

Bodleian Libraries

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

This book is part of the collection held by the Bodleian Libraries and scanned by Google, Inc. for the Google Books Library Project.

For more information see:

<http://www.bodleian.ox.ac.uk/dbooks>

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 2.0 UK: England & Wales (CC BY-NC-SA 2.0) licence.

600028474V

2799 d. 108

H. J. Lang

A D V E R T I S E M E N T.

THE Hill which gives title to the following Poem is situated in the western part of Dorsetshire. This choice of a Subject, to which the Author was led by his residence near the spot, may seem perhaps to confine him to topics of mere rural and local description. But he begs leave here to inform the Reader that he has advanced beyond those narrow limits to something more general and important. On the other hand he trusts, that in his farthest excursions the connexion between him and his subject will easily be traced. The few notes which are subjoined he thought necessary to elucidate the passages where they are inserted. He will only add in this place, from Hutchins's History of Dorsetshire, (Vol. I. p. 366.) what is there said of Lewesdon (or, as it is now corruptly called, Lewson) ' This and Pillesdon Hill, ' surmount all the hills, though very high, between them ' and the sea. Mariners call them the Cow and Calf, in ' which forms they are fancied to appear, being eminent ' sea-marks to those who sail upon the coast.'

To the top of this Hill the Author describes himself as walking on a May morning.

LEWESDON HILL.

UP to thy summit, LEWESDON, to the brow
Of yon proud rising, where the lonely thorn
Bends from the rude South-east, with top cut sheer
By his keen breath, along the narrow track
By which the scanty-pastured sheep ascend
Up to thy furze-clad summit, let me climb;
My morning exercise; and thence look round
Upon the variegated scene, of hills,
And woods, and fruitful vales, and villages
Half-hid in tufted orchards, and the sea
Boundless, and studded thick with many a sail.

B

Ye

Ye dew-fed vapours, nightly balm, exhaled
 From earth, young herbs and flowers, that in the morn
 Ascend as incense to the Lord of day,
 I come to breathe your odours; while they float
 Yet near this surface, let me walk embathed
 In your invifible perfumes, to health
 So friendly, nor lefs grateful to the mind,
 Adminiftring sweet peace and cheerfulness.

How changed is thy appearance, beauteous hill !
 Thou haft put off thy wintry garb, brown heath
 And ruffet fern, thy feemly-colour'd cloak
 To bide the hoary frofts and dripping rains
 Of chill December, and art gaily robed
 In livery of the fpring : upon thy brow
 A cap of flowery hawthorn, and thy neck
 Mantled with new-fprung furze and fpangles thick
 Of golden bloom : nor lack thee tufted woods
 Adown thy fides : Tall oaks of lufly green,
 The darker fir, light afh, and the nesh tops
 Of the young hazel join, to form thy fskirts

In many a wavy fold of verdant wreath.
So gorgeously hath Nature drest thee up
Against the birth of May ; and, vested so,
Thou dost appear more gracefully array'd
Than Fashion's worshippers ; whose gaudy shews,
Fantaſtical as are a ſick man's dreams,
From vanity to coſtly vanity
Change oftener than the moon. Thy comely drefs,
From ſad to gay returning with the year,
Shall grace thee ſtill till Nature's ſelf ſhall change.

Theſe are the beauties of thy woodland ſcene
At each return of ſpring : yet ſome delight
Rather to view the change ; and fondly gaze
On fading colours, and the thouſand tints
Which Autumn lays upon the varying leaf.
I like them not ; for all their boaſted hues
Are kin to Sicklineſs : mortal Decay
Is drinking up their vital juice ; that gone,
They turn to fear and yellow. Should I praiſe
Such falſe complexions, and for beauty take
A look conſumption-bred ? As ſoon, if gray

Were mixt in young Louisa's tresses brown,
I'd call it beautiful variety,
And therefore doat on her. Yet I can spy
A beauty in that fruitful change, when comes
The yellow Autumn and the hopes o'the year
Brings on to golden ripeness; nor dispraise
The pure and spotless form of that sharp time,
When January spreads a pall of snow
O'er the dead face of th'undistinguish'd earth.
Then stand I in the hollow comb beneath
And bless this friendly mount, that weather-fends
My reed-roof'd cottage, while the wintry blast
From the thick north comes howling: till the Spring
Return, who leads my devious steps abroad,
To climb, as now, to LEWESDON's airy top.

Above the noise and stir of yonder fields
Uplifted, on this height I feel the mind
Expand itself in wider liberty.
The distant sounds break gently on my sense,
Soothing to meditation: so methinks,
Even so, sequester'd from the noisy world,

Could

Could I wear out this transitory being
In peaceful contemplation and calm ease.
But conscience, which still censures on our acts,
That awful voice within us, and the sense
Of an hereafter, wake and rouse us up
From such unshaped retirement ; which were else
A blest condition on this earthy stage.
For who would make his life a life of toil
For wealth, o'erbalanced with a thousand cares ;
Or power, which base compliance must uphold ;
Or honour, lavish'd most on courtly slaves ;
Or fame, vain breath of a misjudging world ;
Who for such perishable gaudes would put
A yoke upon his free unbroken spirit,
And gall himself with trammels and the rubs
Of this world's business ; so he might stand clear
Of judgment and the tax of idleness
In that dread audit, when his mortal hours
(Which now with soft and silent stealth pace by)
Must all be counted for ? But, for this fear,
And to remove, according to our power,
The wants and evils of our brother's state,

'Tis

'Tis meet we juggle with the world ; content,
 If by our sovereign Master we be found
 At last not profitless : for worldly meed,
 Given or withheld, I deem of it alike.

From this proud eminence on all sides round
 Th' unbroken prospect opens to my view ;
 On all sides large ; save only where the head
 Of Pillefdon rises, Pillefdon's lofty Pen :
 So call (still rendering to his ancient name Observance due) that rival Height south-west,
 Which like a rampire bounds the vale beneath.
 There woods, there blooming orchards, there are seen
 Herds, ranging, or at rest beneath the shade
 Of some wide-branching oak ; there goodly fields
 Of corn, and verdant pasture, whence the kine
 Returning with their milky treasure home
 Store the rich dairy : such fair plenty fills
 The pleasant vale of Marshwood ; pleasant now,
 Since that the Spring has deck'd anew the meads
 With flowery vesture, and the warmer sun
 Their foggy moistness drain'd ; in wintry days

Cold,

Cold, vapourish, miry, wet, and to the flocks
 Unfriendly, when autumnal rains begin
 To drench the spongy turf: but ere that time
 The careful shepherd moves to healthier foil,
 Rechasing, lest his tender ewes should coath*
 In the dank pasturage. Yet not the fields
 Of Evesham, nor that ample valley named
 Of the White Horse, its antique monument
 Carved in the chalky bourne, for beauty' and wealth
 Might equal, though surpassing in extent,
 This fertile vale; in length from LEWESDON'S base
 Extended to the sea, and water'd well
 By many a rill; but chief with thy clear stream,
 Thou nameless Rivulet, who from the side
 Of LEWESDON softly welling forth, dost trip

* To coath, Skinner says, is a word common in Lincolnshire; and signifies, to faint. He derives it from the Anglo-Saxon, coðe, a disease. In Dorsetshire it is in common use, but is used of sheep only: a coathed sheep is a rotten sheep; to coath is to take the rot. Rechasing is also a term in that country appropriated to flocks: to chase and rechase is to drive sheep at certain times from one part of ground to another, or from one parish to another.

The Author having ventured to introduce some provincial and other terms, takes this occasion to say, that it is a liberty in which he has not indulged himself, but when he conceived them to be allowable for the sake of ornament or expression.

Adown

Adown the valley, wandering sportively,
Alas, how soon thy little course will end!
How soon thy infant stream shall lose itself
In the salt mass of waters, ere it grow
To name or greatness! Yet it flows along
Untainted with the commerce of the world,
Nor passing by the noisy haunts of men;
But through sequester'd meads, a little space,
Winds secretly, and in its wanton path
May cheer some drooping flower, or minister
Of its cool water to the thirsty lamb:
Then falls into the ravenous sea, as pure
As when it issued from its native hill.

So to thine early grave didst thou run on,
Spotless Francesca, so, after short course,
Thine innocent and playful infancy
Was swallowed up in death, and thy pure spirit
In that illimitable gulph which bounds
Our mortal continent. But not there lost,
Not there extinguish'd, as some falsely teach,
Who can talk much and learnedly of life,

Who

Who know our frame and fashion, who can tell
The substance and the properties of man,
As they had seen him made ; aye and stood by Spies on Heaven's work. They also can discourse
Wisely, to prove that what must be must be,
And shew how thoughts are jogg'd out of the brain
By a mechanical impulse ; pushing on
The minds of us, poor unaccountables,
To fatal resolution. Know they not,
That in this mortal life, whate'er it be,
We take the path that leads to good or evil,
And therein find our bliss or misery ?
And this includes all reasonable ends
Of knowledge or of being ; farther to go
Is toil unprofitable, and th' effect
Most perilous wandering. Yet of this be sure ;
Where Freedom is not, there no Virtue is :
If there be none, this world is all a cheat,
And the divine stability of Heaven
(That assured seat for good men after death)
Is but a transient cloud ; display'd so fair
To cherish virtuous hope, but at our need

Eludes the sense, and fools our honest faith,
 Vanishing in a lie. If this be so,
 Were it not better to be born a beast,
 Only to feel what is, and thus to scape
 The agonish fear that shakes the afflicted breast
 With sore anxiety of what shall be ;
 And all for nought ? Since our most wicked act
 Is not our sin, and our religious awe
 Delusion ; if that strong Necessity
 Chains up our will. But that the mind is free,
 The Mind herself, best judge of her own state,
 Is feelingly convinced ; nor to be moved
 By subtle words, that may perplex the head,
 But ne'er persuade the heart. Vain Argument,
 That with false weapons of Philosophy
 Fights against Hope, and Sense, and Nature's strength !

See how the Sun, here clouded, afar off
 Pours down the golden radiance of his light
 Upon the enridged sea ; where the black ship
 Sails on the phosphor-seeming waves. So fair,
 But falsely-flattering, was yon surface calm,

When

When forth for India fail'd in evil time
 That Vessel whose disastrous fate, when told,
 Fill'd every breast with horror, and each eye
 With piteous tears; so cruel was the loss.†
 Methinks I see her, as, by the wintry storm
 Shatter'd and driven along past yonder Isle,
 She strove, her latest hope, by strength or art
 To gain the Port within it, or at worst
 To shun that harbourless and hollow coast.

† The distressful condition of the Halfwell here alluded to is thus circumstantially described in the Narrative of her loss, p. 13.

“ Thursday the 5th, at two in the morning the wind came to the southward, blew fresh, and the weather was very thick: at noon Portland was seen, bearing N. by E. distance two or three leagues; at eight at night it blew a strong gale at S. and at this time the Portland lights were seen, bearing N. W. distance four or five leagues, when they wore ship, and got her head to the westward; but finding they lost ground upon that tack, they wore again, and kept stretching on eastward, in hopes to have weathered Peverel-point, in which case they intended to have anchored in Studland Bay: at 11 at night it cleared, and they saw St. Alban's-head a mile and a half to the leeward of them; upon which they took in sail immediately, and let go the small bower anchor, which brought up the ship at a whole cable, and she rode for about an hour, but then drove; they now let go the sheet anchor and wore away a whole cable, and the ship rode for about two hours longer, when she drove again.—They were then driving very fast on shore, and might expect every moment to strike.”

From Portland eastward to the * Promontory,
 Where still St. Alban's high-built chapel stands.
 But art nor strength avail her : on she drives,
 In storm and darkness to the fatal coast ;
 And there 'mong rocks and high-o'erhanging cliffs
 Dash'd piteously, with all her precious freight
 Was lost ; by Neptune's wild and foamy jaws
 Swallow'd up quick ! The richliest-laden ship
 Of spicy Ternate, or that annual, sent
 To the Philippines o'er the Southern main
 From Acapulco, carrying massy gold,
 Were poor to this ;—freighted with hopeful Youth,
 And Beauty, and high Courage undismay'd
 By mortal terrors, and paternal Love,

* ' Not far from this (Encombe) stands St. Aldene's Chapel : which took name from the dedication to St. Adeline, the first Bishop of Sherbourne in this shire : but now it serves for a sea-mark.' Coker's Survey of Dorsetsh. p. 47.

Near the sea is the high land of St. Aldhelm's, commonly called St. Alban's, a noted sea-mark. The cliff here is 147 yards perpendicular. On this promontory, about a mile S. of Worth, stands a chapel of the same name.' Hutchins's Dorsetsh. Vol. I. p. 228. But this head-land is not marked by name in Hutchins's map. ' The very utter part of St. Aldhelm's point is five miles from Sandwich (Swandich.) Lel. Itin. Vol. III. p. 53.

Strong

Strong, and unconquerable even in death—
Alas, they perish'd all, all in one hour !

Now yonder high way view, wide-beaten, bare
With ceaseless tread of men and beasts, and track
Of many' indenting wheels, heavy and light,
That violently rush with unsafe speed,
Or slowly turn, oft-resting, up the steep.
Mark how that road, with mazes serpentine,
From * Shipton's bottom to the lofty down
Winds like a path of pleasure, drawn by art
Through park or flowery garden for delight.
Nor less delightful this ; if, while he mounts
Not wearied, the free Journeyer will pause
To view the prospect oft, as oft to see
Beauty still changing : yet not so contrived
By fancy' or choice, but of necessity,
By soft gradations of ascent to lead

* Shipton is a hill, which, according to common report, is so called from its shape : the top of it being formed like a ship with the keel upwards. It stands three miles from Bridport on the road towards London ; which road passes by the foot of it to the North.

The

The labouring and way-worn feet along,
And make their toil less toilsome. Half way up
Or nearer to the top, behold a cot,
O'er which the branchy trees, those sycamores,
Wave gently: at their roots a rustic bench
Invites to short refreshment, and to taste
What grateful beverage the house may yield
After fatigue, or dusty heat; thence call'd
The Traveller's Rest. Welcome, embower'd seat,
Friendly repose to the slow passenger
Ascending, ere he takes his sultry way
Along th' interminable road, stretch'd out
Over th' unshelter'd down; or when at last
He has that hard and solitary path
Measured by painful steps. And blest are they,
Who in life's toilsome journey may make pause
After a march of glory: yet not such
As rise in causeless war, troubling the world
By their mad quarrel, and in fields of blood
Hail'd victors, thence renown'd, and call'd on earth
Kings, heroes, demi-gods, but in high Heaven
Thieves, ruffians, murderers; these find no repose:

Thee

Thee rather, patriot Conqueror, to thee
Belongs such rest; who in the western world,
Thine own deliver'd country, for thyself
Hast planted an immortal grove, and there
Upon the glorious mount of Liberty
Reposing, sit'st beneath the palmy shade.

And Thou, not less renown'd in like attempt
Of high atchievement, though thy virtue fail'd
To save thy little country, Patriot Prince, Hero, Philosopher (what more could they
Who wisely chose Thee, PAOLI, to bless
Thy native Isle, long struggling to be free?
But Heaven allow'd not) yet may'st thou repose
After thy glorious toil, secure of fame
Well-earn'd by virtue: while ambitious France,
Who stretch'd her lawless hand to seize thine isle,
Enjoys not rest or glory; with her prey
Gorged but not satisfied, and craving still Against th' intent of Nature. See Her now
Upon the adverse shore, her Norman coast,

Plying

* Plying her monstrous labour unrestrain'd ;
 A rank of castles in the rough sea funk,
 With towery shape and height, and armed heads
 Uprising o'er the surge ; and these between,
 Unmeasurable mass of ponderous rock
 Projected many a mile to rear her wall
 Midst the deep waters. She, the mighty work
 Still urging, in her arrogant attempt,
 As with a lordly voice to the Ocean cries,
 ' Hitherto come, no farther ; here be staid
 ' The raging of thy waves ; within this bound
 ' Be all my haven : ' and therewith takes in
 A space of amplest circuit, wide and deep,
 Won from the straiten'd main : nor less in strength
 Than in dimensions ; giant-like in both :
 On each side flank'd with citadels and towers
 And rocky walls, and arches massy proof
 Against the storm of war. Compared with this,
 † Less, and less hazardous emprise atcheived

* A detail of this vast project is given at the conclusion of this Poem.

† Quin. Curt. lib. 4. cap. 2, 3.

Resistless

Resistless Alexander, when he cast
 The strong foundations of that high-raised mound
 Deep in the hostile waves, his martial way,
 Built on before him up to sea-girt Tyre.
 * Nor aught so bold, so vast, so wonderful,
 At Athos or the fetter'd Hellespont,
 Imagined in his pride that Asian vain,
 Xerxes,—but ere he turn'd from Salamis
 Fly'ing through the blood-red waves in one poor bark,
 Retarded by thick-weltering carcasses.
 † Nor yet that elder work (if work it were,
 Not fable) raised upon the Phrygian shore, (Where lay the fleet confederate against Troy,
 A thousand ships behind the vasty mole
 All shelter'd) could with this compare, though built
 It seem'd, of greatness worthy to create
 Envy in the immortals; and at last
 Not overthrown without th' embattled aid
 Of angry Neptune. So may He once more
 Rise from his troubled bed, and send his waves,

* Juv. Sat. X. v. 173, 186.

† Hom. Il. VII. v. 433, 463. et Il. XII. v. 1, 33.

Urged on to fury by contending winds,
 With horned violence to push and whelm
 This pile, usurping on his watry reign!

From hostile shores returning, glad I look
 On native scenes again; and first salute
 Thee, * Burton, and thy lofty cliff, where oft
 The nightly blaze is kindled; further seen
 Than erst was that love-tended cresset, hung
 Beside the Hellespont: yet not like that
 Inviting to the hospitable arms
 Of Beauty' and Youth, but lighted up, the sign
 Of danger, and of ambush'd foes to warn
 The stealth-approaching Vessel, homeward bound
 From Havre or the Norman isles, with freight
 Of wines and hotter drinks, the trash of France,
 Forbidden merchandize. Such fraud to quell
 Many a light skiff and well-appointed sloop

* Burton is a village near the Sea, lying S. E. from Lewesdon, and about two miles S. of Shipton-hill beforementioned. The Cliff is among the loftiest of all upon that coast; and Smugglers often take advantage of its height for the purpose related in the poem.

Lies

Lies hovering near the coast, or hid behind
Some curved promontory, in hope to seize
These contraband: vain hope! on that high shore,
Station'd, th' associates of their lawless trade
Keep watch, and to their fellows off at sea
Give the known signal; they with fearful haste
Observant, put about the ship, and plunge
Into concealing darkness. As a fox,
That from the cry of hounds and hunters' din
Runs crafty down the wind, and steals away
Forth from his cover, hopeful to elude
The not yet following pack,—if chance the shout
Of eager or unpractised boy betray
His meditated flight, back he retires
To shelter him in the thick wood: so these
Retiring, ply to south, and shun the land
Too perilous to approach: and oft at sea
Secure (or ever nigh the guarded coast
They venture) to the trackless deep they trust
Their forfeitable cargo, rundlets small,
Together link'd upon their cable's length,
And to the shelving bottom sunk and fixt

By stony weights; till happier hour arrive
To land it on the vacant beach unrisk'd.

But what is yonder † Hill, whose dusky brow
Wears, like a regal diadem, the round
Of antient battlements and ramparts high;
And frowns upon the vales? I know thee not.
Thou hast no name, no honourable note,
No chronicle of all thy warlike pride,
To testify what once thou wert, how great,
How glorious, and how fear'd. So perish all,

† 'Eggardon Hill is a very high hill, and gives name to the Hundred. Mr. Coker says it is uncertain whether it takes its name from Edgar, King of the West Saxons, or from Orgarus, Earl of Cornwall: and indeed this last derivation is the truest; there being little reason to doubt that it is the old Orgarestone. The camp on the brow of this hill is a large and strong fortification, and seems to be Roman.' Hutchins's Dorset. Vol. I. p. 289; where there is an engraving of this camp. But Hutchins has misrepresented Mr. Coker, who indeed prefers the derivation from Orgar. His words are these: 'That it takes name from Edgar, the West Saxon King, I dare not affirm, having nothing to prove it but the nearness of the name. It better likes me to think this the place, which in Doomsday-book is called Orgareston, but whether it take name from Orgareus, Earl of Cornwall, I know not; though I think I should run into no great error to believe it.' Coker's Survey of Dorsetshire, p. 26.

Who

Who seek their greatness in dominion held
Over their fellows, or the pomp of war ;
And be as thou forgotten, and their fame
Cancell'd like thine ! But thee in after times
Reclaim'd to culture, Shepherds visited,
And call'd thee Orgarston ; so thee they call'd
Of Orgar, Saxon earl, the wealthy sire
Of fair Elfrida ; She, whose happy Bard
Has with his gentle witchery so wrought
Upon our sense, that we can see no more
Her mad ambition, treacherous cruelty,
And purple robes of state with royal blood
Inhospitably stain'd ; but in their place
Pure faith, soft manners, filial duty meek,
Connubial love, and stoles of faintly white.

Fain would I view thee, Cor scombe, fain would hail
The ground where * Hollis lies ; his choice retreat,

* ' Mr. Hollis, in order to preserve the memory of those heroes and patriots for whom he had a veneration, as the assertors and defenders of his country, called many of the farms and fields in his estate at Cor scombe by their names ; and by these names they are still distinguished. In the middle of one of those fields, not far from his house, he ordered his corps to be deposited in a grave.

Where, from the busy world withdrawn, he lived
 To generous Virtue and the holy love
 Of Liberty, a dedicated spirit :
 And left his ashes there ; still honouring
 Thy fields, with title given of patriot names,
 But more with his untitled sepulchre.
 That envious ridge conceals thee from my sight ;
 Which, passing o'er thy place north-east, looks on
 To Sherburne's ancient towers and rich domains,
 The noble Digby's mansion ; where he dwells
 Inviolate, and fearless of thy curse,
 War-gluttet * Osmund, superstitious Lord !

grave ten feet deep ; and that the field should be immediately plowed over, that no trace of his burial place might remain.' Memoirs of Thomas Hollis, Esq. Vol. I. p. 481.

* Of the strange Curse belonging to Shireburne-Castle. From a MS. of the late Bishop of Ely (Bp John More) now in the Royal Library at Cambridge.

‘ Osmund a Norman Knight (who had served William Duke of Normandy from his youth, in all his wars against the French King, and the Duke's (William's) subjects, with much valour and discretion) for all his faithful service (when his Master had by conquest obtained the crown of England) was rewarded with many great gifts ; among the which was the Earldome of Dorset, and the gift of many other Possessions, whereof the Castle and Baronie of Sherburne were parcell. But Osmund, in the declynige of his age, calling to mynde the great effusion of blood, which, from his

Who with Heaven's justice for a bloody life .

Madeft thy presumptuous bargain ; giving more his infancie, he had shedd ; he refolved to leave all worldly delights, and betake himself to a religious life, the better to contemplate on his former finnes and to obteyn Pardon for them. And with much importunitie, having got leave of the Kinge (who was unwilling to want the assistance of fo grave and worthy a Counfeller) to resign his temporall honors ; and having obteyned the Bifhoprick of Sarum, he gave Sberburne with other lands to the Bifhoprick. To which gift he annexed this Curse,

That whofoever should take thofe Lands from the Bifhoprick, or diminifh them in great or in fmall, should be accurfed, not only in this world, but alfo in the world to come ; unless in his life-time he made reftitution thereof. And fo he died Bifhop of Sarum.

Thofe lands continued in the poffeffion of his fucceffors till the reign of King Stephen, who took them away ; ' whereupon (fays this Account) his prosperity forfook him.' King Stephen being dead, ' thefe lands came into the hands of fome of the Mountagues (after Erles of Sarum) who whileft they held the fame, underwent many difafters. For one or other of them fell by misfortune. And finally, all the males of them became extinct, and the Earldome received an end in their name. So ill was their fuccefs.'

After this the lands were reftored to the Bifhoprick ; but were taken away a fecond time by the Duke of Somerfet, in the reign of Edward VI ; ' when the Duke, being hunting in the Parke of Sberburne, he was fent for prefently unto the Kinge (to whome he was Protector) and at his coming up to Landon, was forthwith committed unto the Tower, and, fhortly after, loft his head.' The lands then, in a fuit at law, were adjudged to the Bifhop of Sarum ; and fo remained, ' till Sir Walter Raleigh procured a grant of them ; he afterwards unfortunately loft them, and at laft his head alfo. Upon his attainder they came, by the King's gift, to Prince

Henry ;

Than thy juſt having to redeem thy guilt,
 And daredſt bid th' Almighty to become
 The miniſter of thy curſe. But ſure it fell,
 So bigots fondly judged, full ſure it fell
 With ſacred vengeance pointed on the head
 Of many a bold uſurper: chief on thine
 (Favourite of Fortune once but laſt her thrall)
 Accompliſh'd * Raleigh! in that lawleſs day

Henry; who died not long after the poſſeſſion thereof. After Prince Henry's death, the Erle of Somerſett (Carr) did poſſeſſe them. Finally, he loſt them, and many other greater fortunes.' Peck's Deſid. Cur. Lib. 14. No. 6.

* 'How Dr. John Coldwell, of a Phyſitian became a Biſhop I have heard by more than a good many; and I will briefly handle it, and as tenderly as I can; bearing myſelf equal between the living (Sir Walter Raleigh) and the dead (Biſhop Coldwell). Yet the manifeſt judgments of God on both of them I may not paſs over with ſilence. And to ſpeak firſt of the Knight, who carried off the Spolia Opima of the Biſhoprick. He having gotten Sherborne Caſtle, Park, and Parſonage, was in thoſe days in ſo great favour with the Queen, as I may boldly ſay, that with leſs ſuit than he was fain to make to her e'er he could perfect this his purchaſe, and with leſs money than he beſtowed ſince in Sherborne (in building and buying out leaſes, and in drawing the river through rocks into his garden) he might, very juſtly, and without offence of either Church or State, have compaſſed a much better purchaſe. Alſo, as I have been truly informed, he had a preſage before he firſt attempted it, which did forſhew it would turn to his ruin, and might have kept him from meddling with it,—Si mens non læva fuiſſet: For as he was riding poſt between Plymouth

When, like a goodly hart, thou wert beset
 With crafty blood-hounds lurching for thy life:
 Whileas they feign'd to chace thee fairly down:
 And that foul Scot, the minion-kissing king,
 Pursued with havoc in the tyrannous hunt.

How is it vanish'd in a hafty spleen,
 The Tor of Glastonbury! Even but now

Plymouth and the Court [as many times he did upon no small employments) this Castle being right in the way, he cast such an eye upon it as Abab did upon Naboth's Vineyard. And, once above the rest, being talking of it (of the commodiousness of the place, of the strength of the seat, and how easily it might be got from the Bishopric) suddenly over and over came his horse, that his very face (which was then thought a very good face) plowed up the earth where he fell. This fall was ominous I make no question; and himself was apt to construe it so. But his brother Adrian would needs have him interpret it as a conqueror, that his fall presaged the quiet possession of it. And accordingly for the present it so fell out. So that with much labor, travel, cost, envy, and obloquy he got it habendum et tenendum to him and his heirs. But see what became of him. In the public joy and jubile of the whole realm (when favor, peace, and pardon, were offered even to offenders) he who in wit, in wealth, in courage was inferior to few, fell suddenly (I cannot tell how) into such a downfall of despair, as his greatest enemy would not have wished him so much harm, as he would have done himself. Can any man be so wilfully blind, as not to see and say, Digitus Dei hic est!" Harrington's Breif View, p. 88.

I saw the hoary pile cresting the top
 Of that north-western hill ; and in this Now
 A cloud hath past on it, and its dim bulk
 Becomes annihilate, or if not, a spot
 Which the strain'd vision tires itself to find.

And even so fares it with the things of earth
 Which seem most constant : there will come the cloud
 That shall infold them up, and leave their place
 A seat for Emptiness. Our narrow ken
 Reaches too far, when all that we behold
 Is but the havoc of wide-wasting Time,
 Or what he soon shall spoil. His out-spread wings,
 (Which bear him like an eagle o'er the earth)
 Are plumed in front so downy soft they seem
 To foster what they touch, and mortal fools
 Rejoice beneath their hovering : woe the while !
 For in that indefatigable flight
 The multitudinous strokes incessantly
 Bruise all beneath their cope, and mark on all
 His secret injury ; on the front of man
 Gray hairs and wrinkles ; still as Time speeds on Hard and more hard his iron pennons beat

With

With ceaseless violence ; nor overpass,
 Till all the creatures of this nether world
 Are one wide quarry : following dark behind,
 The cormorant Oblivion swallows up
 The carcases that Time has made his prey.

But hark ! the village clock strikes nine ; the chimes
 Merrily follow, tuneful to the sense
 Of the pleased clown attentive, while they make False-measured melody on crazy bells.
 O wondrous Power of modulated sound !
 Which like the air (whose all-obedient shape Thou makest thy slave) canst subtilly pervade
 The yielded avenues of sense, unlock
 The close affections, by some fairy path.
 Winning an easy way through every ear,
 And with thine unsubstantial quality
 Holding in mighty chains the hearts of all ;
 All, but some cold and sullen-temper'd spirits,
 Who feel no touch of sympathy or love..

Yet what is music, and the blended power
 Of voice with instruments of wind and string ?

What

What but an empty pageant of sweet noise?
 Tis past: and all that it has left behind
 Is but an echo dwelling in the ear
 Of the toy-taken fancy, and beside
 A void and countless hour in life's brief day.

But ill accords my verse with the delights
 Of this gay month: and see the Villagers
 Assembling jocund in their best attire
 To grace this genial morn. Now I descend
 To join the worldly croud; perchance to talk,
 To think, to act as they: then all these thoughts,
 That lift th'expanded heart above this spot
 To heavenly musing, these shall pass away
 (Even as this goodly prospect from my view)
 Hidden by near and earthy-rooted cares.
 So passeth human life; our better mind
 Is as a Sunday's garment, then put on
 When we have nought to do; but at our work
 We wear a worse for thrift. Of this enough:
 To-morrow for severer thought; but now
 To breakfast, and keep festival to-day.

T H E E N D .

