers sat in, and from thence with great Odds of Advantage annoyed those they sat upon: otherwise their Height, that so much advantaged them in Fight, would as much disadvantage them in speedy Rowing. As for their Steddyness, that argues their Greatness and Burthen whereby they drew the more Water; which though it were a Hindrance of their Speed, (for the greater Body the slower Motion) yet that was born out with an answerable Number of Rowers, which their Length afforded.

78. If this apprehension seem difficult, then may we reckon the Height spoken of to be meant of the Height of their Poupes onely, and not of the Height of the whole Sides of the Ships, and so we may think them to have retained somewhat of the Fashion of those of the³ Venedi, with whom when Cæsar fought the Height of their Poupes exceeded the Tops of the Fighting-Turrets, that were in Cæsar's Ships: but those Ships of the Venedi went not with Oars, but with Sails of Leather; and these either only or chiefly with Oars.

¹ H. Hunting.

² So Bromton; but the Sax. Chron. says [sub an. DCCXCIVII.] 60 Oars. Ða het Ælfred cýning timbrian lange scipu ongen þa ærcar. þa wæron ful-neah tƿa swa lange swa þa oðru. sume hæfdon LX. ana sume ma. þa wæron ægðer ge swiftan ge unpealtan. ge eac hýnan þonne þa oðru. Næron hie næðer ne on Fnglisc gecwæpene. ne on Denisc. bute swa him selfum þahƿe þæt hie nyt-wyrðorƿe beon meanton.

³ The Venedi were of the Britains in France, with whom these Britains had Intercourse. Cæsar. SPELMAN.

79. If further we inquire after the Form of Shipping used by the Saxons, Tacitus tells¹ us that the Suiones (who were part of the Suevians, as the Saxons were) used a Kind of Shipping in the Baltick Sea very rude and plain, that was high before and behind, and made indifferent to go with either End forward, but forced only with Oars, which they did not use in any constant, fixed Seats of Rowing, but removed to and fro to any End or Part of their Ships as occasion served, (as we may see them do in our Cock-Boats and Lighters.) Those were slow for any Service, though Tacitus counts² the Suiones to be some body in Shipping. Whether the Saxons came over in such Vessels, and whether they continued the Use of them, or found here a better Form, I shall leave to the Disquisition of others. It is sufficient to our purpose to shew, that, whatsoever they formerly were, the King augmented the use of them, both in Number and Condition, over what they were before his coming to the Crown.

And advanced Navigation.

80. Neither did the King improve the use of Shipping to the End of making them serviceable for Fight only, but for Navigation also, and for Traffick; so as he was able upon the occasion of a Vow to send his Alms by Shipping into the East-Indies, to the great Admiration³ not only of those Times but of many after Ages. From whence they brought him a fair Return of precious Stones, Perfumes, and other Eastern Rarities never seen before in these Parts.

81. And to shew the Latitude of the King's Mind and Genius, in all Dimensions truly Royal and August, there is (as I have been informed) in Sir Thomas Cot-

1 Libr. de Germ. mor. 2 Præter viros armaque classibus valent. Tacit. lib. de Germ. mor. 3 Quod quivis in hoc seculo miretur. Malm. de gestis Pont. lib. 2.

ton's Library an old Memorial of a Voyage of one Oether a Dane, performed at King Ælfred's Procurement, for the Discovery of some North-East-Passage. This I attended sometime to have seen, but it being no more than two or three Leaves, and, upon some Removal of Books and Papers, displaced, and not readily to be found, I had no hope of obtaining it before a general Review and sorting of the Papers. What that Record it self is, I know not, but, to imagine the least, and to judge it to be no more than that which is published concerning Oether by Mr. Hakluyt and Mr. Purchas, in their Collections of Discoveries and Voyages, it yet affordeth thus much, that Ælfred, among the several Sorts of People that he sought out and procured, entertained one that was expert and industrious in Navigation, whom least we should think to be but accidentally brought unto the King, (only to relate his own Fortunes, in which the King had no hand at all) we may observe, that that Relation speaketh of Oether's Coming as of an Act of his own Will and Purpose, and not a casual Thing. And to shew that his Intent and End of Coming was to offer his Service to the King, as assured to find him forward in Entertaining Men of his Condition, and ready to further his Addiction, whether to Discovery general, or to the particular of Whale-Fishing, it not only mentioneth Ælfred, as Oether's Lord and Master, but sheweth, that, upon his Return from his late Discovery, he brought some of the Horse-Whales Teeth as a present unto the King. Neither is there mention of any casual occasion of his coming, nor is it likely in those Times there should have been so particular a setting down of the Relation that a Stranger made (for the Original is in Saxon) if some particular Purpose of the King's and his Desire or Commands had not given Occasion to it. The Relation, for so much as concerns our purpose, as it is translated by the Publishers, is as followeth.

82. Oether saith, that the Country, wherein he dwelt, was called ¹ Helgoland. Oether told his Lord King Alfrid, that he dwelt farthest North of any other Norman. He said, that he dwelt toward the North Part of the Land toward the West-Coast, and affirmeth, that the Land (notwithstanding it stretcheth marvellous far toward the North, yet it) is all desert, and not inhabited unless it be very few Places here and there, where certain Fins dwell upon the Coast, who live by Hunting all the Winter, and by Fishing in Summer.

was

83. He saith, that upon a certain time he fell into a Fancy and Desire to know how far the Land stretched Northward: whereupon he took his Voyage directly North along the Coast, having always the Desert Land upon his Star-board, and upon the Lar-board the Main Ocean, and continued his Course for the Space of three Days: in which Space he was come as far toward the North as commonly the Whale-Hunters use to travel; whence he proceeded towards the North as far as he was able to Sail in other three Days: at the end whereof he perceived that the Coast turned toward the East, or else the Sea opened with a main Gulf into the Land he knew not how far. Well he wist and remembred that he was fain to stay till he had a Western Wind, and somewhat Northerly; and thence he Sailed plain East along the Coast still so far as he was able in four Days, at the End of which Time he was compelled again to stay until he had a full Northerly Wind; for as much as the Coast bowed thence directly toward the South, at leastwise the Sea opened into the Land he could not tell how far: so that he Sailed thence along the Coast continually full South so far as he could travel in five Days, and at the 5 Days End he descried a mighty River, which opened very far into the Land: at the Entry of which River he stayed his Course, and in Conclusion turned back again: for he durst not enter thereinto for fear of the Inhabitants of the Land; perceiving that on the other Side of the River the Country was thoroughly inhabited, which was the first peopled Land which he had found since his Departure from his own Dwelling, whereas continually through his Voyage he had evermore a desert Wilderness upon his Star-board-side, except in some Places he saw a few Fishers, Fowlers, and Hunters, which were all Fins, and all the way on the Lar-board the main Ocean.

¹ Alias Ægeland and Halgeland. 'Tis in the Latitude of 66 Degrees. See Hakluyt's Voyages, Vol. I. p. 235. In the Saxon Translation of Orosius by King Ælfred there is an exact Relation of the Voyage of Oether and Wolstan, (an Englishman also as it seems) which is in several Things different from the Printed Account in Hakluyt, as may be seen by consulting it in the Appendix of the Latin Translation of this Life.

84. The Biarmes told him a Number of Stories, both of their own Country and the Countries adjoyning; howbeit he knew not, nor could affirm any thing for certain Truth, for as much as he was not upon the Land himself. This only he judged that the Fins and Biarmes spake but one Language.

85. The principal purpose of his Travel this way was, to increase the Knowledge and Discovery of these Coasts and Countries, for the more Commodity of Fishing of Horse-Wales, which have in their Teeth Bones of great Price and Excellence, whereof he brought some at his Return unto the King. Their Skins are also very good to make Cables for Ships, and so used.

86. This Kind of Whale is much less in Quantity than the other Kinds, having not in length above seven Ells. And as for the common Kind of Whales, the Place of most and best Hunting of them is in his own Country, whereof some be 48 Ells of length, and some 50, of which Sort he affirmed that he himself was one of the six, which in the Space of three Days killed threescore.

87. He was a Man of Exceeding Wealth in such Riches, wherein the Wealth of the Country doth consist. At the same time that he came to the King he had of his own Breed 600 tame Deer, of that Kind which they call Rain-Deer. He was among the chief Men of his Country one; and yet he had but 20 Kine, and 20 Swine, and that little which he tilled he tilled it all with Horses.

Their

Their principal Wealth consisteth in the Tribute which the Fins pay them, which is all in Skins of wild Beasts, Feathers of Birds, Whale Bones, and Cables and Tacklings for Ships, made of Whales or Seals Skins. Every man payeth &c.

He improveth Manufactures.

88. Now, in the last place, the King had as well Consideration of the Defect of the Kingdom in Want of Artificers, and Handy-Craft Men, as of those that were of nobler Professions, and accordingly from all Places procured such also to come over to him; so that his Occasions and Liberality being once spread abroad, his Court was soon frequented with Strangers of all Professions, Gauls, Franks, Armorick-Britains, Germans, Frisons, Scots, Welsh, and others, whom while he entertained with the Liberality of a Prince, according to their several Qualities, he stored his Country with Men of all Variety of Faculties; and, being furnished with their Help, made a fuller and speedier Restauration of the defaced Beauty and Defects thereof, than one could think so short a peice of one Man's Life could ever have effected.

89. And though in all the Works, that at any time he had in hand, he himself was ever the principal Agent, and his Spirit (like Apollo among the Muses) inspired and directed the whole Affair, yet knowing the many Occasions of the State required as well many Heads as Hands, and that Assistance in Council did not only make a good secure Proceeding, but expedite and set forward his Business, his Manner was, upon all Occasions, with much Examination and Reasoning, according to the Importance of the Matter, to hear the Opinion of his Counsel, whom, though they were not yet known by that Name, yet may we properly call his Council of State, and this, according to the several Occasions of the State, was of two Sorts.

His Counsel of two Sorts.
The Great-Council of the Kingdom.

90. The first was the Great-Council of the Kingdom, with whom (after the usage of his Ancestors in West-Saxony, as also of all the Kings of the Saxon-Heptarchy) he consulted in the Making of Laws, in Disposing
and

and Settling of his Demeasnes, (as we may see in his Testament) and in ordering of Matters that concerned the well Governing of the Common-Wealth. And these were the Bishops generally, the Earls of the Counties, the King's Aldermen, and his Chief Thanes or Barons, (as we may render them) that held any notable Part of the Counties of him.

91. The other sort were those, whom we may count his Privy-Council, with whom he advised always in private of his more secret and extraordinary Affairs, weighed, and examined Matters before they came to be propounded in the greater Council. These were those particular Bishops, the Abbot, and the Monks that we before have mentioned, all of them Clergy-Men, who being of singular Note and Eminence for Wisdom, Learning, and Integrity of Life, were therefore (like Hushai with David) assum'd into the Friendship and Familiarity of the King, and by him consulted with as their several Abilities rendred them serviceable to his Occasions. Not that they then bare the Name of his Privy-Council, (for it was not at that time a Dignity of distinct Office and Employment;) but being in his Favour and always near him, they were the only Men, whom, above all other, he preferred in communicating himself in his Affairs of chiefest Consequence.

The Privy-Council.

92. When severally to every Defect or Evil Appearing in the State the King had provided a particular Remedy; then, considering the continual Change and Innovation, that new founded and growing States were necessarily subject to, he held it not secure to leave the Success of all upon the Administration of the Ordinances that he had already made: but, that by continual and certain Intelligence of the Condition of the Common-Wealth he might be able to foresee the coming Evil and prevent it; or undertaking it before it had gotten Strength, with more facility redress it; he instituted, for a perpetual Ordinance¹, that twice in the Year,

Orig. of the constant use of the solemn Councils now called Parliaments.

1 Le Roy Ælfred ordeigna pur usage perpetuel, que a deux foits per lan,

Year; and oftner if need required, there should be an Assembly (that is of the Great-Council of the Kingdom the Bishops and the Nobles) held at London, to consult of the well Governing of the Common-Wealth.

93. This (we must understand) was an Assembling of the Repräsentative Body of the State, settled by Ælfred in a formal and a constant Course: not that it was of one and the same Form and Solemnity with our later Parliaments; but, as the whole Kingdom was then entirely either in the Hands of the King or of his Earls and Thanes; and all that held Lands under them, held them in such Subjection and Dependence, as that they were wholly at their Lords Dispose; so what was then ordained by the King, his Earls, and Thanes, was a binding Law to the whole Kingdom; for that it was the Act of those that had the Absolute Interest, and did involve the Right of the Residue as of such as were but their Leige-Men and Vassals. As for the Bishops that were ever Members of those Grand Councils and Parties in the Sanctions of them; besides that, in respect of their Temporal Possessions, they had the Interest of Thanes or Barons, the sacred Esteem of their Persons and Function, together with their Predominance of Understanding, did not only make their Votes equivalent to those of the Nobles, but even the whole Act to have the more Reverend Esteem and Acceptation.

94. From this Institution of the King's grew (as it seemeth) an usual thing among his Saxon Successors to hold Assemblies of their Bishops and Nobles constantly thrice a year (to wit at Christmass, Easter, and Whitsuntide) in solemn Consultation of the Affairs of the Kingdom, not always in one Place, but in any, as occasion required, (though most commonly in the Place, where the King kept his Court and Residence) and so in the Assembly at Sifford in Oxfordshire before mentioned we see it done in Ælfred's Time.

per lan, ou plus souent pur mistier, in temps de peace se assembler a Londres pur Parliamenter sur &c. Mirror aux Jusices, cited by Sir Edw. Coke in his Preface to the ninth Report. SPELMAN.

Ælfred

Ælfred the Great,

First Founder of the English

MONARCHY.

BOOK III.

Containing His Magnificence, Devotions and Private Life.

I. THE Imperial Sovereignty, that before King Ælfred's time is reckoned to have been in this Kingdom, as it was upon no fixed Ground, but ambulatory among the several Princes of the Heptarchy; so was it feeble and of small Regard. The Regalty had not (as yet) her due Advancement, neither had Majesty conspicuously enough distinguished the Head from the inferior Members. But no sooner did the King begin to draw the Traces of a Monarchical Platform, and in this Land give Rooting to that goodly Cedar, but presently, in Demonstration of Likening, and of the Kindliness of the Place, it began to sprout and branch, and in the Leaves, the Blossoms, and the Fruit, to shew all Properties of true Imperial Sovereignty. So as there further wanted only time to bring it to that Height and Beauty, that Nature in the Situation had afforded to it.

2. The King having mastered his War, united the Divided Kingdoms, established Peace, ordered Matters of Religion and Manners, settled Commerce and Trading, and so given unto the Crown the necessary Limbs and and Members which it was to have, proceeds unto those other Works, which necessarily following the former belong properly to the Apparelling of the State, and refer as much unto the Glory as the Profit of the Kingdom. And though Works of this Nature are not usually performed without some concurrent Vanity in the Doer, (which in truth diminisheth the Merit of them) yet the King is contrarily observed to have been no whit taken with any vain Affectation of Glory in them, but led along in all his Works with the only Consideration of what was correspondent for them.

The King adorns and beautifies the Kingdom.

3. As therefore the State that had served him, while he was only (as we may call him) a Gregory King among others of like Condition, were nothing suitable to him, when afterward he was become sole Monarch, and alone comprehended whatsoever they all before had had among them ; so now something was of Decorum to be innovated. The Principality was become not only greater of Extent, but different of Nature; more high and more sacred. So that the accommodating of Things incident to such an Augmentation of Empire must needs be without Observance of some Magnificence and State fitted in propriety unto it. Which the incomparable Worth of the Prince himself also exacting, to whom could there be more Liberty allowed in doing Right unto his own Merit than unto him? His Sovereignty was of his own Acquisition, and in it God had given him, not only to be innocent, (a thing rarely found among Princes, that have by their own Arms augmented their Dominions) but to be meritorious too, as redeeming it out of the Hands of Barbarians and Infidels, which with how much Noise among his Neighbours Ferdinand of Aragon has boasted of we all do know. If we consider his Person, we see him in his Sovereign Parts of Mind above all Things crowned with Devotion, inwardly adorned with the Beauty of inherent Justice, (we may call it.) His outward Actions apparelled with the glorious Habiliments of Wisdom, Fortitude, Justice Distributive, Mercy, Temperance, Munificence, nificence, &c. For his Repute, we see him beloved of his own, and honoured far and near both of his Neighbours and of Strangers. But he a serious Prince, and not carried away but with being that which others desire rather to seem to be, affected neither vast Works, that had no other End than only Ostentation, neither yet Titles, Trophies, Historical Columns, nor Triumphal Arches, laden with the Story of his Actions, but in the mute and silent Deed of Virtue, although he little sought it, yet got he that true Honour which in the other way so many in vain have fished for.

Book III. The Life of King Ælfred the Great.

164

4. In turning his Hand to those Works of the Kingdom, which properly refer to his Magnificence, we reckon in the first Place the Repair of the Desolation of the Land, in Founding and Building of Cities, Towns, and Castles, new out of the Ground in Places, where formerly there had been none, and in Repairing or Walling of others, that had been ruined by the Enemy; of which though time has so eaten out the Knowledge, as that now they are not particularly to be set forth, yet were they not so few, but that the Writers of his Actions have purposely, to shift the Labour of Recounting them, given a Stop to their Pens, as fearing they should run into too infinite Particularities. Quid loquar (saith Affer and Florentius) de urbibus renovandis, & aliis, ubi nunquam antea fuerant, construendis? as if they should say, it were infinite to enter into the Particularizing of them, and therefore they omitted them. Time by chance brought to light the Inscription of a Stone that told him to have been the first Founder of Shaftsbury. And (as Malmshury saith) it was then another manner of Town than afterward in the time that he writ. The Stone with the Inscription was digged out of the Ruins of old Walls, and placed in the Chapter of the Nunnery there, and contained thus:

His Repair and Building of Cities.

Anno Domini Incarnationis 880.

Ælfredus rex fecit hanc urbem, regni sui 8^o.

5. Of

Of the Cities which he Repaired London is one that is expressly mentioned, of which (beside that which we have already related) we may add, that his Reparation was as good as a new Founding of it, the Danes had so wholly ruined it. Indeed Affer, speaking of Alfred's honourable Restauration of London, saith that he made it habitable; as if that before it were not so; and certain it is, that, till this Reparation, neither in Alfred's Reign, nor yet of a good while before do we find any Mention of other Habitation there, than only that it was become an Hold of Danes, which, because open to the Sea, and far advanced up into the Land, was for their purpose very much to be desired.

6. With like Reparation may we collect, that he Rebuilt Winchester, which, having been the Ancient Court and Seat of the Kings of West Saxons, was in his Brother Aethelbriht's Reign utterly destroyed by the Danes, and was the subject of that Elegy of Hen. Huntington's beginning thus:

Urbs antiqua ruit multos dominata per annos, &c.

As for Aethelred, that, for the Space of six Years succeeded between Aethelbriht and Alfred, he was all that while so hardly laid to by the Danes, as that it was all that he and Alfred could do in those Times to defend themselves against the Fury of them, so as the making it again a fit Seat and Court for a King (as it after was to Alfred) must of necessity be the King's own Act. But what do we making Conjectures of Particulars? when the manner of the Danish wast considered, they, having broke in, possessed and spoiled all, even the Heart and Choicest Part of the Land, we may conclude there was not any Habitation more or less then left unto the Saxons, save only the naked Places, whereon their burned Houses formerly had stood; so as whatsoever their Cities and Towns after were, we may presume they were of their own Repair, in which the King's Travel and Industry (considering how stupid and backward the Saxons of themselves were to every Work) was of no small regard.

157. Edit. ult.] likewise cites this Inscription from Malmesbury; but adds that 'twas wanting in all the MSS. he consulted, but in one of the Lord Burleigh's. He has publish'd the words in a different order from the printed Copies, viz. Anno dominice incarnationis Alfredus rex fecit hanc urbem 880. regni sui 8. We have a MS. in the Bodlejan Library, [Arch. D. 30.] given by the late Mr. Seller, in which this Passage is extant; and the Words of the Inscription are plac'd in the same Order that they are in the printed Copies; but for 800. is corruptly written there 900. and for anno dominice is there read anno enim dominice; as if there were something more belonging to the Inscription.

7. Neither was the Reparation notable in Regard of the Greatness and Universality only, but it was also of an Extraordinary Kind, both in regard of the Materials, and of the new Manner. You shall hear Affer's own words: De civitatibus & urbibus renovandis, & aliis, ubi nunquam ante fuerant, construendis ædificiis, aureis & argenteis, incomparabiliter, illo edocente, fabricatis; de aulis & cambris regalibus, lapideis & ligneis, suo jussu mirabiliter constructis; de villis regalibus lapideis, antiqua positione muratis, & in decentioribus locis regali imperio decentissime constructis. &c. For when the Walls of Towns and Castles were but Wood and combustible, (as we may see by those of York and Rochester, that they generally then were) Stone Buildings were very rare, till Ælfred made them more frequent.

8. What was the Number of Forts and Castles that he ^{Forts and} built is likewise no where extant ^{Castles.} that we find; but where

1 Maxima perturbatione & controversia suorum, qui nullum aut parvum voluntarie pro communi regni necessitate vellent subire laborem, &c. Affer.

2 See in the Original MS. of our Author. But motatis both in Archbishop Parker's Edit. of Affer, (pag. 28.) and in Mr. Camden's. (pag. 17.) Motatis is the true reading as it seems. Consult Sir Hen. Spelman's and Du-Fresne's Gloss. voc. MOTA. Our Author hath also a little above docente for edocente, contrary to the printed Books. Mr. Walker has mutatis for muratis.

3 Notwithstanding there be no express mention in any Author of the Forts and Castles built by him, yet 'tis commonly reported where Affer inveighs so abundantly against the Stupidity of the Saxons, who, though they saw the Use and Benefit of them, yet no Commands nor Perswasions of the King's could make them ply the Erecting of them where he appointed, 'till some miserable Calamity, through their Slackness, did too late excite them to it. There may we discern their Number could not be small, and that from the very End of their Building. For being set for preventing the sudden Inroads of the Danes, (which were on every side of the Land) it both implies that they were chiefly erected about the Sea Coasts and Sides of great Rivers, and also that they were so many as to be sufficient to disappoint the Danes of Landing, or at least of Making any prosperous Incur-sion, which also we see they did effect.

Monasteries. Houses of Religion.

9. The Building of so great and mastering a Navy, as we have spoken of, was a Work truly Royal and Magnificent, as well in regard of the Greatness of it and Number of the Vessels, as of the Goodness and Abithat he was the Founder of Middleton and Balsford in Kens, of the Devises in Wilt, and of Ælfretton in Derbyshire. Malmesbury also was restor'd by him after 'twas destroy'd by the Danes. And I believe too that the City of Norwich was either repair'd after some devasta-tion, or else that it had some Addition made to it, by him. For in one of his Coyns publish'd by the ingenious Sir ANDREW FOUNTAINE, [Tab. I. n. 9.] there is a Monogram, which Mr. Edw. Thwaites, in his Notes upon these Coyns, has ingeniously guess'd to be CIVITAS NORTHVICUM: and I believe 'twas occasion'd by his Benefaction to the Place, unless we rather think with others that it only denotes that 'twas coyn'd here. I know indeed that Mr. Walker and some others, with whom Sir ANDREW seems to agree, are of Opinion that this Coyn belongs to Ælfred King of Northumberland; but what over-throws this Opinion is the Head it self, which does not much differ from the heads of King Ælfred the Great, which Mr. Walker himself has publish'd. Nor indeed was Norwich a Place of any note in the time of Ælfred King of Northumberland, as Mr. Camden has very well observ'd in his Discourse upon that place; not now to insist upon the Wreath, which incircles the Head, and is more agreeable to the times of Ælfred the Great, than those of Ælfred K. of Northumberland: and for that Reason Mr. Selden, in his Titles of Honour, mentions it as his, and places it amongst his other Observations concerning Co-ronation in the Western Parts after the time of Charles the Great. See below in Not. ad § 77. lib. III.

lity

lity of the particular Ships. But because we are not able to speak more of their Particularities, than what we have already done, it shall be sufficient in this Place to have again remembered them only, and forthwith proceed to such other of his Works as any way relate to his Magnificence.

10. The Monasteries that he founded and endowed are properly to be reckoned among his Works of this Nature. Yet that first which he founded at Æthelinge will seem but little to contribute to them: and, to say the Truth, it was a Work greater indeed in the Devotion from whence it proceeded, than in the Magnificence of the Structure.

11. The River-Island Athelney ¹ in Somerset-shire, Æthelinge which is inclosed between the Thone and the Parret, ^{sey.} and which (for the greatest Part) was anciently nothing but a vast Fen and Alderkarre, having afforded the King (as it is already said) a commodious Place of Refuge, in the time of his Distress, grew of that Note here, that the Minturnian Fens in Italy were not more famous for Marius his Lurking in them, than these were for having been the King's Hiding-Place, inso-much that loosing the Name Athelney it came to be called Æthelinge ², that is to say the Island of Nobles, through the frequent Resort and Residence of Noble-Men there with the King. In this Island was one only Piece of very firm Ground, not much above the Quantity of two Acres at that time, compassed with Waters and rotten Moor, so that it scarcely admitted any Access. The King upon this Place built a Castle, and made it a very strong Hold, and forcing ³ a Way unto it by a Bridge or Cawsey, for Guard of the way he built on either side a Tower, whereby he commanded the Way,

¹ 'Tis call'd Mechelingeia in a MS. that I have seen in the Bodlejan Library, call'd Brutus, inter Codd. Digb. 11. f. 157. a. Corruptly perhaps, for in Ethelingeia. Others write it Adelingeia.

² But Edeyngesgate, in a Catalogue of the Founders of divers ancient Churches in England, MS. Digb. 196. And so likewise in another Copy of the same Catalogue MS. NE. E. 2. 17.

³ Asser.
and

and made himself a commodious and secure Receptacle. Afterward, having with ¹ better Success made use of his Hiding-Place than Marius did of his, in grateful Acknowledgment of the Mercy and Benefit he had there received, he, at the Return of his Fortune, Dedicated both the Castle and the whole Island with it to the Honour and Service of his Preserver, to be henceforth the Seat of a Monastery, which he soon after ² built.

12. This Monastery, according to the Scantness of the Place, and Want of Means of Building, (for it was his first) while yet he had neither Workmen, nor had found the Use of any Extraordinary Materials, was both little and all of Wood; and yet there wanted not particular Curiosity to set it forth. For the Church (whether to avoid the Inconvenience of Raftiness in so fenny a Place, or for some other End which we cannot conjecture now) was all wholly born up upon four main Wooden Pillars, and was inclosed round about with ³ Cancellings or Chancel-Work, they having not then the Use of Glass, nor other means to shut out the Violence of Weather, and yet let in sufficient Light, than by fine open Work, Carvings, and Lattices of Window-Work, of which (to express the Curiosity) Malmesbury saith that they were carved opere Sphærico.

13. This being speedily finished in Performance of a Vow, gives some Touch of the King's Care and Diligence in Holy Matters, as also of His Industry in Supplying those Things whereof there was then so much

¹ Terra Monasteriolum & officinas Monachorum habet. Malm. de Gest. Pont. lib. II.

² From the Charter in the Monasticon and Reyner 'tis evident that here was a Monastery before, and that 'twas only rebuilt or enlarg'd by Ælfred.

³ Ælfredus fecit (saith Will. of Malmsb.) Ecclesiam suam quidem pro angustia spatii modicam, sed novo ædificandi modo compactam. Quatuor enim postes solo infixi totam suspendunt machinam: quatuor cancellis opere spherico in circuitu ductis. Which our Author (as Mr. Walker observes) does not rightly understand. For we read nothing here of Window or carved Work: but 'tis said that there were four Cancells, Choirs, or Chapells, surrounding the Area or Auditorie of the Church.

Defect. But having perfected it, he was at so great a Plunge to get religious Persons to fill it, as that though he sought abroad and got him an Abbot out of Old Saxony, and divers Monks out of France, yet was he forced to fill up his Number with some that were but very Youths, he affecting such, rather than elder Men, that were altogether void of Literature, and hopeless of any good Improvement.

14. The next Religious House that he founded was a Nunnery, or Monastery of Nuns, in his New City of Shaftsbury, at the East-Gate thereof. This he stored with Nuns, most of whom were the Daughters of Noblemen; and over them he made his own Daughter Aethelgeof the first Abbess. These two Religious Houses he so well endowed, as that though it appeareth not how many Persons were of the Foundation, yet were not their Revenues less than the full eight Parts of his own yearly Revenues², which he assigned to their particular Maintenance. Afterward he also built³ a Religious House of Nuns in Winchester.

15. The last of his Works of this Kind was the Monastery which he founded in Winchester called the New-Monastery. This (though we find little concerning it, yet) being founded in the Principal City of West-Saxony, where his Seat and Court was, after his Affairs settled, and for the Burying Place of himself and Successors as it seems to have been intended, we cannot with likelyhood judge but that it was the greatest Foundation of the Four. But being a Work that he set upon but a little before his Death, it was so far from being finished in his Life Time, as that Malmf-

¹ In Mr. Leland's MS. Collections Vol. II. f. 219. a. we are told that Elfgina Wife to Edmund, Great-Grandson of Alfred, was foundress of this Nunnery; upon which Mr. Leland himself remarks in the Margin that she might enlarge or repair it, but that 'twas first built by K. Alfred.

² Malmf.

³ The Annals of Winchelcumb [in Bibl. Cotton] and Roger Hoveden [fol. 281. b. n. 50.] say that his Wife Elswith was Foundress: And so Leland also, [Collect. Vol. I. p. 337.] only with this Addition, That neither Alfred nor Elswith could finish it before their Death.

bury counts it rather designed by him than built. Yet the Foundation of the Church and chief Parts of the Monastery were laid; but there wanted Room for some of the Offices, and Grimbold (who was the first that set the King upon that Work) was designed the first Abbot of it. It was placed so near the Cathedral Church of Winchester, that the Singing Men in the Quire of the one were easily heard into the Quire of the other, and gave Occasion of many Differences about it. The Place being as we said straight and hard to be enlarged, the King² was fain to pay the Bishop a Mark of Gold for every Foot of Land, which he was forced to buy that he might have Commodity sufficient for the Shops or Work Houses for his Monks Offices belonging to the Monastery.

16. It appeareth by *Speed's*³ Table of Collection of Monasteries (with the Dedication, Founders, and Values of them) that the Monastery of Hyde in Hampshire was also of Alfred's Foundation, though built and perfected by his Son Edward the Elder. This is true, but thus to be understood: the Inconveniencies that followed the first Foundation of Winchester Abbey within the City caused Edward his Son to change the Seat of it, and to build it without the Gates, to which he translated the first Materials and Endowments, and this (it seems) is that Abbey of Hyde, of which Alfred is said to have been the Founder.

The King
an Universal Benefactor.

17. These are the Religious Houses of which he was the sole Founder; but if we should reckon all⁴ to which he

1 Yet in one of Sir Ken. Digby's MSS. [num. II. f. 157. a.] 'tis positively said he founded this Monastery, and endowed it with large Revenues.

2 Ad hujus Monast. officinas instituendas. Cumden's Annales. Ad unumquemque pedem marcæ auri publico pondere pensitavit. Mabn. de Gest. Pont. lib. II.

3 Mr. Speed was not the Author of this Collection, but Mr. Burton, the Leycestershire Antiquary, as appears from Sir Hen. Spelman's Councils Tom. I. p. 215. and Mr. TANNER's Pref. to his Notitia Monast.

4 Amongst the MSS. of Sir Ken. Digby's in the Bodlejan Library there is one [num. CLXVIII.] containing several Matters relating to
English

he was a Benefactor, we must upon the matter reckon all that were then extant in this Part of Christendom, and in no small Proportion neither. For having (as we shall shew anon) given the one Half of his Yearly Revenue to God, and so distributed it in Parts, that one Fourth thereof should be allotted for constant Revenues to the two foresaid Monasteries of Ætbelingey and Shaftsbury, he gave another Fourth part to the Relief chiefly of the Monasteries of West-Saxony and Mercia, but in the second Place to all the Monasteries in England, Wales, Ireland, and France, by turns, and as the more pressing need of any of them required.

18. His Endowment of the Bishoprick of Durham, with the Gift of all the Country betwixt Tine and Tise, we have already mentioned. And the Cathedral Church of Sbirborn had¹ in Malmesbury's Time some of the precious Stones that were brought Ælfred upon Return of the Voyage set forth by him unto the Indies, with which it seems that that Church among others was presented. It seemeth also That Ælfred was a great Benefactor to the Abbey of Glastenbury. For Hen. II. in his Charter of Confirmation unto that Church, among other Grants² of his Predecessors³, reckons also the English History, wherein 'tis said, Ælfredus plurima monasteria construxit, that King Ælfred built a great many Monasteries: which is confirm'd likewise by Rob. of Glocester, MS. Digb. 205. f. 74. b. where he says, Wabbeyys he rared many on: in many stredeys I wis. And indeed 'tis certain he did contribute to all the most considerable Churches and Religious Houses in England. But what is said, in a Transcript of Mr. Somner, [Antiquities of Cantab. pag. 215.] Anno DCCCXLIX. Heth [one MS. calls it Etheredsbith] dat' fuit per Ælfredum Regem Plegmundo Archiepiscopo, & successoribus suis ad opus Ecclesie & Monachorum, ought to be corrected: for immediately before 'tis said Wesingmerhs was given by Plegmund in the year DCCCXCV. Perhaps therefore it should be DCCCXCIV.

¹ Malmsh. de Gest. Pont. lib. II.

² He is also reckon'd amongst the Benefactors to this Abbey in a MS. which I have seen in the Bodlejan Library. [Compendium Chronologicum in quo Glastoniensis fragmenta quedam Historica. Land. MSS. D. CXLV.]

³ Nich. Harpesfeld, fol. 3. cap. 2.

Charters of King Alfred. And he is likewise Registered the first of the Benefactors to the Abbey of Wilton.

19.) There is yet extant the Copy of a Charter² of Grant of King Alfred's unto the Church of Worcester in London, upon this Occasion: Albune, Bishop of Worcester, had Bought of Burrhed, (then King of Mercia) and of Ceolmund, Prefect of London, a certain Portion of the Customs of the Port there with the Liberty of a Bushel and Weights and Measures belonging. Alfred coming after to be Lord of the City granted freely to the Church of Worcester a certain Space of Ground, extending from the great Street (which then was next the Wharf) unto the Walls of the City, and contained 26 Perches in Length, and 13 Perches and 7 Foot in Breadth, free and discharged of all Publick Duties, together with the Liberty of a Bushel and Scales within that Precinct, and all Forfeitures and Duties thereof coming to the Benefit of the Church of Worcester. The Tenor of the Charter (according to the Imperfect Copy) is as followeth:

An. D. 889.
Privilegi-um Alfre- di alias A- luredi Magni Regis Anglorum de urna & trutina Ecclesiæ Wi- gornensi in Lundonia
concessum.

Ego Alfred, Rex Anglorum, pro salute animarum nostrarum, vel³ Adelred, subregulus & patricius Merciorum, ad Ecclesiam Weogernensem in Lundonia unam curtem, quæ verbo tenus ad antiquum petrosum ædificium⁴ i. e. aet hwæt munstane à civibus appellatur, à strata publica usque in murum civitatis, cujus longitudo perticanorum 26. latitudo perticanorum 13. & pedum 7. donamus. Et intro urnam⁵ & trutinam ad mensurandum in emendo seu vendendo ad usum sive ad necessitatem Christianam, & liberum omnimodis habeat,

¹ First built by St. Alboung, Sister to King Egbert, for one Abbeys and 12 Nuns; but King Alfred encreas'd them to 26, being excited to this piece of Piety after his Defeat of the Danes at Washforne near Wilton, [Leland's Coll. Vol. II. pag. 195.] tho' Mr. Hen. Crompe has assign'd another Reason. [See Mon. Ang. Tom. II. p. 857.]

² See also Monast. Angl. Tom. I. p. 139. and Mat. Paris. p. 21. who calls Alfred and Edm. Conf. the Founders of it.

³ Aethelred in Edit. Walkeri. ⁴ i. e. athuæt Munstana in Ed. Walkeri. ⁵ Et deest in Ed. Walkeri.

& totius debiti & panis fiscalis vel pub. rei nisi ad domum Episcopi ¹ Weogrnensium. Quæ intus contingat absoluta persistat; si autem forisfactio in strata publica vel in ripa emptorali quislibet mercayerit, juxta rectum thelonum ad manum regis subeat, si vero in curte prædicta ad manum Episcopi. Si quis hanc donationem &c.

Ego ² Ældred Rex Anglorum & Saxonum.

Ego ³ Æthelred subregulus & patricius Merciorum.

⁴ Æthelstæd. (This was Ælfred's Daughter and Æthelred's Wife.)

Wulfred Episcopus.

Albarde Episcopus.

⁵ Parfrith Episcopus.

Denerwulf Episcopus.

Wulfsig Episcopus.

20. Next unto these are we to reckon the Schools which the King founded. And amongst them the University of Oxford, than which of all the Works of his Magnificence there was not any of greater Note, and Consequence, as well for the important Benefit thereby brought unto the Nation, as also for the ample and exact Institution, beyond the Use and Example of any whatsoever formerly in Being.

The Founding of the University of Oxford denied.

21. But when I should come to shew what this was, I meet with an Obstacle that puts me almost beside my Purpose of instancing in that Particular. For that Ælfred was the first Founder of the University of Oxford, is a Matter controverted, denied, disclaimed by the University her self, (as I understand it) and (by the Apology for her Antiquity) determined to the contrary. And yet seeing it falls so directly cross my Argument, I shall crave leave of all that are opposite in Opinion, that, for the better doing right unto the Honour of a Prince so well deserving of all, and particularly of those of Oxford, I may for this once, without Censure of Pertinacity, briefly draw the Question to a new Examination.

¹ Weogrnensium in Edit. Walkeri. ² Sic in Exemplari Spelmaniano. Lege Ælfred, ut edidit Walkerus. ³ Athred in Ed. Walkeri. ⁴ Athelstæd in Ed. Walkeri. ⁵ Parfrith in Ed. Walkeri.

The Controversy examined.

22. I will not (like a good Pleader) save to my self the Advantage of all the Errors and Insufficiencies that are in the Arguments against me: for I do not undertake the Parties opposing, but only assay how well I can make any Discovery of the truth. I have often found Ælfred stiled First Founder of the University of Oxford, and I am so much engaged to the Subject I have undertaken, as not to swallow without Examining a Construction so much differing as First Founder and Restorer are. Wherefore, as briefly as I may, I will examin in which of the two Titles I shall speak him.

23. It is pretended, That the University of Oxford was an Academy of Letters before our Ælfred's Time, yea before the Saxons Coming over, even in the Time of the Ancient Britains. And this Pretence is fortified with many Arguments, which are at large to be seen in the Apology for the Antiquity of the University. The best of which are grounded upon Authorities that clearly receive their greatest Approbation and Credit from certain Passages in Mr. Camden. As for Leland and Jo. Ross (who are also cited in the Apology) they have scarcely any Thing of moment to this Purpose, which (if the Passages in Mr. Camden be taken away) will not fall together with them.

24. Mr. Camden, in his Britannia, though well affected to promote the Pretence of the University his Foster-Mother, yet coming to speak of Oxford, he warily, according to his constant Gravity, and in general Terms only delivers himself to this purpose: Prudent Antiquity, as we may read in our Annals, hath even in the Time of the Britains consecrated Oxford to the Muses, whom they brought from Greece hither as to a more happy Nursery.

25. Mr. Camden here Vouches our Annals, but in particular quoteth none: and as we can less question an Authority which we know not, so if he had gone no further we had perhaps without Examination received his Testimony upon his own Credit. But when in the Title Wiltshire he comes to speak of Grecklade, and to vouch the Story of Oxford for Schools at Grecklade that should be translated to Oxford, he then discovering his Authority makes his Testimony subject to the Fate and Credit of that Story. Now the Story of Oxford (as the ¹ Apology delivers it, for I have not seen it my self) mentions indeed the Foundation of Oxford to be recorded in Ancient British Stories: but then not mentioning any Thing in particular that should be delivered in them, it of it self goes on to this purpose: It is reported that certain Greek Philosophers being with Brute and his Trojans, when they triumphantly entered into England, chose them a place of convenient Habitation, to which in Remembrance of themselves they left the name of Grecklade. A quo quidem loco non longe municipium Oxon. noscitur esse situm, quod, propter amœnitatem, Bellositum olim antiquitas, postmodum Oxenfordia, à quodam vado vicino sic dictum, populus Saxonicus nominavit, & ad locum studii præelegit.

26. Truly what some Annals that I have not seen may do, I cannot say, but Oxford Story affirms no such Thing as Schools at Grecklade, neither yet Residence of Philosophers there (otherwise than by Report.) And if it had expressly affirmed it, yet had it not gone so far to derive the Antiquity of the University high enough, but it had come as far short in Bringing it home to Oxford in the Britains time. For if it were granted there were once Schools at Grecklade, and if it were again granted that those Schools were translated from thence to Oxford, yet by their own Story it was not translated thither by the Britains, nor the Name given by them: but populus Saxonicus nominavit, & in locum Studii præelegit; the Saxons named it, and the Saxons preferred it for the Place of an University. And it will be Work enough for a new Apology to shew any such

1 Apolog. lib. II. sec. 1. 2 Cam. Wiltsh. 176.

Thing done at Oxford by any Saxon King, or other Saxon whatsoever before Ælfred's Time.

27. The Oxford Story (wee see) hath mainly failed even in the Thing for which I fear the Pretenders have no other Authority; neither has it been so happy as to be furnished in other Circumstances, which were requisite for winning of Credit with those that shall hear it. For though the Author pretends to have seen very ancient British Stories of the Foundation thereof, yet it has not (that I hear) done the Founder so much right as to discover his Name, nor done the University so much Honour as to tell what was the British Name whereby it was known in the Time of the Britains; neither have the Romans taken Notice of any University there while they had to do with the Britains; neither yet is there so much as a British Name whereby the Town was known in the Time of the Britains: for as for Caer-Wember and Caer-Vortigern, Mr. Camden himself flighteth them; and for Rhidy-chen it appears not that ever it was the Name of the Town, but a late Welsh render of the Saxon Name Oxford, as Mr. Camden himself also sheweth in these words: Britannis nostris hodie Rhidy-chen nominatur. So likewise is Beaumont a late Norman Name, and but of a particular Place in or near Oxford, and Bellofitum a Latin Render or Allusion to it.

28. With the like or greater Infelicity was the Error committed in the Fiction of the Greek Philosophers seating of themselves at Crocklade in Wiltshire. The Contriver wanted Judgment to think how ridiculous it would prove to suppose Greek Philosophers to forsake their own Country and the Society of their Victorious Country-Men; and to come over with Brute and his Trojan Fugitives before the Time that Learning flourished in Greece, and at their first Entrance into this Land, while it was nothing yet but desert Woods and Wilderness, and all that they could do little enough to find them means to live, should at the first dash fall upon the Founding of an University, and then passing over their own Language, and the British (which was the Language next ensuing) to give the Place a Name significant only in the Saxon Tongue, which was not then here spoken. But Jo. Ross sets forward the Absurdity, when he does not only second this, but taking notice (it seems) that Lech signifies a Physitian, a dead Body, or a Carcass, (as in the Saxon Tongue it doth,) he adds, that there were Physitians among the Philosophers, and they also choose them a Place which was not far distant, and that Place was from them called Lechlade: with what likelyhood any one may judge, when the Names (both Crecklade and Lechlade) are of Saxon Signification, and the Towns standing each upon some Creek or Outlade to the River were severally called the one Crecklade, that is, the Outlade, or Ladeing Place at the Creek, and the other Lechlade, that is, the Ladeing Place, Sewer, or Out-lade at the Carcasses.

1 Nonnulli hanc Caer-Vortigern, & Caer-Wember, Britannice appellatam, & nescio quos Vortigernos, & Mempricios extruxisse opinantur. Camb. Tit. Oxfordsb. 267.

29. But if Grecklade should be admitted to have been a Seat of Letters, you shall hear how Ross and Leland (in the Apology) bring it to Oxford. Ross says there is a large Plain, close to the Walls of Oxford, which is called Bellomont, (or Beaumont,) and because this comes near to one of the old Names of the Town, that is to say, Bellefitum, therefore many think (saith Ross) that the University of Grecklade was translated to Bellamont, or Bellefite. And Leland, speaking of Grecklade Schools, says that the Teachers at Grecklade loci amœnitate ducti Calevam transtulerunt, they brought the Schools to Caleva; and that Mr. Camden understands to Wallingford; so unless one could prove Caleva to be Oxford, neither of these Authors affirms that there were Schools brought from Grecklade or Crecklade to Oxford.

30. Mr. Camden having (as we said) delivered this prudent Antiquity had in the Britains time consecrated

Lading Place at the Carcasses, Oxford

Oxford to the Muses, he proves it thus. Scribit enim Alex. Necham (saith he:) juxta vaticinium etiam Merlini vixit ad vada boum sapientia, tempore suo ad Hiberniae partes transitura.

31. Mr. Camden (we must observe) cites Necham, and not Merlin. And if we take no more than the words that are cited, they make no Proof of that which Mr. Camden alleges. For admit Merlin prophesied that Wisdom should flourish at the Ford of Oxen, and let Necham be a Witness that, according to the Prophecy of Merlin, Wisdom had already flourished there; both those may be true, and yet Wisdom might never flourish there till Alfred planted it. But if you will say that though it appeareth not by the Words cited out of Necham, yet Merlin's Prophecy affirms that Wisdom flourished at the Ford of Oxen, in the Britains time, and that Necham's Words must so be understood, truly they that say so must produce a Prophecy of Merlin's to that purpose. For in his Prophecy now extant, I can find no such thing. And that credibly no Prophecy of Merlin's can contain any such Matter, we know that Merlin prophesied in the End of the Britains Reign in the time of Vortigern, (the King that called the Saxons into England;) and then we are sure that if Merlin any where mentions any Flourishing of Wisdom at Oxford, if it were in the Britains time, Merlin could not speak it by way of Prophecy, (as Necham cites him) but by way of History. And if they will have the Thing spoken to have been by way of Prophecy, then must it be prophesied for the Saxons Time, which presently followed. And then Mr. Camden cannot maintain his Assertion by that which he hath here cited out of Necham.

32. Mr. Camden proceeds and tells us, that because of the frequent Destruction of Cities, that followed in the Saxons time, Oxford was along time famous for Nothing but St. Frideswid's Reliques, but then, after the Storm of the Danish Fury was allayed, Alfred restored to the banished Muses their own seat again, (meaning Oxford;) for better understanding of which, he

he relates a Part of the old Annals of Winchester, in these words: Anno Dominicæ incarnat. 1 MCCCVI. anno 2^{do}. adventus Sancti Grimaldi in Angliam, incepta est Univerſitas Oxoniæ, primitus in eadem regentibus &c. Truly I ſhould have thought that this had been a proof of the firſt Founding rather than Reſtoring of the Univerſity, but that Mr. Camden underſtands it otherwiſe, and backs his Conſtruction with a manifeſt Evidence to the contrary.

33. Soon after, (ſaith Mr. Camden) ut legitur in optimo MS. illius Aſſerii exemplari, (the Contents ² of which he ſets down verbatim) there followed ſuch a Diſſention between Grimbald and the Scholars, that came with him, of the one Part, and the old Scholars, that were found there at their Coming on the other Part, for that the old Scholars would not obſerve Grimbald's Form of Reading, but ſtood for the ancient Form there inſtituted by Gildas, Melkin, Ninius, Kentigern, and others, that Ælfred himſelf was fain to come in perſon to Oxford, to decide the Controverſy: who hearing patiently both Parties, exhorted them to Peace and Concord, and ſo returned. But Grimbald taking theſe things ill, left Oxford, and went to Wincheſter, to the new Monastery which Ælfred had built there, and cauſed his Tomb which he had lately prepared at Oxford ³ to be removed from thence to Wincheſter.

34. This I confeſs ⁴ is a ſhrewd Piece of Evidence, and I cannot blame the Author of the Apology, that he took

¹ This miſtake is corrected thus, anno DCCCLXXXVI.

² See the Clause in Aſſ. Menev. ſet forth by Mr. Camden in his Anglica, Normannica, &c.

³ In St. Peter's Church in the Eaſt, under the Chancell: which Church was built by St. Grimbald.

⁴ Since the moſt induſtrious Mr. Ant. à Wood has ſo clearly vindicated the Antiquity of Oxford, and the Camabrigians have not vouchſaf'd to give an Answer as yet to one Argument alledg'd by him, I think it an unneceſſary Trouble to conſider particularly all the Objections of our Author (being no other than what Mr. Twyne had taken notice of before) and ſhall therefore at preſent only ſhew in ſhort, firſt, that Mr. Camden exactly follow'd the MS. he made uſe of in his Edition of Aſer. 2dly, That granting King Ælfred were the First Founder of the Univerſity of Oxford, yet Cambridge is of a later Date by ſome Hundreds of Years. First, That Mr. Camden ought not to be ſuſpected of Unfaithfulneſs in his Edition of Aſer, will appear to any one, who does but reflect upon the univerſal Character he had eſtabliſh'd in the World of being, not only a Pro- found Scholar, but a very Honelt and Religious Man. But how- ever Mr. Twyne, being not throughly ſatisfy'd with this, in the year MDCXXII took a Journey on purpoſe to London to diſcourſe with Mr. Camden about this Particular, who, after ſeveral Things had paſſ'd between them, at laſt proteſted to him that he had not vary'd at all from the MS. which he appeal'd to, being then in the Hands of Mr. Hen. Savile of Bank, near Halifax in Yorkſhire, and which he gueſs'd was written in the Reign of Richard II. Mr. Twyne put down the whole Story in Writing, which may be ſeen amongſt his Papers in Corpus-Chriſti-Coll. Library at Oxford. Now the Archbiſhop Parker affirm'd his MS. (which was not in Bennet-Col. Library, as Sir John aſſerts, I ſuppoſe from the Preface of the Archbiſhop to Aſer, but either in the Lord Lumley's or Sir Rob. Cotton's) to be much more Ancient than this; yet there are ſome Circumſtances, which ſhew that 'twas written much about the ſame Age, eſpecially the Verſes in it compos'd by Hen. Huntington, who flouriſh'd after the year MCL, and the Conclusion which gives an Account of Aſer. And as we have no reaſon to ſuſpect Mr. Camden's Honeltty upon this Account, ſo 'tis certain that the Vault mention'd in the Clause is now to be ſeen in St. Peter's Church in the Eaſt, Oxford; and there is a Paſſage in Will. Malmsbury which agrees exactly with this, that there was an Univerſity before the Time of King Ælfred at Oxford, and that he call'd Grimbald over to aſſiſt him in the Reſtoring of it. Monafterium, ſays he, [De Geſtis Regum Angl. lib. II. c. 4. p. 44.] (quod novum dictum) Wintoniæ conſtruxit Ælfredus, ubi Grimbaldum abbatem conſtituit; qui, ſe evocante, & archiepiſcopo Rhemenſi Fulcone mittente, Angliam venerat; cognitus, quod ſe puerum olim (ut ferunt) Romam euntem benigno hoſpitio conſerverat. Cauſa evocationis, ut literaturæ ſtudium in Anglia ſopitum, & pene emortuum ſua ſuſciaret induſtria. Where by the word ſtudium muſt be underſtood an Univerſity, the name of Univerſitas for a General Study being not us'd 'till ſome time after. As to the Incoherence in Chronology which our Author takes notice of, I have already obſerv'd that the Monks were bad Chronologers, to which I ſhall add nothing more, only that Aſer is guilty in ſome other Places of the like Inconſiſtence, which nevertheleſs are not call'd in queſtion by any that I know of. But Secondly, Granting that King Ælfred were the fiſt Founder of the Univerſity of Oxford, yet the Univerſity of Cambridge is of a later Date by ſome Hundreds of Years. For fiſt, Sigebert King of the East-Angles was not the Founder of that Univerſity, as the Cantabrigians aſſert, for which (notwithſtanding they are favour'd by G. J. Voſſius, Ep. p. 15.) they have no other Ground than what Bede delivers in his Account of Sigebert, viz. Sigebertus, ea, quæ in Galliis bene diſpoſita vidit, imi- tari cupiens, instituit scholam, in qua pueri literis erudirentur; iuvante se Episcopo Felice, quem de Cantua acceperat, eisque pedagogos ac magistros, juxta morem Cantuariorum, præbente. By which words 'tis certain we must understand no more than that he built a Grammar-School for Boys. For otherwise he would have been far from imitating what he had seen in France, where 'tis plain there was no Univerſity at that time from this Passage of St. Jerom, [Epist. ad Rusticum:] Audio (saith he) religiosam te habere matrem, multorum annorum viduam; quæ aluit, quæ erudit infantem; ac post studia Galliarum, quæ vel florentissima sunt, misit Romam, non parcens sumptibus, & absentiam filii spe sustinens futurorum, ut ubertatem Gallici nitoremque sermonis gravitas Romana condiret, &c. For if there had been then any Univerſity in France, why should Rusticus go to Rome to be instructed in Academical Learning? Is it at all likely that he would have undertaken a rough and tedious Journey over the Alps, for obtaining that which he might with so much Ease have receiv'd at home, if there had been any Univerſity in this Country at that time? But there is no need of dwelling any longer upon this, since every one, who is but meanly skill'd in the French History, very well knows, that the first Univerſity was founded in France at the Capital City of Paris by Charles the Great about the Year 791. Yet before I leave this Point, I cannot but take notice that this Passage of Bede is clearly made out against the Cantabrigians from some Collections out of an antient MS. (de episcopis Dunmoo) in the first Vol. of Mr. Leland's Coll. (f. 475. a.) in which we are told that Felix, the Apostle and Bishop of the East-Angles, did in the Reign of Sigebert set up Schools for teaching Letters (i. e. Grammar) in convenient Places: Scholæ literarum opportunis locis constituit, without the least mention of Cambridge. The word Scholæ there said to be fix'd not in one but several Places is a true Explication of Bede, unless we will absurdly suppose that Sigebert founded several Univerſities. And some Copies of Bede have Scholæ for Scholam. [See Mr. Selden's Notes upon Drayton's Polybion, pag. 191.] I have consulted nine or ten MSS. of Bede in the Bodlejan Library, but find no Variation in that Place, only in the Margin of the MS. in Museo num. 47. there is put Grantebrig schola à Sigeberto fundata: but that was added by a very late hand, I think by some Cantabrigian after the Dispute about the Antiquity of the Univerſities began: And in MS. Hatton. 18. written about six hundred Years ago is this Note put by a Hand of much the same Age, viz. Sigebertus primus instituit scholas in quibus pueri erudirentur, which shews that 'twas the Sense of that time that we must understand Bede of Grammar-Schools. Secondly, As this Place of Bede makes altogether against the Cantabrigians, so we have no authentick Testimony of an Univerſity there 'till the Year MCIX. after Christ, (Xth Hen. I.) when Joffrid, Abbot of Croyland, sent over to his Mannor of Cottenham [Pet. Blessensis Contin. Hist. Ingulphi, in rer. Angl. Scriptor. Vol. I. Oxon. edit. p. 114.] nigh Cambridge, Gislebert his Fellow-Monk, and Professor of Divinity, with three other Monks, who had followed him into England, who being thoroughly furnish'd with Philosophical took it so much to heart that Arch-Bishop Parker should omit the inserting of it in Affer's Story of Ælfred, which he set forth; yet I wish he had forbore to make a question whether that Reverend Prelate, and good Promoter of Letters, had left out this Passage 'veritatis, an charitatis odio: and the rather, because Mr. Camden himself in Reprinting Affer, sets forth the Arch-Bishop Parker's Epistle, that precedeth the Edition first by him set forth, in which the Arch-Bishop makes a religious Profession that in all the Books which he published, he followed the Original to a very word, without adding or diminishing; and in perpetual Testimony of his Integrity therein, sent the Originals themselves, to be kept in Bennet-College Library in Cambridge. Mr. Camden also in his Epistle preceding Affer, and this Epistle of the Arch-Bishop's, complains of no Omission in the Arch-Bishop's Edition, but maketh an Honourable Mention of him, and shews, that when he had saved many Manuscripts from perishing, which he caused to be kept in Bennet-College Library, he published four, viz. Matth. Westminster, Matth. Paris his Greater History, Affer and Walsingham, which (saith Mr. Camden) because cal Theorems, and other antient Sciences, repaired daily to Cambridge, and having hired a certain BARN, made open Profession of them, and in a short Space drew together a Company of Scholars; but in the second Year of their Coming their Number grew so great, as well from out of the whole Country, as the Town, that neither the biggest House, Barn, or Church was able to contain them: whereupon these Monks, dividing themselves into several Places, and taking the University of Orleanse for their Pattern, read to their Scholars apart in several Companies. This Testimony (which however some absurdly interpret of the restoring of it, [See James's MSS. Coll. Vol. 18. pag. 84.]) is so plain for the Original of that University from an unexceptionable Author, who liv'd at that time, that I wonder why the Cantabrigians should pretend to ascend higher, it being so very clear that at the Arrival of these Monks there was no School for Reception of Scholars, not to insist upon the Catalogue of their Writers, which commenceth much about this time, unless we will allow that Bede and Aleuine were of this University, which we cannot do, when we know Mr. Wood has prov'd that they were of Oxford from such Authority as must not be deny'd.

I Apol. lib. II. sec. 80.

the

the Copies of them are now grown scarce, Claudius Marnius (the Printer that printed those his Anglica Normannica &c. at Francfurt) does now publish from his Prefs.

35. By thus doing Mr. Camden seems to acknowledg the Truth of what the Arch-Bishop alledgeth. And howsoever Mr. Camden in his Annals speaks of a MS. Copy of Aſſer, containing the late mentioned Paſſage in it, yet (as if he ſet forth his Edition by one of the Arch-Biſhop's Printed Copies onely) he makes no mention of any other Copy than that of the Arch-Biſhop's Edition: before his own Edition he places the Arch-Biſhop's Preface: and his Printer excuſes the not publiſhing of Aſſer in Saxon Letters (as the Arch-Biſhop's Edition was) becauſe he was not provided of Saxon Forms. And yet when upon all theſe Circumſtances we ſhould expect no other, than the Reprinting of the Arch-Biſhop's Edition, (the Copies of which Mr. Camden ſaith were grown ſo ſcarce) Mr. Camden's Aſſer comes forth of a different Edition, with divers Clauſes not contained in the Arch-Biſhop's Copy, and in particular with this Clauſe of the Diſcord at Oxford: and yet not a Word of any Omiſſion, Supply, or Difference of Copies. So as one muſt think that either ſome Faliſier has gone between Mr. Camden and his Francfurt Printer, and of his own Head inserted the queſtioned Clauſe, becauſe he found it in his Britannia aſcribed to Aſſer: or elſe that Mr. Camden muſt have failed very much in omitting that which was ſo requiſite he ſhould have done.

36. On the other ſide we muſt acknowledg the Arch-Biſhop has dealt candidly and beyond all Exception: And howsoever Mr. Camden's Authority in Letters be deſervedly great, yet in a queſtion of Matter of Fact, viz. whether the Arch-Biſhop's Impreſſion were according to the MS. Copy or not? the Credit muſt reſt on the Arch-Biſhop's ſide, both for the great difference of Quality between him and Mr. Camden, and alſo for their different Carriage in the Matter.

37. But that which will clearly acquit the Arch-Bishop from the false Imputation of the Apologist, and somewhat impair the Credit of the Clause inserted into Mr. Camden's Edition; I (by the Procurement of the most Reverend and most Learned Patron of Letters James Lord Arch-Bishop of Armagh, and Primate of Ireland) have seen an ancient Manuscript Affer. Men. conceived by some to be the very Original, by which the Arch-Bishop first published that Author: and probably enough both for the Affinity the Character has with the Saxon Letters, and also for the Lines and Marks of red Oaker, with which the Arch-Bishop was wont to note the Manuscripts that he perused. In this Manuscript there were the Clauses, which in Mr. Camden's Edition do immediatly precede and follow the Clause of the Discord, and they are both in that Part of the Book, which is of the Ancienter and most undoubted Hand, whereas other Parts are of a later Hand and seem supply'd. But I find not in this MS. the Clause of the Discord, nor any Word of the Matters therein contained, nor any thing at all otherwise than as the Arch-Bishop has published. And though in Trinity-College in Cambridge I find an antient MS. Annals of the Emperors and Saxon Kings Actions in England from Cæsar to Edward the Elder's time, the Author of which to punctually follows Affer Menevensis, as that he relates divers Passages of K. Ælfred's time in the words of Affer Men. not omitting nor changing his words of personal Relation, viz. Domino meo: Audivi: Audivimus, &c. yet in all that he says of Ælfred I find no mention of the Discord at Oxford, nor of the Building of Winchester Monastery, or any thing contained in the questioned Clause. So that now the Arch-Bishop's Edition being justified by Manuscripts agreeing with it, it rests that the Clause of Discord in the Frankfurt Edition be also justified by Discovery of some MS. warranting it: or else the Suspect of varying from the Original, formerly imputed to the Arch-Bishop's Affer, will fall upon the Frankfurt Edition.

38. But because we cannot tell whether we shall ever find such a Manuscript, therefore turning to the Consideration of the Matter it self, contained in the Clause in question, it is not a little to be wondered that Affer should write a Passage so much to his own Imputation, as to make himself take notice of Ælfred's Building of a Monastery at Winchester, and yet when to do Ælfred Honour he takes upon him to relate his Works of Piety and Devotion, he does it only in these words: inter cetera diuturna & nocturna bona, quibus assidue & maxime studebat, duo construere imperavit monasteria; unum monachorum, in loco qui dicitur Athelinge &c. aliud quoque monasterium juxta orientalem portam Sheftesburg, &c. He built two Monasteries (saith he) one for Monks at Æthelinge, and another for Nuns at Shaftesbury, and never remembers himself of the Monastery of Winchester at all, till accidentally, while he is telling of another Matter, he bolts it out as it were at unawares. Shall I tell you what may be the Cause that Affer spake nothing of Winchester Abbey in the first Place? (For I would gladly discharge him of the Guilt of such an Omission) the truth is he lived not to see the Foundation of it, not by divers years. For (as we have shewn) the Founding of Winchester New-Abbey, was the last of the King's Works of that Kind, even about the time of his Death. And Affer (as appeareth by Malmsbury and Savil) died long before Affer's Death. Sigellinus (who succeeded Affer in the Bishoprick of Sbirburn) was by Ælfred sent to St. Thomas in the Indies, and thence returned also before Ælfred's Death. So as Affer might much better have written the Voyage of his Successor to the Indies, than Grimbold's Betaking him to the New-Monastery at Winchester.

39. By this it appears of what Repute the Clause so much contended for is: and as new Pieces never suit handsomely in an old Garment, so that Insertion not squaring well with other Circumstances, discovers it self to have been a Patch of a late hand. It tells of a great Dissention at Oxford between Grimbald and the old Scholars, whenas there is not in Affer any foregoing Mention of Ælfred's Founding of any Schools there, nor of Grimbald's Lecturing in them; yet those are Passages so material to Affer's subject, as that it cannot be thought he would have omitted them, if they had been done in his time. Besides the Clause lays the Discord to have been in the year 886, and that was the same troublesome Year in which Ælfred had so much to do by Siege and strong Assault to recover London out of the Hands of the Danes: and when his Affairs were so unsettled, that as yet he was neither universally receiv'd, neither was there an intire Return of his scattered and dispersed Subjects unto him, till (after the winning of London) the Success of the King's Affairs gave them Assurance of their future Safety under him. And it requires a strong Faith to believe that the King before that time set upon the Founding of an University especially at Oxford, which was in Mercia so near the settling of the North and Eastern Danes.

1 Alias Swithelmus.

40. The Relation does not better square with the Time of Grimbald's Coming over, which was (saith Hyde Book) in the year 885. For it is admitted by all that Grimbald at his first Coming was a good while detained by Ælfred at Court for his own Instruction before he was sent to Oxford, and the University (saith Winchester Book, cited by Mr. Camden,) was begun in the second year of Grimbald's Coming over. Yet this Clause makes Grimbald to have been the Cause of a publick Discord at Oxford, that brake out in the year 886. but had been a breeding three years before, and that was a year before the Founding of the University, and two years before Grimbald's coming over. And it is both strange and contradictory that Grimbald should have so much and so hasty a love to Oxford as to build St. Peter's Church there de saxo summa cura perpolit, (as the Clause says he did) whenas he was at first entertained with so much Affront and Discontent, and that that fiercely profecuted with fo much Spleen and Rancour, that he was fain within three years to give over the Univerfity and go to Wincheſter.

41. But that which gave Boldnefs (as I fuppoſe) to the Contriver of this Paſſage, and led him into an Error was this. Aſſer Menevenſis his Collection of the Life and Acts of Ælfred is concluded with the Death of Ælfred, in the year 900. And there being two ſeveral Aſſers, the latter of them (which in Edward the Elder's Time was a Biſhop likewiſe) lived it ſeems to the year 909. Now the Contriver of the inserted Paſſage taking both theſe for one, and thinking that Aſſer Menevenſis ſurvived to the year 909. made no queſtion but he might make him tell of any thing done in Ælfred's life time, whereas indeed Aſſer Menevenſis writ while the King was yet living, dedicated his Book unto him, and died long before him. Afterwards Hen. Huntington, or ſome other out of him, ſupplied the Addition of Ælfred's Death in the year 900. unto Aſſer's Story, and that we ſee, both by Hen. Huntington's very words of Concluſion, by his Verſes placed at the End of Aſſer's Story, by his Name quoted in the Margin, and alſo by the Leiger Book of Hyde-Abbey in Sir Ch. H. hands.

42. And if we lay together other Circumſtances already appearing, with what likelyhood can we imagin that Ælfred (a Prince ſo much lamenting the Decay of Letters in his Country and in ſo notable a way undertaking the Replanting of them) ſhould ſuffer that great and much affected Work of his to receive Prejudice by the Oppoſition of a few Scholars of no Regard ; and then taking a Journey in Perſon to quiet the Difference, ſhould yet leave the matter ſo unſettled, as that his own Profeſſors (far fetched and hardly procured) ſhould, by the Vexation of meaner Scholars, be forced to give over the Service that he had there placed them for ? Surely it ſuited not with the reſt of the King's Ways and Actions, who (though otherwiſe mild) was yet ſevere and ſtrict in requiring Obſervance of the Things which he had once ordered.

43. Nei-

43. Neither does Jo. Ross (whom the Apology much cites and honours) do this Tale of Discord between Grimbald and the Oxford Scholars any Credit. For as he is there cited he tells in how great a manner Learning was by Grimbald restored in the Land, (which if his Form of Teaching had been rejected, especially so soon as the questioned Clause alledges, it could not have been effected by him) and afterward ¹ in sua senili etate (saith Ross) studio relicto adit Wintoniam. He left indeed the University and went to Winchester; but not by reason of any Discord, but because he was grown old, and that I trow was not the next Year after his first coming over. For he lived 6 Years after that and dyed in the Year [903. the 8th of the Ides of July.]

44. One might also ask where those old Scholars were, when Ælfred came to the Crown, who being so able to defend the antient Institutions of the supposed University, were not in the way to do the King Service, when, for want of Scholars, he was fain to send abroad? As for those (besides that we find not any Mention of their Help) we find that if any such there were, they were but easy Scholars. For the King himself tells ² us that at his Coming to the Crown there were but very few on this side Humber that were able to translate a Latin Epistle.

45. It would be so hard a Matter to answer all Objections, and reconcile all Incoherences, that necessarily follow the Maintaining of the questioned Clause, as that if now there were an antient Manuscript extant to authorise it, that Manuscript would as much stand in need of some other Record to make it Authentick, as supply the need that the questioned Clause now stands in. Seeing therefore that the Authorities which Mr. Camden has in this particular followed do upon Examination fall out so wind-shaken and crazy, we cannot attribute so much to what he delivers upon their Warrant, as we should to what he delivered upon his own Judgment or Opinion. Therefore holding my self free from clashing with Mr. Camden's Authority in this Matter, I securely presume that none of the Passages in his Britannia alledged by the Apology do maintain either School or Academy of Letters at Oxford before Ælfred's time. But to draw to an End, let all Arguments of Conjecture, of Presumption, or of what nature soever be laid aside, and let us but consider what it is that the Authorities themselves produced by the Apology do deliver in proof that Ælfred did not found, but restore the University of Oxford. For 'till the Apology the contrary was believed.

¹ Apol. lib. II. sec. 172.

² In Præf. ad Past. Greg.

46. And first of all is the Book of Winchester, which though we have already mentioned as cited by Mr. Camden, yet seeing it containeth Matter otherwise pertinent to the Knowledge of the King's work, and is also one of the Authorities which the Apology voucheth for proof that Ælfred did but restore the University, it is necessary we should set it down according to the whole Contents there.

47. Anno Dominicæ Incarnationis 886. anno 2º. adventus Sancti Gimbaldi in Angliam, incepta est Universitas Oxoniæ, primitus in eadem regentibus, ac in Schola Theologiæ legentibus, Sancto Neoto Abbate, necnon in Theologia doctore egregio, & Sancto Gimbardo, sacræ paginæ suavissimæ dulcedinis excellentissimo Professore: in Grammatica vero & Rhetorica regente Asserio Monacho, & in arte literatoria Viro eruditissimo: in Dialectica vero, & Musica, & Arithmetica, legente Joanne Monacho Menevensis Ecclesiæ: in Geometria & Astronomia docente Joanne Monacho, & Collega Sancti Gimbaldi, Viro acutissimi ingenii & undecunque doctissimo: præsentè Gloriosissimo & invictiss. Rege Alfredo, cujus in omni ore, quasi mel, indulcabitur memoria. Thus the Annals of Winchester.

48. Next is cited by the Apology ¹ Ranulf Higden lib. 6º. in these words: Aluredus scholas variarum artium apud Oxoniam primus instituit.

¹ Lib. II. Sect. 176.

49. Nicholas Harpesfeld, there also cited, saith: omnium igitur bonarum disciplinarum quasi officinam quandam apud Vadum Ifidis, i. e. Oxoniense oppidum constituit.

50. Also an Anonymous, there cited out of Oxford Library, delivers, Ælfred scholas publicas apud Oxonium instituisse.

51. The next that to that purpose is there¹ cited is Malmesbury thus: consilio namque Neoti Abbatis scholas publicas variarum Artium apud Oxonium primus instituit Aluredus.

52. In the Section 192. is cited a Polychronicon in Balioi-College Library, which beginneth: Ab Historico namque contextu &c. And that speaking of Alured saith thus: Universitatem Oxoniæ primus fundavit.

53. In the 198. Section Bale is cited, that, having related something out of Capgrave concerning Ælfred's Uction, he added: Illi igitur primo ab ejus Ecclesie patribus est permissum ut Literarum fundaret Academiam &c.

54. In the 213. Section, speaking of University-College, the Apology confesseth that the Fellows of that College acknowledg that Ælfred was their Founder. And truly though what may be gathered of that be not so manifest, as what the other Authorities say, yet speaks it one and the same thing with them. For without difficult he that was first Founder of University-College, was also Founder of the University it self. And this we shall the easier apprehend, if we hear John Ross, as he is cited² in the Apology, who in the Apologiser's Judgment is Historia utriusque Universitatis æstimator omnium æquissimus.

55. Sancto Neoto instigante (saith Ross of King Ælfred) Scholas publicas variarum Artium apud Oxoniam instituit. And a little after: in prima dictæ Universitatis fundatione (saith he) ipse nobilis Rex Aluredus infra Urbis Oxon. mœnia Doctores in Grammatica, Arti-

1. Ap. lib. II. Sect. 179.

2. Lib. I. sec. 2. Lib. II. sect. 172.

bus, & Theologia, tribus locis, in nomine S. Trinitatis, ex suis sumptibus instituit. In quarum una viginti sex Grammaticorum omnibus necessariis ipsam Aulam dotavit, & eam, propter scientiæ inferioritatem, Parvam Aulam Univerſitatis appellari decrevit; & sic in diebus meis appellata est. Aliam Aulam in sumptibus necessariis pro Dialecticis seu Philosophis 26 abundanter construxit; & hanc Aulam Minorem Univerſitatis appellari præcepit. Tertiam Aulam Magnam pro 26 Theologis appellans, sacræ Scripturæ Studium daturis ordinavit, quibus & expensis sufficientes abundanter exhibuit. Multæ aliæ præter has in brevi Aula singularum facultatum à Burgensibus Urbis & Comprovincialium circumjacentium, deinde à remotioribus Provinciis, sunt exortæ, licet non de Regis expensis, sed Regis gratioso exemplo creverunt.

56. By this we may see, that Ælfred was the First Founder of the very University it self, First, by his own Act, in the three Halls that he built; which being the first only Colleges that the University can truly be said to have had at that time, bear name with Relation to the University, viz. The Greater, Lesser and Little-Hall of the University; as if beside them there were no other. So that Ælfred was not only Founder of the University, but first Author also of the Name University that ever we read used in that sense. Secondly, he was by Example, Founder of all that was after built in Imitation of his Work. And we may judge that when (by his Example) other Halls and Schools were after built by others, and, according to the Use of later times, at last incorporate into Societies by several Names of Halls or Colleges, under the Government of several Heads or Masters, these three first Halls being likewise founded into one College did still, in Memory of what they were at first, retain the Name of University-College, because they alone had once been all the University. As for that Hall in Oxford, which the Author to the Apology calls Aula Paulina, and which he saith he remembers that he hath seen in Ancient Writings that it was founded by Paulinus first Arch-Bishop of York long before Ælfred's Time ; it may easily enough be believed, that the Author may have seen some Writings, and those no very late ones, in which (as he saith) it was affirmed, that Aula Paulina was founded by Paulinus the first Arch-Bishop of York, but it is also to be believed that those Writings may have more credit upon Hear-say, than they should upon View: and the rather because we know that Aula Paulina is not Paulinus his Hall, but Paul's Hall. It must have been Aula Pauliniana to have expressed that it was Paulinus his Hall.
by

57. The Apology further citeth ¹ the Letters of the University it self to Humphry Duke of Gloucester, where they profess unto him, quod citra feliciss. memoriæ Aluredum Regem, hujus almæ Universitatis fundatorem, nemo unquam tantum beneficium contulerit.

58. Lastly it citeth ² the Ancient Bedells Books there, that in them it is said thus: Ex antiqua consuetudine hujus almæ Universitatis in vigilia sancti Martini, orandum est in scholis pro benefactoribus tam vivis quam defunctis, & pro animabus omnium benefactorum, præsertim pro anima Aluredi Regis hujus almæ Universitatis primi fundatoris. And I may add as a Corollary that in a fair Window in St. Marie's Church, where both the Story and the Glory of the University's Foundation by Ælfred was beautifully set forth, both in Picture and Verses, the Verse that tells the Mind of that Part of the Historical Imagery, which concerns the Foundation, is thus:

Angelus hic studium jussit ut incipiat.

And in another Place is a Verse instar omnium, saith the Apology ³, Oxonii flores Ælfred fert iste priores.

59. I dare scarcely own my Senses, when in other Mens Actions I consider how strongly the first Possession of a Thing (especially received with Partiality and Affection) sways the Judgment of a Man. I could not have believed that at this Distance of Time, there could so much have been made appear for Ælfred's Founding of the Univerſity; nor can I think it needfull to preſs the one half of it. And yet ſo fixed are the Impreſſions, the Story of Oxford, and the Suppoſitious Fragment of Aſſer have made, as that he that defends the Antiquity of Oxford reads nothing in all theſe Authorities, but that Ælfred was only the Reſtorer of the Univerſity. Let the Reader judge. For me, I take what is alledged to be warrant enough for an Hiſtorian to write Ælfred firſt Founder of the Univerſity of Oxford, and ſo without difficult I ſhall ſtile him.

¹ Lib. II. sect. 218.

² Lib. II. sect. 219.

³ Ibid. 222.

60. I am not ignorant that while, according to my Duty, I maintain the King's Right in the Foundership, I caſt my ſelf upon the Common Controverſy between the two Univerſities for Priority; which how trivial ſoever in it ſelf, yet in regard of the Number and Affections of thoſe that are intereſſed in it is too great for me to make a Party in. Beſides having been of Trinity-College in Cambridge, I would not be thought to have leſs Affection to my Foſter-Mother's Right, than the Author to the Apology, Mr. Camden, Leland, and other Oxford Men have ſhewn for Oxford. And for both theſe Reaſons holding my ſelf no indifferent Arbitrer between the two Pretenders, I ſhould have been glad I could have paſſed by the Controverſy untouched on. But ſeeing I am by Constraint already fallen upon it, and that, if I had voluntarily entered it, my Adverſaries Example would yet have juſtified me, I will to what I have already ſaid add what I received from one well verſed in Matters of Antiquity, and ſo return again unto my former Argument; well hoping the whiſt that if to any preſent Diſtaſt of the Univerſity I overthrow the ill founded Opinion of their Antiquity before Ælfred's Time, I ſhall at leaſt ſeem to have made ſome Kind of Recompence, not only in making certain who was their true Founder, but alſo in endeavouring ing (as far as my Ability at so much Distance and Disadvantage may effect) to make appear unto the World the great Honour of that Illustrious and Matchless Prince, from whom they derive Original, and whom we cannot think they would have aspired beyond, had they not been Sharers in the common Misfortune of the Kingdom to have lost the Knowledg of his unparalleled Worth. Nor is it a small Instance of Glory (if that be a thing so much affected) for the University henceforth to boast one Common Founder and Original with this our English Monarchy.

61. "The apparent Original of both our Universities (said that Antiquary) is certain by our best Historians, of Cambridge by Sigebert, of Oxford by Ælfred. What they seek to deduce further¹ is, like the "Beginnings of Nations, supported with Fables and "Suspicious Authorities, wherein they seem to cavil for "Priority of Conception, when as their Births are both "apparent. The Truth is the Gentry divided in Alliance between them will never agree the Controversy; but if we will hear Parties not interested, Polidore Vergil the Italian gives the Priority to Cambridge, and "Mindendorp, a Learned German, who in 3 Books "with great Judgment and Industry has written of all "the Universities in the World, (and whom I remember the Apology mentioneth, though the Author listed not to publish his Opinion) he (said the Antiquary) being a little in a maze, to see such Digladiation

1 In the Publick Library at Oxford, amongst Archbishop Laud's Books, is a MS. (num. E. 3.) written after the time of Hen. VI. containing a Genealogical History of the Kings of England, (which I believe was done by a Cambridge Man,) in which (f. 10. b.) are these Words: Cantabrigia erat fundata à Cantabro duce ante incarnationem annis 394. & à philosophis inhabitata. Et sic Cantabrigia erat ante Universitatem Oxon. per mille nongentos viginti & novem annos [lege per mille ducentos sexaginta & septem annos.] In this Tract there is not the least mention of Sigebert's being Founder: so that it seems not only Sir Simonds D'aves, [in his Speech touching the Antiquity of Cambridge, pr. Lond. 1642. 4to.] but the rest of the Cantabrigians are at a great Loss to make up the Story; some pitching upon Cantaber, others upon Sigebert: but both equally in the wrong.

"between “between our Universities for their Antiquity, being “loth to do either any wrong, bestows the pains of “perusing and examining what they do produce on ei“ther side, visisque & intellectis, he first blames them,

 “that worthy Men should contend about a trivial Mat“ter, and that beyond Terms of Modesty. Then he “willeth them to strive to excell one another in true “Religion, Wisdom, Arts, and Learning, in the Mode“sty, Worth and Proficiency of their Scholars; to con“temn those outward Things Antiquity, Buildings, “Beauty of Colleges, Multitude of Scholars, Worth of “Founders, and the like; all which (said he) more be“long to the Ornament of the Dead, than the Praise “of the Living. And that done absque ullo affectu (those “are Mindendorp’s own Words) he delivers his sentence “thus: Utramque hanc Academiam veterem quidem at- “que florentem reperio; Cantabrigiensis tamen (quan- “tum hætenus deprehendere licuit) tempore prior & “antiquior est. Ideoque ab ea principium ducam. and “so proceedeth first in the Description of the University “of Cambridge.

62. “Yet is it not to be denyed (said the Antiquary) “that, after their Foundations, Oxford was for many “Ages after the more Eminent. For though it were “sometimes a little afflicted by the Pagan Danes, yet
 “was

I The Apology lib. I. sec. 177. cites an incertain Author, which he discredits not by any just Exception, but only saith he is deceived. The Author’s words are: Oxonii gymnasium instituit Aluredus, hortante Neoto viro sanctis. unde à tempore quo Cantabrigia sub Sigberto Rege Oriental. & Oxonium sub Aluredo condita sunt, semper fuere viri in Angl. doctiff. — Cantabrigiæ Gymnasium præcessit Oxonio annis 265. nam Sigebertus anno Christi 630 Cantabrigiam erexit. Et Aluredus Oxonium anno Christi 895. And by and by he cites Jo. Ross, speaking out of the Authority of Tho. Rudburn, and from the old Table and Chronicle of Hyde Abbey (both which he saw) thus: Ad clementiam augmentand. (saith he of Edw. the Elder) sicut pater suus (which was Ælfred) Oxoniam, sic ipse ab antiquo cum ceteris studiis generalibus suspensam, desolatam, & destructam Cantabrigiam, iterum ad primam gloriam erexit, necnon ibi aulas studentium & doctorum &c. — Ab Oxonia namque Universitate, quam pater suus nobilis rex erexerat &c. Also *Edw. Higgon*s in his Geography, MS. lib. 6. cap. 8. setting forth

“ was it always under the Protection of Potent Christian “ Kings, that loved and cherished Learning, whereas “ Cambridge, being seated more in the Danes way, ex“ posed to their Fury and Spoil, and utterly ruined by “ them, continued so for divers Years under the Ty“ ranny of that barbarous People, who contemned Lite“ rature, and all Civility; whereupon Oxford, getting the “ Start, and the Western Parts of England, that apply “ themselves to Oxford, abounding in Corporations, and “ Burgeses of Parliament, far beyond the Eastern Parts,
 “ that make their Address to Cambridge, the Parliaments “ upon all Occasions have commonly preferred Oxford
 “ before the other, and from them both Natives and For“ eigners have generally given Oxford the Preheminence.

63. “ But (said the Antiquary) it were good the “ Univerfity Men on both Sides would remember, that “ they eat the Oblations, which other Mens Devotions “ have presented God withal, that in the mean while “ they have their Provisions and Maintenance upon ac“ count, that therefore they should follow Mindendorp's “ Advice, and, laying aside other Emulations, by all “ good Means provoke one another in Unity to seek the “ Advancement of sincere Religion, of Learning, and of “ Civility, the only true End of those their Glorious “ Foundations, that so doing they may the safer glory “ while they manifest themselves lawfully and with “ good Right to possess the things they glory in. That “ lastly (to the great Benefit of the Church and Com“ mon-Wealth) they shall so perform the pious Wills
 “ of them, whose Gifts they boast of, and God shall be the Dignity of Oxford saith: certa nominis celebritate cum hoc Oxoniensi Gymnasio Academia Cantabr. quæ est Scholasticorum numero & cœnobiorum magnificentia impar sit, bonarum tamen artium feracitate nequaquam sed antiquitate longe præstat. Nam Oxoniense studium Aluredus circiter annum salutis DCCCXCV. illam vero Sigebertus circiter an. sal. DCXXX. fundavit. Lastly Dr. Powel (who was an Oxford man) in his History of Wales saith that Ælfred founded and erected Oxford, which and many more are expresse Authorities in the point, whereas I find not any where an Authority for Oxford, but only by Implication and Inference. SPELMAN.

“ glorified

“glorified in the Professors, much more than he has been in the Founders”. I now return again unto our present Purpose.

64. I have already partly shewed what was at first the Foundation of the University of Oxford, namely, that it was a Foundation of three distinct Halls¹, or Schools, by the Names of the Great Hall of the University, the Lesser Hall of the University, and the Little Hall of the University. For so (saith Ross) Ælfred willed they should be named. And these as seems by him likewise were in several Places of the City, the Great and Little Halls near the East Gate thereof, and the Lesser toward the Walls on the Northside.

65. As the Halls were three, and founded in the Name of the Holy Trinity, so was the Distribution of the Sciences professed in them threefold: to wit, Grammar, Arts, and Divinity. In the Little Hall was Grammar only taught, and there was Entertainment for 26 Scholars. In the Lesser Hall was taught Logick, Musick, Arithmetick, Geometry and Astronomy. And there was likewise Entertainment for 26 Scholars more. In the Great Hall was nothing read but Divinity only, and there was Entertainment for 26 Divines. The first Divinity Professors were St. Neods and St. Grimbald. The first Reader in Logick, Musick, and Arithmetick, was John a Monk of St. David's. The first Reader in Geometry, and Astronomy was John the Monk, that was St. Grimbald's Collegue. And Affer the Monk was Reader in Grammar and *Rhetorick*².

The manner of the Foundation.

66. Concerning the Persons Nominated to have been the Professors in the University, we must note, that, if we understand by St. Neods and Affer, the men most generally known by those Names, we run upon great Difficulties. For as for St. Neods the famous Abbot, though he first set the King upon the way of Erecting Schools, yet could he be none of the Professors: he lived not beyond the year 883, as appeareth both by Bale, and also by Affer Menevensis, who in the year 884. affirms his Body then rested in St. Guerir's Church in Cornwal, and ever speaketh of him as of one dead. Nor is it probable that an Abbot or a Bishop should leave their proper Charges to be ordinary Readers in Schools; especially for a Bishop to become a Reader of Grammar. But (besides that we have already shew'd, that it was not, nor could not be Affer the Bishop, the truth is, Winchester Book faith no more, but that Affer a Monk read Grammar there; it was the Mistake of others that took him to be the Bishop. And whereas the same Book (cited by the Apology) faith legentibus Sancto Neoto Abbate, we must examin whether (if the Book be so) it be not (as many Abbey Books be) a late renewed Book, in which the Writer for Illustration supplying some things according to his own Apprehension, in things done long before his Time, mistak and set down a Falshood for an Illustration. It seemeth plainly there were two of each Name, and that the second Person of either Name¹ were the Readers.

¹ Besides these Halls there were presently after founded divers others by several of the Nobility, who followed the King's Example. See Mr. Leland's MS. inter Codd. in Bibl. Bodl. NE. F. 11. 18. f. 29. a.

² Annales Winon.

The Endowment
of the University.

67. The Schools being founded, were not endowed with Possessions. For as the Times then were, that had been but to little purpose; but the King, better considering the Convenience, both of them, and of the Monasteries which he had built, did (beside the Lands that he gave for Accommodation of their Seats) assign them Annual Stipends for their Constant Maintenance. And his Schools had allotted to them for their Support, a full eighth Part of his whole Annual Revenue. And their Maintenance (it seemeth) continued² in that sort until the Coming in of the Normans.

68. The

¹ I grant there were two Affers, but Affer Menevensis was Professor, dying not 'till 909, as is shew'd above. But for Neos we cannot gather either from Affer, or any other antient Author, when he died.

² In a MS. Paper of good note in University Coll. Treasury I find express mention that it continu'd to the time of William the Conqueror, who

68. The Work at last being wholly perfected, the Schools built, stored with Scholars and furnished with Professors in all Sciences and Faculties, the King himself, whose Memory (saith Hyde Annals) shall be as sweet as hony in every Man's Mouth, attended with his Nobles in great Solemnity graced the first Lectures there with his own Presence and Audience, having never ceased till he had seen his Work brought unto the full Perfection.

69. This now may suffice for a Taste of the King's Magnificence, both in those things that concern the Security and Establishment of the State, as also in those that tend to the Felicity and Better Being of the People.

70. As for the King's Hand it never ceased, neither was his Spirit at any time at a stand, but as it travelled in these Works of publick Good, so did it also in those that particularly concerned the Crown and Regal Dignity, and not only that, but his own private also. Therefore he new built and enlarged the King's Houses or Palaces Royal, proportioning them unto the other Augmentation of his Estate, in which he had not only an Eye to make them of more Receipt than formerly, but as in all his other Works he exceeded the Fashion of his Ancestors, both in the Manner and in the Materials, so in these also he was very choice, and for the more Decency often changed the old Situations, built much with Stone, (which was then unusual) beautified them with Carving and Gilding, and made them more Stately than 'till that time had been known in England. Also after the same Manner he did by way of Husbanding, and Improving his private, repair and build the Villæ Regales, the Mannors and Demeasnes of the Crown, altering and contriving them both for a more commodious and more decent Habitation.

The King builds and repairs the King's Palaces.

As also the Farmes and Mannor Houses.

who withdrew the Exhibitions that had 'till that time been made out of the King's Exchequer: tho' in Mr. Leland's MSS. Collections (in Bibl. Bodl. NE. F. 11. 18. f. 29. a.) 'tis said that King Harold depriv'd these Schools of their Revenue, and totally destroy'd the two lesser of these Halls.

Exact in ordering his Works.

71. And while thus the King was infinite in his Works his Workmen grew innumerable, and necessarily put him to advise by Order and good Distribution to dispose of the manner of their Working, (in which he was very exact.) The Number of them (whereby we might judge of the Greatness of his Works) appeareth not, only Florentius saith they were numero pene infinito, and for their Quality they were in omni terreno edificio edocti. Also we find that in the Distribution of the King's Revenues, they had a full sixth Part of his whole Year's Income allotted to them, with which if we consider that in those Times they had not board Wages, but did eat and drink of the King's Allowance, the Proportion, that was issued for their Wages, argues a great and magnificent Employment for them.

The Ordering his Houhold.

72. His Household and Domestick Attendance being very greatly also increased, he served himself in a way of somewhat an extraordinary Kind, and which leaves a Note, either of the Multitude of those which were his Menial Servants, or else of the Quality of them, or at least of the little Choice that was then in the Land of loose and independent Men, such as being otherwise unengaged were free to bestow themselves in any Course of Employment.

73. He having (it seems) observed the Course that Salomon took in preparing Timber at Lebanon for the Temple, where Thirty Thousand assigned to the Work went by ten Thousand at a time, wrought there a Month, and then Returning, stayed two Months at home until their Turn in the fourth Month came about again. He applying this to his own Occasions, ordained the like Course in his Attendance, making a TriPLICATE thereof, insomuch that he had a Threefold Shift of all Domestick Officers, each of which were by themselves under the Command of a several Major Domo, or Master of the Household, who coming with his Servants under his Charge to wait at Court, stayed there a Month, and then returning home were supplied by the second Ternary, and they again by the third, until the Course coming about, the first of them (after two Months Recess at home) did with the Quarter renew their Monthly Service at the Court.
the

74. I should conjecture that the King for his more Honourable Attendance took this Course in Point of Royalty and State, there being (as it then stood with the State) very few Men of Quality fit to stand before a King, who by their Fortunes or Dependency were not elsewhere besides engaged; neither was there in those times any great Assurance to be had of any Man unless he were one of such Condition, whose Service when the King was fain to use one Month in the Quarter, it was necessary for the Common-wealth, that he should remit them the other two Months unto their own Occasions. Neither used he this Course with some of his Officers only (as there are those that understand it to have been a Course taken only with those of his Guard) but with all his whole Attendance; neither used he it for a time only, but for his whole Life, as Ingulfus expressly tells us: and I little doubt, but that the Use at Court at this Day, of Officers Quarter-Wayters, Quarter-wayters. had the first Beginning even from this Invention of the King's.

75. Among the rest of his Attendants he is noted (Salomon like) to have provided himself of Musicians, Musicians. not common, or such as knew but the Practick Part, but Men skilful in the Art it self, whose Skill and Service yet further improved, with his own Instruction, and so ordered the Manner of their Service, as best befitted the Royalty of a King.

76. He also stored himself with the Instruments of Falconers, Huntsmen, &c. Princely Recreations and Sports, with Falconers and Huntsmen of every Kind. The Saxons (from their German Ancestors) holding Hunting a most generous and laudable Education of youth, as that which inured them to Hardiness, made them active, patient of La-hour, and acquainted with Danger, their Hunting being chiefly of Wild and noxious Beasts. And the King himself having from his Youth in this kind been noted to excel, out of his own Experience so ordered the Use and Manner of those Sports, as that even in them the Provisions and Order gave a note of State and of Magnificence.

1 Hac revolutione fervorum suorum totiusque familiae suae rotatione usus est omni tempore vitae suae. Ingulf.

Artisans,
Jewellers,
&c.

77. Among other his Princely Curiosities he had upon the Return of the Shipping, which he sent to St. Thomas in the Indies, many Eastern Rarities, Odors, Balms, and Precious Stones brought unto him, the Use of which (being then unknown in this Land) he seemeth to have first set on foot here, seeking out Artists and Curious Artificers, Goldsmiths and Jewelers for the Working of them: and such were the Defects of those Times, and so excelling was the Faculty of the King in every thing he turned his Hand unto, as that even in those Works also the Artificers themselves and their Arts received Improvement from his Invention and Direction, while they followed his Genius, and Manufactured that that he designed to them. The use of all which he converted to the adorning and setting forth of the Regal Dignity.

78. I know not why we may not conjecture that the King (being by the Return of his East-India Ship stored with many Eastern Stones, and by his especial Industry upon that Occasion provided also of Work-men) probably fell upon the Composing of an Imperial¹ Crown, which though not of the Form, that by way of Distinction we at this day call Imperial, yet was it of a more August and Imperial Form than had been formerly in Use in this Kingdom. For in the arched Room in the Cloisters of Westminster-Abbey, where the ancient Regalia of this Kingdom are kept, upon a Box (which is the Cabinet to the ancientest Crown) there is (as I am informed) an Inscription to this purpose : Hæc est principalior Corona cum qua coronabantur Reges Ælfredus, Edwardus, &c. And the Crown (which to this purpose were worth the Observing) is of a very ancient Work, with Flowers adorned with Stones of somewhat a plain Setting. This by the Inscription appearing to have been the Crown of Ælfred and his Successors, is to be supposed to have been made by him, and that when he was become Universal King of the Heptarchy. In which respect, and for the Value of the Jewels, (then and long after very rare in these Parts) as also for the Venerable Esteem which (for the Original and Author) succeeding Ages have ever had of it, it seems deservedly to be accounted the most principal Crown.

¹ This does not appear from any Author but Harpfeld; nor from his Coyns, in which his Head is circled with a simple Diadem after the common and ancientest Fashion, in other Countries. And we do not find in any English-Saxon Coyn one Instance of any Imperial Crown 'till Edward the Confessor, who has a Crown much like that of the Eastern Emperors. See Selden's Titles of Honour: also Note above ad hunc lib. §. 8.

79. And that we may guess that howsoever things appear not sufficiently to us, yet the King omitted nothing that might seem rightly incident to the Quality of a great and absolute Monarch, we find, that whencesoever he had the Idea of the Ceremony, he in a very solemn manner conferred the order of Knight-hood; wherein we need not doubt but that he will appear to be the first, and Author to our English Monarchs for the Conferring of it. The Person upon whom only we have Instance was his Grandchild Æthelstan, Son of his Son Edward, and but a youth : with whose Spirit, Lovely Countenance, and Behaviour he was so much taken as that in a kind of Propheticall Spirit he blessed him for King, after his Father Edward, and then Knighted him by giving him a skarlet Coat, a Belt set with precious Stones, and a Saxon Sword in a Golden Scabbard. Nor did Æthelstan frustrate the Honour done him, but succeeding Edward in the Crown, he so well continued the Prosecution of his Grandfather's Virtue, (whom in Countenance also he is said to have much resembled) as that he exceeded

Confers the Order of Knight-
hood.

both Father and Grandfather in the External Glory of his Kingdom.

80. And now have we taken a view of all that we find surviving of the Publick Works and Actions of the King, which howsoever imperfect, and at the fullest scanted by the Authors themselves in their short way of Relation, and some of them only toucht on in the by, or but accidentally, yet are they sufficient to Discover unto us the Latitude of the King's Spirit and Genius truly Royal and August. It now remaineth that in a few words we add something concerning his Devotion and private Life.

The K.
Devotion.

81. Such was the Universality of Gifts, and such the Measure of them given of God unto this Prince, as that whatsoever thing he set himself unto he became so singular in it, that he seemed a Man appropriate and set apart to that End only, insomuch that every several Passage of his Life makes a perfect Change of the former Current of his Story, and bears the Similitude of Introduction of a new Scene. Neither shall we hereafter judge him in his former Actions to have done more than only personated (as it were by Constraint) the Man that hitherto we have seen him, his Heart and natural Inclination being altogether bent another way, namely to Devotion and to his private Studies.

82. It had now been an Age of Devotion, and even yet to these Times it was no rare Thing for Princes themselves to renounce their Sovereignty and State, and entring into some Religious Order spend the Residue of their Days as Monks in retired Devotion, so violently did the Doctrine of the Romish Church work upon the Zeal, the Ignorance, or Simplicity of the Times. Howsoever it was, we can (at best) judge it but an Error of a pious and devout good Meaning, when instead of forsaking the World, they forsook Christ's Flock committed to their Charge to protect in the World; and when they should have been good Captains of Christian Warfare against the Evils of the times, and their good Lives have been Lights for others to have walked by, they they shunned the Battle, and hid the lighted Candle underneath the Bushel, withdrawing in a needful time the Influence of their Conversation, and leaving their Offices, perhaps to those, who if they better knew what it was to be a King, knew less what belonged to the being of a Christain Governour.

83. When our Saviour (concerning those whom he ordained to be Lights unto the World) prayed unto his Father, That he would not take them out of the World, but keep them in the World, if they through such a wrong kind of Imitation of St. John Baptist's Life had retired into Solitariness so to have lived a more strict and regular Holiness, they had both illuded his Prayer and frustrated his Work, whereas contrarily they became all unto all men, as the sure and most effectual Means to save some. For certainly Conversation has a proper and a powerfull Effect, as well in winning the Soul to Goodness as in corrupting of it unto Vice: whereas Monastick Holiness, especially when it is not joyned with some Travel or Study for the Good of others, is only to its self, or some few Fellow-Separatists; and if in it self it have fewer of the Batteries of Temptations, it has also fewer of the Graces that belong to Victory. And as to other Men, it so little conduces to Amendment of their Lives by exemplar Provocation, as it rather confirms them in a Carnal Dejection of Mind, when seeing that which they call Holiness of Life to be a Thing so rigid and unimitable to them, they persuade themselves that the Hope of some meaner Felicity must content them, and set up their Rest that the Practise of Honesty in an ordinary Manner will be as much as they shall e're attain unto.

84. But the King's Practise of Devotion (in this Point very remarkable) was not after Monastick Renunciation, forsaking Labour and the Conversation of Men instead of the Inticements of the World, but was in a converseable Regularity, not only good in it self, but profitable to all, and in a greater or lesser Degree more obvious to every Man's Imitation. For holding himself

The King's Regularity in his Devotion.

His Poverty and Alms.

himself fast unto the Duty of his Calling, so that for all the furious Storms and Troubles of the State he never shrunk from the Manage of it; he first (to correspond with the Vow of Monkish Poverty) devotes to God one Half of all his Annual Revenue, to be bestowed in Works of Piety: And because he would be sure not to fail the least Scruple in Performance, he caused his Officers yearly to divide into two equal Parts by Weight the Total of his Annual Income, and that done, to subdivide again one of those Halfs into four Parts, for the better Distribution of them in Alms and Charitable Works, in the way that he had determined constantly to employ them.

85. The first of the four Parts he assigned to the Relief of the Poor in General. The second to the Support and Maintenance of the two Monasteries which he had built. The third to the Maintenance of the Schools which he founded. And the fourth and last Part to the General Relief of all the Monasteries and Religious Houses in England, and (as occasion served) beyond Sea too.

86. The other Half of his reserved Revenue also was in three Parts set forth for three distinct Uses, (as we have already shewn) that is to say for Officers-Fees and Wages; for Workmen and Labourers Wages; and for Entertainment and Rewards of Strangers. By which we may note the whilst, that the King's private Charge and Household were in those Days supported by the Demesnes of the Crown, not let to Farm, but husbanded so as to supply him of all Things necessary. Yet I do not conceive that these Assignments of the Secular Part were permanent and fixed all his Life (as those of the devoted Part were) but temporary and suffered Alteration as there was Occasion for it.

His strictness in Religious Offices.

87. The King having thus honoured God with his Substance, proceeds in the same measure to honour him with his Personal Service also; and to that End devotes the one Half of his time to be employed in Re-

Solus regni gubernaculum titubare ac vacillare non sinebat. Flo. Wig.
ligious

religious Exercises, not in private Devotion only, but first and especially in regular Attendance and Participation of the Publick Service of the Church, and then in Private Prayer, Reading, and Divine Meditations: for which end he ever bare in his Bosome ¹ the Psalms and Office for the Day, and many void Leaves besides bound together with them, in which he made Collections dayly of Divine Sentences and Portions of Scripture, such as to the exciting of Devotion did affect him most; and having in that sort soon filled the vacant Leaves, and much delighted with the frequent Perusal of those selected Passages, he began another Book in Quarto, with Quaternions of Leaves stitched together, in which he continued his Collections, untill that with Addition of one Quaternion after another his Collections in that Kind grew to the bigness of a good Psalter. And so much Pleasure did he take in the Use of it, as that he called it his Hand-Book, because that Day and Night he ever had it at hand with him.

88. Having vowed to God the one Half of the Service both of his Mind and Body, his Care was now to make a just Performance of his Vow, which at that Time was so much the harder to do, for that (as then) they had neither Use of Hour-Glass nor Clock, whereby to make a right Division of the Time, as well by Night as Day: wherefore the King observing (as nearly as then could be) the Time that the Wax-Candles, with which he was ordinarily served, were on burning, he found out such a Proportion to make Candles on, as should keep a just Measure of the four and twenty Hours. His Proportion was this: he took as much Wax as at that time weighed 72 Penny-weight; this he caused to be made into six Candles, every Candle consisting of so much Wax as then weighed twelve Penny-weight, and each of them of the length of 12 Inches, with the Division of the Inches distinctly marked on them. These being lighted successively one after another did orderly burn four Hours apiece, that is every three Inches of them an Hour, the whole 6 Candles so lasting out the full time of 24 Hours, the watching of which he committed to the Keepers of his Chapel, and they constantly from time to time gave him notice of their Wasting, and he accordingly ordered the Use of his time.

¹ Diurnus cursus & Psalmi. Asser.

them

89. But because that in windy and stormy Weather the Candles wasted faster than at other times, and so missed the Account, the King was put to a Shift to supply that Miscarriage. He wanted Glass, (which though it had long before been brought into England by Benedict the Abbot that built St. Peter and Paul's Monasteries on the Banks of the Wyre in Northumberland, yet was it then brought in but as a Rarity, and was not now readily to be had;) being therefore necessitate to find out some present Means to save the Wast and Misburning of his Candles, he caused them to take fine white Horn, and shaving it so thin as to become transparent, to let it into little close Frames of Wood, and putting the Lights therein, he both provided Means that they might see how they consumed, and yet defended them from the Injury of the Wind. The thing being invented, and generally very usefull soon grew common, and though at this day Horning Lanthorns are but of Vulgar Use and Estimation, yet was the devising of them witty, and in the Original they were the Invention of a King.

Original of Lanthorns.

90. It is to be noted that there is Difference between the Relation of Affer Men. and Malmsbury concerning the Quantity of the Time that Ælfred devoted, the first alledging as we have already delivered, the other that he divided the 24 Hours into three Parts, and that the first of them he devoted to God, the second to the Affairs of the Kingdom, and the third to his natural Refreshment and Rest, and so gave but a third Part of his Time to God. Which of the two shall be believed rather will be in the Reader's Opinion to determine; both are very credible Authors, but Affer not only lived in Ælfred's time, but was also privy to the making of the Vow. And it is not impossible that both were true. For it appears by Affer that the Vow was with some Limitation, and saving ¹ to the Duty of his Calling, to the Necessity of his Occasions, and to the Strength of Nature, which in Practice might well be brought unto the proportion that Malmsbury delivers.

1 Malm. de Gest. Reg. Ang.

making

91. It is further considerable concerning this Vow of the King's, that it was made, neither in the Time of his Adversity, (when every Body is Religious) nor yet in his old Age, when the World had first forsaken him; but as he began his Religious Practises even in the Prime of his Youth, so this Vow was the free Oblation of his Heart in the Strength of his Years, and in the Height of his Success, and Fruition of the Good of all his passed Labours, soon after he had built the Monastery of Atbelingey in Performance of his Vow for his Victory at Atbandune.

92. In the Flower of his Age he took Check at the Motions of corrupt Nature, too powerfully inclining him to the Concupiscence thereof; for Remedy of which it was his Use to rise secretly ² before Day, and getting him to Church there prostrate himself before God in Prayer, that he would give him Grace against the Strength of that Concupiscence, and at last that by the Mission of some special Infirmitie upon him (yet such as would not make him contemptible, nor disable him in the Functions of his Life) he would please to humble him, and abate the Strength of that Corruption, that his Affections being freed from so violent Seducements he might wholly and without Diversion apply himself to the obeying of God's Word and keeping of his Commandments.

93. The Success of his Prayers was such, that he was soon taken with an extream Pain of the Piles and Emrauds, (a Disease that from his Infancy he had ever been subject unto, but now) in such a measure, as that it quickly effected the Thing that he desired, and reigning on him some years together grew at last to that Extremity that he was often at the Point of Death therewith, till on a time, when being on Hunting in Cornwall he came near the Town, where St. Guerin's Church was, (in which St. Neods was after buried) and then slipping his Company he secretly turned aside to the Church to his Devotions, humbly again beseeching God that he would now be pleased to change that fore Disease into some other more tolerable Infirmity. Having finished his Prayers and returned to his Company, it was not long ere he found himself as it were miraculously cured of that Trouble¹; but withall he was forthwith visited with another, an intestine Pain, which taking him about the twentieth Year of his Age, and at the Time of his Marriage, held him above 20 Years in that violent and strange Manner, as that the Physicians being all posed to find what it was, made many think he was bewitched, and others that it was the immediate Hand and Malice of the Devil by God's Permission sent to try and exercise him.

¹ In quantum infirmitas, possibilitas, & sapientia permetteret.

² Galli-cantu & horis Matutinis clam consurgens. Affer.

94. As his Devotion first shewed it self in his Youth, so it constantly accompanied all the Actions of his whole Life; and though from his Youth he was bred a Man of War, and continually exercised in the Necessities of a Barbarous and Licentious War, yet could not the Roughness thereof distemper the Natural Tenderness of his Heart, nor any Outrage of the Barbarous Enemy so harden it against Pity, but that still for all their Provocations, he sought out the way to shew Mercy to them, never so truly pleased as when he could bring the Conclusion of the War to those Terms, as to make an Exchange of his own Temporal Victory for an Eternal Conquest of them to his Saviour. No Wrong, no Damage so great, no Advantage against them of such Consequence, but that all might be remitted, if once they offered to embrace Christianity; the King's Heart never exceeding moderation, but when Religion softened it in Piety and Ways of shewing Mercy.

¹ Some say he was cur'd by Modwen an Irish Virgin.

95. Nor is this all that is observable concerning his Devotion; but as he was a zealous Professor himself; so (Salomon-like) he was a publick Teacher of it to others, not out of a Political Reason only, (as formerly we have shewn him) but out of a zealous and devout Intent also, not keeping the Virtue to himself and extending only the Fruit thereof (in Works of Charity) to others, but constantly labouring by all Means to communicate and beget in others the Exercise of the Virtue it self, as he that in the true Fruition of himself breathed no other breath than of Devotion only; so that (as Aßer tells us) it was his continual Use, whensoever he had the least Respiration from other Affairs, to be either Reading or Questioning of others to inform himself, or Reasoning with them in Religious Matters by his Discourse to inform them, he never so much resenting the Poverty and Defect of his Country in any thing, as in the Want of Learned and Religious Men, by whose Help he might Advance Religion, Virtue, and Learning both in himself and others.

96. Concerning his private Life, it is not much that in particular is extant of him; but for the general it is manifest by all that he was a Man of an Admirable Temper of Mind, of strong Natural Parts, and of great Variety. Nature from his Childhood gave him to be studious, to muse, and to observe much, by which we may conjecture that Melancholy had the Predominance in his Constitution, as also his Infirmary beforementioned may assure us. His first Encounter with his Book was on this Manner:

97. The Queen his Mother observing him one day very much delighted with a little Book of her's, that had the Capital Letters beautifully set forth with Gold and divers Colours, said merrily in his and his Brothers Hearing, that which of them soever should soonest get that Book by Heart she would bestow it on him. Now the Book was a Book of Saxon Poëms. Ælfred minding well what the Queen said, and better likeing the Conditions than the rest of his Brothers, came smiling to her,

His Private Life.

The first Specimen of his Inclination to Learning.

her, and asked if in good Earnest she would do as she said. She assured him she would, and he thereupon departing in great Joy with the Book, went of himself and sought out help to read it, and so industriously pursued his Purpose, as that although 'till then (which was the 12th. year of his Age) he had never been acquainted with Letter, yet he intermitted not one whit 'till he had both learned the Book and recited it unto his Mother.

His Progress in Learning answerable to the Beginning.

98. Answerable to this Beginning was his whole Progress in Learning; and though his Wit were very sharp and universal, yet was it also strong, industrious, and patient of Labour and Study: he was infinite in Reading, Writing, and Collecting, and (as *Æthelwold*¹ testifies of him) the Books which he translated were an unknown Number; and though Saxon were then a naked and scant Language, destitute both of Phrase and Originals wherewith to express significantly, especially in Arts and Sciences, as having never had any great Familiarity with Letters, yet were his Versions so full, so proper, and with that Lively Expression, that they did infinitely take the Readers. He was counted a profound Scholar for those times, a Grammarian, a Rhetorician, a Philosopher, an Historian, a Musitian, the Prince of Saxon Poësy, and an Excellent Architect and Geometrician.

Books composed and translated by him.

99. Mr. Bale in his Centuries hath summed up many of his Works, as well of those that he translated, as of his own Composing² or Collection, viz.

Breviarium quoddam collectum ex legibus Trojanorum, Græcorum, Britannorum, Saxonum & Danorum. lib. 1.

Visi-Saxonum leges. lib. I.

1 In propriam verterat linguam volumina, numero ignoto, adeo varie, adeo peropime ut &c. Æthelw.

2 A certain Anonymous Author, which I have seen in a Miscellaneous Collection of Sir Kenelm Digby's, (num. 196.) fixes the time for composing these Books by King Ælfred, and for his making Laws, to the Year 893.

Instituta quædam. lib. I.

Contra Judices iniquos. lib. I.

Dicta sapientum. lib. I.

Regum fortunæ variæ. lib. I.

Parabolæ & fales. lib. I.

Acta Magistratum. lib. I.

Collectiones Chronicorum. lib. I.

Manuale Meditationum. lib. I.

100. These ten Books were all of his own Composing or Collection; of his Translation into Saxon were these that follow, viz.

Hormeltarii Pauli ¹ Orosii. liber I.

Pastorale D. Gregorii. libri II.

Dialogus ejusdem Gregorii. lib. I. But this was rather done at his Command by Werefred Bishop of Worcester, as we have shewed before.

Gesta Anglorum Bedæ. lib. V. ² Of this Translation there is yet a MS. Copy in the University Library at Cambridge, Vol. 241. with this Distich upon it, as saith Mr. James in his Catalogue :

Historicus quondam fecit me Beda Latinum, Ælfred rex Saxo transtulit ille prius.

Boëtius de Consolatione. lib. I. ³ This was the same of ¹ There is a fair Copy of this amongst Mr. Junius's MSS. in the Bodlejan Library, transcrib'd by Junius himself. Dr. Talbot, who writ Annotations upon Antoninus's Itinerary, had a good MS. of it (in which he put some Notes) which he formerly lent to Mr. Leland the Antiquary. Vide Lelandi Coll. MSS. Vol. III. f. 193. a. Some are of Opinion that Ælfred was not Author of this Translation (or rather Paraphrase) of Orosius, as you may see in Mr. Somner's Preface to his Saxon Glossary.

² Publish'd by Mr. Whelock, who made use of this Copy mention'd by Sir John as well as others, of which he has given an Account in his Preface, and withall observes that 'tis rather a Paraphrase than a Translation. Three or four Years since there were some of our Bodlejan MSS. collated by Procurement of a certain Divine in order to a new Edition of Bede.

³ Publish'd at Oxford An. 1698. 8vo. from Mr. Junius's Transcript by Mr. Christopher Rawlinson, then Gentleman-Commoner of Queen's Coll. in this University. Some are of opinion that Werefred, Bishop of Worcester, was Author of this Translation: others say 'twas done of which we spake before that did so much affect the Hearers. Ælfred himself was so much delighted with this Author, that he always carried it about with him in his Bosom.

The Life of King Ælfred the Great. Book III.

Molmutinæ ¹ leges. lib. I.

Martianæ leges. lib. I.

Afferii sententiæ. lib. I.

Psalterium Davidicum. lib. I. ² This Translation was the last, and that which shut up all his Studies, he being surpris'd by Death, when (as Malmsbury tells us) he had not gone above half way through with it.

101. These were the King's Works, as Mr. Bale hath collected them; but Malmsbury ³ tells us of many more ⁴, though he nameth but few of them, and those already set down: for he saith, plurimam partem Romanæ bibliothecæ Anglorum auribus dedit. And the old MS. ⁵ History of Ely, cited by Arch-Bishop Parker in by Affer Men. as I also find it noted by Dr. Gerard Langbain (from a MS.) in the Margin of a Copy of Florence of Worcester of the 4to Edition, shew'd me about three Years since by the Reverend and Worthy Dr. CHARLETT, Master of University-College. Dr. Plot in his Hist. of Oxfordshire (c. X. §. 118.) tells us that this Translation was made by K. Ælfred at Woodstock, for which he quotes a MS. in the Cottonian Library.

1 Concerning K. Ælfred's Translation of the Molmutian and Martian Laws see Sherringham de Anglor. Orig. p. 125.

2 Publish'd by our Author, Sir John Spelman, at Lond. 1640. 4to. from four MSS. The latter Part of it was done by another Hand: There had been a Saxon Version before, by Aldhelmus Bishop of Shirburne, as is mention'd by Bale in his Life, and confirm'd by Mr. Wharton from an Epistle which he has publish'd of Aldhelmus. [Vide Whartoni Auctarium Historiæ Dogmaticæ J. Usserii &c. p. 351.] Which is likewise mention'd by Mr. Leland, [de Script. Brit.] which he says he saw himself; in which however I believe he is mistaken, and rather believe that 'twas this Version of King Ælfred's, Aldhelm's having been lost before Ælfred's time, as is observ'd by Sir John Spelman in his Preface to his Ed. of the Saxon Psalter.

3 De Gest. Reg. Angl. lib. 2.

4 Amongst which must not be pass'd by his Translating Æsop's Fables out of Greek into Latin and Saxon, as I find it mention'd from a MS. by Mr. Richard James in the VIII. Volume of his MSS. Collections, in Bibl. Bodl. p. 23.

5 Hitt. Elien. lib. 2.

his

his Preface to Affer, saith that the King translated all the New and Old Testament. The Words of the Book (as they are there cited) are thus: Aluredus, acerrimi ingenii Princeps, per Gimbaldum & Joannem, doctissimos monachos, tantum instructus est, ut in brevi librorum omnium notitiam habuerit, totumque novum & vetus Testamentum in eulogiam Anglicæ gentis transmutterit. Neither doth that which Malmsbury saith any whit cross the Book of Ely: for it should seem (even by the order of the Words) that the King began with the most principal, and translated the new Testament first; and that done, he set upon the Old Testament, and so as his time served him he went on, 'till (as he was going through the Psalms) his Work was interrupted by his Death.

102. Besides all these it seemeth that he himself (like

I Boston of Bury saith, totum fere testamentum in linguam Anglicanam transtulit. Which Words I suppose are to be understood of the New-Testament. I find them cited by Archbishop Usher in a Book of MSS. Collections in Custody of James Tyrrell Esq;. But whether Ælfred really translated the whole Bible is somewhat to be doubted, notwithstanding what is said in this History of Ely. For if he had translated all, there would have been no need for Ælfric, Abbot of Winchester, and afterwards Archbishop of York, (and different from Ælfric, Archbishop of Canterbury, as is evidently proved by Mr. Wharton, in his Dissertation de duobus Ælfricis, in Angl. Sacra, T. I. p. 125. which had been also hinted before, with an Argument or two to confirm it, by the Learned Mr. John Josselin, in his Preface to A Testimony of Antiquity &c. I say there would have been no need for Ælfric) to have translated any Part anew afterwards, as 'tis certain he did, and I believe was induc'd to the Task to supply and compleat the Version of King Ælfred. Nor can it be objected that the King's Translation at that time was lost; since he had taken special care to prevent that, by sending Copies of it [See Mr. Lisle's Preface to Ælfric's Treatise concerning the Old and New-Testament, e 2.] with others of his Translation of Gregory's Pastoral, and certain Mancusses, or Marks, of Gold, the fairest of his Coyn, to the several Cathedral Churches; where the Books were kept 'till about the time of the Reformation by King Hen. VIII. See more of the Saxon Version of the Old and New-Testament at the Beginning of Dr. Marshall's Observationes in Versionem Anglo-Sax. of the New-Testament, where he mentions several Versions of Parts of the Scripture in this Language.

Cæsar) writ a Commentary of his own Actions. For Mr. Fox faith¹ that he compiled a Story in Saxon, which was called the Story of Ælfred, and that he himself hath seen both that Story and his Translation of Beda.

His Temper.

103. We may in these see the King's Genius in the true Nature, no soft or roaving Melancholy, feeding it self with a superficial Running over all Variety of Objects, but advised and industrious, to choose and pursue such only as he might best convert unto either publick or private Benefit; so as we may count his Melancholy perfectly natural and ingenious.

104. It was also of an excellent Mixture and Preparation: for it was void both of Sadness and of Timidity, two (almost) inseparable Concomitants of that Humour; therefore he was always free and affable to all Men, of a constant Vigour and Alacrity of Spirit, and for his Courage it was so present and innate in him, that Fear could never make the least momentary Seizure or Misgiving of his Heart, though it often assailed him in desperate and unexpected Accidents: withall it was so rarely qualified, as that how great soever it was, it was yet possessed without that turbulent Ostentation, that lesser Spirits are often clogged withall. His Courage always rose according to the Exigence of the Occasion, and having served that, it quietly and without vapouring resolved into that Virtue that he was next to make use of. Neither was his Heart only conscious of his Valour; but it was actually approved both to himself and others. For though (by the Priviledge of a Prince) his Conduct and Command in the War, might justly enough have afforded him the Title of Valiant; yet Fortune would that the strict Tryal both of his Heart and Hands should make his pur-

¹ Ad An. DCCCLXXII. He also himself compiled a Story in the Saxon Speech, call'd THE STORY OF ÆLFRED. Which Words are ambiguous. Yet that he writ a History I find in the Chronicle call'd, Brute of England.

chafe of it; of both which he often made particular Demonstration, to the great Support of his own Party, to the Terrour of his Adversaries, and to the Admiration of them both. Solus adversum pectus (saith Malmfbury) hostibus offerre, solus inclinatum aciem restituere, nota virtutis suæ specie alienos territans suos corroborans: so little glorying the whilst in what he did, as we may judge that Virtue rather in Esteem with him for the service it always did him, than any way specially affected, the natural Bent of his Heart (as we have said) being wholly¹ unto Literature, and therein, above all other, to the Search of Divine Knowledge, and that, not as it is attained by Speculation only, but (which makes it truly Divine) as it is perfected in the way of Religious Practise.

105. While thus in so high a Strain of a most Exemplar Life, the King was ever exercising of himself, he became a Man beyond the Hopes of any Emulation, having (with a threefold Conquest) in his Enemy got the Mattery of War, in his People of Vice, and in his own Person of human Frailty; so that becoming now a Light of more than ordinary Splendour, and placed upon so eminent a Candlestick as a Throne is, there was no Place in Christendom that received not the Glory of his Beams, being² beloved of all his Neighbour Princes, and honoured of all both far and near, in so much that (as Baronius telleth us) he obtained the Sirname of The Great. And (as we may see in Affer) he was saluted with Letters and a Present from Abel Patriarch of Jerusalem in Asia, which though Affer saw, and read the Letters, yet hath he not mentioned any thing of what they did contain.

Of most consummate virtue. His Esteem a-broad.

106. But most deservedly was he honoured at Rome, who abundantly presented him with Part of their Holy Reliques, and (which more truly argued their Respect unto him) at his Instance freed the Saxon College, or House of Saxons there, from all Tribute and Impositions, which with a heavy Hand had formerly been laid upon it.

1 Æthelwerd. 2 Magna cum finitimis gratia. Affer.

His Death.

107. The King having to this Height of Glory brought his afflicted Affairs, finished the Course of his Natural Life to the great Sorrow and Lamentation of his People, when he had reigned 28 years¹ and 6 Months, and was as well Sovereign of their Hearts and Affections, as of the Rights belonging unto Regal Jurisdiction. He was born in the year 849 at Wantage in Berkshire, (a principal Mannour of the Kings of West-Saxons, and now the Possessions of the Right Honourable Henry Earl of Bath;) he died in the² two and fiftieth year of his Age, upon the fifth of the Calends of November in the year³ 900, and was first buried in the New-Abbey at Winchester, but afterwards his Body was

¹ Fifteen Years only in a MS. of Sir Thomas Bodley's, [NE. B. 1. 6. f. 8. a.] Nineteen Years and six Months in a MS. of Archbishop Laud's G. 9. f. 43. b. Twenty eight Years in an old MS. de Regibus Angliæ, in Bibl. Bodl. inter Codd. Laud. C. 22. f. 1. a. as also in one NE. E. 2. 17. f. 37. b. But in another MS. there, [Codd. Laud. E. 3. f. 10. b.] as also in a MS. History that Mr. Leland saw, [Col. Vol. I. f. 283. a.] 'tis said he reign'd twenty nine Years and an half, and so also 'tis corrected by a later hand in the Margin of Peter de Ickham, inter Codd. Laud. I. 61. b. whereas before 'twas twenty eight Years and an half, just as 'tis in Robert of Gloc. MS. Digb. f. 75. a. and in a MS. of Sir Thomas Bodley's NE. D. 2. 12. f. 42. a. and in another which I have seen there. Twenty nine Years in MS. Digb. 196. as also in a MS. Genealogical Table in Bibl. Bodl. NE. D. 1. 22. f. 60. b. Others say he reign'd full thirty Years, and so Caxton, and some other Chronicles (different from his) call'd Brute of England.

² In the two and sixtieth Year according to an anonymous Author, MS. in Bibl. Bodl. NE. F. 3. 9. But in the 51st. according to the Chronicle of St. Neots, as I find noted by Mr. Leland, Collect. Vol. 2. f. 193. a. in which 'tis moreover said that he died on the seventh of the Calends of Nov.

³ DCCCCI. MS. Digb. 196. and NE. D. 1. 22. f. 60. b. And so in Thomas Rudburn, and some others. But John Hardyng saith 'twas in the Year 898. or (as 'tis in the MS.) 895. See the Note above ad pag. 149. Mr. Walker in the Appendix to the Latin Translation of this Life (after he has given an Account of the different Relations of several Printed Authors about the Time of his Death) tells us that it fell out upon the 5th of the Calends of Nov. being the Feast of St. Simon and Jude, in the Year of Christ 901, and the 53 of his Age.

taken

taken up from thence and buried in the Abbey of Hyde, without the Gates of Winchester ².

108. His Life and Actions have in all Ages since, until of late, been celebrated by the Writers of the Times with their choicest Expressions of his Praises, amongst whom Henry Huntington having for those times well fet forth the Sum of his Life in an Epigram, I thought good here to insert it: Testimonies of his Life and Actions.

Nobilitas innata tibi ³ probitatis honorem
(Armipotens ⁴ Alfrede) dedit; probitasque laborem:

1 In a MS. of Archbishop Land's C. 22. f. 2. a. 'tis said he was buried in Hyde Abbey, without the least Mention of his being buried before in the New-Abbey. But in MS. Land. G. 9. f. 43. b. and in another of Sir Thomas Bodley's, [NE. B. 1. 6. f. 8. a.] he is reported to have been buried in the New-Abbey, without any Hint of his being taken up afterwards: exactly conformable to the Author of a MS. Chronicle in Bibl. Bodl. NE. F. 3. 9. where 'tis expressly said that he lies buried (jacet humatus) in the New-Monastery; tho' in another short Chronicle [in Bibl. Bodl. super Art. A. 42. f. 77. b.] I find him to be buried at Winchester, without express mention of the particular Place.

2 Not at Worcester, as in a MS. Chron. in Bibl. Bodl. NE. D. 2. 12. f. 44. b. Here it rested with several other of our Kings and Noble Persons till Rich. Fox, Bishop of Winchester, about the Year 1520, after many [Speed's Chron. p. 721.] Instances of his Piety, as well to this, as divers other Places in this Kingdom, caused all their Bones to be collected and put into several Chests of Lead, with Inscriptions to each Chest, signifying whose Bones lodged in them: all which he took care to have placed on the Top of a Wall, of exquisite Workmanship, built by him, to inclose the Presbytery of the Cathedral. After they had continued so for many Years, at last, Dec. 14. 1642. the Rebels, headed by Sir William Waller, most sacrilegiously broke into the Church, broke the Glass-Windows, destroy'd the Monuments, and amongst the rest prophan'd and violated these Sacred Cabinets of the Dead, scattering the Bones all over the Church, and carrying them in Triumph into other Places, some whereof were brought to Oxford, and lodged in the Repository adjoining to the Publick Library.

3 Prob. hon. (Arm. A.) dedit are wanting in MS. Bodl. NE. D. 2. 12.

4 Alwede MS. Bodl. NE. B. 2. 14. f. 55. b. not so rightly in the Opinion of Thomas Rudburn, who says, [in Hist. Maj. p. 206. Wharstoni Angl. Sacr. Tom. 1.] in sacra Bapismatis regeneratione vocatus est ALFREDUS, non ALUREDUS, sicut quidam indocte & inhoneste pronunciant. Alfride al.

Perpe-

Perpetuumque labor nomen, cui mixta dolori

Gaudia semper erant, spes semper mixta timori.

² Si modo victor eras, ad crastina bella ³ pavebas.

Si modo victus eras, ad crastina bella parabas.

⁴ Cui vestes sudore jugi, cui sica cruore

Tincta jugi, ⁵ quantum sit onus regnare, probarunt.

Non fuit immensi quisquam per climata mundi,

Cui tot in adversis vel respirare liceret.

Nec tamen aut ferro contritus ponere ferrum,

Aut gladio potuit vitæ ⁶ finire labores.

Jam post transactos vitæ regnique dolores,

Christus et sit vera quies, sceptrumque perenne.

I have also, for the better satisfaction of every Reader, thought good to render them in English:

Thy true Nobility of Mind and Bloud

(O Warlike Ælfred) gave thee to be good.

Goodness Industrious made thee; Industry

Got thee a name to all Posterity.

'Twixt mixed Hopes and Fears, 'twixt Joy and Grief,

Thou ever felt'st Distress, and found'st Relief.

Victor this day, next day thou dost ne'rth'less

I'th Field dispute thy former Day's Success.

Or' come this Day, next Day for all the Blow

Thou giv'st or tak'st another Overthrow. [dry

Thy Browes from Sweat, thy Sword from Bloud ner'e

What 'twas to Reign so to us signify.

The World cannot produce so much as one

That through the like Adversities has gone.

Yet found'st thou not the rest thou fought'st for here,

But with a Crown Christ gives it thee elsewhere.

1 The following Words to timori are wanting in MS. NE.D.2.12.

2 These two Verses immediately following are transpos'd in both the said MSS. in which 'tis also read regni vitæque labores.

3 Mr. Leland, in his Life of King Ælfred, [in opere de Scriptorib. Brit.] for pavebas has parabas, as I find it printed: but upon consulting the MS. I find that 'tis pavebas; and that ra is writ over ve, I believe by Mr. Leland's own Hand.

4 All but the two last Verses are wanting in those two MSS. in which 'tis also read, regni vitæque labores. — 5 Quantus sit honos Leland.

6 Finire Leland.

109. While we consider the Reverend Esteem that He deserv'd to be Canoniz'd for a Saint. generally, and even at Rome it self, was had of this King's Life, I cannot but note it as observable, that after his Death, his Memory was notwithstanding pass'd over without the Honour and Title of a Saint; when questionless had the Church of Rome born the same good Will toward him that they have done to others, it had not been hard for them in the Passages of his Life to have found as good a Ground for his Canonization as they have had for many whom they have Sainted. For beside the Instances that we have lost, his first calling to the Crown was, as we have shewn, by a vision to his Father. The Restoring of his overthrown Affairs was by a Vision to himself confirmed with a Miracle. The Means of his first Mortification was wrought by a Miracle at the Instance of his own Prayers, and by his Prayer in a Miraculous Manner again changed. His Profession was in Poverty, the one Half of his Revenue being given to God, while yet he executed the Function of a King. His Exercise was perpetual Preaching, his Life Regular, and his whole Reign not only a Persecution, but even a Degree of Martyrdom, by vile and barbarous Infidels; so as there hardly seemeth any thing wanting to the Demerit of Saint-Hood.

110. But that we may know, that the King stood not Whether he was in all things conformable to the See of Rome? in all Points in so perfect a Correspondence with that See as some would have us conceive, there are many Particulars that offer themselves to our Consideration. The King walked with too much Knowledge and Understanding, and was not so easy to be led by them as his Father was, and though in Spiritual Matters he revered the Pope (according to the Doctrine of the Times) as Universal Vicar, yet he understood not the Inferences that were after built upon that Foundation, but exercised his Regal Authority absolutely, for which Cause they seem to have declined striving with him, and therefore though it had happened that all the Bishopricks of West-Saxony, viz. Winchester, Cornwal, Shirburn, Wells and Cridda, were for three whole years together vacant vacant and only under the Cure of the Arch-Bishop of Canterbury until the Time of the King's Death, yet hear we of no Offence taken therefore at Rome, but when after his Death they continued as long vacant in his Son Edward's Time, the first News of Distast that he heard of was a Curse and an Excommunication.

III. Again the King went a Course that did threaten and shake the Foundation of that Universal Sovereignty, which in those Times of Darkness they had newly built and made hast to finish: when contrary to the Omission made by their Authority under the Countenance of the Second Nicene Council he supputed unto the Decalogue the Commandment against Images, but especially when he made such Provision for Restoring of Letters, and when he took Order for a General Translation of all Kind of Books of Divine Argument, and above all other the Old and New Testaments into the Vulgar Tongue.

III. Again we see that when the King sought far and near for Learned Men, and procured them from divers Parts beyond the Seas, the Church of Rome gave him no help, neither had he any Scholars from thence, although he sent often thither his Presents and Devout Oblations to St. Peter, and was as often answered with their Holy Favours of another Kind.

III. On the other side when Scotus Erigena was so prosecuted by the Pope for having written something contrary to the Relish of the See of Rome, as that the Emperor's Countenance was no sufficient Protection for him in France, the King did notwithstanding send for him and entertain him here. And above all others used his Help both in Reading to himself in private and publicly to all Comers while he professed in the University.

III. Lastly, though his Strictness toward Religious Men, in Holding them severely to the observance of the Orders of Holy Church, was nothing pleasing to many of them, yet perhaps they would never have given so much Liberty to the venting of their Stomachs as to raise

raise Tales of him after his Death, and say that his Ghost walked, had they not had some discerning that his Life and Ways were not perfectly pleasing to the Fathers of Rome. All which I have the rather noted, because that Baronius, Harpsfeild, and other Romish Catholics, do not a little boast of the Obedience and Conformity of this Glorious Prince as of one that were wholly theirs, whereas indeed (all things considered) he manifested himself to be less theirs than one would think a Christian Prince at those Times could have been, and was certainly rather revered than affected of them.

115. Nicholas Harpsfeild recordeth a Speech of his, which though I find not in Aſſer, (whom he citeth for it) yet may we well enough allow it to be his, as agreeing well with his Moderation and Piety, if so be we may take it with a fair and reasonable Construction, and not understand the Words to have that particular Meaning that Harpsfeild pretends of Submitting Absolutely to what Laws soever the Pope, as Sovereign of the Church, should make. Harpsfeild's Words of Ælfred are these¹: Germanam & genuinam esse Regis dignitatem dicere solebat, si in regno Christi, quæ est Ecclesia, se non regem sed civem agnosceret, si non supra sacerdotum leges se elate efferret, sed legibus Christi per sacerdotes promulgatis submisso se atque humili animo subderet. But this but by the way.

116. The King had to Wife² Ælswith, the Daughter of Æthelred Earl of the Gaines, (Surnamed Muchil or Great) and of Edburgh his Wife, descended of the King of Mercia; and by her he had two Sons and three Daughters.

His Wife and Children.

117. Edward his Eldest Son³ succeeded him in the

¹ In Hist. Angl. secul. IX. c. 5. ² Or Ethelwyth.

³ In Thomas Rudburn's Historia Major (pag. 207. Tom. I. Whartoni Angliæ Sacræ) is mention of another Son named Edmund elder than Edward; which seems to be true from Aſſer's telling us that there were others besides these who died young: tho' there is not the least Hint of this in King Ælfred's Will, printed by Archbishop Parker at the End of his Edition of Aſſer.

Kingdom,

Kingdom, and is commonly known by the Name of *Edward the Elder*¹.

118. His second Son and youngest of his Children was named² Æthelward, and was bred a Scholar.

119. His Eldest Daughter Æthelfleda was married to Æthelred Earl of Mercia. She was a Lady of more than Feminine Spirit, and possessed³ her Father's Virtues and Abilities in a greater Measure than one would think communicable unto the Sex, insomuch that she stood her Brother Edward in extraordinary stead in Manage of his Affairs, although he himself was a Man no whit unanswerable to the Function of a King.

120. His Daughter⁴ Æthelgeow was, as we have said, a Nun, and afterward an Abbess of the Abby of⁵ Æthelengey.

121. His youngest Daughter, named by some *Ælfrith*⁶, by others Æthelwith, was married unto Baldouin, Earl of Flanders, from which Match the after Earls of that Earldom were descended.

122. These

1 He built the Church of Romsy, or Ramsy. See the Catalogue of Churches founded before the Conquest, MS. Digb. 196. & NE. E. 2. 17. in Bibl. Bodl. in both which MSS. however three lines after 'tis said that the said Church was built by Earl Alphine, or Alwyne, exactly agreeable to the History of Ramsy, publish'd by the learned Dr. Gale, the Extracts made by Mr. Dodsworth in Monast. Angl. and other Authors.

2 Or Egelward.

3 Amongst other things (as the Building of Brunnesbury, Burgh upon Severn, Tamworth near Lichfeld, Stafford, Chirisbury, Wabury, and Edisbury, as I find them in a MS. Chron. NE. D. 2. 12. f. 44. a.) she repair'd Warwick after it had been destroy'd by the Danes. See Sir W. Dugdale's Antiq. of Warwicksh. pag. 298. and a Fragment of John Ross in his Book de Episcopis Norwicensibus, inter Coll. Lelandi in Bibl. Bodl. NE. F. 11. 18. f. 39. a.

4 Ethelgora in MS. Bodl. NE. F. 3. 9.

5 Shafesbury in Chron. MS. Bodl. NE. D. 2. 12. f. 44. b.

6 In the said MS. as likewise in Thomas Rudburn's Chron. [See Leland's Coll. MSS. Vol. I. f. 593. a. and Mr. Wharton's Angl. Sacra, Tom. I. pag. 207.] is mention of a fourth Daughter call'd Elfreda, which I believe to be a Mistake arising from Æthelwith's being call'd by some Ælfrith, which the Anonymous Author therefore, as well as Thomas Rudburn, has ignorantly made two distinct Persons; tho'

122. These were all the Sons and Daughters which he had. His Male Descendents for [ten] Successions together did wear the Imperial Crown after him. And though the fatal Visitation and Judgment of God upon the English Nation (first Temporary by the Dane, and after final by the Norman) then fast approaching soon made an End of them and their Successions; yet pleased it God to shew so especial a grace to this King and in him to the whole Kingdom, that albeit the Crown of England should since his Reign suffer three several Translations of it self, and every time fall into the Hands of a several Nation, yet the Descendents Female of King Ælfred outliving the short Empire of the Dane (the first of the three Reigning Forreigners) should by the means of an Happy Match with Henry the first meet again with their long estranged Right, and so uniting it with the Norman Crown bring unto the Kingdom the Blessing of Union and Establishment: And when again it afterward happened that through the Failance of Heirs here within the Land the Crown must needs be once more transferred unto another Nation, even then again pleased it God it should be carried into that Sacred Hand, which (Lineally deriving from King Ælfred's Heirs the long recontinued Right of Inheritance) was preordained to be the Happy Uniter of the two Kingdoms that were within this Island. From whom his Majesty, now Reigning, receiving the Monarchy whole and entired, does, notwithstanding the threefold Alienation, to this Day continue, both in it must be allow'd that this making of Ælfred have four Daughters is conformable to one Part of his Will, publish'd by Archbishop Parker at the End of his Edition of Asserius Men. where 'tis said that he left his four Daughters a Legacy of four hundred Pounds, to each an hundred Pounds: which four hundred Pounds, according to Mr. Camden's Computation [See his Remains, pag. 167. of the 4to Edition.] is about 1200 Pounds of our Money. Yet it must be observ'd that a little before in the same Will is mention made only of three Daughters; so that it were to be wish'd we had a new Edition of it, from the several MSS. now remaining, with all the Variations specify'd at the Bottom of the Page or in the Margin.

Right

Right and Possession, the Lineal Heir and Successor of him that was the first Imperial Founder of English Monarchy.

Deo gloria & gratiarum actiones.

Auctoris ad Ælfredum suum.

DUM te perpetuo gens barbara Marte fatigat,
 Nec vacat (armipotens Ælfrid) ab hoste manus:
 Et dum barbaries (belli comitata furorem)
 Corripit heu! sacri quicquid in orbe fuit:
 Jura, Dei cultus, mores, (bona dulcia pacis)
 Musæ, artes, merces, te faciente, vigent.
 Magne pater patriæ, Regum Regnique Britanni,
 Quantus eras, vetitum jam fore scire, dolet.
 O quam mente capax! ô quam virtute coruscus!
 Exsuperant nostram quam tua facta fidem!
 Culmina summa tenus diadema nepotibus auctum
 Tradis, permodicum quod fuit ante tibi.
 O qui fit, (virtute parem quum vix tulit orbis)
 Te mundo tantum delituisse tenus?
 Maluit hoc siquidem fatum ignorare nepotes,
 Res potius quam non credere posse tuas.

F I N I S.

I Had once design'd to have here subjoyn'd two other excellent Discourses, viz. (1) A View of a Printed Book intituled, Observations upon his Majestie's (King Charles the First's) late Answers and Expresses. Oxon. 1642. 4to. (2) The Case of our Affairs in Law, Religion, and other Circumstances briefly examined, and presented to the Conscience. — 1643. 4to.
*both of them written by this Religious, Loyal, and Learned Author, as I gather from two Memorandums put at the beginning of the Copies of them in the Bodleian Library by Bishop Barlow. But upon second Thoughts
 I have omitted them, (hoping that they will at some time or other be reprinted in a Collection of such Papers by some Judicious Person ;) and have printed only this History of Ælfred the Great, which I have faithfully transcrib'd from the Original in the said Bodleian Library, and been at the Pains also of annexing divers Notes to it, extracted in a great measure from MSS. in which I have been the more particular, because it seems to me that the most minute Circumstance will be thought valuable in the History of those Times, concerning which we have so little left upon Record, if compar'd with what remains of the Times after the Norman Conquest.
 This Life was several Years since translated into Latin by the ingenious Mr. Christopher Wase, Superior Beadle of the Civil Law in Oxford, and publish'd from the Theater-Press in a thin Folio, with a Commentary, by the Reverend and Learned Mr. Obadiah Walker, Master of University College ; but some Persons having been of opinion that more Justice would be done to the Author's Memory to have it publish'd in the same Language in which it was written, in compliance to their Sentiments, I have accordingly sent it abroad in it's own Natural Dress, not doubting but that 'twill meet with a Reception worthy of it's admirable Author ; who however I believe , if he had liv'd to have publish'd it himself,* would have cut off several Passages that he has inserted concerning the two Univerſities.

Mr. Walker, by way of Appendix, has added divers Fragments of Antiquity; which I have ſeen quoted by ſome learned Men as being the Addition of Sir John Spelman himſelf. And indeed it is certain that he intended ſuch a Supplement; but there being no ſuch in the Original MS. I have quite left out all theſe Particulars, and choſen rather inſtead of them to add a Roman Inſcription, lately found at Walcote, about a Mile North-Eaſt of Bathe, and communicated to me by the ingenious and learned Mr. HALLEY, Savilian Profeſſor of Geometry in Oxford. Which tho' it does not relate to the Saxon Hiſtory, yet becauſe it has never yet been publiſh'd, and becauſe it illuſtrates the Hiſtory of this Iſland during the time it was poſſeſs'd by the Romans, I think it may properly enough be allow'd a Place here, and I hope that 'twill be acceptable to all Lovers of this Sort of Learning.

1 See what he ſays, l. II. s. 66.

AN INSCRIPTION

Lately found near BATHÉ, with ſome Observations upon it.

IVLIVS VITA
 LIS FABRICES
 IS LEG XX V V
 STIPENDIOR
 VM IX ANOR XX
 IX NATIONE BE LGA EX COLEGO
 FABRICE ELATV
 S H S E

§ 1. I Have represented the Inscription just as it was describ'd for my Use by Mr. HALLET. Perhaps some may from this, and other Inscriptions mention'd by Mr. Camden, gather that this was a Place of Note in the time of the Romans. If so, we may conjecture that here were then Accommodations provided for the Reception of such Persons as were troubled with Diseases that were Infectious, on purpose to prevent the ill Consequences of those Distempers at Bathe, which was even then frequented by sick People from all Parts of the Kingdom. There is no Record indeed for such a Surmise in the History of the Roman Times; but that 'twas put to such an Use whilst the Saxons were in Britain seems manifest from the Name it self; Walcote, or *Welcote*¹, signifying a Place where the Pestilence is, or rather an Habitation for diseased or sick Folk. Mr. Camden² calls it Waldcote, which makes it have another Signification, either from Waldb, Walb, or Walz, i. e. a Wood, Forrest, or Grove; or else (which is the more likely) from Folb, i. e. a *Plain*³. But however this be, 'tis certain these Ancient Monuments confirm the Opinion of those, who think that the Foss-Way pass'd by here. Mr. Leland in his Account of *Bathe*⁴ mentions nothing of this Way; but in his Account of Cirencester, where most suppose the four Principal Roman Ways cross'd, he hints⁵ that it took it's Course along here; and he insinuates the same in another Place of his *MSS. Collections*⁶. Now this great Way going by this Village occasion'd the Burial Place of the Romans, inhabiting at Bathe, and in walcote perhaps a Place of Note in the Time of the Romans. The Roman Foss-Way in all probability pass'd by it.

¹ Walcote in the old Valor Beneficiorum, in Bibl. Bodl. f. 166. a. Fale signifies the same with Wal or Wal. See Mr. Somner's Saxon Dict.
² See in his Discourse of Bathe. ³ See Dr. Gibson's Interpretation of the Names of Places, at the End of the Saxon Chron. ⁴ Itin. MS. Vol. II. fol. 36. ⁵ See ibid fol. 25. Also Mr. Hollingshead's, or rather Mr. Harrison's Descript. of Brit. Part. I. cap. 19. p. 112. ⁶ Vide Coll. Tom. II. p. 353, 354. ex Historia Eulogii, quam scriptam opinatur Lelandus à Monacho quodam Malmsburiensi.

the Neighbouring Places to be fix'd here. For after the Publication of the XII. Tables ¹ 'twas unlawful to bury the Bodies not only within the City of Rome, but also in other Cities both in Italy and elsewhere; tho' sometimes the Law was transgress'd, by Connivence of the Commissioned Officers, upon Account of Persons of extraordinary Rank. This Prohibition being once Publisch'd, the Places of chief Note for the Funeral Exequies were the Publick High-Ways, as Gutherius ² has particularly noted; by which must be chiefly understood the most Principal Ways, such as the four noted ones in this Isle, of which the Foss was one. The Reason of their Pitching upon Places adjoyning to these Ways for Burial appears not only from Varro, who says ³, monumenta enim in Sepulchris secundum viam sunt, quæ prætereuntes admoneant & se fuisse, & illos esse mortales; but likewise from ancient Inscriptions, especially one in Gruter ⁴.

§. 2. 'Tis manifest from the Inscription that Julius Vitalis, one of the Belgæ, who inhabited Somerset shire, Wilt-shire, and the inner Part of Hamp-shire, by Birth, was Fabricensis to the XXth. Legion, which was styl'd Valens Victrix, that being the Meaning of V. V. as appears from several Inscriptions in Gruter, and other old Monuments. Dion calls ⁵ it Valeriana Victrix, and Pancirollus ⁶ Valeria Victrix. Mr. HALLEY told me that he was of Opinion that at the time this Monument was erected the Word Fabricensis was pronounced Fabriciesis; as if Ci were a Ligature or double Letter for CI. What may be thought to make good his Conjecture is the Word CALEGO below, where, if we follow the common way of Writing and Pronouncing, there must be two Ligatures or double Letters, namely Ci for OL,

¹ See Gutherius de Jure Manium, lib. II. cap. 33. ² Loc. cit.
³ Lib. 5. de Ling. Lat. ⁴ CCCXXXI. 5. ⁵ Lib. 55. Vide Ursationi de Notis Romanorum, pag. 821. Tomi XI. Grævi Thes. Antiq. Roman.
⁶ Vide Ursat. loc. cit.

and C for CI. But I am rather inclin'd to believe that the C in FARBICESIS should be a C; unless we will suppose that 'twas made a G on purpose, in Conformity to the then Custom of using oftentimes G for C, and C for G, in the same manner as they pronounced lectiones for legiones, and Geres for Ceres, if we follow the Derivation from gero, as Tully himself remarks, in de Nat. Deor. l. 3. §. 62. This therefore may be either Way; but 'tis highly probable that the Mark (-) for an N over the E is either worn out, or omitted by the Cutter. We have Variety of Instances of M and N being left out, especially at the Ends of Words¹, and I have often observ'd it in MSS. In one of Tully's de Nat. Deor. which I have before me now, [in Bibl. Bodl. super Art. A. 2.] in lib. III. §. 58. is Pinnatum Cupidine for Pinnatum Cupidinem, without any Mark of Omission over the e. And in the same MS. at §. 80. is interpti for interempti, the Note for m being likewise wanting. In lib. I. De Div. §. 17. the MS. has clara speciem for claram speciem. And whereas in §. 44. of the same Book, in the last *Vers*e of the Fragment out of Accius in the common Editions it is liquier, being so I suppose in the MS. from whence the first Edition was made, (the Scribe having forgot to add the usual Mark for an n) it should be linquier, as I find it in the said Bodleian MS. And so both Gruter and Gronovius have corrected it in their Notes upon the Place from the best MSS. Nay even in the most accurate Inscriptions we meet sometimes with such Defects. Thus in the Pisan Table to the Memory of Lucius Cæsar we have in the 12th Line cos sum for consensum, and in the last Line omia for omnia; of which Cardinal Noris has taken special Notice, in his Excellent Discourse upon these Venerable Monuments. I am not ignorant that *Quintilian*² tells us that the Antients us'd colyma for columna; but that is to be understood of their Pronunciation only not of their Writing¹, notwithstanding columella has been always writ instead of columnella. The same is to be said of mostrum instead of monstrum. They writ it with an n, however they left it out in Pronunciation. Yet mo-stellum was not only writ but pronounced so². Nor does Quintilian allow of writing it columa. And not only the Latins, but the Greeks sometimes left out μ and ν .³ So in old Books we have $\Theta\kappa\sigma\tau$ for $\Theta\mu\kappa\sigma\tau$, $\sigma\delta\alpha\pi\tau\iota\varsigma$ for $\sigma\delta\kappa\alpha\mu\tau\iota\varsigma$, and $\alpha\mu\sigma\sigma\epsilon\delta\iota\varsigma$ for $\alpha\mu\sigma\sigma\epsilon\delta\iota\varsigma$.³ In Origen's $\alpha\lambda\epsilon\sigma\tau\epsilon\phi\alpha\mu\epsilon\upsilon\alpha$ (for it bears his Name, tho' he was not the Author) we have $\phi\delta\alpha\tau\iota\varsigma$ for $\phi\delta\alpha\mu\tau\iota\varsigma$, as Mr. Wolfius has noted in pag. 16. of his Edition. And in the Barocccian MS. of Homer's Ilias (in Bibl. Bodl. num. CGIII.) in the last Book, v. 274 is $\epsilon\gamma\gamma\alpha\phi\alpha\upsilon$ for $\epsilon\gamma\gamma\alpha\mu\phi\alpha\upsilon$ in v. 331. there is $\zeta\eta$ for $\zeta\eta\upsilon$ and in v. 359. $\gamma\gamma\alpha\mu\phi\iota\sigma\iota\eta$ for $\gamma\gamma\alpha\mu\phi\iota\sigma\iota\eta$. If we could meet any where with Fabrica's being written Fabricia, it would countenance the Conjecture for Fabricieſis; but I cannot find that 'tis ever writ so; and 'tis even different in this very Inscription.⁴ 'Tis true in Du-Fresne's Glossary Fabricia occurs; but that is in another Signification. Nor can I find that 'tis ever Fabricieſis in an ancient MS. of the Theodosian Code (where there is a distinct Title de Fabricensibus) in Mr. *Selden's Archives*⁵ of the Bodlejan Library. Neither will the Word COLLEGO at the Bottom of the Inscription make any thing for that Opinion. For I believe that the I is omitted after G, just as sometimes we find it in these antient Monuments.⁶ And as for the Q, I do not at present take it to be a Ligature or double Letter, but rather a small a, it being common in Inscriptions to mix small Letters with Capitals.⁶ And we have Instances that a was sometimes us'd for o, even as ae amongst the Saxons was afterwards for o. Thus they writ $\text{fæ}r\tau\epsilon\eta\text{-fæ}d\epsilon\eta$ and ræſter-bearn, for rorſter-ræden and rorſter-beann, as it appears in the Menologium Saxonicum MS. And then as to one of the *l*s being left out, we have a great Number of Examples for it. So in Gruter we have collega for *collega*¹; eficax for *efficax*²; efe for *esse*³; jouſſit for *jouſſit*⁴; Macelum for *Macellum*⁵; profefus for *profefſus*⁶; ſupelex for *Supellex*⁷; to omit others. Even the Grammarians themſelves take Notice of this, and ſome of them acquaint us,⁸ that when the Antients did not double the Conſonants they had a certain Mark over the Word to ſignify that they ſhould be doubled. Theſe Errors in Inſcriptions (if they really are ſuch) will not however make againſt their Authority, there being in thoſe that were to the Memory of any Perſon of extraordinary Note and Diſtinction, all poſſible Care taken to have them right, eſpecially in thoſe more near Rome; and there were Penalties annex'd to Negligence. For Perſons of leſs Note, there was leſs Care, as like- wiſe there was in Places of great Diſtance from the City: whence ariſes the greater or leſſer Authority in Rules of Orthography, tho' in other Reſpects the Inſcriptions may perhaps be equally valuable. And it may be we may attribute the Omiſſions in this Inſcription we are now conſidering to the Diſtance of the Iſle from Rome.

¹ Vide Josephi Scaligeri Indicem eorum in Gruteri Inscriptt. quæ ad rem Grammaticam pertinent. Vide etiam Schurzfleischii Orthographiam, p. 28.

² Instit. lib. I. c. 7.

¹ See Vossius's Etymolog. voc. COLUMNA. ² See Voss. loc. cit.
³ See Salmassius's Notes ad Dedicat. Stat. Regillæ Herodis, p. 87. ⁴ B. 32.
⁵ See Scaliger loc. cit. ⁶ See Gruter DCLII. 2. DCCLXXXII. 7. CLXXXV. 3. DCLII. 8. and Livy Edit. Oxon. Vol. VI. p. 181. ⁷ See Scioppius de Arte Critica, where he gives an Account de Scriptura Longobardica.

§ 3. I do not remember to have ſeen the Word Fabricenſis in any other Inſcription; but, as I obſerv'd juſt now, in the *Theodoſian Code*⁹ there is an Article expreſſly about them; by which we are inform'd that their proper Office was to make Publick Arms, which they were to do in the Publick Fabricæ or Forges. And when they had made them, they were to give them to the Officer, whoſe Buſineſs it was, that they might be carefully placed in the Publick Armories.

The Office of the Fabricenſes. They were different from the Barbaricarii.

1 DXLI. 6. 2 XXXIII. 4. 3 CLXXI. 8. 4 CLXXI. 8. See alſo the Laws of the Bacchanalia in Edit. Oxon. T. Livii, Vol. VI. p. 237. 5 CLXXI. 8. 6 CCV. 2. 7 CLXXXIII. 9. 8 Vide Marii Victorini Art. Grammas. apud Puiſchium, col. 1456. 9 Lib. X. Tit. 22. Vide item XI. Cod. Juſt. IX. & Novellam Theodoſii XLIII.

REMARKS upon a Roman

That they might attend this Work wholly, none but such as were of the College of the Fabricenses were allow'd to make Arms for the Use of the *Empire*¹; a Publick Salary was settled upon them²; they were prohibited to sell their Arms for an Addition to the *Salary*³; they were not to be involv'd in Business of the City where they resided⁴, and therefore only such as were not curiales, i. e. those that were *a curia liberi*⁵, were receiv'd into the College. Moreover after they were created, or once admitted Members of the College, neither themselves nor their Children could desert that Office 'till such time as they obtain'd the Honour of *Primicerius*⁶. In order to which every Fabricensis had a Stigma or Mark made upon his Arm, by which he might be discover'd if he fled away⁷. The Primicerius was the Master or Governour of the Fabrica. He is call'd by *Ammianus Marcellinus*⁸, tribunus Fabricæ. Sometimes we find him styl'd Præpositus Fabricæ, and *Subadjuva Fabricæ*⁹. Under the same Officer were also the Barbaricarii (sometimes corruptly writ Barbarici, Barbari, or Barbarii, and Brambaricarii) who were to adorn and beautify the Arms made by the *Fabricenses*¹⁰. As for the Primicerius himself, he was under the Magister Officiorum, and was to give an Account to him of the Arms lodg'd by him in the Publick Armories, as we gather from the Notitia Imperii, and the Commentators upon it.

We had at least one Fabrica in Britain, which perhaps was plac'd at Barhe: §. 4. But what seems most remarkable in this Inscription is that by it is suggested that in the time of the Romans here was a Publick Fabrica in Britain. 'Tis true the Notitia mentions no such thing; but Pancirollus and others have observ'd that the Copies are not exactly taken from the MSS. and therefore 'twould be time well spent for those, who have opportunity, to consult them particularly for this thing, especially since we are sure that some Copies reckon XX. Fabricæ in the *Western Empire*¹; whereas the Vulgar Editions have only XIX. If there be no Defect in the Common Editions, to reconcile the Inscription with them, we may suppose here was a Fabrica erected after the Establishment of the Empire by Constantine the Great, at such time as the Isle was very much infested and almost overrun by Barbarous Enemies. And this might be done either by the Vicarius, or else by the Comes Britanniarum, tho' I rather incline to the Latter, the other being not concern'd in Military Affairs. There was the Dux Britanniarum also, who might likewise challenge this Power, were we not assur'd that he was inferior to the Comes, and was only assistant to him. The Comes had the whole Care himself of the Military Government of the Isle, (excepting that Part which belong'd to the Comes Littoris Saxonici) and was immediatly under the Magister Militum of the West. However this be, (for from our present Evidences we cannot determine) we may I think, conclude that we had in Britain at least one Fabrica, which in all likelyhood was plac'd at Bathe, or Aque Solis, as then call'd. For all Fabricæ were erected in such Towns as were very considerable, and were not far from the Limits of the Empire and the *Souldiers*², to which Bathe does not at all disagree. The Expression ex collegio Fabricæ elatus likewise denotes the Fabricæ's being in a Neighbouring City, the terms efferre and educere, or rather deducere, being properly us'd for Burial, when the Bodies were carried out of Cities into the Pomeria, or into the Adjoyning Places where they buried them: nor were they³ brought into use, till after 1 See Pancirollus ex Edit. Grævii, col. 1866. B. 2 Panciroll. col. 1498. B. 3 See Gyraldus de vario sepeliendi ritu, p. 736. Edit. Lugd. B. MDCXCVI. and J. Faer's Com. upon the Place. Also Kirchman. de Funerib. Rom. lib. II. c. I.

¹ See Pancirollus upon the Notitia Imp. col. 1498. B. of Grævius's Edition. ² Ibid. ³ Ibid. ⁴ Ibid. col. 1508. A. ⁵ Ibid. and Cassiod. VII. 18. where he gives the Form us'd in Creating the Fabricenses, call'd by him armorum factores. ⁶ Panciroll. ibid. col. 1508. B. ⁷ Ibid. ⁸ L. XV. c. 5. ⁹ See Gothofred's Notes upon the Theodosian Code. ¹⁰ See Gothofred. ib. Du Fresne's Gloss. Medicæ & Infimæ Latinitatis, and Pancirollus.

REMARKS upon a Roman

the XII Tables for hindering Burying within the City were promulged. Answerable to which the Greeks made use of ἐκφέρειν and ἐκκομίζεν. Thus in Luke VII. 12. ὡς δὲ ἤγγισεν τῇ πύλῃ τῆς πόλεως, κηδὶς ἐξεκομίζετο τερνικῶς. And κομίζεσθαι was also us'd in the same sense, as may be seen in Stephens's Thes.

§ 5. The Fabrica being settled here, (for so we will suppose, till something be alledg'd to disprove it) was supply'd with Iron from the Neighbouring Countries, there being great Store of it in those Parts. But the chief Place that afforded them Iron seems to have been the Forrest of Dean in Monmouthshire, where there is a prodigious Quantity of Iron Stone and Cinders found, with which is made the best Soft Iron in the known World. These Cinders are call'd the Roman Cinders, being nothing else but the Rough and Offal thrown by in the time of the Romans, who had only Foot-blasts to melt the Iron Stone, but now by the Force of a great Wheel, that drives a Pair of Bellows twenty Foot long, all that Iron is extracted out of the Cinders, which could not be forced from it by the Roman Foot-blast. And not only in the Forrest of Dean, and thereabouts, but even as high as Worcester there are such large and infinite Quantities of these Cinders, some in vast Mounts above Ground, as will supply the Iron-Works some *Hundreds of Years*³. This, I think, is a sufficient Indication not only of the great Store of Iron made by the Romans, but likewise of the great Number of Arms us'd by them. As the Fabrica was set in a Place very convenient for Iron, so also was it for Coals, both which the Provincials were oblig'd to bring into the Fabrica by the Laws of the Empire, as is observ'd by Gothofred in his Notes upon Theodosius. But whereas some may be inclin'd to think that the Hills round about Bathe had formerly

¹ See England's Improvement by Sea and Land, written by Andrew Tarrington, p. 57. ² See ibid. p. 59, 60. ³ Ibid.

Veins of Iron in them, and that for that reason the Roman Fabrica might be settled here, I must confess that I cannot conform to such an opinion. For notwithstanding *Johnson*¹ declares that he is of opinion that the Heat and Tincture of our Bathe Waters proceed from the Veins of Iron conceiv'd by him to be hid in these Hills, yet others of great Observation and exquisite Judgment in these *Matters*², tell us that Iron causes no such Heat and Tincture, and to confirm their Sentiments, they instance in Waters where there are certainly Veins of Iron; and they therefore concur with those³ who believe that these Accidents in the Bathe Waters proceed from certain Chalky Stones which have been found here and there to work out of the Ground.

§. 6. Amongst other things we may take ^{The ancient Way of Pointing, as Lipdore corrected.} occasion from this Inscription to consider the ancient Way of Pointing amongst the Romans. First of all they used no Points, as *Putean*⁴ has taken Notice from Quintilian. Some are of opinion that they were brought into Use in the Reign of Adrian, because in Suidas'tis reported of *Nicanor*⁵ the Grammatician that he writ ὡς στυμνὸς τὸ κατὰ τὴν βιβλίαν ἐστίν, and also περὶ στυμνῶν τῆς παρ' Ὀμήρου, καὶ τῆς παρὰ Καλλιμάχου. But Lipsius observes⁶ that this was only a Motion made for bringing in Pointing, not that it was receiv'd: which is probable enough from what Suidas himself presently after delivers, namely that for these Books he was laugh'd at by divers Waggs, and called Σπυματίας. — ὅτι ἡ παραματεία σκαπτομένων πρὸς πῶν Σπυματίας ἐκαλεῖτο. Points were therefore brought into Use afterwards, but when is uncertain, Books that we have in Capital Letters being without them. So that it seems 'twas after Small Letters came to be in Fashion that they were brought up. Which is also confirm'd from the Word they were first call'd by, viz. Posituræ. They were different from

¹ De Thermis Bathonicis, at the end of his Mercurius Botanicus.

² See Dr. Childrey's Britannia Baconica, p. 36. ³ See ibid. p. 38.

⁴ De Distinct. c. IV. ⁵ See Suid. in hac voce. ⁶ In his Letter about Pointing, printed with Putean's Diss. de Distinct.

what

REMARKS upon a Roman

what we use at present, being but three in Number, a Subdistinction or Comma, a Middle Distinction or Colon, and a Final Distinction or Period. These three Points or Distinctions were all they had, and they varied from one another only by the different Position of the Tittle they made use of, the First being plac'd at the Bottom, the Second against the Middle, and the Third at the Top of the Letter. Of this we have a full Account in the following Words of Isidore: *Positura est figura ad distinguendos sensus per cola, & commata & periodos. quæ dum ordine suo apponitur, sensum nobis lectionis ostendit. Dictæ autem Posituræ, vel quia punctis positæ annotantur; vel quia ibi vox pro intervallo distinctionis deponitur. Has Græci στίχας vocant, Latini Posituras. Prima Positura Subdistinctio dicitur, eadem ⲉ ⲛⲟⲙⲁ. Media distinctio sequens est, ipsa ⲉ ⲛⲟⲗⲟⲛ. Ultima distinctio quæ totam sententiam claudit, ipsa est ⲉ ⲁⲓⲓⲟⲗⲟⲛ: cuius, ut diximus, partes sunt ⲛⲟⲗⲟⲛ & ⲛⲟⲙⲁ: quarum diversitas punctis diverso loco positæ demonstratur. Ubi enim in initio pronunciationis necdum plena pars sensus est, & tamen respirare oportet, fit comma, id est particula sensus punctusque ad unam literam ponitur, & vocatur Subdistinctio, ab eo quod punctum subtus, id est, ad unam literam accipit. Ubi autem in sequentibus jam sententia sensum præstat, sed adhuc aliquid superest de sententiæ plenitudine, fit colon, medianque literam puncto notamus, & median distinctionem vocamus, quia punctum ad median literam ponimus. Ubi vero jam per gradus pronuntiando plenam sententiæ clausulam facimus, fit periodus: punctumque ad caput literæ ponimus, & vocatur distinctio, id est, disjunctio: quia integram separat sententiam. Thus the Common Editions, But for unam in both Places ought to be read unam, as I have found it written in two MSS. in the Bodleian Library². In another MS. in the same Library³ is punctumque for punctusque. And in all three* of them for the last Words separat sententiam is separavit sententiam.

¹ De Originibus lib. I. c. 19. ² NE. D. 6. 6. & NE. D. 7. 8. See also Puteanæ de Disinſt.

§. 7. As the most ancient MSS. so also the earliest Inscriptions were without Points. Lipsius tells us that all Monuments of this Kind that he had seen were without Notes of Distinction; but by Notes of Distinction here he must needs mean such Notes as we have mention'd above from Isidore. For 'tis certain that in most of the Latin Inscriptions in Gruter and others there are full Points after every Word, unless at the End of a Line or Verse. Even in all the Editions of the Fasti Capitolini, we have these Points; nor are they wanting either in the Columna Rostrata (excepting after the Numeral Letters²) or in that of Scipio Barbatus. Yet I must confess that the two first Words in this latter are confounded in Sirmondus's Edition³; but in other Editions they are distinguish'd with a Point⁴, placed against the Middle of the Letter, as all the other Points are; which manner of Placing is to be seen in divers other Inscriptions, and particularly in the Laws of the Bacchanalia, where however sometimes they are omitted both in Fabretti's and Gronovius's Edition, as I have expressly noted in the Oxford Edition of *Livy*⁵. The reason of putting Points after every Word was to prevent Confusion⁶, a thing, which, for want of such Distinctions, is often found in Greek Inscriptions, such as the Chronicon Marmoreum, and the Covenant between the Smyrnæans and Magnesiensians, both preserv'd at Oxford: and Instances may likewise be seen in Salmastus's Edition of Dedicatio Statuæ Regillæ Herodis, the two first Words whereof (not to mention others) are confounded, being ΔΕΥΡΠΙΤΕ for ΔΙΟΥ' ΙΤΕ. Sometimes Inscriptions first of all without Points. Afterwards, for preventing Confusion, full Points put between every Word, unless at the End of a Line or Verse. Sometimes the Mark of the Point alter'd (as in this Inscription) according to the Pleasure of the Cutter.

¹ In his Letter de Distinct. ² Vide T. Livii Hist. Edit. Oxon. Vol. VI. p. 205, 206. ³ Oper. Tom. IV. ⁴ Vide T. Livii Edit. Oxon. T. VI. p. 207. ⁵ Vol. VI. p. 237. ⁶ See Cellarius's Orthogr. pag. 70.

instead

REMARKS upon a Roman Inscription &c.

instead of Points we have other Marks of Distinction, which ¹ are however to be attributed purely to the Artists, who, for Ornament, were pleas'd to turn the Points into such Figures. Such are [,]² (being the same with our modern Comma) ³, ⁴, ⁵, and (to pass by the rest) ⁶. Which last agrees with the Marks in our Bathe-Inscription; only we may observe that after the last Letters of the Inscription are no Marks, because they are placed at such a Distance from one another, as 'tis almost impossible they should be confounded by the Transcribers or Readers. Yet I do not deny but that in Gruter oftentimes we have Points after the Letters, tho' plac'd at a great Distance from one another; but I much doubt whether they are really so in the Stones themselves. As for what else concerns this valuable Inscription I refer you to an accurate Discourse written upon it in Latin by the Learned Mr. DODWELL, (as he has inform'd me by a Letter) which I believe he will publish in a short time. He took occasion to write down his Thoughts about it from a Letter which I writ to the Reverend and Learned Mr. FRANCIS BROKESBY, to whom I likewise sent a Copy of the Inscription.

¹ See Cellarius ibid. p. 71. ² Grut. CCCXXXIX. 3. ³ Ibid. CCCXCIII. 3. ⁴ Ibid. DXC. 5. ⁵ Ibid. DXCI. 7. ⁶ Grut. DXCIII. 5.

F I N I S.

I N D E X.

A.

A Cæsar 229.
Ælfred born at Wantage 216. sent to Rome 17. anointed King in his Infancy 19. his Uction truly regal 20. carried the second time to Rome 23. active and powerful 29. but addicted to Literature ibid. his Heat and Rashness 42. succeeds Æthelred in the Kingdom of West-Saxons 44. raiseth an Army 45. is overthrown at Wilton, and conditioneth with the Danes ibid. compoundeth for their Departure 48. conceals himself 54. his exceeding Charity 58. his Dream 59. like an Harper enters the Danes Camp 63. encourageth the Saxons 64. giveth Laws to the Danes 67. increaseth his Shipping 71. pursues the Guard of the Coast 73. sets upon the new and un-subjected Danes ibid. rebuilds his wasted Towns 75. fortifies his Borders 76. orders his Levies of Men ibid. attends the Danish Army 80. relieves Exeter 83. sets a Guard upon the Danes 87. and moors their Ships 88. a most absolute Monarch 95. he maketh Laws 96. seeketh those that are most equal ibid. most of his Collections of that Kind lost 98. those that are extant are merciful 101. whether K. Ælfred first divided England into Shires? 110. he applies his Endeavours to the Reclaiming of the People 124. an Excellent Poët ibid. a MS. Collection of his Precepts and Instructions 125. but 'twas compiled by some later hand ibid. a Specimen of it 127. his Proverbs 131. a Fragment of them publish'd by Dr. Hickes ibid. he seeketh to restore Learning 132. King Ælfred, Wulfsig, Æthelstan, Werebert, Wereolf, St. Neotus, and others, take great pains in instructing those that were illiterate 139. and in translating Books 140. he foundeth Schools 143. and an University at Oxford 144, 171. this was in the year 873, as is express'd in a MS. of Archbishop Laud's; not about the year 800, as a MS. Paper would have it in University-College Treasury 146. he ordereth his Military Discipline 147. and ordaineth a standing Navy for Mastery of the Seas 150. advanceth Navigation 152. improveth Manufactures 156. his Counsel of two sorts ibid. viz. 1. the Great Council of the Kingdom ibid. 2. the Privy-Council 157. he adorns and beautifies the Kingdom 159. repairs and builds Cities 161. Forts and Castles built by him 163. Monasteries and Religious Houses 164. as Æthelingey 165, Shaftsbury 167. and the new Monastery at Winchester ibid. he began the Foundation of Hyde-Abbey 168. an universal Benefactor ibid. a Grant of his to the Church of Worcester in London 170. the Controversy about about his Founding the University of Oxford examin'd 171. His Exhibitions to the Schools founded by him continued to the Norman Conquest 196. he builds and repairs the King's Palaces 197. as also the Farms and Mannour-Houses ibid. exact in ordering his Works 198. the ordering his Household ibid. provides himself of Musicians 199. of Falconers, Huntsmen, &c. ibid. of Artisans, Jewellers, &c. 200. confers the Order of Knight-hood 201. his Devotion 202. his Regularity in his Devotion 203. his Poverty and Alms 204. his Strictness in Religious Offices ibid. his private Life 209. the first Specimen of his Inclination to Learning ibid. his Progress in Learning answerable to the Beginning 210. Books compos'd and translated by him ibid. the year when he compos'd his Books gather'd from a MS. ibid. a fair Copy of his Translation of Orosius in the Bodlejan Library 212. some say he was not Author of that Translation ibid. his Translation of Bede publish'd by Mr. Whelock 211. his Translation of Boetius publish'd by Mr. Christopher Rawlinson ibid. some say Wereseth Bishop of Worcester was Author of it ibid. others that 'twas done by Asser Men. 212. Ælfred made this Translation at Woodstock, according to a MS. in the Cottonian Library ibid. his Translation of the Psalter publish'd by Sir John Spelman ibid. There was a Translation of it before Ælfred's time ibid. he Translated Æsop's Fables into Latin and Saxon, tho' not mention'd in the common Accounts of his Works ibid. 'tis doubtful whether the whole Bible was Translated by him 213. his Translation of several Parts of the Bible, with his Translation of Gregory's Pastoral, preserv'd in Cathedral Churches 'till about the time of the Reformation ibid. amongst other Things he writ a History, in Imitation of Julius Cæsar 214. his Temper ibid. of most consummate Virtue 215. his esteem abroad ibid. his Death 216. how long he reign'd ibid. where buried 216, 217. his Bones with others of our English Kings put into Chests of Lead by Bishop Fox 217. but afterwards scatter'd by the Rebels ibid. Testimonies of his Life and Actions ibid. Epigram upon him ibid. he deserv'd to be Canoniz'd for a Saint 219. whether he was in all things conformable to the See of Rome? ibid. his Wife and Children 222. See Hyde Abbey: see Wilton: see Talbot.

I N D E X.

Ælfric Archbishop of York translated Part of the bible into Saxon 213. the occasion of it ib.

Ælfrieth, or Æthelwith, 222.

Ælfwith 222. see Winchester.

Æsop's Fables translated into Latin and Saxon by King Ælfred 212.

Æthelbald conspires 27. succeeds Æthelwolf 28.

Æthelbert 28.

Æthelfleda 222.

Æthelgeow 222.

Æthelingey, the Monastery there founded by K. Ælfred 165.

Æthelred 28. his Preparation against the Danes 41. his Devotion ibid. and Success 42. he dyeth 43.

Æthelstan

I N D E X.

Æthelstan Knighted by King Ælfred 201.

Æthelstan Bishop of London 138. see Ælfred.

Æthelwith: see Ælfrith.

Æthelward 222.

Æthelwolf 15. his Children 16. gives the tenth Part of all his Kingdom unto the Church 21. That Grant considered 21, 22. takes to Wife Judith, Daughter of Charles the Bald 23, 24. his Return from Rome 27. his Death ibid.

Albourg (St.) see Wilton.

Aldermen of the Shires 114.

Aldhelmus Bishop of Shirburn, his Version of the Psalter 212. an Epistle of his publish'd by Mr. Wharton ibid.

Anointing of Kings in England before K. Ælfred's time 17, 18.

Antoninus's Itinerary corrected 78.

Asser Menevensis 136. his Annals publish'd by Dr. Gale 52, 136. an Addition at the End of them made by another Hand 136. in which there is a Mistake ibid. a Reading in him defended 163. a Passage in him of Mr. Camden's Edition prov'd to be genuine 178. he is confounded by some with Asser Bishop of Shirburn 136. see Ælfred.

Athelney: see Æthelingy.

B.

Barbaricarii what 232.

Bathe, a Roman Fabrica there 232. which was supply'd with Iron as well as Coals from the Neighbouring Countries 234. Yet never any Veins of Iron in the Hills round Bathe ibid.

Bavord-Castle 80.

Bede explain'd 178, 179. that Passage compar'd with 9 or 10 Oxford MSS. 179. a new Edition of him design'd by a certain Divine 211.

Bocton 80.

Boddington: see Buttington.

Boston of Bury, a Passage out of him 213.

Britains: see Difference.

Brokesby Mr. 238.

Burrhed expell'd Mercia 47.

Burton: see Speed.

Buttington, or Boddington, 85.

C.

Cambridge-University founded since Oxford 178. Some pitch upon Cantaber, others upon Sigebert, for Founder 192. yet both equally in the wrong ibid.

Camden vindicated 177.

Charlett Dr. a Copy of Florence of Worcester of the 4to. Edition in his Hands with MSS. Notes by Dr. Langbain 212.

Chrisn what 66.

Christians in Britain persecuted severely 4.

Common-Law, it's Original 107.

Confirmation, the Ceremony of it, 20.

Council: The Great-Council of the Kingdom in K. Ælfred's time 156. the Privy-Council 157. Original of the constant Use of the Solemn Councils now call'd Parliaments ibid.

Counties, the Original of them 7.

County-Courts: see Hundred-Courts.

D.

Danes arrive in great Numbers in East-Anglia 30, 31. they surprise York 32. return to York 34. thence go into East-Anglia 35. take Reading 40. they are besieg'd ibid. force their Besiegers,

Q

I N D E X.

fiegers, and come to Asb-downe 41. they are overthrown 42. come to London 46. thence to Torksey ibid. thence to Repton 47. and expel Burrhed ibid. surprife Wereham 48. their Solemn Oath ibid. Perjury 49. they surprife Exeter ibid. many Conflicts with them 50. they surprife Chippenham 53. their Standard taken 61. they are overthrown 65. besieged ibid. submit ibid. remove to Circhester 70. a new Arrival of them ibid. and Return ibid. they return out of France 72. attempt Rocheſter ibid. leave their Booty and return ibid. 330 Sail of Danes from France 78. 80 Parones ibid. The Danes rebel 79. riſe and forrage Kent 81. part intercepted at Farnham ibid. the Inland-Danes enter the West-Country 82. the Danes at Shobury forrage 85. besieged at Buttington ib. and overthrown 86. surprife Leyceſter ibid. and relinquish it 87. come to Hartford ibid. are in vain aſſailed by the Londoners ibid. diſband 89. the laſt Remainder of them exerciſe Piracy ibid. but without Succels 90.

Decennaries and Leets, the Benefit of them 117. fit for Plantations 118.

Difference between the Britains and Saxons, the Occaſion of it 61.

Diſabling of Perſons excommunicate, the Original of it 107.

Dodwell 5, 238.

Dome-boc 114.

Domeſ-day-Book, it's Original 115.

Douglafs's Translation of Virgil corrected 61.

Dunmolph 138. not Doctor of Div. ibid. nor Bp. of Wincheſter ib.

E.

East-Anglia and Northumberland aſſign'd to the Danes 66.

Eddington, the Battle there 65.

Edmund (King) ſlain 39.

Edward the Elder 222. ſee Hyde-Abbey.

Ethelingey: ſee Æthelingey.

F.

Fabrica: at leaſt one Roman Fabrica or Forge in Britain, which perhaps was plac'd at Baſhe 232. and was ſupply'd with Iron as well as Coals from the Neighbouring Countries 234.

Fabricenſis, Fabricieſis, or Fabrigenſis 228. the Office of the Fabricenſes 231. they were different from the Barbaricarii ibid.

Fleetwood Biſhop 5.

Florence of Worceſter: ſee Charlett.

Foſs-Way in all Probability paſſ'd by Walcoſe near Baſhe 227.

Fountaine Sr. Andrew 26. one of his Coyns illuſtrated 61, 62. from one of the Coyns publiſh'd by him 'tis conjectured that King Ælfred the Great either repair'd or enlarg'd the City of Norwich 164.

Fox Biſhop: ſee Ælfred. Fox Mr. 214.

G.

Gale: ſee Aſſer.

Gibſon Dr. 85, 89.

Glaſs by whom firſt brought into England 206.

Glaſtenbury-Abbey, King Ælfred a Benefactor to it 169.

Godwin (Biſhop) miſtaken 138.

Gregory's Paſtoral, the Preface of it 141.

Grimbald 135. the Heads of a Speech made by him in a Synod

I N D E X.

od at London extant ibid.
Guthred 90.

Guthrum and the Danes baptized 66. the Agreement between him and K. Ælfred 67. he enters East-Anglia 70.

H.

Halley Mr. 226, 228.

Halls in the University of Oxford founded by K. Ælfred 195. besides which others were soon after founded by divers of the Nobility ibid.

Hardyng's (John) Chronicle corrected from a MS. in the Bod-lejan Library 8, 96, 97, 149.
[The said MS. is in Mr. Selden's Archives, B. 26. 'Tis neatly written, and illuminated; is cover'd with Velvet, and im-boss'd. On the right side, and on the Back is fix'd this Title:
The Cronicles of Englande in Englyshe writyn ballet wyle on Perchemente. It formerly belong'd to the Earls of Northumberland, and seems to have been written when the Author liv'd. 'Tis in several things very different from the Printed Edition, and supplies some Places. Amongst other things the Title of K. Edw.
III. to the Crown of France is here inserted in a Genealogical Table, which is quite omitted in the Print, tho' the Words in the MS. are expres'd so as to make Hardyng himself the Author of it. The Description also of Scotland is not in Verse but Prose, and there is added a Map for Illustration. At the End of the Book are John Lydgate's Proverbes upon the Fall of Prynces, written in a different Hand;

which I take to have been the very Copy that W. de Worde printed his Edition of them by. For at the Close we have this Note: Here endethe the Proverbes of Lydgate upon the Fall of prynces.
Enpryntede at london in fletestreet at the sygne of the sonne by Wynkyn Worde. unless we will rather suppose that 'twas transcrib'd from his Edition; but I incline to the first Opinion.]

Harold (King) depriv'd, according to some Authors, Ælfred's Schools of their Revenue 197.

Hastins 82. enters France 71. en-trench'd at Bemfete ibid. for-rageth Mercia ibid. his Wife and Sons Prisoners 84. upon new Caution they are set at Liberty ibid.

Heptarchy of the Saxons, the Decline of it 15.

Hickes Dr. 26. see Ælfred.

Hubba overthrown 60.

Hubbelowe 60.

Hudson Dr. 97, 146.

Hundred - Courts, County-Courts, and Leets, their Original 116.

Hundreds: see Shires.

Hyde-Abbey began by K. Ælfred
168. but perfected by his Son
Edward the Elder ibid.

L

Imperial-Crown not us'd in England 'till the time of Edward the Confessor 200.

Inscription upon K. Æthelred 43.
an Inscription lately found at Walcote near Bathe 226. Observations upon it 227, &c. Inscriptions first of all without Points 237. Afterwards, for preventing Confusion, full

I N D E X.

Points put between every Word, unless at the End of a Line or Verse ibid. Sometimes the Mark of the Point alter'd (as in the said Bathe Inscription) according to the Pleasure of the Cutter ibid.

Joannes Scotus Erigena 133. an Account of his Works ibid.

John of St. David's 136.

Josselin John 213.

Isidore corrected 236.

Julius Vitalis, Fabricensis of the XX. Legion styl'd Valens Victrix 228.

K.

Kemsley-Castle, and Kemsley-Down, 79.

Kennett Dr. 41, 43, 115.

L.

Langbain Dr. see Charlett.

Lanthorns their Original 206.

Laws of Ælfred whence taken 96.

Lects: see Decennaries: see Hundred-Courts.

Legion: see Julius.

Leland 218. corrected 137. he seems to be mistaken 212. see Ælfred.

Leycester surpris'd by the Danes 86. and relinquish'd 87.

Limene: see Rowther.

Lodebroch 38.

Lowes, an Account of them 61.

M.

Malsbury (William of) an Inscription out of him 161. the same collated with an Oxford MS. 162.

Mortality: see Saxons.

N.

Neotus St. 138. see Ælfred.

O.

Osber's Voyage to discover a North-East Passage 153.

Officers: Provision for able Officers 118.

Oxford University founded 144.

King Ælfred deny'd to be the first Founder of it 171. that Controversy examin'd 172.

Oxford University older than

Cambridge 177. a University

there before the time of K. Ælfred

144. the manner of the Foundation of the University there 195. the first

Professors ibid. it's Endowment ibid. see

Ælfred.

P.

Parliaments their Original 157.

Peter's (St) Church in the East, Oxford, by whom founded 177, 184.

Plegmond 137.

Plot Dr. 43.

Pointing, the ancient Way of it 235. see Inscription.

Pope of Rome, his Incroachment in claiming a Superiority over Christian Princes 103.

Q.

Quarter-Wayters their Original 199.

Quarbridge 88.

Quarford 88.

R.

Raven, the Danish Standard taken 61.

Reading: see Danes.

Reclaiming of the People, inward means for it sought 120.

Robert of Glocester, a Fragment of him 4.

Rollo 50.

Roll=

I N D E X.

Roll-rich Stones 31.

Rother : see Rowther.

Rowther, or Rother, the River 78.
call'd in several ancient Writings Limne ibid.

S.

Saxons us'd a great deal of Art in their Wars 2. overthrown at Basing and at Merden 43. fly or revolt 53. assembled 64. come to Æshandune ibid. a sore Mortality among them 89. see Diference.

Scotus : see Joannes.

Seafford : see Sifford.

Shafisbury, a Nunnery there founded by K. Ælfred 167. Not by Elfgina (as specified in Mr. Le-land's Coll.) Wife of Edmund, his Great-Grand-son ibid.

Shifford : see Sifford.

Shires, Hundreds, and Tythings, their Original 108. see Ælfred.

Sifford, (or Seafford, now call'd Shifford) in Oxford-shire, a Place of great Note in K. Ælfred's time 126. a Council there ibid. and 158.

Sittingburne, whence so called 79.

Sommer, a Transcript in him corrected 169.

Smith Dr. 24, 25.

Speed not the Author of the Catalogue of Religious Houses in his Chron. but Mr. Burton the Leycester-shire Antiquary 168.

Spelman (Sir John) Author of two other Excellent Discourses, besides his History of Ælfred the Great 225. see Ælfred.

Stnars, the River 74.

Straduttons 48.

Sureties for the good Behaviour, their Original 106.

Swanawic 52.

Swearing, the manner of it amongst the Danes 48.

T.

Tacitus explain'd 10.

Talbot Dr. a good MS. of Ælfred's Translation of Croftus in his Hands 211.

Thwaites's (Mr. Edw.) Conjecture upon a Coyn publish'd by Sir Andrew Fountaine 164.

Trihings 108.

Tryal by Peers, and by a Jury of 12 Men, it's Original 106.

Tully corrected 229.

Tyrrell Mr. 5, 17, 213.

Tythes and the Rights of the Church settled by K. Ælfred 99.

Tythings : see Hundreds.

V.

Vualis : see Julius.

Under-Sheriffs their Original 113.

Universities : the Controversy between the two Univerities 191.

Vouchers upon Sale of Horses, &c. their Original 106.

Usher Archbishop 18.

W.

Walcote near Baſke perhaps a Place of Note in the time of the Romans 227. see Foſs-Way : see Inſcription.

Walker Obadiah 225, 226.

Wantage : see Ælfred.

Waſe Christopher 225.

Weadmors, or Wedmor, 66.

Wedmor : see Weadmors.

Welch ſubject themſelves to King Ælfred 91.

Werebert 138. see Ælfred.

Werefeth : see Ælfred.

Werefrið Biſhop of Worceſter 137.

Werecolf 138. see Ælfred.

I N D E X.

- Westminster* (Math.) mistaken 138.
- West-Saxons* their Power 15. they had no Queen 24.
- Wharton* 137, 138, 213. see Aldhelmus.
- Whelock*: see Ælfred.
- Wife of the West-Saxon Kings neither crowned nor styled Queen 24. and why? ibid. Yet that Custom broke by Æthelwolf ibid. but in the times of his Successors respect was often had unto it 24, 25, 26.
- William the Conqueror* withdraws the Exhibitions made to Ælfred's Schools at Oxford 196.
- Wilton* the Battle there 45. Wilton Abbey founded by St. Albourg 170. a Benefaction made to it by K. Ælfred ibid.
- Winchester*, the New-Monastery there founded by King Ælfred 167. others say his Wife Ælsmith was Foundress ibid.
- Worcester*: see Ælfred.
- Writs their Original 114.
- Wulfsig* 138. see Ælfred.

A D D E N D A

ADDENDA & EMENDANDA.

PAg. 8. l. 10. in Notis, defaulte & mox pees in MS. Ib. l. 11. comon profite MS. profite etiam in lin. prox. Ib. l. 13. als comonly was MS. Ib. l. antepen. advoultry moost, omisso was, MS. Ib. l. penult. Among t. w. comon MS. Ib. l. ult. robry, oppressioun, night and day. MS. P. 26. l. 16. in Not. us'd by some } This Opinion, which I receiv'd from Mr. Selden, as I did divers other things here specify'd (as may appear from the Quotation) is excellently well confuted by the Learned Dr. HICKES in his Dissertatio Epistolaris de Antiquae Litteraturae Septentrionalis Utilitate, p. 152. In which Discourse are also divers very curious and judicious Observations, which ought to be consulted for a better Knowledge of the Charters here cited. P. 64. l. penult. in Not. read Chron. P. 102. l. ult. in Not. for autographo read MS. P. 176. l. 5. read Camden. P. 230. l. 11. for φῆναι read φῆναις.

