The following pages contain the account of a Trial, for a Conspiracy against the Constitution and Government of this kingdom, in which I have been made the principal defendant. The reader, however, will observe, that some circumstances occurred in the course of these proceedings which give them the complexion of a conspiracy AGAINST the Defendants; myself in particular.

For the present at least, I shall only briefly state, that no falsehood or slander was too base or malignant, for my persecutors and their adherents, to invent and propagate, for the purpose of injuring my reputation, both as a merchant and as a man; nor was any attempt omitted that could irritate the public mind against myself and the other defendants; and consequently prejudice our cause.

When the rights of the public are attacked in the persons of individuals, the public are, (and ought to feel) deeply interested in the rise, the progress, and the event of the conflict. I am in possession of a series of facts, which for this reason I doubt not would be deemed important, not only to myself, but, at least, equally so to the public, and would illustrate, in some degree, the confession of Dunn (the evidence for the prosecution) that he was BRIBED to become my accuser.

Perhaps the secret movers of this iniquitous conspiracy may be traced, by tracing the conduct of their inferior agents: but the present publication cation would have been too long delayed, too much extended, and too miscellaneous, had the details been entered into, which were necessary to apprise the public of the progress of the persecution, with which the Defendants in this Trial have been harassed.

But they shall not be forgotten. I may at some future time, if my health and my leisure will permit, give a sequel to this Trial, which I have no doubt will throw some light on the secret machinations, and the open violence, alternately practised against the Friends of the People.

THOMAS WALKER.

[The indictment was opened by Mr. James.]

Mr. Law.

May it please your Lordship—Gentlemen of the Jury :

The indictment which has been read to you, imputes to the defendants a species of treasonable misdemeanor, second only in degree, and inferior only in malignity, to the crime of high treason itself. It imputes to them a conspiracy for the purpose of adhering with effect to the King's enemies, in case the calamity of foreign invasion or of internal and domestic tumult should afford them the desired opportunity of so doing. A conspiracy for the purpose of employing against our country those arms which should be devoted to its defence; and of overthrowing a constitution, the work of long continued wisdom and virtue in the ages that have gone before us, and which, I trust, the sober minded virtue and wisdom of the present age will transmit unimpaired to ages that are yet to succeed us. It imputes to them a conspiracy, not indeed levelled at the person and life of our sovereign, but at that constitution at the head of which he is placed, and at that system of beneficial laws which it is his pride and his duty to administer; at that constitution which makes us what we are, a great, free, and, I trust, with a few exceptions only, an happy and united people. Gentlemen, a conspiracy formed for these purposes, and to be effected eventually by means of arms; a conspiracy which had either for its immediate aim or probable consequence, the introduction into this country, upon the model of France, of all the miseries that disgrace and desolate that unhappy land, is the crime for which the defendants stand arraigned before you this day; and it is for you to say, in the first instance, and for my Lord hereafter, what shall be the result and effect in respect to persons against whom a conspiracy of such enormous magnitude and mischief shall be substantiated in evidence.

Gentlemen, whatever subjects of political difference may subsist amongst us, I trust we are in general agreed in venerating the great principles of our constitution, and in wishing to sustain and render them permanent. Whatever toleration and indulgence we may be willing to allow to differences in matters of less importance, upon some subjects we can allow none; for the friends of France, leagued in unity of council, inclination, and interest with France, against the arms and interests of this country, however tolerant in other respects, we can afford no grains of allowance, no sentiments of indulgence, or toleration whatsoever; to do so, particularly at a time when those arms and councils are directed against our political and civil, against not our national only, but our natural existence (and at such a period you will find that the very conspiracy now under consideration was formed), would be equally inconsistent with every rule of law and every principle of self-preservation: it would be at once to authorize every description of mischievous persons to carry their destructive principles into immediate and fatal effect; in other words, it would be to sign the doom and downfall of that constitution which protects us all.

I am sure, therefore, for the crime, such as I have represented it to be, my learned friend will not, in the exercise of his own good sense, choose to offer any defence or apology; but he will endeavour to make the evidence I shall lay before you, appear in another point of view: he will endeavour to conceal and soften much of that malignity which I impute, and I think, justly, to the intentions and actings of these defendants.

It was about the close of the year 1792, that the French nation thought fit to hold out to all the nations on the globe, or rather, I should say, to the discontented subjects of all those nations, an encouragement to confederate and combine together, for the purpose of subverting all regular established authority amongst them, by a decree of that nation of the 19th of November 1792, which I consider as the immediate source and origin of this and other mischievous societies. That nation, in convention, pledged to the discontented inhabitants of other countries, its protection and assistance, in case they should be disposed to innovate and change the form of government under which they had heretofore lived. Under the influence of this fostering encouragement, and meaning, I must suppose, to avail themselves of the protection and assistance thus held out to them, this and other dangerous societies sprung up, and spread themselves within the bosom of this realm.

Gentlemen, it was about the period I mentioned, or shortly after, I mean in the month of December, which followed close upon the promulgation of this detestable decree, that the society on which I am about to comment, and ten members of which are now presented in trial before you, was formed*. The vigilance of those to whom the administration of justice and the immediate care of the police of the country is primarily entrusted, had already prevented or dispersed every numerous assembly of persons which resorted to public-houses for such purposes;
it

* The Manchester Constitutional Society was instituted in October 1790. The Reformation Society in March 1792. The Patriotic Society in April 1792.

it therefore became necessary for persons thus disposed, to assemble themselves to do so, if at all, within the walls of some private mansion. The president and head of this society, Mr. Thomas Walker, raised to that bad eminence by a species of merit which will not meet with much favour or encouragement here, opened his doors to receive a society of this sort at Manchester, miscalled the Reformation Society: the name may, in some senses, indeed import and be understood to mean a society formed for the purpose of beneficial reform; but what the real purposes of this society were you will presently learn, from their declared sentiments and criminal actings. He opened his doors, then, to receive this society; they assembled, night after night, in numbers, to an amount which you will hear from the witnesses. Sometimes, I believe, the extended number of such assemblies amounting to more than a hundred persons. There were three considerable rooms allotted for their reception. In the lower part of the house, where they were first admitted, they sat upon business of less moment, and requiring the presence of smaller numbers; in the upper part, they assembled in greater multitudes, and read, as in a school, and as it were to fashion and perfect themselves in every thing that is seditious and mischievous, those writings which have been already reprobated by other juries sitting in this and other places, by the courts of law, and, in effect, by the united voice of both houses of parliament. They read, amongst other works, particularly, the works of an author whose name is in the mouth of every body in this country; I mean the works of Thomas Paine; an author, who, in the gloom of a French prison, is now contemplating the full effects and experiencing all the miseries of that disorganizing system of which he is, in some respect, the parent—certainly, the great advocate and promoter.

The works of this author, and many other works of a similar tendency, were read aloud by a person of the name of Jackson, who exercised upon those occasions the mischievous function of reader to this society. Others of the defendants had different functions assigned them; some were busied in training them to the use of arms, for the purpose, avowedly, in case there should be either a landing of the French, with whom we were then, I think, actually at war, or about to be immediately at war; or in case there should take place a revolt in the kingdoms of Ireland or Scotland, to minister to their assistance, either to such invasion or to such revolt. That they met for such purposes is not only clear from the writings that were read aloud to them, and the conversations that were held, but by the purposes which were were expressly declared and avowed by those who may be considered as the mouth-pieces and organs of the society upon these occasions.

The first time, I think, that the witness Dunn, whom I shall presently produce to you, saw the defendant Mr. Walker, Mr. Walker declared to him, "that he hoped they should soon overthrow the constitution." The witness I have alluded to, was introduced to the society by two persons, I think of the names of M<sup>r</sup> Callum and Smith, and who, if I am not misinformed, have since taken their flight from this country to America. The first night he was there, he did not see their president Mr. Walker, but on the second night that he went there, Mr. Walker met him as he entered the door, and observing, from his dialect, that he was a native of Ireland, Mr Walker enquired of him how the volunteers went on, and said, with a smile, as he passed him in his way up stairs to the rest of the associated members, "we shall overthrow the constitution by and by." The witness was then ushered into this room, where he saw assembled nearly to the number of an hundred or an hundred and fifty persons. The room was, I understand, a large warehouse at the top of the house; there were about fourteen or fifteen persons then actually under arms, and some of those whose names are to be found in this record were employed in teaching others the military exercise. It would be endless, as well as useless, to relate to you the whole of what passed at these several meetings.

Upon some occasions, Mr. Walker would talk in the most contumelious and abominable language of the sacred person of our sovereign. In one instance, when talking of monarchy, he said, "damn kings! what have we to do with them, what are they to us?" and, to shew the contempt in which he held the lives of all kings, and particularly that of our own sovereign, taking a piece of paper in his hand and tearing it, he said, "If I had the king here, I would cut off his head, as readily as I tear this paper."

Upon other occasions, others of the members, and particularly a person of the name of Paul, who I believe is now in court, held similar language: damning the king; reviling and defaming him in the execution of his high office; representing the whole system of our public government as a system of plunder and rapacity; representing, particularly, the administration of a neighbouring kingdom by a lord lieutenant, as a scheme and device merely invented to corrupt the people, and to enrich and aggrandize the individual to whose care the government of that kingdom is more immediately delegated; in short, arraiging every part of our public œconomy as directly productive of misgovernment and oppression. The King himself was sometimes more particularly pointed at by Mr. Walker. He related of him a strange, incredible, and foolish fable, which I never heard suggested from any other quarter;—"That his Majesty was "possessed of seventeen millions of money in some bank "or other at Vienna, which he kept locked up there, and "would not bestow a single penny of it to relieve the distresses and indigence of any part of his own subjects." Many other assertions of this sort were made, and conversations of a similar import held, between Mr. Walker and the persons thus assembled.
and

About three months after the formation, as far as I can collect it, of this society, that is, about the month of March 1793, a person of the name of Yorke; Yorke of Derby, I think he is called, arrived at Manchester, with all the apparatus of a kind of apostolic mission, addressed to the various assemblies of seditious persons in that quarter of the kingdom. He harangued them upon such topics as were most likely to interest and inflame them; he explained to them the object of the journey he was then making through the country; he said, he was come to visit all the combined societies, in order to learn the numbers they could respectively muster, in case there should be an invasion by the French, which was then talked of, and is yet, I am afraid, talked of but upon too much foundation; to know, in short, what number they could add to the arms of France, in case these arms should be hostilely directed against Great Britain itself; he stated that the French were about to land in this country to the number of forty or fifty thousand men, and that he was collecting, in the different societies, the names of such persons as could be best depended upon, in order to ascertain what number in the whole could actually be brought into the field upon such an emergency.

When this person was present, there seems to have been a sort of holiday and festival of sedition: each member strove with his fellow which should express sentiments the most injurious and hostile to the peace and happiness of their country. Dunn, the witness I have already alluded to, will speak to the actual communication of all the several persons who are defendants upon this record in most of the mischievous councils which were then held, and which are the subject of this prosecution. They met during a considerable length of time he attended (and here you will not be called upon to give credit to a loose and casual recollection of a few random expressions, uttered upon one or two accidental occasions, capable of an innocent or doubtful construction), but he attended, I believe, at nearly forty of these meetings ; he attended them from about the month of December or January, down to the month of June, when, either through compunction for the share he had himself borne in those mischievous proceedings, or whatever else might be his motive (I trust it was an honourable one, and that it will in its effects prove beneficial to his country), he came forward and detailed this business to the magistrates of this county. It became them, having such circumstances related to them, and having it also confirmed by other evidence, that there were numerous nightly meetings of this sort held at stated intervals at the house of Mr. Walker, upon having the objects of these meetings detailed and verified to them, it became them, I say, to use means for suppressing a mischief of such extent and magnitude. It was accordingly thought proper to institute this prosecution for the purpose of bringing these enormous proceedings into public discussion and enquiry, before a jury of the country, and for the purpose of eventually bringing to condign punishment the persons immediately concerned in them.

Gentlemen, the evidence of this person, the witness I have mentioned, will unquestionably be assailed and attacked by a great deal of attempted contradiction ; his character will, I have no doubt, be arraigned and drawn in question from the earliest period to which the defendants can have any opportunities of access, for materials respecting it. Upon nothing but upon the effectual impeachment of the character of this witness, can they bottom any probable expectations of acquittal ; to that point, therefore, their efforts will be mainly directed. I wish their efforts had been hitherto directed innocently towards the attainment of this object, and that no opportunities had been recently taken in occasional meetings and conversations to attempt to tamper with the testimony of this witness. There are other practices, which next to an actual tampering with the testimony of a witness, are extremely mischievous to the regular course and administration of justice. I mean attempts to lure a witness into conversations respecting the subject of his testimony ; of this we have seen many very blameable instances in the course of the present circuit, where conversations have been set on foot for the purpose of catching at some particular expressions, inadvertently dropt by a witness, and of afterwards bringing them forward, separately and detached from the rest of the conversation, in order to give a different colour and complexion to the substance of his evidence, and to weaken the effect and credit of the whole.

Gentlemen, these attempts are too commonly made ;
happily,

happily, however, for public justice, they are commonly unsuccessful; because they do and must, with every honourable mind, recoil upon the party making them. Private applications to a person not only known to be an adverse witness, but to be the very witness upon whose credit the prosecution most materially depends; private conversations with such a witness, for the purpose of getting from him declarations which may be afterwards opposed in seeming contradiction to his solemn testimony upon oath, are of themselves so dishonourable that with every well-disposed and well-judging mind, they will naturally produce an effect directly contrary to the expectations of the persons who make them.

I know, Gentlemen, what I have most to fear upon this occasion; I know the vigour and energy of the mind of my learned friend. I have long felt and admired the powerful effect of his various talents. I know the ingenious sophistry by which he can mislead, and the fascination of that eloquence by which he can subdue the minds of those to whom he addresses himself. I know what he can do to-day, by seeing what he has done upon many other occasions before. But, at the same time, Gentlemen, knowing what he is, I am somewhat consoled in knowing you. I have practised for several years in this place; I know the sound discretion and judgment by which your verdicts are generally governed, and upon the credit of that experience, I trust that it will not be in the power of my friend, by any arts he is able to employ, to seduce you a single step from the sober paths of truth and justice. You will hear the evidence with the attention which becomes men who are deciding on the fate of others. If these defendants be innocent, and my learned friend is able to substantiate their innocence, to your satisfaction, for God's sake let them be acquitted; but if that innocence cannot be clearly and satisfactorily established, I stand here interested as I am in common with him in the acquittal of innocence, at the same time however demanding the rights of public justice against the guilty. It imports the safety of yourselves, it imports the safety of our country, it imports the existence and security of every thing that is dear to us, if these men be not innocent, that no considerations of tenderness and humanity, no considerations of any sort short of what the actual abstract justice of the case may require, should prevent the hand of punishment from falling heavy on them.

Having, therefore, Gentlemen, given you this short detail and explanation of the principal facts which are about to be laid before you in evidence, I will now close the trouble I mean to give you, in the first instance. I shall by and by, by, when my learned friend has adduced that evidence by which he will attempt to assail the character and credit of the principal witness for the prosecution, have an opportunity of addressing you again; and, I trust, in the mean time, that whatever attention you may be disposed to pay to the exertions of those who will labour to establish the innocence of the persons now arraigned before you, that you will, at the same time, steadily bear in mind the duties which you owe to yourselves and to your country; recollecting, as I am sure you will, that we all look up to your firmness and integrity at this moment, for the protection of that constitution from which we derive every blessing we individually or collectively enjoy.

EVIDENCE FOR THE CROWN.

Thomas Dunn (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Wood.

Q. I believe you are a weaver, and live at Manchester?

A. Yes.

Q. Were you at any time introduced to any society at Mr. Walker's house there?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Do you recollect when it was?

A. I believe in the latter end of September in the year 1792.

Q. Who was you introduced by?

A. M<sup>c</sup> Callum and Smith.

Q. What was this society called?

A. The Reformation Society.

Q. What is become of M<sup>c</sup> Callum and Smith?

A. I cannot tell; the last time I saw them they told me they were going to America.

Q. What number of people might there be when you was first introduced?

A. Sometimes there were more, sometimes less; I cannot tell to the exact number.

Q. How many do you think there were the first time, when you were introduced by M<sup>c</sup> Callum and Smith?

A. Perhaps fifty or sixty.

Q. Were you all in the same room, or in different rooms?

A. In different rooms.

Q. How many different rooms might you be in?

A. In two, as far as I can recollect, that night.

Q. What was going forward in these different rooms?

A. As far as I could see there were politics spoken of, and other men were learning discipline.

Q. What had they to learn their discipline with?

A. Firelocks.

Q. How many might there be learning their discipline?

A. About six or seven.

Q. Was that in the room in which they were talking politics?

A. No, in a different room.

Q. Do you recollect what sort of politics were talked?

A. They were reading a paper; I cannot exactly tell the words; the whole of the meeting was entirely with respect to a reformation in parliament; the motive was entirely that, as far as I could understand.

C

A. Did

Q. Did you say the motive was entirely that?

A. Yes, as far as I could understand it that night.

Q. How long might you be there that night?

A. I cannot recollect the time; I never stopped above an hour or two there, my employ called me that I could not come there before eight o'clock; I commonly went back again to get home about ten.

Q. When was the next time you was there?

A. I went there the Monday following.

Q. Was Monday the day of meeting?

A. Yes, the particular day.

Q. Did you see Mr. Walker at that time?

A. Not the first day I did not; I saw him the second time.

Q. Where did you see him?

A. I knocked at his door, and I met him at the door within the house.

Q. What did Mr. Walker say to you?

A. He wanted to know my business. I told him I wished to go to the society; he said he perceived I was an Irishman; I said, yes I was; he said, had I any account from Ireland lately, and how the Volunteers were going on? I told him I thought they were going on very prosperous; upon that he just waved his hand, and said, we would overthrow the constitution by and by; upon that I went up to the society room; there was a candle and candlestick in every passage up the stairs.

Q. Did you see any body there?

A. Yes, a great many people.

Q. How many do you suppose there were at that time?

A. I think there might be above a hundred and fifty there that night.

Q. What were they doing?

A. Some one thing, some another; there were about fifteen or sixteen under arms.

Q. What were they doing under arms?

A. Going through the manual exercise.

Q. Was there any body there to instruct them in it?

A. O yes, one Oliver Pearsall.

Q. Did Mr. Walker come among you?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you remember one Samuel Jackson?

A. Yes.

Q. Was he there at this time?

A. I don't know but he might come there.

Q. Do you know whether he was there or not?

A. I actually cannot tell whether I saw him there at that time or not.

Q. Was

Q. Was there any thing done at that meeting except learning the exercise?

A. No.

Q. How long might you stay that night?

A. Not very long, I never stopped very long.

Q. Did you go again after that?

A. Yes, very often.

Q. Did you see Mr. Walker there?

A. Yes, every night; I never missed Mr. Walker but one night.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Walker say any thing relative to what was going forward there about these people learning the use of arms?

A. I do not know what you mean.

Q. You have said, there were people there learning their exercise.

A. Yes.

Q. Have you heard Mr. Walker say for what purpose it was?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. What did he say?

A. I have heard him say so far as this, that it was his intention and the design was to forward and to aid the French, if they would land here.

Q. Do you know Cheetham?

A. Yes, very well.

Q. And Booth?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see them there?

A. Yes.

Q. And Paul?

A. Yes, I saw him there.

Q. Did you see them there frequently, or only once, or twice?

A. Frequently.

Q. Did you see Collier there?

A. I did.

Q. Have you ever seen Jackson at any of these meetings?

A. O yes, he was a very great reader in politics.

Q. Did he read to the people that were there?

A. Yes.

Q. What sort of books might he read?

A. Paine's Works, and a man, I forget his name now, and Cooper's Reply to Mr. Burke's Invective, and other matters; he always had something new.

Q. Was it declared what was the intent of this society?

A. I absolutely just will inform you, candidly, in my opinion, as far as I can learn, when I came to understand myself self properly, that it was to overthrow the whole consitution.

Q. Did you understand it so?

A. I understand it so now, but not at that time.

Q. What did you understand then was the object and design of this meeting?

A. I understood at that time that it was to serve poor people.

Q. How were the poor people to be served?

A. By association together, I thought, and to have so far as this to be neighbourly, and no further; I thought so.

Q. Did you ever hear any thing said about the Irish or the Scotch?

A. At what time?

Q. At any of those meetings?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. What was said about them?

A. I recollect to hear a letter read, an address from the United Irishmen to Scotland.

Q. Who read that?

A. Mr. Paul I think, to the best of my recollection; it was either he, or Jackson; but however, Mr. Paul came out with these expressions, which I will relate to the whole court; the matter stood thus, when the letter was read I cannot say, whether he or Paul might read it himself I cannot pretend to say, but Mr. Paul said, that if ever we should have a revolt, it would be from the Irish; he says, I have property in Ireland myself, and he wondered the Irishmen there mentioned did not exert themselves more than they did do; I happened to be the very next man to him, I said, I am an Irishman myself; he said, I know you are, he said, if ever we should have a revolt, it should be through the Irish; they have sent a deputy to Ireland as a King; damn him, said he, and all Kings.

Q. Do you remember Mr. Yorke—Henry Yorke?

A. Yes I do; I will not pretend to say that I should know the man; I never saw him but one night for about an hour.

Q. Who was he introduced by?

A. By Mr. Thomas Walker.

Q. What was he introduced for?

A. It was that very night that he happened to come, it happened to be very thin of people; but howsoever he was introduced, and took by his arm into our place; he was introduced as a Gentleman of the same principles; and all hands were put up that he should be the chairman.

Q. And did he take the chair?

A. He did.

Q. What did he say to you?

A. He

A. He mentioned he was glad to see so many loyalists; he was glad to see so many friends; he had just come from Sheffield; he said he was only a short time from France; that he lay a fortnight in Paine's house in Paris. At this time there were different opinions, with respect to whether they should draw up a petition to recommend for a reform; he said, there was that height of petitions (describing it) from Scotland and other parts.

Q. Had he those petitions with him?

A. No, he told us it was so in Sheffield, different copies; he said nothing will do but a reform—a reformation then was clapped—he said, that he was going through the three kingdoms, to see what aid they could have to assist the French, if they should land here.

Mr. Erskine. Repeat that over again.

A. To aid and assist, to know the aid that might be for the French.

Mr. Wood. Did he say any thing about the number of French that might be expected?

A. Fifty thousand.

Q. Were there a great many members present that night?

A. Not a great many, I cannot say the exact number; there might be about fifty, it was a very wet night, I recollect that.

Q. Was there any exercises learned that night?

A. Yes, there was.

Q. How many different meetings might you attend in all, think you?

A. I dare say forty or fifty, I can be safe upon that.

Q. Do you remember Benjamin Booth's being taken into custody?

A. I do.

Q. Did you apply to the society upon that occasion?

A. I did.

Q. What was your application for him?

A. To get him some money.

Q. Did you get any money for him?

A. There was some money got for him that night.

Q. Do you remember being there at any other time, when there was any conversation about the King?

A. Many times; I do not suppose there was any night but there was something of that kind.

Q. Recollect something that was said about the King.

A. Upon what night?

Q. When any thing was said about the King.

A. I remember being there one night in particular, when
Mr.

Mr. Thomas Walker was speaking with respect to war; he disapproved of the war entirely, and he thought the ministry was highly to blame, and the whole to involve us in a war. That he had seventeen million of money in the Bank of Vienna.

Q. Who had seventeen million of money?

A. The King, in the Bank of Vienna, and he would not give one penny to serve the poor; damn him, and all kings. He had a bit of paper in his hand; he said, he would as soon take his head off as he would that, and he tore the paper.

Q. Do you recollect how many people were present then?

A. I cannot pretend to say how many there were.

Q. Did you hear any thing said that night about Ireland?

A. I do not recollect I did.

Q. Did you hear him at any other time say any thing about Ireland? did you hear William Paul say any thing?

A. I mentioned that; I will say it over again, if you please.

Q. Do so.

A. There was an address of the United Irishmen to Scotland.

Q. You said that before; do you remember being at a meeting after the death of the late French King?

A. Yes.

Q. Who was there then?

A. A good many.

Q. Was Collier there?

A. Yes, he came in, we were discoursing the matter, and all rejoicing upon it; he came into the place; he thought he was the first, in one sense, to announce to the company that it was so; he passed round, he damned him, and wished all kings were served so.

Q. Do you remember whether Jackson recommended any thing to the meeting?

A. He recommended every thing to be very candid, and keep every thing very secret, that we should be unanimous one to another.

Q. Did you go openly and publicly to Mr. Walker's house?

A. No, latterly we went there as private as possible since.

Q. Which door did you go in at?

A. At the back door.

Q. Since what time was it that you went privately?

A. Since it was known so publicly, that we were called Painites,

Painites, when we were turned out of the public-houses, that we could not meet there.

Q. Then you went to Mr. Walker's?

A. Yes, he opened that house for us.

Q. What door did you go in at?

A. The back door in general; I never went in at the front door in my life, but at the second time.

Q. Did others go in at the back door or not?

A. Some went in at the front, some at the back door.

Q. What were you afraid of?

A. I was afraid, as much as any thing, of the constables.

Q. Do you know whether they were watching you or not?

A. I knew they were.

Q. What constables were watching you?

A. The different constables of the town; I think the deputy of Salford was watching us as much as any body. Mr. Walker sent out different men to watch them; there are men in the bar, that if they would speak the truth, know they went out to watch them.

Thomas Dunn.

Cross-examined by Mr. Erskine.

Q. What is your Christian name?

A. Thomas Dunn.

Q. Why do you call it your Christian name?

A. I was brought up by that.

Q. Was you ever christened?

A. I hope so.

Q. Then you forgot that circumstance formerly—do you hear me?

A. Yes.

Q. You forgot that circumstance once of your having been christened.

A. Have I? how long since?

Q. Do you remember ever having been asked the question?

A. I remember you asked me what my name was, and I answered you that my name was Thomas Dunn.

Q. Was you never asked at any other time, and by any body else?

A. Very well, and suppose I choose to tell this or that.

Q. But you happened to be upon your oath at the time I am speaking of.

A. I am speaking now, that my name is Thomas Dunn,
and

and upon my oath I am speaking, I know what you are upon Mr. Erskine; I tell you in this place, that I defy you, though the learned Mr. Erskine is come down here to insult me.

Mr. Justice Heath. You must behave properly.

A. I have served his Majesty for years, and would serve him to day; is Mr. Erskine to disprove my name?

Mr. Justice Heath. You must not put yourself in a passion, but behave decently.

Mr. Erskine. I wish this worthy gentleman may be left to himself, subject only to your Lordship's interposition when he misbehaves. You will find I am not so easily put out, as you fancy; therefore I will resume my question again: Was you never asked, when you was sworn to speak the truth, whether you had been christened or not, and what answer did you give?

A. No, never in my life.

Q. Do you mean to swear, that such a question was never put to you in a court of justice, when you came forward to convict one of these innocent men that you are now a witness against?

A. Innocent!

Q. That his Lordship and the Jury are to try. Was that question ever put to you, and did you give it any, and what answer? I am in no hurry; his Lordship will have the goodness to wait for you.

A. If you will speak the words over again.

Q. Was you never asked, when sworn upon the Gospels to speak the truth, whether you were christened or no, and what answer did you give?

A. I tell you I never was in my life.

Q. Never was what?

A. I never was asked whether I was christened or not*.

Q. You can read, I take it for granted?

A. No, I can neither read nor write.

Q. There is something wrote up there, (opposite the witness box) which otherwise I would have recommended to your perusal †?

A. I am quite an illiterate man.

Q. Who was it that told you I was come down here for the purpose of insulting you?

A. What, Mr. Erskine.

Q. You seem perfectly familiar with my name.

A. Yes, and I know your person too.

Q. Who

* When Benjamin Booth was convicted at the Manchester Sessions, upon Dunn's sole evidence, Dunn was asked if he had ever been baptized; to which he replied in the negative.

† "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour."

Q. Who told you that ?

A. No gentleman here told me.

Q. How came you to know ?

A. I was acquainted the night before last where you lodged at Preston.

Q. Who told you so ?

A. The landlord, that you and Mr. Walker were there together.

Q. You never knew any thing of me before that ?

A. O yes, I saw you before ; I know more of you than you fancy.

Q. Did you ever see me before or not ?

A. I saw your picture.

Q. That is all ?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that all you meant when you said you knew more of me than I fancied ?

A. No, I could tell you more. (Here Mr. Justice Heath interrupted Mr. Erskine by saying we have nothing to do with this.)

Q. It was in the month of September you first went to this meeting ?

A. I do not know but it might.

Q. Do you mean to swear that it was ?

A. No, I do not mean to swear about it.

Q. Do you know what month it was in ?

A. No.

Q. Do you know what year it was in ?

A. In 1792.

Q. Do you remember the riot at Manchester ?

A. Yes.

Q. When Mr. Walker's house was surrounded and attacked ?

A. I remember to have heard of it.

Q. Was it before or after that ?

A. After.

Q. You are certain of that ?

A. Very certain.

Q. The first time you was at this society was after the riot ?

A. Yes.

Q. How long do you think it might be after the riot, some weeks, was it not ?

A. I think it was a few days.

Q. Are you quite sure it was after the riot ?

A. Yes.

Q. And you think about a few days ?

A. Yes.

Q. Which society did you belong to ?

D

A. The

A. The Reformation Society.

Q. Was you elected into it, or did you go upon the invitation of any body?

A. I went upon the invitation of one Smith and M<sup>c</sup> Callum.

Q. Nobody else knew you there, of course, that constituted this society?

A. I knew two or three of them when I went in.

Q. The rest were strangers to you?

A. Yes.

Q. So much so, that you did not even know their names, nor they you?

A. I knew them by sight; their names I did not know.

Q. At the next meeting you saw Mr. Walker?

A. Yes.

Q. At the door of his house, I think you tell us, you met him. Was he acquainted with you, or you with him?

A. I never saw the man in my life before, not to know him.

Q. He found out that you were an Irishman by your tongue, of course?

A. Yes.

Q. And asked your business?

A. Yes.

Q. You told him you were going to the society?

A. Yes.

Q. Were Smith or M<sup>c</sup> Callum with you at that time?

A. No person but myself.

Q. Then Mr. Walker knew nothing of you but what you told him?

A. Just so.

Q. He asked you whether you had heard from Ireland lately about the Volunteers?

A. Yes.

Q. And immediately upon that he rapped out what you told us a little while ago about the constitution?

A. Yes.

Q. And then you went to the society, and Mr. Yorke took the chair?

A. It was not that night that Mr. Yorke took the chair.

Q. How long after was it that Mr. Yorke took the chair?

A. A very little time after.

Q. What passed the night of the day you saw Mr. Walker?

A. Nothing transpired more than was customary in the place.

Q. You said it appeared to you the object of the meeting was a reform of parliament for the benefit of the poor?

A. I

A. I thought so at the first go off, or I should never have joined it.

Q. You was not a man of those bad principles, was you?

A. I do not know what you may call bad principles.

Q. You was not a man that would wish to overthrow the constitution, was you?

A. No, I absolutely was not never to overturn it; I think we never could have a better.

Q. So I think too. Then you always was of that mind?

A. Yes, I was always of that principle.

Q. That it would be better to reform our constitution by petitions to parliament to reform it, than to overthrow it?

A. Yes, but I never saw a design of that in our society.

Q. You never saw a design to overturn the constitution?

A. No, I never saw any design, or the least motion moved to petition parliament for a reform.

Q. How many times did you attend?

A. I cannot tell the number; but I dare say forty or fifty.

Q. During all the time you met, what do you believe was the intention of these people?

A. I believed at the first go off, that it was for a reform; that a petition might be sent up to parliament, for a reform in parliament; then I perceived every thing that was to overthrow the constitution.

Q. How soon did you find out this?

A. I forsook it as soon as ever I found it out.

Q. When you found that they did not mean a petition to parliament, you determined to have nothing more to do with it after that?

A. No.

Q. Then how came you ever to go again, when Mr. Walker, who was at the head of it, told you before, when you went there the second time, that he would overthrow the constitution by and by?

A. I did not conceive the word; I was not absolutely up to that word; I did not know the meaning of the word, till late.

Q. So, when he asked you how the Volunteers were going on, and you told him, very well, he said, we shall overthrow the constitution by and by; what did you think he meant?

A. I did not know what he meant; I thought we might have a reform; that was what I wanted.

Q. You thought when Mr. Walker said, we shall overthrow throw the constitution by and by, that he meant a reform?

A. I did indeed, upon my oath.

Q. When you heard him say, that he would think no more of cutting the King's head off, than he would of tearing a piece of paper, you still thought he was perfectly friendly to the constitution?

A. A letter was read with respect to the King of France; I did not know but he might be guilty; they had every information from France.

Q. I am not talking of the King of France.

A. No, I am speaking that there were letters every night that the society met, coming from France. I thought he was perfectly right.

Q. I am not speaking of the King of France, but of our King. When you heard Mr. Walker say, that he should think no more, as you tell us, of cutting the King of England's head off, than of tearing a piece of paper, how came you to go afterwards?

A. Many things might induce me.

Q. You was always a Friend to the King and Constitution?

A. Yes I always served his Majesty, and will serve him still.

Q. And always thought, till you left the society, that they were people that meant well to government, and meant to reform?

A. Yes.

Q. You having served the King by sea and land, having fought for him, and being ready to fight for him again, how came you to go within the walls of that place, after hearing Mr. Walker make use of those expressions of him, and hearing those other persons talk in the manner you say that they did, of your own sovereign? You attended forty or fifty times after that, you say?

A. Suppose I did, perhaps I went there to learn; I don't know what I might do.

Q. After you had been present and heard, according to your own account, abominable treason against the chief magistrate of the country, your own gracious Sovereign, you went there to learn, did you? Now when you heard Mr. Yorke say he was going through the three kingdoms, to know what force could be collected among the different societies, to bring in the French, and to aid them, if the French landed, how came you to go to this place as a lover of your King and country?

A. I own myself in a fault to attend them.

Q. You said just now, you thought at first going off they were were good people, and you never left them till you found the contrary; now did you leave them, did you voluntarily go and give any information about what you knew in this place, or did you not continue with the society as you began it, till you was taken up and put in custody?

A. I was not put in custody.

Q. Was you taken up?

A. Yes.

Q. You was arrested?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever open your mouth, friend as you was to your King, and a lover of your country, after you heard these people damning the King every night for months, that the chairman stated he would go round and collect force to destroy his Majesty, and bring in the French, did you ever utter one syllable of this till you was taken up and arrested?

A. I was arrested, but not put in custody.

Q. Was you not carried before a magistrate?

A. I was; I will acknowledge every thing that is lawful and just.

Q. So, all this time you was a perfect good friend to your King and country?

A. I had an opinion quite different a long time before.

Q. In what?

A. Against what I saw; I did not like the French; I think if they were to come here, if we had the same as they are getting in France, we should be very bad.

Q. So we all think; so you always did?

A. I did not always; not for some little time, a very little time.

Q. I suppose you stayed in the society a great while after you saw all this?

A. No, I did not; there was one or another hanging after me to belong to the society.

Q. Did not you stay in the society, and attend the meetings, till you was taken up for distributing a paper?

A. It was a considerable time before that.

Q. Had you never given an account of any thing you are giving to-day, till after you was taken up and carried before a magistrate?

A. No.

Q. You was never in prison?

A. No, never in my life.

Q. Nor threatened to be imprisoned?

A. No.

Q. What was you taken up for?—was not you threatened to be imprisoned for distributing a hand-bill, and was not you actually in custody?

A. What

- A.* What kind of hand-bill ?
- Q.* No matter what kind of hand-bill ; were you not taken up and carried before Mr. Griffith ?
- A.* Yes.
- Q.* Do you mean to say you was never in prison upon that ?
- A.* No, he gave me any liberty I chose.
- Q.* Allowed you to go where you pleased ?
- A.* Yes.
- Q.* Then you never was committed, was you ?
- A.* No.
- Q.* Was not you in the New Bailey ?
- A.* Yes.
- Q.* How long ?
- A.* A considerable time.
- Q.* And yet not a prisoner ?
- A.* I walked in and out as I pleased.
- Q.* How came you to choose to be there ; what was you there for ?
- A.* I was in dread.
- Q.* Of what ?
- A.* Of the opposite party ; I was in doubt whether they would not destroy me.
- Q.* And so you walked out when you pleased ?
- A.* Occasionally, when I saw my own opportunity.
- Q.* You might have gone away where you would ?
- A.* Certainly I might.
- Q.* How much drink had you the day you got into prison, before you made your confession ?
- A.* I might have some drink.
- Q.* Who gave it you ?
- A.* My own pocket.
- Q.* It was your own money, was it ?
- A.* Yes.
- Q.* Nobody else gave you any ?
- A.* No, upon my oath ; that is plump.
- Q.* Nobody gave you any shrub ?
- A.* Not that day.
- Q.* Who gave you the shrub the next day ?
- A.* Suppose a gentleman was so friendly as to give me a glass of shrub, is that any thing ?
- Q.* I am not finding fault with it. Who was it ?
- A.* I don't know whether that is to be answered or not.
- Mr. Law.* Yes, it is.
- Mr. Erskine.* I do not wish to press the gentleman.
- A.* I got a glass of shrub, certainly ; I do not suppose that is any material matter.
- Mr. Justice Heath.* You have nothing to do whether it is material or no ; answer the question.

A. I

A. I got a glass of shrub from Mr. Griffith's house, to be sure.

Q. Tell me whether I misunderstood you, or no, that you had served the King, you wish to serve him, you love him as every subject ought to love him, and that you heard all these expressions of danger to his authority mentioned in this place, then you must necessarily have thought Mr. Walker a very dangerous and wicked man from this?

A. I always thought him a good man.

Q. Not after that, did you?

A. Yes.

Q. What! after you heard him say that he would think no more of breaking the oath which he had sworn to the King, that you think him a good man after that; then you think him a good man now, perhaps?

A. I hope there may be a reformation in him.

Q. You thought him then, no doubt, and think now, that he is a very wicked man; but you hope, as every good man should, that there may be a reformation in him?

A. That is my hope.

Q. Have you always been of that way of thinking; it is your wish he should reform; you are conscious of his wickedness; is that so? You know, if that be true, you have done nothing more than your duty to God and your country, in the oath you have taken to-day, and the oath you took before the Grand Jury, you know that.

A. I know that very well.

Q. You know you are bound to do it by every thing that is sacred; if that be so, give me leave to ask you how you came to be desirous of asking pardon of Mr. Walker for having wronged him, for having sworn falsely against him, believing him to be what you tell my Lord and these Gentlemen now: you never perhaps asked him pardon for the oath you took before the Grand Jury?

A. Never in my life.

Q. You never went down upon your knees before him, and begged for his forgiveness for the crimes which you had committed to his prejudice?

A. Never; nor I never will.

Q. You never said, did you, that you could never sleep until you had done him justice, and that you was determined to go that night to find him out?

A. No, never in my life.

Q. Then, of course, it is not true, that you went down upon your knees, that you wept, and held your hands before your face, when you confessed the perjury that you had committed?

A. I

A. I don't know what you may say ; you may say just as you please.

Q. It is all a falsehood, and an invention of mine. I came down here to insult you, and am keeping my word.

A. Yes.

Q. You never said that Mr. Walker never had been guilty of any of those crimes that you had imputed to him ?

A. No, I never did.

Q. It is entirely false ?

A. I allow it to be false, the greatest falsehood that ever was expressed in a court.

Q. Have I understood you right, that three of them had damned the King, at the early parts of the meeting, Mr. Paul, Mr. Walker, and Mr. Jackson ?

A. I do not recollect.

Q. Then do you not recollect that Mr. Jackson or Mr. Paul, damn'd the King ?

A. Yes, I do very well.

Q. Mr. Collier damn'd the King ?

A. Yes.

Q. Let us hear what he said. Collier is a good deal given to swearing, is not he ?

A. I never heard him in my life swear before that ?

Q. What did he say ?

A. He came in, and walked round, and said, he is guillotined ; damn him, and all kings ! I wish they were all guillotined ; I wish they were all served so, he said.

Thomas Dunn.

Re-examined by Mr. Wood.

Q. Was you introduced to Mr. Walker and his brother at any time lately ?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. When was that ?

A. It was, I think, a fortnight this day.

Q. Who was it that brought you to them ?

A. One Twiss.

Q. Who is he ?

A. He lives close by him.

Q. Is he a servant of Mr. Walker's ?

A. He works for him, I think.

Q. When you was brought there to Mr. Walker, what did they say to you ?

A. They did not say a great deal, only two or three words words passed; Richard Walker said he wondered I should deviate from my former principles, what he had taken me to be.

Q. Was there only Thomas Walker there, and Richard Walker, and Twiss?

A. I do not recollect any more. There were some words in the indictment, he said, that were not right, and I corrected them the next day.

Q. You mean the information, I suppose.

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. What has Richard Walker to do with Mr. Thomas Walker?

Mr. Wood. Was Mr. Thomas Walker there?

A. He was.

Mr. Erskine. I have no objection to your asking him any thing about Richard Walker.

Q. Did you never go by the name of Litchfield?

A. No, never.

Q. Where were these arms placed?

A. In the warehouse.

Mr. Wood. How high was the warehouse?

A. Three or four stories high.

Q. At a considerable height?

A. Yes.

Q. Could they shoulder their arms in it?

A. Yes.

Mr. Erskine. Pretty near as high as this place?

A. Not quite.

Thomas Kinnaston (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Topping.

Q. You are, I believe, the deputy-constable of Salford?

A. Yes.

Q. And have been so some time?

A. Some years.

Q. Do you remember at any time in the months of January and February last, watching about the house of Mr. Thomas Walker?

A. Yes, in the months of January and February 1793, I did.

Q. You watched as a constable, for the purpose of seeing who went in and out there?

A. I did.

Q. At what time of the night have you used to watch there?

A. I went a little after six, and generally stayed till nine.

Q. Did you watch repeatedly during these months?

E

A. Yes,

A. Yes, I went frequently, once or twice a week.

Q. Upon the nights that you have used to watch there, once or twice a week, who have you seen go into Mr. Walker's house?

A. I saw a great number that I did not know. I saw the late witness, Dunn, go in.

Q. Have you seen M<sup>c</sup> Callum go in?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know John Smith?

A. No.

Q. Do you know William Paul?

A. Yes, well.

Q. Have you seen him go in?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen Samuel Jackson?

A. Yes.

Q. Cheetham?

A. Yes.

Q. Oliver Pearsall?

A. Yes, I did not know him at that time; I have since known his name.

Q. Benjamin Booth?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you know Henry Yorke?

A. No.

Q. Do you know Dr. Collier?

A. He lives next door to Mr. Walker.

Q. You don't recollect whether you have seen him or not?

A. No.

Q. Have you seen these people repeatedly go into Mr. Walker's upon the nights you have been watching?

A. I have, some of them many times.

Q. Which door had they used to go in at?

A. At the front door.

Q. Have you seen them come out?

A. Yes, I have seen them come out.

Q. How had they used to come out?

A. At the same door.

Q. How were they admitted?

A. A very gentle tap at the door; there appeared to me to be a servant attending at the door, who seemed to know their faces perfectly well.

Q. How long had they used to remain there?

A. From the time I saw them go in, to the time of their coming out, has been more than two hours; they sometimes came out and went in again.

Q. And sometimes stayed a longer, sometimes a shorter time, I suppose?

A. Yes.

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen various other persons besides the persons you mentioned, go there?

A. I saw a great number of persons whom I did not know.

Q. How many in number do you think you have seen go in of an evening?

A. I believe I have seen more than fifty.

Q. Were these tradesmen of the town that you were acquainted with, or of the lower class of people?

A. A great majority seemed to be of the lower class of people; they appeared to me a great majority to be mechanics of the lower order.

Q. Did you never see them come in or go out at any door but at the front door?

A. I have seen people come out, but they might be his servants out of the warehouse, come out of the back door.

Q. You have seen people come out at the back door?

A. I have, but they might be Mr. Walker's servants for aught I know.

Thomas Kinnaston.

Cross-examined by Mr. Serjeant Cockell.

Q. Did you ever knock at the door?

A. I never did.

Q. Where might you stand at this time—you are rather hard of hearing?

A. I am.

Q. How did you hear this very gentle tap?

A. I was not deaf then.

Q. Was you close to the door?

A. There was a wall close to the door; I leaned against that wall frequently.

Q. Did you know the persons of these men—had you seen them before?

A. Yes many times.

Q. Where had you seen them before?

A. Frequently in the streets.

Q. Don't you know they had their clubs at public-houses, and till they got a room, it was held at Mr. Walker's?

A. I never saw them at the public-houses; I believe I should not have been admitted.

Q. Were those persons that you saw go into Mr. Walker's house, members of the club?

A. I believe they were.

Q. They were prevented holding the clubs at the public-houses?

A. I

A. I do not know that.

Q. You must know that.

A. No, I was not present.

Q. Have not you seen the public advertisements appearing in the papers?

A. I have.

Q. Do not you know that these clubs were transferred to Mr. Walker's house, till they could find some place at which to meet?

A. I do not upon my word; I know the landlords signed their names in the public papers, that they would not admit such clubs, but I know nothing of the adjournments.

Q. Do not you know, that after the landlords had so refused to receive them, at the desire of the magistrates, that they met at a private house, which was attacked by a mob and in a great measure destroyed?

A. No, I do not.

Thomas Kinnaston.

Re-examined by Mr. Topping.

Q. You had not an opportunity, from the situation in which you was out of doors, of observing any thing that was going on above stairs?

A. No; Mr. Walker's warehouse windows are in the yard at the back part of the house.

End of the Evidence for the Crown.

Mr.

Mr. Erskine.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

I listened with the greatest attention (and in honour of my learned friend I must say with the greatest approbation) to much of his address to you in the opening of this Cause; it was candid and manly, and contained many truths which I have no interest to deny; one in particular which involves in it indeed the very principle of the defence, the value of that happy constitution of government which has so long existed in this island: I hope in God that none of us will ever forget the gratitude which we owe to the Divine Providence, and, under its blessing, to the wisdom of our forefathers, for the happy establishment of law and justice under which we live; and under which, thank God, my clients are this day to be judged: great indeed will be the condemnation of any man who does not feel and act as he ought to do upon this subject; for surely if there be one privilege greater than another which the benevolent Author of our beings has been pleased to dispense to his creatures since the existence of the earth which we inhabit, it is to have cast our lots in such a country and in such an age as that in which we live: for myself, I would in spirit prostrate myself daily and hourly before Heaven to acknowledge it, and instead of coming from the house of Mr. Walker, and accompanying him at Preston, (the only truths which the witness has uttered since he came into court) if I believed him capable of committing the crimes he is charged with, I would rather have gone into my grave than have been found as a friend under his roof.

Gentlemen, the crime imputed to the defendant is a serious one indeed:—Mr. Law has told you, and told you truly, that this indictment has not at all for its object to condemn or to question the particular opinions which Mr. Walker and the other defendants may entertain concerning the principles of this government or the reforms which the wisest governments may from time to time require: he is indeed a man of too enlarged a mind to think for a moment that his country can be served by interrupting the current of liberal opinion, or overawing the legal freedom of English sentiment by the terrors of criminal prosecution: he openly disavows such a system, and has, I think, even more than hinted to us that there may be seasons when an attention to reform may be salutary, and that every individual under our happy establishment has a right upon this important subject to think for himself.

The defendants therefore are not arraigned before you, nor even censured in observation, for having associated at Manchester to promote what they felt to be the cause of religious and civil liberty; nor are they arraigned or censured for seeking to collect the sentiments of their neighbours and the public concerning the necessity of a reform in the constitution of parliament; these sentiments and objects are wholly out of the question: but they are charged with having unlawfully confederated and conspired to destroy and overthrow the government of the kingdom by OPEN FORCE AND REBELLION, and that to effect this wicked purpose they exercised the King's subjects with arms, perverting that which is our birthright for the protection of our lives and property to the malignant purpose of supporting the enemies of this kingdom in case of an invasion; in order, as my friend has truly said, (for I admit the consequence if the fact is established,) in order to make our country that scene of confusion and desolation which fills every man's heart with dismay and horror when he only reads or thinks of what is transacting at a distance upon the bloody theatre of the war that now reigns in the world. This, and nothing different or less than this, is the charge which is made upon the defendants, at the head of whom stands before you a merchant of honour, property, character, and respect; who has long enjoyed the countenance and friendship of many of the worthiest and most illustrious persons in the kingdom, and whose principles and conduct have more than once been publicly and gratefully acknowledged by the community of which he is a member, for standing forth the friend of their commerce and liberties and the protector of the most essential privileges which Englishmen can enjoy under the laws.

Gentlemen, such a prosecution against such a person ought to have had a strong foundation; and, indeed, putting private justice and all respect of persons wholly out of the question, should not, but upon the most clear conviction and the most urgent necessity, have been instituted at all: we are at this moment in a most awful and fearful crisis of affairs; we are told authentically by the Sovereign from the throne that our enemies in France are meditating an invasion, and the kingdom from one end to another is putting in motion to repel it:—in such a state of things, and when the public transactions of government and justice in the two countries pass and repass from one another as if upon the wings of the wind, is it a politic thing to prepare this solemn array of justice upon such a dangerous subject without a reasonable foundation, or rather without an urgent call, and at a time too when it is our common interest that France should believe us to be what we are and ever have been, one heart and soul to protect our country and our constitution?—Is it wise or prudent, putting private justice wholly out of the question, that it should appear to the councils of France, apt enough to exaggerate advantages, that the judge representing the government in the northern district of this kingdom should be sitting here in judgment in the presence of all the gentlemen whose property lies in the country, assembled, I observe, upon the occasion, and very properly, to witness so interesting a process, to trace and to punish the existence of a rebellious conspiracy to support an invasion from France? A conspiracy not existing in a single district alone, but maintaining itself by criminal concert and correspondence in every district, town, and city in the kingdom; projecting nothing less than the utter destruction and subversion of all the authorities of the country: Good God! can it be for the interest of government that such a state of this country should go forth?—Unfortunately the rumour and effect of this day's business will spread where the evidence may not travel with it to serve as an antidote to the mischief; for, certainly it never will nor can be believed in France, or in Europe, who know the spirit of our laws, what we are witnesses to to-day;—it never will be credited that all this serious process has no foundation either in fact or probability, and that it stands upon the single evidence of a common soldier, or rather a common vagabond, discharged as unfit to be a soldier; a wretch, lost to every sense of God and religion, who avows, that he has none for either, and who is incapable of observing even common decency as a witness in the court: this will never be believed, and the country, whose best strength at home and abroad is the opinion and confidence of soundness in all its members, will suffer from the credit which government will receive for the justice of this proceeding.

of the church and its establishment, whilst others, but with equal sincerity, prefer the worship of God with other ceremonies, or without any ceremonies; that though some may think that it is unsafe to touch the constitution at this particular moment, and some that at no time it is safe to touch it, while others think that its very existence depends upon immediate reformation, and that this is of all seasons the wisest for men of rank and property, while yet they have authority and influence, to employ these high trusts of high station for the universal good; what can be more beneficial than that your verdict should establish that though the country is thus divided upon these political subjects, as it ever has been in every age and period of our history, yet that we all recollect that we live in the land which our fathers have left us as an inheritance, that we all know and feel we have one common duty and one common interest, and that we are all ready to stand or fall by our country: this will be the language of your verdict whatever you yourselves may think upon these topics connected with, but still collateral to the cause:—whether you shall approve or disapprove of the opinions or objects of the defendants, I know that you will still with one mind revolt with indignation at the evidence you have heard, when you shall have heard also the observations I have to make upon it, and, what is far more important, the facts I shall bring forward to encounter it; to these last words I beg your particular attention: I say when you shall hear the facts with which I mean to encounter the evidence, because my learned friend has supposed that I had nothing with which to support the cause, but by railing at his witness and endeavouring to traduce his character by calling others to reproach it: he has said that I could encounter his testimony by no one fact, but that he had only to apprehend the influence which my address might have upon you; as if I, an utter stranger here, could have any possible weight or influence, to oppose to him who has been so long known and honoured in this place.

would have followed from it to the defendants. If such a scene of wickedness has been practised it must be known to the witness himself, yet my learned friend will recollect that though he made this charge in his hearing before his examination, he has positively denied the whole of it; for I put it to him point by point, pursuing the opening as my guide: the witness denies that he has been drawn into any lure; he denies that any trap has been laid for him; he denies that he has been asked any questions by any body;—if I am mistaken I desire to be corrected, and particularly so by my learned friend, because I wish to state it as it is;—he has then denied all these things; he has further sworn that he never acknowledged to Mr. Walker that he had wronged or injured him, or that the evidence he had given against him was false; that he never had gone down upon his knees in his presence, to implore his forgiveness; that he never held his hands before his face to hide the tears that were flowing down his face in the moment of contrition, or of terror at the consequence of his crimes: all this he has positively and repeatedly sworn in answer to questions deliberately put to him; and instead of answering with doubt or as trying to recollect whether any thing approaching such a representation had happened, he put his hands to his sides and laughed, as you saw, at me who put the questions, with that sneer of contempt and insolence which has accompanied the whole of his evidence, on my part at least of his examination:—if nothing therefore was at stake but the destruction of this man's evidence and with it the prosecution which rests for its whole existence upon it, I should proceed at once to confound him with testimony, the truth of which my learned friend himself will I am sure not bring into question; but as I wish the whole conduct of my clients to stand fairly before you and not to rest merely upon positive swearing destructive of positive testimony, and as I wish the evidence I mean to bring before you and the falsehood of that which it opposes to be clearly understood, I will state to you how it has happened that this strange prosecution has come before you.

The town of Manchester has been long extremely divided in religious and civil opinions, and while I wish to vindicate those whom I represent in this place I desire not to inflame differences which I hope in a short season will be forgotten; I wish on the contrary that every thing which proceeds from me may be the means of conciliating rather than exasperating dissensions which have already produced much mischief and which perhaps but for the lesson of to-day might have produced much more.

F

Gentlemen,

Gentlemen, you all know that there have been for centuries past in this country various sects of Christians worshipping God in different forms, and holding a diversity of religious opinions; and that the law has for a long season deprived numerous classes, even of his Majesty's protestant subjects, of privileges which it confers upon the rest of the public, setting as it were a mark upon them and keep them below the level of the community by shutting them out from offices of trust and confidence in the country: whether these laws be wise or unwise, whether they ought to be continued or abolished, are questions for the legislature and not for us; but thus much I am warranted in saying, that it is the undoubted privilege of every man or class of men in England, to petition parliament for the removal of any system or law, which either actually does aggrieve or which is thought to be a grievance: impressed with the sense of this inherent privilege this very Constitutional Society, which is supposed by my learned friend the attorney general to have started up on the breaking out of the war with France, for the purpose of destroying the constitution, this very society owed its birth to the assertion of this indisputable birth right of Englishmen, which the authors of this prosecution most rashly thought proper to stigmatize and resist. It is well known that in 1790 the Dissenters in the different parts of the kingdom were solicitous to bring before parliament their application to put an end for ever to all divisions upon religious subjects, and to make us all, what I look forward yet to see us, one harmonious body, living like one family together; it is also well remembered with what zeal and eloquence that great question was managed in the House of Commons by Mr. Fox; and the large majority with which the repeal of the Test Acts was rejected; it seems therefore strange that the period of this rejection should be considered as an Æra either of danger to the church or of religious triumph to Christians; nevertheless, a large body of gentlemen and others at Manchester, whose motives I am far from wishing to scrutinize or condemn, considered this very wish of the Dissenters as injurious to their rights, and as dangerous to the church and state; they published advertisements expressive of these sentiments, and the rejection of the bill in the commons produced a society stiled the Church and King Club, which met for the first time to celebrate what they called the glorious decision of the House of Commons in rejecting the prayer of their dissenting brethren.

Gentlemen, it is not for me to say, that it was unjust or impolitic in parliament to reject the application; but surely I may without offence suggest, that it was hardly a fit subject of triumph that a great number of fellow-subjects, amounting I believe to more than a million in this country, had miscarried in an object which they thought beneficial, and which they had a most unquestionable right to submit to the government under which they lived; yet for this cause alone, (France and every other topic of controversy being yet unborn,) was the Church and King held forth to be in danger; a society instituted for their protection, and an uniform appointed with the church of Manchester upon its button.

Gentlemen, without calling for any censure upon this proceeding, but leaving it to every man's own reflection, is it to be wondered at or condemned, that those who thought more largely and liberally on subjects of freedom both civil and religious, but who found themselves persecuted for sentiments and conduct the most avowedly legal and constitutional, should associate for the support of their rights and privileges as Englishmen, and assemble to consider how they might best obtain a more adequate representation of the people of Great Britain in parliament.

Gentlemen, this society continued with these objects in view until the issuing of the proclamation against Republicans and Levellers, calling upon the magistrates to exert themselves throughout the kingdom to avert some danger with which it seems our rulers thought this kingdom was likely to be visited; of this danger or the probability of it either generally or at Manchester in particular my learned friend has given no evidence from any quarter but that of Mr. Dunn; he has not proved that there has been in any one part of the kingdom any thing which could lead government to apprehend that meetings existed for the purposes pointed at; but that is out of the question; government had a right to think for itself and to issue the proclamation; the publicans however (as it appears upon the cross examination of the witness), probably directed by the magistrates, thought fit to shut up their houses opened by immemorial law to all the King's subjects, and to refuse admission to all the gentlemen and tradesmen of the town who did not associate under the banners of this Church and King Club: this illegal proceeding was accompanied with an advertisement containing a vehement libel against all those persons who under the protection of the laws thought themselves as much at liberty to consider their various privileges, as others were to maintain the establishment of the church. Upon this occasion Mr. Walker honourably stood forth, opened his house to this constitutional society at a time when they must otherwise have been in the streets by a combination of the publicans to reject them. Now, Gentlemen, I put it to you

you as men of honour, whether it can be justly attributed to Mr. Walker as seditious or hostile to the liberties of his country, that he opened his house to a society of Gentlemen and tradesmen, whose good principles he was acquainted with, who had been wantonly opposed by this Church and King Club, whose privileges they had never invaded or questioned, and against whom, in this day of trial, there is no man to be found who can come forward to impeach an act they have done, or a syllable they have uttered: vehement as the desire most apparently has been to bring this Gentleman and his associates as they are called to justice, yet not one magistrate, no man of property, part or figure in this town or its neighbourhood, no person having the King's authority in Manchester or the county, have appeared to prove one fact or circumstance from whence even the vaguest suspicion could arise, that any thing criminal had been intended or transacted: no constable who had ever been sent to guard lest the peace might be broken or to make enquiries for its preservation; not a paper seized throughout England, nor any other prosecution instituted except upon the evidence of the same miserable wretch who stands before you, but the town, neighbourhood, and county, were in the same profound state of tranquillity as it is at the moment I am addressing you.

Gentlemen, at the time parliament assembled at the end of 1792, previous to the commencement of the war, these unhappy differences were suddenly (and as you will see from no fault of Mr. Walker's) brought to the crisis which produced this trial: a meeting was held in Manchester to prepare an address of thanks to the King for having embodied the militia during the recess of parliament, and for having put the kingdom into a posture of defence; and I do not seek to question the measure of government which gave rise to this approbation or the approbation itself which they had a right to bestow; but others had an equal right to entertain other opinions; on all public measures the decision undoubtedly is with government, but the people at the same time have a right to think upon them and to express what they think;—surely war of all other subjects is one which the people have a right to consider; surely it can be no offence for those whose properties were to be taxed and whose inheritances were to be lessened by it, to pause a little upon the eve of a contest, the end of which no man can foresee, the expences of which no man can calculate, nor estimate the blood to flow from its calamities; surely it is a liberty secured to us by the first principles of our constitution to address the Sovereign, or instruct our representatives, to avert the greatest evil that can impend over a nation.

Gentlemen, one of those societies called the Reformation Society met to exercise this undoubted privilege, and in my mind upon the fittest occasion that ever presented itself; yet mark the moderation of Mr. Walker whose violence is arraigned before you: though he was no member of that body, and though he agreed in the propriety of the measure in agitation, yet he went to their meeting, suggested to them that their opposition might be made a pretence for tumult, that tranquillity in such a crisis was by every means to be promoted, and therefore advised them to abstain from the meeting; so that the other meeting was left to carry their approbation of government and the war, without a dissenting voice: if ever therefore there was a time when the Church and King might be said to be out of danger at Manchester it was at this moment; yet on this very day they hoisted the banners of alarm to both, they paraded with them through every quarter of the town; mobs by degrees were collected, and in the evening of this very eleventh of December Mr. Walker's house and others were attacked; you will observe that before this day no man has talked about arms at Mr. Walker's:—if an honourable gentleman upon the Jury who has been carefully taking notes of the evidence will have the goodness to refer to them, he will find that it was not till near a week after this, (so Dunn expresses it,) that a single firelock had been seen, nor indeed does any part of the evidence go back beyond this time, when Mr. Walker's house was thus surrounded and attacked by a riotous and disorderly mob. He was aware of the probable consequences of such an attack; he knew by the recent example of Birmingham what he and others professing sentiments of freedom had to expect; he therefore got together a few fire-arms, which he had long had publicly by him, and an inventory of which with the rest of his furniture at Barlow-Hall had been taken by a sworn appraiser, long before any thing connected with this indictment had an existence; with these, and the assistance of a few steady friends, he stood upon his defence; he was advised indeed to retire for safety, but knowing his own innocence, and recollecting the duty he owed to himself, his family and the public, he declared he would remain there to support the laws and to defend his property; and that he would perish rather than surrender those privileges which every member of the community is bound both from interest and duty to maintain:—to alarm the multitude he fired from the windows over their heads, and dispersed them: the next morning they assembled in very great numbers before fore his house, when a man got upon the church-yard wall, and read a most violent and inflammatory paper, and harangued and incited the populace to pull the house down; Mr. Walker went out amongst them, and expostulated with them, and asked why they had disgraced themselves so much by attacking him the night before, adding that if he had done any of them or any person whom they knew any injury, he was, upon proof of it, ready to make them every satisfaction in his power—he also told them, that he had fired upon them the night before because they were mad as well as drunk, that if they attacked him again, he would under the same circumstances act, as he had before done, but that he was then alone and unarmed in the midst of them, and if he had done any thing wrong they were then sober and had him completely in their power.

Gentlemen, this was most meritorious conduct. You all live at a distance from the metropolis and were probably therefore fortunate enough neither to be within or near it in 1780, when from beginnings smaller than those which exhibited themselves at Birmingham, or even at Manchester, the metropolis of the country, and with it the country itself, had nearly been undone; the beginning of these things is the season for exertion: I shall never indeed forget what I have heard the late mild and venerable magistrate Lord Mansfield say upon this subject, whose house was one of the first attacked in London; I have more than once heard him say, that perhaps some blame might have attached upon himself and others in authority, for their forbearance in not having directed force to have been at the first moment repelled by force, it being the highest humanity as a check in the infancy of tumults.

Gentlemen, Mr. Walker's conduct had the desired effect: he watched again on the 13th of December, but the mob returned no more, and next morning the arms were locked up in a bed chamber in his house where they have remained ever since, and where of course they never could have been seen by the witness whose whole evidence commences above a week subsequent to the 11th of December when they were finally put aside.

Gentlemen, this is the genuine history of the business, and it must therefore not a little surprize you that when the charge is wholly confined to the use of arms, Mr. Law should not even have hinted to you that Mr. Walker's house had been attacked, and that he was driven to stand upon his defence; as if such a thing had never had an existence; indeed the armoury which must have been exhibited in such a statement would have but ill suited the indictment or the evidence,

evidence, and I must therefore undertake the description of it myself.

The arms having been locked up as I told you in the bed-chamber, I was shewn last week into this house of conspiracy, treason, and death, and saw exposed to view the mighty armoury which was to level the beautiful fabrick of our constitution, and to destroy the lives and properties of seven millions of people; it consisted first of six little swivels purchased two years ago at the sale of Livesey, Hargrave, and Co. (of whom we have all heard so much) by Mr. Jackson a gentleman of Manchester, who is also one of the defendants, and who gave them to Master Walker a boy about ten years of age; swivels you know are guns so called because they turn upon a pivot, but these were taken off their props, were painted, and put upon blocks resembling carriages of heavy cannon and in that shape may be fairly called childrens toys; you frequently see them in the neighbourhood of London adorning the houses of sober citizens, who, strangers to Mr. Brown and his improvements, and preferring grandeur to taste, place them upon their ramparts at Mile-End or Islington: having been, like Mr. Dunn, (I hope I resemble him in nothing else) having like him served his Majesty as a soldier (and I am ready to serve again if my country's safety should require it) I took a closer review of all I saw, and observing that the muzzle of one of them was broke off I was curious to know how far this famous conspiracy had proceeded and whether they had come into action, when I found the accident had happened on firing a feu de joie upon his Majesty's happy recovery, and that they had been afterwards fired upon the Prince of Wales' birth day. These are the only times that in the hands of these conspirators, these cannon big with destruction had opened their little mouths; once to commemorate the indulgent and benign favour of providence in the recovery of the Sovereign, and once as a congratulation to the Heir apparent of his crown on the anniversary of his birth.

I went next, under the protection of the master general of this ordnance (Mr. Walker's chambermaid), to visit the rest of this formidable array of death, and found next a little musketoon about so high, (describing it) I put my thumb upon it, when out started a little bayonet like the Jack-in-a-box which we buy for children at a fair; In short, not to weary you gentlemen, there was just such a parcel of arms of different sorts and sizes as a man collecting amongst his friends, for his defence against the sudden violence of a riotous multitude, might be expected to have collected; here lay three or four rusty guns of different dimensions, and here and there a bayonet or broad-sword covered over with dust so as to be almost undistinguishable ; for notwithstanding what this infamous wretch has sworn, we will prove by witness after witness, till you desire us to finish, that they were principally collected on the 11th of December, the day of the riot, and that from the 12th in the evening, or the 13th in the morning, they have been untouched as I have described them ; that their use began and ended with the necessity, and that from that time to the present there never has been a fire-arm in the warehouse of any sort or description ; this is the whole on which has been built a proceeding which might have brought the defendants to the punishment of death, for both the charge and the evidence amount to high treason, high treason indeed under almost every branch of the statute ; for the facts amount to levying war against the King by a conspiracy to wrest by force the government out of his hands ; to an adherence to the King's enemies, and to a compassing of his death, which is a necessary consequence of an invading army of republicans or of any other enemies of the state ; yet notwithstanding the notoriety of these facts, the unnamed prosecutors (and indeed I am afraid to slander any man or body of men by even a guess upon the subject) have been beating up as for volunteers, to procure another witness to destroy the lives of the gentlemen before you, against many of whom warrants for high treason were issued to apprehend them ; Mr. Walker among the rest was the subject of such a warrant, and as soon as he knew it, he behaved (as he has throughout) like a man and an Englishman : he wrote immediately to the Secretary of State who was summoned here to-day, and whose absence I do not complain of, because we have by consent the benefit of his testimony ; he wrote three letters to Mr. Dundas, one of which was delivered by Mr. Wharton, informing him that he was in London on his business as a merchant ; that if any warrant had been issued against him he was ready to meet it, and for that purpose delivered his address where it might be executed * : this Mr. Walker did when the prosecutors were in search of another witness, and when this Mr. Dunn was walking like a tame sparrow through the New Bailey, fed at the public or some other expence, and suffered to go at large, though arrested upon a criminal charge and sent into custody under it.

And to what other circumstances need I appeal for the purity of the defendants, than that under the charge of a conspiracy extensive enough to comprehend in its transactions (if any existed) the whole compass of England, the tour of which was to have been made by Mr. Yorke, there has not been one man found to utter a syllable about them, no not one man, thanks be to God, who has so framed the characteristics of Englishmen, except the

the solitary infamous witness before you, who from what I have heard since I began to address you, may have spoken the truth when he claimed my acquaintance, as I have reason to think he has seen me before in a criminal court of justice.

Having now for the satisfaction of the defendants rather than from the necessity of the case, given you an account of their whole proceedings as I shall establish them by proof, let us now examine the evidence that has been given against them, and see how the truth of it could stand with reason or probability, supposing it to have been sworn to by a witness the most respectable.

According to Dunn's own account, Mr. Walker had not been at the first meeting, so that when he first saw Dunn he did not know either his person or his name, he might have been a spy (God knows there are enow of them) and at that season in particular, informers were to be expected, Mr. Walker is supposed to have said to him "What is your business here?" to which he answered "I am going to the society," which entitled him at once to admission without further ceremony; there was nobody to stop him, was he asked his name? was he balloted for? was he questioned as to his principles? No, he walked in at once, but first it seems Mr. Walker, who had never before seen him, enquired of him the news from Ireland (observing by his voice that he was an Irishman) and asked what the Volunteers were about, as if Mr. Walker could possibly suppose that such a person was likely to have been in a correspondence with Ireland which told him more than report must have told every body else; Mr. Dunn tells you indeed he was no such person, he was a friend, as he says, to the King and Constitution which Mr. Walker would have found by asking another question, but without further enquiry he is supposed to have said to him at once, "we shall overthrow the constitution by and by," which the moment Dunn had heard, up walked that affectionate subject of our Sovereign Lord the King into Mr. Walker's house where the constitution was to be so overthrown; but then he tells you he thought there was no harm to be done, that it was only for the benefit of the poor, and the public good; but how could he think so after what he had that moment heard? but he did not know it seems what Mr. Walker meant. Gentlemen, do you collect from Mr. Dunn's discourse and deportment to-day that he could not tell but that a man meant good when he had heard him even express a wish to overthrow the government; would you pull a feather out of a sparrow's wing upon the oath of a man who swears that he believed a person to have been a good subject in the very moment he was telling him of an intended rebellion? But why should I fight a phantom with argument? Could any man but a driveller, have possibly given such an answer as is put into Mr. Walker's mouth to a man he had never seen in his life? However many may differ from Mr. Walker in opinion, every body I believe will admit that he is an acute, intelligent man, with an extensive knowledge of the world and not at all likely to have conducted himself like an idiot: what follows next?—another night he went into the warehouse where he saw Mr. Yorke called to the chair, who said he was going the tour of the kingdom in order to try the strength of the different societies to join fifty thousand men that were expected to land from France into this country, and that Mr. Walker then said, "Damn all kings—I know our King has seventeen millions of money in the Bank of Vienna although he won't afford any of it to the poor." Gentlemen, is this the language of a man of sense and education? If Mr. Walker had the malignity of a demon, would he think of giving effect to it by such a senseless lie?—When we know that from the immense expence attending his Majesty's numerous and illustrious family and the great necessities of the state, he has been obliged over and over again to have recourse to the generosity and justice of parliament to maintain the dignity of the crown, could Mr. Walker ever have thought of inventing this nonsense about the Bank of Vienna, when there is a Bank too in our own country where he might legally invest his property for himself and his heirs? but Mr. Walker did not stop there; he went on and said, "I should think no more of taking off the King's head than I should of tearing this piece of paper." All this happened soon after his admission, yet this man who represents himself to you upon his oath this day, as having been uniformly a friend to the constitution, as far as he understood it; as having left the society as soon as he saw their mischievous inclinations, and as having voluntarily informed against them, I say this same friend of the constitution tells you almost in the same breath, that he continued to attend their meetings from thirty to forty times where high treason was committing with open doors, and that instead of giving information of his own free choice, he was arrested in the very act of distributing some seditious publication.

Gentlemen, it is really a serious consideration, that upon such testimony a man should even be put upon his defence in the courts of this country; upon such principles what man is safe? I was indeed but ill at ease myself when Mr. Dunn told me he knew me better than I supposed, what security have I at this moment that he should not swear that he had met with me under some gate-way in Lancaster and that I had said to him, "Well, Dunn, I hope you will not swear against Mr. Walker, but that you will stick to the good cause : damn all kings : damn the constitution;" if the witness were now to swear this, into gaol I must go, and if my client is in danger from what has been sworn against him what safety would there be for me? the evidence would be equally positive, and I am equally an object of suspicion as Mr. Walker : it is said of him that he has been a member of a society for the reform of parliament ; so have I, and so am I at this moment, and so at all hazards I will continue to be, and I will tell you why gentlemen, because I hold it to be essential to the preservation of all the ranks and orders of the state, alike essential to the prince and to the people : I have the honour to be allied to his Majesty in blood, and my family has been for centuries a part of what is now called the aristocracy of the country, I can therefore have no interest in the destruction of the constitution.

In pursuing the probability of this story, (since it must be pursued) let us next advert to whether any thing appears to have been done in other places which might have been exposed by this man's information : the whole kingdom is under the eye and dominion of magistracy awakened at that time to an extraordinary vigilance, yet has any one man been arrested even upon the suspicion of any correspondence with the societies of Manchester, good bad or indifferent, or has any person within the four seas come to swear that any such correspondence existed ? so that you are desired to believe upon Mr. Dunn's single declaration that gentlemen of the description I am representing, without any end or object, or concert with others, were resolved to put their lives into the hands of any miscreant who might be disposed to swear them away, by holding public meetings of conspiracy with open doors and in the presence of all mankind, liable to be handed over to justice every moment of their lives, since every tap at the door might have introduced a constable as readily as a member ; and, to finish the absurdity, these gentlemen are made to discourse in a manner that would disgrace the lowest and most uninformed classes of the community.

Let us next see what interest Mr. Walker has in the proposed invasion of this peaceable country : Has Mr. Law proved that Mr. Walker had any reason to expect protection from the French from any secret correspondence or communication more than you or I have, or that he had prepared any means of resisting the troops of this country ? how was he to have welcomed these strangers into our land ?

land? what with this dozen of rusty muskets, or with those conspirators whom he exercised? but who are they? they are it seems "to the jurors unknown," as my learned friend has called them who drew this indictment, and he might have added who will ever remain unknown to them;—but has Mr. Walker nothing to lose like other men who dread an invasion? He has long had the acquaintance and friendship of some of the best men in this kingdom, who would be destroyed if such an invasion should take place.—Has he like other men no ties of a nearer description? Alas, gentlemen! I feel at this moment that he has many: Mr. Dunn told you that I was with Mr. Walker at Manchester, and it enables me to say of my own knowledge that it is impossible he should have had the designs imputed to him. I have been under his roof where I have seen him the husband of an amiable and affectionate woman, and the happy parent of six engaging children; and it hurts me not a little to think what they must feel at this moment: before prosecutions are set on foot, those things ought to be considered; we ought not like the fool in the proverbs to scatter fire-brands and death, and say, "Am I not in sport?" Could we look at this moment into the dwelling of this unfortunate gentleman, for so I must call him, I am persuaded it would distress us; they cannot but be unhappy; they have seen prosecutions equally unjust as even this is, attended with a success of equal injustice, and we have seen those proceedings, I am afraid by those who are at the bottom of this indictment, put forward for your imitation. I saw to my astonishment at Preston, where as a traveller I called for a newspaper, that this immaculate society (the Manchester Church and King Club) had a meeting lately and had published to the world the toasts and sentiments which they drank; some of them I like, some of them deserve reprobation: "The Church and "King;" very well. "The Queen and Royal Family;" be it so. "The Duke of York and the army;" be it so. But what do you think came next?

(Here Mr. Justice Heath interrupted Mr. Erskine by saying we are not to go into this of which you cannot give evidence).

Mr. Erskine. I don't know what effect these publications may have upon the administration of justice; why drink "the Lord Advocate and the Court of Justiciary in Scotland," just when your Lordship is called upon to administer English justice; if I had seen the King and his judges upon the northern circuit published as a toast ———

Mr. Justice Heath. You know you cannot give this in evidence.

Mr. Erskine. Gentlemen, considering the situation in which my clients stand at this moment I expressed the idea which which occurred to me and which I thought it right not to suppress, but let it pass; this is not the moment for controversy; it is my interest to submit to any course his Lordship may think proper to dictate; the evidence is more than enough for my purpose; so mainly improbable, so contrary to every thing in the course of human affairs, that I know you would reject it even if it stood unanswered; what then will you say when I shall prove to you by the oaths of the various persons who attended these societies, that no propositions of the sort insinuated by this witness ever existed; that no hint directly or indirectly of any illegal tendency was ever whispered; that their real objects were just what were openly professed, be they right or wrong, be they wise or mistaken, namely, reformation in the constitution of the House of Commons, which my learned friend admitted they had a right by constitutional means to promote; this was their object, they neither desired to touch the King's authority nor the existence or privileges of the House of Lords; but they wished that those numerous classes of the community who, (by the law as it now stands,) are secluded from any share in the choice of members to the parliament, should have an equal right with others, in concerns where their interests are equal. Gentlemen, this very county furnishes a familiar instance; there are I believe at least thirty thousand freeholders in Lancashire, each of whom has a vote for two members of parliament; and there are two boroughs within it, (if I mistake not) Clithero and Newton, containing a handful of men who are at the beck of two individuals; yet these two little places send for themselves, or rather for these two persons two members each, which makes four against the whole power and interest of this county in parliament, touching any measure how deeply soever it may concern their prosperity; can there then be any offence in meeting together to consider of a representation to parliament, suggesting the wisdom of alteration and amendment in such a system?

Mr. Justice Heath. There can be no doubt but that a petition to parliament for reform or any thing else can be no offence.

Mr. Erskine. Gentlemen, I expected this interruption from the learning of the Judge; certainly it can be no offence and consequently my clients can be no offenders.

Having now exposed the weakness of Dunn's evidence from its own intrinsic defects, and from the positive contradiction every part of it is to receive from many witnesses, I shall conclude with the still more positive and unequivocal contradiction which the whole of it has received from Dunn himself — You may remember that I repeatedly asked him whether he had not confessed that the whole he had sworn to-day was utterly

utterly false; whether he had not confessed it to be so with tears of contrition, and whether he had not kneeled down before Mr. Walker to implore his forgiveness. My learned friend knowing that this would be proved upon him, made a shrewd and artful observation to avoid the effects of it; he said that such things had fallen often under the observation of the court upon the circuit, where witnesses had been drawn into similar snares by artful people to invalidate their testimony; this may be true, but the answer to its application is, that not only the witness himself has positively denied that any such snare was laid for him, but the witnesses I have to call both in respect of number and credit will put a total end to such a suggestion; if I had indeed but one witness, my friend the Attorney General might undoubtedly put it to you in reply whether his or mine was to be believed; but I will call to you, not one but four or five; or, if necessary, six witnesses ABOVE ALL SUSPICION, in whose presence Dunn voluntarily confessed the falsehood of his testimony, and with tears of apparent repentance offered to make any reparation to these injured and unfortunate defendants; this I pledge myself to prove to your satisfaction.

Gentlemen, the object of all public trial and punishment is the security of mankind in social life; we are not assembled here for the purposes of vengeance, but for the ends of justice; to give that tranquility to human life which is the scope of all government and law; you will therefore take care how in the very administration of justice, you disappoint that which is the very foundation of its institution; you will take care that in the very moment you are trying a man as a disturber of the public happiness, you do not violate the rules which alone secure to us all our happiness as private men, to secure which we alone form a public.

The last evidence I have been stating ought by itself to put an instant end to this cause; I remember a case very lately which was so brought to its conclusion, where upon a trial for perjury of a witness who had sworn against the captain of a vessel in the African trade, it appeared that the witnesses who swore to the perjury against the defendants, had themselves made deliberate declarations which materially clashed with the testimony they were giving; Lord Kenyon who tried the cause, would after this proceed no further, and asked me, who was of counsel for the prosecution, whether I would urge it further, saying emphatically, what I hope every Judge under similar circumstances will think it his duty to say also, "No man ought or can be convicted in England, unless the Judge and the Jury have a firm assurance that innocence cannot by any possibility be

“be the victim of conviction and sentence.” And how can the Jury or his Lordship have that assurance here, when the only source of it is brought into such serious doubt and question? Upon the whole then I cannot help hoping that my friend the Attorney General when he shall hear my proofs, will feel that a prosecution like this ought not to be offered for the seal and sanction of your verdict; unjust prosecutions lead to the ruin of all governments; for whoever will look back to the history of the world in general, and of our own particular country, will be convinced, that exactly in proportion as prosecutions have been cruel and oppressive, and maintained by inadequate and unrighteous evidence, in the same proportion and by the same means, their authors have been destroyed instead of being supported by them; as often as the principles of our ancient laws have been departed from in weak and wicked times, as often the governments that have violated them have been suddenly crumbled into dust; and therefore wishing, as I most sincerely do, the preservation and prosperity of our happy constitution, I desire to enter my protest against its being supported by means that are likely to destroy it; violent proceedings bring on the bitterness of retaliation until all justice and moderation are trampled down and subverted; witness those sanguinary prosecutions previous to the awful period in the last century, when Charles the First fell: that unfortunate prince lived to lament those vindictive judgments by which his impolitic, infatuated followers imagined they were supporting his throne: he lived to see how they destroyed it; his throne, undermined by violence, sunk under him, and those who shook it were guilty in their turn; such is the natural order of injustice, not of similar but of worse and more violent wrongs; witness the fate of the unhappy Earl of Strafford, who, when he could not be reached by the ordinary laws, was impeached in the House of Commons, and who when still beyond the consequences of that judicial proceeding, was at last destroyed by the arbitrary wicked mandate of the legislature. James the Second lived to ask assistance in the hour of his own distress, from those whom he had cut off from the means of giving it; he lived to ask support from the Earl of Bedford after his son the unfortunate Lord Russell had fallen under the axe of injustice; “I once had a son,” said that noble person, “who could have served your Majesty upon this occasion,” but there was then none to assist him.

I cannot possibly tell how others feel upon these subjects, but I do know how it is their interest to feel concerning them; we ought to be persuaded that the only way by which government can be honourably or safely supported, is by cultivating the love and affection of the people; by shewing them the value of the constitution by its protection ; by making them understand its principles by the practical benefits derived from them, and above all, by letting them feel their security in the administration of law and justice : what is it in the present state of that unhappy kingdom, the contagion of which fills us with such alarm, that is the just object of terror? What, but that accusation and conviction are the same, and that a false witness or power without evidence is a warrant for death? not so here ;—long may the countries differ! and I am asking nothing more, than that you should decide according to our own wholesome rules, by which our government was established, and by which it has been ever protected. Put yourselves, gentlemen, in the place of the defendants, and let me ask if you were brought before your country upon a charge supported by no other evidence than that which you have heard to-day, and encountered by that which I have stated to you, what would you say, or your children after you, if you were touched in your persons or your properties by a conviction?—may you never be put to such reflections nor the country to such disgrace! The best service we can render to the public is that we should live like one harmonious family, that we should banish all animosities, jealousies, and suspicions of one another, and that living under the protection of a mild and impartial justice, we should endeavour, with one heart, according to our best judgments, to advance the freedom and maintain the security of Great Britain.

Gentlemen, I will trouble you no further; I am afraid indeed I have too long trespassed on your patience, I will therefore proceed to call my witnesses.

EVIDENCE FOR THE DEFENDANTS.

Mr. George Wakefield (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Serjeant Cockell.

Q. You are a merchant in Manchester I understand?

A. I have been.

Q. Do you remember the time of the riots when Mr. Walker's house was attacked?

A. I do.

Q. After that night do you know whether the constitutional society which had been formed in Manchester, met at Mr. Walker's?

A. Yes.

Q. Was you a member of that society?

A. I was.

Q. What was the object of that society?

A. A parliamentary reform.

Q. How happened it that after that time the meetings were held at Mr. Walker's?

A. I don't know particularly; some of the public houses had refused to let us have a room any longer.

Q. However in point of fact the meetings then were held at Mr. Walker's?

A. They were.

A. We have heard of the time of the riots, you will speak to the day as nearly as you remember?

A. I believe it was on Tuesday the 11th of December.

Q. How often did the society meet?

A. Once a week or once a fortnight, I declare I do not recollect which.

Q. Did you ever attend those meetings?

A. Pretty regularly.

Q. How long did you continue to attend them?

A. Till nearly the last meeting I believe, which was some time in the spring of last year.

Q. Was there a free admission to any person who might choose to come?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. To members of the society?

A. There was.

Q. We have heard that men exercised with arms in the warehouse were drilled in the use of arms; is that true?

A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did you ever see such a thing?

A. No.

Q. In what part of Mr. Walker's house were the meetings held?

A. In the upper room in the warehouse.

Q. What passed at those meetings?

A. The different businesses respecting the society.

Q. Was the King damned?

Mr. Law. You must not put that.

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. Tell us what was said about the King.

A. I do not recollect hearing any thing said about the King.

Q. Did you ever hear any thing said about overthrowing the constitution by means of arms or otherwise?

A. I never heard any such thing.

Q. Was any thing said about inviting the French to invade the kingdom?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear any thing of the sort?

A. No, not a syllable.

Q. If men had been drilled in the use of fire-arms, must you not have seen it?

A. I must.

Q. Did you ever see any?

A. No.

Q. Ever hear of any?

A. No.

Q. If any persons had been drilled in arms for the purpose of offence, or destroying the government, would you have continued a member of that society?

A. No, not a moment.

Q. Did you ever hear any thing said about inviting an invasion from France?

Mr. Law. Ask what did pass there when this man was present.

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. I have no wish to lead.

Mr. Erskine. I should be sorry to offer any testimony that is not in the ordinary course, but when a witness comes to contradict to a particular point, how can we act any other way?

Mr. Justice Heath. He has said, no mention was made of any invasion.

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. What was the sole object of your meeting?

A. As far as I understood it, a parliamentary reform.

Q. Was there any act done at your meeting to your knowledge that was directed otherwise than to that end?

A. No.

Q. Did you at any time, or any person in your hearing, in that room, say or do any thing to overturn the government of the country?

A. No, never.

Q. What was the reform that you sought, and by what means?

A. That is a point upon which few people are agreed; but it was a parliamentary reform.

Q. By means of menacing government?

A. No.

Q. Inviting a foreign enemy?

A. No.

Q. Was it in any other way than such means as you suppose the law to allow?

A. No, by no other means than what we apprehend to be constitutional, nothing but what the law allows.

Mr. Erskine. The witness has said it was to be done by no other means than what in his apprehensions the law allowed; we can go no further if we were to stay here a month.

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. You attended pretty constantly you have said. What have you heard Mr. Walker say at any time?

Mr. Justice Heath. You may ask him, did he hear Mr. Walker say any thing about the King.

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. What number of men might there be generally?

A. Sometimes more, and sometimes less; I have seen twenty in the society, and I have seen more, the numbers differing at different times.

Q. Did you ever see any men exercised in the use of arms?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear any thing of the sort mentioned?

A. No, if I had, merely to learn the use of arms, I should have been one myself probably, but I never heard any thing of it.

Q. Did you ever hear Paul or any other person say that he knew there would be a revolt from Ireland?

A. I do not recollect any such thing.

Q. Did you ever hear any one say if we had a revolt, it would be through the Irish?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear any one say they had sent a deputy to Ireland as a King, and damn him and all kings?

A. No.

Q. Could any such expressions have been made use of without your hearing of them?

A. No, I am sure there could not.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Walker damn the King?

A. No.

A. No.

Q. At any time?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear it said either by Mr. Walker or any other person, that Mr. Yorke was going through the three kingdoms to know the aid that there might be for the French?

A. No.

Mr. Law. Was you there when Mr. Yorke was by?

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. Dunn said, there were every night conversations about the King.

Mr. Walker. Did you ever hear me say any thing unbecoming an honest man and a good citizen?

Mr. Law. We cannot ask that.

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. Do you remember the time when Mr. Yorke was in the chair?

A. I do not recollect that I was there at that time.

Q. Did you use to skulk in privately and secretly?

A. No.

Q. Did you go in always the same way?

A. I cannot say whether I did at all times, I went in at different doors; I was not going about any thing I was ashamed of.

Mr. George Wakefield.

Cross-examined by Mr. Law.

Q. You are or was partner with Mr. Grant.

A. Yes.

Q. He is a brother-in-law of Mr. Walker?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you attended at most of those meetings?

A. At many of them.

Q. Did you see Dunn there at any of them?

A. I don't remember that I ever did.

Q. Not at any?

A. I believe he was not a member of the same society.

Q. Are you of the Reformation Society?

A. No; of the Constitutional Society.

Q. Did that society meet at the house of Mr. Walker?

A. Yes.

Q. They met on different nights, did they?

A. I believe so; I was not a member of any other society.

Q. Whether you saw Mr. Yorke at that meeting that you attended?

A. I do not recollect seeing him there at all.

Q. Do you know him?

A. I do not know him?

Q. How

Q. How came you to have no doubt you had seen him more than once?

A. I do not recollect I said any such thing.

Q. I took you down that Yorke was by.

A. I did not say so.

Q. You don't know whether Yorke was present at any meeting?

A. I believe he was present at a meeting, but I do not recollect being there when he was.

Mr. Justice Heath. It was a different society.

Mr. Ershine. They met in the same room at the same time.

Mr. Law. Do you mean to say the Reformation Society and the Constitutional Society met at the same place and time under the roof of Mr. Walker?

A. Yes, occasionally; I have seen the Reformation Society there at the same time, and in the same room.

Q. As you resorted there frequently, and the societies frequently met there, if this man had gone to Mr. Walker's, you might probably have seen him?

A. Probably I might.

Q. Is his person familiar with you?

A. I saw him this morning.

Q. You do not recollect him?

A. I do not.

Q. What time of the year did you attend at these meetings?

A. Almost all the year.

Q. From September up to June?

A. I do not recollect particularly.

Q. Do you recollect the time when Yorke was at Manchester?

A. No.

Q. Whether you have not declared you was present when Mr. Yorke was at one of these meetings?

A. No.

Q. Have you not so said in this court?

A. If you have taken it down so, you have taken it down wrong; I do not know him.

Q. Mr. Thomas Walker you have seen of course there?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Cheetham?

A. Yes.

Q. Mr. Jackson?

A. Yes.

Q. Pearsall?

A. I do not know him; I may know his person.

Q. M<sup>c</sup> Callum and Smith?

A. I

A. I have seen them there.

Q. Do you know where they are now?

A. No.

Q. Booth you have seen there?

A. Yes.

Q. And Paul?

A. Yes.

Q. And Collier?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen them very often?

A. Several times, some of them very often.

Q. But you do not recollect whether you ever saw Dunn there?

A. No.

Q. You know Mr. Kinnaston?

A. Yes.

A. I believe you won't refuse him the testimony that every man will give in his favour, that he is a man of credit and character?

A. I do not know him, but personally.

Q. However you take upon you to swear there were never any men drilled while you was by?

A. Never.

Q. How many hours were you there at a time?

A. About two hours.

Q. You say twenty men might be there—cannot you extend their number to fifty or sixty?

A. I may perhaps have seen fifty or sixty.

Q. What is the different object of the societies? the constitutional society is for a reform in parliament; what was the Reformation Society for?

A. I was not a member of the Reformation Society.

Q. It is commonly called the Subversion or Overthrow Society, is it not?

A. I do not know what you may call it.

Q. Being at these meetings so held jointly, the Reformation and Constitutional Societies, you never knew the objects for which the Reformation Society was formed?

A. I did not attend to the objects of the Reformation Society at all.

Q. Then you do not know the object for which it was formed?

A. How should I when I was not a member of it? they met there to join the Constitutional Society when any member of that society took the chair. I had nothing to do with it, and did not attend to it.

Q. And you were even a stranger to the objects of it?

A. Yes.

Q. You

Q. You are a partner with Mr. Walker's brother-in-law, and being present at their assemblies, you did not know what they assembled for?

A. I assembled there to meet the Constitutional Society, and their objects were the same I should suppose.

Mr. George Wakefield.

Re-examined by Mr. Serjeant Cockell.

Q. Although you was not a member of the Reformation Society, but of the Constitutional Society, did you ever when the Reformation Society was there, hear or see any person exercising themselves in arms?

A. Never.

George Clark (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Chambre.

Q. You are a member of the society called the Reformation Society at Manchester?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you become a member of that society?

A. About Easter 1792.

Q. When was the society instituted?

A. Either in Easter week, or about a week before, and I was a member about the second or third meeting.

Q. How often did you meet?

A. I was a very constant attendant.

Q. At what periods did you meet?

A. We had weekly meetings.

Q. Did you continue a pretty constant attending member during the whole time of the existence of that society?

A. I did.

Q. Where did you meet when you first became a member?

A. At the Old Boar's-head.

Q. Did you remove from that place?

A. Yes, to John Stacey's.

Q. What was the occasion of your removing to John Stacey's.

A. In consequence of an advertisement published by the publicans, we removed to John Stacey's.

Q. Do you know about what time it was you went to John Stacey's?

A. I cannot tell.

A. Did you continue at John Stacey's?

A. Not long.

Q. Where

Q. Where did you go next?

A. To the house of William Gorse in Newton-street.

Q. Is that a private or a public house?

A. A private house.

Q. You know Mr. Walker, Mr. Collier, and Mr. Paul?

A. I do.

Q. Do you know whether they at any time received any invitation to attend the meeting of your society?

A. I cannot say I do.

Q. When did you first see them present at your society?

A. I never saw them before the 10th of December at Gorse's.

Q. What did you understand them to be?

A. Members of the Constitutional Society; I believe Mr. Cheetham was there but I am not confident, the other three were there at that time.

Q. Do you know what was the subject of the deliberation of that particular meeting?

A. The particular subject of that meeting was, there was a public meeting called at the Bull's-head the day following, to address his Majesty upon his second proclamation; a motion was made whether we should attend that meeting at the Bull's-head or not; it was unanimously negatived.

Q. Did Mr. Walker take any part or assign any reason?

A. Mr. Walker and Mr. Paul spoke against attending that meeting, and assigned their reasons.

Mr. Law. Does any of our evidence let in this?—we have given no evidence, but of meetings in Mr. Walker's house; they are giving evidence of meetings at another place, probably for other purposes.

Mr. Erskine. I should have thought this too plain for argument.—If my friend insists upon his objection, we must be heard upon it; the offence imputed to Mr. Walker is, that a few days after the 11th of December, the witness, Dunn, found him haranguing the Reformation Society in the seditious manner stated by the witness, speaking of the King in the manner he has deposed to, and men exercising with arms in his presence. Is it not evidence, to shew that this very Reformation Society was instituted for other purposes than those imputed to it, and that there was no man who had been so counselled or received any such instructions?

Mr. Justice Heath. I think it is not evidence what they did three days before, because a man may express his loyalty in one meeting, and if he has bad intentions he may go and act traitorously in another; I do not say that these defendants did, I only say this to shew that it is not evidence.

Mr.

Mr. Erskine. Though we cannot prove what Mr. Walker said at this meeting, for the reason your Lordship has been pleased to assign, yet may we not be permitted to prove that this Reformation Society, within the knowledge of the witness, three days before that time, had no such objects?

Mr. Justice Heath. I do not care what object they had in meeting, people may meet very innocently, and proceed to criminal acts afterwards.

Mr. Chambre. Was that meeting of the 10th of December the last meeting you had in the house of Gorse?

A. Yes.

Q. What were the general purposes of the institution of that society?

Mr. Law. A question couched in words so general, I conceive cannot be put to a witness, they may examine as to facts, as to what was done and said, what measures were adopted by the people there—the purposes and objects are matters of the heart.

Mr. Justice Heath. I think they may shew what is the declared purpose when people meet together.

Mr. Erskine. We are going to every meeting where Dunn was, to shew that no such purposes as he states either were the avowed or the expressed objects.

Mr. Justice Heath. Take it up when Dunn came.

Mr. Erskine. If he had stated the particular day on which he was at any meeting, we should not have troubled your Lordship with any other evidence.

Mr. Justice Heath. You fixed it by the day after the attack upon Mr. Walker's house.

Mr. Chambre. The 10th of December you say was the last meeting you had at Gorse's house; where did you remove to when you left Gorse's house?

A. To Mr. Walker's warehouse.

Q. How did that happen, and what was the occasion of that removal?

A. Some person expressed a wish in the Reformation Society ———

Mr. Law. That I object to—you removed the society?

Mr. Chambre. Was Mr. Walker applied to?

A. Some person said ———

Mr. Law. Go to the first meeting at Mr. Walker's.

Q. When did you first meet at Mr. Walker's?

A. On the 11th of December.

Q. And from that time, as long as the society existed, you continued to attend the meetings?

A. I continued attending the meetings till the 25th of March, with very great strictness.

Mr. Erskine. That comprehends the whole time that Dunn speaks to.

Q. After the 25th of March did you attend?

A. I attended a few times after that, but cannot tell how many.

Q. But with great regularity till the 25th of March?

A. Yes.

Q. How long did you use to attend at a time, as near as you can recollect?

A. It was the general rule to meet at seven, and the business of the meeting to begin at half past; I was scarcely ever out of the meetings at the time the business began.

Q. And did you stay till the conclusion, or near the conclusion?

A. I never, to my knowledge, went away before the conclusion of the meeting.

Q. What were the avowed purposes of this meeting?

A. To obtain a reform in parliament.

Q. Now during all this period of your attendance there, did you ever hear Mr. Walker or any of the defendants in this indictment, propose any other than peaceable means of reform?

A. No, I never did.

Q. Did you ever hear them make use of any expressions that had in your judgment any tendency to excite any body to acts of rebellion?

A. No, I did not.

Q. Was any mention made of an expected invasion of the French, and of any attempts to assist them in that invasion?

A. No, there was not.

Q. Did you ever hear any thing like it proposed at any time?

A. No, I never did.

Q. Had that been the subject of your deliberations, or had such expressions been used by Mr. Walker, or any of the persons there—do you think you must not have heard them, and must not have remembered them?

A. I am certain any thing of that sort could not have happened without my observation, I attended so strictly.

Q. Upon the 11th of December the riot happened, I believe?

A. It did.

Q. Was you in Mr. Walker's house at that time?

A. I was.

Q. What happened on the night of the 11th?

A. About half past six o'clock I went from my house into the town; when I got into the market-place, I saw several people throwing stones at the windows and doors of Messrs. Falkner and Birch's* shop in the Market-place ; I went as soon as I saw what was going on there, to Mr. Walker's, and I was there till the rioters approached his house ; when they first approached it, I was up stairs in the warehouse ; I very well recollect there came somebody up and told Mr. Walker the rioters were before his house, and I well recollect he went down, but he was not long before he came up again, and said, they had only broke a few panes of the windows and were gone off again.
of

Q. Did any mischief happen that night, the 11th?

A. They attacked the house four different times ; I was up in the warehouse while it was attacked three times, before I went down ; but the fourth time I was in the house when it was attacked ; it was attacked with very great violence.

Q. On that night were there any arms in the house that were used for resisting this mob?

A. I saw no arms in the house, only a couple of blunderbusses, and I think I recollect something of a pistol, that was all I saw.

Q. Do you know whether any attempt was made on that night to obtain assistance from the civil power, from the magistrates ; were you present at any requisition of that sort?

A. I was not.

Q. After the riot, to the 25th of March, did you attend the meetings at Mr. Walker's?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you see at any times any arms used at Mr. Walker's house for any other purpose than to protect the house?

A. No, I never did.

Q. When did you see any arms there used for that purpose?

A. I never saw any arms but upon the 11th of December.

Q. Was there at any time, to your knowledge, any men exercised or instructed in the use of arms?

A. No, there never were.

Q. Could such a thing possibly have existed at any of the meetings, without your knowledge?

A. No, it was impossible it should exist without my knowledge?

Q. Do you know what the arms were that Mr. Walker had in his house?

A. I never saw any fire arms, except these blunderbusses, and some swivels.

Q. I

* Messrs. Falkner and Birch were stationers in Manchester, and the sole proprietors and publishers of the Manchester Herald.

Q. I believe you don't know in what way Mr. Walker became possessed of these swivels?

A. No.

Q. But whatever the arms were, were they ever brought out or used for the purpose of exercise, or any other purpose, to your knowledge, except on the 11th of December?

A. They were not.

Q. This you are perfectly certain of, that there never was any training or exercising of men there?

A. There never was.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Walker, or any body else belonging to the society, declare a purpose of that sort?

A. No.

Q. Do you remember Dunn being at any of these meetings?

A. I have seen Dunn there.

Q. When he was attending there, when you saw him, can you take upon you to say, that if any declarations of any purpose of that sort had been made, or if there had been any exercise of arms, you must have seen it and known it?

A. Yes.

Q. If you had heard amongst the members of this society any proposition or intention to assist the French in an invasion, would you have continued a member of that society?

A. No, I certainly would not.

Q. Were you present at the time when a person who has been named, a Mr. Yorke, was at the meeting?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Do you know whether he attended one or more meetings?

A. I never saw him there but once?

Q. Did he take the chair?

A. There was no person in the chair that night to my knowledge.

Q. Did Mr. Yorke talk any thing of visiting the three kingdoms, to see whether there were persons that would assist the French in case of an invasion?

A. No, he did not.

Q. Did he speak any thing of an invasion of the French with fifty thousand, or any other number of men?

A. He did not.

Q. Did he express any purpose or wish in any way whatever to assist them in any of the three kingdoms?

A. He did not.

Q. If he had made any public declaration of that sort, are you certain you must have heard him?

A. Yes.

George

George Clark.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wood.

Q. You continued to meet pretty constantly from December till the 25th of March, did you?

A. Yes.

Q. You met every night, once a week?

A. I missed two nights.

Q. Had you a chairman at every time of your meeting?

A. We did not vote a chairman every night.

Q. How happened that?

A. Sometimes we had no business to do.

Q. How came you to meet so often as once a week?

A. We met to discourse on our own business, to discourse on political matters.

Q. You discoursed on political matters from half past seven till nine, and then went away?

A. Yes, we generally broke up about that time.

Q. You never read any thing, I suppose?

A. I never heard but very few things read.

Q. There were some few things read, were there?

A. Yes, I have heard a letter or two read, and I heard an excellent piece that came from Sheffield, signed "A Reformer," read*.

Q. You never heard any thing else read?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. You mean to swear you never heard any thing else read?

A. No, nothing but that and letters.

Q. You had a good many letters?

A. No, very few.

Q. Who produced those letters? did you all produce letters?

A. We had no letter, unless it came from Sheffield, or some other society.

Q. How many societies did you correspond with?

A. That I cannot tell.

Q. Did you ever come to any resolutions in writing at your meetings?

A. We had general rules that were read every night of our meeting.

Q. Did you come to any resolutions at your meetings?

A. Yes.

Mr. Erskine. You shall have them all read.

Mr. Law. How can you make them evidence?

Mr.

* See the Appendix, No. 8.

Mr. Wood. Who kept your resolutions?

A. The secretary.

Q. Who was he?

A. John Cheetham was secretary one part of the time.

Q. Who was secretary the other part of the time?

A. John Stacey and George M<sup>c</sup> Callum.

Q. Where is George M<sup>c</sup> Callum?

A. I cannot tell.

Q. Is not he gone to America?

A. I do not know.

George Clark.

Re-examined by Mr. Chambre.

Q. Did you ever at any time see Mr. Walker, or any other defendant, do any one act that was inconsistent with the duty of a peaceable citizen?

A. No.

Mr. Law. Does your Lordship think it is proper to put such a question?

Mr. Erskine. Mr. Walker is indicted before your Lordship and his country, for having confederated and conspired with the other defendants, and others unknown, to overthrow by force the constitution of this kingdom. The evidence is, that this confederacy and conspiracy existed and was brought into overt act, at meetings, at every one of which this worthy man was present. I say I have a right in defence of my clients, and till his Lordship rules the contrary, I will insist upon that right, that this witness shall say, whether at any of these times, he ever heard Mr. Walker utter any word, or speak inconsistent with the duty of a good subject.

Mr. Law. Then I object to that.

Mr. Erskine. Good God! where am I? am I in a British court of justice? how is a man to defend himself under such a charge? how are my clients to be exculpated?

Mr. Law. By legal evidence.

Mr. Justice Heath. I think that question is admissible enough.

Mr. Chambre. Did you at any one of those meetings see Mr. Walker, Mr. Jackson, Mr. Paul, or any of those persons that are now indicted, do any one act inconsistent with the character of a peaceable subject?

A. No; I have often heard Mr. Walker ———

Mr. Justice Heath. That is irregular.

Mr. Erskine. Your Lordship knows the constitution of the country gives me no opportunity of addressing myself to

to any other court for any revision, and therefore I have a better title to be heard; I will prove that Mr. Walker made use of expressions there of a direct contrary tendency.

Mr. Justice Heath. You should have examined to that in chief; you are coming to particulars now upon a re-examination.

Mr. Erskine. It arises upon Mr. Wood's cross-examination. I am glad to hear that we have your Lordship's authority to examine in chief to it; we have a great many more witnesses to examine.

Mr. Justice Heath. If you have a mind, ask that general question.

Mr. Law. It is a complex question, embracing the witnesses idea of what may become an honest man, pointing at no particular fact or expression, which any man may answer according to his vague ideas of propriety.

Mr. Erskine. When a man is indicted for exciting sedition and rebellion, is it not evidence to shew that he held a language directly repugnant to any such idea? If he had said, God bless the King, would not that be evidence?

Mr. Justice Heath. If it was at that meeting.

Mr. Law. If it goes to the whole tenor of his conduct; but a man shall not be justified by saying, God bless the King, in the street, when he has been damning him in his house.

Mr. Justice Heath. Ask him to their general declarations.

Mr. Chambre. At those meetings, when Mr. Walker was present, did you hear him say or do any thing that had a tendency to disturb the peace of the kingdom; I am examining to the meetings of the Reformation Society between the 11th of December and the 25th of March?

A. When Mr. Walker came to our meetings he generally addressed us to attend to peace and good order.

Q. Did you, or did you not hear Mr. Walker say any thing inconsistent with peace and good order, or any thing against the King and his government, or any thing that tended to subvert it—or say any thing to excite people to take up arms against the King, or to destroy the constitution?

A. I never did in my life.

Mr. Erskine. Whether the witness has not a right to go on and say, but on the contrary he said so and so, am I not at liberty to ask that?

Mr. Justice Heath. Not in this stage.

One of the Jury. What is the height of the warehouse in which you used to meet?

A. I never took notice how high it was, how many pair of stairs up.

Q. The

Q. The height of the room from the floor to the ceiling?
Mr. Erskine. We will give evidence of that.

James Lomax (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Lloyd.

Q. Where do you live?

A. In Salford.

Q. Are you a member of any of these societies?

A. Yes, the Reformation Society.

Q. When did you become a member of that society?

A. The first night I met, was the Monday night after Mr. Walker was so ill used at the riots in Manchester—the 17th of December I think, and I entered about three nights after; we met every Monday night.

Q. Did you often attend the societies?

A. Yes, I think I did not miss above once, till the latter end of March, or the beginning of April, for there were some resolutions signed, that were put into the last paper Mr. Falkner printed; I believe I did not miss but one night; that was somewhere towards February, but I am not certain which night it was.

Q. At what time did you generally go to the meeting?

A. About seven o'clock; the last Monday in the month was my box night, I either then went at eight, or at seven and left the place at eight.

Q. How long did you stay?

A. I generally staid till the end, till they were all going, and I saw nothing else likely to be done.

Q. What was the avowed object of this society?

A. To gain a reform in parliament.

Q. Do you know Dunn by sight?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever see him there?

A. Yes, and one night he and I were a good deal together; I recollected him when I saw him to-day: I have never seen him since.

Q. You have seen Mr. Walker there?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever heard Mr. Walker damn the King?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever see any persons exercise with arms there?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever see any firelocks there?

A. No; only the first night I went, I stopped by the desire of Mr. Walker that night, for he expected another riot; riot; they broke one of his windows, we went out, and whether Mr. Walker had a pistol in his hand when we went out to find the person, or not, I cannot tell; I saw nothing except in his warehouse, there were six pieces of some sort, but not firelocks.

Q. What do you call them? what length are they?

A. About this length (describing them to be about eighteen inches long).

Q. You never saw any person exercising there with firelocks?

A. Never.

Q. Did you ever hear any recommendation of beginning to exercise?

A. No.

Q. If there had been such in the society, you must have seen it?

A. Yes, and I would have scorned to have tarried in it.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Walker, or any other, say they would overthrow the constitution?

A. I never did.

Q. Would you have stayed in the society if such a proposal had been made?

A. I do not believe I should one moment.

Q. Did you ever hear Mr. Walker or the others who were there, say or do any thing inconsistent with the duty of good subjects?

A. No; I have heard Mr. Walker many times advise us to be peaceable, and say many times he had no doubt we should be peaceable: I never saw any thing in that society that they need to be ashamed of either before God or man.

Q. Did you ever hear them talk of exciting the people to sedition or rebellion?

A. No.

Q. Or exciting the people to take up arms?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear them talk of assisting the French?

A. I never did.

Q. If you had heard them talk of assisting the French would you have stayed with them?

A. No; my principles are those that I would neither have war offensive nor defensive.

Q. Do you know Mr. Collier?

A. I believe I do; he is a tall man.

Q. Do you know what religion he is of?

A. A Quaker.

Q. Have you heard him swear often?

A. No, I never did in my life.

James Lomax.

Cross-examined by Mr. Topping.

Q. Where do you live?

A. In Salford.

Q. What business are you?

A. A weaver.

Q. You had attended these meetings then before you became a member?

A. Yes, I think it was the third night, but I cannot be positive.

Q. Then people were admitted to attend these meetings who were not actually members?

A. I never saw any denied; I have taken a man twice myself.

Q. They were admitted to these meetings, although they were not members?

A. Yes.

Q. Before you became a member you was admitted, and after you became a member you took people with you?

A. I took one man with me that had a desire to go.

Q. Upon the 17th of December you became a member?

A. No.

Q. You said you went on the 17th, and went before you became a member?

A. No, I never attended till the 17th of December.

Q. When did you become a member?

A. I believe it was the third night after.

Q. Did Mr. Walker ask you to become a member?

A. No, I went of my own free will; I don't know that any man asked me.

Q. Do you remember Paine's works being read there?

A. No, I never saw them there.

Q. Did you hear them read?

A. I never did hear them read there.

Q. Did you ever hear any part of Paine's book read there?

A. No.

Q. Have not you, upon your oath, heard books read there, which you understood to be Paine's books?

A. I never did.

Q. That you swear?

A. I do; I have heard books read I did not know whose they were; if they had been Paine's, they would have mentioned that, I suppose?

Q. You mean to say no books of Paine's were read there?

A. If

A. If it had been Paine's Rights of Man, I should have known that.

Q. Was it your knowledge of the contents of that book that entitled you to be a member of this society?

A. No.

Q. Had you the knowledge of Paine's book before you became a member of this society, or after?

A. Before, I believe.

Q. Upon your oath, have you never heard Jackson, one of the defendants, read Paine's Rights of Man there?

A. No, I never have that I know of.

Q. You say you know Paine's Rights of Man perfectly well?

A. Yes.

Q. Will you venture to swear that you never heard Jackson read any part of that book there?

A. I never have as I know of.

Q. Don't you know?

A. He has read books.

Q. Has he read books repeatedly at these meetings?

A. I only heard one or two read, and those were abstracts.

Q. Were they not abstracts out of Paine's Rights of Man?

A. They were not.

Q. What was the subject he was reading about to you?

A. There was one book, I remember, that came from London, concerning the unequal representation of the people, that came from the Friends of the People.

Mr. Topping. That came from the Friends of the People!

Mr. Erskine. I presume it did, as I believe a packet was transmitted from the Friends of the People to the Constitutional Society in Manchester. I am a member of the Friends of the People, and if you have any questions to ask relative to that society, swear me, and I will answer them.

Mr. Topping. Who read that?

A. Mr. Jackson.

Q. Was he the general reader at the meeting? who read besides him?

A. I have heard Mr. Walker read news-papers.

Q. Sometimes Mr. Walker read, and sometimes Mr. Jackson?

A. We had nothing else to pass our time away with; and to see how public affairs were going on.

James Lomax.

Re-examined by Mr. Lloyd.

Q. What night was it you saw Mr. Walker go out, and you suppose with a pistol?

A. It was on the 17th of December.

Q. Were the riots then continued?

A. They broke one of Mr. Walker's windows that night.

Q. You were not a member then?

A. No.

Q. You went as a friend to defend Mr. Walker's house?

A. I did.

Q. The book you heard read was, you say, the publication by the Society of the Friends of the People in London?

A. It was.

James Roberts (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Vaughan.

Q. Are you a member of the Reformation Society at Manchester?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you been a member of that society?

A. I entered, I believe, on the 31st of December 1792.

Q. Have you regularly attended the meetings of that society?

A. I attended very regularly.

Q. From this time in December till what time?

A. Till the 10th day of June 1793.

Q. What was the avowed object of the meetings of this society?

A. To obtain, by constitutional means, a fair and adequate representation of the people.

Q. Do you know Mr. Thomas Walker?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you seen him at your Reformation Society?

A. Very frequently.

Q. Up to what time did you see Mr. Walker there?

A. Till the 29th day of April.

Q. Have you seen Thomas Dunn there?

A. Yes, I have.

Q. Have you been present when Dunn was present?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you at any of these times, when Thomas Dunn was present, see any exercising of men with arms?

A. No, never.

Q. Or

Q. Or at any other time, when Dunn was not there, did you see any exercising of men with arms?

A. Never.

Q. Did you at any time hear any language whatever from Mr. Thomas Walker, or any other persons, inciting the society to exercise with arms, for any purpose, and what?

A. No, I never saw them exercise with arms.

Q. In what place did this Reformation Society meet?

A. In Mr. Thomas Walker's warehouse.

Q. Up stairs, or below stairs?

A. Above stairs.

Q. Do you know the height of this warehouse, from the floor to the ceiling?

A. I do not.

Q. Did you ever hear from Mr. Thomas Walker, or any other persons whatever, any language relative to cutting off the head of the King, or any thing of a similar tendency?

A. Never in my life.

Q. Did you ever hear or see from Mr. Thomas Walker, any language or conduct whatever, that tended to incite the people against the government, or to any similar purpose?

A. I never did.

Q. Did you ever see in Mr. Thomas Walker, or any other persons whatever attending that society, any conduct unbecoming honest men and good subjects?

A. Never.

Q. Did you ever see any arms at any time in the warehouse?

A. Just after the riot I saw some pieces of cannon; there were five or six.

Q. What sort of cannon were they, twenty-four or forty-eight pounders?

A. I do not properly understand them.

Q. What length were they?

A. About three quarters of a yard long.

Q. Did you ever see any musketry there?

A. No, never but on the twelfth of December.

Q. You never saw any musketry at any time during your attendance, but on the night of the riot, or the night after?

A. No, that was one musket in Mr. Walker's kitchen.

Q. How often did you see that?

A. Never but once.

James Roberts.

Cross-examined by Mr. Johnson.

Q. What are you?

A. I am in a warehouse.

Q. What

- Q. What trade are you?
A. I am in a warehouse.
Q. What are you?
A. A warehouseman.
Q. Who do you live with?
A. Messrs. Nichols and Roberts.
Q. Who introduced you into this society?
A. I was not introduced by any person.
Q. How came you to go there?
A. I went there the 12th of December, the night following the first riot.
Q. Were there more riots than one?
A. The mob met two days together.
Q. I asked who introduced you to this society; you said, nobody. When did you go to it first?
A. The 12th of December was the first time I went to Mr. Walker's.
Q. When was the first time you went to the society?
A. The 20th of December.
Q. Was you a member then?
A. No, I did not become a member until the 31st of December.
Q. You said, just now, you became a member on the 31st of January 1793?
Mr. Serjeant Cockell. You have taken him down wrong.
Mr. Johnson. What was your inducement to become a member of this Reformation Society?
A. They wished a fair representation of the people in parliament.
Mr. Justice Heath. Don't let us enquire into that.
Mr. Erskine. It is evidence for the defendants, and if the gentlemen choose to ask it, I have a right to the evidence.
A. On the 12th of December, as I was at work, I saw a great concourse of people met in the Market-place; I thought there would be a riot in the evening; I went out, went into the Church-yard, and went to Mr. Walker's house that night; and I saw such conduct in Mr. Walker and the people that were there, that it made me determine to enter among them.
Mr. Johnson. You say you saw no exercising, but you did see arms?
A. I never saw any fire-arms, but one musket.
Q. Did you see no other fire-arms?
A. Yes, six pieces of cannon.
Q. Were they large enough to carry a pound ball?
A. I cannot tell, I was never used to them.
Q. Did you see any blunderbusses there?

A. I do not recollect seeing any blunderbusses there.

Q. Did you ever hear any books read there?

A. I heard one book read.

Q. What was it?

A. They called it the Irish Address to the Scotch.

Q. Who read that?

A. Mr. Walker did.

Q. Perhaps you cannot recollect any particular passage in it?

A. No.

Mr. Erskine. I dare say you recollect that is not evidence, therefore you ask it.

Mr. Law. It confirms him as to the reading of books there.

Mr. Justice Heath. There is no doubt, your witness was there.

Mr. Johnson. You heard that read by Mr. Walker?

A. Yes.

Mr. Vaughan. They did not shoulder these swivels, did they?

A. No, never.

Mary Denham (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Erskine.

Q. How long have you lived as a servant with Mr. Walker?

A. For two years upon the 10th of March last.

Q. Do you remember the attack made upon your master's house?

A. Yes.

Q. Was you in the house at that time?

A. Yes.

Q. I suppose you was pretty much frightened?

A. Yes, I was.

Q. Do you remember any cannon?

A. Yes.

Q. When were these cannon brought to town?

A. The day after the riot.

Q. Where were they before?

A. In the country.

Q. At Barlow-Hall, where Mr. Walker lives?

A. Yes.

Q. They are little things upon carriages?

A. Yes.

Q. They were brought into town the day after the riot?

A. Yes.

Q. Before

Q. Before the time that these cannon came, do you remember seeing fire-arms in your master's house?

A. No.

Q. Was you admitted to all the parts of the warehouse, and the house—you went where you pleased, I suppose?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever see any men exercising with arms there?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever hear of any thing like it?

A. No.

Q. Did you ever see any arms there before the time of the riots?

A. No.

Q. If any such exercise of people with arms had taken place, must you not have known it?

A. Yes.

Q. Why should you have known it?

A. They could not do it in the warehouse, or house, without my seeing or hearing it.

Q. Did you ever either see any such thing done, or hear of its being done.

A. No, never.

Q. Can you take upon you to swear that it was not done?

A. Yes.

Q. After the riots, we understand these cannon, and some muskets, and other arms were brought for the purpose of defending the house?

A. Yes.

Q. What was done with them after the 12th of December?

A. They went into the country again I believe.

Q. What was it that went into the country again?

A. The cannon.

Q. What became of the blunderbusses, pistols, and muskets?

A. I never saw any.

Q. You never saw any after the riot, nor before?

A. No.

Q. You don't know where these cannon went to?

A. No, I saw no more of them.

Mary Denham.

Cross-examined by Mr. James.

Q. Were you a member of any of these Reformation Societies?

A. No.

A. No.

Q. Did you ever attend them?

A. No.

Q. How could you tell what was going forward at any of those meetings? you did not generally attend the warehouse.

A. No.

Q. Your business was in the house?

A. Yes.

Q. But how can you pretend to say what was done in the warehouse; they might have been in the warehouse for what you know?

A. Not to exercise they could not; I must have seen them through the windows.

Q. Have you been accustomed to see men exercise?

A. I have seen the soldiers exercise.

Q. They did not always fire when they exercised?

A. No.

Q. Have you not seen them exercise, when they made very little noise?

A. No, I do not know that I have.

Q. Have you never seen them present, and rise, and kneel, and so on; you say there were no blunderbusses or muskets?

A. I never saw any.

Q. And if there was, you must have seen them, must you?

A. Yes.

Mr. Erskine. Is there not a double light through the warehouse?

A. Yes.

Q. If they had been exercising with fire-arms there, must you not have seen and heard them?

A. Yes.

Martha Wilkinson (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Setjeant Cockell.

Q. I understand you live in the service of Mr. Walker; you attend the Miss Walkers, as their maid?

A. Yes.

Q. How long have you lived in Mr. Walker's service?

A. More than three years and a half.

Q. Where was you at the time of the riot, the first night Mr. Walker's house was attacked?

A. At Barlow.

Q. Mr. Walker's country residence?

A. Yes.

Q. When did you return from Barlow?

A. The day after.

L

Q. How

Q. How long did you continue after you had returned from Barlow?

A. Till the beginning of May.

Q. During that period you lived in his house at Manchester?

A. I did.

Q. Do you remember after your return from Barlow, whether any arms of any sort were sent for?

A. No.

Q. Do you remember the cannon?

A. Yes.

Q. Where did they come from?

A. From Barlow, before I came.

Q. How long before?

A. The same day I came.

Q. That was the day after the riot?

A. Yes.

Q. You know Mr. Walker's warehouse?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you from any room in the house see into the warehouse?

A. Yes.

Q. Is the warehouse so near to that part of the house, from whence you can see into the warehouse, that if any noise, for instance the clattering of ramrods, or any thing of that sort had happened, you could have heard them?

A. Yes.

Q. You have seen soldiers exercise at Manchester?

A. I cannot say I ever did.

Q. But if there had been any noise of that sort, you was near enough to have heard, and to have seen?

A. Yes.

Q. Did you ever hear or see at any time in your life, any men exercising in arms at Mr. Walker's?

A. No, never.

Q. If such a thing had happened when these weekly meetings were held, must you not at some time or other have heard it?

A. Most certainly I must.

Q. And you are prepared, safely and conscientiously to swear, that no such thing happened?

A. I am.

Q. Describe the situation of this window?

A. There is but a narrow yard that parts the warehouse and the house, and the windows of the warehouse, and the windows of the room in which I was, were opposite.

Q. Then if any thing of that sort had happened, you must have seen and heard it?

A. I

A. I certainly should.

Q. Do you know the height of the warehouse?

A. I do not.

Q. You know the gentlemen who came to Mr. Walker's; you know that clubs were held there?

A. Yes.

Q. I confine myself to the time during the holding of the clubs; did you ever hear any noise then of arms?

A. Never.

Q. Did you ever see any exercising of men at those times, or at any other?

A. Never.

Martha Wilkinson.

Cross-examined by Mr. Law.

Q. In what room do you usually live?

A. In the nursery; the nursery in general.

Q. Is the nursery higher or lower than the warehouse?

A. From the nursery windows we can see into several rooms of the warehouse.

Q. Is it higher or lower?

A. It is higher than one part of the warehouse, and lower than another.

Q. Is it as high as the upper room of the warehouse?

A. It is not quite so high.

Q. Will you say, that you can conveniently, from that room, see into the upper room of the warehouse?

A. We can see into it.

Q. Can you see from one end to the other of the warehouse, from the nursery?

A. Yes, from one end to the other of the upper warehouse.

Q. The upper warehouse of all?

A. Yes.

Q. And was you every night, for forty nights together, when these persons were there, so watching their proceedings, that you could know if a person had put a musket to his shoulder?

A. I was not constantly watching, but I have no doubt if there had been such a thing I should have known it?

Q. Did you observe all that passed there?

A. We frequently watched them.

Q. What did they do when you watched them?

A. We never saw but they were sitting still.

Q. Talking?

A. Yes.

Q. You saw books, I take for granted?

A. No,

- A. No, I did not.
Q. You never saw any thing read?
A. Never.
Q. But if there had been Paine's book, or any other book read, you must have seen it?
A. I did not see any book.
Q. If they had been so employed, you must have seen that too?
A. I cannot say.
Q. Why could not you see a book held up, just as well as see a musket held up?
A. I never did see a book read.
Q. How many might there be in the room at a time?
A. I cannot say the exact number.
Q. You have seen Dunn there?
A. No.
Q. Were there twenty, thirty, forty, fifty there?
A. I cannot tell.
Q. Do you think there were so many as forty or fifty?
A. I do not know.
Q. Had you never the curiosity to count them when there was a good number?
A. Never.
Q. But if there had been books, you think you must have seen them, and you never saw any read?
A. I never saw any book read.

Martha Wilkinson.

Re-examined by Mr. Serjeant Cockell.

- Q. From this nursery, in which you frequently were in the evenings, if there had been men exercising, you must have seen them?
A. Yes.
Q. What sort of windows are the warehouse windows?
A. Nearly the length of the warehouse.

Francis Roberts (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Chambre.

- Q. You are a servant to Mr. Walker?
A. Yes.
Q. How long have you lived with him?
A. I came to live with Mr. Walker in the year 1791; I have lived with him ever since.
Q. You were servant to him, of course, when the riots happened in Manchester?

A. I

A. I was.

Q. Mr. Walker has a house at Manchester, and a country-house at Barlow?

A. He has.

Q. At the time of the riots were you at Manchester, or Barlow?

A. At Barlow.

Q. When did you come from Barlow?

A. The morning following.

Q. Do you know what fire-arms Mr. Walker had for the protection of both his houses?

A. There was nothing for the protection of his house except two pistols, and two blunderbusses, and two fowling pieces that I ever saw.

Q. Had he any swivels?

A. Yes, half a dozen.

Q. Where were the swivels at the time when the riot happened?

A. At Barlow-Hall.

Q. When were they removed from Barlow to Manchester?

A. The day after the riots.

Q. You don't know how he became possessed of those swivels?

A. I do not.

Q. When you came from Barlow, how long did you continue at Manchester?

A. We came the 12th of December, and returned back the 5th of May.

Q. Immediately after you came on the 12th of December, and for some time after, was there any watch kept at Mr. Walker's house, to prevent any mischief being done to the house—did people sit up all night?

A. Yes, they did.

Q. Did you sit up for the protection of the house sometimes?

A. Yes.

Q. How long were they obliged, for the security of the house, to keep up this sort of watch?

A. For the course of a month, or thereabouts.

Q. Were you often among those that sat up?

A. I was.

Q. Of course you were in the house at all the meetings of the Reformation Society, that took place between the 12th of December and the 5th of May?

A. I was.

Q. Had you ever occasion to go into the room where these meetings were held?

A. I

A. I had frequent occasion.

Q. Were these meetings held with open doors, or were the doors locked?

A. I always found the doors wide open.

Q. There was no sort of secrecy about the purposes of of their meeting?

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Have you stayed any time when people were in the room, so as to hear the conversation that passed?

A. I cannot say I have.

Q. Did you ever at any time hear any expressions made use of, damning the King?

A. Nothing of the sort.

Q. Did you ever hear any expressions of any sort made use of, to incite any of the people there to break the peace?

A. I have no knowledge of any thing of the sort.

Q. Was there any exercise of men with guns or other arms?

A. Nothing of the sort.

Q. Do you think you must have known it, if any such thing had been practised in the place where these people met, or in any part of your master's house?

A. I am sure such things could not be made use of, but I should have come to the knowledge of it, some how or other.

Q. Did you at any time whatever see or hear any thing done or said there, that had any tendency to disturb the public peace?

A. I never did.

Francis Roberts.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wood.

Q. How many people might there be at those meetings when you saw them?

A. There might be twenty or thirty, and sometimes more.

Q. How many men do you think there might be, fifty or sixty, perhaps?

A. I believe not so many.

Q. How many do you think?

A. There might be thirty-five, or so.

Q. Is that the most you ever saw?

A. I do not know in particular that it is.

Q. Have you not seen sixty, or more, there?

A. No.

Q. You won't go higher than thirty-five?

A. No.

- A. No, I will not.
- Q. Did you know those people that had got there?
- A. No.
- Q. I believe you was very seldom at those meetings; did you ever stay a meeting through, from beginning to end?
- A. No.
- Q. How long might you stay at a time?
- A. Three or four minutes, or so, while I delivered my message.
- Q. When you stayed up to protect this house, what had you to protect it with?
- A. We had a sword or two.
- Q. How many might stay up with you? did any of the people that attended these meetings stay with you?
- A. They did.
- Q. The Reformation Society stayed with you, did they?
- A. Some of those people that met in the warehouse.
- Q. How many nights might they stay up with you?
- A. I cannot pretend to say how many.
- Q. How many may you have had at a time to stay up with you?
- A. Four or five.
- Q. Not always the same people, I suppose?
- A. No.

Francis Roberts.

Re-examined by Mr. Chambre.

- Q. You never particularly, I suppose, counted the number, to know exactly how many there might be?
- A. I never did.

Mr. Edward Green (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Lloyd.

- Q. You, I believe, were apprentice to Mr. Walker, and brought up in his warehouse?
- A. Yes.
- Q. How long have you been with him?
- A. It will be eight years in July.
- Q. Do you remember the night of the riots?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Do you remember whether there were any arms got to defend Mr. Walker's house?
- A. Yes, there were some got.
- Q. Do you know what arms they were?

A. They

A. They were muskets.

Q. Were there any swivels?

A. No.

Q. Not that night?

A. No.

Mr. Justice Heath. How many muskets?

A. I do not know the number.

Mr. Lloyd. Were you in the house the first night of the riot?

A. I was.

Q. Do you know when the swivels were bought?

A. They were a present to Master Walker, by Mr. Jackson; they were bought at Mr. Livesey's sale.

Q. Do you know any occasion upon which those swivels were fired?

A. I remember they were fired upon the anniversary of the repeal of the fustian tax.

Q. At any other time?

A. I was not present at any other time.

Q. What is your business at Mr. Walker's, chiefly.

A. In the foreign counting house.

Q. Is that up stairs, or below, in his warehouse?

A. Up stairs.

Mr. Justice Heath. Do you live in the house?

A. I lived in the house five years.

Mr. Lloyd. In what part of the warehouse is the foreign counting-house?

A. It looks towards Salford, up two pair of stairs.

Q. Do you know the room where the societies met?

A. It was in a room up another pair of stairs, where the societies met.

Q. Have you ever had occasion to go into that room when they were met?

A. I had frequent occasions to go up to Mr. Walker upon business?

Q. Did you find the door either locked or fastened?

A. Never.

Q. Did they seem to be about secret business?

A. Not at all.

Q. Did you go in without interruption?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you had occasion to go in more than once in an evening?

A. I may have gone two or three times, not finding Mr. Walker in the first time.

Q. How near is that room to the room where you used to sit writing?

A. Up another pair of stairs.

Q. Is

- Q. Is part of that room, over the room that you was in?
A. It is.
- Q. Did you ever see any men exercising with arms when you went up?
A. Never.
- Q. When you were writing, did you ever hear any arms clashing?
A. Never.
- Q. Were there carpets upon the floor, or any thing of that kind, to prevent the sound?
A. No.
- Q. I understand that you never saw any men exercising with arms?
A. Never.
- Q. Do you know what is the height of that room?
A. I do not know.
- Q. Do you know whether it is such a room that a man could shoulder a firelock?
A. I do not know; I never took particular notice.
- Q. Did you send word before you went in, or go in without giving notice?
A. Without giving notice.
- Q. When you went in, did you hear any conversation—did you ever hear Mr. Walker damn the King?
A. No.
- Q. Or talk of overturning the constitution?
A. Never.
- Q. Did you hear any conversation of aiding and assisting the French?
A. No.
- Q. You never heard any thing of the kind?
A. No.
- Q. When you went in, did they seem instantly to cease their conversation, or to go on with it?
A. They went on with the business they were about.
- Q. Whenever you went in, did you hear Mr. Walker, or any other person, say any thing to excite disturbance of the peace?
A. Not at all.
- Q. Or exciting them to take up arms to aid the French?
A. No, never.
- Q. Or for any other purpose?
A. No, by no means, I never heard any thing of the kind.
- Q. Or to overthrow the constitution?
A. No.

Mr. Edward Green.

Cross-examined by Mr. Topping.

Q. If I understand you, you have been several years with Mr. Walker?

A. Yes, I have known Mr. Walker eleven years.

Q. You was a person, therefore, perfectly well known as one of Mr. Walker's family?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you take upon you to say, how many people you have ever seen assembled at any one time?

A. Very likely seventeen, eighteen, or twenty.

Q. Will you take upon yourself to say, you have not seen to the number of fifty or sixty at a time?

A. Upon the night of the riots there were a good many.

Q. Can you take upon you to say, you have not seen to the number of fifty or sixty assembled?

A. I will take upon me to swear I have not seen, what I conceive to be, such a number as that.

Q. You don't mean to say you can form any accurate estimate of the number?

A. No.

Q. You was not a member of this society?

A. I was not.

Q. You never went up to this room, unless you had occasion to speak to Mr. Walker, then you went, and he was called out to you?

A. I always went in to him.

Q. My friend has asked you as to having heard, or not, expressions used about the King; now can you take upon you to swear what they were doing, from what you heard?

A. Their conversation seemed to turn upon the question of a reform in parliament.

Q. Whether you mean to swear, that you knew or ever heard from any individual there, any particular expressions used at all, that you can relate to the Jury?

A. I do not.

Q. You was not a member of the society?

A. No.

Q. Your object in going there was not to learn what they were doing?

A. No.

Q. When you did go there, it was merely to speak to Mr. Walker about his own business as a merchant?

A. Yes.

Q. What size is the room in which this society was held?

A. It is a long room.

Q. And

Q. And will hold a great number of people, will it not?

A. It will hold a good many people.

Q. Is it the length, or half the length of this room?

A. I think it is nearly the length of this room.

Q. Is there not another room upon the same floor; does all the attic story make only one room?

A. There is another room.

Q. There is another room upon the same floor, besides the room in which the society was held?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. You said you thought part of it was over the counting house where you are?

A. Yes, part of it is over that room.

Mr. Edward Green.

Re-examined by Mr. Lloyd.

Q. The reason why you think the warehouse is over the counting house is, that both rooms look into Salford?

A. Yes both rooms come to the end of the building.

Q. Was it any part of your business to see that all the fires were out in this warehouse, and to lock up at night?

A. It is my general custom to go through the warehouse, and to lock it up.

Q. Did you find any arms lying there, when you went through the rooms to lock all up?

A. Never.

Q. Did you go into this room generally?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. And you did not see any arms lying there?

A. Never.

Mr. George Duckworth (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Vaughan.

Q. Are you acquainted with the house of Mr. Walker, at Manchester?

A. I am.

Q. You are also acquainted with the warehouse of that house, and the height of it?

A. Yes, Mr. Walker took me through the house and warehouse a few days ago, to shew them to me; I had not seen the warehouse before, only occasionally when I went on business. Mr. Walker shewed me the different rooms of the warehouse upon every story. I measured the height of two stories, which appeared to be the highest, and the lowest.

est. The highest room, to the best of my recollection (for I did not expect to be examined here) was nine feet high between the beams, and eight feet six inches high under the beams.

Mr. Law. You did not measure them?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you make any minute?

A. No. The lowest story was seven feet six inches high under the beams, and eight feet between the beams; I took a musket out of the room in which Mr. Walker had put the arms, and fixed the bayonet, to shoulder it: when I shouldered it, the point of the bayonet touched the ceiling: if I had thrown it up to my shoulder in the manner they do in the manual exercise, the bayonet would have stuck into the ceiling; I could not poise it. This was the highest room in the warehouse. The rooms in the uppermost story are the highest.

Mr. George Duckworth,

Cross-examined by Mr. Law.

Q. You had no idea of giving any account of this at Lancaster, when you made the measurement?

A. No. I desired Mr. Walker to get some person to make the measurement.

Q. Are you not the attorney for Mr. Walker?

A. I am, but I did not examine the whole of the evidence. Mr. Seddon examined some of the witnesses.

Q. You say you made no minute in writing of this?

A. I did not.

Q. Where did you get the musket that you tried with?

A. Out of the room where Mr. Walker had the small collection of arms, which he informed me were what he had at the time of the riots.

Q. So you had a musket!

A. Yes.

Q. How many did you see in the armoury?

A. About a dozen, I believe, of one sort or other. The arms were covered with dust. The room was full of dust. The arms were of different sorts.

Q. There were twelve muskets?

A. No, not twelve muskets, but different kinds of fire-arms.

Q. With bayonets all?

A. There were some musketoons with spring bayonets.

Mr. Walker. I have an inventory in my pocket, of the arms I had at the time of the riots; I have the arms now.

The

The inventory (offering it to Mr. Law) is very much at your service.

Mr. Law. The beam of this room comes very deep down, does it?

A. About six inches.

Q. Supposing there had been no beams coming down, the room would have been the height of nine feet?

A. Yes.

Q. What did you measure with?

A. Mr. Walker had a four-foot rule.

Q. You made no minute at the time?

A. I did not.

Q. Did you advise a carpenter to be sent for to measure it?

A. I desired Mr. Walker would get some person to measure it.

Mr. Duckworth.

Re-examined by Mr. Vaughan.

Q. What arms were they that you saw there? were they different sorts of arms?

A. A few muskets, a few musketoons, ———

Q. What are musketoons something of the nature of a blunderbuss?

A. Yes.

Mr. Justice Heath. There is one objection, I should be glad to hear what Mr. Law says upon it—it struck me early in the course of this business—I did not mention it out of tenderness to the defendant, that he might have an opportunity of clearing his character, by calling his witnesses, but it appears to me that this can be nothing else than high treason.

Mr. Law. I submit to your Lordship, that it is not high treason; but at the same time, if these facts could be so understood, the Crown might prosecute as for a misdemeanor; that was settled in the case of the King against Hampden*, and it has been laid down in a great number of cases.

* The precedent here alluded to, is the trial of Mr. Hampden, for a misdemeanor, in the latter end of the reign of Charles the second, February the 6th, 1683, before JUDGE JEFFERIES; when Mr. Hampden was fined by him and the rest of the Judges of the King's-Bench, in the sum of FORTY THOUSAND POUNDS!

Mr. Hampden remarked to the court, that his father being alive, his fortune was but small, and that merely a life estate. To this Mr. Justice Withins said, that they could not take cognizance of what his estate was; the punishment was to be proportioned to the offence, and the Chief Justice (JEFFERIES) added, that considering some verdicts, this would be thought a moderate fine.

On passing this sentence, Mr. Hampden was told by the Court, that the matter of the offence was such as would have made him guilty of HIGH TREASON, had there been two witnesses. The essence of a crime therefore (according to this precedent) does not consist in the nature of the act committed, but cases. I could cite authorities from Lord Chief Justice Hale, and other books, where the Crown has prosecuted as for but is to be at one time HIGH TREASON, at another something else, as the prosecutor is prepared with one or more witnesses to prove it.

Mr. Hampden remained in prison, and under execution for the fine, till the 30th of December 1685, the first year of James the second, when a new witness appearing, he was again indicted for the same offence, but then laid as HIGH TREASON. "His friends offered money for his pardon to some in power, who were the Lord (Judge) JEFFERIES, and Mr. Petre, the sum was SIX THOUSAND POUNDS, and that was effectual. It is not possible for a man to suffer more than he did."

"By the help of the money, on condition he would plead guilty to his indictment, he was to come off; whereupon, pleading guilty, he was discharged; paying 300l. or 400l. to Burton and Graham for the charge of his pardon."

"His abject submission did indeed procure him a pardon; but the shame of such a mean behaviour so sunk and disordered his spirits, that he was never quite right after it; and about ten years after he cut his own throat." State Trials, Vol. 111. page 823. Vol. 1v. page 210, and Vol. viii. page 480.

The fine of FORTY THOUSAND POUNDS, without regarding the amount of a man's fortune, and the doctrine of converting high treason into a misdemeanor, both stand upon the same precedent—The one is as justifiable as the other.

But is it consistent with the spirit of the laws of England, that the difference of the technical phrases in an indictment, shall put a man into the peril of that judicial discretion, which may fine him FORTY THOUSAND POUNDS, whether he has it or not, and commit him until it be paid? that is, in other words, WHICH MAY IMPRISON HIM FOR LIFE.

Since Mr. Hampden's trial, and soon after the Revolution, viz. in the 7th of Wm. 3. an act was passed "for regulating trials in cases of treason, and misprision of treason," wherein it was enacted, that every person accused and indicted for high treason, or misprision of treason, should have a true copy of the whole indictment delivered to him five days at the least before his trial; and that no person should be indicted, tried, or attainted of high treason, or misprision of treason, but by and upon the oaths and testimony of two lawful witnesses, either both of them to the same overt act, or one of them to one, and the other of them to another overt act of the same treason. And that every person, who should be so accused, indicted, and tried, should have a copy of the panel of the jurors returned to try him, delivered to him two days at the least before his trial, and that no evidence should be admitted or given of any overt act, not expressly laid in the indictment. And by an act passed in the 7th of Anne, "for improving the union of the two kingdoms," it was further enacted, that every person indicted for high treason, or misprision of treason, should have a list of the witnesses to be produced on the trial for proving the said indictment, and also a list of the jury, with the names, professions, and places of abode of the witnesses and jurors, together with a copy of the indictment; and that the same should be delivered to the party indicted, ten days before the trial, in the presence of two or more credible witnesses.

But these statutes are no longer a protection for the subject, if he may be proceeded against for a conspiracy, which is only another name for the same accusation, while it removes and destroys these salutary provisions and safeguards of the people.

It was unnecessary for Mr. Walker and the other defendants, indeed it would not have become them, to avoid the verdict of a jury, by resorting to any legal objections; yet if the doctrine laid down in the case of Hampden for a misdemeanor—that the Crown, in cases of felony, might drop some of the circumstances, and prosecute as for a misdemeanor—the Crown may elect to prosecute the crime in its mildest form. This is a point of such magnitude, and having been solemnly decided in cases I could refer to in the STATE TRIALS, I beg your Lordship to have the goodness to let this be found upon a special verdict.

Mr. Erskine. No—no.

Mr. Law. I want to have the fact found—I pray it with the joint advice of some of the most learned persons in the profession, I mean Mr. Serjeant Hill, THE ATTORNEY AND SOLICITOR GENERAL †.

Mr. Erskine. Whatever opinion I may entertain upon the argument Mr. Law has offered to your Lordship, I will not controvert it here; but I shall insist upon the twelve honourable gentlemen in that box, telling the people of England, whether aye or no, my clients ought to be convicted, after the testimony I am in the course of giving.

Mr. Law. I am equally before those gentlemen and the people of England, for the protection of the people of England; if you rise in this tone, I can speak as loudly and as emphatically—I will prosecute these men with all the liberality of a gentleman, there is nothing has betrayed improper passion on my part, but no tone or manner shall put me down.

Mr. Erskine. I am not accusing Mr. Law of any impropriety or illiberality of conduct at all; I have said nothing to that effect; for the only time in which I have named his name, or hinted at it, I have spoken of him with respect; nothing can be interpreted to the contrary: but a man, if he is not made of stone, must have some feelings in a case of this sort. In whatever way your Lordship may rule this point, I shall be satisfied; I might have asked your Lordship's opinion early, but the same reason that induced your den be at this day law, how many innocent men, under a state prosecution, without any previous knowledge of the jurymen and their political partialities, may upon the PERJURY of a single witness, be thus sent to prison for the rest of their days? and where are the benefits of the acts of William and Anne, if they are to be evaded, under a precedent established before those acts were passed, in the most infamous times, and by the most iniquitous of judges?

† It seems not a little extraordinary that the ATTORNEY GENERAL for the County Palatine of Lancaster should pray to let the fact be found, upon a special verdict—that is, in other words, to let Dunn's evidence be admitted as true, though even in this stage of the trial, it had been positively disproved by so many respectable witnesses, and Dunn was (while in court) committed by the Judge for PERJURY. The defendants would by this means, have subjected themselves to be punished, as if they had been actually guilty of the crime they were accused of, although they were perfectly innocent of every part of the charge, and were in consequence HONOURABLY ACQUITTED.

Lordship so liberally and graciously not to communicate your own opinion, governed me.

Mr. Justice Heath. You wish it to go to the Jury.

Mr. Erskine. Yes I most certainly do.

Mr. Walker. I am before my country, and I will go to the Jury. In our situation, even the delay of justice, would be the height of injustice.

Mr. Law. I cannot find it standing upon any authority, but a case in Dyer.

Mr. Justice Heath. It has been always held that the misdemeanour is merged in the felony.

Mr. Erskine. When Mr. Law has heard the evidence out, for we have by no means done, if he should then think it becomes the Crown to go on, he will do so, and then let the point of law be reserved in any way most agreeable to your Lordship; but I will have the fact before the Jury.

Mr. Law. If it ends in your clients' exculpation, I shall be as happy as you; but I shall see that it does so.

Mr. William Seddon (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Erskine.

Q. Have you ever seen this man, Dunn, who has been examined to-day?

A. I have.

Q. How did it happen that you saw him?

A. Mr. Walker, Mr. Richard Walker, Mr. Duckworth, Mr. Jackson, and myself, were upon business at my house, on Tuesday the 18th of December last: I was particularly busy in my office preparing for the assizes, but I was desired to come out upon a matter of moment. When I came into the house, I was told by Mr. Walker _____

Q. Did Thomas Dunn come?

A. No, not to my house; I went down to Mr. Richard Walker's with Mr. Duckworth; I stayed there some time: when I came there, I understood Dunn was in the parlour with Mr. Walker, Mr. Richard Walker, Mr. Jones, and Mr. Ridgway.

Mr. Law. What is the paper you are referring to?

A. Notes I took down at the time. Mr. Duckworth, Mr. Jones the attorney, and Mr. Ridgway the attorney, were with me at Mr. Richard Walker's; but Mr. Ridgway and Mr. Jones were not present at any part of the conversation I am speaking to.

Mr. Erskine. Subsequent to this time, did Thomas Dunn, the man who has been examined to-day, come into the house?

A. He came the second time about eleven o'clock, Mr. Walker,

Walker, Mr. Duckworth, Mr. Richard Walker, and myself, were present—he knocked at the door, and came into the room; he first wanted to speak to Mr. Walker alone, or to Mr. Richard Walker: on being desired to speak, he repeatedly objected, and declared he would say nothing before so many witnesses; Mr. Walker told him he must speak before them, or not at all—he then desired Mr. Walker to sit along side of him, and he would esteem it an honour, and tell him every thing. Mr. Walker refused. Dunn then stood up, and desired Mr. Walker to give him his hand—I am just now informed that I said this happened on the 18th of December; if I did, I made a mistake, it was on the 18th of last month.

Q. Did you take these notes at the time?

A. I took down the latter part of the conversation, which I have not yet come to, from Dunn's own lips, I made a minute of this immediately after he was gone.

Mr. Erskine. Then I conceive, I am allowed to desire the witness, to look at that paper to refresh his memory.

Mr. Law. How soon afterwards did you put it down?

A. This part (the witness holding a paper in one hand) the moment he was gone; the other (shewing another paper) I took from his own lips. Dunn stood up, and desired Mr. Walker to give him his hand, and he should esteem it a greater honour than if George the third did. This Mr. Walker again refused, and told him he had sworn falsely against him; Dunn acknowledged he had, and that he had not had a quiet night for thirteen weeks. He then rose from his chair, and threw himself upon his knees, and seized both Mr. Walker's hands, and exclaimed with a great deal of emotion, "I have done you injustice, and I beg your pardon," he then cried excessively, and addressing himself to the defendant Mr. Walker, said "My heart is almost broken, I am unhappy; I have certainly done you wrong;" he then went down upon his knees to Mr. Walker again. Mr. Richard Walker then put this question to him, Who instigated you? Dunn replied, "I am afraid to tell that, I have not slept a contented night these thirteen weeks together, on your brother's account. Do not you know I wished him well? I have lodged an indictment against him, but it is a damn'd eternal falsehood." At this stage of the business he again cried very much, threw himself down upon a table, and was in an apparent agony for about ten minutes. When he recovered he seemed very composed and sedate, much more so than he was before. As soon as he lifted his head from the table, (after he had done crying) Mr. Thomas Walker asked him if he did not feel easier? to which he made no particular ular answer, but said, "The charge was taken down wrong at Manchester." Mr. Richard Walker then put this question to him, "How could you, when you say you wished my brother so well, be prevailed upon to accuse him so wrongfully?" to which Dunn answered, "that's a very cross question." The same question was put again by Mr. Richard Walker, to which Dunn said, "I want Mr. Walker to forgive me, and I will do him justice hereafter. I wish you would get a constable to take me up, and let me be tried." Mr. Walker then said, "you admit you have done me an injury?" to which Dunn replied, "yes, I have, every person knows it, except Yorke. What I swore in my first examination, and at Lancaster, were very different, not at all alike. I was called before the Grand Jury three times; I will never go to Lancaster at the assizes, and let Griffith and the rest of them do as they please, and be damned." Mr. Richard Walker repeated this question to him, "Who instigated you to do wrong?" Dunn said, "I won't answer such questions." I then asked him what day he had charged the offence as committed? His answer to me was, "between the 28th and the 30th of January 1793." Dunn then, of his own accord, speaking to Mr. Walker, said, "What shall I say to you, I have done you an injury, and I am sorry, what can I say more." I then said to him, "who set you on?" Dunn answered, "I know I behaved ill, I WAS BRIBED TO IT, THAT IS PLUMP; but I won't tell who did it, that shall for ever rest in my own breast." After the above conversation was ended, which I took down verbatim, in question and answer, Dunn left the room.

Thomas Dunn called up again.

Mr. Justice Heath. Well, Dunn, you have heard this evidence; did that pass, or any part of it?

Dunn. No, nothing at all—yes, something of it passed.

Mr. Justice Heath. How much of it passed?

A. I went there when I was intoxicated, the same as I am now.

Mr. Law. Have you been out of the court?

A. Yes, I have.

Mr. Justice Heath. How long have you been intoxicated?

A. Not very long; I have my recollection about me, though it may seem to the court that I may be ill, or may not.

Mr. Justice Heath. Were you intoxicated when you gave your evidence just now?

A. I

A. I was not.

Mr. Justice Heath. You have been intoxicated since then?

A. Yes.

Mr. Law. How much of that conversation is true? there is some part you say is true.

A. I was at Mr. Walker's house about a fortnight hence; I went in to Mr. Walker; I was brought in by a constable of Manchester, and upon that I met Mr. Richard Walker, brother to Mr. Thomas Walker.

Q. What is the constable's name?

A. One Twiss. Mr. Richard Walker asked me, Dunn, don't you recollect that you have done an injury to my brother? or to that purpose; well, says I, upon the first examination I lodged the first indictment against him.

Mr. Justice Heath. Has any body been with you, while you were out?

A. No.

Mr. Erskine. I should be glad to trace where he has been—I don't believe he has been out of court.

Mr. Justice Heath. Where have you been?

A. I have been down the town.

Mr. Serjeant Cockell. He was told to stay in court.

Mr. Justice Heath. Where did you dine?

A. Below the change; I don't know the house.

Mr. Justice Heath. Is it a house you frequented before?

A. Yes.

Mr. Erskine. Who dined with you?

A. The man's name is Foster.

Q. Any body else?

A. Yes, Mr. Sidebottom,

Q. Who else?

A. Nobody.

Q. Who are Sidebottom and Foster*?

Mr. Law. You say Mr. Seddon and Mr. Duckworth were by at Seddon's house?

A. No, he was at Mr. Walker's; all that passed, was this; he brought me, this Twiss, he intended to take me in, and to bribe me over; he gave me some money upon it, on Mr. Walker's account, drunk or sober I will speak the truth?

Mr. Justice Heath. I don't know how we can examine a man that is drunk.

Mr. Law. What was you to do for that money?

A. To go out of the way, and not appear here at these assizes.

Q. Did

* Foster and Sidebottom were in the list of witnesses for the Crown, delivered in Court at the commencement of the trial, by the attornies for the prosecution.

Q. Did you beg Mr. Walker to sit along side of you, and say you would esteem it as great an honour as if George the third did?

A. I never said that, upon my oath.

Mr. Justice Heath. How can you Mr. Law examine him, after he has told you he is intoxicated? He has made himself so exceedingly drunk, it is impossible to examine him.

Mr. Erskine. He denied positively he had ever been at Mr. Walker's, or was ever lured by any body to make a confession.

Mr. Law. Did you ever confess that the charge you made against Mr. Walker, was unfounded and false?

A. Never.

Mr. Erskine. Then what this gentleman has said, is false, is it?

A. I do not know, when was that?

Mr. Seddon. On the 18th of March.

Mr. Law. Did Twiss bring you there upon that occasion?

Dunn. Yes.

Q. Is he in any employ for Mr. Walker?

Dunn. He was employed five months upon this business.

Mr. Erskine. Hear this read over, and stand up, and remember you are in the presence of God.

(Mr. William Seddon read his notes again.)

Mr. Erskine. Is that true?

A. No, I never entered into any part of the house, only the door, and which was just opened for me.

Mr. Erskine. Mr. Seddon is swearing falsely, is he?

A. I cannot tell what he may do; he is swearing false, if he swears that.

Mr. Erskine. Did you go down on your knees, and cry for ten minutes?

A. You may as well tell me that I am a woman.

Q. Did you do that?

A. No, all he asked me, all I told him was this—Did not you lodge an information, so and so, and some particular words; you were drunk; I said, I will correct it next morning, that is all that ever happened.

Q. You never said, you had wronged Mr. Walker, and went down upon your knees?

A. I never did.

Mr.

Mr. Duckworth (called again).

Cross-examined by Mr. Law.

Q. Was you present, when this man, Dunn, answered the questions put to him, in the manner Mr. Seddon has sworn just now?

A. I was.

Q. To the best of your memory and recollection, is the account that Mr. Seddon has given of it, the truth?

A. I looked it over, and it agreed with Mr. Walker's, Mr. Richard Walker's, and my recollection.

Mr. Duckworth.

Re-examined by Mr. Erskine.

Q. I ask you—(though the attorney for Mr. Walker, you are a Christian, I trust)—I ask you in the presence of God Almighty, is it true or false?

A. It is true.

Mr. Duckworth.

Cross-examined by Mr. Law.

Q. How came you all there, and how came Twiss to bring this man?

A. Mr. Thomas Walker and I had gone up to Mr. Seddon's. Mr. Jackson I think was there when I went in. Mr. Seddon was in his office. When we had been there a few minutes, Mr. Richard Walker came in, and said a message had been sent to his house, that Dunn wanted to go to Barlow, to see his brother Mr. Walker: we agreed that Mr. Jones and Mr. Ridgway junior, who had nothing to do with the prosecution, should be requested to be present to hear what passed. Mr. Seddon and I followed after.

Q. Do you think it professionally proper, when you knew that an indictment was found upon the testimony of this witness, and that he was to be the witness to sustain it at the next assizes, for you two, the attorneys for the defendant, to have him alone with you, without any person on his behalf, and to examine him in this manner?

A. We thought it fitter that he should say what he chose to say, in the presence of some other person, than Mr. Seddon and myself; and, therefore, we desired Mr. Jones and Mr. Ridgway, two gentlemen of unimpeachable character, to be present. I did believe Dunn had perjured himself, from the knowledge I had of the cause; therefore,
I thought

I thought it right, that what he chose to say, as a confession of his guilt, should be heard. When Mr. Jones, and Mr. Ridgway, had heard what he had to say, and had been gone from Mr. Richard Walker's about half an hour, there was a knock at the door, Dunn came in again alone, then Mr. Seddon and I, from necessity, and not from choice, went into the room.

Q. Had Mr. Jones and Mr. Ridgway taken his examination?

A. They had about half an hour before this time.

Mr. Erskine. Did you send for this man?

A. No.

Q. Did you employ any body to bring him to you?

A. No.

Q. But when a man had sworn falsely against Mr. Walker, you thought it right to hear his confession of his guilt?

A. I did—I thought he had perjured himself.

Q. Dunn says, that Twiss does work for Mr. Walker?

A. I never heard that he did.

Mr. Walker. Dunn said, Twiss was employed by me in this business.

Mr. Law. A man who is your fustian-cutter, is employed by you.

John Spink (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Serjeant Cockell.

Q. Have you any acquaintance with Mr. Thomas Walker?

A. I have none at all.

Q. He is a gentleman who is a perfect stranger to you.

A. Yes, I only know him by sight.

Q. Have you any acquaintance or connection with him?

A. None at all.

Q. Do you know a man of the name of John Twiss?

A. Yes.

Q. I understand he and you are neighbours?

A. We are.

Q. Did you happen on the 18th of March 1794, to go to Twiss's?

A. I did.

Q. Was that matter of accident?

A. It was an accident.

Q. Who did you find at the house of Twiss?

A. I found Thomas Dunn.

Q. That man behind you?

A. Yes.

Q. Be

Q. Be so good as to relate what passed at that time.

A. Dunn said, he was sorry that he had injured Mr. Walker's character in the manner he had done; that he had never seen any thing that was bad by him. He asked me to go to Barlow-Hall with him that night, to see Mr. Walker.

Q. Did that request come from him to you?

A. It did; I told him I would not go with him at that time of night, but if he chose, I would go with him the next day; he said, no, he would see Mr. Walker before he slept; I said, he had better send to see whether Mr. Walker was in town, or not, to save him the labour of going. Esther Ottey went to see whether Mr. Walker was at home; she went to Mr. Thomas Walker's house in town, the servant told her he was in town, but he was gone out to tea and supper; when she came back, Dunn desired Esther Ottey and me to go to Mr. Richard Walker's, and see if he was at home.

Q. Did you, or did Twiss at this time, force the conversation, or was it entirely from himself?

A. He said it voluntarily of himself.

Q. Did you draw him on by any thing?

A. Not at all ———

Mr. Erskine. Speak up.

One of the Jury. It does not signify, we have been satisfied a long while.

A. I went out with Esther Ottey, to Mr. Richard Walker's; he said, if Thomas Dunn wanted to see him, he might come up in the course of half an hour, and he would let his brother know. I suppose he did let him know. Esther Ottey went up to see if he was come in half an hour. He was not at home, she waited a little time,—then we took Dunn there, John Twiss and me, and left him at Mr. Richard Walker's door.

Q. Was he carried in custody at all?

A. No, he desired us to go with him.

Q. And you went and left him at Mr. Richard Walker's?

A. Yes.

Q. What time in the evening was this?

A. About nine o'clock, as near as I can guess; it might be half an hour before, or half an hour after.

Q. Did you observe, during the conversation you have been relating, whether Dunn appeared to be cool or was agitated?

A. He seemed very much to want to go.

Q. Did he appear to be much moved?

A. He seemed to be very much affected for doing what he had done—he seemed to relent.

Q. Was

Q. Was you in company, or did you see Dunn upon the 28th of March?

A. No, I saw him on the 20th.

Q. At what time of day?

A. About five o'clock.

Q. What passed then?

A. He was in at John Twiss's again, Twiss sent for me in, Dunn said he had seen Mr. Kinnaston, and he had challenged him with being acquainted with John Twiss, which he said he denied.

Q. Did you see whether he had cried; or observe any thing of that sort?

A. Yes, I saw tears in his eyes several times.

John Spink.

Cross-examined by Mr. Wood.

Q. You don't know how long he had been at Twiss's, when you found him there on the 18th of March?

A. No.

Q. Nor how much liquor he had drunk?

A. No, I do not.

A. Do you know whether he had drank any?

A. He had had a little, but he was quite sensible; he knew what he was saying and doing.

Q. Just as much as he knows now?

A. He was not half so much in liquor then as he is now.

Q. How came Twiss to have him in his care?

A. I suppose Dunn came to seek Twiss.

Q. What connection has Twiss with Mr. Walker?

A. I do not know that he has any.

Q. Is not he a workman of Mr. Walker's?

A. I dare say he is.

Q. How long had he been after this man to get hold of him?

A. I cannot tell any thing about it.

Q. When you saw him again, he was with Mr. Walker's clerk?

A. On the 19th Dunn said Kinnaston had challenged him with being with Mr. Walker's clerk.

Q. Was he with Mr. Walker's clerk then?

A. He was; but I was not there till late in the evening.

Q. Was he drunk then?

A. No, as sober as I am now.

Q. Was it late?

A. It was about nine o'clock.

Q. He did not appear to have drank any thing?

A. He

A. He might have had some drink, but he was perfectly sober.

John Twiss (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Chambre.

Q. You live at Manchester, don't you?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you one of the special constables of Manchester?

A. Yes.

Q. There have been several appointed within the town, two hundred, or thereabouts, I believe?

A. I do not know just the number.

Q. Do you know Dunn the witness, that has been examined?

A. I know this man Thomas Dunn.

Q. Were you with him on the 18th of March?

A. I was.

Q. How happened you to come together on that day?

A. Thomas Dunn called at my house; I was lying on the bed; I was sick; he came, and said he had a shilling to spend.

Q. You did not take him into custody?

A. No.

Q. It is not usual, is it, for people to come to a special constable for the purpose of being taken into custody?

A. I went along with him to Welch's; he began reflecting upon his bad conduct—that he had used Mr. Walker very ill.

Q. Did he begin of his own accord?

A. Yes, he did; he repeatedly said, he had used Mr. Walker very ill, that he was sorry for it, and would ask Mr. Walker pardon. I said, if thou hast used him ill, thou had better ask his pardon in the public news-paper.

Q. Did he express any desire to see Mr. Walker?

A. Yes, he did, and he would see him, and he wanted me to go to Barlow-Hall with him, and he would pay my expences.

Q. How far is Barlow-Hall from Manchester?

A. I do not know—I was never there.—I said it was rather too late; if he would content himself, I would go with him in the morning.

Q. Was Spink with you at that time?

A. Spink was in my house, we came from Welch's; Spink came into my house, he desired Spink likewise to go along with him.

Q. Did you ever give him any money, or make him any promises, to induce him to say any thing upon the subject?

O

A. Never

A. Never a farthing in my days but otherwise—I told him I would not, I never gave him a halfpenny in my life; I lent him thirteen shillings at different times—part of the money before I knew any thing about Mr. Walker's affair, that was on the 20th of October last, on a Sunday night; I lent it to him and Sidebottom, and they went and spent it; it was of a Sunday night.

Q. After that time, did you ever lend him any thing?

A. I lent him nine shillings since.

Q. When was the last time you lent him any money?

A. The last time was the 21st of March.

Q. How long before the 18th of March, had you lent him money?

A. I had never lent him a halfpenny, but four shillings.

Q. Had you lent him any thing between the 20th of October, and the 18th of March?

A. Not a halfpenny, nor never promised him any thing.

Q. You did not go with him to Barlow that night?

A. No—Dunn proposed to Esther Ottey, to go and see if Mr. Walker was at home—I was not taking every notice in the world. I think she said, I saw Mr. Walker in the town to-day, had not somebody better go and see if he is in Manchester; he desired her to go, she went, when she came back the information to the best of my knowledge was, she said Mr. Walker is gone out to supper, and it will be late before he returns. Upon this Dunn was determined he would see him he said before he slept; he sent her a second time, to go to Mr. Richard Walker, and John Spink and she went to the best of my knowledge; they returned back, and told him Mr. Richard Walker was at home, and Spink and me might bring him up; we went and brought him up, and left him at the door.

Q. Was all this done entirely upon his own solicitation, and at his own request?

A. Upon my oath it was at his own request, not one word of interrogation.

Q. Had you ever any sort of conversation with Mr. Thomas Walker?

A. I never spoke to Mr. Thomas Walker since he was born, but at one time; there was a fire at a new building at the bottom of Bridge-street. I did not see a constable, or any one assisting but myself. The gentlemen were beating up for the marine corps. Mr. Thomas Walker and Mr. Richard Walker came up, and a brutish kind of a man knock'd another man down in the sludge. Mr. Thomas Walker said to me, "do you know that man?" "I do not, "sir." That is every word I ever changed with Mr. Thomas Walker in my life.

Mr.

Mr. Erskine (to Dunn). What Do you say to this now?
Thomas Dunn. I say it is false, every word of it.

John Twiss.

Cross-examined by Mr. Topping.

Q. You are, I believe, a fustian-cutter of Mr. Walker's?

A. By business, I am.

Q. How long have you worked for Mr. Walker?

A. I worked for Mr. Walker—that is, I work for Esther Ottey, and she has had work from that house for about six years.

Q. You was saying something about the ninth of January?

A. I have not told you aught about it yet.

Q. Was you with Dunn upon the ninth of January?

A. I was.

Q. Where?

A. At the White Bear, opposite the Infirmary; from thence we took a walk to Pendleton Pole.

Q. You was with him upon the ninth of January?

A. Yes, and the eighth likewise.

Q. Had you been drinking with him at both these public-houses?

A. On the eighth I drank share of a pint of porter, and left him.

Q. How came you to be seeking his company, upon the eighth and ninth?

A. He fell into my company on the eighth; I had been at Liverpool, and delivered a message from Luke Foster, and that was the reason I saw him.

Q. Upon the 20th of October, or thereabouts, you had lent this man some money?

A. Four shillings.

Q. Had you any manner of knowledge of Dunn?

A. Seeing him last assizes here.

Q. And yet, upon the 20th of October, you lent him money?

A. Yes, I did; I have lent many a four shillings to different people.

Q. Having no knowledge of him, but what you had at the last assizes here, you lent him four shillings upon the 20th of October?

A. Peter Sidebottom was in company with me.

Q. You say you was at Liverpool; did not Dunn go from Manchester to Liverpool with you?

A. Not with me.

Q. You went after him?

A. No.

A. No.

Q. Will you swear, you never went to Liverpool after Dunn?

A. At what time?

Q. Will you swear you never went to Liverpool after Dunn?

A. I have been there after him, within these eight days—with a subpoena in my pocket to subpoena him.

Q. You was with him drinking upon the 8th and 9th of January?

A. Yes.

Q. Upon the 18th of March you was again with him at Welch's?

A. Yes; I told you he called upon me, and I went off the bed with him.

Q. Who was in company with you at Welch's?

A. John Spink, and me, and one James Stott.

Q. When you was with Dunn at this public house, do you remember Mr. Walker's clerk, Moses Eadon, coming?

A. I do, but not upon the 18th.

Q. Was that upon the 19th?

A. Yes.

Q. And the 20th too, I believe, you were drinking together?

A. I never saw him before the close of the evening of the 20th, when he came to our house.

Q. Was Moses Eadon, Mr. Walker's clerk, with you upon the 18th, or not till the 19th?

A. Upon the 19th.

Q. Upon Eadon's coming in, did not Eadon go into another room, and did not you tip Dunn upon the shoulder, and desire he would go with you into another room?

A. I did.

Q. How much liquor had you together at this public house upon the 19th?

A. At this time we had had very little.

Q. How much money was spent, before you parted?

A. I cannot possibly tell.

Q. Don't you know, that fourteen or fifteen shillings was spent by Mr. Walker's clerk, at this meeting upon the 19th?

Q. Mr. Walker's clerk never paid a penny to my knowledge—I paid most of it.

Q. You treated Dunn, did you?

A. I paid the shot, and treated him.

Q. How much did you pay?

A. I cannot tell to a shilling or two.

Q. Was it twenty shillings?

A. No,

- A. No.
- Q. Was it fifteen shillings?
- A. I cannot say.
- Q. Was it above half a guinea?
- A. It was.
- Q. Was it not fifteen shillings?
- A. It might be for what I know, I cannot tell.
- Q. Did not you tell Dunn, you wished he would get out of the way, till the assizes were over?
- A. Never, no such matter.
- Q. You swear, that at no time you ever told Dunn, you wished he would get out of the way, till the assizes were over?
- A. Never in my days—I wished otherwise.
- Q. Do you mean to swear upon your oath, that you did not advise him to remain at Preston?
- A. I did not; he said, he would go to Preston, for he said, he would not be subpœna'd by any party; of all things, I said, you will stand forth at the trial; he said, I will, but I will not be subpœna'd by any party.
- Q. Upon the 19th of March he told you he would not be subpœna'd by any body?
- A. That was on the 20th, and he said the same on the 21st in the morning.
- Q. When did you lend him this other money?
- A. I lent him one part on Wednesday night, somewhere about the 19th, and he had the remaining part some on Thursday, and the remaining part on the Friday morning.
- Q. How much has he had in the whole from you?
- A. Thirteen shillings, from the first to the last.
- Q. And all this, after this meeting at Welch's, the Hare and Hounds?
- A. No, he had only nine shillings then.
- Q. Have you never received from any person whatever, either the money that you spent at the Hare and Hounds, or the money you lent Dunn?
- A. I have not upon my oath.
- Q. Nor no promise?
- A. Nor no promise of any thing. Dunn promised he would pay me my money back again.
- Q. You never had, from any other person living, a promise of re-payment of the money lent?
- A. No, never.
- Q. Have you never received any money back that you spent?
- A. No, never, from man, woman, nor child.
- Q. Mr. Erskine (to Mr. Duckworth). When you heard that it was reported, that this Dunn had run away, and was was not coming to the assizes, did you take any step in consequence?

A. I had heard he was gone to Preston, and would stay there till the assizes. We were much afraid he would run off. I went to Preston to desire Mr. Cross, the prothonotary, would devise some means of keeping him in his custody by a bailiff, or in some other manner. Mr. Cross would not do that, but advised me to subpoena Dunn; we sued out a subpoena, and endeavoured to serve him with it. Mr. Twiss was sent to Liverpool, to endeavour to subpoena him there. He could not be found. It had been reported that we had bribed Dunn to keep out of the way.

Mr. Justice Heath. I cannot think there is much in the thirteen shillings, for if Dunn was so corrupt that thirteen shillings would influence his testimony, his credit is not worth much.

Mr. Jones (sworn).

Examined by Mr. Lloyd.

Q. Was you at Mr. Walker's on the 18th of March?

A. I was.

Q. Was Dunn, the man who stands behind you, there?

A. Yes, he was, he came soon after I got there.

Q. Did you hear him say, he had sworn true or false, against Mr. Walker? what did he say about Mr. Walker?

A. When he first came into the room, he seemed as if he was rather intoxicated. I thought he reeled across, from the door towards the window; he sat himself down, and in a little time a question was proposed, I think by myself; Whether he had not something to say to Mr. Walker? he said, he had wronged Mr. Walker. I asked him in what manner he had wronged Mr. Walker? he said, he had accused him falsely. Immediately as he said that, he fell down upon his knees, and begged his pardon. Mr. Walker desired him to get up. Several other questions were put to him, in what manner he had falsely sworn against Mr. Walker, he did not give any answer to them.

Q. Was he brought into the room by force, or did he appear of his own free-will?

A. I understood he came of his own free-will; he knocked at the door, and was introduced into the room; he said, HE HAD BEEN BRIBED TO DO WHAT HE HAD DONE.

Q. Did he seem affected—was he in tears?

A. He seemed very much agitated when he entered the room. I asked Dunn, who had bribed him, he would not give me an answer to that question.

Mr.

Mr. Jones.

Cross-examined by Mr. Law.

Q. Was Mr. Twiss, the constable, there?

A. He was not there. The persons present in the room, when I was there, were Mr. Walker, Mr. Richard Walker, Mr. Ridgway the attorney, myself, and Dunn.

Q. I only wanted to know whether Twiss was there; you need not mention who were there, for the purpose of confirming what you say. Did he seem to you, so far recollected at the time he talked with you, as to be aware of the import of what he was saying?

A. Yes, I thought he was, perfectly.

Q. Did he specify any particulars, in which he had accused Mr. Walker falsely?

A. He did not; I asked him that question; he did not give an answer to it; he seemed very desirous of communicating what he had to say to Mr. Walker alone; he seemed very loth to say any thing to any questions put to him, while Mr. Ridgway and I were there; he frequently desired that Mr. Walker and he might confer together; Mr. Walker did not choose to trust himself with him alone.

Q. You have no sort of doubt in your recollection, that Dunn used those words that he had accused Mr. Walker falsely?

A. He did.

Q. Was there any conversation, respecting the indictment that was depending at Lancaster at that time?

A. I did not hear any thing said about an indictment. There was a question put to Dunn, either by Mr. Walker or Mr. Ridgway, I believe, by Mr. Ridgway, whether he had ever heard Mr. Walker damn the King? he said, he never had, he had heard him speak disrespectfully of him. I asked him in what manner he had spoken disrespectfully of him? but to that question he gave no answer.

Q. Was there any mention made at that time, of any assemblies held at the house of Mr. Walker, for the purpose of exercising with arms?

A. Not a syllable.

Q. Was any thing said of Mr. Yorke being at Mr. Walker's? be so good as tell me all that passed at that meeting?

A. There was a question asked about Mr. Yorke; it was asked by Dunn himself—instead of directly answering Mr. Walker's questions, he seemed to evade them by putting the question whether Mr. Yorke had been in town or no? or whether he had seen him within a few days? Mr. Walker did not give him any answer to that question.

Q. Nothing

Q. Nothing was said then about Yorke's having been at the meeting at Mr. Walker's house?

A. No.

Q. How long might Dunn be with you in the whole?

A. I fancy he was about twenty minutes, or half an hour in the room—the questions I have mentioned, were frequently put to him,

Q. Did you take any thing down in writing of what passed?

A. I did that night when I got home.

Q. Have you a minute of it?

A. I have.

Q. Be so good as to let me look at that minute; it is not from any doubt of your giving me the best of your recollection, I wish to see it for another purpose.

(Mr. Jones gave Mr. Law his minutes.)

You mention here, I see, that you went with Mr. Richard Walker, Dunn was soon introduced—by whom was he introduced?

A. I think Mr. Richard Walker shewed him into the room, if I recollect right; somebody knocked at the door very soon after we got there; I understood it was Dunn; he came immediately into the room.

Q. Who introduced him.

A. I think Mr. Richard Walker opened the door when Dunn came into the room. I was doubtful towards the end of the business, whether he was drunk, or only feigned to be so; for towards the latter end of it he appeared more steady, and seemed perfectly collected in every thing he said; he was particularly urgent with Mr. Walker to be alone with him. Finding that could not be obtained, he wished to be with the two Walkers; that was refused; then he desired he might be with Mr. Richard Walker alone, which was also refused, and Mr. Walker peremptorily told him he would not suffer himself to be in his company alone. The man seemed very much vexed at it and he came out with a threat upon the occasion; he said Mr. Walker would repent of it, for it would be a damn'd deal worse for him, let him bring as many witnesses as he would.

Mr. Erskine. Mr. Thomas Dunn, is this true or false?

A. False.

Q. This gentleman is perjured then—it is all false?

A. Yes.

Mr. Law. I know the character of several of the gentlemen who have been examined, particularly Mr. Jones; I cannot expect one witness alone, unconfirmed, to stand against the testimony of these witnesses; I ought not to expect it.

Mr.

Mr. Justice Heath. You act very properly, Mr. Law.
The Jury immediately gave their verdict NOT GUILTY.

Mr. Vaughan. I pray that Dunn may be committed.

Mr. Erskine. We will undertake to prosecute him for PERJURY.

Mr. Justice Heath. Let him be committed; and I hope, Mr. Walker, that this will be an admonition to you, to keep better company in future.

Mr. Walker. I have been in no bad company, my Lord, except in that of the wretch who stands behind me; nor is there a word or an action of my life, in which the public are at all interested, that I wish unsaid, or undone, or that under similar circumstances I would not repeat.

Mr. Justice Heath. You have been HONOURABLY ACQUITTED, Sir, and the witness against you is committed for PERJURY.

Immediately after the above verdict was given, the same jury was again impannelled, and sworn to try Mr. WALKER upon the separate indictment, charging him with damning the King, and saying, he would as soon take his head off, as tear a bit of paper.

Thomas Dunn, the only evidence for the CROWN on this indictment, having been committed for PERJURY, the Jury instantly returned their verdict, NOT GUILTY.

Mr. Walker had the most incontrovertible evidence to prove, he was in London at the time Dunn swore that the words laid in this indictment, were spoken by Mr. Walker in Manchester.

The jury were again impannelled and sworn to try JAMES CHEETHAM, upon the separate indictment against him, for damning the King, and wishing he was guillotined, but the witness for the CROWN, Mr. Dunn, having been committed for perjury, the jury IMMEDIATELY found the defendant NOT GUILTY.

No. I.

*Copy of Mr. Walker's first Letter to
Mr. Secretary Dundas.*

Bate's Hotel, 17 June, 1793.

Sir,

I have been for some time absent from home, on account of business which has required my presence in London. I find by my letters of last Saturday, (the contents of which are still more strongly confirmed by those of to-day) that a report has been industriously circulated in Manchester of a charge of HIGH TREASON, made against me, before the magistrates of that town.

I am extremely sorry to occupy your time with the frivolous rumours that idle and ignorant, or bigotted and malevolent people may amuse themselves with propagating at the expence of my character. But the report above mentioned is in itself so serious, and has been the topic of so much conversation at Manchester, that I think it right, in justice to myself, and to obviate any false construction which my enemies may put upon my absence from home, to inform you, Sir, that my residence is as abovementioned, and that I shall be not merely ready and willing, but desirous to meet any charge that may be made against me from whatever quarter it may proceed. I shall be upon change at the usual time almost every day this week, and I shall be this evening in the lobby of the House of Commons, or in the gallery there.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

your most obedient servant,

*Copy of Mr. Walker's second Letter to
Mr. Secretary Dundas.*

Bate's Hotel, 22d June, 1793.

Sir,

In consequence of repeated advice from Manchester of warrants for HIGH TREASON having been issued against me, I thought it right to inform you by letter on Monday last, that I resided during my stay in town, at Bate's Hotel, and that I should be at the House of Commons on that evening, and on change at the usual hours almost every day of the week. I have kept my promise.

I confess I am somewhat surprized, under all the circumstances of my situation, that I have not been favored with an answer to that letter, but had the business rested there, I should probably have troubled you no further.

By a letter, however, from my attorney in Manchester, sent yesterday under cover to a friend of mine, I learn officially that a warrant upon a charge of HIGH TREASON has certainly been issued against me at Manchester, and I have every reason to suppose (if my information be true) that the intent of the charge in the first instance, and the subsequent delay in proceeding upon it, is not to punish me for a political offence, of which I know I am not guilty, but to injure my general character and reputation; indirectly indeed, but irrevocably.

The character and credit of a commercial man, Sir, is too delicate to be trifled with. Hitherto mine has been unsullied; and I trust it will remain so by any conduct of my own. But the principle of harassing a British merchant by vague reports, industriously circulated, of crimes he has never committed; by charges unfounded, and threats unexecuted, is so base, so detestably malignant, that I hope, for the honour of the national character, it is confined to my enemies at Manchester.

It is highly improbable that any charge of so criminal a nature, can have been made against me, without its being known at the office of his Majesty's secretary of state. I do, therefore, earnestly entreat, that I may be kept no longer in suspense; that I may be treated forthwith according to law, if there be any legal accusation against me, or if there be none, that I may be informed of it without delay. I think I have a right, after what has passed, to require as an act of common justice, that my mind may be set at ease, and that I may be enabled to attend to my commercial concerns, without the perpetual anxiety attendant upon reports and suspicions most injurious and unfounded.

Mr. Wharton will do me the favour to deliver this, and wait for an answer*.

In the mean time I am,

Dear Sir,

I have no doubt you will be much surprized, when I inform you, that I am still without any answer to the letter you did me the honour to take to Mr. Dundas (as secretary of state for the home department) upon the 22d ult. and several of my friends, being not less surprized than myself at the silence of Mr. Dundas, are anxious to know what passed between you and him upon the delivery of my letter. I shall, therefore, consider myself particularly obliged, if you will favour me, as nearly as you can recollect, with the substance of the conversation which took place on that occasion.

With much respect and esteem believe me,

Dear Sir,
very sincerely your's,

Copy of Mr. Wharton's Answer to Mr. Walker.

Dear Sir,

I am much surprized to find that you have not yet heard from the secretary of state's office in reply to the letter I delivered from you to Mr. Dundas, on the 22d ult. The conversation that passed between us on that occasion, you desire that I should repeat to you; it is impossible for me to undertake to do it verbatim; but the substance was, that I presented the letter at your request, in consequence of your not having received any reply to one of a similar purport, that you had written to him on the preceding Monday; and that being kept in a state of suspense on a subject of so serious a nature, was highly injurious to you as an Englishman and a merchant.—Mr. Dundas read the letter, and said that it was impossible for him to make any other reply to it than this, that he had received serious and criminal charges against you; that he had consequently taken such steps as his official duty required, to have those charges investigated, and that I might assure you, that no official delay should arise, and that when any determination was taken respecting them, you should be apprized of it. I said you wished for nothing more than a speedy determination on the steps to be taken, and that you did not wish to escape the justice of your country, if you had offended it; and I added, that you had accompanied me to his office, and that I was ready to deliver up the culprit, if he considered you as such, immediately; but I apprehended that upon a full investigation of the charges against you, it would appear that personal enmity to you, and jealousy of your commercial connections, had instigated persons who had failed in their attempts to injure you commercially, to make this attempt to take away your life; Mr. Dundas said it was very possible that there might be low and personal motives for the prosecution, and that he (from every thing he had heretofore heard or known of you) had too good an opinion of your understanding, to suppose you would subject yourself to the penalties of high treason. I then thanked him for his candour and politeness, and took my leave,

I shall

I shall be very happy to hear from you, if any thing further is done in this business, and remain,

Dear Sir,
with great regard, your's, very sincerely,

Copy of a third Letter from Mr. Walker, to Mr. Secretary Dundas.

Bate's Hotel, 29th July 1793.

Sir,

From Mr. Wharton's account of the conversation that passed between you and him, on his delivering to you my letter of the 22d ult. I was induced to expect an early intimation of the intended proceedings against me, or of their having been relinquished. I should be much surprized that no decision had yet taken place on this business, if I were not conscious that the more strictly the accusations were investigated, the more futile they would appear.

My business in London will occupy me till Sunday next, when I shall set out for Lancashire, unless some notice from the office of his Majesty's secretaries of state should detain me longer in town.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,
your most obedient servant,

(signed) THOMAS WALKER.

The Right Honble. Henry Dundas, his Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Home Department,
&c. &c.

Mr.

Mr. Walker not having received an answer from Mr. Dundas to any of his three letters, and judging that Mr. Dundas's testimony might be essential, directed him to be subpœnaed to appear as a witness on this trial at Lancaster. The following are copies of two subpœnas with which Mr. Dundas was served, together with the copies of two letters, the one from Messrs. Ward, Dennetts and Greaves, agents to Messrs. Duckworth and Dennett, and the other from Mr. White, solicitor to the treasury, to Messrs. Ward, Dennetts and Greaves, upon this subject.

On Thursday July 18th 1793, I went to the Rev. John Griffith's house a little before ten in the morning, accompanied by Mr. William Seddon, but finding Mr. Griffith was gone to church, we waited in the church-yard till he came out, when Mr. Seddon told him we wanted to speak to him, on which Mr. Griffith took us into a public house in the church-yard, where Mr. Seddon informed him that as we understood he had granted a warrant against Mr. Walker, we came to let him know that Mr. Walker was in London, and where he was to be met with; that he (Mr. Griffith) might get the same served upon him there. Mr. Griffith replied, *that there certainly was a warrant signed by him against Mr. Thomas Walker, for HIGH TREASON, and when he came home, it would be put in force; that there had been a person waiting in the MARKET PLACE * to apprehend him, at a time when it was reported he was returned home, that Unite, a deputy constable, had either been at Barlow or in the neighbourhood, as it was said Mr. Walker had been there, and that he had also been seen in Manchester.* I told him it was perfectly untrue; that my brother had never been out of London or the neighbourhood, since he first went up; Mr. Griffith said "I do not hesitate to declare that as the matter now stands we cannot convict either Mr. Paul or any other person of high treason as we have only one witness at present." I then read him the annexed paper, and gave him my brother's address on a card, in my brother's own hand writing. Mr. Griffith said, he did not see why he should act out of his own district, and that I had better give the card to Unite, who had the warrant, and might do as he pleased; I replied, I should have nothing to do with Unite, or any such people, that he (Mr. Griffith) had declared he had granted a warrant for my brother's apprehension, and therefore I left the card with him. He persisted in saying, he saw no reason for his acting; Mr. Seddon replied, he thought if Mr. Walker had really been guilty of HIGH TREASON, he ought to have been taken up, or to be so immediately, wherever he was, and prosecuted at the expence of the public. Mr. Griffith said, he did not see that; he had sent copies of the informations to government, and could not tell why they did not act, and why they seemed to wish to throw the business on a country justice. Mr. Seddon declared he thought it very strange, and a most malevolent piece of business throughout, and observed, that had a warrant been issued against any person on a charge of bastardy, he (Mr. Griffith) would have taken care to have it backed, and the person apprehended at the charge of the parish. Mr. Griffith replied, "that would be for the security of the parish." Mr. Seddon said, "true, and this being on a charge of high treason, is for the security of the kingdom, and ought to be at the expence of the publick." Mr. Griffith still said, they had only ly one witness; on which I remarked, that with all the pains which it was reported he, the Rev. Mr. Griffith, had taken, it was surprizing he could not get another witness as good as the one they had, but that I thought no candid or dispassionate person was at a loss to what motive to attribute the present proceedings. I also mentioned my brother's having given notice to Mr. Dundas, of his being in London.

The Rev. Mr. Griffith said, "that so far from his acting " in London, was he there, and had a sufficient acquaintance " with Mr. Thomas Walker, he should not think it unjustifiable or improper to call on him at his own hotel, and " dine with him." On which Mr. Seddon said, What! DINE WITH A TRAITOR! and I added, and one against whom you yourself have issued a warrant for his apprehension! he replied, "I mean as a private gentleman;" we both repeated, would you dine with a TRAITOR?"

Mr. Griffith then said, it was not incumbent on him to take any steps to apprehend Mr. Thomas Walker out of his own neighbourhood, on which Mr. Seddon observed, that the warrant being for conspiring or compassing the death of the King, as he (Mr. Griffith) had acknowledged, and Mr. Thomas Walker being in London so near the King's person, he might more easily have an opportunity of putting his wicked intentions into execution, but that a traitor ought to be taken into custody wherever he was, as soon as possible; and I said it shewed little regard for the safety of the King's person, to suffer those who were accused of conspiring against his life, to be at large so near him without interruption.

The Rev. Mr. Griffith also declared, that Unite had followed Mrs. Jackson's Funeral to have apprehended Mr. Jackson, had he followed her to the grave; that he wished Unite not to interrupt the ceremony, as he thought it would be rather indelicate, but to follow Mr. Jackson, and take him up as he returned home, or at his own house. Mr. Griffith also said, he was persuaded that treason had been actually committed at Mr. Walker's house, but that Mr. Walker was not present at the time. I replied, that was not the fact, for neither my brother, nor I, had any connection with people guilty of treason. Mr. Griffith said, it had been reported he had an indemnity from government for what he had done, but that was not the case.

Mr. Seddon mentioned Mr. Paul's treatment, and Mr. Griffith's having refused a copy of the information, and the reports which had been so shamefully spread, respecting different people being apprehended here for high treason, and that the matter ought certainly to be brought to a conclusion. After repeating the general purport of the paper alluded alluded to, and Mr. Griffith again declaring that he should give the card to Unite, who might act as he thought proper, we left him.

I again went on the 31st of July, with Mr. Birch and Mr. Sanderson, to Mr. Griffith and gave him notice in their presence that my brother would be at Lancaster at the ensuing assizes.

On the 5th of August I again informed Mr. Griffith, that my brother would be in Manchester on the Thursday, or Friday following; Mr. Griffith asked where he would be; to which I replied, that I could not tell precisely where he would be, but that he would be in Manchester; Mr. Griffith said, "WILL HE BE UPON CHANGE?" I said, "Why should he be upon change? he will be in Manchester." Mr. Griffith further asked, "Will your brother pledge himself to take his trial FOR SEDITION at the ensuing assizes? for I have two charges against him, one for HIGH TREASON, and another for SEDITION." I replied, "he will be in Manchester at the time I mention, on Thursday or Friday next."

On Thursday my brother returned from London to Barlow, and on Friday morning he came to Manchester, of which I gave Mr. Griffith immediate notice.

RICHARD WALKER,

I understand from the information of several respectable persons, that there is a warrant out against my brother Mr. Thomas Walker, signed by you, on a criminal charge of some kind or other; my brother has received the same information: as this report is now generally current in Manchester, I think it right to acquaint you, that my brother Mr. Thomas Walker, resides at present at Bate's Hotel, in the Adelphi, London; that his business will detain him in London some time; that he wishes himself, and I wish on his account, that no uncertainty respecting the place of his abode, may delay the course of justice; and therefore if there be any warrant against him, you may have the opportunity of getting it properly backed, and served upon him.

him without delay, as he will certainly remain in London a sufficient length of time to enable this to be done. He is generally upon the Royal Exchange every day at the usual hours.

If there be no charge against my brother, I think I have a right to call upon you to say so, as my commercial reputation is involved, as well as his, in the present reports against him. That you may not possibly make any mistake, I give you this card, with his address in his own hand-writing.

Copy of the Paper referred to in the Evidence of George Clark, page 61.

To the Reforming Societies in Sheffield, and other persons who concur with them in sentiment.

Allow a sincere well-wisher to the liberties of mankind, and particularly to the happiness and freedom of this country, most earnestly to exhort you, his fellow-townsmen to continue to testify, by the whole of your behaviour, that 'the true spirit of liberty is a spirit of order,' as your Society for Constitutional Information has well expressed it. Be this your invariable method of refuting and defeating the numerous calumnies of those who, from mistaking your views, or other motives, misrepresent your real designs. You may be assured that nothing will chagrin such as are indeed your enemies, so much as to find that you keep steadily, on all occasions, to a strict observance of the laws, and a peaceable conduct; nor would any thing gratify them more, or be so essentially injurious to the cause of that Reform which you wish to obtain, than for you to be so far misled as to commit any act of riot or tumult.

Promote with firmness, by all just, legal and peaceable means, a Reform in the Representation of the People, maintain the Freedom of the Press—that indispensable safeguard to your liberties—and assert, in the like calm and peaceable way, your right to free discussion on political subjects. But at the same time do all this with propriety and discretion. Do nothing which can be conceived by others except from wilful perversion, to be inimical to that Constitution, one branch of which you profess it to be your design to restore to its due purity by constitutional renovation.—When events happen favourable, as you think, to just and universal liberty, avoid public rejoicings and processions, because they may prove offensive instead of conciliating to those of your fellow-citizens who do not view such occurrences in the same light that you do; because they may afford your opponents, and those who wish you ill, an opportunity to excite confusion and disorder; whereby the persons or property of your neighbours might be injured, which would be laid to your charge, though you might be quite clear of any intentional harm, and because they may, from circumstances attending such processions and rejoicings, be construed into an insult to the Government of your own country, notwithstanding you may mean nothing of the kind.

Leave all tumult and disturbance, all injury to those who differ from you either in Politics or Religion, to men of a very different description from yourselves—to men who level the property and endanger the persons of innocent and meritorious citizens, for exercising the right of private judgment, to those who oppose all Reform, to those who are zealots for acknowledged abuses. To such men as these let it be left to prove themselves the only levellers to be found in this country.—How contrasted is the spirit of such men, to that liberal one of moderation and social intercourse, which happily prevails among persons of all opinions in this town and neighbourhood!

As no instance of outrage and violence can be justly alleged against the friends of Reform during the late and still existing alarms, do you carefully support that honourable and peaceful character. Manifest to all that you do not entertain the levelling principles you are charged with, by a constant regard to the safety of the persons and property of all around you.—Protect, but do not destroy. Bear reproach with manly firmness, but do no injury yourselves. Convince by peaceable behaviour, by obedience to legal authority, and by that dignity of conduct which is becoming those who are influenced by the principles of genuine Liberty.

Your townsmen and neighbours, at their meeting this day, have done nothing unfriendly to Liberty or Reform, but have expressed a confidence in the peaceable disposition of the inhabitants of the town. It is your part to continue to shew that you are worthy of that confidence. They have declared their firm attachment to the Government and Constitution stitution of their country, one grand principle of which is to amend what may be amiss, from the lapse of time or other circumstances, and their abhorrence of all riot and tumult, with a resolution to assist the civil magistrate in quelling every thing of that nature. These declarations are agreeable to the sentiments contained in some of the publications of your Society for Constitutional Information. In confirmation of which, one of the members of that Society gave his approbation to the proceedings of the meeting in a manner highly to his credit; and the general concurrence, as well as the handsome behaviour of the others who attended, ought not to pass unnoticed.

Permit me to add a few words more.—What is the object of Political Reform, but by suitable regulations to guard more effectually against oppression, to produce more general comfort and happiness, to prevent future unnecessary burdens on the subject, and gradually, as well as rationally, and with due respect to safety as well as justice, to diminish those which already exist. To the industrious, economical, regular and orderly mechanic, such a reform would become an essential benefit, as he could then by moderate but constant labour, enjoy more comfort, maintain his family better, and be able to provide a sufficiency for sickness and old age; but to the idly disposed, the profligate and drunken workman, on the supposition of his continuing to be so, it could be of no advantage.

May I then further urge upon you the necessity of letting personal amendment go hand in hand with Political Reform and Information. When you examine the errors of Government, do not forget to cast an eye upon your own failings. These you may correct by sincere efforts, for this is within your own power. Your endeavours to reform the other, though also laudable, may not be certain of success. However you will be much more likely to succeed in public reformation, when you have abandoned whatever is degrading to your own characters. From your general behaviour, let no one be able to point out a Reformer, or a member of one of your Societies, without at the same time he shall point to an industrious, regular man, of sober manners, and an orderly, peaceable disposition. By being meritorious servants, good masters, kind husbands, and provident fathers, you will acquire a respectability which will conquer the prejudices of those who now traduce your intentions. These are means by which you may indeed put yourselves on an equality with men in higher stations, and but too frequently become their superiors, in real worth and usefulness, in actual comfort and enjoyment, and by the possession of true independence. This should be your ambition, and in this may you succeed, both in self-reformation, and, united with your fellow-citizens, in that of the Representation of the People, to the extent that will most conduce to individual, as well as to public happiness and prosperity, is the cordial wish of (signed) A REFORMER.

December 31, 1792.

WILLIAM PAUL

Is a paper-stainer in Manchester. On the 14th of June 1793, he was torn from his wife and family, in consequence of a warrant signed by the Rev. John Griffith, charging him with HIGH TREASON, "by compassing the death of his present Majesty," on the sole oath of Thomas Dunn; Mr. Paul was that day and night confined in an apartment belonging to the New Bailey Prison; the next morning he was committed to that prison, and orders were given to treat him as a common felon. Upon the 17th of the same month, a commitment was made out for him to the Castle at Lancaster; but some days being allowed him to settle his books, &c. he was not sent there until the 23d, when he was taken out of his cell at one o'clock in the morning, without any previous notice.

Mr. Paul remained in the county gaol at Lancaster, till the ensuing assizes in August, when no indictment for HIGH TREASON being preferred against him, he was discharged. Many of Mr. Paul's friends were ready to have given bail; but as in cases of treason, no bail can be taken, it is hardly necessary to observe, that by these means a man may be confined from the close of one assizes to the commencement of another, on an accusation of this crime; and although it requires two witnesses to convict a man, one only is sufficient to have him committed.

Mr. Paul being indicted at the August assizes, for a conspiracy with Mr. Thomas Walker, and others, he was held to bail with the other defendants, and with them HONOURABLY ACQUITTED in April last.

During the time which Mr. Paul continued in the New Bailey Prison, neither his wife nor his children were permitted to see him, without some of the keepers being present; and he was forced to sleep in one of the cells of the felons, felons, which having been fresh washed, there being no glass in the windows, and the window shutter much broken, gave Mr. Paul a cold, which afterwards terminated in a violent inflammation in his eyes, one of which he was in the greatest danger of losing; he was confined to his bed for three weeks, and to his room for near three months.

This defendant has a wife and four children.

SAMUEL JACKSON.

This defendant being informed that a warrant for HIGH TREASON was issued against him, as well as against Mr. Walker and Mr. Paul, remained with his family who were then in the country about five miles from Manchester, on account of the dangerous state of health of his wife, and whose death was greatly accelerated by her anxiety on this occasion. He, however, immediately on receiving the information, desired his solicitors, Messrs. Duckworth and Dennett, to give notice to the Rev. John Griffith, the magistrate who was said to have issued the warrant, and to his clerk, and also to the agents to the solicitor for the prosecution, that if the warrant was for a bailable offence, he would instantly give bail, or if not, he would appear to meet the charge at the assizes; which notice was accordingly given, and his solicitors were informed that the charge was for HIGH TREASON.

After the death of Mrs. Jackson (in the beginning of July,) at whose funeral in Manchester, the deputy constable attended by order of the above magistrate, for the purpose of apprehending Mr. Jackson, he still remained in the country, though going about publicly, visited by his friends from Manchester, and the place of his residence known to Mr. Griffith.

On the 19th of July, his solicitors gave written notices to the Rev. John Griffith, and his clerk, and also to the agents to the solicitor for the prosecution, that this defendant would attend at the following assizes, to meet any charge that might be brought against him; and on the 7th of August his brother gave another notice in writing to Mr. Griffith to inform form him, that he (the defendant) would be in Manchester the next day, and the day following.—On the 8th of August, Mr. Jackson came to Manchester, and the next day sent a message to the magistrate, to let him know where he was; but not being apprehended, he accompanied Mr. Walker to the assizes at Lancaster on the following day; when the charge of HIGH TREASON being abandoned, and a bill for a conspiracy found by the Grand Jury, he gave bail with the other defendants, to try the same at the following assizes, and was with them HONOURABLY ACQUITTED.

To the assertion which the Attorney General for the county palatine of Lancaster was instructed to make in his opening on the trial (page 3), and which was afterwards attempted to be substantiated by Dunn, in his evidence (page 11), that the works of Paine, and many other works of a similar tendency, were read by this defendant to the societies; he has only to observe, that the whole is untrue.

JAMES CHEETHAM

Is a hatter in Manchester. He was committed on the 23d day of July 1793, to the New Bailey Prison, by the Rev. John Griffith, on the oath of Thomas Dunn, for speaking contemptuous words of his present Majesty. He expected to be tried at the same time (viz. at the ensuing quarter sessions) with Benjamin Booth and Oliver Pear-sall, both of whom were charged with expressions almost word for word the same, but instead of being brought to trial as he expected, for which he was fully prepared, and had incurred the necessary expences, he was, without having any previous notice, or being permitted to send to his wife or friends, removed at one o'clock in the morning of the 25th of July, to Lancaster Castle, where he continued till the assizes following, being imprisoned more than three weeks.

Although there was a vacant bed in the room where he lodged the night of his arrival at Lancaster, he was removed into another room the night after, where he was obliged either to sleep upon the floor, or in the same bed with the common hangman.

He was indicted at the assizes in August 1793, for damning the King, and also for the foregoing conspiracy, and was bailed on both charges. At the assizes in April last he was honourably acquitted of the latter indictment, with the other defendants. The former for which he had been committed, no evidence was brought in support of.

OLIVER PEARSALL

Is a native of Kidderminster, in Worcestershire, and by trade a weaver. He came to Manchester in June 1792, for the purpose of working in the manufactures there. Upon the 31st of December 1792, he became a member of the Reformation Society, by which means Thomas Dunn came to know him. In March following he left Manchester, and returned to Kidderminster.

On the 29th of June 1793, the wife of Dunn, accompanied by one Parker, who Pearsall has since learned was a constable, and Callaghan an Irishman, came to him at Kidderminster; Dunn's wife pretending it was necessary for him to give evidence at Manchester, on behalf of her husband, who she said was in the New Bailey Prison upon a false accusation, and would rather see him (Pearsall) than receive five hundred pounds, as his evidence would clear him. This Pearsall declared himself ready to comply with, and went with them to a public house, where he was told, he should have all his expences paid, and should return back on the Wednesday following. Previous to setting off, Pearsall wanted to go home to get some cloaths, which Parker refused, and then said, he had some tackling (meaning handcuffs) in his pocket, which he would put on him if he was saucy; Parker never shewed any warrant, and repeatedly refused to take Pearsall before a magistrate, though several times asked to do so. On his arrival at Manchester, he was carried before the Rev. John Griffith, who welcomed him to Manchester, and asked him if he did not belong to the Reformation Society, to which he answered in the affirmative. Mr. Justice Griffith then questioned him if he had not seen arms in Mr. Walker's house, and if he had not exercised men there, to both which he answered in the negative. He was then carried to the New Bailey Prison, where he was kept till the 5th of July, when he was committed, and remained there till the 9th of August.

While in this prison, Parker, Dunn, and Callaghan, had frequent interviews with him, the two latter instigating him to depose to having seen arms, and to having exercised men at Mr. Walker's. Callaghan in particular desired him to come forward in the cause, and confirm what Dunn had been putting to him, observing, if he did not, it would be the worse for him.

The

The day after this, one of the deputy constables came to him, and asked him, whether he recollected what Dunn had said the night before? Pearsall replied, he recollected what Dunn had said very well, but that it was impossible for him to recollect things which had never happened. The constable then said, that he had frequently seen the shining of firelocks in Mr. Walker's warehouse, as he returned home late in the evening; and further said, that a person was come from Yorkshire, and had sworn to the truth of what Dunn had said; that he was paid twelve guineas and had returned home with the money. Pearsall answered to this, "if he has sworn falsely, I cannot, for my soul is concerned."

In one of these conversations, Dunn said, Pearsall seemed uneasy at the interrogations; that they would leave him for the present, and begged him to consider of it. Pearsall said, he could not consider on a false subject, when Dunn replied, "we will drop the subject of exercising the men," and then began to talk about a letter from the Irish to the Scotch.

At other times, Callaghan and Dunn came to him, giving him the same advice; the former telling him, that if he did not confirm Dunn's testimony, Dunn was going to swear HIGH TREASON against him, which Dunn confirmed.

He was also informed that if he would join Dunn, it would be as good as a pension to him as long as he lived. At this conduct Pearsall grew angry, and desired them to leave the room; on which they said, if he would not acknowledge these things, they wished he was at home again.

On Thursday the 4th of July, Callaghan and Dunn came to him again, and brought pipes and tobacco, and a quantity of liquor. He was desired to drink, and smoke freely, to keep up his spirits, which he refused. One of them informed him, that the Rev. Justice Griffiths would come to the prison that night, and take his examination. Accordingly about seven o'clock the Rev. John Griffith came, with pen, ink, and paper. Mr. Griffith shook hands very familiarly with Dunn, clapped him on the back, and said he was an honest fellow. Mr. Griffith asked if their liquor was out, and seeing it was, he threw down a shilling, and ordered the turnkey to fetch some more, which was done; when it came the Rev. Mr. Griffith drank with them, and afterwards asked Pearsall, whether he recollected any thing relative to the questions Dunn had put to him; to which Pearsall said, that he could not, on which they all left the room.

On Friday evening the Rev. Mr. Justice Griffith, came again to the prison, and examined Pearsall as before, who answered that he knew nothing of the kind, the Justice then told him, that Dunn had sworn against him (Pearsall) sall) for having damned the present King in his (Dunn's) house; and therefore, that his commitment should be made out immediately, which was done accordingly.

Before Pearsall was committed by Mr. Griffith, he had of the best to eat and drink, but afterwards he had only the jail allowance.

At the ensuing quarter sessions in July 1793, Pearsall gave notice of his intention to take his trial on the indictment found against him, on the charge of having damned the King. The same day was fixed for the trials of him and Booth. The expences of the attorney and counsel were incurred, and every thing prepared for the trial, when the defendant was informed, that by a process called a Certiorari, this indictment was removed from the sessions into the Court of King's-Bench, but was given to understand that it was not intended to be proceeded on.

The defendant, Pearsall, was notwithstanding this, detained in prison until Friday the 9th of August, when Mr. Griffith wanted him to give bail for his appearance in the King's Bench. This being resisted by his solicitor as illegal, and an application being made by him to the clerk of the peace, for a copy of the magistrates' names attending the sessions, for the purpose of making an application to the court of King's Bench, to compel the magistrates to do their duty;—the Rev. John Griffith sent to let Pearsall know that he might be liberated without bail, upon his entering into a recognizance to appear to the indictment in the King's Bench. Pearsall entered into the recognizance, and was liberated. Pursuant to his recognizance, he appeared in the King's Bench, and pleaded not guilty. The issue was made up, but although two assizes have since elapsed, the prosecutors have not thought it expedient to try him upon this indictment.

At the assizes in August 1793, Pearsall went to Lancaster as a witness, to prove the attempts which had been made to suborn him to give false evidence against Mr. Walker. Dunn's evidence being still unsupported, and likely to be destroyed by this witness, the prosecution against Mr. Walker for HIGH TREASON was dropped; and Pearsall was prevented from giving evidence, by being made a defendant in the indictment for a conspiracy. He was then bailed, and afterwards HONOURABLY ACQUITTED.

BENJAMIN BOOTH.

On the fifth day of June 1793, this defendant was apprehended by virtue of a warrant issued by the Rev. John Griffith, upon a charge of having distributed a paper on the subject of WAR, which paper was alleged to be seditious: for this charge he was bailed upon the 12th of that month, and about eleven o'clock on the very same night, he was again taken from his wife and children, under another warrant, signed by the same reverend magistrate, and was the next day committed by him to the New Bailey Prison, on the oath of Thomas Dunn, on a charge of having damned the King, and saying, he would guillotine him if he could.

At the door of Mr. Griffith's house, a person who had been present during Booth's examination, said to the constable who was taking him to prison, "EXPOSE HIM TO THE FURY OF THE POPULACE." The constable led him through the most public streets in the town, and frequently addressed himself to the mob, in very inflammatory language respecting Booth.

The Rev. John Griffith refused in the most positive terms to admit this defendant to bail (which was offered), and he was confined in the New Bailey prison until the 19th of that month, when Mr. Griffith thought proper to receive bail*.

During the greater part of this interval Booth was kept in a separate place, he was locked up two hours sooner, and let out of his CELL two hours later than the rest of the prisoners. The threats and temptations held out to induce him to confirm Dunn's evidence, were various and frequent. He was told that others had done so, and that he had but a few hours to determine whether he would or not, that otherwise he would most certainly be hanged, and that it was the only way to save his wife and children from ruin. Mr. Paul (then in confinement, see the Appendix, No. XIII.) was shewn to him at one of the windows in another part of the prison. Booth was informed that Mr. Paul was committed for HIGH TREASON, that Mr. Walker, and others, had fled from the accusation; that in treason there were no accessories, all were principals; and that if he would turn King's evidence without delay, and join Dunn, Mr. Griffith would write for his pardon.

S

The

* The bail insisted upon and given, was Booth in 500l. and two sureties in 250l. each.

The Rev. Mr. Griffith told Booth, "he wanted the great men, he wanted to pick his birds."

At length, by promises and threats, by being told the parties accused were either apprehended, or had fled from the charges against them, and being frequently reminded of the helpless situation to which his wife and children would be exposed, a promise was wrung from him to join Dunn's evidence.

Upon Booth stating his ignorance of what evidence Dunn had given, Dunn and he were put together, that Dunn might inform him; and orders were given that Booth should now be better treated, and have a moderate allowance of liquor, but not so as to make Dunn jealous.

Booth being afterwards bailed, an indictment was preferred against him at the ensuing quarter sessions, on the accusation of having damned the King, &c. and immediately meeting the charge, though he might have traversed to the following sessions, he was tried and found guilty on the sole testimony of Dunn, although Dunn was flatly contradicted by Mary Booth, the defendant's sister, who was present when the words were said to be spoken, and swore positively they were made use of by Dunn himself, and not by her brother.

No indictment was preferred upon the first accusation, of distributing the paper, pointing out the evils which were likely to result from the war.

It is remarkable, that Dunn accused five or six different people of using precisely the same expressions respecting the King, at different times, and when not in company with each other.

The chairman of the Manchester quarter sessions in passing sentence observed, that Booth had been found guilty to the satisfaction of the whole bench, and the judgment of the court was twelve months imprisonment in Lancaster Castle.

Benjamin Booth, thus imprisoned, was again indicted for the conspiracy with the other defendants, at the next assizes, and with them acquitted on the trial. At the period of his acquittal, more than nine months of his imprisonment had elapsed.

Benjamin Booth being thus indicted, both at Manchester and at Lancaster, was effectually precluded from giving evidence of the practices made use of, (whilst he was in prison,) to prevail upon him, to give false testimony against some of the other defendants.

It is perhaps not unworthy of remark, that the Chairman of the Manchester quarter sessions, should afterwards be one of the Grand Jury who found the bills of indictment against the defendants in this trial; he was likewise foreman of the Grand Jury who found the bill of indictment against Dunn for PERJURY.

So well aware were the prosecutors, of the mode in which Booth's declaration, in support of Dunn's evidence, had been extorted from him, (which he never reflects upon but with shame and contrition, and which he acknowledges to be utterly false) that they did not produce it on this trial, nor did it prevent the Crown from granting Booth a pardon.

After Dunn (whose conduct was reprobated by the whole court) was committed for perjury by the judge of assize, the chairman of the Manchester quarter sessions wrote (it is said) as well as the ATTORNEY GENERAL for the county palatine of Lancaster, to the Secretary of State, for Benjamin Booth's pardon.

On the 2d of May last Booth was set at liberty, in consequence of a pardon, of which the following is a copy.

No. XX.

(L. S.) GEORGE R.

Whereas Benjamin Booth was at a quarter sessions of the peace held at Manchester, tried and convicted of sedition, and is now in Lancaster gaol under sentence of imprisonment for the same; and whereas some favourable circumstances have been humbly represented unto us in his behalf, inducing us to extend our grace and mercy unto him, and to grant him our free pardon for his said crime. Our will and pleasure therefore is, that you cause him the said Benjamin Booth to be forthwith discharged out of custody, and for so doing this shall be your warrant. Given at our court at St. James's, the twenty-fifth day of April 1794, in the thirty-fourth year of our reign.

To our trusty and well-beloved the Chairman of the Quarter Sessions of the Peace at Lancaster, the High Sheriff of the said county, and all others whom it may concern.

By his Majesty's command,

(signed) HENRY DUNDAS.

Benjamin Booth has a wife and four small children.

On

On the 4th of October 1793, Benjamin Booth, while in Lancaster Castle, received a letter from Mr. Cartwright, of Shrewsbury, who is a surgeon and apothecary, and a Nonjuring Bishop, of which the following is a copy. The reader will make his own reflections upon its objects and principles.

No. XXI.

Copy of Mr. William Cartwright's Letter to Benjamin Booth, dated Shrewsbury, 27 Sep. 1793.

When you wrote to me, soon after the death of Bishop Price, I little suspected that ever I should have seen your name in the public papers, on such an occasion as that which has rendered you so conspicuous; and reduced you to that situation, which your criminal conduct has so justly deserved.

I begin this address to you in this manner, with no other design than to express my abhorrence and detestation of those principles which excited you to this conduct, for which the laws of your country are now punishing you; and which, without sincere repentance, leaves you obnoxious to the just judgement of the Almighty, whose holy laws you have so flagrantly violated, and thereby brought a scandal on that sound branch of the catholic church, of which you were a member.

You well know, or once did know, that unfeigned allegiance, in all civil matters, to your rightful and lawful Sovereign, is an essential doctrine and duty of christianity; and that all coercive resistance to him and his laws, in all cases whatsoever, and under the most trying circumstances, is threatened with DAMNATION.

I am quite at a loss to conceive on what ground you can possibly justify or excuse your late conduct. Sure I am that before you could adopt the maxims and principles of PAIN, and such men, you must either have made shipwreck of faith, and virtually renounced all reverence for the revealed will of God; or lulled your conscience into a very irreligious degree of torpor.

I thought I had sufficiently exposed the atheism of Pain's wicked book, in that paper of mine signed "Phileleutherus Christianus," which was printed and dispersed in Manchester as a hand bill in May 1791.

I grant

I grant you there is much plausible reasoning in Pain's writings; many unsavoury truths, mixed with vile falsehoods, and gross misrepresentations: but his reasoning is entirely of that sort, with which the adversary of souls always endeavours to deceive the unwary. However, it is such as can have no influence, but upon those who have first withdrawn their minds from that dependance upon God, which is always our duty, and our best security against the temptations of Satan, the allurements of the world, and the corrupt propensities of our fallen and depraved nature. The unsavoury truths disseminated in his writings are such as, more or less, exist in all governments in the world, and ever will, till there shall be an entire renovation of the fallen sons of Adam. The speculations of those who call themselves Philosophers, promise us mighty fine things indeed. But the world was not created by human wisdom, neither can it be reformed by such means as those of Thomas Pain. Reformation is a fine word; yea, and a good thing too, when properly set about: but the experience of France should surely teach us the folly as well as wickedness of all popular attempts at it. Let every individual strive to reform himself, and leave the rest to God. While he is doing this, he is in the way of his duty: but whoever attempts to reform his superiors, and the governing powers by the arm of flesh, will only fall from one wickedness to another, and will not come into the way of righteousness.

Possibly you may deceive yourself with a notion that you were doing right, in endeavouring to overturn the present established system of government, because some of our religious predecessors attempted, in the years 1715 and 1745 to dethrone the then reigning family. But give me leave to tell you that those attempts, whether right or wrong, whether justifiable or not, were undertaken on entire different and opposite principles, to those, on which you must have engaged with the new disturbers of the public peace. The former attempts were not undertaken to overturn or alter the constitution of the government of this country. No! it was a competition between a claimant to the throne, who was thought to have been unjustly and illegally dispossessed of his right, and him who withheld that supposed right from him. That competition, you well know, is now at an end. The one family being as good as entirely extinct, and the other having been so long a time in uninterrupted possession, surely we need not now hesitate which of these God has chosen to reign over us. He has declared "by me kings reign." And I believe there is not now one person of our communion who does not recognize King George as the only rightful King of Great Britain, &c.

In

In consideration of this unquestionable truth, and of your late seditious and rebellious practices, it is my duty, however painful, to tell you that you lie under the censure of THE GREATER EXCOMMUNICATION. The consequences of such a state I need not explain to you, any further than to tell you that without an exemplary repentance there can be no pardon for you either in this world or THAT WHICH IS TO COME. By an exemplary repentance, I mean not only a sincere contrition, such as is described in the cXLth. lesson, page 400, of our catechism, but also the most effectual restitution and satisfaction, which it may be in your power to make to that government which you have insulted, and the laws which you have violated. And this can no other way be done, than by disclosing to a proper magistrate, every thing which you know of seditious and rebellious plots; and endeavouring, not for the sake of revenge or malice, but for the sake of justice, and better security of the public peace, to bring all your associates in iniquity, to such punishment as the law prescribes.

Thus have I faithfully admonished you, in love to your soul and body too, and delivered my own soul on this occasion. I pray God to give you a right understanding in these, and all things concerning your eternal welfare, and am

Your faithful but afflicted pastor and friend,

(signed) WILLIAM CARTWRIGHT.

I shall send this to you under the cover of a frank, directed to an old, sensible, and very worthy friend of mine; whom I have not seen for above twenty-three years last. His name is Langshaw, now organist of Lancaster. I shall request him to give you the most efficacious advice he can; I am persuaded it will be good and friendly; and I believe him to be as capable of convincing you of those delusive errors, into which you have fallen, as I am. If you have a due sense of your crimes, it will give me some consolation to receive a letter from you: otherwise not.

I believe it is not permitted to persons in your situation to send or receive letters, without the inspection of the governor, and I have no objection that he should see this. I shall send it unsealed to Mr. Langshaw.

To Mr. Benjamin Booth
Lancaster Castle.
