

Bodleian Libraries

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

This book is part of the collection held by the Bodleian Libraries and scanned by Google, Inc. for the Google Books Library Project.

For more information see:

<http://www.bodleian.ox.ac.uk/dbooks>

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 2.0 UK: England & Wales (CC BY-NC-SA 2.0) licence.

256 f: 2873

JOSEPH ANDREWS.

VOL. II.

A

JOSEPH ANDREWS

JOSEPH ANDREWS

M. ABRAHAM ADAMS

IN TWO VOLUMES

The Master of Characters Author of DON QUIXOTE

BY HENRY FIELDING, Esq.

VOLUME THE SECOND

LONDON

Printed by R. and T. Baskin

in the Strand

T H E
H I S T O R Y
O F T H E
A D V E N T U R E S
O F
J O S E P H A N D R E W S,

And his Friend

Mr ABRAHAM ADAMS.
IN TWO VOLUMES.

Written in Imitation of The Manner of CERVANTES, Author of
DON QUIXOTE.

By HENRY FIELDING, Esq.
VOLUME the SECOND.

L O N D O N :
Printed for B. LONG, and T. PRIDDEN.
M. DCC. LXXII.

1911

1912

1913

1914

1915

1916

1917

1918

1919

C O N T E N T S

O F T H E

S E C O N D V O L U M E.

B O O K T H I R D.

C H A P. I.

*M*ATTER prefatory in praise of biography. Page 13.

C H A P. II.

A night scene, wherein several wonderful adventures besel Adams and his fellow-travellers. 21

C H A P. III.

In which the gentleman relates the history of his life. 38.

C H A P. IV.

A description of Mr Wilson's way of living. The tragical adventure of the dog, and other grave matters. 79

A 3

vi CONTENTS.

C H A P. V.

A disputation on schools, held on the road between Mr Abraham Adams and Joseph; and a discovery not unwelcome to them both.

87

C H A P. VI.

Moral reflections by Joseph Andrews, with the hunting adventure, and Parson Adams's miraculous escape.

94

C H A P. VII.

A scene of roasting very nicely adapted to the present taste and times.

110

C H A P. VIII.

Which some readers will think too short, and others too long.

124

C H A P. IX.

Containing as surprising and bloody adventures as can be found in this, or perhaps any other authentic history.

131

C H A P. X.

A discourse between the poet and player; of no other use in this history, but to divert the reader.

139

C O N T E N T S. vii

C H A P. XI

Containing the exhortations of Parson Adams, to his friend in affliction: calculated for the instruction and improvement of the reader.

146

C H A P. XII

More adventures, which we hope will as much please as surprise the reader.

152

C H A P. XIII

A curious dialogue which passed between Mr Abraham Adams and Mr Peter Pounce, better worth reading than all the works of Colley Cibber and many others.

163

B O O K F O U R T H.

C H A P. I.

THE arrival of Lady Booby and the rest at Booby-hall.

169

C H A P. II.

A dialogue between Mr Abraham Adams and the Lady Booby.

177

viii C O N T E N T S.

C H A P. III.

What passed between the Lady and Lawyer Scout. 182.

C H A P. IV.

A short chapter, but very full of matter; particularly the arrival of Mr Booby and his Lady. 187

C H A P. V.

Containing justice-business: curious precedents of depositions, and other matters necessary to be perused by all justices of the peace and their clerks. 190

C H A P. VI.

Of which you are desired to read no more than you like. 200.

C H A P. VII.

Philosophical reflections, the like not to be found in any light French romance. Mr Booby's grave advice to Joseph, and Fanny's encounter with a beau. 210.

C H A P. VIII.

A discourse which happened between Mr A.

C. O N T E N T S. ix ams, Mrs Adams, Joseph, and Fanny, with some behaviour of Mr Adams which would be called by some few readers very low, absurd and unnatural. 223

C H A P. IX.

A visit which the good Lady Booby and her polite friend paid to the Parson. 233

C H A P. X.

The history of two friends, which may afford an useful lesson to all those persons who happen to take up their residence in married families. 239

C H A P. XI.

In which the history is continued. 250

C H A P. XII.

Where the good-natured reader will see something which will give him no great pleasure. 256

C H A P. XIII.

The history returning to the Lady Booby, gives some account of the terrible conflict in her breast between love and pride; with what happened on the present discovery. 260

CONTENTS.

CHAP. XIV.

Containing several curious night adventures, in which Mr Adams fell into many hair-breadth scapes, partly owing to his goodness and partly to his inadvertency. 268

CHAP. XV.

The arrival of Gaffer and Gammer Andrews, with another person not much expected; and a perfect solution of the difficulties raised by the pedlar. 278

CHAP. XVI.

Being the last. In which this true history is brought to a happy conclusion. 285

T H E
H I S T O R Y
O F T H E
A D V E N T U R E S

O F
JOSEPH ANDREWS, and his Friend
Mr ABRAHAM ADAMS.

Written in Imitation of

The manner of CERVANTES, Author of DON QUIXOTE.

B O O K T H I R D.

C H A P. I.

Matter prefatory in praise of Biography.

NOTWITHSTANDING the preference which may be vulgarly given to the authority of those romance-writers, who entitle their books, “the history of England, the history of France, of Spain, &c. it is most certain, that truth is to be found only in the works of those who celebrate the lives of great men, and are commonly called biographers, as the others should indeed be termed topographers or chorographers: words which might well mark the distinction between them: it being the business of the latter chiefly to describe countries and cities, which, with the assistance of maps, they do pretty justly, and may be depended upon: but as to the actions and characters of men, their writings are not quite so authentic, of which here needs no other proof than those eternal contradictions occurring between two topographers who undertake the history of the same country: for instance, between my Lord Clarendon and Mr Whitelock, between Mr Echard and

14 THE ADVENTURES OF

Rapin, and many others; where, facts being set forth in a different light, every reader believes as he pleases; and indeed the more judicious and suspicious very justly esteem the whole as no other than a romance, in which the writer hath indulged a happy and fertile invention. But though these widely differ in the narrative of facts; some ascribing victory to the one, and others to the other party; some representing the same man as a rogue, while others give him a great and honest character; yet all agree in the scene where the fact is supposed to have happened, and where the person, who is both a rogue and an honest man, lived. Now with us biographers the case is different; the facts we deliver may be relied on, though we often mistake the age and country wherein they happened: for though it may be worth the examination of critics, whether the shepherd Chrystom, who, as Cervantes informs us, died for love of the fair Marcella, who hated him, was ever in Spain, will any one doubt but that such a silly fellow hath really existed? Is there in the world such a sceptic as to disbelieve the madness of Cardenio, the perfidy of Ferdinand, the impertinent curiosity of Anselmo, the weakness of Camilla, the irresolute friendship of Lothario; tho' perhaps as to the time and place where those several persons lived, that good historian may be deplorably deficient? but the most known instance of this kind is in the true history of Gil Blas, where the inimitable biographer hath made a notorious blunder in the country of Dr Sangrado, who used his patients as a vintner doth his wine vessels, by letting out their blood, and filling them up with water. Doth not every one, who is the least versed in physical history, know that Spain was not the country in which this Doctor lived? The same writer hath likewise erred in the country of his archbishop, as well as that of those great personages whose understandings were too sublime to taste any thing but tragedy, and in many others. The same mistakes may likewise be observed in Scarron, the Arabian Nights, the History of Marianne, and le Paifan Parvenu, and perhaps some few other writers of this class, whom I have not read, nor do at present recollect; for I would by no means be thought to comprehend those persons of surprising genius, the authors of immense romances, or the modern novel and Atalantis writers; who, without any assistance from Nature or history, record persons who never were, or will be; and facts which never did, nor possibly can happen: whose heroes are of their own creation, and their brains the chaos whence all their materials are selected. Not that such writers deserve no honour; so far otherwise, that perhaps they merit the highest: for what can be nobler than to be as an example of the wonderful extent of human genius! One may apply to them what Balzac says of Aristotle, that they are a second nature, (for they have no communication with the first): by which authors of an inferior class, who cannot stand alone, are obliged to support themselves as with crutches: but these of whom I am now speaking, seem to be possessed of those stilts, which the excellent Voltaire tells us in his Letters, 'carry the genius far off, but with an irregular pace;' indeed far out of the sight of the reader,

16 THE ADVENTURES OF

Beyond the realm of Chaos and old Night.

But to return to the former class, who are contented to copy Nature, instead of forming originals from the confused heap of matter in their own brains; is not such a book as that which records the achievements of the renowned Don Quixote, more worthy the name of a history than even Mariana's? for whereas the latter is confined to a particular period of time, and to a particular nation; the former is the history of the world in general, at least that part which is polished by laws, arts, and sciences; and of that from the time it was first polished to this day; nay, and forwards as long as it shall so remain.

I shall now proceed to apply these observations to the work before us; for indeed I have set them down principally to obviate some obstructions, which the good-nature of mankind, who are always forward to see their friends virtues recorded, may put to particular parts. I question not but several of my readers will know the lawyer in the stage-coach, the moment they hear his voice. It is likewise odds, but the wit and the prude meet with some of their acquaintance, as well as all the rest of my characters. To prevent therefore any such malicious applications, I declare here once for all, I describe not men, but manners; not an individual, but a species. Perhaps it will be answered, Are not the characters then taken from life? To which I answer in the affirmative; nay, I believe I might aver, that I have writ little more than I have seen. The lawyer is not only alive, but hath been so these 4000 years; and I hope God will indulge his life as many yet to come. He hath not indeed confined himself to one profession, one religion, or one country; but when the first mean selfish creature appeared on the human stage, who made Self the centre of the whole creation, would give himself no pain, incur no danger, advance no money to assist or preserve his fellow-creatures; then was our lawyer born: and whilst such a person as I have described exists on earth, so long shall he remain upon it. It is therefore doing him little honour, to imagine he endeavours to mimic some little obscure fellow, because he happens to resemble him in one particular feature, or perhaps in his profession; whereas his appearance in the world is calculated for much more general and noble purposes; not to expose one pitiful wretch to the small and contemptible circle of his acquaintance; but to hold the glass to thousands in their closets, that they may contemplate their deformity, and endeavour to reduce it, and thus by suffering private mortification, may avoid public shame. This places the boundary between, and distinguishes the satirist from the libeller: for the former privately corrects the fault for the benefit of the person, like a parent; the latter publicly exposes the person himself, as an example to others, like an executioner.

18 THE ADVENTURES OF

There are besides little circumstances to be considered; as the drapery of a picture, which though fashion varies at different times, the resemblance of the countenance is not by those means diminished. Thus, I believe, we may venture to say, Mrs Tow-wouse is coeval with our lawyer; and though perhaps during the changes which so long an existence must have passed through, she may in her turn have stood behind the bar at an inn; I will not scruple to affirm, she hath likewise in the revolution of ages sat on a throne. In short, where extreme turbulence of temper, avarice, and an insensibility of human misery, with a degree of hypocrisy, have united in a female composition, Mrs Low-wouse was that woman: and where a good inclination, eclipsed by a poverty of spirit and understanding, hath glimmered forth in a man, that man hath been no other than her sneaking husband.

I shall detain my reader no longer than to give him one caution more of an opposite kind: for as in most of our particular characters we mean not to lash individuals, but all of the like sort; so in our general descriptions, we mean not universals, but would be understood with many exceptions: for instance, in our description of high people, we cannot be intended to include such, as whilst they are an honour to their high rank, by a well-guided condescension, make their superiority as easy as possible, to those whom fortune hath chiefly placed below them. Of this number I could name a peer no less elevated by nature than by fortune, who, whilst he wears the noblest ensigns of honour on his person, bears the truest stamp of dignity on his mind, adorned with greatness, enriched with knowledge, and embellished with genius. I have seen this man relieve with generosity, while he hath conversed with freedom, and be to the same person a patron and a companion. I could name a commoner raised higher above the multitude by superior talents, than is in the power of his prince to exalt him; whose behaviour to those he hath obliged is more amiable than the obligation itself, and who is so great a master of affability, that if he could divest himself of an inherent greatness in his manner, would often make the lowest of his acquaintance forget who was the master of that palace in which they are so courteously entertained. These are pictures which must be, I believe, known: I declare they are taken from the life, and not intended to exceed it. By those high people, therefore, whom I have described, I mean a set of wretches, who, while they are a disgrace to their ancestors, whose honours and fortunes they inherit, (or perhaps a greater to their mother, for such degeneracy is scarce credible) have the insolence to treat those with disregard, who are at least equal to the founders of their own splendor. It is, I fancy, impossible to conceive a spectacle more worthy of our indignation, than that of a fellow who is not only a blot in the escutcheon of a great family, but a scandal to the human species, maintaining a supercilious behaviour to men who are an honour to their nature, and a disgrace to their fortune.

20 THE ADVENTURES OF

And now, reader, taking these hints along with you, you may, if you please, proceed to the sequel of this our true history.

C H A P. II.

A night scene, wherein several wonderful adventures befall Adams and his fellow-travellers.

IT was so late when our travellers left the inn or ale-house, (for it might be called either) that they had not travelled many miles, before night overtook them, or met them, which you please. The reader must excuse me if I am not particular as to the way they took; for as we are now drawing near the seat of the Boobies, and as that is a ticklish name, which malicious persons may apply according to their evil inclinations, to several worthy country 'squires, a race of men whom we look upon as entirely inoffensive, and for whom we have an adequate regard, we shall lend no assistance to any such malicious purposes.

Darkness had now overspread the hemisphere, when Fanny whispered Joseph, ' that she begged to rest herself a little; for that she was so tired, she could walk no farther.' Joseph immediately prevailed with parson Adams, who was as brisk as a bee, to stop. He had no sooner seated himself, than he lamented the loss of his dear Eschylus; but was a little comforted, when reminded, that if he had it in his possession, he could not see to read.

The sky was so clouded, that not a star appeared. It was indeed, according to Milton, darkness visible. This was a circumstance, however, very favourable to Joseph; for Fanny, not suspicious of being overseen by Adams, gave a loose to her passion, which she had never done before; and reclining her head on his bosom, threw her arm carelessly round him, and suffered him to lay his cheek close to hers. All this infused such happiness into Joseph, that he would not have changed his turf for the finest down in the finest palace in the universe.

Adams sat at some distance from the lovers, and being unwilling to disturb them, applied himself to meditation; in which he had not spent much time, before he discovered a light at some distance that seemed approaching towards him. He immediately hailed it; but to his sorrow and surprise, it stopped for a moment, and then disappeared. He then called to Joseph, asking him, if he had not seen the light. Joseph answered, he had. 'And did you not mark how it vanished?' returned he: 'though I am not afraid of ghosts, I do not absolutely disbelieve them.'

He then entered into a meditation on those unsubstantial beings; which was soon interrupted by several voices which he thought almost at his elbow, though in fact they were not so extremely near. However, he could distinctly hear them agree on the murder of any one they met. And a little after heard one of them say, he had killed a dozen since that day fortnight.

Adams now fell on his knees, and committed himself to the care of Providence; and poor Fanny, who likewise heard those terrible words, embraced Joseph so closely, that had not he, whose ears were also open, been apprehensive on her account, he would have thought no danger which threatened only himself, too dear a price for such embraces.

Joseph now drew forth his penknife, and Adams having finished his ejaculations, grasped his crabstick, his only weapon, and coming up to Joseph, would have had him quit Fanny, and place her in the rear; but his advice was fruitless, she clung closer to him, not at all regarding the presence of Adams, and in a soothing voice declared, she would die in his arms. Joseph, clasping her with inexpressible eagerness, whispered her, that he preferred death in hers to life out of them. Adams, brandishing his crabstick, said, he despised death as much as any man, and then repeated aloud,

24 THE ADVENTURES OF

Est hic, est animus contemptor, et illum Qui vita bene credat emi quotendis, honorcm.

Upon this the voices ceased for a moment, and then one of them called out, 'D---n you, ' who is there?' To which Adams was prudent enough to make no reply; and of a sudden he observed half a dozen lights, which seemed to rise all at once from the ground, and advance briskly towards him. This he immediately concluded to be an apparition, and now beginning to conceive that the voices were of the same kind, he called out, 'in the ' name of the Lord, what wouldst thou ' have?' He had no sooner spoke than he heard one of the voices cry out, 'D---n ' them; here they come;' and soon after, he heard several hearty blows, as if a number of men had been engaged at quarter-staff. He was just advancing towards the place of combat, when Joseph, catching him by the skirts, begged him that they might take the opportunity of the dark to convey away Fanny from the danger which threatened her. He presently complied, and Joseph lifting up Fanny, they all three made the best of their way; and without looking behind them, or being overtaken, they had travelled full two miles, poor Fanny not once complaining of being tired, when they saw far off several lights scattered at a small distance from each other, and at the same time found themselves on the descent of a very steep hill. Adams's foot slipping, he instantly disappeared, which greatly frightened both Joseph and Fanny; indeed, if the light had permitted them to see it, they would scarce have refrained laughing to see the Parson rolling down the hill, which he did from top to bottom, without receiving any harm. He then hollowed as loud as he could, to inform them of his safety, and relieve them from the fears which they had conceived for him. Joseph and Fanny halted some time, considering what to do; at last they advanced a few paces, where the declivity seemed least steep; and then Joseph, taking his Fanny in his arms, walked firmly down the hill, without making a false step, and at length landed her at the bottom, where Adams soon came to them.

Learn hence, my fair countrywomen, to consider your own weakness, and the many occasions on which the strength of a man may be useful to you; and duly weighing this, take care that you match not yourselves with the spindle-shanked beaux and petit-maitres of the age, who, instead of being able, like Joseph Andrews, to carry you in lusty arms through the rugged ways and downhill steeps of life, will rather want to support their feeble limbs with your strength and assistance.
VOL. II. C

Our travellers now moved forwards, where the nearest light presented itself, and having crossed a common field, they came to a meadow, where they seemed to be at a very little distance from the light, when, to their grief, they arrived at the banks of a river. Adams here made a full stop, and declared he could swim, but doubted how it was possible to get Fanny over; to which Joseph answered, 'if they walked along its banks, they might be certain of soon finding a bridge, especially as, by the number of lights, they might be assured a parish was near.' 'Odsso, that's true indeed,' said Adams, 'I did not think of that.' Accordingly Joseph's advice being taken, they passed over two meadows, and came to a little orchard, which led them to a house. Fanny begged of Joseph to knock at the door, assuring him she was so weary that she could hardly stand on her feet. Adams, who was foremost, performed this ceremony, and the door being immediately opened, a plain kind of a man appeared at it. Adams acquainted him, that they had a young woman with them, who was so tired with her journey, that he should be much obliged to him, if he would suffer her to come in and rest herself. The man, who saw Fanny by the light of the candle which he held in his hand, perceiving her innocent and modest look, and having no apprehensions from the civil behaviour of Adams, presently answered, that the young woman was very welcome to rest herself in his house, and so were her company. He then ushered them into a very decent room, where his wife was sitting at a table; she immediately rose up, and assisted them in setting forth chairs, and desired them to sit down, which they had no sooner done, than the man of the house asked them if they would have any thing to refresh themselves with? Adams thanked him, and answered, he should be obliged to him for a cup of his ale, which was likewise chosen by Joseph and Fanny. Whilst he was gone to fill a very large jug with this liquor, his wife told Fanny she seemed greatly fatigued, and desired her to take something stronger than ale; but she refused, with many thanks, saying, it was true she was very much tired, but a little rest she hoped would restore her. As soon as the company were all seated, Mr Adams, who had filled himself with ale, and by public permission had lighted his pipe, turned to the master of the house, asking him, if evil spirits did not use to walk in that neighbourhood? To which receiving no answer, he began to inform him of the adventure which they had met with on the Downs; nor had he proceeded far in his story, when somebody knocked very hard at the door. The company expressed some amazement, and Fanny and the good woman turned pale; her husband went forth, and whilst he was absent, which was some time, they all remained silent looking at one another, and heard several voices discoursing pretty loudly. Adams was fully persuaded that spirits were abroad, and began to meditate some exorcisms; Joseph a little inclined to the same opinion; Fanny was more afraid of men; and the goodwoman herself began to suspect her guests, and imagined those without were rogues belonging to their gang. At length the master of the house returned, and laughing, told Adams he had discovered his apparition; that the murderers were sheep-stealers, and the twelve persons murdered, were no other than twelve sheep.

28 THE ADVENTURES OF

adding, that the shepherds had got the better of them, had secured two, and were proceeding with them to a justice of peace. This account greatly relieved the fears of the whole company; but Adams muttered to himself, 'He was convinced of the truth of apparitions for all that.'

They now sat cheerfully round the fire, till the master of the house, having surveyed his guests, and perceived that the cassock, which having fallen down, appeared under Adams's great coat, and the shabby livery of Joseph Andrews, did not well suit with the familiarity between them, began to entertain some suspicions, not much to their advantage: addressing himself therefore to Adams, he said, he perceived he was a clergyman by his dress, and supposed that honest man was his footman. 'Sir,' answered Adams, 'I am a clergyman at your service; but as to that young man, whom you have rightly termed honest, he is at present in nobody's service; he never lived in any other family than that of Lady Booby, from whence he was discharged, I assure you, for no crime.' Joseph said, 'he did not wonder the gentleman was surpris'd to see one of Mr Adams's character condescend to so much goodness with a poor man.' 'Child,' said Adams, 'I should be ashamed of my cloth, if I thought

30 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ a poor man, who is honest, below my notice or my familiarity. I know not how those that think otherwise, can profess themselves followers and servants of him who made no distinction, unless, peradventure, by preferring the poor to the rich. Sir,’ said he, addressing himself to the gentleman, ‘ these two poor young people are my parishioners, and I look on them and love them as my children. There is something singular enough in their history, but I have not now time to recount it.’ The master of the house, notwithstanding the simplicity which discovered itself in Adams, knew too much of the world to give a hasty belief to professions. He was not yet quite certain that Adams had any more of the clergyman in him than his cassock. To try him therefore further, he asked him, If Mr Pope had lately published any thing new? Adams answered, ‘ he had heard great commendations of that poet, but that he had never read, nor knew any of his works.’ ‘ Ho! ho!’ says the gentleman to himself, ‘ have I caught you? What,’ said he, ‘ have you never seen his Homer?’ Adams answered, ‘ he had never read any translation of the classics.’ ‘ Why truly,’ reply’d the gentleman, ‘ there is a dignity in the Greek language which I think no modern tongue can reach.’

‘Do you understand Greek, Sir?’ said Adams, hastily. ‘A little, Sir,’ answered the gentleman. ‘Do you know, Sir,’ cry’d Adams, ‘where I can buy an Æschylus?’ and ‘unlucky misfortune lately happened to mine.’ Æschylus was beyond the gentleman, though he knew him very well by name; he therefore returning back to Homer, asked Adams, What part of the Iliad he thought most excellent? Adams return’d, His question would be properer; what kind of beauty was the chief in poetry; for that Homer was equally excellent in them all.

‘And indeed,’ continued he, ‘what Cicero says of a complete orator, may well be adapted to a great poet; “He ought to comprehend all perfections.” Homer did this in the most excellent degree; it is not without reason therefore, that the philosopher, in the 22d chapter of his Poetics, mentions him by no other appellation than that of The Poet: He was the father of the drama, as well as the epic: not of tragedy only, but of comedy also; for his Margites, which is deplorably lost, bore, says Aristotle, the same analogy to comedy, as his Odyssey and Iliad to tragedy. To him therefore we owe Aristophanes, as well as Euripides, Sophocles, and my poor Æschylus. But if you please we will confine ourselves

32 THE ADVENTURES OF

(at least for the present) to the Iliad, his noblest work; though neither Aristotle nor Horace gave it the preference, as I remember, to the Odyssey. First, then, as to his subject, can any thing be more simple, and at the same time more noble? He is rightly praised by the first of those judicious critics, for not chusing the whole war, which, though he says it hath a complete beginning and end, would have been too great for the understanding to comprehend at one view. I have therefore often wondered why so correct a writer as Horace should, in his epistle to Lollius, call him the Trojani Belli Scriptorem. Secondly, his action, termed by Aristotle, Pragmaton Systasis; is it possible for the mind of man to conceive an idea of such perfect unity, and at the same time so replete with greatness? And here I must observe, what I do not remember to have seen noted by any, that Harmotton, that agreement of his action to his subject: for as the subject is anger, how agreeable is his action, which is war? from which every incident arises, and to which every episode immediately relates. Thirdly, his manners, which Aristotle places second in his description of the several parts of tragedy, and which he says are included in the action; I am at a loss whether I should ra-

• ther admire the exactness of his judgment • in the nice distinction, or the immensity of • his imagination in their variety. For, as • to the former of these, how accurately is
 • the sedate, injured resentment of Achilles
 • distinguished from the hot insulting passion • of Agamemnon! How widely doth the • brutal courage of Ajax differ from the • amiable bravery of Diomedes; and the • wisdom of Nestor, which is the result of • long reflection and experience, from the • cunning of Ulysses, the effect of art and • subtilty only! If we consider their variety
 • we may cry out with Aristotle in his 24th
 • chapter, that no part of this divine poem • is destitute of manners. Indeed, I might • affirm, that there is scarce a character in • human nature untouched in some part or • other. And as there is no passion which he • is not able to describe, so is there none in • his reader which he cannot raise. If he • hath any superior excellence to the rest, I • have been inclined to fancy it in the pathetic.
 • I am sure I never read with dry eyes
 • the two episodes, where Andromache is • introduced, in the former lamenting the • danger, and in the latter the death of • Hector. The images are so extremely tender • in these, that I am convinced the poet
 • had the worthiest and best heart imaginable.

34 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ Nor can I help observing how Sophocles ‘ falls short of the beauties of the original, ‘ in that imitation of the dissuasive speech of ‘ Andromache, which he hath put into the ‘ mouth of Tecmeffa. And yet Sophocles ‘ was the greatest genius who ever wrote ‘ tragedy; nor have any of his successors in ‘ that art, that is to say, neither Euripides, ‘ nor Seneca the tragedian, been able to ‘ come near him. As to his sentiments and ‘ diction, I need say nothing; the former ‘ are particularly remarkable for the utmost ‘ perfection on that head, namely propriety; ‘ and as to the latter, Aristotle, whom ‘ doubtless you have read over and over, is ‘ very diffuse. I shall mention but one thing ‘ more, which that great critic in his division ‘ of tragedy called Opis, or the scenery, ‘ and which is as proper to the epic as to the ‘ drama, with this difference, that in the ‘ former it falls to the share of the poet, and ‘ in the latter to that of the painter. But ‘ did ever painter imagine a scene like that ‘ in the 13th and 14th Iliad? where the ‘ reader sees, at one view, the prospect of ‘ Troy, with the army, drawn up before it:
‘ the Grecian army, camp, and fleet; Jupiter ‘ sitting on mount Ida, with his head wrapt ‘ in a cloud, and a thunder-bolt in his hand, ‘ looking towards Thrace; Neptune driving ' through the sea, which divides on each side

 ' to permit his passage, and then seating
 ' himself on mount Samos: the heavens ' opened, and the deities all seated on their ' thrones. 'This is sublime! This is poetry!'

Adams then rapt out a hundred Greek verses, and with such a voice, emphasis, and action, that he almost frightened the women; and as for the gentleman, he was so far from entertaining any further suspicion of Adams, that he now doubted whether he had not a bishop in his house. He ran into the most extravagant encomiums on his learning; and the goodness of his heart began to dilate to all the strangers. He said, he had great compassion for the poor young woman, who looked pale and faint with her journey; and in truth he conceived a much higher opinion of her quality than it deserved. He said, he was sorry he could not accommodate them all: but if they were contented with his fireside, he would sit up with the men; and the young woman might, if she pleased, partake of his wife's bed, which he advised her to; for that they must walk upward of a mile to any house of entertainment, and that not very good neither. Adams, who liked his seat, his ale, his tobacco, and his company, persuaded Fanny to accept this kind proposal, in which solicitation he was seconded by Joseph. Nor was she very difficultly prevailed on; for she had slept little the last night, and not at all the preceding, so that love itself was scarce able to keep her eyes open any longer. The offer therefore being kindly accepted, the good woman produced every thing eatable in her house on the table, and the guests being heartily invited, as heartily regaled themselves, especially Parson Adams. As to the other two, they were examples of the truth of that physical observation, that love, like other sweet things, is no whetter of the stomach.

36 THE ADVENTURES OF

Supper was no sooner ended, than Fanny, at her own request, retired, and the good woman bore her company. The man of the house, Adams, and Joseph, who would modestly have withdrawn, had not the gentleman insisted on the contrary, drew round the fireside, where Adams (to use his own words) replenished his pipe, and the gentleman produced a bottle of excellent beer, being the best liquor in his house.

The modest behaviour of Joseph, with the gracefulness of his person, the character which Adams gave of him, and the friendship he seemed to entertain for him, began to work on the gentleman's affections, and raised in him a curiosity to know the singularity which Adams had mentioned in his history. This curiosity Adams was no sooner informed of, than, with Joseph's consent, he agreed to gratify it, and accordingly related all he knew, with as much tenderness as was possible for the character of Lady Booby; and concluded with the long, faithful, and mutual passion between him and Fanny, not concealing the meanness of her birth and education. These latter circumstances entirely cured a jealousy which had lately risen in the gentleman's mind, that Fanny was the daughter of some person of fashion; and that Joseph had run away with her, and Adams was concerned in the plot. He was now enamoured of his guests, drank their healths with great cheerfulness, and returned many thanks to Adams, who had spent much breath; for he was a circumstantial teller of a story.

Adams told him it was now in his power to return that favour; for his extraordinary goodness, as well as that fund of literature he was master of*, which he did not expect

* The author hath by some been represented to have made a blunder here: for Adams had indeed shewn some learning, (say they), perhaps all the author had; but the gentleman hath shewn none, unless his approbation of Mr Adams be such: but surely it would be preposterous in him to call it so. I have, however, notwithstanding this criticism, which I am told came from the mouth of a great to find under such a roof, had raised in him more curiosity than he had ever known. Therefore, said he, if it be not too troublesome, Sir, your history, if you please.

38 THE ADVENTURES OF

The gentleman answered, he could not refuse him what he had so much right to insist on; and after some of the common apologies, which are the usual preface to a story, he thus began.

C H A P. III.

In which the gentleman relates the history of his life.

SIR, I am descended of a good family, and was born a gentleman. My education was liberal, and at a public school, in which I proceeded so far as to become master of the Latin, and to be tolerably versed in the Greek language. My father died when I orator in a public coffee-house, left this blunder as it stood in the first edition. I will not have the vanity to apply to any thing in this work, the observation which M. Dacier makes in her preface to her Aristophanes: "Je tiens pour une maxime constante, qu'une beauté mediocre plait plus generalement qu'une beauté sans defect." Mr Congreve hath made such another blunder in his Love for Love, where Tattle tells Miss Prue, "she should admire him as much for the beauty he commends in her, as if he himself was possessed of it."

was sixteen, and left me master of myself. He bequeathed me a moderate fortune, which he intended I should not receive till I attained the age of twenty-five: for he constantly asserted that was full early enough to give up any man entirely to the guidance of his own discretion. However, as this intention was so obscurely worded in his will, that the lawyers advised me to contest the point with my trustees; I own I paid so little regard to the inclinations of my dead father, which were sufficiently certain to me, that I followed their advice, and soon succeeded: for the trustees did not contest the matter very obstinately on their side. ‘Sir,’ said Adams, ‘may I crave the favour of your name?’ The gentleman answered, ‘my name was Wilson,’ and then proceeded.

I stay’d a very little while at school after his death; for, being a forward youth, I was extremely impatient to be in the world: for which I thought my parts, knowledge, and manhood, thoroughly qualified me. And to this early introduction into life, without a guide, I impute all my future misfortunes; for besides the obvious mischiefs which attend this, there is one which hath not been so generally observed. The first impression which mankind receives of you, will be very difficult to eradicate. How unhappy, therefore, must it be to fix your character in life, before you can possibly know its value, or weigh the consequences of those actions which are to establish your future reputation.

40 THE ADVENTURES OF

A little under seventeen I left my school, and went to London, with no more than six pounds in my pocket. A great sum as I then conceived; and which I was afterwards surprised to find so soon consumed.

The character I was ambitious of attaining was that of a fine gentleman; the first requisites to which I apprehended were to be supplied by a tailor, a periwig-maker, and some few more tradesmen, who deal in furnishing out the human body. Notwithstanding the lowness of my purse, I found credit with them more easily than I expected, and was soon equipped to my wish. This I own then agreeably surprised me; but I have since learned, that it is a maxim among many tradesmen at the polite end of the town, to deal as largely as they can, reckon as high as they can, and arrest as soon as they can.

The next qualifications, namely, dancing, fencing, riding the great horse, and music, came into my head: but as they required expence and time, I comforted myself, with regard to dancing, that I had learned a little in my youth, and could walk a minuet genteely enough; as to fencing, I thought my good-humour would preserve me from the danger of a quarrel; as to the horse, I hoped it would not be thought of; and for music, I imagined I could easily acquire the reputation of it; for I had heard some of my school-fellows pretend to knowledge in operas, without being able to sing or play on the fiddle.

Knowledge of the town seemed another ingredient; this I thought I should arrive at by frequenting public places. Accordingly, I paid constant attendance to them all; by which means I was soon master of the fashionable phrases, learned to cry up the fashionable diversions, and knew the names and faces of the most fashionable men and women.

Nothing now seemed to remain but an intrigue, which I was resolved to have immediately; I mean the reputation of it; and indeed I was so successful, that in a very short time I had half a dozen with the finest women in town.

At these words Adams fetched a deep groan, and then, blessing himself, cried out, "Good Lord! what wicked times are these!"

Not so wicked as you imagine, continued the gentleman; for I assure you, they were all vestal virgins for any thing which I knew to the contrary: the reputation of intriguing with them was all I sought, and was

42 THE ADVENTURES OF

what I arrived at: and perhaps I only flattered myself even in that; for very probably the persons to whom I shewed their billets, knew as well as I that they were counterfeits, and that I had written them to myself.

‘Write letters to yourself!’ said Adams, staring.

O Sir, answered the gentleman, it is the very error of the times. Half our modern plays have one of these characters in them. It is incredible the pains I have taken, and the absurd methods I employed to traduce the character of women of distinction. When another had spoken in raptures of any one, I have answered, ‘D——n her, she! we shall have her at H——d’s very soon.’ When he hath replied, ‘he thought her virtuous,’ I have answered, ‘Ay, thou wilt always think a woman virtuous, till she is in the streets; but you and I, Jack or Tom, (turning to another in company) know better.’ At which I have drawn a paper out of my pocket, perhaps a tailor’s bill, and kissed it, crying, at the same time, ‘By gad I was once fond of her.’

‘Proceed, if you please, but do not swear any more,’ said Adams.

Sir, said the gentleman, I ask your pardon. Well, Sir, in this course of life I continued full three years.—‘What course of 'life?' answered Adams: 'I do not remember you have mentioned any.'---Your remark is just, said the gentleman, smiling; I should rather have said, in this course of doing nothing. I remember some time afterwards I wrote the journal of one day, which would serve, I believe, as well for any other, during the whole time. I will endeavour to repeat it to you.

In the morning I arose, took my great stick, and walked out in my green frock with my hair in papers, (a groan from Adams), and fauntered about till ten.

Went to the auction; told lady — she had a dirty face; laughed heartily at something Captain --- said; I can't remember what; for I did not very well hear it; whispered Lord ---; bowed to the Duke of ---; and was going to bid for a snuff-box; but did not for fear I should have had it.

From 2 to 4, dressed myself. A groan.
 4 to 6, dined. A groan.
 6 to 8, coffee-house.
 8 to 9, Drury Lane play-house.
 9 to 10, Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.
 10 to 12, Drawing-room.
 A great groan.

At all which places nothing happened worth remark. At which Adams said, with some vehemence, ' Sir, this is below the life

44 THE ADVENTURES OF

' of an animal, hardly above vegetation; and ' I am surprized what could lead a man of ' your sense into it.' What leads us into more follies than you imagine, Doctor, answered the gentleman, vanity: for as contemptible a creature as I was, and I assure you, yourself cannot have more contempt for such a wretch than I now have, I then admired myself, and should have despised a person of your present appearance (you will pardon me) with all your learning, and these excellent qualities which I have remarked in you. Adams bowed, and begged him to proceed. After I had continued two years in this course of life, said the gentleman, an accident happened which obliged me to change the scene. As I was one day at St James's coffee-house, making very free with the character of a young lady of quality, an officer of the guards, who was present, thought proper to give me the lie. I answered, I might possibly be mistaken; but I intended to tell no more than the truth. To which he made no reply, but by a scornful sneer. After this I observed a strange coldness in all my acquaintance; none of them spoke to me first, and very few returned me even the civility of a bow. The company I used to dine with left me out, and within a week I found myself in as much solitude at St James's, as if I had been in a desert. An honest elderly man, with a great hat and long sword, at last told me, he had a compassion for my youth, and therefore advised me to shew the world I was not such a rascal as they thought me to be. I did not at first understand him: but he explained himself, and ended with telling me, if I would write a challenge to the captain, he would, out of pure charity, go to him with it. 'A very charitable person truly!' cried Adams. I desired till the next day, continued the gentleman, to consider on it, and retiring to my lodgings, I weighed the consequences on both sides as fairly as I could. On the one, I saw the risk of this alternative; either losing my own life, or having on my hands the blood of a man with whom I was not in the least angry. I soon determined, that the good which appeared on the other, was not worth this hazard. I therefore resolved to quit the scene, and presently retired to the Temple, where I took chambers. Here I soon got a fresh set of acquaintance, who knew nothing of what had happened to me. Indeed they were not greatly to my approbation; for the beaux of the Temple are only the shadows of the others. They are the affectation of affectation. The vanity of these is still more ridiculous, if possible, than of the others. Here I met with smart fellows; who drank with lords they did not know, and intrigued with women they never saw. Covent-Garden was now the farthest stretch of my ambition, where I shone forth in the balconies at the play-houses, visited whores, made love to orange-wenches, and damned plays. This career was soon put a stop to by my surgeon, who convinced me of the necessity of confining myself to my room for a month. At the end of which, having had leisure to reflect, I resolved to quit all further conversation with beaux and smarts of every kind, and to avoid, if possible, any occasion of returning to this place of confinement. 'I think,' said Adams, 'the advice of a month's retirement and reflection was very proper; but I should rather have expected it from a divine than a surgeon.' The gentleman smiled at Adams's simplicity, and without explaining himself farther on such an odious subject, went on thus: I was no sooner perfectly restored to health, than I found my passion for women, which I was afraid to satisfy as I had done, made me very uneasy; I determined therefore to keep a mistress. Nor was I long before I fixed my choice on a young woman, who had before been kept by two gentlemen.

46 THE ADVENTURES OF

and to whom I was recommended by a celebrated bawd. I took her home to my chambers, and made her a settlement during cohabitation. This perhaps would have been very ill paid; however, she did not suffer me to be perplexed on that account; for before quarter-day, I found her at my chambers in too familiar conversation with a young fellow who was dressed like an officer, but was indeed a city-apprentice. Instead of excusing her inconstancy, she rapped out half a dozen of oaths, and snapping her fingers at me, swore she scorned to confine herself to the best man in England. Upon this we parted, and the same bawd presently provided her another keeper. I was not so much concerned at our separation, as I found within a day or two I had reason to be for our meeting: for I was obliged to pay a second visit to my surgeon. I was now forced to do penance for some weeks, during which time I contracted an acquaintance with a beautiful young girl, the daughter of a gentleman, who, after having been forty years in the army, and in all the campaigns under the Duke of Marlborough, died a lieutenant on half pay; and had left a widow with this only child, in very distressed circumstances; they had only a small pension from the government, with what little the daughter could add to it by her work; for she had great excellence at her needle. This girl was, at my first acquaintance with her, solicited in marriage by a young fellow in good circumstances. He was apprentice to a linen-draper, and had a little fortune sufficient to set up his trade. The mother was greatly pleased with this match, as indeed she had sufficient reason. However, I soon prevented it. I represented him in so low a light to his mistress, and made so good an use of flattery, promises, and presents, that, not to dwell longer on this subject than is necessary, I prevailed with the poor girl, and conveyed her away from her mother! In a word, I debauched her——(At which words Adams started up, fetched three strides across the room, and then replaced himself in his chair.) You are not more affected with this part of my story than myself: I assure you it will never be sufficiently repented of in my own opinion; but if you already detest it, how much more will your indignation be raised when you hear the fatal consequences of this barbarous, this villainous action! If you please, therefore, I will here desist—‘By no means,’ cries Adams, ‘go on, I beseech you; and Heaven grant you may sincerely repent of this and many other things you have related.’ I was now, continued the gentleman, as happy as the possession of a fine young creature, who had a good education, and was endued with many agreeable qualities, could make me. We lived some months with vast fondness together, without any company or conversation more than we found in one another; but this could not continue always; and though I still preserved a great affection for her, I began more and more to want the relief of other company, and consequently to leave her by degrees, at last whole days to herself. She failed not to testify some uneasiness on these occasions, and complained of the melancholy life she led; to remedy which, I introduced her into the acquaintance of some other kept mistresses, with whom she used to play at cards, and frequent plays and other diversions. She had not lived long in this intimacy, before I perceived a visible alteration in her behaviour; all her modesty and innocence vanished by degrees, till her mind became thoroughly tainted. She affected the company of rakes, gave herself all manner of airs, was never easy but abroad, or when she had a party at my chambers. She was rapacious of money, extravagant to excess, loose in her conversation; and if ever I demurred to any of her demands, oaths, tears, and fits, were the immediate consequences. As the first raptures of fondness were long since over, this behaviour soon estranged my affections from her; I began to reflect with pleasure that she was not my wife, and to conceive an intention of parting with her; of which having given her a hint, she took care to prevent me the pains of turning her out of doors, and accordingly departed herself, having first broke open my escrutoire, and taken with her all she could find, to the amount of about L. 200. In the first heat of my resentment, I resolved to pursue her with all the vengeance of the law; but as she had the good luck to escape me during that ferment, my passion afterwards cooled: and having reflected that I had been the first aggressor, and had done her an injury, for which I could make her no reparation, by robbing her of the innocence of her mind, and hearing at the same time that the poor old woman her mother had broke her heart on the daughter's elopement from her, I, concluding myself her murderer, ('As you very well might,' cries Adams with a groan;) was pleased, that God Almighty had taken this method of punishing me, and resolved quietly to submit to the loss. Indeed I could wish I had never heard more of the poor creature, who became in the end an abandoned profligate; and after being some years a common prostitute, at last ended her miserable life in Newgate. (Here the gentleman fetched a deep sigh, which Mr Adams echoed very loudly; and both continued silent, looking at each other for some minutes. At last the gentleman proceeded thus:) I had been perfectly constant to this girl during the whole time I kept her: but she had scarce departed before I discovered more marks of her infidelity to me than the loss of my money. In short, I was forced to make a third visit to my surgeon, out of whose hands I did not get a hasty discharge.

THE ADVENTURES OF

I now forswore all future dealings with the sex, complained loudly that the pleasure did not compensate the pain, and railed at the beautiful creatures, in as gross language as Juvenal himself formerly reviled them in. I looked on all the town-harlots with a detestation not easy to be conceived; their persons appeared to me as painted palaces, inhabited by disease and death; nor could their beauty make them more desirable objects in my eyes, than gilding could make me covet a pill, or golden plates a coffin. But though I was no longer the absolute slave, I found some reasons to own myself still the subject of love. My hatred for women decreased daily; and I am not positive but time might have betrayed me again to some common harlot, had I not been secured by a passion for the charming Sapphira, which having once entered upon, made a violent progress in my heart. Sapphira was wife to a man of fashion and gallantry, and one who seemed, I own, every way worthy of her affections, which however he had not the reputation of having. She was indeed a coquette achevée. 'Pray, Sir,' says Adams, 'what is a coquette? I have met with the word in French authors, but never could assign any idea to it. I believe it is the same with une sotte, anglice, a fool.' Sir, answered the gentleman, perhaps you are not much mistaken; but as it is a particular kind of folly, I will endeavour to describe it. Were all creatures to be ranked in the order of creation, according to their usefulness, I know few animals that would not take place of a coquette; nor indeed hath this creature much pretence to any thing beyond instinct: for though sometimes we might imagine it was animated by the passion of vanity, yet far the greater part of its actions fall beneath even that low motive; for instance, several absurd gestures and tricks, infinitely more foolish than what can be observed in the most ridiculous birds and beasts, and which would persuade the beholder, that the silly wretch was aiming at our contempt. Indeed its characteristic is affectation, and this led and governed by whim only: for as beauty, wisdom, wit, good-nature, politeness, and health, are sometimes affected by this creature; so are ugliness, folly, nonsense, ill-nature, ill breeding and sickness, likewise put on by it in their turn. Its life is one constant lie; and the only rule by which you can form any judgment of them is that they are never what they seem. If it was possible for a coquette to love (as it is not, for if ever it attains this passion, the coquette ceases instantly) it would wear the face of indifference, if not of hatred, to the beloved object; you may therefore be assured, when they endeavour to persuade you of their liking, that they are indifferent to you at least. And indeed this was the case of my Sapphira, who no sooner saw me in the number of her admirers, than she gave me what is commonly called encouragement; she would often look at me, and, when she perceived me meet her eyes, would instantly take them off, discovering at the same time as much surprise and emotion as possible. These arts failed not of the success she intended; and as I grew more particular to her than the rest of her admirers, she advanced in proportion, more directly to me than to the others. She affect the low voice, whisper, lisp, sigh, start, laugh, and many other indications of passion, which daily deceive thousands. When I played at whitt with her, she would look earnestly at me, and at the same time lose deal or revoke; then burst into a ridiculous laugh, and cry, 'La! I can't imagine what I was thinking of.' To detain you no longer, after I had gone thro' a sufficient course of gallantry, as I thought, and was thoroughly convinced I had raised a violent passion in my mistress; I sought an opportunity of coming to an eclaircissement with her. She avoided this as much as possible; however, great assiduity at length presented me one. I will not describe all the particulars of this interview; let it suffice, that till she could no longer pretend not to see my drift, she first affected a violent surprize, and immediately after as violent a passion: she wondered what I had seen in her conduct, which could induce me to affront her in this manner: and breaking from me the first moment she could, told me, I had no other way to escape the consequence of her resentment, than by never seeing, or at least speaking to her more. I was not contented with this answer; I still pursued her, but to no purpose, and was at length convinced that her husband had the sole possession of her person, and that neither he nor any other had made any impression on her heart. I was taken off from following this ignis fatuus by some advances which were made me by the wife of a citizen, who, though neither very young nor handsome, was yet too agreeable to be rejected by my amorous constitution. I accordingly soon satisfied her, that she had not cast away her hints on a barren or cold soil: on the contrary, they instantly produced her an eager and desiring lover. Nor did she give me any reason to complain; she met the warmth she had raised, with equal ardour. I had no longer a coquette to deal with, but one who was wiser than to prostitute the noble passion of love to the ridiculous lust of vanity. We presently understood one another, and as the pleasures we sought lay in a mutual gratification, we soon found and enjoyed them. I thought myself at first greatly happy in the possession of this new mistress, whose fondness would have quickly surfeited a more sickly appetite; but it had a different effect on mine; she carried my passion higher by it than youth or beauty had been able: but my happiness could not long continue uninterrupted. The apprehensions we lay under from the jealousy of her husband, gave us great uneasiness. 'Poor wretch! I pity, 'him,' cried Adams. He did indeed deserve it, said the gentleman; for he loved his wife with great tenderness; and I assure you it is a great satisfaction to me that I was not the man who first seduced her affections from him. These apprehensions appeared also too well-grounded: for in the end he discovered us, and procured witnesses of our caresses. He then prosecuted me at law, and recovered 3000*l.* damages, which much distressed my fortune to pay: and what was worse, his wife being divorced came upon my hands. I led a very uneasy life with her; for besides that my passion was now much abated, her excessive jealousy was very troublesome. At length death rid me of an inconvenience, which the consideration of my having been the author of her misfortunes would never suffer me to take any other method of discarding.

56 THE ADVENTURES OF

I now bade adieu to love, and resolved to pursue other less dangerous and expensive pleasures. I fell into the acquaintance of a set of jolly companions, who slept all day, and drank all night: fellows who might rather be said to consume time than to live. Their best conversation was nothing but noise: singing, hallowing, wrangling, drinking, toasting, sp—wing, smoaking, were the chief ingredients of our entertainment. And yet, bad as they were, they were more tolerable than our graver scenes, which were either excessive tedious narratives of dull common matters of fact, or hot disputes about trifling matters, which commonly ended in a wager. This way of life the first serious reflection put a period to; and I became member of a club frequented by young men of great abilities. The bottle was now only called in to the assistance of our conversation, which rolled on the deepest points of philosophy. These gentlemen were engaged in a search after truth, in the pursuit of which they threw aside all the prejudices of education, and governed themselves only by the infallible guide of human reason. This great guide, after having shewn them the falsehood of that very ancient, but simple tenet, that there is such a being as a Deity in the universe, helped them to establish in his stead, a certain rule of right, by adhering to which they all arrived at the utmost purity of morals. Reflection made me as much delighted with this society, as it had taught me to despise and detest the former. I began now to esteem myself a being of a higher order than I had ever before conceived, and was the more charmed with this rule of right, as I really found in my own nature nothing repugnant to it. I held in utter contempt all persons who wanted any other inducement to virtue besides her intrin-fic beauty and excellence; and had so high an opinion of my present companions, with regard to their morality, that I would have trusted them with whatever was nearest and dearest to me. Whilst I was engaged in this delightful dream, two or three accidents happened successively, which at first much surprised me. For, one of our greatest philosophers, or rule of right-men, withdrew himself from us, taking with him the wife of one of his most intimate friends. Secondly, another of the same society left the club without remembering to take leave of his bail. A third having borrowed a sum of money of me, for which I received no security, when I asked him to repay it, absolutely denied the loan. These several practices, so inconsistent with our golden rule, made me begin to suspect its infallibility; but when I communicated my thoughts to one of the club, he said, There was nothing absolutely good or evil in itself; that actions were denominated good or bad by the circumstances of the agent. That possibly the man who ran away with his neighbour's wife, might be one of very good inclinations, but over-prevalled on by the violence of an unruly passion, and in other particulars, might be a very worthy member of society: that if the beauty of any woman created in him an uneasiness, he had a right from nature to relieve himself; with many other things, which I then detested so much, that I took leave of the society that very evening, and never returned to it again. Being now reduced to a state of solitude which I did not like, I became a great frequenter of the play-houses, which indeed was always my favourite diversion, and most evenings passed away two or three hours behind the scenes, where I met with several poets, with whom I made engagements at the taverns. Some of the players were likewise of our parties. At these meetings we were generally entertained by the poets with reading their performances, and by the players with repeating their parts: upon which occasions, I observed the gentleman who furnished our entertainment, was commonly the best pleased of the company; who, though they were pretty civil to him to his face, seldom failed to take the first opportunity of his absence to ridicule him. Now I made some remarks, which probably are too obvious to be worth relating. 'Sir,' says Adams, 'your remarks, if you please.' First then, says he, I concluded that the general observation, that wits are most inclined to vanity, is not true. Men are equally vain of riches, strength, beauty, honours, &c. But these appear of themselves to the eyes of the beholders, whereas the poor wit is obliged to produce his performance, to shew you his perfection; and on his readiness to do this, that vulgar opinion I have before-mentioned is grounded: but doth not the person who expends vast sums in the furniture of his house, or the ornaments of his person, who consumes much time, and employs great pains in dressing himself, or who thinks himself paid for self-denial, labour, or even villainy, by a title or a ribbon, sacrifice as much to vanity, as the poor wit, who is desirous to read you his poem or his play? My second remark was, that vanity is the worst of passions, and more apt to contaminate the mind than any other: for as selfishness is much more general than we please to allow it, so it is natural to hate and envy those who stand between us and the good we desire. Now, in lust and ambition these are few; and even in avarice we find many who are no obstacles to our pursuits; but the vain man seeks pre-eminence; and every thing which is excellent or praise-worthy in another, renders him the mark of his antipathy. Adams now began to fumble in his pockets, and soon cried out, ‘O la! I have it not about me.’—Upon this the gentleman asked him what he was searching for; he said, he searched after a sermon, which he thought his master-piece, against vanity. ‘Fy upon it, fy upon it,’ cries he, ‘why do

60 THE ADVENTURES OF

' I ever leave that sermon out of my pocket?
 ' I wish it was within five miles; I would ' willingly fetch it, to read it to you.' The gentleman answerèd, that there was no need, for he was cured of the passion. ' And for ' that very reason,' quoth Adams, ' I would ' read it, for I am confident you would ad' mire it. Indeed I have never been a great' er enemy to any passion than that silly one ' of vanity.' The gentleman smiled, and proceeded—From this society I easily passed to that of the gamesters, where nothing remarkable happened, but the finishing my fortune, which those gentlemen soon helped me to the end of. This opened scenes of life hitherto unknown; poverty and distress, with their horrid train of duns, attorneys, bailiffs, haunted me day and night. My clothes grew shabby, my credit bad, my friends and acquaintance of all kinds cold. In this situation, the strangest thought imaginable came into my head; and what was this, but to write a play? for I had sufficient leisure; fear of bailiffs confined me every day to my room; and having always had a little inclination, and something of a genius that way, I set myself to work, and within a few months produced a piece of five acts, which was accepted of at the theatre.
 I remembered to have formerly taken tickets

62 THE ADVENTURES OF

of other poets for their benefits, long before the appearance of their performances; and resolving to follow a precedent which was so well suited to my present circumstances, I immediately provided myself with a large number of little papers. Happy indeed would be the state of poetry, would these tickets pass current at the bakehouse, the alehouse, and the chandler's shop: but alas! far otherwise; no tailor will take them in payment for buckram, canvas, stay-tape; nor no bailiff for civility-money. They are indeed no more than a passport to beg with, a certificate that the owner wants five shillings, which induces well-disposed Christians to charity. I now experienced what is worse than poverty, or rather what is the worst consequence of poverty; I mean attendance and dependence on the great. Many a morning have I waited hours in the cold parlours of men of quality, where, after seeing the lowest rascals in lace and embroidery, the pimps and buffoons in fashion admitted, I have been sometimes told, on sending in my name, that my Lord could not possibly see me this morning: a sufficient assurance that I should never more get entrance into that house. Sometimes I have been at last admitted; and the great man hath thought proper to excuse himself, by telling me he was tied up. 'Tied ‘ up,’ said Adams, ‘ pray what’s that?’ Sir, says the gentleman, the profit which book-fellers allowed authors for the best works, was so very small, that certain men of birth and fortune some years ago, who were the patrons of wit and learning, thought fit to encourage them farther, by entering into voluntary subscriptions for their encouragement. Thus Prior, Rowe, Pope, and some other men of genius, received large sums for their labours from the public. This seemed so easy a method of getting money, that many of the lowest scribblers of the times ventured to publish their works in the same way; and many had the assurance to take in subscriptions for what was not writ, nor ever intended. Subscriptions in this manner growing infinite, and a kind of tax on the public; some persons finding it not so easy a task to discern good from bad authors, or to know what genius was worthy encouragement, and what was not, to prevent the expence of subscribing to so many, invented a method to excuse themselves from all subscriptions whatever; and this was to receive a small sum of money in consideration of giving a large one if ever they subscribed; which many have done, and many more have pretended to have done, in order to silence all solicitation. The same method was likewise

64 THE ADVENTURES OF

taken with playhouse tickets, which were no less a public grievance; and this is what they call being tied up from subscribing. 'I can't say but the term is apt enough, and somewhat typical,' said Adams; 'for a man of large fortune, who ties himself up, as you call it, from the encouragement of men of merit, ought to be tied up in reality.' Well, Sir, says the gentleman, to return to my story. Sometimes I have received a guinea from a man of quality, given with as ill a grace as alms are generally to the meanest beggar, and purchased too with as much time spent in attendance, as, if it had been spent in honest industry, might have brought me more profit with infinitely more satisfaction. After about two months spent in this disagreeable way with the utmost mortification, when I was pluming my hopes on the prospect of a plentiful harvest from my play, upon applying to the prompter to know when it came into rehearsal, he informed me he had received orders from the managers to return me the play again; for that they could not possibly act it that season; but if I would take it and revise it against the next, they would be glad to see it again. I snatch'd it from him with great indignation, and retired to my room, where I threw myself on the bed in a fit of despair——' You should ‘rather have thrown yourself on your knees,’ says Adams; ‘for despair is sinful.’ As soon, continued the gentleman, as I had indulged the first tumult of my passion, I began to consider coolly what course I should take, in a situation without friends, money, credit, or reputation of any kind. After revolving many things in my mind, I could see no other possibility of furnishing myself with the miserable necessaries of life than to retire to a garret near the Temple, and commence hackney-writer to the lawyers; for which I was well qualified, being an excellent penman. This purpose I resolved on, and immediately put it in execution. I had an acquaintance with an attorney who had formerly transacted affairs for me, and to him I applied: but instead of furnishing me with any business, he laughed at my undertaking, and told me, He was afraid I should turn his deeds into plays, and he should expect to see them on the stage. Not to tire you with instances of this kind from others, I found that Plato himself did not hold poets in greater abhorrence than these men of business do. Whenever I durst venture to a coffeehouse, which was on Sundays only, a whisper ran round the room, which was constantly attended with a sneer—That’s Poet Wilson: for I know not whether you have observed it, but there is a malignity in the nature of man, which, when not weeded out, or at least covered by a good education and politeness, delights in making another uneasy or dissatisfied with himself. This abundantly appears in all assemblies, except those which are filled by people of fashion, and especially among the younger people of both sexes, whose births and fortunes place them just without the polite circles; I mean the lower class of the gentry, and the higher of the mercantile world, who are, in reality, the worst bred part of mankind. Well, Sir, whilst I continued in this miserable state, with scarce sufficient business to keep me from starving, the reputation of a poet being my bane, I accidentally became acquainted with a bookseller, who told me, It was a pity a man of my learning and genius should be obliged to such a method of getting his livelihood; that he had a compassion for me, and if I would engage with him, he would undertake to provide handsomely for me. A man in my circumstances, as he very well knew, had no choice. I accordingly accepted his proposal with his conditions, which were none of the most favourable, and fell to translating with all my might. I had no longer reason to lament the want of business; for he furnished me with so much, that in Half a-year I almost writ myself blind. I likewise contracted a distemper by my sedentary life, in which no part of my body was exercised but my right arm, which rendered me incapable of writing for a long time. This unluckily happened to delay the publication of a work, and my last performance not having sold well, the bookseller declined any further engagement, and aspersed me to his brethren as a careless idle fellow. I had, however, by having half-worked and half-starved myself to death, during the time I was in his service, saved a few guineas, with which I bought a lottery ticket, resolving to throw myself into Fortune's lap, and try if she would make me amends for the injuries she had done me at the gaming-table. This purchase being made, left me almost penniless; when, as if I had not been sufficiently miserable, a bailiff in woman's cloaths got admittance to my chamber, whither he was directed by the bookseller. He arrested me at my tailor's suit for thirty-five pounds; a sum for which I could not procure bail, and was therefore conveyed to his house, where I was locked up in an upper chamber. I had now neither health (for I was scarce recovered from my indisposition) liberty, money, or friends; and had abandoned all hopes, and even the defire of life. ‘ But this could not last long,’ said Adams; ‘ for doubtless the tailor recalled you the moment he was truly acquainted with your affairs, and knew that your circumstances would not permit you to pay him.’ Oh, Sir, answered the gentleman, he knew that before he arrested me; nay, he knew that nothing but incapacity could prevent me paying my debts; for I had been his customer many years, had spent vast sums of money with him, and had always paid most punctually in my prosperous days: but when I reminded him of this, with assurances, that, if he would not molest my endeavours, I would pay him all the money I could by my utmost labour and industry procure, reserving only what was sufficient to preserve me alive; he answered, his patience was worn out; that I had put him off from time to time; that he wanted the money; that he had put it into a lawyer’s hands; and if I did not pay him immediately, or find security, I must lie in goal, and expect no mercy. ‘ He may expect mercy,’ cries Adams, starting from his chair, ‘ where he will find none. How can such a wretch repeat the Lord’s prayer, where the word, which is translated, I know not for what reason, Trespasses, is in the original Debts? and as surely as we do not forgive others

68 THE ADVENTURES OF

' their debts when they are unable to pay
 ' them ; so surely shall we ourselves be un-' forgiven, when we are in no condition of ' paying.' He ceased, and the gentleman proceeded. While I was in this deplorable situation, a former acquaintance, to whom I had communicated my lottery-ticket, found me out, and, making me a visit, with great delight in his countenance, shook me heartily by the hand, and wished me joy of my good fortune : ' For,' says he, ' your ticket ' is come up a prize of 3000 l.' Adams snapt his fingers at these words in an ecstasy of joy ; which, however, did not continue long : for the gentleman thus proceeded, Alas ! Sir, this was only a trick of fortune to sink me the deeper : for I had disposed of this lottery-ticket two days before to a relation, who refused lending me a shilling without it, in order to procure myself bread. As soon as my friend was acquainted with my unfortunate sale, he began to revile me, and remind me of the ill conduct and miscarriages of my life. He said, ' I was one whom ' fortune could not save, if she would ; that ' I was now ruined beyond any hopes of re' trieval, nor must expect any pity from my ' friends ; that it would be extreme weakness,
 ' to compassionate the misfortunes of a man
 ' who ran headlong to his own destruction.'

70 THE ADVENTURES OF

He then painted to me, in as lively colours as he was able, the happiness I should have now enjoyed, had I not foolishly disposed of my ticket. I urged the plea of necessity; but he made no answer to that, and began again to revile me, till I could bear it no longer, and desired him to finish his visit. I soon exchanged the bailiff's house for a prison; where, as I had not money sufficient to procure me a separate apartment, I was crowded in with a great number of miserable wretches, in common with whom I was destitute of every convenience of life, even that which all the brutes enjoy, wholesome air. In these dreadful circumstances I applied by letter to several of my old acquaintance, and such to whom I had formerly lent money without any great prospect of its being returned, for their assistance; but in vain. An excuse instead of a denial was the gentlest answer I received. — Whilst I languished in a condition too horrible to be described, and which in a land of humanity, and what is much more, Christianity, seems a strange punishment for a little inadvertency and indiscretion; whilst I was in this condition, a fellow came into the prison, and enquiring me out, delivered me the following letter:

“ S I R,

“ My father, to whom you sold your ticket “ in the last lottery, died the same day in “ which it came up a prize, as you have pos“ sibly heard, and left me sole heiress of all “ his fortune. I am so much touched with “ your present circumstances, and the un“ easiness you must feel at having been driven “ to dispose of what might have made you “ happy, that I must desire your acceptance “ of the inclosed, and am,

“ Your humble servant,

“ HARRIET HEARTY.”

And what do you think was inclosed? ‘ I ‘ don’t know,’ cried Adams; ‘ Not less than ‘ a guinea, I hope.’ Sir, it was a bank-‘ note for L. 200. ‘ L. 200!’ cried Adams, in a rapture. No less I assure you, answered the gentleman; a sum I was not half so delighted with, as with the dear name of the generous girl that sent it me; and who was not only the best, but the handsomest creature in the universe; and for whom I had long had a passion, which I never durst disclose to her. I kissed her name a thousand times, my eyes overflowing with tenderness and gratitude, I repeated——But not to detain you with these raptures, I immediately acquired my liberty, and having paid all my debts, departed, with upwards of fifty pounds in my pocket, to thank my kind deliverer. She happened to be then out of town, a circumstance which, upon reflection, pleased me; for by that means I had an opportunity to appear before her in a more decent dress. At her return to town within a day or two, I threw myself at her feet with the most ardent acknowledgments, which she rejected with an unfeigned greatness of mind, and told me, I could not oblige her more than by never mentioning, or, if possible, thinking on a circumstance which must bring to my mind an accident that might be grievous to me to think on. She proceeded thus: 'What I have done is in my own eyes a trifle, and perhaps infinitely less than would have become me to do. And if you think of engaging in any business, where a larger sum may be serviceable to you, I shall not be over rigid, either as to the security or interest.' I endeavoured to express all the gratitude in my power to this profusion of goodness, though perhaps it was my enemy, and began to afflict my mind with more agonies than all the miseries I had underwent; it affected me with severer reflections than poverty, distress, and prisons united, had been able to make me feel: for, Sir, these acts and professions of kindness, which were sufficient to have raised in a good heart the most violent passion of friendship to one of the same, or to age and ugliness in a different sex, came to me from a woman, a young and beautiful woman, one whose perfections I had long known, and for whom I had long conceived a violent passion, though with a despair, which made me endeavour rather to curb and conceal, than to nourish or acquaint her with it. In short, they came upon me united with beauty, softness, and tenderness, such bewitching smiles—O, Mr Adams, in that moment I lost myself, and forgetting our different situations, nor considering what return I was making to her goodness, by desiring her, who had given me so much, to bestow her all, I laid gently hold on her hand, and conveying it to my lips, I pressed it with inconceivable ardour; then, lifting up my swimming eyes, I saw her face and neck overspread with one blush; she offered to withdraw her hand, yet not so as to deliver it from mine, though I held it with the gentlest force. We both stood trembling, her eyes cast on the ground, and mine stedfastly fixed on her. Good God, what was then the condition of my soul! burning with love, desire, admiration, gratitude, and every tender passion, all bent on one charming object.

Passion at last got the better of both reason and respect, and softly letting go her hand, I offered madly to clasp her in my arms; when a little recovering herself, she started from me, asking me, with some shew of anger, if she had any reason to expect this treatment from me. I then fell prostrate before her, and told her, if I had offended, my life was absolutely in her power, which I would in any manner lose for her sake. ‘ Nay, ‘ Madam,’ said I, ‘ you shall not be so ready ‘ to punish me as I to suffer. I own my ‘ guilt. I detest the reflection that I would ‘ have sacrificed your happiness to mine.
 ‘ Believe me, I sincerely repent my ingrati‘ tude; yet believe me too, it was my passion, ‘ my unbounded passion for you, which hur‘ ried me so far; I have loved you long and ‘ tenderly; and the goodness you have shewn ‘ me hath innocently weighed down a wretch ‘ undone before. Acquit me of all mean, ‘ mercenary views; and before I take my ‘ leave of you for ever, which I am resolved ‘ instantly to do, believe me, that fortune ‘ could have raised me to no height, to which ‘ I would not have gladly lifted you. O ‘ curst be fortune!’ ‘ Do not,’ says she, interrupting me with the sweetest voice, ‘ do ‘ not curse fortune, since she hath made me happy; and if she hath put your happi'ness in my power, I have told you, you ' shall ask nothing in reason which I will re' fuse.' ' Madam,' said I, ' you mistake

 ' me, if you imagine, as you seem, my hap' piness is in the power of fortune now. You ' have obliged me too much already; if I ' have any wish, it is for some blest accident
 ' by which I may contribute with my life to ' the least augmentation of your felicity. As ' for myself, the only happiness I can ever ' have, will be hearing of yours; and if fortune
 ' would make that complete, I will forgive
 ' her all her wrongs to me.' ' You may indeed,' answered she, smiling, ' for your own hap' piness must be included in mine. I have ' long known your worth; nay, I must con' fess,' said she blushing, ' I have long dis' covered that passion for me you profess, not' withstanding those endeavours which I am ' convinced were unaffected, to conceal it: and ' if all I can give with reason will not suf' fice,---take reason away,---and now I believe ' you cannot ask me what I will deny.'-- She uttered these words with a sweetness not to be imagined. I immediately started; my blood which lay freezing at my heart, rushed tumultuously through every vein. I stood for a moment silent; then flying to her, I caught her in my arms, no longer resisting,
 ---and softly told her, she must give me thea herself.—O Sir,---can I describe her look? She remained silent, and almost motionless, several minutes. At last, recovering herself a little, she insisted on my leaving her, and in such a manner, that I instantly obeyed: you may imagine, however, I soon saw her again.—But I ask pardon, I fear I have detained you too long in relating the particulars of the former interview. ‘So far otherwise,’ said Adams, licking his lips, ‘that I could willingly hear it over again.’ Well, Sir, continued the gentleman, to be as concise as possible, within a week she consented to make me the happiest of mankind. We were married shortly after; and when I came to examine the circumstances of my wife’s fortune, (which I do assure you I was not presently at leisure enough to do) I found it amounted to about six thousand pounds, most part of which lay in effects; for her father had been a wine-merchant, and she seemed willing, if I liked it, that I should carry on the same trade. I readily, and too inconsiderately, undertook it: for, not having been bred up to the secrets of the business, and endeavouring to deal with the utmost honesty and uprightnes, I soon found our fortune in a declining way, and my trade decreasing by little and little: for my wines, which I never adulterated after their importation, and were sold as neat as they came over, were univerfally decried by the vintners, to whom I could not allow them quite as cheap as thofe who gained double the profit by a lefs price. I foon began to despair of improving our fortune by thefe means; nor was I at all eafy at the vifits and familiarity of many who had been my acquaintance in my profperity, but denied and fhunned me in my adverfity, and now very forwardly renewed their acquaintance with me. In fhort, I had fufficiently feen, that the pleasures of the world are chiefly folly, and the bufinefs of it moftly knavery; and both, nothing better than vanity: the men of pleasure tearing one another to pieces, from the emulation of fpending money, and the men of bufinefs, from envy in getting it. My happinefs confifted entirely in my wife, whom I loved with an inexprefible fondnefs, which was perfectly returned; and my profpects were no other than to provide for our growing family; for ſhe was now big of her fecond child: I therefore took an opportunity to afk her opinion of entering into a retired life, which, after hearing my reafons, and perceiving my affection for it, ſhe readily embraced. We foon put our ſmall fortune, now reduced under three thouſand pounds, into money, with part of which we purchafed this little place, whither we retired ſoon after her delivery, from a world full of bustle, noise, hatred, envy and ingratitude, to ease, quiet, and love. We have here lived almost twenty years, with little other conversation than our own, most of the neighbourhood taking us for very strange people; the Squire of the parish representing me as a madman, and the Parson as a presbyterian; because I will not hunt with the one, nor drink with the other. 'Sir,' says Adams, 'Fortune hath, I think, paid you all her debts in this sweet retirement.' Sir, replied the gentleman, I am thankful to the great Author of all things for the blessings I here enjoy. I have the best of wives, and three pretty children, for whom I have the true tenderness of a parent; but no blessings are pure in this world. Within three years after my arrival here I lost my eldest son. (Here he sighed bitterly.) 'Sir,' says Adams, 'we must submit to Providence, and consider death is common to all.' We must submit, indeed, answered the gentleman; and if he had died, I could have borne the loss with patience; but alas! Sir, he was stolen away from my door by some wicked travelling people whom they call Gipsies; nor could I ever with the most diligent search recover him. Poor child! he had the sweetest look, the exact picture of his mother; at which some tears unwittingly dropped from his eyes, as did likewise from those of Adams, who always sympathised with his friends on those occasions. Thus, Sir, said the gentleman, I have finished my story, in which, if I have been too particular, I ask your pardon; and now, if you please, I will fetch you another bottle; which proposal the parson thankfully accepted.

C H A P. IV.

*A description of Mr Wilson's way of living.
The tragical adventure of the dog, and other grave matters.*

THE gentleman returned with the bottle; and Adams and he sat some time silent, when the former started up, and cried, 'No, that won't do.' The gentleman enquired into his meaning; he answered, He had been considering that it was possible the late famous King Theodore might have been that very son whom he had lost; but added, that his age could not answer that imagination. However, says he, God disposes all things for the best, and very probably he may be some great man, or duke, and may, one day or other, revisit you in that capacity. The gentleman answered, he should know him among ten thousand; for he had a mark on his left breast of a strawberry, which his mother had given him by longing for that fruit.

80 THE ADVENTURES OF

That beautiful young lady, the Morning, now rose from her bed, and with a countenance blooming with fresh youth and sprightliness, like Miss S — h *, with soft dews hanging on her pouting lips, began to take her early walk over the eastern hills; and presently after, that gallant person the Sun stole softly from his wife's chamber to pay his addresses to her; when the gentleman asked his guest if he would walk forth and survey his little garden, which he readily agreed to, and Joseph at the same time awaking from a sleep in which he had been two hours buried, went with them. No parterres, no fountains, no statues, embellished this little garden. Its only ornament was a short walk, shaded on each side by a filbert-hedge, with a small alcove at one end, whither in hot weather the gentleman and his wife used to retire and divert themselves with their children, who played in the walk before them. But though vanity had no votary in this little spot, here was variety of fruit, and every thing useful for the kitchen, which was abundantly sufficient to catch the admiration of Adams, who told the gentleman he had certainly a good gardener. Sir, answered he, that gardener is now before you; whatever you see here, is the work solely of my own hands. Whilst I am providing necessaries for my table, I likewise procure myself an appetite for them. In fair seasons, I seldom pass less than six hours of the twenty-four in this place, where I am not idle; and by these means I have been able to preserve my health ever since my arrival here without assistance from physic. Hither I generally repair at the dawn, and exercise myself, whilst my wife dresses her children, and prepares our breakfast: after which we are seldom asunder during the residue of the day; for when the weather will not permit them to accompany me here, I am usually within with them; for I am neither ashamed of conversing with my wife, nor of playing with my children: to say the truth, I do not perceive that inferiority of understanding, which the levity of rakes, the dulness of men of business, or the austerity of the learned would persuade us of in women. As for my woman, I declare I have found none of my own sex capable of making juster observations on life, or of delivering them more agreeably; nor do I believe any one possessed of a faithfuller or braver friend. And sure as this friendship is sweetened with more delicacy and tenderness, so it is confirmed by dearer pledges than can attend the closest male alliance: for what union can be so fast, as our common interest in the fruits of our embraces? Perhaps, Sir, you are not yourself a father; if you are not, be assured you cannot conceive the delight I have in my little ones. Would you not despise me, if you saw me stretched on the ground, and my children playing round me? ‘I should reverence the sight,’ quoth Adams, ‘I myself am now the father of six, and have been of eleven, and I can say I never scourged a child of my own, unless as his schoolmaster, and then have felt every stroke on my own posteriors. And as to what you say concerning women, I have often lamented my own wife did not understand Greek.’—The gentleman smiled, and answered, he would not be apprehended to insinuate that his own had an understanding above the care of her family; on the contrary, says he, my Harriet, I assure you, is a notable housewife, and few gentlemen’s house-keepers understand cookery and confectionary better; but these are arts which she hath no great occasion for now: however, the wine you commended so much last night at supper, was of her own making, as is indeed all the liquor in my house, except my beer, which falls to my province. (‘And I assure you it is as excellent,’ quoth Adams, ‘as ever I tasted.’) We formerly kept a maid-servant, but since my girls have been growing up, she is unwilling to indulge them in idleness; for as the fortunes I shall give them will be very small, we intend not to breed them above the rank they are likely to fill hereafter, nor teach them to despise, or ruin a plain husband. Indeed I could wish a man of my own temper, and a retired life, might fall to their lot: for I have experienced that calm serene happiness which is seated in content, is inconsistent with the hurry and bustle of the world. He was proceeding thus, when the little things, being just risen, ran eagerly towards him, and asked him blessing: they were shy to the strangers; but the eldest acquainted her father, that her mother and the young gentlewoman were up, and that breakfast was ready. They all went in, where the gentleman was surpris'd at the beauty of Fanny, who had now recovered herself from her fatigue, and was entirely clean dressed; for the rogues who had taken away her purse, had left her her bundle. But if he was so much amazed at the beauty of this young creature, his guests were no less charmed at the tenderness which appeared in the behaviour of the husband and wife to each other, and to their children, and at the dutiful and affectionate behaviour of these to their parents. These instances pleased the well-disposed mind of Adams equally with the readiness which they expressed to oblige their guests, and their forwardness to offer them the best of every thing in their house; and what delighted him still more, was an instance or two of their charity: for whilst they were at breakfast, the good woman was called forth to assist her sick neighbour, which she did with some cordials made for the public use; and the good man went into his garden at the same time, to supply another with something which he wanted thence; for they had nothing which those who wanted it were not welcome to. These good people were in the utmost cheerfulness, when they heard the report of a gun; and immediately afterwards a little dog, the favourite of the eldest daughter, came limping in all bloody, and laid himself at his mistress's feet: the poor girl, who was about eleven years old, burst into tears at the sight; and presently one of the neighbours came in and informed them, that the young squire, the son of the lord of the manor, had shot him as he past by, swearing at the same time he would prosecute the master of him for keeping a spaniel; for that he had given notice, he would not suffer one in the parish. The dog, whom his mistress had taken into her lap, died in a few minutes, licking her hand. She express'd great agony at his loss; and the other children began to cry for their sister's misfortune, nor could Fanny herself refrain. Whilst the father and mother attempted to comfort her, Adams grasped his crabs-tick, and would have fallen out after the squire, had not Joseph with-held him. He could not, however, bridle his tongue—He pronounced the word Rascal with great emphasis; said, he deserved to be hanged more than a highwayman, and wished he had the scourging him. The mother took the child, lamenting and carrying the dead favourite in her arms, out of the room, when the gentleman said, this was the second time this squire had endeavoured to kill the little wretch, and had wounded him smartly once before; adding, he could have no motive but ill-nature; for the little thing, which was not near as big as one's fist, had never been twenty yards from the house in the six years his daughter had had it. He said he had done nothing to deserve this usage, but his father had too great a fortune to contend with: that he was as absolute as any tyrant in the universe, and had killed all the dogs, and taken away all the guns in the neighbourhood; and not only that but he trampled down hedges, and rode over corn and gardens, with no more regard than if they were the highway. ' I wish I

* Whoever the reader pleases.

82 THE ADVENTURES OF

84 THE ADVENTURES OF

86 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ could catch him in my garden,’ said Adams, ‘ though I would rather forgive him riding ‘ through my house than such an ill-natured ‘ act as this.’

The cheerfulness of their conversation being interrupted by this accident, in which the guests could be of no service to their kind entertainer, and as the mother was taken up in administering consolation to the poor girl, whose disposition was too good hastily to forget the sudden loss of her little favourite, which had been fondling with her a few minutes before; and as Joseph and Fanny were impatient to get home and begin those previous ceremonies to their happiness which Adams had insisted on, they now offered to take their leave. The gentleman importuned them much to stay dinner: but when he found their eagerness to depart, he summoned his wife, and accordingly having performed all the usual ceremonies of bows and curtsies, more pleasant to be seen than to be related, they took their leave, the gentleman and his wife heartily wishing them a good journey, and they as heartily thanking them for their kind entertainment. They then departed, Adams declaring, that this was the manner in which the people had lived in the golden age.

C H A P. V.

A disputation on schools, held on the road between Mr Abraham Adams and Joseph; and a discovery not unwelcome to them both.

OUR travellers having well refreshed themselves at the gentleman's house, Joseph and Fanny with sleep, and Mr Abraham Adams with ale and tobacco, renewed their journey with great alacrity; and, pursuing the road in which they were directed, travelled many miles before they met with any adventure worth relating. In this interval, we shall present our readers with a very curious discourse, as we apprehend it, concerning public schools, which passed between Mr Joseph Andrews and Mr Abraham Adams.

They had not gone far, before Adams calling to Joseph, asked him if he had attended to the gentleman's story; he answered, 'To all the former part.' 'And don't you think,' says he, 'he was a very unhappy man in his youth?' 'A very unhappy man indeed,' answered the other. 'Joseph,' cries Adams, screwing up his mouth, 'I have found it; I have discovered the cause of all the misfortunes which befel him. A public school, Joseph, was the cause of all the ‘ calamities which he afterwards suffered.

88 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ Public schools are the nurseries of all vice ‘ and immorality. All the wicked fellows ‘ whom I remember at the university were ‘ bred at them. — Ah, Lord! I can remem‘ ber as well as if it was but yesterday, a ‘ knot of them; they called them king’s scho‘ lars, I forget why—very wicked fellows!
‘ Joseph, you may thank the Lord you were ‘ not bred at a public school, you would ‘ never have preserved your virtue as you ‘ have. The first care I always take, is of a ‘ boy’s morals; I had rather he should be a ‘ blockhead than an Atheist or a Presbyte‘ rian. What is all the learning of the world ‘ compared to his immortal soul? What ‘ shall a man take in exchange for his soul?
‘ But the masters of great schools trouble ‘ themselves about no such things. I have ‘ known a lad of eighteen at the university, ‘ who hath not been able to say his cate‘ chism; but for my own part, I always ‘ scourged a lad sooner for missing that than ‘ any other lesson. Believe me, child, all ‘ that gentleman’s misfortunes arose from ‘ his being educated at a public school.’
‘ It doth not become me,’ answered Joseph, ‘ to dispute any thing, Sir, with you, espe‘ cially a matter of this kind; for to be sure ‘ you must be allowed by all the world to ' be the best teacher of a school in all our ' county.' ' Yes, that,' says Adams, ' I ' believe, is granted me; that I may without ' much vanity pretend to---nay, I believe I ' may go to the next county too---but glo-

 ' riari non est meum.'----' However, Sir, as ' you are pleased to bid me speak,' says Joseph,
 ' you know my late master, Sir Thomas
 ' Booby, was bred at a public school, and he ' was the finest gentleman in all the neigh' bourhood. And I have often heard him ' say, if he had a hundred boys he would ' breed them all at the same place. It was ' his opinion, and I have often heard him
 ' deliver it, that a boy taken from a public ' school, and carried into the world, will ' learn more in one year there, than one of a ' private education will in five. He used to ' say, the school itself initiated him a great ' way, (I remember that was his very ex' pression); for great schools are little so' cieties, where a boy of any observation
 ' may see in epitome what he will afterwards
 ' find in the world at large.' ' Hinc ille
 ' lachrymæ; for that very reason,' quoth
 ' Adams, ' I prefer a private school, where ' boys may be kept in innocence and igno' rance: for, according to that fine passage
 ' in the play of Cato, the only English tra' gedy I ever read,

90 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ If knowledge of the world must make men villains, ‘ May Juba ever live in ignorance.’

‘ Who would not rather preserve the purity ‘ of his child, than wish him to attain the ‘ whole circle of arts and sciences; which, ‘ by the bye, he may learn in the classes of ‘ a private school? For I would not be vain, ‘ but I esteem myself to be second to none, ‘ nulli secundum, in teaching these things; ‘ so that a lad may have as much learning ‘ in a private as in a public education.’ ‘ And ‘ with submission,’ answered Joseph, ‘ he ‘ may get as much vice, witness several coun‘ try gentlemen, who were educated within ‘ five miles of their own houses, and are as ‘ wicked as if they had known the world ‘ from their infancy. I remember when I ‘ was in the stable, if a young horse was vi‘ cious in his nature, no correction would ‘ make him otherwise; I take it to be equally ‘ the same among men: if a boy be of a ‘ mischievous, wicked inclination, no school, ‘ though ever so private, will ever make him ‘ good; on the contrary, if he be of a righ‘ teous temper, you may trust him to London, ‘ or where-ever else you please; he will be ‘ in no danger of being corrupted. Besides, ‘ I have often heard my master say, that the ‘ discipline practised in public schools was ‘ much better than that in private.’—‘ You ‘ talk like a jackanapes,’ cried Adams, ‘ and ‘ so did your master. Discipline indeed !

 ‘ because one man scourges twenty or thirty ‘ boys more in a morning than another, is ‘ he therefore a better disciplinarian? I do ‘ presume to confer in this point with all ‘ who have taught from Chiron’s time to ‘ this day ; and, if I was master of six boys ‘ only, I would preserve as good discipline ‘ among them as the master of the greatest ‘ school in the world. I say nothing, young ‘ man ; remember I say nothing ; but if Sir ‘ Thomas himself had been educated nearer ‘ home, and under the tuition of somebody, ‘ remember I name nobody, it might have ‘ been better for him—but his father must ‘ institute him in the knowledge of the world.
 ‘ Nemo mortalium omnibus horis sapit.’ Joseph seeing him run on in this manner, asked pardon many times, assuring him he had no intention to offend. ‘ I believe you had ‘ not, child,’ said he, ‘ and I am not angry ‘ with you. But for maintaining good dis‘ cipline in a school ; for this’—And then he ran on as before, named all the masters who are recorded in old books, and preferred himself to them all. Indeed, if this good man had an enthusiasm, or what the vulgar call a blind side, it was this : he thought a school-master the greatest character in the world, and himself the greatest of all school-masters, neither of which points he would have given up to Alexander the Great at the head of his army.

Adams continued his subject till they came to one of the beautifullest spots of ground in the universe. It was a kind of natural amphitheatre, formed by the winding of a small rivulet, which was planted with thick woods, and the trees rose gradually above each other by the natural ascent of the ground they stood on; which ascent as they hid with their boughs, they seemed to have been disposed by the design of the most skilful planter. The soil was spread with a verdure which no paint could imitate; and the whole place might have raised romantic ideas in elder minds than those of Joseph and Fanny, without the assistance of love.

Here they arrived about noon, and Joseph proposed to Adams that they should rest a while in this delightful place, and refresh themselves with some provisions which the good-nature of Mrs Wilson had provided him with. Adams made no objection to the proposal; so down they sat, and pulling out a cold fowl, and a bottle of wine, they made a repast with a chearfulness which might have attracted the envy of more splendid tables. I should not omit, that they found among their provisions a little paper containing a piece of gold, which Adams imagining had been put there by mistake, would have returned back, to restore it; but he was at last convinced by Joseph, that Mr Wilson had taken this handsome way of furnishing them with a supply for their journey, on his having related the distress which they had been in, when they were relieved by the generosity of the pedlar. Adams said, he was glad to see such an instance of goodness, not so much for the conveniency which it brought them, as for the sake of the doer, whose reward would be great in heaven. He likewise comforted himself with a reflection, that he should certainly have an opportunity of returning it him; for the gentleman was within a week to make a journey into Somersetshire, to pass through Adams's parish, and had faithfully promised to call on him: a circumstance which we thought too immaterial to mention before; but which those who have as great affection for that gentleman as ourselves, will rejoice at, as it may give them hopes of seeing him again. Then Joseph made a speech on charity, which the reader, if he is so disposed, may see in the next chapter; for we scorn to betray him into any such reading, without first giving him warning.

C H A P. VI.

Moral reflections by Joseph Andrews, with the hunting adventure, and Parson Adams's miraculous escape.

I HAVE often wondered, Sir, said Joseph, to observe so few instances of charity among mankind; for tho' the goodness of a man's heart did not incline him to relieve the distresses of his fellow-creatures, methinks the desire of honour should move him to it. What inspires a man to build fine houses, to purchase fine furniture, pictures, clothes, and other things at a great expence, but an ambition to be respected more than other people? Now, would not one great act of charity, one instance of redeeming a poor family from all the miseries of poverty, restoring an unfortunate tradesman, by a sum of money, to the means of procuring a livelihood by his industry, discharging an undone debtor from his debts or a goal, or any such like example of goodness, create a man more honour and respect than he could acquire by the finest house, furniture, pictures, or clothes, that were ever beheld? for not only the object himself, who was thus relieved, but all who heard the name of such a person, must, I imagine, reverence him infinitely more than the possessor of all those other things: which when we so admire, we rather praise the builder, the workman, the painter, the lacemaker, the tailor, and the rest, by whose ingenuity they are produced, than the person who by his money makes them his own. For my own part, when I have waited behind my lady in a room hung with fine pictures, while I have been looking at them, I have never once thought of their owner, nor hath any one else, as I have observed; for when it has been asked whose picture that was, it was never once answered, the master's of the house; but Ammyconni, Paul Varnish, Hannibal Scratchi, or Hogarthi, which I suppose were the names of the painters: but if it was asked who redeemed such a one out of prison? who lent such a ruined tradesman money to set up? who clothed that family of poor small children? it is very plain what must be the answer. And besides, these great folks are mistaken, if they imagine they get any honour at all by these means; for I do not remember I was ever with my Lady at any house where she commended the house or furniture, but I have heard her at her return home make sport and jeer at whatever she had before commended; and I have been told by other gentlemen in livery, that it is the same in their families; but I defy the wisest man in the world to turn a true good action into ridicule. I defy him to do it. He who should endeavour it would be laughed at himself, instead of making others laugh. Nobody scarce doth any good, yet they all agree in praising those who do. Indeed, it is strange that all men should consent in commending goodness, and no man endeavour to deserve that commendation; whilst, on the contrary, all rail at wickedness, and all are as eager to be what they abuse. This I know not the reason of; but it is as plain as day-light to those who converse in the world, as I have done these three years. 'Are all the great folks wicked then?' says Fanny. To be sure there are some exceptions, answered Joseph. Some gentlemen of our cloth report charitable actions done by their lords and masters; and I have heard Squire Pope, the great poet, at my Lady's table, tell stories of a man that lived at a place called Ross, and another at the Bath, one Al—Al— I forget his name, but it is in the book of verses. This gentleman hath built up a stately house too, which the Squire likes very well: but his charity is seen farther than his house; though it stands on a hill, ay, and brings him more honour too. It was his charity that put him in the book, where the Squire says he puts all those who deserve it; and, to be sure, as he lives among all the great people, if there were any such, he would know them.—This was all of Mr Joseph Andrews's speech which I could get him to recollect, which I have delivered as near as was possible in his own words, with a very small embellishment. But I believe the reader hath not been a little surpris'd at the long silence of Parson Adams, especially as so many occasions offer'd themselves to exert his curiosity and observation. The truth is, he was fast asleep, and had so been from the beginning of the preceding narrative. And indeed, if the reader considers that so many hours had pass'd since he had clos'd his eyes, he will not wonder at his repose, though even Henly himself, or as great an orator (if any such be) had been in his rostrum or tub before him.

96 THE ADVENTURES OF

Joseph, who, whilst he was speaking, had continued in one attitude, with his head reclining on one side, and his eyes cast on the ground, no sooner perceiv'd, on looking up, the position of Adams, who was stretch'd on his back, and snored louder than the usual braying of the animal with the long ears, than he turn'd towards Fanny, and taking her by the hand, began a dalliance, which, though consistant with the purest innocence and decency, neither he would have attempted, nor she permitted before any witness. Whilst they amused themselves in this harmless and delightful manner, they heard a pack of hounds approaching in full cry towards them, and presently afterwards saw a hare pop forth from the wood, and, crossing the water, land within a few yards of them in the meadows. The hare was no sooner on shore, than it seated itself on its hinder legs, and listened to the sound of the pursuers. Fanny was wonderfully pleased with the little wretch, and eagerly longed to have it in her arms, that she might preserve it from the dangers which seemed to threaten it: but the rational part of the creation do not always aptly distinguish their friends from their foes; what wonder then if this silly creature, the moment it beheld her, fled from the friend, who would have protected it, and traversing the meadows again, passed the little rivulet on the opposite side? It was, however, so spent and weak, that it fell down twice or thrice in its way. This affected the tender heart of Fanny, who exclaimed, with tears in her eyes, against the barbarity of worrying a poor innocent defenceless animal out of its life, and putting it to the extremest torture for diversion. She had not much time to make reflections of this kind; for on a sud-

Then the hounds rushed through the wood, which resounded with their throats and the throats of their retinue who attended them on horseback. The dogs now past the rivulet, and pursued the footsteps of the hare; five horsemen attempted to leap over, three of whom succeeded, and two were in the attempt thrown from their saddles into the water; their companions, and their own horses too, proceeded after their sport, and left their friends and riders to invoke the assistance of fortune, or employ the more active means of strength and agility for their deliverance. Joseph, however, was not so unconcerned on this occasion; he left Fanny for a moment to herself, and ran to the gentlemen, who were immediately on their legs, shaking their ears, and easily with the help of his hand attained the bank (for the rivulet was not at all deep); and without staying to thank their kind assister, ran dripping across the meadows, calling to their brother sportsmen to stop their horses: but they heard them not.

The hounds were now very little behind their poor-reeling, staggering prey, which, fainting almost at every step, crawled thro' the wood, and had almost got round to the place where Fanny stood, when it was overtaken by its enemies; and, being driven out.

of the covert, was caught, and instantly tore to pieces before Fanny's face, who was unable to assist it with any aid more powerful than pity; nor could she prevail on Joseph, who had been himself a sportsman in his youth, to attempt any thing contrary to the laws of hunting, in favour of the hare, which he said was killed fairly.

The hare was caught within a yard or two of Adams, who lay asleep at a little distance from the lovers; and the hounds in devouring it, and pulling it backwards and forwards, had drawn it so close to him, that some of them (by mistake perhaps for the hare's skin) laid hold of the skirts of his cassock; others at the same time applying their teeth to his wig, which he had with a handkerchief fastened to his head, began to pull him about: and had not the motion of his body had more effect on him than seemed to be wrought by the noise, they must certainly have tasted his flesh, which delicious flavour might have been fatal to him: but being roused by these tuggings, he instantly awaked, and with a jerk delivering his head from his wig, he with most admirable dexterity recovered his legs, which now seemed the only members he could entrust his safety to. Having therefore escaped likewise from at least a third part of his cassock, which he willing-

* *
*

By left as his exuviae or spoils to the enemy, he fled with the utmost speed he could summon to his assistance. Nor let this be any detraction from the bravery of his character; let the number of the enemies, and the surprise in which he was taken, be considered; and if there be any modern so outrageously brave, that he cannot admit of flight in any circumstance whatever, I say (but I whisper that softly, and I solemnly declare, without any intention of giving offence to any brave man in the nation) I say, or rather I whisper that he is an ignorant fellow, and hath never read Homer nor Virgil, nor knows he any thing of Hector or Turnus; nay, he is unacquainted with the history of some great men living, who, though as brave as lions, ay, as tigers, have run away, the Lord knows how far, and the Lord knows why, to the surprise of their friends, and the entertainment of their enemies. But if persons of such heroic disposition are a little offended at the behaviour of Adams, we assure them they shall be as much pleased at what we shall immediately relate of Joseph Andrews. The master of the pack was just arrived, or, as the sportsmen call it, come in, when Adams set out, as we have before mentioned. This gentleman was generally said to be a great lover of humour; but, not to mince the matter, especially as we are upon this subject, he was a great hunter of men. Indeed he had hitherto followed the sport only with dogs of his own species; for he kept two or three couple of barking curs for that use only. However, as he thought he had now found a man nimble enough, he was willing to indulge himself with other sport, and accordingly crying out, 'Stole away,' encouraged the hounds to pursue Mr Adams, swearing it was the largest Jack-hare he ever saw; at the same time hallooing and hooping as if a conquered foe was flying before him; in which he was imitated by these two or three couple of human or rather two-legged curs on horseback which we have mentioned before.

Now thou, whoever thou art, whether a muse, or by what other name soever thou chusest to be called, who presidest over biography, and hast inspired all the writers of lives in these our times: thou who didst infuse such wonderful humour into the pen of immortal Gulliver; who hast carefully guided the judgement, whilst thou hast exalted the nervous manly style of thy Mallet: thou who hadst no hand in that dedication and preface, or the translations which thou wouldst willingly have struck out of the life of Cicero: Lastly, thou who, without the assistance of the least spice of literature, and even against his inclination, hast, in some pages of his book, forced Colley Cibber to write English; do thou assist me in what I find myself unequal to. Do thou introduce on the plain the young, the gay, the brave Joseph Andrews, whilst men shall view him with admiration and envy; tender virgins with love and anxious concern for his safety.

No sooner did Joseph Andrews perceive the distress of his friend, when first the quick scenting dogs attacked him, than he grasped his cudgel in his right hand, a cudgel which his father had of his grandfather, to whom a mighty strong man of Kent had given it for a present in that day when he broke three heads on the stage. It was a cudgel of mighty strength and wonderful art, made by one of Mr Deard's best workmen, whom no other artificer can equal; and who hath made all those sticks which the beaux have lately walked with about the Park in a morning: but this was far his master-piece; on its head was engraved a nose and chin, which might have been mistaken for a pair of nut-crackers. The learned have imagined it designed to represent the Gorgon: but it was in fact copied from the face of a certain long English baronet of infinite wit, humour, and gravity. He did intend to have engraved here many histories: As the first night of Captain B ——'s play, where you would have seen critics in embroidery transplanted from the boxes to the pit, whose ancient inhabitants were exalted to the galleries, where they played on catcalls. He did intend to have painted an auction room, where Mr Cock would have appeared aloft in his pulpit, trumpeting forth the praises of a China-bason; and with astonishment wondering that "Nobody bids more for that fine, that superb"—He did intend to have engraved many other things, but was forced to leave all out for want of room.

No sooner had Joseph grasped his cudgel in his hands, than lightning darted from his eyes; and the heroic youth, swift of foot, ran with the utmost speed to his friend's assistance. He overtook him just as Rockwood had laid hold of the skirt of his cassock, which being torn, hung to the ground. Reader, we would make a simile on this occasion, but for two reasons: the first is, it would interrupt the description, which should be rapid in this part; but that doth not weigh much, many precedents occurring for such an interruption: the second, and much the greater reason is, that we could find no simile adequate to our purpose: for indeed, what instance could we bring to set before our reader's eyes at once the idea of friendship, courage, youth, beauty, strength, and swiftness; all which blazed in the person of Joseph Andrews. Let those therefore that describe lions and tigers, heroes fiercer than both, raise their poems or plays with the simile of Joseph Andrews, who is himself above the reach of any simile.

Now Rockwood had laid fast hold on the Parson's skirts, and stopt his flight; which Joseph no sooner perceived, than he levelled his cudgel at his head, and laid him sprawling. Jowler and Ringwood then fell on his great-coat, and had undoubtedly brought him to the ground, had not Joseph, collecting all his force, given Jowler such a rap on the back, that, quitting his hold, he ran howling over the plain. A harder fate remained for thee, O Ringwood, Ringwood the best hound that ever pursued a hare, who never threw his tongue but where the scent was undoubtedly true; good at trailing; and sure in a highway, no babbler, no over-runner, respected by the whole pack, who, whenever he opened, knew the game was at hand. He fell by the stroke of Joseph. Thunder, and Plunder, and Wonder, and Blunder, were the next victims of his wrath, and measured their lengths on the ground. Then Fairmaid, a bitch which Mr John Temple had bred up in his house, and fed at his own table, and lately sent the squire fifty miles for a present, ran fiercely at Joseph, and bit him by the leg; no dog was ever fiercer than she, being descended from an Amazonian breed, and had worried bulls in her own country, but now waged an unequal fight; and had shared the fate of those we have mentioned before, had not Diana (the reader may believe or not as he pleases) in that instant interposed, and in the shape of the huntsman snatched her favourite up in her arms.

The parson now faced about, and with his crabstick felled many to the earth, and scattered others, till he was attacked by Cæsar, and pulled to the ground. Then Joseph flew to his rescue, and with such might fell on the victor, that, O eternal blot to his name! Cæsar ran yelping away.

The battle now raged with the most dreadful violence, when, lo! the huntsman, a man of years and dignity, lifted his voice, and called his hounds from the fight; telling them, in a language they understood, that it was in vain to contend longer; for that fate had decreed the victory to their enemies.

Thus far the muse hath with her usual dignity related this prodigious battle, a battle we apprehend never equalled by any poet, romance or life-writer whatever, and having brought it to a conclusion she ceased; we shall therefore proceed in our ordinary style with the continuation of this history. The squire and his companions, whom the figure of Adams, and the gallantry of Joseph, had first thrown into a violent fit of laughter, and who had hitherto beheld the engagement with more delight than any chace, shooting-match, race, cock-fighting, bull or bear-baiting had ever given them, began now to apprehend the danger of their hounds, many of which lay sprawling in the fields. The squire therefore having first called his friends about him, as guards, for safety of his person, rode manfully up to the combatants, and summoning all the terror he was master of into his countenance, demanded with an authoritative voice of Joseph, What he meant by assaulting his dogs in that manner? Joseph answered with great intrepidity, That they had first fallen on his friend; and if they had belonged to the greatest man in the kingdom, he would have treated them in the same way; for whilst his veins contained a single drop of blood, he would not stand idle by, and see that gentleman, (pointing to Adams) abused either by man or beast; and having so said, both he and Adams brandished their wooden weapons, and put themselves into such a posture, that the squire and his company thought proper to preponderate, before they offered to revenge the cause of their fourfooted allies

At this instant, Fanny, whom the apprehension of Joseph's danger had alarmed so much that, forgetting her own, she had made the utmost expedition, came up. The squire and all the horsemen were so surpris'd with her beauty, that they immediately fixed both their eyes and thoughts solely on her, every one declaring he had never seen so charming a creature. Neither mirth nor anger engaged them a moment longer; but all sat in silent amaze. The huntsman only was free from her attraction, who was busy in cutting the ears of the dogs, and endeavouring to recover them to life; in which he succeeded so well, that only two of no great note remained slaughtered on the field of action. Upon this the huntsman declared, ' 'Twas
' well it was no worse; for his part, he could ' not blame the gentleman, and wondered ' his master would encourage the dogs to ' hunt Christians; that it was the surest way
' to spoil them, to make them follow vermin
' instead of sticking to a hare.'

The squire being informed of the little mischief that had been done, and perhaps having more mischief of another kind in his head, accosted Mr Adams with a more favourable aspect than before : he told him he was sorry for what had happened ; that he had endeavoured all he could to prevent it the moment he was acquainted with his cloth, and greatly commended the courage of his servant ; for so he imagined Joseph to be. He then invited Mr Adams to dinner, and desired the young woman might come with him. Adams refused a long while ; but the invitation was repeated with so much earnestness and courtesy, that at length he was forced to accept it. His wig and hat, and other spoils of the field, being gathered together by Joseph, (for otherwise probably they would have been forgotten) he put himself into the best order he could ; and then the horse and foot moved forward in the same pace towards the squire's house, which stood at a very little distance.

Whilst they were on the road, the lovely Fanny attracted the eyes of all ; they endeavoured to outvie one another in encomiums on her beauty ; which the reader will pardon my not relating, as they had not any thing new or uncommon in them : so must he likewise my not setting down the many curious jests which were made on Adams ; some of them declaring that parson-hunting was the best sport in the world ; others commending his standing at bay, which, they said, he had done as well as any badger; with such-like merriment, which, though it would ill become the dignity of this history, afforded much laughter and diversion to the squire and his facetious companions.

110 THE ADVENTURES OF

C H A P. VII.

A scene of roasting very nicely adapted to the present taste and times.

THEY arrived at the squire's house just as his dinner was ready. A little dispute arose on the account of Fanny, whom the squire, who was a bachelor, was desirous to place at his own table; but she would not consent, nor would Mr Adams permit her to be parted from Joseph; so that she was at length with him consigned over to the kitchen, where the servants were ordered to make him drunk; a favour which was likewise intended for Adams; which design being executed, the squire thought he should easily accomplish what he had, when he first saw her, intended to perpetrate with Fanny.

It may not be improper, before we proceed farther, to open a little the character of this gentleman, and that of his friends. The master of this house then was a man of a very considerable fortune; a bachelor, as we have said, and about forty years of age: he had been educated (if we may use the expression) in the country, and at his own home, under the care of his mother and a tutor, who had orders never to correct him, nor to compel him to learn more than he liked, which it seems was very little, and that only in his childhood; for from the age of fifteen he addicted himself entirely to hunting and other rural amusements, for which his mother took care to equip him with horses, hounds, and all other necessaries: and his tutor, endeavouring to ingratiate himself with his young pupil, who would, he knew, be able handsomely to provide for him, became his companion, not only at these exercises, but likewise over a bottle, which the young squire had a very early relish for. At the age of twenty, his mother began to think she had not fulfilled the duty of a parent: she therefore resolved to persuade her son, if possible, to that which she imagined would well supply all that he might have learned at a public school or university. This is what they commonly call travelling; which, with the help of the tutor who was fixed on to attend him, she easily succeeded in. He made in three years the tour of Europe, as they term it, and returned home well furnished with French cloaths, phrases and servants, with a hearty contempt for his own country, especially what had any favour of the plain spirit and honesty of our ancestors. His mother greatly applauded herself at his return; and now being master of his own fortune, he soon procured himself a seat in parliament, and he was, in the common opinion, one of the finest gentlemen of his age: but what distinguished him chiefly, was a strange delight which he took in every thing which is ridiculous, odious, and absurd in his own species; so that he never chose a companion without one or more of these ingredients, and those who were marked by Nature in the most eminent degree with them, were most his favourites: if he ever found a man who either had not, or endeavoured to conceal these imperfections, he took great pleasure in inventing methods of forcing him into absurdities which were not natural to him, or in drawing forth and exposing those that were; for which purpose he was always provided with a set of fellows which we have before called Curs; and who did indeed no great honour to the canine kind: their business was to hunt out and display every thing that had any favour of the above-mentioned qualities, and especially in the gravest and best characters: but if they failed in their search they were to turn even virtue and wisdom themselves into ridicule for the diversion of their master and feeder. The gentlemen of eurlike disposition, who were now at his house, and whom he had brought with him from London, were an old half-pay officer, a player, a dull poet, a quack-doctor, a scraping fiddler, and a lame German dancing-master.

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 111

As soon as dinner was served, while Mr Adams was saying grace, the captain conveyed his chair from behind him; so that when he endeavoured to seat himself, he fell down on the ground; and thus completed joke the first, to the great entertainment of the whole company. The second joke was performed by the poet, who sat next him on the other side, and took an opportunity, while poor Adams was respectfully drinking to the master of the house, to overturn a plate of soup into his breeches; which, with the many apologies he made, and the parson's gentle answers, caused much mirth in the company. Joke the third was served up by one of the waiting-men, who had been ordered to convey a quantity of gin into Mr Adams's ale, which he declaring to be the best liquor he ever drank, but rather too rich of the malt, contributed again to their laughter. Mr Adams, from whom we had most of this relation, could not recollect all the jests of this kind practised on him, which the inoffensive disposition of his own heart made him slow in discovering; and indeed, had it not been for the information which we received from a servant of the family, this part of our history, which we take to be none of the least curious, must have been deplorably imperfect; though we must own it probable, that some more jokes were (as they call it) cracked during their dinner; but we have by no means been able to come at the knowledge of them. When dinner was removed, the poet began to repeat some verses, which he said were made extempore. The following is a copy of them procured with the greatest difficulty.

114 THE ADVENTURES OF

An extempore POEM ON PARSON ADAMS.

Did ever mortal such a parson view;
His cassock old, his wig not over new?
Well might the hounds have him for fox mistaken,
In smell more like to that than rusty bacon.*
But would it not make any mortal stare,
To see this parson taken for a hare?
Could Phœbus err thus grossly, even he
For a good player might have taken thee.

* All hounds that will hunt fox or other vermin, will hunt a piece of rusty bacon trailed on the ground.

At which words the bard whip'd off the player's wig, and received the approbation of the company, rather perhaps for the dexterity of his hand than his head. The player, instead of retorting the jest on the poet, began to display his talents on the same subject. He repeated many scraps of wit out of plays, reflecting on the whole body of the clergy, which were received with great acclamations by all present. It was now the dancing-master's turn to exhibit his talents: he therefore addressing himself to Adams in broken English, told him, 'He was a man ver well made for de dance, and he suppose by his walk, dat he had learn of some great master.' He said, 'it was ver pretty quality in elergyman to dance;' and concluded with desiring him to dance a minuet, telling him his cassock would serve for petticoats; and that he would himself be his partner. At which words, without waiting for an answer, he pulled out his gloves, and the fiddler was preparing his fiddle. The company all offered the dancing-master wagers that the parson outdanced him, which he refused, saying, he believed so too; for he had never seen any man in his life who looked de dance so well as de gentleman: he then stepped forwards to take Adams by the hand, which the latter hastily withdrew, and at the same time clen-

316 THE ADVENTURES OF

ching his fist, advised him not to carry the jest too far, for he would not endure being put upon. The dancing-master no sooner saw the fist than he prudently retired out of its reach, and stood aloof mimicking Adams, whose eyes were fixed on him, not guessing what he was at, but to avoid his laying hold on him, which he had once attempted. In the mean while, the captain perceiving an opportunity, pinned a cracker or devil to the cassock, and then lighted it with their little smoking candle. Adams being a stranger to this sport, and believing he had been blown up in reality, started from his chair, and jumped about the room, to the infinite joy of the beholders, who declared he was the best dancer in the universe. As soon as the devil had done tormenting him, and he had a little recovered his confusion, he returned to the table, standing up in the posture of one who intended to make a speech. They all cried out, 'hear him, hear him;' and he then spoke in the following manner:

' Sir, I am sorry to see one to whom Providence hath been so bountiful in bestowing his favours, make so ill and ungrateful a return for them; for though you have not insulted me yourself, it is visible you have delighted in those that do it, nor have once discouraged the many rudenesses which ‘ have been shewn towards me; indeed to‘ wards yourself, if you rightly understood ‘ them; for I am your guest, and by the ‘ laws of hospitality entitled to your protec‘ tion. One gentleman hath thought pro‘ per to produce some poetry upon me, of ‘ which I shall only say, that I had rather ‘ be the subject than the composer. He ‘ hath been pleased to treat me with disre‘ spect as a parson. I apprehend my order ‘ is not the object of scorn, nor that I can ‘ become so, unless by being a disgrace to it, ‘ which I hope poverty will never be called.

‘ Another gentleman indeed hath repeated ‘ some sentences, where the order itself is ‘ mentioned with contempt. He says they ‘ are taken from plays. I am sure such ‘ plays are a scandal to the government ‘ which permits them, and cursed will be ‘ the nation where they are represented.
‘ How others have treated me I need not ob‘ serve; they themselves, when they reflect, ‘ must allow the behaviour to be as impro‘ per to my years as to my cloth. You found ‘ me, Sir, travelling with two of my parish‘ ioners, (I omit your hounds falling on me, ‘ for I have quite forgiven it, whether it ‘ proceeded from the wantonness or negli‘ gence of the huntsman) my appearance ‘ might very well persuade you that your

118 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ invitation was an act of charity, though in ‘ reality we were well provided; yes, Sir, if ‘ we had had an hundred miles to travel, ‘ we had sufficient to bear our expences in a ‘ noble manner.’ (At which words he pro‘ duced the half guinea which was found in ‘ the basket.) ‘ I do not shew you this out of ‘ ostentation of riches, but to convince you ‘ I speak truth. Your seating me at your ‘ table was an honour which I did not am-‘ bitiously affect. When I was here, I en‘ deavoured to behave towards you with the ‘ utmost respect; if I have failed, it was not ‘ with design; nor could I, certainly, so far ‘ be guilty as to deserve the insults I have ‘ suffered. If they were meant therefore ‘ either to my order or my poverty (and you ‘ see I am not very poor) the shame doth ‘ not ly at my door, and I heartily pray that ‘ the sin may be averted from yours.’ He ‘ thus finished, and received a general clap ‘ from the whole company. Then the gentle‘ man of the house told him, ‘ he was sorry ‘ for what had happened; that he could not ‘ accuse him of any share in it: that the ‘ verses were, as himself had well observed, ‘ so bad, that he might easily answer them;
‘ and for the serpent, it was undoubtedly a ‘ very great affront done him by the dan‘ cing master, for which if he well threshed ‘ him as he deserved, he should be very much ‘ pleased to see it.’ (in which probably he spoke truth.) Adams answered, ‘ Whoever ‘ had done it, it was not his profession to ‘ punish him that way; but for the person ‘ whom he had accused, I am a witness,’ says he, ‘ of his innocence; for I had my ‘ eye on him all the while. Whoever he ‘ was, God forgive him, and bestow on him ‘ a little more sense as well as humanity.’

 The captain answered with a surly look and accent, ‘ That he hoped he did not mean to ‘ reflect on him; d---n him, he had as much ‘ humanity as another, and if any man said ‘ he had not, he would convince him of his ‘ mistake by cutting his throat.’ Adams smiling, said, ‘ He believed he had spoke ‘ right by accident.’ To which the captain returned, ‘ What do you mean by my ‘ speaking right? if you was not a parson, ‘ I would not take these words; but your gown ‘ protects you. If any man who wears a ‘ sword had said so much, I had pulled him ‘ by the nose before this.’ Adams replied, ‘ if he attempted any rudeness to his person, ‘ he would not find any protection for him‘ self in his gown;’ and clenching his fist, declared, he had threshed many a stouter man. The gentleman did all he could to encourage this warlike disposition in Adams, and was in hopes to have produced a battle; but he was disappointed, for the captain made no other answer than 'It is very well, you are a parson;' and so drinking off a bumper to old mother church, ended the dispute.

Then the doctor, who had hitherto been silent, and who was the gravest, but most mischievous dog of all, in a very pompous speech highly applauded what Adams had said; and as much discommended the behaviour to him. He proceeded to encomiums on the church and poverty; and lastly recommended forgiveness of what had passed to Adams, who immediately answered, 'That every thing was forgiven;' and in the warmth of his goodness he filled a bumper of strong beer, (a liquor he preferred to wine) and drank a health to the whole company, shaking the captain and the poet heartily by the hand, and addressing himself with great respect to the doctor; who indeed had not laughed outwardly at any thing that passed, as he had a perfect command of his muscles, and could laugh inwardly without betraying the least symptoms in his countenance. The doctor now began a second formal speech, in which he declaimed against all levity of conversation, and what is usually called mirth. He said, 'There were amusements fitted for ‘ persons of all ages and degrees, from the ‘ rattle to the discussing a point of philosophy, ‘ and that men discovered themselves in no‘ thing more than in the choice of their a‘ musements: for,’ says he, ‘ as it must ‘ greatly raise our expectation of the future ‘ conduct in life of boys, whom in their ten‘ der years we perceive instead of taw or balls ‘ or other childish play-things, to chuse, at ‘ their leisure hours, to exercise their genius ‘ in contentions of wit, learning and such ‘ like; so must it inspire one with equal con‘ tempt of a man, if we should discover him ‘ playing at taw or other childish play.’ Adams highly commended the doctor’s opinion, and said, ‘ He had often wondered at ‘ some passages in ancient authors, where ‘ Scipio, Lælius, and other great men, were ‘ represented to have passed many hours in ‘ amusements of the most trifling kind.’ The doctor replied, ‘ He had by him an old Greek ‘ manuscript where a favourite diversion of ‘ Socrates was recorded.’ Ay,’ says the Parson eagerly, ‘ I should be most infinitely ‘ obliged to you for the favour of perusing ‘ it.’ The doctor promised to send it him, and farther said, that he believed he could describe it. ‘ I think,’ says he, ‘ as near as I can re‘ member, it was this. There was a throne ‘ erected, on one side of which sat a king,

‘ and on the other a queen, with their guards ‘ and attendants ranged on both sides: to ‘ them was introduced an ambaffador, which ‘ part Socrates always used to perform him‘ self; and when he was led up to the foot‘ steps of the throne, he addreffed himself to ‘ the monarchs in fome grave fpeech, full of ‘ virtue, and goodnefs, and morality, and ‘ fuch like. After which he was feated be‘ tween the king and queen, and royally en‘ tertained. This I think was the chief part.
‘ —Perhaps, I may have forgot fome parti‘ culars; for it is long fince I read it.’
Adams faid, ‘ It was indeed a diverfion wor‘ thy the relaxation of fo great a man; and ‘ thought fomething refembling it fhould be ‘ intituted among our great men, inftead of ‘ cards and other idle paffimes, in which, he ‘ was informed, they trifled away too much ‘ of their lives.’ He added, ‘ The Christian ‘ religion was a nobler fubject for thefe ‘ fpeeches than any Socrates could have in‘ vented.’ The gentleman of the houfe ap‘ proved what Mr Adams faid, and declared, ‘ he was refolved to perform the ceremony ‘ this very evening.’ To which the doctör ‘ objected, as no one was prepared with a ‘ fpeech, ‘ uniefs,’ faid he, (turning to Adams, ‘ with a gravity of countenance which would ‘ have deceived a more knowing man,) ‘ you ‘ have a fermon about you, Doctör.—‘ Sir,’ says Adams, 'I never travel without one, for fear of what may happen.' He was easily prevailed on by his worthy friend, as he now called the doctor, to undertake the part of the ambaffador; so that the gentleman sent immediate orders to have the throne erected; which was performed before they had drank two bottles: and perhaps the reader will hereafter have no great reason to admire the nimbleness of the servants. Indeed, to confess the truth, the throne was no more than this: there was a great tub of water provided, on each side of which were placed two stools raised higher than the surface of the tub, and over the whole was laid a blanket; on these stools were placed the king and queen, namely the master of the house, and the captain. And now the ambaffador was introduced, between the poet and the doctor, who having read his sermon, to the great entertainment of all present, was led up to his place, and seated between their majesties. They immediately rose up, when the blanket wanting its supports at either end, gave way, and soufed Adams over head and ears in the water. The captain made his escape, but unluckily the gentleman himself not being as nimble as he ought, Adams caught hold of him before he descended from his throne, and pulled him in with him, to the entire secret satisfaction of all the company. Adams, after ducking the squire twice or thrice, leapt out of the tub, and looked sharp for the doctor, whom he would certainly have conveyed to the same place of honour; but he had wisely withdrawn: he then searched for his crabstick, and having found that, as well as his fellow-travellers, he declared he would not stay a moment longer in such a house. He then departed, without taking leave of his host, whom he had exacted a more severe revenge on than he intended: for as he did not use sufficient care to dry himself in time, he caught a cold by the accident, which threw him into a fever, that had like to have cost him his life.

C H A P. VIII.

Which some readers will think too short, and others too long.

ADAMS, and Joseph, who was no less enraged than his friend at the treatment he met with, went out with their sticks in their hands, and carried off Fanny, notwithstanding the opposition of the servants, who did all, without proceeding to violence, in their power to detain them. They walked as fast as they could, not so much from any apprehension of being pursued, as that Mr Adams might by exercise prevent any harm from the water. The gentleman who had given such orders to his servants concerning Fanny, that he did not in the least fear her getting away, no sooner heard that she was gone, than he began to rave, and immediately dispatched several with orders, either to bring her back or never return. The poet, the player, and all but the dancing-master and doctor, went on his errand.

The night was very dark, in which our friends began their journey: however, they made such expedition that they soon arrived at an inn, which was at seven miles distance. Here they unanimously consented to pass the evening; Mr Adams being now as dry as he was before he had set out on his embassy.

This inn, which indeed we might call an ale-house, had not the words The New Inn, been writ on the sign, afforded them no better provision than bread and cheese, and ale; on which, however, they made a very comfortable meal; for hunger is better than a French cook.

They had no sooner supped, than Adams, returning thanks to the Almighty for his food, declared he had ate his homely commons with much greater satisfaction than his splendid dinner, and expressed great contempt for the folly of mankind, who sacrificed their hopes of heaven to the acquisition of vast wealth; since so much comfort was to be found in the humblest state and the lowest provision. ‘Very true, Sir,’ says a grave man, who sat smoaking his pipe by the fire, and who was a traveller as well as himself. ‘I have often been as much surpris’d as you are, when I consider the value which mankind in general set on riches; since every day’s experience shews us how little is in their power; for what indeed truly desirable can they bestow on us? Can they give beauty to the deformed, strength to the weak, or health to the infirm? Surely, if they could, we should not see so many ill-favoured faces haunting the assemblies of the great, nor would such numbers of feeble wretches languish in their coaches and palaces. No, not the wealth of a kingdom can purchase any paint to dress pale ugliness in the bloom of that young maiden, nor any drugs to equip disease with the vigour of that young man. Do not riches bring us solicitude instead of rest, envy instead of affection, and danger instead of safety? Can they prolong their own possession, or lengthen his days who enjoys them? So far otherwise, that the sloth, the luxury, the care which attend them, shorten the lives of millions, and bring them with pain and misery to an untimely grave.

126 THE ADVENTURES OF

' Where then is their value, if they can nei' ther embellish, or strengthen our forms,
 ' sweeten or prolong our lives? Again——
 ' Can they adorn the mind more than the ' body? Do they not rather swell the heart ' with vanity, puff up the cheeks with pride,
 ' shut our ears to every call of virtue, and
 ' our bowels to every motive of compassion?
 ' Give me your hand, brother,' said Adams, in a rapture: ' for I suppose you are a cler-' gyman.' ' No truly,' answered the other.
 (Indeed he was a priest of the church of Rome; but those who understand our laws, will not wonder he was not over-ready to own it.) ' Whatever you are,' cries Adams,
 ' you have spoken my sentiments: I believe
 ' I have preached every syllable of your ' speech twenty times over: for it hath al' ways appeared to me easier for a cable-' rope (which by the way is the true render' ing of that word we have translated Ca' mel) to go through the eye of a needle,
 ' than for a rich man to get into the king' dom of heaven.' ' That, Sir,' said the other, ' will be easily granted you by divines,
 ' and is deplorably true: but as the prospect ' of our good at a distance doth not so for' cibly affect us, it might be of some service
 ' to mankind to be made thoroughly sensible,
 ' which I think they might be with very

128 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ little serious attention, that even the blessings of this world are not to be purchased with riches. A doctrine, in my opinion, not only metaphysically, but, if I may so say, mathematically demonstrable; and which I have been always so perfectly convinced of, that I have a contempt for nothing so much as for gold.’ Adams now began a long discourse; but as most which he said occurs among many authors who have treated this subject, I shall omit inserting it. During its continuance Joseph and Fanny retired to rest, and the host likewise left the room. When the English Parson had concluded, the Romish resumed the discourse, which he continued with great bitterness and invective; and at last ended, by desiring Adams to lend him eighteen-pence to pay his reckoning; promising, if he never paid him, he might be assured of his prayers. The good man answered, that eighteen-pence would be too little to carry him any very long journey; that he had half a guinea in his pocket, which he would divide with him. He then fell to searching his pockets, but could find no money; for indeed the company with whom he dined, had passed one jest upon him which we did not then enumerate, and had picked his pocket of all that treasure which he had so ostentatiously produced.

‘ Bless me,’ cried Adams, ‘ I have certainly lost it; I can never have spent it. Sir as I am a Christian, I had a whole half-guinea in my pocket this morning, and have not now a single halfpenny of it left. Sure the devil must have taken it from me.’ ‘ Sir,’ answered the priest, smiling, ‘ you need make no excuses; if you are not willing to lend me the money, I am contented.’ ‘ Sir,’ cries Adams, ‘ if I had the greatest sum in the world; ay if I had ten pounds about me, I would bestow it all to rescue any Christian from distress. I am more vexed at my loss on your account than my own. Was ever any thing so unlucky? because I have no money in my pocket, I shall be suspected to be no Christian.’ ‘ I am more unlucky,’ quoth the other, ‘ if you are as generous as you say: for really a crown would have made me happy, and conveyed me in plenty to the place I am going, which is not above twenty miles off, and where I can arrive by to-morrow night. I assure you I am not accustomed to travel penniless. I am but just arrived in England; and we were forced by a storm in our passage, to throw all we had over-board. I don’t suspect but this fellow will take my word for the trifle I

130 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ owe him ; but I hate to appear so mean as ‘ to confess myself without a shilling to such ‘ people : for these, and indeed too many ‘ others, know little difference in their esti‘ mation between a beggar and a thief.’ However, he thought he should deal better with the host that evening than the next morning ; he therefore resolved to set out immediately, notwithstanding the darkness ; and, accordingly, as soon as the host returned, he communicated to him the situation of his affairs ; upon which the host scratching his head, answered, ‘ Why, I do not know, ‘ master, if it be so, and you have no money, ‘ I must trust, I think, though I had rather ‘ always have ready money if I could ; but, ‘ marry, you look like so honest a gentleman ‘ that I don’t fear your paying me, if it was ‘ twenty times as much.’ The priest made no reply, but taking leave of him and Adams as fast as he could, not without confusion, and perhaps with some distrust of Adams’s sincerity, departed.

He was no sooner gone than the host fell a-shaking his head, and declared, if he had suspected the fellow had no money, he would not have drawn him a single drop of drink ; saying, he despaired of ever seeing his face again ; for that he looked like a confounded rogue. ‘ Rabbit the fellow,’ cries he, ‘ I

JOSEPH ANDREWS. 131

‘ thought by his talking so much about ‘ riches, that he had a hundred pounds ‘ at least in his pocket.’ Adams chid him for his suspicions, which he said were not becoming a Christian; and then, without reflecting on his loss, or considering how he himself should depart in the morning, he retired to a very homely bed, as his companions had before; however, health and fatigue gave them a sweeter repose than is often in the power of velvet and down to bestow.

C H A P. IX.

Containing as surprising and bloody adventures as can be found in this or perhaps any other authentic history.

IT was almost morning, when Joseph Andrews, whose eyes the thoughts of his dear Fanny had opened, as he lay fondly meditating on that lovely creature, heard a violent knocking at the door over which he lay. He presently jumped out of bed, and opening the window, was asked, if there were no travellers in the house? and presently, by another voice, If two men and a young woman had not taken up there their lodging that night? Though he knew not the voices, he began to entertain a suspicion

132 THE ADVENTURES OF

of the truth; for indeed he had received some information from one of the servants of the squire's house, of his design; and answered in the negative. One of the servants, who knew the host well, called out to him by his name, just as he had opened another window, and asked him the same question; to which he answered, in the affirmative. 'O ho!' said another; 'have we found you?' and ordered the host to come down and open his door. Fanny, who was as wakeful as Joseph, no sooner heard all this, than she leaped from her bed, and hastily putting on her gown and petticoats, ran as fast as possible to Joseph's room, who then was almost dressed: he immediately let her in, and embracing her with the most passionate tenderness, bid her fear nothing, for that he would die in her defence. 'Is that a reason why I should not fear,' says she, 'when I should lose what is dearer to me than the whole world?' Joseph then kissing her hand, said he could almost thank the occasion which had extorted from her a tenderness she would never indulge him with before. He then ran and waked his bedfellow Adams, who was yet fast asleep, notwithstanding many calls from Joseph; but was no sooner made sensible of the danger, than he leaped from his bed, without considering the presence of

Fanny, who hastily turned her face from him, and enjoyed a double benefit from the dark, which as it would have prevented any offence to an innocence less pure, or a modesty less delicate, so it concealed even those blushes which were raised in her.

Adams had soon put on all his cloaths but his breeches, which in the hurry he forgot; however, they were pretty well supplied by the length of his other garments: and now the house-door being opened, the captain, the poet, the player, and three servants came in. The captain told the host, that two fellows who were in his house, had run away with a young woman; and desired to know in which room she lay. The host, who presently believed the story, directed them, and instantly the captain and poet, jostling one another, ran up. The poet, who was the nimblest, entering the chamber first, searched the bed and every other part, but to no purpose; the bird was flown, as the impatient reader, who might otherwise have been in pain for her, was before advertised. They then inquired where the men lay, and were approaching the chamber, when Joseph roared out in a loud voice, that he would shoot the first man who offered to attack the door. The captain inquired what fire-arms they had? to which the host answered, he believed they had none; nay, he was almost convinced of it: for he had heard one ask the other in the evening, what they should have done, if they had been overtaken when they had no arms? to which the other answered, they would have defended themselves with their sticks as long as they were able, and God would assist a just cause. This satisfied the captain, but not the poet, who prudently retreated down stairs, saying, it was his business to record great actions, and not to do them. The captain was no sooner well satisfied that there were no fire-arms, than bidding defiance to gunpowder, and swearing he loved the smell of it, he ordered the servants to follow him, and marching boldly up, immediately attempted to force the door, which the servants soon helped him to accomplish. When it was opened, they discovered the enemy drawn up three deep; Adams in the front, and Fanny in the rear. The captain told Adams, that if they would go all back to the house again, they should be civilly treated: but unless they consented, he had orders to carry the young lady with him, whom there was great reason to believe they had stolen from her parents; for notwithstanding her disguise, her air, which she could not conceal, sufficiently discovered her birth to be infinitely superior to theirs. Fanny Bursting into tears, solemnly assured him he was mistaken; that she was a poor helpless foundling, and had no relation in the world which she knew of; and throwing herself on her knees, begged that he would not attempt to take her from her friends, who, she was convinced, would die before they would lose her; which Adams confirmed with words not far from amounting to an oath. The captain swore he had no leisure to talk, and bidding them thank themselves for what happened, he ordered the servants to fall on, at the same time endeavouring to pass by Adams, in order to lay hold on Fanny; but the parson interrupting him, received a blow from one of them, which, without considering whence it came, he returned to the captain, and gave him so dextrous a knock in that part of the stomach, which is vulgarly called the pit, that he staggered some paces backwards. The captain, who was not accustomed to this kind of play, and who wisely apprehended the consequence of such another blow, two of them seeming to him equal to a thrust through the body, drew forth his hanger, as Adams approached him, and was levelling a blow at his head, which would probably have silenced the preacher for ever, had not Joseph in that instant lifted up a certain huge stone-pot of the chamber with one hand, which six beaus could not have lifted with both, and discharged it, together with the contents, full in the captain's face. The uplifted hanger dropped from his hand, and he fell prostrate on the floor with a lumpish noise, and his halfpence rattled in his pocket; the red liquor which his veins contained, and the white liquor which the pot contained, ran in one stream down his face and his clothes. Nor had Adams quite escaped, some of the water having in its passage shed its honours on his head, and began to trickle down the wrinkles or rather furrows of his cheeks, when one of the servants snatching a mop out of a pail of water which had already done its duty in washing the house, pushed it in the parson's face; yet could he not bear him down; for the parson wresting the mop from the fellow with one hand, with the other brought his enemy as low as the earth, having given him a stroke over that part of the face, where, in some men of pleasure, the natural and artificial noses are conjoined.

136 THE ADVENTURES OF

Hitherto Fortune seemed to incline the victory on the traveller's side, when, according to her custom, she began to shew the fickleness of her disposition: for now the host entering the field, or rather chamber of battle, flew directly at Joseph, and darting

His head into his stomach (for he was a stout fellow, and an expert boxer) almost staggered him; but Joseph stepping one leg back, did with his left hand so chuck him under the chin that he reeled. The youth was pursuing his blow with his right hand, when he received from one of the servants such a stroke with a cudgel on his temples, that it instantly deprived him of sense, and he measured his length on the ground.

Fanny rent the air with her cries, and Adams was coming to the assistance of Joseph: but the two serving-men and the host now fell on him, and soon subdued him, tho' he fought like a madman, and looked so black with the impressions he had received from the mop, that Don Quixote would certainly have taken him for an enchanted Moor. But now follows the most tragical part; for the captain was risen again, and seeing Joseph on the floor, and Adams secured, he instantly laid hold on Fanny, and with the assistance of the poet and player, who hearing the battle was over, were now come up, dragged her, crying and tearing her hair, from the sight of her Joseph, and with a perfect deafness to all her intreaties, carried her down stairs by violence, and fastened her on the player's horse; and the captain mounting his own, and leading that on which this poor miserable wretch was, departed without any more consideration of her cries than a butcher hath of those of a lamb: for indeed his thoughts were entertained only with the degree of favour which he promised himself from the squire on the success of this adventure.

138 THE ADVENTURES OF

The servants, who were ordered to secure Adams and Joseph as safe as possible, that the squire might receive no interruption to his design on poor Fanny, immediately, by the poet's advice, tied Adams to one of the bed-posts, as they did Joseph on the other side, as soon as they could bring him to himself; and then leaving them together, back to back, and desiring the host not to set them at liberty, nor to go near them till he had further orders, they departed towards their master; but happened to take a different road from that which the Captain had fallen into.

C H A P. X.

A discourse between the poet and player; of no other use in this history, but to divert the reader.

BEFORE we proceed any farther in this tragedy, we shall leave Mr Joseph and Mr Adams to themselves, and imitate the wise conductors of the stage; who, in the midst of a grave action, entertain you with some excellent piece of satire or humour called a dance. Which piece, indeed, is therefore danced, and not spoke, as it is delivered to the audience by persons whose thinking faculty is by most people held to ly in their heels; and to whom, as well as heroes, who think with their hands, nature hath only given heads for the sake of conformity, and as they are of use in dancing, to hang their hats on.

The poet, addressing the player, proceeded thus: ‘As I was saying,’ (for they had been at this discourse all the time of the engagement above stairs), ‘the reason you have no good new plays is evident; it is from your discouragement of authors. Gentlemen will not write, Sir, they will not write without the expectation of fame or profit, or perhaps both. Plays are like trees,

‘ which will not grow without nourishment; ‘ but like mushrooms, they shoot up sponta‘ neously, as it were, in a rich soil. The ‘ muses, like vines, may be pruned, but not ‘ with a hatchet. The town, like a peevish ‘ child, knows not what it desires, and is al‘ ways best pleased with a rattle. A farce-‘ writer hath indeed some chance for suc‘ cess; but they have lost all taste for the ‘ sublime. Though I believe one reason of ‘ their depravity is the badness of the actors, ‘ If a man writes like an angel, Sir, those ‘ fellows know not how to give a sentiment ‘ utterance.’ ‘ Not so fast,’ says the player, ‘ the modern actors are as good at least as ‘ their authors, nay, they come nearer their ‘ illustrious predecessors; and I expect a ‘ Booth on the stage again, sooner than a ‘ Shakespeare or an Otway; and indeed I ‘ may turn your observations against you, and ‘ with truth say, that the reason no authors ‘ are encouraged, is, because we have no ‘ good new plays.’ ‘ I have not affirmed ‘ the contrary,’ said the poet; ‘ but I am ‘ surpris’d you grow so warm; you cannot ‘ imagine yourself interested in this dispute; ‘ I hope you have a better opinion of my ‘ taste, than to apprehend I squinted at your‘ self. No, Sir, if we had six such actors as ‘ you, we should soon rival the Bettertons.

‘ and Sandfords of former times ; for, with‘ out a compliment to you, I think it im‘ possible for any one to have excelled you in ‘ most of your parts: nay, it is a solemn ‘ truth, and I have heard many, and all ‘ great judges, express as much; and you ‘ will pardon me if I tell you, I think every ‘ time I have seen you lately, you have con‘ stantly acquired some new excellence, like ‘ a snowball—‘ You have deceived me in ‘ my estimation of perfection, and have out‘ done what I thought inimitable.’ ‘ You ‘ are as little interested,’ answered the play‘ er, ‘ in what I have said of other poets; ‘ for d—n me, if there are not many strokes, ‘ ay, whole scenes in your last tragedy, which ‘ at least equal Shakespeare. There is a de‘ licacy of sentiment, a dignity of expression ‘ in it, which I will own many of our gentle‘ men did not do adequate justice to. To ‘ confess the truth, they are bad enough, ‘ and I pity an author who is present at the ‘ murder of his works.’—‘ Nay, it is but ‘ seldom that it can happen,’ returned the ‘ poet; ‘ the works of most modern authors, ‘ like dead-born children, cannot be murder‘ ed. It is such wretched, half-begotten, ‘ half-writ, lifeless, spiritless, low, groveling ‘ stuff, that I almost pity the actor who is ‘ obliged to get it by heart, which must be

142 THE ADVENTURES OF

' almost as difficult to remember as words
 ' in a language you do not understand.' ' I ' am sure,' said the player, ' if the sentences
 ' have little meaning when they are writ,
 ' when they are spoken they have less. I ' know scarce one who ever lays an emphasis ' right, and much less adapts his action to ' his character. I have seen a tender lover
 ' in an attitude of fighting with his mistress,
 ' and a brave hero suing to his enemy with ' his sword in his hand!--I don't care to ' abuse my profession; but rot me, if in my ' heart I am not inclined to the poet's side.'
 ' It is rather generous in you than just,' said the poet; ' and though I hate to speak ill-
 ' of any person's production; nay, I never ' do it, nor will---but yet, to do justice to ' the actors, what could Booth or Betterton
 ' have made of such horrible stuff as Fen-
 ' ton's Mariamne, Froud's Philotas, or Mal-
 ' let's Eurydice, or those low, dirty, last ' dying speeches, which a fellow in the city ' or Wapping, your Dillo or Lillo, what ' was his name, called Tragedies?'---' Very ' well,' says the player, ' and pray what do ' you think of such fellows as Quin and De-' lane; or that face-making puppy young ' Cibber, that ill-look'd dog Macklin, or ' that sauey flat Mrs Clive? What work
 ' would they make with your Shakespeares,

‘ Otways, and Lees? How would those har‘ monious lines of the last come from their ‘ tongues?’

‘ ————No more; for I disdain ‘ All pomp when thou art by—far be the noise ‘ Of kings and crowns from us, whose gentle souls ‘ Our kinder fates have steer’d another way.
 ‘ Free as the forest birds we’ll pair together, ‘ Without rememb’ring who our fathers were;
 ‘ Fly to the arbours, grots, or flow’ry meads, ‘ There in soft murmurs interchange our souls, ‘ Together drink the crystal of the stream, ‘ Or taste the yellow fruit which Autumn yields;
 ‘ And when the golden evening calls us home, ‘ Wing to our downy nests, and sleep till morn.

‘ Or how would this disdain of Otway, ‘ Who’d be that foolish, fordid thing, call’d man?’

‘ Hold, hold, hold,’ said the poet, ‘ do re‘ peat that tender speech in the third act of ‘ my play which you made such a figure ‘ in.’---‘ I would willingly,’ said the player, ‘ but I have forgot it.’---‘ Ay, you was not ‘ quite perfect enough in it when you played ‘ it,’ cries the poet, ‘ or you would have ‘ had such an applause as was never given ‘ on the stage; an applause I was extremely ‘ concerned for your losing’---‘ Sure,’ says the player, ‘ if I remember, that was hissed more ‘ than any passage in the whole play.’—‘ Ay, ‘ your speaking it was his’d,’ said the poet.

 ‘ My speaking it!’ said the player.— ‘ I mean ‘ your not speaking it,’ said the poet. ‘ You ‘ was out, and then they his’d.’— ‘ They ‘ his’d, and then I was out, if I remember,’ answered the player; ‘ and I must say this ‘ for myself, that the whole audience allow‘ ed I did your part justice: so don’t lay the ‘ damnation of your play to my account.’ ‘ I don’t know what you mean by damna-‘ tion,’ replied the poet. ‘ Why, you know ‘ it was acted but one night,’ cried the player. ‘ No,’ said the poet, ‘ you and the whole ‘ town were my enemies; the pit were all my ‘ enemies; fellows that would cut my throat, ‘ if the fear of hanging did not restrain them.
 ‘ All tailors, Sir, all tailors.’--- ‘ Why should ‘ the tailors be so angry with you?’ cries the player. ‘ I suppose you don’t employ so ma‘ ny in making your cloaths.’ ‘ I admit your ‘ jest,’ answered the poet; ‘ but you remem‘ ber the affair as well as myself; you know ‘ there was a party in the pit and upper gal‘ lery would not suffer it to be given out a‘ gain; tho’ much, ay infinitely the major‘ rity, all the boxes in particular, were desi‘ rous of it; nay, most of the ladies swore ‘ they never would come to the house till it ‘ was acted again.—Indeed I must own

' their policy was good, in not letting it be ' given out a second time; for the rascals
 ' knew, if it had gone a second night, it would ' have run fifty: for if ever there was distress
 ' in a tragedy---I am not fond of my own ' performance; but if I should tell you what ' the best judges said of it. --- Nor was it en' tirely owing to my enemies neither, that it ' did not succeed on the stage as well as it ' hath since among the polite readers; for ' you can't say it had justice done it by the ' performers.'---- ' I think,' answered the player, ' the performers did the distress of ' it justice: for I am sure we were in distress
 ' enough, who were pelted with oranges all
 ' the last act; we all imagined it would have ' been the last act of our lives.'

The poet, whose fury was now raised, had just attempted to answer, when they were interrupted, and an end put to their discourse by an accident; which if the reader is impatient to know, he must skip over the next chapter, which is a sort of counterpart to this, and contains some of the best and gra-vest matters in the whole book, being a discourse between Parson Abraham Adams and Mr Joseph Andrews.

C H A P. XI.

Containing the exhortations of Parson Adams to his friend in affliction; calculated for the instruction and improvement of the reader.

JOSEPH no sooner came perfectly to himself, than perceiving his mistress gone, he bewailed her loss with groans, which would have pierced any heart but those which are possessed by some people, and are made of a certain composition, not unlike flint in its hardness, and other properties; for you may strike fire from them, which will dart through the eyes, but they can never distil one drop of water the same way. His own, poor youth, was of a softer composition; and, at these words, ‘O my dear Fanny! O my love! shall I never, never see thee more?’ his eyes overflowed with tears, which would have become any thing but a hero. In a word, his despair was more easy to be conceived than related—

Mr Adams, after many groans, sitting with his back to Joseph, began thus in a sorrowful tone: ‘You cannot imagine, my good child, that I entirely blame these first agonies of your grief: for when misfortunes attack us by surprize, it must require

' infinitely more learning than you are ma' ster of to resist them : but it is the business
 ' of a man and a Christian, to summon rea' son as quickly as he can to his aid ; and ' she will presently teach him patience and ' submission. Be comforted, therefore, child,
 ' I say be comforted. It is true you have ' lost the prettiest, kindest, loveliest, sweetest
 ' young woman, one with whom you might ' have expected to have lived in happiness,
 ' virtue and innocence ; by whom you might ' have promised yourself many little darlings,
 ' who would have been the delight of your ' youth, and the comfort of your age. You ' have not only lost her, but have reason to ' fear the utmost violence which lust and ' power can inflict upon her. Now indeed ' you may easily raise ideas of horror, which ' might drive you to despair.'—' O I shall ' run mad,' cries Joseph. ' O that I could ' but command my hands to tear my eyes
 ' out, and my flesh off.'---' If you would use ' them to such purposes, I am glad you ' can't,' answered Adams. ' I have stated
 ' your misfortune as strong as I possibly can ;
 ' but, on the other side, you are to consider
 ' you are a Christian ; that no accident hap' pens to us without the divine permission,
 ' and that it is the duty of a man and a Chri' stian to submit. We did not make our-

148 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ selves; but the same power which made ‘ us, rules over us, and we are absolutely ‘ at his disposal; he may do with us what ‘ he pleases, nor have we any right to com‘ plain. A second reason against our com‘ plaint is our ignorance; for as we know ‘ not future events, so neither can we tell to ‘ what purpose any accident tends; and that ‘ which at first threatens us with evil, may ‘ in the end produce our good. I should ‘ indeed have said our ignorance is twofold ‘ (but I have not at present time to divide ‘ properly;) for as we know not to what ‘ purpose any event is ultimately directed; ‘ so neither can we affirm from what cause ‘ it originally sprung. You are a man, and ‘ consequently a sinner; and this may be a ‘ punishment to you for your sins; indeed in ‘ this sense it may be esteemed as a good; ‘ yea, as the greatest good, which satisfies ‘ the anger of Heaven, and averts that ‘ wrath which cannot continue without our ‘ destruction. Thirdly, our impotency of ‘ relieving ourselves, demonstrates the folly ‘ and absurdity of our complaints: for whom ‘ do we resist? or against whom do we com‘ plain, but a power, from whose shafts no ‘ armour can guard us, no speed can fly; ‘ a power which leaves us no hope but in ‘ submission?’———‘ O Sir,’ cried Joseph,

‘ all this is very true, and very fine, and ‘ I could hear you all day, if I was not ‘ so grieved at heart as now I am.’ ‘ Would ‘ you take physic,’ says Adams, ‘ when you ‘ are well, and refuse it when you are ‘ sick? Is not comfort to be administered ‘ to the afflicted, and not to those who re‘ joice, or those who are at ease?’---‘ O you ‘ have not spoken one word of comfort to ‘ me yet,’ returned Joseph. ‘ No!’ cries Adams, ‘ What am I then doing? what can ‘ I say to comfort you?’ ‘ O tell me,’ cries Joseph, ‘ that Fanny will escape back to my ‘ arms, that they shall again inclose that ‘ lovely creature, with all her sweetness, all ‘ her untainted innocence about her.’— ‘ Why, perhaps you may,’ cries Adams; ‘ but I can’t promise you what’s to come.
 ‘ You must with perfect resignation wait the ‘ event; if she be restored to you again, it ‘ is your duty to be thankful, and so it is if ‘ she be not: Joseph, if you are wise, and ‘ truly know your own interest, you will ‘ peaceably and quietly submit to all the ‘ dispensations of Providence, being tho‘ roughly assured, that all the misfortunes, ‘ how great soever, which happen to the ‘ righteous, happen to them for their good.
 ‘ —Nay, it is not your interest only, but ‘ your duty to abstain from immoderate

'grief; which, if you indulge, you are not 'worthy the name of a Christian.'—He spoke these last words with an accent a little feverer than usual; upon which Joseph begged him not to be angry, saying, he mistook him, if he thought he denied it was his duty; for he had known that long ago. 'What 'signifies knowing your duty, if you do not 'perform it?' answered Adams. 'Your 'knowledge encreases your guilt—'—
 'Joseph, I never thought you had this stub'bornness in your mind.' Joseph replied,
 'he fancied he misunderstood him; which I 'assure you,' says he, 'you do, if you ima'gine I endeavour to grieve; upon my soul
 'I don't.' Adams rebuked him for swearing, and then proceeded to enlarge on the folly of grief, telling him, all the wise men and philosophers, even among the heathens, had written against it, quoting several passages from Seneca, and the Consolation, which though it was not Cicero's, was, he said, as good almost as any of his works; and concluded all by hinting, that immoderate grief in this case might incense that power which alone could restore him his Fanny.
 This reason, or indeed rather the idea which it raised of the restoration of his mistress, had more effect than all which the parson had said before, and for a moment abated his agonies; but when his fears sufficiently set before his eyes the danger that poor creature was in, his grief returned again with repeated violence, nor could Adams in the least assuage it; though it may be doubted in his behalf, whether Socrates himself could have prevailed any better.

They remained sometime in silence: and groans and sighs issued from them both; at length Joseph burst out in the following soliloquy:

- ' Yes, I will bear my sorrows like a man,
- ' But I must also feel them as a man;
- ' I cannot but remember such things were,
- ' And were most dear to me.'——

Adams asked him what stuff that was he repeated?——To which he answered, they were some lines he had gotten by heart out of a play—' Ay, there is nothing but heathenism to be learned from plays,' replied he:——' I never heard of any plays fit for a Christian to read but Cato and the Conscious Lovers; and I must own, in the latter, there are some things almost solemn enough for a sermon.' But we shall now leave them a little, and enquire after the subject of their conversation.

C H A P. XII.

More adventures, which we hope will as much please as surprise the reader.

NEITHER the facetious dialogue which passed between the poet and the player, nor the grave and truly solemn discourse of Mr Adams, will, we conceive, make the reader sufficient amends for the anxiety which he must have felt on the account of poor Fanny, whom we left in so deplorable a condition. We shall therefore now proceed to the relation of what had happened to that beautiful and innocent virgin, after she fell into the wicked hands of the captain.

The man of war having conveyed his charming prize out of the inn a little before day, made the utmost expedition in his power towards the Squire's house, where this delicate creature was to be offered up a sacrifice to the lust of a ravisher. He was not only deaf to all her bewailings and entreaties on the road, but accosted her ears with impurities, which, having been never before accustomed to them, she happily for herself very little understood. At last he changed his note, and attempted to soothe and mollify her, by setting forth the splendor and luxury which would be her fortune with a man who would have the inclination, and power too, to give her whatever her utmost wishes could desire; and told her he doubted not but she would soon look kinder on him, as the instrument of her happiness, and despise that pitiful fellow, whom her ignorance could only make her fond of. She answered, She knew not whom he meant; she never was fond of any pitiful fellow. ‘Are you affronted, Madam,’ says he, ‘at my calling him so? but what better can be said of one in a livery, notwithstanding your fondness for him?’ She returned, That she did not understand him; that the man had been her fellow-servant, and she believed was as honest a creature as any alive; but as for fondness for men——

‘I warrant ye,’ cries the captain, ‘we shall find means to persuade you to be fond; and I advise you to yield to gentle ones; for you may be assured that it is not in your power, by any struggles whatever, to preserve your virginity two hours longer. It will be your interest to consent; for the Squire will be much kinder to you, if he enjoys you willingly than by force.’—At which words she began to call aloud for assistance, (for it was now open day), but finding none, she lifted her eyes up to heaven, and supplicated the Divine assistance to preserve her innocence. The captain told her, If she persisted in her vociferation, he would find a means of stopping her mouth. And now the poor wretch, perceiving no hopes of succour, abandoned herself to despair, and sighing out the name of Joseph! Joseph! a river of tears ran down her lovely cheeks, and wet the handkerchief which covered her bosom. A horseman now appeared in the road, upon which the captain threatened her violently if she complained: however, the moment they approached each other, she begged him with the utmost earnestness to relieve a distressed creature who was in the hands of a ravisher. The fellow stopped at those words; but the captain assured him it was his wife, and that he was carrying her home from her adulterer: which so satisfied the fellow, who was an old one, (and perhaps a married one too), that he wished him a good journey, and rode on. He was no sooner past, than the captain abused her violently for breaking his commands, and threatened to gag her, when two more horsemen, armed with pistols, came into the road just before them. She again solicited their assistance, and the captain told the same story as before. Upon which one said to the other, — 'That's a charming wench, Jack! I wish I had been in the fellow's place, who'ever he is.' But the other, instead of answering him, cried out eagerly, 'Zounds, I know her!' and then turning to her, said, 'Sure you are not Fanny Goodwill!---' 'Indeed, indeed I am,' she cried---'O John, I know you now----- Heaven hath sent you to my assistance, to deliver me from this wicked man, who is carrying me away for his vile purposes---O, for God's sake, rescue me from him!' A fierce dialogue immediately ensued between the captain and these two men, who being both armed with pistols, and the chariot which they attended being now arrived, the captain saw both force and stratagem were vain, and endeavoured to make his escape; in which, however, he could not succeed. The gentleman who rode in the chariot, ordered it to stop, and, with an air of authority, examined into the merits of the cause; of which, being advertised by Fanny, whose credit was confirmed by the fellow who knew her, he ordered the captain, who was all bloody from his encounter at the inn, to be conveyed as a prisoner behind the chariot, and very gallantly took Fanny into it; for, to say the truth, this gentleman (who was no other than the celebrated Mr Peter Pounce, and who preceded the Lady Booby only a few miles, by setting out earlier in the morning), was a very gallant person, and loved a pretty girl better than any thing, besides his own money, or the money of other people.

The chariot now proceeded towards the inn, which, as Fanny was informed, lay in their way, and where it arrived at the very time when the poet and player were disputing below stairs, and Adams and Joseph were discoursing back to back above: just at that period to which we brought them both in the two preceding chapters, the chariot stopt at the door, and in an instant Fanny leaping from it, ran up to her Joseph.— O reader, conceive, if thou canst, the joy which fired the breasts of these lovers on this meeting; and if thy own heart doth not sympathetically assist thee in this conception, I pity thee sincerely from my own: for let the hard-hearted villain know this, that there is a pleasure in a tender sensation beyond any which he is capable of tasting.

Peter being informed by Fanny of the presence of Adams, stopt to see him, and receive his homage; for, as Peter was an hypocrite, a sort of people whom Mr Adams never saw through, the one paid that respect to his seeming goodness which the other believed to be paid to his riches; hence Mr Adams was so much his favourite, that he once lent him four pounds thirteen shillings and sixpence, to prevent his going to goal, on no greater security than a bond and judgment, which probably he would have made no use of, though the money had not been (as it was) paid exactly at the time.

It is not perhaps easy to describe the figure of Adams; he had risen in such a hurry, that he had on neither breeches, garters, nor stockings; nor had he taken from his head a red spotted handkerchief, which by night bound his wig, turned inside out, around his head. He had on his torn cassock, and his great coat; but as the remainder of his cassock hung down below his great coat, so did a small stripe of white, or rather whitish linen, appear below that; to which we may add the several colours which appeared on his face, where a long piss-burnt beard served to retain the liquor of the stone pot, and that of a blacker hue which distilled from the mop.----This figure, which Fanny had delivered from his captivity, was no sooner spied by Peter, than it disordered the composed gravity of his muscles; however, he advised him immediately to make himself clean, nor would accept his homage in that pickle.

The poet and player no sooner saw the captain in captivity, than they began to consider of their own safety, of which flight presented itself as the only means; they therefore both of them mounted the poet's horse, and made the most expeditious retreat in their power.

The host, who well knew Mr Pounce, and Lady Booby's livery, was not a little surprised at this change of the scene, nor was his confusion much helped by his wife, who was now just risen, and having heard from him the account of what had passed, comforted him with a decent number of fools and block-heads; asked him why he did not consult her; and told him, he would never leave following the nonsensical dictates of his own numscull, till she and her family were ruined.

Joseph being informed of the captain's arrival, and seeing his Fanny now in safety, quitted her a moment, and running down stairs, went directly to him, and stripping off his coat, challenged him to fight; but the captain refused, saying, he did not understand boxing. He then grasped a cudgel in one hand, and catching the captain by the collar with the other, gave him a most severe drubbing; and ended with telling him, he had now had some revenge for what his dear Fanny had suffered.

When Mr Pounce had a little regaled himself with some provision which he had in his chariot, and Mr Adams had put on the best appearance his clothes would allow him,

Pounce ordered the captain into his presence; for he said he was guilty of felony, and the next justice of peace should commit him; but the servants (whose appetite for revenge is soon satisfied) being sufficiently contented with the drubbing which Joseph had inflicted on him, and which was indeed of no very moderate kind, had suffered him to go off, which he did, threatening a severe revenge against Joseph, which I have never heard he thought proper to take.

The mistress of the house made her voluntary appearance before Mr Pounce, and with a thousand curtsies told him, She hoped his Honour would pardon her husband, who was a very nonsense man, for the sake of his poor family; that indeed if he could be ruined alone, she should be very willing of it: for because, as why, his Worship very well knew he deserved it: but she had three poor small children, who were not capable to get their own living; and if her husband was sent to goal, they must all come to the parish; for she was a poor weak woman, continually a-breeding, and had no time to work for them. She therefore hoped his Honour would take it into his Worship's consideration, and forgive her husband this time; for she was sure he never intended any harm to man, woman, or child; and if it was not for that block-head of his own, the man in some things was well enough; for she had had three children by him in less than three years, and was almost ready to cry out the fourth time. She would have proceeded in this manner much longer, had not Peter stopped her tongue, by telling her he had nothing to say to her husband, nor her neither. So, as Adams and the rest had assured her of forgiveness, she cried and curtied out of the room.

Mr Pounce was desirous that Fanny should continue her journey with him in the chariot; but she absolutely refused, saying, she would ride behind Joseph, on a horse which one of Lady Booby's servants had equipped him with. But, alas! when the horse appeared, it was found to be no other than that identical beast which Mr Adams had left behind him at the inn, and which these honest fellows, who knew him, had redeemed. Indeed, whatever horse they had provided for Joseph, they would have prevailed with him to mount none, no, not even to ride before his beloved Fanny, till the Parson was supplied; much less would he deprive his friend of the beast which belonged to him, and which he knew the moment he saw, though Adams did not; however, when he was reminded of the affair, and told that they had brought the horse with them which he left behind, he answered—‘ Bless me! and so I did.’

Adams was very desirous that Joseph and Fanny should mount this horse, and declared he could walk very easily home. ‘ If I walked alone,’ says he, ‘ I would wager a shilling, that the pedestrian outstripped the equestrian travellers: but as I intend to take the company of a pipe, peradventure I may be an hour later.’ One of the servants whispered Joseph to take him at his word, and suffer the old put to walk if he would: this proposal was answered with an angry look and a peremptory refusal by Joseph, who, catching Fanny up in his arms, averred he would rather carry her home in that manner, than take away Mr Adams’s horse, and permit him to walk on foot.

Perhaps, reader, thou hast seen a contest between two gentlemen, or two ladies, quickly decided, though they have both asserted they would not eat such a nice morsel, and each insisted on the other’s accepting it; but, in reality, both were very desirous to swallow it themselves. Do not therefore conclude hence, that this dispute would have come to a speedy decision: for here both parties were heartily in earnest, and it is very probable they would have remained in the inn-yard to this day.

had not the good Peter Pounce put a stop to it; for finding he had no longer hopes of satisfying his old appetite with Fanny, and being desirous of having some one to whom he might communicate his grandeur, he told the Parson he would convey him home in his chariot. This favour was by Adams, with many bows and acknowledgments, accepted; though he afterwards said, He ascended the chariot rather that he might not offend, than from any desire of riding in it, for that in his heart he preferred the pedestrian even to the vehicular expedition. All matters being now settled, the chariot, in which rode Adams and Pounce, moved forwards; and Joseph having borrowed a pillion from the host, Fanny had just seated herself thereon, and had laid hold of the girdle which her lover wore for that purpose, when the wise beast, who concluded that one at a time was sufficient, that two to one were odds, &c. discovered much uneasiness at his double load, and began to consider his hinder as his fore-legs, moving the direct contrary way to that which is called forwards. Nor could Joseph, with all his horsemanship, persuade him to advance: but without having any regard to the lovely part of the lovely girl which was on his back, he used such agitations, that had not one of the men come in immediately to her assistance, she had, in plain English, tumbled backward on the ground. This inconvenience was presently remedied by an exchange of horses; and then Fanny being again placed on her pillion, on a better-natured, and somewhat better-fed beast, the parson's horse, finding he had no longer odds to contend with, agreed to march; and the whole procession set forward for Booby-Hall, where they arrived in a few hours, without any thing remarkable happening on the road, unless it was a curious dialogue between the parson and the steward; which, to use the language of a late apologist, a pattern to all biographers, "waits for the reader in the next chapter."

C H A P. XIII.

A curious dialogue which passed between Mr Abraham Adams and Mr Peter Pounce, better worth reading than all the works of Colley Cibber and many others.

THE chariot had not proceeded far before Mr Adams observed it was a very fine day. 'Ay, and a very fine country too,' answered Pounce. 'I should think so more,' returned Adams, 'if I had not lately travelled over the Downs, which I take to exceed this and all other prospects

' in the universe.' ' A fig for prospects,' answered Pounce, ' one acre here is worth ' ten there; and, for my own part, I have ' no delight in the prospect of any land but ' my own.' ' Sir,' said Adams, ' you can in' dulge yourself with many fine prospects of ' that kind.' ' I thank God I have a little,' replied the other, ' with which I am content,
 ' and envy no man: I have a little, Mr A' dams, with which I do as much good as I ' can.' Adams answered, ' That riches without charity were nothing worth; for that they were a blessing only to him who made them a blessing to others. ' You and I,' said Peter, ' have different notions of charity. I ' own, as it is generally used, I do not like ' the word, nor do I think it becomes one of ' us gentlemen; it is a mean parson-like ' quality; tho' I would not infer many ' parsons have it neither.' ' Sir,' said Adams, ' my definition of charity is, a generous ' disposition to relieve the distressed.' ' There ' is something in that definition,' answered Peter, ' which I like well enough; it is, as ' you say, a disposition—and does not so ' much consist in the act as in the disposition ' to do it; but alas! Mr Adams, who are ' meant by the distressed? Believe me, the ' distressed of mankind are mostly imaginary,
 ' and it would be rather folly than good-

' nefs to relieve them.' ' Sure, Sir,' replied Adams, ' hunger and thirst, cold and na' kedness, and other distresses which attend
 ' the poor, can never be said to be imaginary
 ' evils.' ' How can any man complain of ' hunger,' said Peter, ' in a country where ' such excellent fallads are to be gathered in ' almost every field? or of thirst, where every ' river and stream produces such delicious
 ' potations? And as for cold and nakedness, ' they are evils introduced by luxury and ' custom. A man naturally wants cloaths
 ' no more than a horse or any other animal;
 ' and there are whole nations who go without ' them: but these are things perhaps which ' you who do not know the world'—' You ' will pardon me, Sir,' returned Adams;
 ' I have read of the Gymnosophists.' ' A
 ' plague of your Jehosaphats,' cried Peter;
 ' the greatest fault in our constitution is ' the provision made for the poor, except ' that perhaps made for some others. Sir, I ' have not an estate which doth not contri' bute almost as much again to the poor as ' to the land tax; and I do assure you, I ex' pect to come myself to the parish in the ' end.' To which Adams giving a dissenting smile, Peter thus proceeded: ' I fancy, Mr
 ' Adams, you are one of those who imagine
 ' I am a lump of money; for there are many

166 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ who, I fancy, believe that not only my ‘ pockets, but my whole cloaths are lined ‘ with bank-bills; but I assure you, you are ‘ all mistaken; I am not the man the world ‘ esteems me. If I can hold my head above ‘ water, it is all I can. I have injured my‘ self by purchasing. I have been too libe‘ ral of my money. Indeed I fear my heir ‘ will find my affairs in a worse situation ‘ than they are reputed to be. Ah! he will ‘ have reason to wish I had loved money ‘ more and land less. Pray, my good neigh‘ bour, where should I have that quantity of ‘ riches the world is so liberal to bestow on ‘ me? where could I possibly, without I had ‘ stole it, acquire such a treasure?’ ‘ Why ‘ truly,’ says Adams, ‘ I have been always ‘ of your opinion; I have wondered as well ‘ as yourself with what confidence they could ‘ report such things of you, which have to ‘ me appeared as mere impossibilities; for ‘ you know, Sir, and I have often heard you ‘ say it, that your wealth is of your own ac‘ quisition, and can it be credible that in ‘ your short time you should have amassed ‘ such a heap of treasure as these people will ‘ have you worth? Indeed, had you inhe‘ rited an estate like Sir Thomas Booby, ‘ which had descended in your family for ‘ many generations, they might have had a ' colour for their assertions.' ' Why, what ' do they say I am worth?' cries Peter, with a malicious sneer. ' Sir,' answered Adams,

 ' I have heard some aver you are not worth ' less than twenty thousand pounds;' at which Peter frowned. ' Nay, Sir,' said Adams,
 ' you ask me only the opinion of others;
 ' for my own part I have always denied it,
 ' nor did I ever believe you could possibly be ' worth half that sum.' ' However, Mr
 ' Adams,' said he, squeezing him by the hand, ' I would not sell them all I am ' worth for double that sum; and as to ' what you believe or they believe, I care
 ' not a fig, no, not a fart. I am not poor,
 ' because you think me so, nor because you
 ' attempt to undervalue me in the country.
 ' I know the envy of mankind very well;
 ' but I thank Heaven I am above them. It ' is true my wealth is of my own acquisition:
 ' I have not an estate like Sir Thomas Booby,
 ' that has descended in my family through ' many generations; but I know heirs of ' such estates who are forced to travel about
 ' the country like some people in torn cas-
 ' socks, and might be glad to accept of a ' pitiful curacy for what I know. Yes, Sir,
 ' as shabby fellows as yourself, whom no ' man of my figure, without that vice of ' good nature about him, would suffer to

168 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ride in a chariot with him.’ ‘Sir,’ said Adams, ‘I value not your chariot a rush; and if I had known you had intended to affront me, I would have walked to the world’s end on foot ere I would have accepted a place in it. However, Sir, I will soon rid you of that inconvenience;’ and so saying, he opened the chariot door, without calling to the coachman, and leapt out into the highway, forgetting to take his hat along with him; which however Mr Pounce threw after him with great violence. Joseph and Fanny stopped to bear him company the rest of the way, which was not above a mile.

B O O K F O U R T H.

C H A P. I.

The arrival of Lady Booby and the rest at Booby-hall.

THE coach and six, in which Lady Booby rode, overtook the other travellers as they entered the parish. She no sooner saw Joseph, than her cheeks glowed with red, and immediately after became as totally pale. She had, in her surprize, almost stopped her coach; but recollected herself timely enough to prevent it. She entered the parish amidst the ringing of bells, and the acclamations of the poor, who were rejoiced to see their patroness returned after so long an absence, during which time all her rents had been drafted to London, without a shilling being spent among them, which tended not a little to their utter impoverishing; for if the court would be severely missed in such a city as London, how much more must the absence of a great person of fortune be felt in a little country village, for whose inhabitants such a family finds a constant employment and supply; and with the offals of whose table, the infirm, aged, and infant poor, are abundantly fed, with a generosity which hath scarce a visible effect on their benefactor's pockets?

But if their interest inspired so public a joy into every countenance, how much more forcibly did the affection which they bore Parson Adams operate upon all who beheld his return? They flocked about him like dutiful children round an indulgent parent, and vied with each other in demonstrations of duty and love. The parson, on his side, shook every one by the hand, enquired heartily after the healths of all that were absent, of their children and relations, and expressed a satisfaction in his face, which nothing but benevolence made happy by its objects could infuse.

Nor did Joseph and Fanny want a hearty welcome from all who saw them. In short, no three persons could be more kindly received, as indeed none ever more deserved to be universally beloved.

Adams carried his fellow-travellers home to his house, where he insisted on their partaking whatever his wife, whom, with his children, he found in health and joy, could provide; where we shall leave them enjoying perfect happiness over a homely meal, to view scenes of greater splendour, but infinitely less bliss.

Our more intelligent readers will doubtless suspect, by this second appearance of Lady Booby on the stage, that all was not ended by the dismissal of Joseph; and to be honest with them, they are in the right; the arrow had pierced deeper than she imagined; nor was the wound so easily to be cured. The removal of the object soon cooled her rage, but it had a different effect on her love: that departed with his person; but this remained lurking in her mind with his image. Restless, interrupted slumbers, and confused horrible dreams were her portion the first night. In the morning, Fancy painted her a more delicious scene; but to delude, not delight her; for before she could reach the promised happiness, it vanished, and left her to curse, not bless the vision.

She started from her sleep, her imagination being all on fire with the phantom, when her eyes accidentally glancing towards the spot where yesterday the real Joseph had stood, that little circumstance raised his idea in the liveliest colours in her memory. Each look, each word, each gesture, rushed back on her mind with charms which all his coldness could not abate. Nay, she imputed that to his youth, his folly, his awe, his religion, to every thing but what would instantly have produced contempt, want of passion for the sex; or, that which would have roused her hatred, want of liking to her.

Reflection then hurried her farther, and told her, she must see this beautiful youth no more; nay, suggested to her, that she herself had dismissed him for no other fault than probably that of too violent an awe and respect for herself; and which she ought rather to have esteemed a merit, the effects of which were besides so easily and surely to have been removed; she then blamed, she cursed the hasty rashness of her temper; her fury was vented all on herself, and Joseph appeared innocent in her eyes. Her passion at length grew so violent, that it forced her on seeking relief, and now she thought of recalling him: but pride forbade that; pride, which soon drove all softer passions from her soul, and represented to her the meanness of him she was fond of. That thought soon began to obscure his beauties; contempt succeeded next, and then disdain, which presently introduced her hatred of the creature who had given her so much uneasiness. These enemies of Joseph had no sooner taken possession of her mind, than they insinuated to her a thousand things in his disfavour; every thing but dislike of her person; a thought, which as it would have been intolerable to bear, she checked the moment it endeavoured to rise. Revenge came now to her assistance; and she considered her dismissal of him stript, and without a character, with the utmost pleasure. She rioted in the several kinds of misery, which her imagination suggested to her might be his fate; and with a smile composed of anger, mirth, and scorn, viewed him in the rags in which her fancy had dressed him.

Mrs Slipflop being summoned, attended her mistress, who had now, in her own opinion, totally subdued this passion. Whilst she was dressing, she asked if that fellow had been turned away according to her orders. Slipflop answered, she had told her Ladyship so, (as indeed she had.) ‘—And how did he behave?’ replied the Lady. ‘Truly, Madam,’ cries Slipflop, ‘in such a manner that infected every body who saw him. The poor lad had but little wages to receive: for he constantly allowed his father and mother half his income; so that, when your Ladyship’s livery was stript off, he had not wherewithal to buy a coat, and must have gone naked, if one of the footmen had not accommodated him with one; and whilst he was standing in his shirt, (and, to say truth, he was an amorous figure) being told your Ladyship would not give him a character, he sighed, and said, he had done nothing willingly to offend; that for his part he ‘ should always give your Ladyship a good ‘ character wherever he went; and he pray‘ ed God, to bless you; for you was the best ‘ of ladies, though his enemies had set you a‘ gainst him: I wish you had not turned him ‘ away; for I believe you have not a faith-‘ fuller servant in the house.’—‘ How came ‘ you, then,’ replied the Lady, ‘ to advise me ‘ to turn him away?’ ‘ I, Madam!’ said Slipslop, ‘ I am sure you will do me the just‘ tice to say, I did all in my power to prevent ‘ it; but I saw your Ladyship was angry;

‘ and it is not the business of us upper ser‘ vants to interfere on those occasions.’— ‘ And was it not you, audacious wretch,’ cried the Lady, ‘ who made me angry? Was ‘ it not your tittle-tattle, in which I believe ‘ you belied the poor fellow, which incensed ‘ me against him? He may thank you for all ‘ that hath happened; and so may I for the ‘ loss of a good servant, and one who proba‘ bly had more merit than all of you. Poor ‘ fellow! I am charmed with his goodness to ‘ his parents. Why did you not tell me of ‘ that, but suffer me to dismiss so good a ‘ creature without a character? I see the rea‘ son of your whole behaviour now as well as ‘ your complaint; you was jealous of the ‘ wenches.’ ‘ I jealous!’ said Slipslop; ‘ I ‘ assure you I look upon myself as his betters;

‘ I am not meat for a footman I hope.’ These words threw the Lady into a violent passion, and she sent Slipflop from her presence, who departed, tossing her nose, and crying, ‘ Marry come up! there are some people more jealous than I, I believe.’ Her Lady affected not to hear the words, though in reality she did, and understood them too. Now ensued a second conflict, so like the former, that it might savour of repetition to relate it minutely. It may suffice to say that Lady Booby found good reason to doubt whether she had so absolutely conquered her passion, as she had flattered herself; and, in order to accomplish it quite, took a resolution more common than wise, to retire immediately into the country. The reader hath long ago seen the arrival of Mrs Slipflop, whom no pertness could make her mistress resolve to part with; lately that of Mr Pounce, her forerunners; and, lastly, that of the Lady herself.

The morning after her arrival, being Sunday, she went to church, to the great surprise of every body, who wondered to see her Ladyship (being no very constant church-woman) there, so suddenly upon her journey. Joseph was likewise there; and I have heard it was remarked, that she fixed her eyes on him much more than on the parson; but this I believe to be only a malicious rumour. When the prayers were ended, Mr Adams stood up, and with a loud voice pronounced, ' I publish the banns of marriage between ' Joseph Andrews and Frances Goodwill, ' both of this parish,' &c. Whether this had any effect on Lady Booby or no, who was then in her pew, which the congregation could not see into, I could never discover: but certain it is, that in about a quarter of an hour she stood up, and directed her eyes to that part of the church where the women sat, and persisted in looking that way during the remainder of the sermon, in so scrutinizing a manner, and with so angry a countenance, that most of the women were afraid she was offended at them.

The moment she returned home, she sent for Slipflop into her chamber, and told her, She wondered what that impudent fellow Joseph did in that parish. Upon which Slipflop gave her an account of her meeting Adams with him on the road, and likewise the adventure with Fanny. At the relation of which, the Lady often changed her countenance; and when she had heard all, she ordered Mr Adams into her presence, to whom she behaved as the reader will see in the next chapter.

C H H P. II.

A dialogue between Mr Abraham Adams and the Lady Booby.

MR Adams was not far off; for he was drinking her Ladyship's health below, in a cup of her ale. He no sooner came before her, than she began in the following manner: 'I wonder, Sir, after the many great obligations you have had to this family,' (with all which the reader hath, in the course of this history, been minutely acquainted), 'that you will ungratefully show any respect to a fellow who hath been turned out of it for his misdeeds. Nor doth it, I can tell you, Sir, become a man of your character, to run about the country with an idle fellow and wench. Indeed, as for the girl, I know no harm of her. Slipflop tells me she was formerly bred up in my house, and behaved as she ought, till she hankered after this fellow, and he spoiled her. Nay, she may still perhaps do very well, if he will let her alone. You are therefore doing a monstrous thing, in endeavouring to procure a match between these two people, which will be to the ruin of them both.'—'Madam,' says Adams, 'if your Ladyship will but hear me

' speak, I protest I never heard any harm of ' Mr Joseph Andrews; if I had, I should ' have corrected him for it: for I never have ' nor will encourage the faults of those un' der my cure. As for the young woman, I ' assure your Ladyship, I have as good an ' opinion of her as your Ladyship yourself,
 ' or any other can have. She is the sweetest-' tempered, honestest, worthiest, young crea' ture; indeed, as to her beauty, I do not ' commend her on that account, tho' all ' men allow she is the handsomest woman,
 ' gentle or simple, that ever appeared in the ' parish.' ' You are very impertinent,' says she, ' to talk such fulsome stuff to me. It ' is mighty becoming truly in a clergyman
 ' to trouble himself about handsome women;
 ' and you are a delicate judge of beauty, no ' doubt. A man who hath lived all his life in ' such a parish as this is a rare judge of beauty.
 ' Ridiculous! Beauty indeed!--a country
 ' wench a beauty!--I shall be sick whenever
 ' I hear beauty mentioned again---And so
 ' this wench is to stock the parish with beau' ties, I hope ---But, Sir, our poor is nume' rous enough already; I will have no more
 ' vagabonds settled here.' ' Madam,' says Adams, ' your Ladyship is offended with me;
 ' I protest, without any reason. This couple ' were desirous to consummate long ago.

‘ and I dissuaded them from it; nay, I may ‘ venture to say, I believe I was the sole ‘ cause of their delaying it.’ ‘ Well,’ says she, ‘ and you did very wisely and honestly ‘ too, notwithstanding she is the greatest ‘ beauty in the parish.’----‘ And now, Ma‘ dam,’ continued he, ‘ I only perform my ‘ office to Mr Joseph.’-----‘ Pray, don’t ‘ mister such fellows to me,’ cries the Lady.
 ‘ He,’ said the parson, ‘ with the consent of ‘ Fanny, before my face, put in the banns.’-- ‘ Yes,’ answered the Lady, ‘ I suppose the ‘ slut is forward enough; Slipslop tells me ‘ how her head runs upon fellows; that is ‘ one of her beauties, I suppose. But if they ‘ have put in the banns, I desire you will ‘ publish them no more without my orders.’ ‘ Madam,’ cries Adams, ‘ if any one puts in ‘ sufficient caution, and assigns a proper rea‘ son against them, I am willing to surcease.’ ‘ ----I tell you a reason,’ says she, ‘ he is a ‘ vagabond, and he shall not settle here, and ‘ bring a nest of beggars into the parish; it ‘ will make us but little amends that they ‘ will be beauties.’ ‘ Madam,’ answered Adams, ‘ with the utmost submission to your ‘ Ladyship, I have been informed by Lawyer ‘ Scout, that any person who serves a year, ‘ gains settlement in the parish where he ‘ serves.’ ‘ Lawyer Scout,’ replied the Lady,

‘ is an impudent coxcomb; I will have no ‘ Lawyer Scout interfere with me. I repeat ‘ to you again, I will have no more in‘ cumbrances brought on us: so I desire ‘ you will proceed no farther.’ ‘ Madam,’ returned Adams, ‘ I would obey your Lady-‘ ship in every thing that is lawful; but surely ‘ the parties being poor is no reason against ‘ their marrying. God forbid there should ‘ be any such law. The poor have little ‘ share enough of this world already; it ‘ would be barbarous indeed to deny them ‘ the common privileges and innocent enjoy‘ ments which nature indulges to the animal ‘ creation.’ ‘ Since you understand your‘ self no better,’ cries the Lady, ‘ nor the re‘ spect due from such as you to a woman of ‘ my distinction, than to affront my ears by ‘ such loose discourse, I shall mention but ‘ one short word; it is my orders to you, ‘ that you publish these banns no more; and ‘ if you dare, I will recommend it to your ‘ master, the doctor, to discard you from his ‘ service, I will, Sir, notwithstanding your ‘ poor family; and then you and the greatest ‘ beauty in the parish may go and beg to‘ gether.’ ‘ Madam,’ answered Adams, ‘ I ‘ know not what your Ladyship means by ‘ the terms master and service. I am in the ‘ service of a master who will never discard

‘ me for doing my duty : and if the doctor ‘ (for indeed I have never been able to pay ‘ for a licence) thinks proper to turn me ‘ from my cure, God will provide me, I ‘ hope, another. At least, my family, as ‘ well as myself, have hands; and he will ‘ prosper, I doubt not, our endeavours to ‘ get our bread honestly with them. Whilst ‘ my conscience is pure, I shall never fear ‘ what man can do unto me.’---‘ I condemn ‘ my humility,’ said the Lady, ‘ for demean‘ ing myself to converse with you so long.
 ‘ I shall take other measures; for I see you ‘ are a confederate with them. But the ‘ sooner you leave me the better; and I shall ‘ give orders that my doors may no longer ‘ be open to you. I will suffer no parsons ‘ who run about the country with beauties, ‘ to be entertained here.’---‘ Madam,’ said Adams, ‘ I shall enter into no person’s doors ‘ against their will : but I am assured, when ‘ you have enquired farther into this matter, ‘ you will applaud, not blame my proceed‘ ing; and so I humbly take my leave:’ which he did with many bows, or at least many attempts at a bow.

182 THE ADVENTURES OF

C H A P. III.

What passed between the Lady and Lawyer Scout.

IN the afternoon the Lady sent for Mr Scout, whom she attacked most violently for intermeddling with her servants: which he denied, and indeed with truth; for he had only asserted accidentally, and perhaps rightly, that a year's service gained a settlement; and so far he owned he might have formerly informed the parson, and believed it was law. 'I am resolved,' said the Lady, 'to have no discarded servants of mine settled here; and so, if this be your law, I shall send to another lawyer.' Scout said, 'If she sent to a hundred lawyers, not one or all of them could alter the law. The utmost that was in the power of a lawyer, was to prevent the law's taking effect; and that he himself could do for her Ladyship as well as any other: and I believe,' says he, 'Madam, your Ladyship not being conversant in these matters, hath mistaken a difference: for I asserted only, that a man who served a year was settled. Now there is a material difference between being settled in law and settled in fact; and as I affirmed generally he was settled, and law is preferable

' to fact, my settlement must be understood
 ' in law, and not in fact. And suppose,
 ' Madam, we admit he was settled in law,
 ' what use will they make of it? how doth ' that relate to fact? He is not settled in ' fact; and if he be not settled in fact, he is ' not an inhabitant; and if he is not an inha' bitant, he is not of this parish; and then ' undoubtedly he ought not to be published
 ' here; for Mr Adams hath told me your ' Ladyship's pleasure, and the reason, which ' is a very good one, to prevent burdening
 ' us with the poor; we have too many al' ready; and I think we ought to have an ' act to hang or transport half of them. If ' we can prove in evidence, that he is not ' settled in fact, it is another matter. What ' I said to Mr Adams, was on a supposition ' that he was settled in fact; and indeed if ' that was the case, I should doubt'---' Don't ' tell me your facts and your ifs,' said the ' Lady, ' I don't understand your gibberish:
 ' you take too much upon you, and are very ' impertinent in pretending to direct in this ' parish, and you shall be taught better, I ' assure you, you shall. But as to the wench,
 ' I am resolved she shall not settle here; I ' will not suffer such beauties as these to pro' duce children for us to keep.'----' Beauties
 ' indeed! your Ladyship is pleased to be

' merry,'--—— answered Scout.——. ' Mr
 ' Adams described her so to me,' said the Lady.-----' Pray what sort of dowdy is it,
 ' Mr Scout?'--——. ' The ugliest creature
 ' almost I ever beheld; a poor dirty drab,
 ' your Ladyship never saw such a wretch.'---
 ' Well, but dear Mr Scout, let her be what ' she will,----- these ugly women will bring ' children you know; so that we must pre' vent the marriage.'---' True, Madam,' replied Scout, ' for the subsequent marriage
 ' co-operating with the law, will carry law
 ' into fact; when a man is married, he is ' settled in fact; and then he is not remove-' able. I will see Mr Adams, and I make no ' doubt of prevailing with him. His only ' objection is, doubtless, that he shall lose his ' fee; but that being once made easy, as it ' shall be, I am confident no farther objection ' will remain. No, no, it is impossible: but ' your Ladyship can't discommend his un' willingness to depart from his fee. Every ' man ought to have proper value for his ' fee. As to the matter in question, if your ' Ladyship pleases to employ me in it, I will ' venture to promise you success. The laws ' of this land are not so vulgar, to permit a ' mean fellow to contend with one of your ' Ladyship's fortune. We have one sure
 ' card, which is, to carry him before Justice

‘ Frolic, who, upon hearing your Ladyship’s ‘ name, will commit him without any farther ‘ questions. As for the dirty slut, we shall ‘ have nothing to do with her; for if we get ‘ rid of the fellow, the ugly jade will’---‘ Take ‘ what measures you please, good Mr Scout,’ answered the Lady, ‘ but I wish you could ‘ rid the parish of both; for Slipflop tells me ‘ such stories of this wench, that I abhor the ‘ thoughts of her; and though you say she ‘ is such an ugly slut, yet you know, dear ‘ Mr Scout, these forward creatures who ‘ run after men, will always find some as ‘ forward as themselves: so that, to prevent ‘ the increase of beggars, we must get rid of ‘ her’---‘ Your Ladyship is very much in ‘ the right,’ answered Scout, ‘ but I am ‘ afraid the law is a little deficient in giving ‘ us any such power of prevention; however, ‘ the Justice will stretch it as far as he is able ‘ to oblige your Ladyship. To say truth, it ‘ is a great blessing to the country that he is ‘ in the commission; for he hath taken seve‘ ral poor off our hands that the law would ‘ never lay hold on. I know some justices ‘ who make as much of committing a man ‘ to Bridewell, as his Lordship at five would ‘ of hanging him; but it would do a man ‘ good to see his worship, our Justice, com‘ mit a fellow to Bridewell; he takes so

186 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ much pleasure in it : and when once we ‘ ha’ um there, we feldom hear any more ‘ o’ um. He’s either starved or ate up by ‘ vermin in a month’s time.’---Here the arrival of a visitor put an end to the conversation, and Mr Scout having undertaken the cause, and promised it success, departed.

This Scout was one of those fellows who, without any knowledge of the law, or being bred to it, take upon them, in defiance of an act of parliament, to act as lawyers in the country, and are called so. They are the pests of society, and a scandal to a profession to which indeed they do not belong; and which owes to such kind of rascallions the ill-will which weak persons bear towards it. With this fellow, to whom a little before she would not have condescended to have spoken, did a certain passion for Joseph, and the jealousy and disdain of poor innocent Fanny, betray the Lady Booby into a familiar discourse, in which she inadvertently confirmed many hints, with which Slipflop, whose gallant he was, had pre-acquainted him; and whence he had taken an opportunity to assert those severe falsehoods of little Fanny, which possibly the reader might not have been well able to account for, if we had not thought proper to give him this information.

C H A P. IV.

A short chapter, but very full of matter; particularly the arrival of Mr Booby and his Lady.

ALL that night, and the next day, the Lady Booby passed with the utmost anxiety; her mind was distracted, and her soul tossed up and down by many turbulent and opposite passions. She loved, hated, pitied, scorned, admired, despised the same persons by fits, which changed in a very short interval. On Tuesday morning, which happened to be a holiday, she went to church, where, to her surprise, Mr Adams published the banns again, with as audible a voice as before. It was lucky for her that as there was no sermon, she had an immediate opportunity of returning home to vent her rage, which she could not have concealed from the congregation five minutes; indeed it was not then very numerous, the assembly consisting of no more than Adams, his clerk, his wife, the Lady, and one of her servants. At her return she met Slipflop, who accosted her in these words:--‘ O Meam, what doth your Ladyship think? To be sure Lawyer Scout hath carried Joseph and Fanny both before the Justice. All the parish are in tears,

‘ and say they will certainly be hanged: for ‘ no body knows what it is for.--‘ I suppose ‘ they deserve it,’ says the Lady. ‘ What ‘ dost thou mention such wretches to me?’
‘ O dear Madam,’ answered Slipslop, ‘ is it ‘ not a pity such a graceless young man ‘ should die a virulent death? I hope the ‘ judge will take commensuration on his ‘ youth. As for Fanny, I don’t think it sig‘ nifies much what becomes of her; and if ‘ poor Joseph hath done any thing, I could ‘ venture to swear she traduced him in it; ‘ few men ever come to fragrant punishment, ‘ but by those nasty creatures, who are a ‘ scandal to our sect.’ The Lady was no more pleased at this news, after a moment’s reflection, than Slipslop herself: for though she wished Fanny far enough, she did not desire the removal of Joseph, especially with her. She was puzzled how to act, or what to say on this occasion, when a coach and six drove into the court, and a servant acquainted her with the arrival of her nephew Booby and his Lady. She ordered them to be conducted into a drawing-room, whither she presently repaired, having composed her countenance as well as she could; and being a little satisfied that the wedding would, by these means, be at least interrupted, and that she should have an opportunity to execute any resolution she might take, for which she saw herself provided with an excellent instrument in Scout.

The Lady Booby apprehended her servant had made a mistake, when he mentioned Mr Booby's lady; for she had never heard of his marriage: but how great was her surprise, when, at her entering the room, her nephew presented his wife to her, saying, 'Madam, 'this is that charming Pamela, of whom I 'am convinced you have heard so much.' The Lady received her with more civility than he expected; indeed with the utmost: for she was perfectly polite, nor had any vice inconsistent with good-breeding. They passed some little time in ordinary discourse, when a servant came and whispered Mr Booby, who presently told the ladies, he must desert them a little on some business of consequence; and as their discourse during his absence would afford little improvement or entertainment to the reader, we will leave them for a while to attend Mr Booby.

C H A P. V.

Containing Justice-business: curious precedents of depositions, and other matters necessary to be perused by all justices of the peace and their clerks.

THE young Squire and his Lady were no sooner alighted from their coach, than the servants began to enquire after Mr Joseph, from whom, they said, their Lady had not heard a word, to her great surprize; since he had left Lady Booby's. Upon this they were instantly informed of what had lately happened, with which they hastily acquainted their master, who took an immediate resolution to go himself, and endeavour to restore his Pamela her brother, before she even knew she had lost him.

The Justice, before whom the criminals were carried, and who lived within a short mile of the Lady's house, was luckily Mr Booby's acquaintance, by his having an estate in his neighbourhood. Ordering therefore his horses to his coach, he set out for the judgment-seat, and arrived when the Justice had almost finished his business. He was conducted into a hall, where he was acquainted that his Worship would wait on him in a moment; for he had only a man and a woman to commit to Bridewell first. As he was now convinced he had not a minute to lose, he insisted on the servants introducing him directly into the room where the Justice was then executing his office, as he called it. Being brought thither, and the first compliments being passed between the Squire and his Worship, the former asked the latter what crime these two young people had been guilty of. 'No great crime,' answered the Justice; 'I have only ordered them to Bridewell for a month.' 'But what is their crime?' repeated the Squire. 'Larceny, an't please your Honour,' says Scout. 'Ay,' says the Justice, 'a kind of felonious larcenous thing. I believe I must order them a little correction too, a little stripping and whipping.' (Poor Fanny, who had hitherto supported all with the thoughts of Joseph's company, trembled at that sound; but indeed without reason, for none but the devil himself would have executed such a sentence on her.) 'Still,' said the Squire, 'I am ignorant of the crime, the fact I mean.' 'Why, there it is in peaper,' answered the Justice, shewing him a deposition, which, in absence of his clerk, he had writ himself, of which we have with great difficulty procured an authentic copy; and here it follows verbatim et literatim.

The deputation of James Scout layer, and Thomas Trotter, yeoman, taken before me, one of his Mageesty's justices of the piece for Zumerfethire.

THESE deponants saith, and first Thomas Trotter for himself saith, that on the _____ of this instant October, being Sabbath-day, between the ours of 2 and 4 in the afternoon, he zeed Joseph Andrews and Francis Goodwill walk akross a certane felde belonging to Layer Scout, and out of the path which ledes thru the said felde, and there he zede Joseph Andrews with a nife cut one hasel twig, of the value, as he believes, of 3 half-pence, or thereabouts; and he saith, that the said Francis Goodwill was likewise walking on the grafs out of the said path in the said felde, and did receive and karry in her hand the said twig, and so was comfarting, eading and abating to the said Joseph threin. And the said James Scout for himself says, that he verily believes the said twig to be his own proper twig,' &c.

'Jesu!' said the Squire, 'would you commit two persons to Bridewell for a twig?' 'Yes,' said the lawyer, 'and with great lenity too; for if we had called it a ‘ young tree, they would have been both ‘ hanged.’—‘ Harkee,’ says the Justice, taking aside the Squire, ‘ I should not have been so ‘ severe on this occasion, but Lady Booby ‘ desires to get them out of the parish; so ‘ Lawyer Scout will give the constable orders ‘ to let them run away if they please; but it ‘ seems they intend to marry together, and ‘ the Lady hath no other means, as they are ‘ legally settled there, to prevent their bring‘ ing an incumbrance on her own parish.’ ‘ Well,’ said the Squire, ‘ I will take care ‘ my aunt shall be satisfied in this point;

 ‘ and likewise I promise you, Joseph here ‘ shall never be an incumbrance on her. I ‘ shall be obliged to you, therefore, if, in‘ stead of Bridewell, you would commit them ‘ to my custody.’—‘ O to be sure, Sir, if ‘ you desire it,’ answered the Justice; and without more ado, Joseph and Fanny were delivered over to Squire Booby, whom Joseph very well knew; but little guessed how nearly he was related to him. The Justice burnt his mittimus: the constable was sent about his business; the lawyer made no complaint for want of justice; and the prisoners, with exulting hearts, gave a thousand thanks to his honour Mr Booby, who did not intend their obligations to him should cease here; for ordering his man to produce a cloak-bag, which he had caused to be brought from Lady Booby's on purpose, he desired the Justice that he might have Joseph with him into a room; where ordering his servant to take out a suit of his own clothes, with linen and other necessaries, he left Joseph to dress himself, who not yet knowing the cause of all this civility, excused his accepting such a favour, as long as decently he could. Whilst Joseph was dressing, the Squire repaired to the Justice, whom he found talking with Fanny; for during the examination, she had flopped her hat over her eyes, which were also bathed in tears, and had by that means concealed from his Worship what might perhaps have rendered the arrival of Mr Booby unnecessary, at least for herself. The Justice no sooner saw her countenance cleared up, and her bright eyes shining thro' her tears, than he secretly cursed himself for having once thought of Bridewell for her. He would willingly have sent his own wife thither, to have had Fanny in her place: and conceiving almost at the same instant desires and schemes to accomplish them, he employed the minutes while the Squire was absent with Joseph, in assuring her how sorry he was for having treated her so roughly before he knew her merit; and told her, that since Lady Booby was unwilling that she should fettle in her parish, she was heartily welcome to his, where she promised her his protection, adding, that he would take Joseph and her into his own family, if she liked; which assurance he confirmed with a squeeze by the hand. She thanked him very kindly, and said, 'She would acquaint Joseph with the offer, which he would certainly be glad to accept; for that Lady Booby was angry with them both, though she did not know either had done any thing to offend her: but imputed it to Madam Slipflop who had always been her enemy.'

The Squire now returned, and prevented any farther continuance of this conversation; and the Justice, out of a pretended respect to his guest, but, in reality, from an apprehension of a rival, (for he knew nothing of his marriage), ordered Fanny into the kitchen, whither she gladly retired; nor did the Squire, who declined the trouble of explaining the whole matter, oppose it.

It would be unnecessary, if I was able, which indeed I am not, to relate the conversation between these two gentlemen, which rolled, as I have been informed, entirely on the subject of horse-racing. Joseph was soon dressed in the plainest dress he could find, which was a blue coat and breeches, with a gold edging, and a red waistcoat with the same; and as this suit, which was rather too large for the Squire, exactly fitted him, so he became it so well, and looked so genteel, that no person would have doubted its being as well adapted to his quality as his shape, nor have suspected, as one might, when my Lord —, or Sir——, or Mr—— appear in lace or embroidery, that the tailor's man wore those clothes home on his back, which he should have carried under his arm.

The Squire now took leave of the Justice, and calling for Fanny, made her and Joseph, against their wills, get into the coach with him, which he then ordered to drive to Lady Booby's.—It had moved a few yards only, when the Squire asked Joseph, if he knew who that man was crossing the field; for, added he, I never saw one take such strides before. Joseph answered eagerly, 'O Sir, it is Parson Adams.'—'O la, indeed, and so it is,' said Fanny; 'poor man, he is coming to do what he could for us. Well, he is the worthiest best-natured creature.'----- 'Ay,' said Joseph, 'God bless him, for there is not such another in the universe.'----- 'The best creature living sure,' cries Fanny; 'Is he?' says the Squire; 'then I am resolved to have the best creature living in my coach;' and so saying, he ordered it to stop, whilst Joseph, at his request, hollowed to the Parson, who well knowing his voice, made all the haste imaginable, and soon came up with them. He was desired by the master, who could scarce refrain from laughter at his figure, to mount into the coach, which he with many thanks refused, saying, He could walk by its side, and he'd warrant he'd keep up with it: but he was at length over-prevailed on. The Squire now acquainted Joseph with his marriage; but he might have spared himself that labour; for his servant, whilst Joseph was dressing, had performed that office before. He continued to express the vast happiness he enjoyed in his sister, and the value he had for all who belonged to her. Joseph made many bows, and expressed as many acknowledgments; and Parson Adams, who now first perceived Joseph's new apparel; burst into tears with joy, and fell to rubbing his hands, and snapping his fingers, as if he had been mad.

They were now arrived at the Lady Booby's, and the Squire, desiring them to wait a moment in the court, walked in to his aunt, and calling her out from his wife, acquainted her with Joseph's arrival; saying,
 ' Madam, as I have married a virtuous and ' worthy woman, I am resolved to own her ' relations, and shew them all proper respect;
 ' I shall think myself therefore infinitely ob-

193 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ ligned to all mine, who will do the same.
‘ It is true, her brother hath been your ser‘ vant, but he is now become my brother; ‘ and I have one happiness, that neither his ‘ character, his behaviour, or appearance, ‘ give, me any reason to be ashamed of calling ‘ him so. In short, he is now below, dressed ‘ like a gentleman, in which light I intend ‘ he shall hereafter be seen: and you will ‘ oblige me beyond expression, if you will ‘ admit him to be of our party; for I know ‘ it will give great pleasure to my wife, ‘ though she will not mention it.’

This was a stroke of fortune beyond the Lady Booby’s hopes or expectation; she answered him eagerly, ‘ Nephew, you know ‘ how easily I am prevailed on to do any ‘ thing which Joseph Andrews desires--Phoo, ‘ I mean which you desire me; and as he is ‘ now your relation, I cannot refuse to en‘ tertain him as such.’ The Squire told her, he knew his obligation to her for her compliance; and going three steps, returned, and told her, ---he had one more favour, which he believed she would easily grant, as she had accorded him the former. ‘ There is a young ‘ woman’-- ‘ Nephew,’ says she, ‘ don’t let ‘ my good nature make you desire, as is too ‘ commonly the case, to impose on me; ‘ nor think, because I have, with so much

' condescension, agreed to suffer your bro' ther-in-law to come to my table, that I ' will submit to the company of all my own ' servants, and all the dirty trollops in the ' country.' ' Madam,' answered the Squire,
 ' I believe you never saw this young creature.
 ' I never beheld such sweetness and inno' cence, joined with such beauty, and withal
 ' so genteel.' ' Upon my soul, I won't ad' mit her,' replied the Lady in a passion;
 ' the whole world shan't prevail on me. I ' resent even the desire as an affront, and'— The Squire, who knew her inflexibility, interrupted her, by asking pardon, and promising not to mention it more. He then returned to Joseph, and she to Pamela. He took Joseph aside, and told him he would carry him to his sister; but could not prevail as yet for Fanny. Joseph begged that he might see his sister alone, and then be with his Fanny; but the Squire, knowing the pleasure his wife would have in her brother's company, would not admit it, telling Joseph there would be nothing in so short an absence from Fanny, whilst he was assured of her safety; adding, he hoped he could not easily quit a sister whom he had not seen so long, and who so tenderly loved him.---Joseph immediately complied; for, indeed, no brother could love a sister more; and recommending Fanny, who rejoiced that she was not to go before Lady Booby, to the care of Mr Adams, he attended the Squire up stairs, whilst Fanny repaired with the Parson to his house, where she thought herself secure of a kind reception.

200 THE ADVENTURES OF

C H A P. VI.

Of which you are desired to read no more than you like.

THE meeting between Joseph and Pamela was not without tears of joy on both sides; and their embraces were full of tenderness and affection. They were however regarded with much more pleasure by the nephew than by the aunt, to whose flame they were fuel only; and being assisted by the addition of dress, which was indeed not wanted to set off the lively colours in which Nature had drawn health, strength, comeliness, and youth. In the afternoon Joseph, at their request, entertained them with an account of his adventures; nor could Lady Booby conceal her dissatisfaction at those parts in which Fanny was concerned, especially when Mr Booby launched forth into such rapturous praises of her beauty. She said, applying to her niece, that she wondered her nephew, who had pretended to marry for love, should think such a subject proper to amuse his wife with; adding, that for her part, she should be jealous of a husband who spoke so warmly in praise of another woman. Pamela answered, indeed she thought she had cause; but it was an instance of Mr Booby's aptness to see more beauty in women than they were mistresses of. At which words both the women fixed their eyes on two looking-glasses; and Lady Booby replied, that men were, in the general, very ill judges of beauty; and then, whilst both contemplated only their own faces, they paid a cross compliment to each other's charms. When the hour of rest approached, which the lady of the house deferred as long as decently she could, she informed Joseph (whom for the future we shall call Mr Joseph, he having as good a title to that appellation as many others, I mean that incontestable one of good clothes) that she had ordered a bed to be provided for him. He declined this favour to his utmost; for his heart had long been with his Fanny; but she insisted on his accepting it, alledging, that the parish had no proper accommodation for such a person as he was now to esteem himself. The Squire and his lady both joining with her, Mr Joseph was at last forced to give over his design of visiting Fanny that evening, who, on her side, as impatiently expected him till midnight, when, in complaisance to Mr Adams's family, who had sat up two hours out of respect to her, she retired to bed, but not to sleep; the thought of her love kept her waking, and his not returning according to his promise, filled her with uneasiness, of which, however, she could not assign any other cause than merely that of being absent from him.

* *
* *

Mr Joseph rose early in the morning, and visited her in whom his soul delighted. She no sooner heard his voice in the parson's parlour, than she leapt from her bed, and dressing herself in a few minutes, went down to him. They passed two hours with inexpressible happiness together, and then having appointed Monday, by Mr Adams's permission, for their marriage, Mr Joseph returned according to his promise, to breakfast at the Lady Booby's, with whose behaviour since the evening we shall now acquaint the reader.

She was no sooner retired to her chamber, than she asked Slipflop what she thought of this wonderful creature her nephew had married. 'Madam!' said Slipflop, not yet sufficiently understanding what answer she was to make. 'I ask you,' answered the Lady, 'what you think of the dowdy, my niece; I think I am to call her?' Slipflop wanting no farther hint, began to pull her to pieces, and so miserably defaced her, that it would have been impossible for any one to have known the person. The Lady gave her all the assistance she could, and ended with saying,—‘ I think, Slipflop, you have done her justice; but yet, bad as she is, she is an angel compared to this Fanny.’ Slipflop then fell on Fanny, whom she hacked and hewed in the like barbarous manner, concluding with an observation, that there was always something in those low-life creatures which must eternally distinguish them from their betters. ‘ Really,’ said the Lady, ‘ I think there is one exception to your rule: I am certain you may guess who I mean.’ ‘ Not I, upon my word, Madam,’ said Slipflop.—‘ I mean a young fellow; sure you are the dullest wretch,’ said the Lady. ‘ -----’ ‘ O la! I am indeed.-----’ ‘ Yes, truly, Madam, he is an accession,’ answered Slipflop.—‘ Ay, is he not, Slipflop?’ returned the Lady. ‘ Is he not so genteel, that a prince might without a blush acknowledge him for his son? His behaviour is such, that would not shame the best education. He borrows from his station a condescension in every thing to his superiors, yet unattended by that mean servility which is called good behaviour in such persons. Every ' thing he doth, hath no mark of the base

 ' motive of fear, but visibly shows some re' spect and gratitude, and carries with it the ' persuasion of love.---And then for his vir' tues; such piety to his parents, such tender ' affection to his sister, such integrity in his ' friendship, such bravery, such goodness,
 ' that if he had been born a gentleman, his ' wife would have possessed the most invalu' able blessing'--' To be sure, Ma'am,' said Slipslop.---' But as he is,' answered the Lady,
 ' if he had a thousand more good qualities,
 ' it must render a woman of fashion con' temptible even to be suspected of thinking ' of him; yes, I should despise myself for ' such a thought.' ' To be sure, Ma'am,' said Slipslop. ' And why to be sure?' replied the Lady; ' thou art always one's echo.
 ' Is he not more worthy of affection than a ' dirty country clown, though born of a fa' mily as old as the flood, or an idle worth' less rake, or little puiſne beau of quality?
 ' And yet these we must condemn ourselves ' to, in order to avoid the censure of the ' world; to shun the contempt of others, we ' must ally ourselves to those we despise; we ' must prefer birth, title, and fortune to real ' merit. It is a tyranny of custom, a tyranny
 ' we must comply with; for we people of ' fashion are the slaves of custom.' ' Marry

' come up !' said Slipflop, who now well knew which party to take, ' if I was a woman of ' your Ladyship's fortune and quality, I ' would be a flave to nobody.' ' Me,' said the Lady, ' I am fpeaking of a young wo' man of fafhion, who had feen nothing of ' the world, fhould happen to like fuch a ' fellow.---Me, indeed ! I hope thou doft not ' imagine' --- ' No, Ma'am, to be fure,' cries Slipflop' --- ' No ! what no ?' cries the Lady.
 ' Thou art always ready to anfwer, before ' thou haft heard one. So far I muft allow
 ' he is a charming fellow. Me, indeed !
 ' No, Slipflop, all thoughts of men are over ' with me. I have loft a husband who --- ' but if I fhould reflect, I fhould run mad. ---
 ' My future eafe muft depend upon forget-' fulnefs. Slipflop, let me hear fome of thy ' nonfenfe to turn my thoughts another way.
 ' What doft thou think of Mr Andrews ?' ' Why,
 ' I think,' fays Slipflop, ' he is the handfomeft,
 ' moft propereft man I ever faw ; and if I ' was a lady of the greateft degree it would ' be well for fome folks. Your Ladyship
 ' may talk of cuftom if you please ; but I ' am confidous there is no more comparifon
 ' between young Mr Andrews, and moft of ' the young gentlemen who come to your ' Ladyship's houfe in London ; a parcel of ' whipper-snapper fparks : I would fooner

‘ marry our old Parson Adams: never tell ‘ me what people say, whilst I am happy in ‘ the arms of him I love. Some folks rail ‘ against other folks, because other folks have ‘ what some folks would be glad of’---‘ And ‘ so,’ answered the Lady, ‘ if you was a wo‘ man of condition, you would really marry ‘ Mr Andrews?’---‘ Yes, I assure your Lady-‘ ship,’ replied Slipflop, ‘ if he would have ‘ me.’---‘ Fool, idiot,’ cries the Lady, ‘ if he ‘ would have a woman of fashion! Is that a ‘ question?’ ‘ No truly, Madam,’ said Slip‘ flop, ‘ I believe it would be none if Fanny ‘ was out of the way; and I am confidous ‘ if I was in your Ladyship’s place, and liked ‘ Mr Joseph Andrews, she should not stay in ‘ the parish a moment. I am sure Lawyer ‘ Scout would send her packing, if your ‘ Ladyship would but say the word.’ This last speech of Slipflop raised a tempest in the mind of her mistress. She feared Scout had betrayed her, or rather that she had betrayed herself. After some silence, and a double change of her complexion, first to pale, and then to red, she spoke thus: ‘ I am astonished ‘ at the liberty you give your tongue. Would ‘ you insinuate, that I employed Scout against ‘ this wench on the account of the fellow?’ ‘ La, Ma’am,’ said Slipflop, frightened out of her ‘ wits, ‘ I assassinate such a thing!’ ‘ I think you

'dare not,' answered the Lady. 'I believe my 'conduct may defy malice itself to assert so 'curfed a slander. If I had ever discovered
 'any wantonness, any lightness in my beha'viour; if I had followed the example of 'some whom thou hast, I believe, seen, in 'allowing myself indecent liberties, even 'with a husband: but the dear man who is 'gone,' (here she began to sob) 'was he alive
 'again,' (then she produced tears) 'could 'not upbraid me with any one act of ten'derness or passion. No, Slipflop, all the 'time I cohabited with him, he never ob'tained even a kiss from me, without my 'expressing reluctance in the granting of 'it. I am sure he himself never suspec'ted how much I loved him——Since 'his death, thou knowest, though it is al'most six weeks (it wants but a day) ago,
 'I have not admitted one visitor, till this 'fool my nephew arrived. I have confined 'myself quite to one party of friends.——
 'And can such a conduct as this fear to be 'arraigned? to be accused not only of a 'passion which I have always despised, but 'of fixing it on such an object, a creature
 'so much beneath my notice?'——'Upon 'my word, Ma'am,' says Slipflop, 'I do 'not understand your Ladyship, nor know
 'I any thing of the matter.'——'I believe

‘ indeed thou dost not understand me.— ‘ Those are delicacies which exist only in su‘ perior minds; thy coarse ideas cannot com‘ prehend them. Thou art a low creature, ‘ of the Andrews breed, a reptile of a lower ‘ order, a weed that grows in the common ‘ garden of the creation.’——‘ I assure your ‘ Ladyship,’ says Slipflop, whose passions were almost of as high an order as her Lady’s, ‘ I ‘ have no more to do with Common Gar‘ den than other folks. Really, your Lady-‘ ship talks of servants as if they were not ‘ born of the Christian species. Servants ‘ have flesh and blood as well as quality; ‘ and Mr Andrews himself is a proof that ‘ they have as good, if not better. And for ‘ my own part, I can’t perceive my Dears * ‘ are coarser than other people’s; I am sure ‘ if Mr Andrews was a dear of mine, I should ‘ not be ashamed of him in company with ‘ gentlemen; for whoever hath seen him in ‘ his new clothes, must confess he looks as ‘ much like a gentleman as any body. Coarse, ‘ quotha! I can’t bear to hear the poor young ‘ fellow run down neither; for I will say ‘ this, I never heard him say an ill word of ‘ any body in his life. I am sure his coarse‘ ness doth not ly in his heart; for he is the ‘ best-natur’d man in the world; and as for his skin, it was no coarser than other people's, I am sure. His bosom, when a boy, was as white as driven snow; and, where it is not covered with hairs, is so still. If akins! if I was Mr Andrews, with a hundred a-year, I should not envy the best she who wears a head. A woman that could not be happy with such a man, ought never to be so: for if he can't make a woman happy, I never yet beheld the man who could. I say again, I wish I was a great lady for his sake; I believe when I had made a gentleman of him, he'd behave so, that nobody should deprecate what I had done; and I fancy few would venture to tell him he was no gentleman to his face, nor to mine neither.' At which words, taking up the candles, she asked her mistress, who had been some time in her bed, if she had any further commands; who mildly answered she had none; and telling her she was a comical creature, bid her good night.

* Meaning perhaps ideas.

C H A P. VII.

Philosophical reflections, the like not to be found in any light French romance. Mr Booby's grave advice to Joseph, and Fanny's encounter with a beau.

HABIT, my good reader, hath so vast a prevalence over the human mind, that there is scarce any thing too strange or too strong to be asserted of it. The story of the miser, who from long accustoming to cheat others, came at last to cheat himself, and with great delight and triumph picked his own pocket of a guinea to convey to his hoard, is not impossible or improbable. In like manner it fares with the practicers of deceit, who, from having long deceived their acquaintance, gain at last a power of deceiving themselves, and acquire that very opinion (however false) of their own abilities, excellence, and virtues, into which they have for years perhaps endeavoured to betray their neighbours. Now, reader, to apply this observation to my present purpose, thou must know, that as the passion generally called love, exercises most of the talents of the female or fair world; so in this they now and then discover a small inclination to deceit; for which thou wilt not be angry with the beautiful creatures, when thou hast considered, that at the age of seven, or something earlier, Miss is instructed by her mother, that master is a very monstrous kind of animal, who will, if she suffers him to come too near her, infallibly eat her up, and grind her to pieces. That so far from kissing or toying with him of her own accord, she must not admit him to toy or kiss with her. And lastly, that she must never have any affection towards him; for, if she should, all her friends in petticoats would esteem her a traitress, point at her, and hunt her out of their society. These impressions being first received, are farther and deeper inculcated by their school-mistresses and companions; so that by the age of ten they have contracted such a dread and abhorrence of the above-named monster, that, whenever they see him, they fly from him as the innocent hare doth from the greyhound. Hence, to the age of fourteen or fifteen, they entertain a mighty antipathy to master; they resolve, and frequently profess, that they will never have any commerce with him, and entertain fond hopes of passing their lives out of his reach, of the possibility of which they have so visible an example in their good maiden aunt. But when they arrive at this period, and have now passed their second climacteric, when their wisdom, grown riper, begins to see a little farther ther, and from almost daily falling in master's way, to apprehend the great difficulty of keeping out of it; and when they observe him look often at them, and sometimes very eagerly and earnestly too, (for the monster seldom takes any notice of them till at this age) they then begin to think of their danger; and as they perceive they cannot easily avoid him, the wiser part bethink themselves of providing by other means for their security. They endeavour by all the methods they can invent to render themselves so amiable in his eyes, that he may have no inclination to hurt them; in which they generally succeed so well, that his eyes, by frequent languishing, soon lessen their idea of his fierceness, and so far abate their fears, that they venture to parly with him; and when they perceive him so different from what he hath been described, all gentleness, softness, kindness, tenderness, fondness, their dreadful apprehensions vanish in a moment; and now, (it being usual with the human mind to skip from one extreme to its opposite, as easily, and almost as suddenly, as a bird from one bough to another;) love instantly succeeds to fear. But as it happens to persons who have in their infancy been thoroughly frightened with certain persons called ghosts, that they retain their dread of those beings, after they are convinced that there are no such things; so these young ladies, though they no longer apprehend devouring, cannot so entirely shake off all that hath been instilled into them; they still entertain the idea of that censure which was so strongly imprinted on their tender minds, to which the declarations of abhorrence they every day hear from their companions greatly contributed. To avoid this censure therefore, is now their only care; for which purpose they still pretend the same aversion to the monster; and the more they love him, the more ardently they counterfeit the antipathy. By the continual and constant practice of which deceit on others, they at length impose on themselves, and really believe they hate what they love. Thus indeed it happened to lady Booby, who loved Joseph long before she knew it; and now loved him much more than she suspected. She had indeed, from the time of his sister's arrival in the quality of her niece, and from the instant she viewed him in the dress and character of a gentleman, begun to conceive secretly a design which love had concealed from herself, till a dream betrayed it to her.

She had no sooner risen than she sent for her nephew; when he came to her, after many compliments on his choice, she told him, He might perceive in her condescension to admit her own servant to her table, that she looked on the family of Andrews as his relations, and indeed hers; that as he had married into such a family, it became him to endeavour by all methods to raise it as much as possible. At length she advised him to use all his art to dissuade Joseph from his intended match, which would still enlarge their relation to meanness and poverty; concluding, that by a commission in the army, or some other genteel employment, he might soon put young Mr Andrews on the foot of a gentleman; and that being once done, his accomplishments might quickly gain him an alliance, which would not be to their discredit.

Her nephew heartily embraced this proposal; and finding Mr Joseph with his wife, at his return to her chamber, he immediately began thus: ‘ My love to my dear Pamela, ‘ brother, will extend to all her relations; nor ‘ shall I shew them less respect than if I had ‘ married into the family of a Duke. I hope ‘ I have given you some early testimonies of ‘ this, and shall continue to give you daily ‘ more. You will excuse me therefore, brother, if my concern for your interest makes ‘ me mention what may be, perhaps, disagreeable to you to hear: but I must insist ‘ upon it, that if you have any value for my ‘ alliance or my friendship, you will decline

“ any thoughts of engaging farther with a “ girl, who is, as you are a relation of mine, “ so much beneath you. I know there may “ be at first some difficulty in your compliance, “ but that will daily diminish; and you will “ in the end sincerely thank me for my advice.
“ I own, indeed, the girl is handsome: but “ beauty alone is a poor ingredient, and will “ make but an uncomfortable marriage.’ “ Sir,’ said Joseph, ‘ I assure you her beauty “ is her least perfection; nor do I know a “ virtue which that young creature is not “ possessed of.’ ‘ As to her virtues,’ answered Mr Booby, ‘ you can be yet but a slender “ judge of them: but if she had never so “ many, you will find her equal in these “ among her superiors in birth and fortune, “ which now you are to esteem on a footing “ with yourself; at least I will take care they “ shall shortly be so, unless you prevent me “ by degrading yourself with such a match; “ a match I have hardly patience to think “ of; and which would break the hearts of “ your parents, who now rejoice in the ex“ pectation of seeing you make a figure in the “ world.’ ‘ I know not,’ replied Joseph, “ that my parents have any power over my “ inclinations; nor am I obliged to sacrifice “ my happiness to their whim, or ambition: “ besides, I shall be very sorry to see, that the

216 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ unexpected advancement of my sister should ‘ so suddenly inspire them with this wicked ‘ pride, and make them despise their equals.
‘ I am resolved on no account to quit my ‘ dear Fanny, no, though I could raise her ‘ as high above her present station as you ‘ have raised my sister.’ ‘ Your sister, as ‘ well as myself,’ said Booby, ‘ are greatly ‘ obliged to you for the comparison: but, ‘ Sir, she is not worthy to be compared in ‘ beauty to my Pamela; nor hath she half ‘ her merit. And besides, Sir, as you civilly ‘ throw my marriage with your sister in my ‘ teeth, I must teach you the wide difference ‘ between us: my fortune enabled me to ‘ please myself; and it would have been as ‘ overgrown a folly in me to have omitted ‘ it, as in you to do it.’ ‘ My fortune enables ‘ me to please myself likewise,’ said Joseph; ‘ for all my pleasure is centred in Fanny;
‘ and whilst I have health, I shall be able to ‘ support her with my labour in that station ‘ to which she was born, and with which she ‘ is content.’ ‘ Brother,’ said Pamela, ‘ Mr ‘ Booby advises you as a friend; and, no ‘ doubt, my papa and mamma will be of his ‘ opinion, and will have great reason to be ‘ angry with you for destroying what his ‘ goodness hath done, and throwing down ‘ our family again, after he hath raised it.

It would become you better, brother, to pray for the assistance of grace against such a passion than to indulge it.---Sure, sister, you are not in earnest; I am sure she is your equal at least.'---'She was my equal,' answered Pamela, 'but I am no longer Pamela Andrews, I am now this gentleman's lady, and as such am above her---I hope I shall never behave with an unbecoming pride; but at the same time, I shall always endeavour to know myself, and question not the assistance of grace to that purpose.' They were now summoned to breakfast, and thus ended their discourse for the present, very little to the satisfaction of any of the parties.

Fanny was now walking in an avenue at some distance from the house, where Joseph had promised to take the first opportunity of coming to her. She had not a shilling in the world, and had subsisted, ever since her return, entirely on the charity of Parson Adams. A young gentleman, attended by many servants, came up to her, and asked her if that was not the Lady Booby's house before him? This indeed he well knew, but had framed the question for no other reason than to make her look up, and discover if her face was equal to the delicacy of her shape. He no sooner saw it, than he was struck with amazement. He stopt his horse, and swore she was the most beautiful creature he ever beheld: then instantly alighting, and delivering his horse to his servant, he rapt out half a dozen oaths that he would kiss her; to which she at first submitted, begging he would not be rude: but he was not satisfied with the civility of a salute, nor even with the rudest attack he could make on her lips, but caught her in his arms, and endeavoured to kiss her breasts, which with all her strength she resisted, and, as our spark was not of the Herculean race, with some difficulty prevented. The young gentleman being soon out of breath in the struggle, quitted her, and, remounting his horse, called one of his servants to him, whom he ordered to stay behind with her, and make her any offers whatever, to prevail on her to return home with him in the evening; and to assure her he would take her into keeping. He then rode on with his other servants, and arrived at the Lady's house, to whom he was a distant relation, and was come to pay a visit.

The trusty fellow, who was employed in an office he had been long accustomed to, discharged his part with all the fidelity and dexterity imaginable; but to no purpose. She was entirely deaf to his offers, and rejected them with the utmost disdain. At last the pimp, who had perhaps more warm blood about him than his master, began to solicit for himself; he told her, though he was a servant, he was a man of some fortune, which he would make her mistress of——and this without any insult to her virtue, for that he would marry her. She answered, if his master himself, or the greatest lord in the land, would marry her, she would refuse him. At last, being weary with persuasions, and on fire with charms which would have almost kindled a flame in the bosom of an ancient philosopher, or modern divine, he fastened his horse to the ground, and attacked her with much more force than the gentleman had exerted. Poor Fanny would not have been able to resist his rudeness a long time; but the deity who presides over chaste love, sent her Joseph to her assistance. He no sooner came within sight, and perceived her struggling with a man, than, like a cannon ball, or like lightening, or any thing that is swifter, if any thing be, he ran towards her, and coming up just as the ravisher had torn her handkerchief from her breast, before his lips had touched that seat of innocence and bliss, he dealt him so lusty a blow in that part of his neck which a rope would have become with the utmost propriety, that the fellow staggered backwards; and perceiving he had to do with something rougher than the little tender, trembling hand of Fanny, he quitted her, and turning about saw his rival, with fire flashing from his eyes, again ready to assail him; and indeed before he could well defend himself, or return the first blow, received a second, which, had it fallen on that part of the stomach to which it was directed, would have been probably the last he would have had any occasion for; but the ravisher lifting up his hand, drove the blow upwards to his mouth, whence it dislodged three of his teeth; and now not conceiving any extraordinary affection for the beauty of Joseph's person, nor being extremely pleased with this method of salutation, he collected all his force, and aimed a blow at Joseph's breast, which he artfully parry'd with one fist, so that it lost its force entirely in air; and stepping one foot backward, he darted his fist so fiercely at his enemy, that had he not caught it in his hand (for he was a boxer of no inferior fame) it must have tumbled him on the ground. And now the ravisher meditated another blow, which he aimed at that part of the breast where the heart is lodged: Joseph did not catch it as before, yet so prevented its aim, that it fell directly on his nose, but with abated force. Joseph then moving both fist and foot forwards at the same time, threw his head so dextrously into the stomach of the ravisher, that he fell a lifeless lump on the field, where he lay many minutes breathless and motionless.

225 THE ADVENTURES OF

When Fanny saw her Joseph receive a blow in his face, and blood running in a stream from him, she began to tear her hair, and invoke all human and divine power to his assistance. She was not, however, long under this affliction, before Joseph, having conquered his enemy, ran to her, and assured her he was not hurt; she then instantly fell on her knees, and thanked GOD that he had made Joseph the means of her rescue, and at the same time preserved him from being injured in attempting it. She offered with her handkerchief to wipe his blood from his face; but he seeing his rival attempting to recover his legs, turned to him, and asked him if he had enough; to which the other answered, he had; for he believed he had fought with the devil, instead of a man; and loosening his horse, said he should not have attempted the wench if he had known she had been so well provided for.

Fanny now begged Joseph to return with her to Parson Adams, and to promise that he would leave her no more; these were propositions so agreeable to Joseph, that, had he heard them, he would have given an immediate assent: but indeed his eyes were now his only sense; for you may remember, reader, that the ravisher had tore her handkerchief from Fanny's neck, by which he had discovered such a sight, that Joseph hath declared all the statues he ever beheld, were so much inferior to it in beauty, that it was more capable of converting a man into a statue, than of being imitated by the greatest master of that art. This modest creature, whom no warmth of summer could ever induce to expose her charms to the wanton sun, a modesty to which perhaps they owed their inconceivable whiteness, had stood many minutes bare-necked in the presence of Joseph, before her apprehension of his danger, and the horror of seeing his blood, would suffer her once to reflect on what concerned herself; till at last, when the cause of her concern had vanished, an admiration at his silence, together with observing the fixed position of his eyes, produced an idea in the lovely maid, which brought more blood into her face than had flowed from Joseph's nostrils. The snowy hue of her bosom was likewise exchanged to vermilion at the instant when she clapped her handkerchief round her neck. Joseph saw the uneasiness that she suffered, and immediately removed his eyes from an object, in surveying which he had felt the greatest delight which the organs of sight were capable of conveying to his soul. So great was his fear of offending her, and so truly did his passion for her deserve the noble name of love.

222 THE ADVENTURES OF

Fanny, being recovered from her confusion, which was almost equalled by what Joseph had felt from observing it, again mentioned her request; this was instantly and gladly complied with, and together they crossed two or three fields, which brought them to the habitation of Mr Adams.

C H A P. VIII.

A discourse which happened between Mr Adams, Mrs Adams, Joseph, and Fanny, with some behaviour of Mr Adams which would be called by some few readers very low, absurd and unnatural.

THE parson and his wife had just ended a long dispute when the lovers came to the door. Indeed this young couple had been the subject of the dispute; for Mrs Adams was one of those prudent people who never do any thing to injure their families, or perhaps one of those good mothers who would even stretch their conscience to serve their children. She had long entertained hopes of seeing her eldest daughter succeed Mrs Slipslop, and of making her second son an exciseman by Lady Booby's interest. These were expectations she could not endure the thoughts of quitting, and was therefore very uneasy to see her husband so resolute to oppose the Lady's intentions in Fanny's affair. She told him, ' It behoved every man to ' take the first care of his family; that he ' had a wife and six children, the maintain' ing and providing for whom would be bu' siness enough for him without intermedd' ling in other folks affairs; that he had al' ways preached up submission to superiors,

' and would do ill to give an example of the ' contrary behaviour in his own conduct;
' that if Lady Booby did wrong, she must ' answer for it herself, and the sin would not
' ly at their door; that Fanny had been a ' servant, and bred up in the Lady's own ' family, and consequently she must have ' known more of her than they did; and it ' was very improbable, if she had behaved
' herself well, that the Lady would have been ' so bitterly her enemy; that he was per' haps too much inclined to think well of ' her, because she was handsome, but hand' some women were often no better than ' they should be; that God made ugly wo' men as well as handsome ones; and that ‘ if a woman had virtue, it signified nothing ‘ whether she had beauty or no.’ For all which reasons she concluded he should oblige the Lady, and stop the future publication of the banns. But all these excellent arguments had no effect on the parson, who persisted in doing his duty, without regarding the consequence it might have on his worldly interest; he endeavoured to answer her as well as he could, to which she had just finished her reply, (for she had always the last word every where but at church) when Joseph and Fanny entered their kitchen, where the parson and his wife then sat at breakfast over some bacon and cabbage.

 There was a coldness in the civility of Mrs.
 Adams, which persons of accurate speculation might have observed, but escaped her present guests; indeed it was a good deal covered by the heartiness of Adams, who no sooner heard that Fanny had neither ate nor drank that morning, than he presented her a bone of bacon he had just been gnawing, being the only remains of his provition, and then ran nimbly to the tap, and produced a mug of small beer, which he called ale; however, it was the best in his house. Joseph, addressing himself to the parson, told him the discourse which had passed between Squire Booby, his sister, and himself, concerning

Fanny: he then acquainted him with the dangers whence he had rescued her, and communicated some apprehensions on her account. He concluded, that he should never have an easy moment till Fanny was absolutely his, and begged that he might be suffered to fetch a licence, saying, he could easily borrow the money. The parson answered, that he had already given his sentiments concerning a licence, and that a very few days would make it unnecessary. ‘ Joseph,’ says he, ‘ I wish this haste doth not arise rather from your impatience than your fear; but as it certainly springs from one of these causes, I will examine both. Of each of these therefore in their turn; and first, for the first of these, namely, impatience. Now, child, I must inform you that if in your purposed marriage with this young woman, you have no intention but the indulgence of carnal appetites, you are guilty of a very heinous sin. Marriage was ordained for nobler purposes, as you will learn when you hear the service provided on that occasion read to you. Nay, perhaps, if you are a good lad, I shall give you a sermon gratis, wherein I shall demonstrate how little regard ought to be had to the flesh on such occasions. The text will be, child, Matthew the 5th, and

* part of the 28th verse, ' Whosoever look-
 * eth on a woman so as to lust after her.'
 * The latter part I shall omit, as foreign to * my purpose. Indeed all such brutal lusts
 * and affections are to be greatly subdued, if * not totally eradicated, before the vessel can * be said to be consecrated to honour. To * marry with a view of gratifying those in* clinations is a prostitution of that holy ce* remony, and must entail a curse on all who * so lightly undertake it. If, therefore, this
 * haste arises from impatience, you are to * correct and not give way to it. Now, as * to the second head which I proposed to * speak to, namely, fear; it argues a diffi* dence highly criminal of that power in * which alone we should put our trust, seeing
 * we may be well assured that he is able not * only to defeat the designs of our enemies, * but even to turn their hearts. Instead of * taking therefore any unjustifiable or despe* rate means to rid ourselves of fear, we * should resort to prayer only on these oc* casions; and we may be then certain of * obtaining what is best for us. When any * accident threatens us; we are not to de* spair, nor when it overtakes us to grieve;
 * we must submit in all things to the will of * providence, and set our affections so much * on nothing here, that we cannot quit it ‘ without reluctance. You are a young man, ‘ and can know but little of this world; I ‘ am older, and have seen a great deal. All ‘ passions are criminal in their excess; and ‘ even love itself, if it is not subservient to ‘ our duty, may render us blind to it. Had ‘ Abraham so loved his son Isaac, as to re‘ fuse the sacrifice required, is there any of ‘ us who would not condemn him? Joseph, ‘ I know your many good qualities, and va‘ lue you for them: but as I am to render ‘ an account of your soul, which is commit‘ ted to my cure, I cannot see any fault with‘ out reminding you of it. You are too ‘ much inclined to passion, child, and have ‘ set your affections so absolutely on this ‘ young woman, that if God required her at ‘ your hands, I fear you would reluctantly ‘ part with her. Now, believe me, no Chri‘ stian ought so to set his heart on any per‘ son or thing in this world, but that whenever ‘ it shall be required or taken from him in any ‘ manner by Divine Providence he may be able ‘ peaceably, quietly, and contentedly to resign ‘ it.’ At which words one came hastily in, and acquainted Mr Adams that his youngest son was drowned. He stood silent a moment, and soon began to stamp about the room, and deplore his loss with the bitterest agony.

Joseph, who was overwhelmed with concern likewise, recovered himself sufficiently to endeavour to comfort the Parson; in which attempt he used many arguments, that he had at several times remembered out of his own discourses both in private and public, (for he was a great enemy to the passions, and preached nothing more than the conquest of them by reason and grace), but he was not at leisure now to hearken to his advice. ‘ Child, child,’ said he, ‘ do not go about impossibilities. Had it been any other of my children, I could have borne it with patience; but my little prattler, the darling and comfort of my old age——the little wretch to be snatched out of life just at his entrance into it; the sweetest, best tempered boy, who never did a thing to offend me. It was but this morning I gave him his first lesson in Quæ Genus. This was the very book he learned; poor child! it is of no further use to thee now. He would have made the best scholar, and have been an ornament to the church;---such parts, and such goodness, never met in one so young.’ ‘ And the handsomest lad too,’ says Mrs Adams, recovering from a swoon in Fanny’s arms.--- ‘ My poor Jacky, shall I never see thee more?’ cries the Parson--- ‘ Yes surely,’ says Joseph, ‘ and in a better place, you will meet again never to part more.’---I believe the Parson did not hear these words, for he paid little regard to them, but went on lamenting, whilst the tears trickled down into his bosom. At last he cried out, 'Where is my little darling?' and was falling out, when, to his great surprise and joy, in which I hope the reader will sympathise, he met his son in a wet condition indeed, but alive, and running towards him. The person who brought the news of this misfortune had been a little too eager, as people sometimes are, from, I believe, no very good principle, to relate ill news; and seeing him fall into the river, instead of running to his assistance, directly ran to acquaint his father of a fate which he had concluded to be inevitable, but whence the child was relieved by the same poor pedlar who had relieved his father before from a less distress. The Parson's joy was now as extravagant as his grief had been before; he kissed and embraced his son a thousand times, and danced about the room like one frantic; but as soon as he discovered the face of his old friend the pedlar, and heard the fresh obligation he had to him, what were his sensations? not those which two courtiers feel in one another's embraces; not those with which a great man receives the vile, treacherous engines of his wicked purposes; not those with which a worthless younger brother wishes his elder joy of a son, or a man congratulates his rival on his obtaining a mistress, a place, or an honour.---No, Reader, he felt the ebullition, the overflowings of a full, an honest, open heart towards the person who had conferred a real obligation, and of which if thou canst not conceive an idea within, I will not vainly endeavour to assist thee.

When these tumults were over, the Parson, taking Joseph aside, proceeded thus----- ‘ No, Joseph, do not give too much way to ‘ thy passions, if thou dost expect happiness.’
 -----The patience of Joseph, nor perhaps of Job, could bear no longer; he interrupted the Parson, saying, It was easier to give advice than to take it; nor did he perceive he could so entirely conquer himself, when he apprehended he had lost his son, or when he found him recovered.---‘ Boy,’ replied Adams, raising his voice, ‘ it doth not become green heads to advise grey hairs.--- ‘ Thou art ignorant of the tenderness of ‘ fatherly affection; when thou art a father, ‘ thou wilt be capable then only of knowing ‘ what a father can feel. No man is obliged ‘ to impossibilities; and the loss of a child is ‘ one of those great trials, where our grief ‘ may be allowed to become immoderate.’ ‘ Well, Sir,’ cries Joseph, ‘ and if I love

232 THE ADVENTURES OF

' a mistress as well as you your child,
 ' surely her loss would grieve me equally.'
 ' Yes, but such love is foolishness, and wrong
 ' in itself, and ought to be conquered,' an' swered Adams, ' it favours too much of the ' flesh.' ' Sure, Sir,' says Joseph, ' it is not
 ' sinful to love my wife, no not even to doat
 ' on her to distraction!' ' Indeed, but it is,
 ' says Adams. ' Every man ought to love his ' wife, no doubt; we are commanded so to ' do; but we ought to love her with mode' ration and discretion.'——' I am afraid I ' shall be guilty of some sin, in spite of all ' my endeavours,' says Joseph; ' for I shall ' love without any moderation, I am sure.'— ' You talk foolishly and childishly,' cries A' dams. ' Indeed,' says Mrs Adams, who had ' listened to the latter part of their conversa' tion, ' you talk more foolishly yourself. I ' hope, my dear, you will never preach any ' such doctrine, as that husbands can love ' their wives too well. If I knew you had ' such a sermon in the house, I am sure I ' would burn it; and I declare, if I had not ' been convinced you had loved me as well as ' you could, I can answer for myself, I should ' have hated and despised you. Marry come ' up! Fine doctrine indeed! A wife hath a ' right to insist on a husband's loving her as ' much as ever he can; and he is a sinful viklain who doth not. Doth he not promise to love her and to comfort her, and to cherish her, and all that? I am sure I remember it all, as well as if I had repeated it over but yesterday, and shall never forget it. Besides, I am certain you do not preach as you practise: for you have been a loving and a cherishing husband to me, that's the truth on't: and why you should endeavour to put such wicked nonsense into this young man's head, I cannot devise. Don't hearken to him, Mr Joseph, be as good a husband as you are able, and love your wife with all your body and soul too.' Here a violent rap at the door put an end to their discourse, and produced a scene which the reader will find in the next chapter.

C H A P. IX.

A visit which the good Lady Booby and her polite friend paid to the Parson.

THE Lady Booby had no sooner had an account from the gentleman of his meeting a wonderful beauty near her house, and perceived the raptures with which he spoke of her, than immediately concluding it must be Fanny, she began to meditate a design of bringing them better acquainted; and to entertain hopes that the fine cloaths, presents, and promises of this youth, would prevail on her to abandon Joseph: she therefore proposed to her company a walk in the fields before dinner, when she led them towards Mr Adams's house; and, as she approached it, told them, if they pleased she would divert them with one of the most ridiculous sights they had ever seen, which was an old foolish parson, who, she said laughing, kept a wife and six brats on a salary of about twenty pounds a-year; adding, that there was not such another ragged family in the parish. They all readily agreed to this visit, and arrived whilst Mrs Adams was declaiming as in the last chapter. Beau Didapper, (which was the name of the young gentleman we have seen riding towards Lady Booby's), with his cane mimicked the rap of a London footman at the door. The people within, namely, Adams, his wife, and three children, Joseph, Fanny, and the pedlar, were all thrown into confusion by this knock; but Adams directly went to the door, which being opened, the Lady Booby and her company walked in, and were received by the parson with about two hundred bows, and by his wife with as many curtsies: the latter telling the Lady, She was ashamed to be seen in such a pickle, and that her house was in such a litter: but that if she had expected such an honour from her Ladyship, she should have found her in a better manner. The parson made no apologies, though he was in his half cassock and flannel night-cap. He said, They were heartily welcome to his poor cottage; and, turning to Mr Didapper, cried out, Non mea renidet in domo lacunar. the Beau answered he did not understand Welsh; at which the parson stared, and made no reply.

Mr Didapper, or beau Didapper, was a young gentleman of about four foot five inches in height. He wore his own hair, though the scarcity of it might have given him sufficient excuse for a perriwig. His face was thin and pale: the shape of his body and legs none of the best; for he had very narrow shoulders, and no calf; and his gait might more properly be called hopping than walking. The qualifications of his mind were well adapted to his person. We shall handle them first negatively: He was not entirely ignorant; for he could talk a little French, and sing two or three Italian songs; he had lived too much in the world to be bashful, and too much at court to be proud: he seemed not much inclined to avarice; for he was profuse in his expences: nor had he all the features of prodigality; for he never gave a shilling:--no hater of women; for he always dangled after them; yet so little subject to lust, that he had among those who knew him best, the character of great moderation in his pleasures. No drinker of wine; nor so addicted to passion, but that a hot word or two from an adversary made him immediately cool.

Now, to give him only a dash or two on the affirmative side: though he was born to an immense fortune, he chose, for the pitiful and dirty consideration of a place of little consequence, to depend entirely on the will of a fellow whom they call a great man; who treated him with the utmost disrespect, and exacted of him a plenary obedience to his commands; which he implicitly submitted to, at the expence of his conscience, his honour and of his country, in which he had himself so very large a share. And to finish his character; as he was entirely well satisfied with his own person and parts, so he was very apt to ridicule and laugh at any imperfection in another. Such was the little person, or rather thing that hopped after Lady Booby into Mr Adams's kitchen.

The parson and his company retreated from the chimney-side, where they had been seated, to give room to the Lady and hers. Instead of returning any of the curtsies or extraordinary civilities of Mrs Adams, the Lady, turning to Mr Booby, cried out, ' Quel bête! quel animal! ' and presently after discovering Fanny, (for she did not need the circumstance of her standing by Joseph to assure the identity of her person), she asked the beau, Whether he did not think her a pretty girl?-----' Begad, Madam,' answered he, 'tis the very same I met.' ' I did not imagine,' replied the Lady, ' you had so good a taste.' ' Because I never liked you, I warrant,' cries the beau. ' Ridiculous!' said she, ' you know you was always my aversion.' ' I would never mention aversion,' answered the beau, ' with that face *; dear Lady Booby, wash your face before you mention aversion, I beseech you.' He then laughed, and turned about to coquet with Fanny.

Mrs Adams had been all this time begging and praying the ladies to sit down, a favour which she at last obtained. The little boy to whom the accident had happened, still keeping his place by the fire, was chid by his mother for not being more mannerly: but Lady Booby took his part, and, commending his beauty, told the parson he was his very picture. She then seeing a book in his hand, asked, If he could read?—‘Yes,’ cried Adams, ‘a little Latin, Madam; he is just got into Quæ Genus.’ ‘A fig for quere genius,’ answered she; ‘let me hear him read a little English.’—‘Lege, Dick, Lege,’ said Adams: but the boy made no answer, till he saw the Parson knit his brows; and then cried, ‘I don’t understand you, father.’ ‘How, boy!’ says Adams, ‘what doth Le-go make in the imperative mood? Legito doth it not?’ ‘Yes,’ answered Dick,----- ‘And what besides?’ says the father. ‘Lege,’ quoth the son, after some hesitation. ‘A good boy,’ says the father: ‘And now, child, what is the English of Lego?’—To which the boy, after long puzzling, answered, he could not tell. ‘How!’ cries Adams, in a passion; ‘what, hath the water washed away your learning? Why, what is Latin for the English verb read? Consider before you speak.—The child considered some time, and the parson cried twice or thrice, Le — — —, Le — — —. Dick answered, Lego.’ ‘Very well; and then what is the English,’ says the parson, ‘of the verb Lego?’ ‘To read,’ cried Dick. ‘Very well,’ said the parson, ‘a good boy, you can do well, if you will take pains. I assure your Ladyship he is not much above eight years old, and is out of his Propria quæ Maribus al‘ ready. Come, Dick, read to her Lady-‘ ship.’ Which she again desiring, in order to give the beau time and opportunity with Fanny, Dick began as in the following chapter.

* I lest this should appear unnatural to some readers, we think proper to acquaint them, that it is taken verbatim from very polite conversation.

C H A P. X.

The history of two friends, which may afford an useful lesson to all those persons who happen to take up their residence in married families.

‘ L EONARD and Paul were two friends.’ ‘ Pronounce it Lennard, child,’ cried the parson. ‘ Pray, Mr Adams,’ says Lady Booby, ‘ let your son read without inter‘ ruption.’ Dick then proceeded. ‘ Len-‘ nard and Paul were two friends, who ha‘ ving been educated together at the same ‘ school, commenced a friendship which they ‘ preserved a long time for each other. It ‘ was so deeply fixed in both their minds, ‘ that a long absence, during which they had ‘ maintained no correspondence, did not era‘ dicate nor lessen it: but it revived in all its ‘ force at their first meeting, which was not ‘ till after fifteen years absence, most of which ‘ time Lennard had spent in the East-Ind-‘ di-es.’—‘ Pronounce it short, Indies,’ says Adams.—‘ Pray, Sir, be quiet,’ says the Lady. The boy repeated, ' in the East-Indies, whilst Paul had served his king and country in the army. In which different services they had found such different success, that Lennard was now married, and retired with a fortune of thirty thousand pounds; and Paul was arrived to the degree of a lieutenant of foot, and was not worth a single shilling.

' The regiment in which Paul was stationed, happened to be ordered into quarters, within a small distance from the estate which Lennard had purchased, and where he was settled. This latter, who was now become a country gentleman, and a justice of peace, came to attend the quarter-sessions, in the town where his old friend was quartered. Soon after his arrival, some affair in which a soldier was concerned, occasioned Paul to attend the justices. Manner, and time, and the change of climate, had so much altered Lennard, that Paul did not immediately recollect the features of his old acquaintance; but it was otherwise with Lennard, he knew Paul the moment he saw him; nor could he contain himself from quitting the bench, and running hastily to embrace him. Paul stood at first a little surpris'd; but had soon sufficient information from his friend, whom

' he no sooner remembered, than he returned
 ' his embrace with a passion which made ' many of the spectators laugh, and gave to ' some few a much higher and more agree' able sensation.

' Not to detain the reader with minute
 ' circumstances, Lennard insisted on his ' friend's returning with him to his house
 ' that evening; which request was complied ' with, and leave for a month's absence for ' Paul obtained of the commanding officer.

' If it was possible for any circumstance to ' give any addition to the happiness which ' Paul proposed in this visit, he received that ' additional pleasure, by finding on his arrival ' at his friend's house, that his lady was an ' old acquaintance which he had formerly ' contracted at his quarters; and who had ' always appeared to be of a most agreeable ' temper. A character she had ever main' tained among her intimates, being of that ' number, every individual of which is called ' quite the best sort of woman in the world.

' But good as this lady was, she was still ' a woman; that is to say, an angel, and not ' an angel.'---' You must mistake, child,' cries
 ' the Parson, ' for you read nonsense. ' It ' is so in the book,' answered the son. Mr
 ' Adams was then silenced by authority, and
 ' Dick proceeded.---' For though her person

‘ was of that kind to which men attribute ‘ the name of angel, yet in her mind she was ‘ perfectly woman. Of which a great de‘ gree of obstinacy gave the most remarkable ‘ and perhaps most pernicious instance.

‘ A day or two pass’d after Paul’s arri‘ val, before any instances of this appear‘ ed; but it was impossible to conceal it ‘ long. Both she and her husband soon lost ‘ all apprehension from their friend’s pre‘ sence, and fell to their disputes with as ‘ much vigour as ever. These were still ‘ pursued with the utmost ardour and eager‘ ness, however trifling the causes were ‘ whence they first arose. Nay, however in‘ credible it may seem, the little consequence ‘ of the matter in debate was frequently ‘ given as a reason for the fierceness of the ‘ contention, as thus: “ If you loved me, “ sure you would never dispute with me “ such a trifle as this.” The answer to which ‘ is very obvious; for the argument would ‘ hold equally on both sides, and was con‘ stantly retorted with some addition, as--- “ I am sure I have much more reason to say “ so, who am in the right.” During all ‘ these disputes, Paul always kept strict ‘ silence, and preserved an even countenance, ‘ without shewing the least visible inclination ‘ to either party. One day, however, when ‘ Madam had left the room in a violent fury, ‘ Lennard could not refrain from referring ‘ his cause to his friend. Was ever any ‘ thing so unreasonable, says he, as this wo‘ man? What shall I do with her? I doat ‘ on her to distraction; nor have I any cause ‘ to complain of more than this obstinacy in ‘ her temper; whatever she asserts she will ‘ maintain against all the reason and con‘ viction in the world. Pray give me your ‘ advice.---First, says Paul, I will give my ‘ opinion, which is flatly that you are in the ‘ wrong; for supposing she is in the wrong, ‘ was the subject of your contention any ways ‘ material? What signified it whether you ‘ was married in a red or yellow waistcoat?

 ‘ for that was your dispute. Now suppose ‘ she was mistaken, as you love her you say ‘ so tenderly, and I believe she deserves it, ‘ would it not have been wiser to have yield‘ ed, though you certainly knew yourself in ‘ the right, than to give either her or your‘ self any uneasiness? For my own part, if ‘ ever I marry, I am resolved to enter into ‘ an agreement with my wife, that in all dis‘ putes (especially about trifles) that party ‘ who is most convinced they are right, shall ‘ always surrender the victory: by which ‘ means we shall both be forward to give up ‘ the cause. I own, said Lennard, my dear ‘ friend, shaking him by the hand, there is ‘ great truth and reason in what you say;

‘ and I will for the future endeavour to fol‘ low your advice. They soon after broke ‘ up the conversation, and Lennard going ‘ to his wife asked her pardon, and told her ‘ his friend had convinced him he had been ‘ in the wrong. She immediately began a ‘ vast encomium on Paul, in which he fe-‘ conded her, and both agreed he was the ‘ worthiest and wisest man upon earth. When ‘ next they met, which was at supper, though ‘ she had promised not to mention what her ‘ husband told her, she could not forbear ‘ casting the kindest and most affectionate ‘ looks on Paul, and asked him with the ‘ sweetest voice, whether she should help him ‘ to some potted woodcock?—Potted par‘ tridge, my dear, you mean, says the hus‘ band. My dear, says she, I ask your friend ‘ if he will eat any potted woodcock; and I ‘ am sure I must know who potted it. I ‘ think I should know too who shot them, ‘ replied the husband, and I am convinced ‘ that I have not seen a woodcock this year; ‘ however, though I know I am in the right ‘ I submit, and the potted partridge is potted ‘ woodcock, if you desire to have it so. It ‘ is equal to me, says she, whether it is one ‘ or the other; but you would persuade

' one out of one's senses; to be sure you are ' always in the right in your own opinion;
 ' but your friend, I believe, knows which ' he is eating. Paul answered nothing, ' and the dispute continued, as usual, the ' greatest part of the evening. The next ' morning the lady accidentally meeting
 ' Paul, and being convinced he was her ' friend, and of her side, accosted him thus:
 ' -----I am certain, Sir, you have long since ' wondered at the unreasonableness of my ' husband. He is indeed, in other respects, ' a good sort of man; but so positive, that ' no woman but one of my complying tem' per could possibly live with him. Why,
 ' last night now, was ever any creature so ' unreasonable? I am certain you must con' demn him. — Pray, answer me, was he ' not in the wrong? Paul, after a short si' lence, spoke as follows: I am sorry, Ma' dam, that as good manners obliges me to ' answer against my will, so an adherence ' to truth forces me to declare myself of a ' different opinion. To be plain and honest,
 ' you was entirely in the wrong; the cause I
 ' own was not worth disputing, but the bird
 ' was undoubtedly a partridge. O Sir, re' plied the lady, I cannot possibly help your ' taste. Madam, returned Paul, that is very ' little material; for had it been otherwise,

246 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ a husband might have expected submission.
‘ Indeed! Sir, says she, I assure you----Yes, ‘ Madam, cry’d he, he might from a person ‘ of your excellent understanding; and par‘ don me for saying, such a condescension ‘ would have shewn a superiority of sense ‘ even to your husband himself. But, dear ‘ Sir, said she, why should I submit when I ‘ am in the right? For that very reason, an‘ swered he, it would be the greatest instance ‘ of affection imaginable: for can any thing ‘ be a greater object of our compassion than ‘ a person whom we love, in the wrong? Ay, ‘ but I should endeavour, said she, to set him ‘ right. Pardon me, Madam, answered Paul, ‘ I will apply to your own experience, if you ‘ ever found your arguments had that effect.
‘ The more our judgments err, the less we ‘ are willing to own it: for my own part, ‘ I have always observed the persons who ‘ maintain the worst side in any contest, are ‘ the warmest. Why, says she, I must con‘ fess there is truth in what you say, and I ‘ will endeavour to practise it. The hus‘ band then coming in, Paul departed. And ‘ Lennard approaching his wife with an air ‘ of good humour, told her he was sorry for ‘ their foolish dispute last night: but he was ‘ now convinced of his error. She answered ‘ smiling, she believed she owed his conde-

• scension to his complaisance; that she was • ashamed to think a word had passed on so • silly an occasion, especially as she was sa• tisfied she had been mistaken. A little con• tention followed, but with the utmost good • will to each other, and was concluded by • her asserting that Paul had thoroughly con• vinced her she had been in the wrong.
 • Upon which they both united in the praises
 • of their common friend.

• Paul now passed his time with great sa• tisfaction; these disputes being much less • frequent, as well as shorter than usual:
 • but the devil, or some unlucky accident, in • which perhaps the devil had no hand, • shortly put an end to his happiness. He • was now eternally the private referee of • every difference; in which, after having • perfectly, as he thought, established the • doctrine of submission, he never scrupled
 • to assure both privately they were in the • right in every argument, as before he had • followed the contrary method. One day
 • a violent litigation happened in his absence,
 • and both parties agreed to refer it to his • decision. The husband professing himself
 • sure the decision would be in his favour;
 • the wife answered, he might be mistaken;
 • for she believed his friend was convinced • how seldom she was to blame; and that if ‘ he knew all — The husband reply’d--- ‘ My dear, I have no desire of any retro‘ spect; but I believe, if you knew all too, ‘ you would not imagine my friend so en‘ tirely on your side. Nay, says she, since ‘ you provoke me, I will mention one in‘ stance. You may remember our dispute ‘ about sending Jacky to school in cold ‘ weather, which point I gave up to you from ‘ mere compassion, knowing myself to be in ‘ the right; and Paul himself told me after‘ wards, he thought me so. My dear, replied ‘ the husband, I will not scruple your veracity; ‘ but I assure you solemnly, on my applying ‘ to him, he gave it absolutely on my side, and ‘ said he would have acted in the same man‘ ner. They then proceeded to produce num‘ berless other instances, in all which Paul ‘ had, on vows of secrecy, given his opinion ‘ on both sides. In the conclusion, both be‘ lieving each other, they fell severely on the ‘ treachery of Paul, and agreed that he had ‘ been the occasion of almost every dispute ‘ which had fallen out between them. They ‘ then became extremely loving, and so full ‘ of condescension on both sides, that they ‘ vied with each other in censuring their own ‘ conduct, and jointly vented their indigna‘ tion on Paul, whom the wife, fearing a ‘ bloody consequence, earnestly intreated her husband to suffer quietly to depart the next day, which was the time fixed for his return to quarters, and then drop his acquaintance.

However ungenerous this behaviour in Lennard may be esteemed, his wife obtained a promise from him (though with difficulty) to follow her advice; but they both expressed such unusual coldness that day to Paul, that he, who was quick of apprehension, taking Lennard aside, pressed him to home, that he at last discovered the secret. Paul acknowledged the truth, but told him the design with which he had done it.—To which the other answered, he would have acted more friendly to have let him into the whole design; for that he might have assured himself of his secrecy. Paul replied with some indignation, he had given him a sufficient proof how capable he was of concealing a secret from his wife. Lennard returned with some warmth, he had more reason to upbraid him, for that he had caused most of the quarrels between them by his strange conduct, and might (if they had not discovered the affair to each other) have been the occasion of their separation. Paul then said— but something now happened which put a stop to Dick's reading, and of which we shall treat in the next chapter.

C H A P. XI.

In which the history is continued.

JOSEPH ANDREWS had borne with great uneasiness the impertinence of Beau Didapper to Fanny, who had been talking pretty freely to her, and offering her settlements; but the respect to the company had restrained him from interfering, whilst the Beau confined himself to the use of his tongue only; but the said beau watching an opportunity whilst the ladies eyes were disposed another way, offered a rudeness to her with his hands, which Joseph no sooner perceived than he presented him with so loud a box on the ear, that it conveyed him several paces from where he stood. The ladies immediately screamed out, rose from their chairs; and the beau, as soon as he recovered himself, drew his hanger, which Adams observing, snatched up the lid of a pot in his left hand, and covering himself with it as with a shield, without any weapon of offence in his other hand, stepped in before Joseph, and exposed himself to the enraged beau, who threatened such perdition and destruction, that it frightened the women, who were all got in a huddle together, out of their wits, even to hear his denunciations of vengeance. Joseph was of a different complexion, and begged Adams to let his rival come on; for he had a good cudgel in his hand, and did not fear him. Fanny now fainted into Mrs Adams's arms, and the whole room was in confusion, when Mr Booby, passing by Adams, who lay snug under the pot lid, came up to Didapper, and insisted on his sheathing the hanger, promising he should have satisfaction; which Joseph declared he would give him, and fight him at any weapon whatever. The beau now sheathed his hanger, and taking out a pocket-glass, and vowing vengeance all the time, readjusted his hair; the parson deposited his shield, and Joseph running to Fanny soon brought her back to life. Lady Booby chid Joseph for his insult on Didapper; but he answered, he would have attacked an army in the same cause. 'What cause?' said the Lady. 'Madam,' answered Joseph, 'he was rude to that young woman.'— 'What,' says the Lady, 'I suppose he would have kissed the wench; and is a gentleman to be struck for such an offer? I must tell you, Joseph, these airs do not become you.' 'Madam,' said Mr Booby, 'I saw the whole affair, and I do not commend my brother; for I cannot perceive why he

252 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ should take upon him to be this girl’s cham‘ pion.’——‘ I can commend him,’ says A‘ dams, ‘ he is a brave lad; and it becomes ‘ any man to be the champion of the inno‘ cent; and he must be the basest coward, ‘ who would not vindicate a woman with ‘ whom he is on the brink of marriage.’ ‘ Sir,’ says Mr Booby, ‘ my brother is not ‘ a proper match for such a young woman ‘ as this.’——‘ No,’ says Lady Booby, ‘ nor ‘ do you, Mr Adams, act in your proper cha‘ racter, by encouraging any such doings; ‘ and I am very much surpris’d you should ‘ concern yourself in it. I think your wife ‘ and family your proper care.’ ‘ Indeed, ‘ Madam, your Ladyship says very true,’ answered Mrs Adams, ‘ he talks a pack of ‘ nonsense, that the whole parish are his chil‘ dren. I am sure I don’t understand what ‘ he means by it; it would make some wo‘ men suspect he had gone astray: but I ac‘ quit him of that; I can read scripture as ‘ well as he, and I never found that the par‘ son was obliged to provide for other folks ‘ children; and besides, he is but a poor ‘ curate, and hath little enough, as your La‘ dyship knows, for me and mine.’ ‘ You ‘ say very well, Mrs Adams,’ quoth the Lady Booby, who had not spoke a word to her before, ‘ you seem to be a very sensible wo' man; and I assure you your husband is ' acting a very foolish part, and opposing

 ' his own interest; seeing my nephew is vio' lently set against this match; and indeed
 ' I can't blame him; it is by no means one ' suitable to our family.' In this manner the Lady proceeded with Mrs Adams, whilst the beau hopped about the room, shaking his head, partly from pain, and partly from anger; and Pamela was chiding Fanny for her assurance, in aiming at such a match as her brother. Poor Fanny answered only with her tears, which had long since begun to wet her handkerchief; which Joseph perceiving, took her by the arm, and wrapping it in his carried her off, swearing he would own no relation to any one who was an enemy to her he loved more than all the world. He went out with Fanny under his left arm, brandishing a cudgel in his right, and neither Mr Booby nor the beau thought proper to oppose him. Lady Booby and her company made a very short stay behind him, for the Lady's bell now summoned them to dress; for which they had just time before dinner.

Adams seem'd now very much dejected, which his wife perceiving, began to apply some matrimonial balsam. She told him he had reason to be concerned; for that he had probably ruined his family with his tricks almost: but perhaps he was grieved for the loss of his two children, Joseph and Fanny. His eldest daughter went on:---‘ Indeed, Father, ‘ it is very hard to bring strangers here to ‘ eat your children’s bread out of their ‘ mouths.--You have kept them ever since ‘ they came home; and for any thing I see to ‘ the contrary, may keep them a month ‘ longer: are you obliged to give her meat, ‘ tho’ she was never so handsome? But I ‘ don’t see she is so much handsomer than ‘ other people. If people were to be kept ‘ for their beauty, she would scarce fare better ‘ than her neighbours, I believe.---As for Mr ‘ Joseph, I have nothing to say, he is a young ‘ man of honest principles, and will pay some ‘ time or other for what he hath: but for ‘ the girl,---Why doth she not return to her ‘ place she ran away from? I would not give ‘ such a vagabond slut a halfpenny, though ‘ I had a million of money; no, though she ‘ was starving.’ ‘ Indeed but I would,’ cries little Dick; ‘ and, Father, rather than ‘ poor Fanny shall be starved, I will give her ‘ all this bread and cheese’---(offering what he held in his hand.) Ad. is smiled on the boy, and told him, he rejoiced to see he was a Christian; and that if he had a halfpenny in his pocket, he would have given it him; telling him, it was his duty to look upon all his neighbours as his brothers and sisters, and love them accordingly. 'Yes, papa,' says he, 'I love her better than my sisters; for she is handsomer than any of them.' 'Is she so, faucebox?' says the sister, giving him a box on the ear, which the father would probably have resented, had not Joseph, Fanny, and the pedlar, at that instant returned together.---Adams bid his wife prepare some food for their dinner; she said, 'truly she could not, she had something else to do.' Adams rebuked her for disputing his commands, and quoted many texts of scripture to prove, "That the husband is the head of the wife, and she is to submit and obey." The wife answered, 'it was blasphemy to talk scripture out of church; that such things were very proper to be said in the pulpit; but that it was profane to talk them in common discourse.' Joseph told Mr Adams, he was not come with any design to give him or Mrs Adams any trouble; but to desire the favour of all their company to the George, (an ale-house in the parish), where he had bespoke a piece of bacon and greens for their dinner. Mrs Adams, who was a very good sort of woman, only rather too strict in œconomics, readily accepted this invitation, as did the parson himself by her example; and away they all walked together, not omitting little Dick, to whom Joseph gave a shilling, when he heard of his intended liberality to Fanny.

C H A P. XII.

Where the good-natured reader will see something which will give him no great pleasure.

THE pedlar had been very inquisitive from the time he had first heard that the great house in this parish belonged to the Lady Booby; and had learned that she was the widow of Sir Thomas, and that Sir Thomas had bought Fanny, at about the age of three or four years, of a travelling woman; and now their homely but hearty meal was ended, he told Fanny, he believed he could acquaint her with her parents. The whole company, especially she herself, started at this offer of the pedlar's.---He then proceeded thus, while they all lent their strictest attention: ‘ Though I am now contented ‘ with this humble way of getting my liveli‘ hood, I was formerly a gentleman; for so ‘ all those of my profession are called. In a ‘ word, I was a drummer in an Irish regi‘ ment of foot. Whilst I was in this ho‘ nourable station, I attended an officer of ‘ our regiment into England a recruiting.
 ‘ In our march from Bristol to Froome (for ' since the decay of the woollen trade, the ' clothing towns have furnished the army ' with a great number of recruits) we over' took on the road a woman who seemed to ' be about thirty years old, or thereabouts,

 ' not very handsome, but well enough for a ' soldier. As we came up to her, she mended ' her pace, and falling into discourse with ' our ladies, (for every man of the party,
 ' namely, a serjeant, two private men, and
 ' a drum, were provided with their women, ' except myself) she continued to travel on ' with us. I, perceiving she must fall to my ' lot, advanced presently to her, made love
 ' to her in our military way, and quickly
 ' succeeded to my wishes. We struck a bar' gain within a mile, and lived together as ' man and wife to her dying day.'-----' I ' suppose,' says Adams, interrupting him,
 ' you were married with a licence: for I ' don't see how you could contrive to have ' the banns published while you were march' ing from place to place.'---' No, Sir,' said
 ' the pedlar, ' we took a licence to go to bed
 ' together, without any banns.'---' Ay, ay,'
 ' said the parson, ' ex necessitate, a licence may ' be allowable enough; but surely, surely,
 ' the other is the more regular and eligible
 ' way.'---The pedlar proceeded thus; ' She ' returned with me to our regiment, and

258 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ removed with us from quarters to quar‘ ters, till at last, whilst we lay at Gallway, ‘ she fell ill of a fever, and died. When she ‘ was on her death-bed she called me to her, ‘ and, crying bitterly, declared she could not ‘ depart this world without discovering a ‘ secret to me, which she said was the only ‘ sin which sat heavy on her heart. She said ‘ she had formerly travelled in a company of ‘ gypsies, who had made a practice of stealing ‘ away children; that for her own part, she had ‘ been only once guilty of that crime; which ‘ she said she lamented more than all the rest ‘ of her sins, since probably it might have oc‘ casioned the death of the parents: for, ad‘ ded she, it is almost impossible to describe ‘ the beauty of the young creature, which ‘ was about a year and a half old when I ‘ kidnapped it. We kept her (for she was a ‘ girl,) above two years in our company, ‘ when I sold her myself for three guineas to ‘ Sir Thomas Booby in Somersetshire. Now, ‘ you know whether there are any more of ‘ that name in this county.’—‘ Yes,’ says A‘ dams, ‘ there are several Boobys who are ‘ squires, but I believe no baronet now alive; ‘ besides, it answers so exactly in every point, ‘ there is no room for doubt; but you have ‘ forgot to tell us the parents from whom the ‘ child was stolen.’—‘ Their name,’ answered the pedlar, 'was Andrews. They lived ' about thirty miles from the Squire; and ' she told me, that I might be sure to find her ' out by one circumstance; for that they had ' a daughter of a very strange name, Pamē-

 ' la, or Pamēla; some pronounced it one way,
 ' and some the other.' Fanny, who had changed colour at the first mention of the name, now fainted away; Joseph turned pale, and poor Dicky began to roar; the parson fell on his knees, and ejaculated many thanksgivings, that this discovery had been made before the dreadful sin of incest was committed; and the pedlar was struck with amazement, not being able to account for all this confusion, the cause of which was presently opened by the parson's daughter, who was the only unconcerned person; (for the mother was chafing Fanny's temples, and taking the utmost care of her;) and indeed Fanny was the only creature whom the daughter would not have pitied in her situation; wherein, though we compassionate her ourselves, we shall leave her for a little while, and pay a short visit to Lady Booby.

C H A P. XIII.

The history returning to the Lady Booby, gives some account of the terrible conflict in her breast between love and pride; with what happened on the present discovery.

THE Lady sat down with her company to dinner; but ate nothing. As soon as the cloth was removed, she whispered Pamela, that she was taken a little ill, and desired her to entertain her husband and beau Didapper. She then went up into her chamber, sent for Slipflop, threw herself on the bed, in the agonies of love, rage, and despair; nor could she conceal these boiling passions longer without bursting. Slipflop now approached her bed, and asked how her Ladyship did; but instead of revealing her disorder as she intended, she entered into a long encomium of the beauty and virtues of Joseph Andrews; ending at last with expressing her concern, that so much tenderness should be thrown away on so despicable an object as Fanny. Slipflop, well knowing how to humour her mistress's frenzy, proceeded to repeat, with exaggeration, if possible, all her mistress had said, and concluded with a wish, that Joseph had been a gentleman, and that she could see her Lady in the arms of such a husband. The Lady then started from her bed, and taking a turn or two across the room, cried out with a deep sigh, -- 'Sure he would ' make any woman happy.' --- 'Your Lady-' ship,' says she, ' would be the happiest wo' man in the world with him. --- A fig for cus' tom and nonsense. What vails what peo' ple say? Shall I be afraid of eating sweet' meats, because people may say I have a ' sweet tooth? If I had a mind to marry a ' man, all the world should not hinder me.

 ' Your Ladyship hath no parents to tutelar
 ' your infections; besides, he is of your Lady-
 ' ship's family now, and as good a gentleman
 ' as any in the country; and why should not
 ' a woman follow her mind as well as a man?
 ' Why should not your Ladyship marry the ' brother, as well as your nephew the sister?
 ' I am sure, if it was a fragrant crime, I ' would not persuade your Ladyship to it.' ---
 ' But, dear Slipslop,' answered the Lady, ' if ' I could prevail on myself to commit such a ' weakness, there is that cursed Fanny in the ' way, whom the idiot, --- O how I hate ' and despise him!' --- ' She! a little ugly
 ' minx,' cries Slipslop, ' leave her to me. --- I ' suppose your Ladyship hath heard of Jo' seph's sitting with one of Mr Didapper's ' servants about her; and his master hath or' dered them to carry her away by force this ' evening. I'll take care they shall not want ' assistance. I was talking with this gentle' man, who was below, just when your La' dyship sent for me.'--'Go back,' says the Lady Booby, 'this instant; for I expect Mr ' Didapper will soon be going. Do all you ' can; for I am resolved this wench shall not ' be in our family; I will endeavour to re' turn to the company; but let me know as ' soon as she is carried off.' Sliplop went away; and her mistress began to arraign her own conduct in the following manner.

' What am I doing? How do I suffer this ' passion to creep imperceptibly upon me!
 ' How many days are passed since I could ' have submitted to ask myself the question?
 ' --Marry a footman! distraction! Can I ' afterwards bear the eyes of my acquaint' ance? But I can retire from them; retire
 ' with one in whom I propose more happi' ness than the world without him can give ' me! Retire---to feed continually on beau' ties, which my inflamed imagination sickens
 ' with eagerly gazing on; to satisfy every ' appetite, every desire, with their utmost
 ' wish.--Ha! and do I doat thus on a foot' man! I despise, I detest my passion.--Yet
 ' why? Is he not generous, gentle, kind?--
 ' Kind to whom? to the meanest wretch, a ' creature below my consideration. Doth

' he not?---Yes, he doth prefer her; curse
 ' his beauties, and the little low heart that ' possesses them; which can basely descend
 ' to this despicable wench, and be ungrate-
 ' fully deaf to all the honours I do him.-- ' And can I then love this monster? No, I ' will tear his image from my bosom, tread
 ' on him, spurn him. I will have those pi' tiful charms, which now I despise, mangled
 ' in my sight; for I will not suffer the little ' jade I hate to riot in the beauties I con-
 ' temn. No, though I despise him myself;
 ' though I would spurn him from my feet,
 ' was he to languish at them; no other ' should taste the happiness I scorn. Why ' do I say happiness? To me it would be ' misery.--To sacrifice my reputation, my ' character, my rank in life, to the indulgence
 ' of a mean and a vile appetite.--How I ' detest the thought! How much more ex' quisite is the pleasure resulting from the ' reflection of virtue and prudence, than the ' faint relish of what flows from vice and ' folly! Whither did I suffer this improper,
 ' this mad passion to hurry me, only by ne' glecting to summon the aid of reason to ' my assistance? Reason, which hath now ' set before me my desires in their proper ' colours, and immediately helped me to ex-' pell them. Yes, I thank Heaven and my ' pride, I have now perfectly conquered this ' unworthy passion; and if there was no ob' stacle in its way, my pride would disdain

 ' any pleasures which could be the conse' quence of so base, so mean, so vulgar' — Slipslop returned at this instant in a violent hurry, and with the utmost eagerness cried ' out, — ' O, Madam, I have strange news.
 ' Tom the footman is just come from the ' George; where, it seems, Joseph and the ' rest of them are a jinketting; and he says,
 ' there is a strange man who hath discovered ' that Fanny and Joseph are brother and ' sister.' — ' How, Slipslop!' cries the Lady in a surprize. — ' I had not time, Madam,' cries Slipslop, ' to enquire about particulars,
 ' but Tom says, it is most certainly true.'

This unexpected account entirely obliterated all those admirable reflections which the supreme power of reason had so wisely made just before. In short, when despair, which had more share in producing the resolutions of hatred we have seen taken, began to retreat, the Lady hesitated a moment, and then forgetting all the purport of her soliloquy, dismissed her woman again, with orders to bid Tom attend her in the parlour, whither she now hastened to acquaint Pamela with the news. Pamela said, She could not believe it: for she had never heard that her mother had lost a child, or that she had ever had any more than Joseph and herself. The lady flew into a violent rage with her, and talked of upstarts, and disowning relations who had so lately been on a level with her. Pamela made no answer: but her husband taking up her cause severely reprimanded his aunt for her behaviour to his wife; he told her, if it had been earlier in the evening she should not have staid a moment longer in her house; that he was convinced, if this young woman could be proved her sister, she would readily embrace her as such; and he himself would do the same. He then desired the fellow might be sent for, and the young woman with him; which Lady Booby immediately ordered, and thinking proper to make some apology to Pamela for what she had said, it was readily accepted, and all things reconciled.

The pedlar now attended, as did Fanny, and Joseph, who would not quit her; the parson likewise was induced, not only by curiosity, of which he had no small portion, but his duty, as he apprehended it, to follow them; for he continued all the way to exhort them, who were now breaking their hearts, to offer up thanksgivings, and be joyful for so miraculous an escape.

When they arrived at Booby-Hall, they were presently called into the parlour, when the pedlar repeated the same story he had told before, and insisted on the truth of every circumstance; so that all who heard him were extremely well satisfied of the truth, except Pamela, who imagined, as she had never heard either of her parents mention such an accident, that it must be certainly false; and except the Lady Booby, who suspected the falsehood of the story from her ardent desire that it should be true; and Joseph, who feared its truth, from his earnest wishes that it might prove false.

Mr Booby now desired them all to suspend their curiosity, and absolute belief, or disbelief, till the next morning, when he expected old Mr Andrews and his wife to fetch himself and Pamela home in his coach, and then they might be certain of certainly knowing the truth or falsehood of this relation; in which, he said, as there were many strong circumstances to induce their credit, so he could not perceive any interest the pedlar could have in inventing it, or in endeavouring to impose such a falsehood on them.

The Lady Booby, who was very little used to such company, entertained them all, viz. her nephew, his wife, her brother and sister, the beau, and the parson, with great good-humour at her own table. As to the pedlar, she ordered him to be made as welcome as possible by her servants. All the company in the parlour, except the disappointed lovers, who sat fullen and silent, were full of mirth: for Mr Booby had prevailed on Joseph to ask Mr Didapper's pardon; with which he was perfectly satisfied. Many jokes passed between the beau and the parson, chiefly on each others dress; these afforded much diversion to the company. Pamela chid her brother Joseph for the concern which he expressed at discovering a new sister. She said, if he loved Fanny as he ought, with a pure affection, he had no reason to lament being related to her.—Upon which Adams began to discourse on Platonic love; whence he made a quick transition to the joys in the next world; and concluded with strongly asserting, that there was no such thing as pleasure in this. At which Pamela and her husband smiled on one another.

This happy pair proposing to retire (for no other person gave the least symptom of desiring rest) they all repaired to several beds provided for them in the same house; nor was Adams himself suffered to go home, it being a stormy night. Fanny indeed often begged she might go home with the parson; but her stay was so strongly insisted on, that she at last, by Joseph's advice, consented.

C H A P. XIV.

Containing several curious night-adventures, in which Mr Adams fell into many hair-breadth scapes, partly owing to his goodness, and partly to his inadvertency.

ABOUT an hour after they had all separated (it being now past three in the morning) beau Didapper, whose passion for Fanny permitted him not to close his eyes, but had employed his imagination in contrivances how to satisfy his desires, at last hit on a method by which he hoped to effect it. He had ordered his servant to bring him word where Fanny lay, and had received his information; he therefore arose, put on his breeches and night-gown, and stole softly along the gallery which led to her apartment; and being come to the door, as he imagined it, he opened it with the least noise possible, and entered the chamber. A favour now invaded his nostrils which he did not expect in the room of so sweet a young creature, and which might have probably had no good effect on a cooler lover. However, he groped out the bed with difficulty; for there was not a glimpse of light, and opening the curtains, he whispered in Joseph's voice, (for he was an excellent mimic), 'Fanny, my angel, I ' am come to inform thee that I have dis' covered the falsehood of the story we last ' night heard. I am no longer thy brother,

 ' but thy lover; nor will I be delayed the ' enjoyment of thee one moment longer.
 ' You have sufficient assurances of my con' stancy not to doubt my marrying you,
 ' and it would be want of love to deny me
 ' the possession of thy charms.'—So saying, he disencumbered himself from the little clothes he had on, and leaping into bed embraced his angel, as he conceived her, with great rapture. If he was surpris'd at receiving no answer, he was no less pleased to find his hug returned with equal ardour. He remained not long in this sweet confusion; for both he and his paramour presently discovered their error. Indeed it was no other than the accomplished Sliplop whom he had engaged; but though she immediately knew the person whom she had mistaken for Joseph, he was at a loss to guess at the representative of Fanny. He had so little seen or taken notice of this gentlewo-man, that light itself would have afforded him no assistance in his conjecture. Beau Didapper no sooner had perceived his mistake, than he attempted to escape from the bed with much greater haste than he had made to it; but the watchful Sliplop prevented him. For that prudent woman, being disappointed of those delicious offerings which her fancy had promised her pleasure, resolved to make an immediate sacrifice to her virtue. Indeed she wanted an opportunity to heal some wounds which her late conduct had, she feared, given her reputation; and as she had a wonderful presence of mind, she conceived the person of the unfortunate beau to be luckily thrown in her way to restore her Lady's opinion of her impregnable chastity. At that instant therefore, when he offered to leap from the bed, she caught fast hold of his shirt, at the same time roaring out, 'O thou villain! thou hast attacked my chastity, and, I believe, ruined me in my sleep; I will swear a rape against thee, I will prosecute thee with the utmost vengeance.' The beau attempted to get loose, but she held him fast, and when he struggled, she cried out, 'Murder! murder! rape! robbery! ruin!' At which words Parson Adams, who lay in the next chamber, wakeful, and meditating on the pedlar's discovery, jumped out of bed, and, without staying to put a rag of clothes on, hastened into the apartment whence the cries proceeded. He made directly to the bed in the dark, where laying hold of the beau's skin (for Slipflop had torn his shirt almost off) and finding his skin extremely soft, and hearing him, in a low voice, begging Slipflop to let him go, he no longer doubted but this was the young woman in danger of ravishing, and immediately falling on the bed, and laying hold on Slipflop's chin, where he found a rough beard, his belief was confirmed; he therefore rescued the beau, who presently made his escape, and then turning towards Slipflop, received such a cuff on his chops, that his wrath kindling instantly, he offered to return the favour so stoutly, that, had poor Slipflop received the fist, which in the dark passed by her, and fell on the pillow, she would most probably have given up the ghost.—Adams, missing his blow, fell directly on Slipflop, who cuffed and scratched as well as she could; nor was he behind-hand with her in his endeavours; but happily the darkness of the night befriended her.—She then cried she was a woman; but Adams answered she was rather the devil, and if she was, he would grapple with him; and being again irritated by another stroke on his chops, he gave her such a remembrance in the guts, that she began to roar loud enough to be heard all over the house. Adams then seizing her by the hair, (for her double-clout had fallen off in the scuffle), pinned her head down to the bolster, and then both called for lights together.

The Lady Booby, who was as wakeful as any of her guests, had been alarmed from the beginning; and, being a woman of a bold spirit, she slipped on a night-gown, petticoat, and slippers, and taking a candle, which always burnt in her chamber, in her hand, she walked undauntedly to Slipflop's room; where she entered just at the instant as Adams had discovered, by the two mountains which Slipflop carried before her, that he was concerned with a female. He then concluded her to be a witch, and said, He fancied those breasts gave suck to a legion of devils. Slipflop seeing Lady Booby enter the room, cried, 'Help! or I am ravished,' with a most audible voice; and Adams perceiving the light, turned hastily, and saw the Lady (as she did him) just as she came to the feet of the bed; nor did her modesty, when she found the naked condition of Adams, suffer her to approach farther.—She then began to revile the parson as the wickedest of all men, and particularly railed at his impudence in chusing her house for the scene of his debaucheries, and her own woman for the object of his bestiality. Poor Adams had before discovered the countenance of his bedfellow, and now first recollecting he was naked, he was no less confounded than Lady Booby herself, and immediately whipt under the bed-cloaths, whence the chaste Slipflop endeavoured in vain to shut him out. Then putting forth his head, on which, by way of ornament, he wore a flannel night-cap, he protested his innocence, and asked ten thousand pardons of Mrs Slipflop for the blows he had struck her, vowing he had mistaken her for a witch. Lady Booby then casting her eyes on the ground, observed something sparkle with great lustre, which, when she had taken it up, appeared to be a very fine pair of diamond-buttons for the sleeves. A little farther she saw the sleeve itself of a shirt with laced ruffles. ‘Heydey!’ says she, ‘what is the meaning of this?’—‘O Madam,’ says Slipflop, ‘I don’t know what hath happened, I have been so terrified! Here may have been a dozen men in the room.’ ‘To whom belongs this laced shirt and jewels?’ says the Lady. ‘Undoubtedly,’ cries the parson, ‘to the young gentleman whom I mistook for a woman upon coming into the room, whence proceeded all the subsequent mistakes; for if I had suspected him for a man I would have seized him, had he been another Hercules, though indeed he seems rather to resemble Hylas.’ He then gave an account of the reason of his rising from bed, and the rest, till the Lady came into the room; at which, and the figures of Slipflop and her gallant, whose heads only were visible at the opposite corners of the bed, she could not refrain from laughter; nor did Slipflop persist in accusing the parson of any motions towards a rape. The Lady therefore desired him to return to his bed as soon as she was departed, and then, ordering Slipflop to rise, and attend her in her own room, she returned herself thither. When she was gone, Adams renewed his petitions for pardon to Mrs Slipflop, who, with a most Christian temper, not only forgave, but began to move with much courtesy towards him, which he taking as a hint to be gone, immediately quitted the bed, and made the best of his way towards his own; but unluckily, instead of turning to the right, he turned to the left; and went to the apartment where Fanny lay, who (as the reader may remember) had not slept a wink the preceding night, and who was so hagged out with what had happened to her in the day, that, notwithstanding all thoughts of her Joseph, she was fallen into so profound a sleep, that all the noise in the adjoining room had not been able to disturb her. Adams groped out the bed, and turning the cloaths down softly, a custom Mrs Adams had long accustomed him to, crept in, and deposited his carcase on the bed-post, a place which that good woman had always assigned him.

As the cat or lap-dog of some lovely nymph for whom ten thousand lovers languish, lyes quietly by the side of the charming maid, and, ignorant of the scene of delight on which they repose, meditates the future capture of a mouse, or surprisal of a plate of bread and butter; so Adams lay by the side of Fanny, ignorant of the paradise to which he was so near; nor could the emanation of sweets which flowed from her breath, overpower the fumes of tobacco which played in the parson's nostrils. And now sleep had not overtaken the good man, when Joseph, who had secretly appointed Fanny to come to her at the break of day, rapped softly at the chamber-door, which, when he had repeated twice, Adams cried, 'Come in, whoever you are.' Joseph thought he had mistaken the door, though she had given him the most exact directions: however, knowing his friend's voice, he opened it, and saw some female vestments lying on a chair. Fanny waking at the same instant, and stretching out her hand on Adams's beard, she cried out, — 'O Heavens! where am I?' 'Bless me! where am I?' said the parson. Then Fanny screamed, Adams leaped out of bed, and Joseph stood, as the tragedians call

276 THE ADVENTURES OF

it, like a statue of Surprise. ‘How came she ‘ into my room?’ cries Adams. ‘How came ‘ you into hers?’ cries Joseph, in an astonish‘ ment. ‘I know nothing of the matter,’ answered Adams, ‘but that she is a vestal ‘ for me. As I am a Christian, I know not ‘ whether she is a man or woman. He is an ‘ infidel who doth not believe in witchcraft.
‘ They as surely exist now as in the days of ‘ Saul. My cloaths are bewitched away ‘ too, and Fanny’s brought into their place.’
For he still insisted he was in his own apartment; but Fanny denied it vehemently, and said, his attempting to persuade Joseph of such a falsehood, convinced her of his wicked design. ‘How!’ said Joseph in a rage, ‘hath he offered any rudeness to you?’----- She answered she could not accuse him of any more than villainously stealing to bed to her, which she thought rudeness sufficient, and what no man would do without a wicked intention. Joseph’s great opinion of Adams was not easily to be staggered, and when he heard from Fanny that no harm had happened, he grew a little cooler: yet still he was confounded, and as he knew the house, and that the women’s apartments were on this side Mrs Slipflop’s room, and the men’s on the other, he was convinced that he was in Fanny’s chamber. Assuring Adams therefore of this truth, he begged him to give some account how he came there. Adams then, standing in his shirt, which did not offend Fanny, as the curtains of the bed were drawn, related all that had happened, and when he had ended, Joseph told him, it was plain he had mistaken, by turning to the right, instead of the left. 'Odio!' cries Adams, 'that's true, as sure as sixpence, you have hit on the very thing.' He then traversed the room, rubbing his hands, and begged Fanny's pardon, assuring her he did not know whether she was man or woman. That innocent creature firmly believing all he said, told him she was no longer angry, and begged Joseph to conduct him into his own apartment, where he should stay himself till she had put her cloaths on. Joseph and Adams accordingly departed, and the latter soon was convinced of the mistake he had committed; however, whilst he was dressing himself, he often asserted he believed in the power of witchcraft notwithstanding, and did not see how a Christian could deny it.

C H A P. XV.

The arrival of Gaffer and Gammer Andrews, with another person not much expected; and a perfect solution of the difficulties raised by the pedlar.

AS soon as Fanny was dressed, Joseph returned to her, and they had a long conversation together, the conclusion of which was, that if they found themselves to be really brother and sister, they vowed a perpetual celibacy, and to live together all their days, and indulge a Platonic friendship for each other.

The company were all very merry at breakfast, and Joseph and Fanny rather more chearful than the preceding night. The Lady Booby produced the diamond button, which the beau most readily owned, and alledged that he was very subject to walk in his sleep. Indeed he was far from being ashamed of his amour, and rather endeavoured to insinuate that more than was really true had passed between him and the fair Slipflop.

Their tea was scarce over, when news came of the arrival of old Mr Andrews and his wife. They were immediately introduced, and kindly received by the Lady Booby, whose heart went now pit-a-pat, as did those of Joseph and Fanny. They felt perhaps little less anxiety in this interval than Oedipus himself, whilst his fate was revealing.

Mr Booby first opened the cause, by informing the old gentleman that he had a child in the company more than he knew of; and taking Fanny by the hand, told him, this was that daughter of his who had been stolen away by gypsies in her infancy. Mr Andrews, after expressing some astonishment, assured his honour that he had never lost a daughter by gypsies, nor never had any other children than Joseph and Pamela. These words were a cordial to the two lovers; but had a different effect on Lady Booby. She ordered the pedlar to be called, who recounted his story as he had done before. At the end of which old Mrs Andrews running to Fanny, embraced her, crying out, 'She is, she is my child!' The company were all amazed at this disagreement between the man and his wife; and the blood had now forsaken the cheeks of the lovers, when the old woman turning to her husband, who was more surprised than all the rest, and having a little recovered her own spirits, delivered herself as follows: 'You may remember, my dear, when you went a serjeant to Gibraltar, you left me big with child; you

280 THE ADVENTURES OF

‘ staid abroad you know upwards of three ‘ years. In your absence I was brought to ‘ bed, I verily believe, of this daughter, ‘ whom I am sure I have reason to remem‘ ber, for I suckled her at this very breast ‘ till the day she was stolen from me. One ‘ afternoon, when the child was about a ‘ year, or a year and a half old, or there‘ abouts, two gypfy women came to the door ‘ and offered to tell my fortune. One of ‘ them had a child in her lap; I shewed them ‘ my hand, and desired to know if you was ‘ ever to come home again, which, I remem‘ ber as well as if it was but yesterday, they ‘ faithfully promised me you should. I left ‘ the girl in the cradle, and went to draw ‘ them a cup of liquor, the best I had; when ‘ I returned with the pot (I am sure I was ‘ not absent longer than whilst I am telling ‘ it to you) the women were gone. I was ‘ afraid they had stolen something, and look‘ ed and looked, but to no purpose, and Hea‘ ven knows I had very little for them to ‘ steal. At last hearing the child cry in the ‘ cradle, I went to take it up---but O the ‘ living! how was I surpris’d to find, in‘ stead of my own girl that I had put in the ‘ cradle, who was as fine a fat thriving child ‘ as you shall see in a summer’s day, a poor ‘ sickly boy, that did not seem to have an hour to live. I ran out, pulling my hair off, and crying like any mad after the women, but never could hear a word of them from that day to this. When I came back, the poor infant (which is our Joseph there as stout as he now stands) lifted up his eyes upon me so piteously, that to be sure, notwithstanding my passion, I could not find in my heart to do it any mischief. A neighbour of mine happening to come in at the same time, and hearing the case, advised me to take care of this poor child, and God would perhaps one day restore me my own. Upon which I took the child up, and suckled it to be sure, all the world as if it had been born of my own natural body. And as true as I am alive, in a little time I loved the boy all to nothing as if it had been my own girl. Well, as I was saying, times growing very hard, I having two children, and nothing but my own work, which was little enough God knows to maintain them, was obliged to ask relief of the parish; but instead of giving it me, they removed me by justices warrants, fifteen miles to the place where I now live, where I had not been long settled before you came home. Joseph (for that was the name I gave him myself — the Lord knows whether he was baptized or no, or ‘ by what name); Joseph, I say, seemed ‘ to be about five years old when you returned; ‘ ed; for I believe he is two or three years ‘ older than our daughter here;) for I am ‘ thoroughly convinced she is the same) and ‘ when you saw him you said he was a chopping ‘ boy, without ever minding his age; ‘ and so I seeing you did not suspect any ‘ thing of the matter, thought I might e’en ‘ as well keep it to myself, for fear you should ‘ not love him as well as I did. And all ‘ this is veritably true, and I will take my ‘ oath of it before any justice in the king‘ dom.’

The pedlar, who had been summoned by the order of Lady Booby, listened with the utmost attention to Gaffer Andrews’s story; and when she had finished, asked her, if the supposititious child had no mark on its breast? To which she answered, ‘ Yes, he ‘ had as fine a strawberry as ever grew in a ‘ garden.’ This Joseph acknowledged, and unbuttoning his coat, at the intercession of the company, shewed to them. ‘ Well,’ says Gaffer Andrews, who was a comical fly old fellow, and very likely desired to have no more children than he could keep, ‘ you ‘ have proved, I think, very plainly, that ‘ this boy doth not belong to us; but how ‘ are you certain that the girl is ours?’ The parson then brought the pedlar forward, and desired him to repeat the story which he had communicated to him the preceding day at the alehouse; which he complied with, and related what the reader, as well as Mr Adams, hath seen before. He then confirmed, from his wife's report, all the circumstances of the exchange, and of the strawberry on Joseph's breast. At the repetition of the word Strawberry, Adams, who had seen it without any emotion, started, and cry'd, ' Bless me! something comes into my head.' But before he had time to bring any thing out, a servant called him forth. When he was gone, the pedlar assured Joseph, that his parents were persons of much greater circumstances than those he had hitherto mistaken for such; for that he had been stolen from a gentleman's house, by those whom they call gypsies, and had been kept by them during a whole year, when looking on him as in a dying condition, they had exchanged him for the other healthier child, in the manner before related. He said, as to the name of his father, his wife had either never known, or forgot it; but that she had acquainted him he lived about forty miles from the place where the exchange had been made, and which way, promising to spare no pains in endeavouring with him to discover the place.

But Fortune, which seldom doth good or ill, or makes men happy or miserable by halves, resolved to spare him this labour. The reader may please to recollect, that Mr Wilson had intended a journey to the West, in which he was to pass through Mr Adams's parish, and had promised to call on him. He was now arrived at the Lady Booby's gates for that purpose, being directed thither from the parson's house, and had sent in the servant whom we have above seen call Mr Adams forth. This had no sooner mentioned the discovery of a stolen child, and had uttered the word Strawberry, than Mr Wilson, with wildness in his looks, and the utmost eagerness in his words, begged to be shewed into the room, where he entered without the least regard to any of the company but Joseph, and embracing him with a complexion all pale and trembling, desired to see the mark on his breast; and the parson followed him, capering, rubbing his hands, and crying out, Hic est quem quæris; inventus est, &c. Joseph complied with the request of Mr Wilson, who no sooner saw the mark, than abandoning himself to the most extravagant rapture of passion, he embraced Joseph with inexpressible ecstasy, and cried out in tears of joy, 'I have discovered my son, I have him again in my arms!' Joseph was not sufficiently apprized yet, to taste the same delight with his father; (for so in reality he was); however, he returned some warmth to his embraces: but he no sooner perceived, from his father's account, the agreement of every circumstance, of person, time, and place, than he threw himself at his feet, and embracing his knees, with tears begged his blessing, which was given with much affection, and received with such respect, mixed with such tenderness on both sides, that it affected all present: but none so much as Lady Booby, who left the room in an agony, which was but too much perceived, and not very charitably accounted for by some of the company.

C H A P. XVI.

Being the last. In which this true history is brought to a happy conclusion.

FANNY was very little behind her Joseph, in the duty she expressed towards her parents, and the joy she evidenced in discovering them. Gammer Andrews kissed her, and said, She was heartily glad to see her: but, for her part, she could never love any one better than Joseph. Gaffer Andrews testified no remarkable emotion; he blessed and kissed her, but complained bitterly that he wanted his pipe, not having had a whiff that morning.

Mr Booby, who knew nothing of his aunt's fondness, imputed her abrupt departure to her pride, and disdain of the family into which he was married; he was therefore desirous to be gone with the utmost celerity: and now, having congratulated Mr Wilson and Joseph on the discovery, he saluted Fanny, called her sister, and introduced her as such to Pamela, who behaved with great decency on the occasion.

He now sent a message to his aunt, who returned, that she wished him a good journey, but was too disordered to see any company: he therefore prepared to set out, having invited Mr Wilson to his house; and Pamela and Joseph both so insisted on his complying, that he at last consented, having first obtained a messenger from Mr Booby, to acquaint his wife with the news; which, as he knew it would render her completely happy, he could not prevail on himself to delay a moment in acquainting her with.

The company were ranged in this manner.

The two old people, with their two daughters, rode in the coach; the Squire, Mr Wilson, Joseph, Parson Adams, and the pedlar proceeded on horseback.

In their way Joseph informed his father of his intended match with Fanny; to which, though he expressed some reluctance at first, on the eagerness of his son's instances he consented, saying, If she was so good a creature as she appeared, and he described her, he thought the disadvantages of birth and fortune might be compensated. He however insisted on the match being deferred till he had seen his mother; in which Joseph perceiving him positive, with great duty obeyed him, to the great delight of Parson Adams, who by these means saw an opportunity of fulfilling the church forms, and marrying his parishioners without a licence.

Mr Adams greatly exulting on this occasion, (for such ceremonies were matters of no small moment with him), accidentally gave spurs to his horse, which the generous beast disdainingly, for he was of high mettle, and had been used to more expert riders than the gentleman who at present bestrode him, for whose horsemanship he had perhaps some contempt, immediately ran away full speed, and played so many antic tricks, that he tumbled the parson from his back; which Joseph perceiving, came to his relief. This accident afforded infinite merriment to the servants, and no less frightened poor Fanny, who beheld him as he passed by the coach; but the mirth of the one and terror of the other were soon determined, when the parson declared he had received no damage.

The horse having freed himself from his unworthy rider, as he probably thought him, proceeded to make the best of his way; but was stopped by a gentleman and his servants who were travelling the opposite way; and were now at a little distance from the coach. They soon met: and as one of the servants delivered Adams his horse, his master hailed him, and Adams looking up, presently recollected he was the justice of peace before whom he and Fanny had made their appearance. The parson presently saluted him very kindly; and the Justice informed him, that he had found the fellow who attempted to swear against him and the young woman the very next day, and had committed him to Salisbury goal, where he was charged with many robberies.

Many compliments having passed between the parson and the Justice, the latter proceeded on his journey, and the former having with some disdain refused Joseph's offer of changing horses, and declaring he was as able a horseman as any in the kingdom, remounted his beast; and now the company again proceeded, and happily arrived at their journey's end, Mr Adams, by good luck, rather than by good riding, escaping a second fall.

The company arriving at Mr Booby's house, were all received by him in the most courteous, and entertained in the most splendid manner, after the custom of the old English hospitality, which is still preserved in some very few families in the remote parts of England. They all passed that day with the utmost satisfaction; it being perhaps impossible to find any set of people more solidly and sincerely happy. Joseph and Fanny found means to be alone upwards of two hours, which were the shortest, but the sweetest imaginable.

In the morning, Mr Wilson proposed to his son to make a visit with him to his mother; which, notwithstanding his dutiful inclinations, and a longing desire he had to see her, a little concerned him, as he must be obliged to leave his Fanny: but the goodness of Mr Booby relieved him: for he proposed to send his own coach and six for Mrs Wilson, whom Pamela so very earnestly invited, that Mr Wilson at length agreed with the intreaties of Mr Booby and Joseph, and suffered the coach to go empty for his wife.

On Saturday night the coach returned with Mrs Wilson, who added one more to this happy assembly. The reader may imagine much better and quicker too than I can describe, the many embraces and tears of joy which succeeded her arrival. It is sufficient to say, she was easily prevailed with to follow her husband's example, in consenting to the match.

On Sunday Mr Adams performed the service at the Squire's parish church, the curate of which very kindly exchanged duty, and rode twenty miles to the Lady Booby's parish so to do; being particularly charged not to omit publishing the banns, being the third and last time.

At length the happy day arrived, which was to put Joseph in the possession of all his wishes. He arose, and dressed himself in a neat, but plain suit of Mr Booby's, which exactly fitted him; for he refused all finery; as did Fanny likewise, who could be prevailed on by Pamela to attire herself in nothing richer than a white dimity night gown. Her shift indeed, which Pamela presented her, was of the finest kind, and had an edging of lace round the bosom; she likewise equipped her with a pair of fine white thread stockings, which were all she would accept; for she wore one of her own short round-eared caps, and over it a little straw hat, lined with cherry-coloured silk, and tied with a cherry-coloured ribbon. In this dress she came forth from her chamber, blushing and breathing sweets; and was by Joseph, whose eyes sparkled fire, led to church, the whole family attending, where Mr Adams performed the ceremony; at which nothing was so remarkable, as the extraordinary and unaffected modesty of Fanny, unless the true Christian piety of Adams, who publicly rebuked Mr Booby and Pamela for laughing in so sacred a place, and on so solemn an occasion. Our parson would have done no less to the highest prince on earth: for though he paid all submission and deference to his superiors in other matters, where the least spice of religion intervened, he immediately lost all respect of persons. It was his maxim, that he was a servant of the Highest, and could not, without departing from his duty, give up the least article of his honour, or of his cause, to the greatest earthly potentate. Indeed he always asserted, that Mr Adams at church, with his surplice on, and Mr Adams without that ornament, in any other place, were two very different persons.

292 THE ADVENTURES OF

When the church rites were over, Joseph led his blooming bride back to Mr Booby's (for the distance was so very little, they did not think proper to use a coach); the whole company attended them likewise on foot; and now a most magnificent entertainment was provided, at which Parson Adams demonstrated an appetite surprising, as well as surpassing every one present. Indeed, the only persons who betrayed any deficiency on this occasion, were those on whose account the feast was provided. They pampered their imaginations with the much more exquisite repast which the approach of night promised them; the thoughts of which filled both their minds, though with different sensations; the one all desire, while the other had her wishes tempered with fears.

At length, after a day passed with the utmost merriment, corrected by the strictest decency; in which, however, Parson Adams, being well filled with ale and pudding, had given a loose to more facetiousness than was usual to him; the happy, the blessed moment arrived when Fanny retired with her mother, her mother-in-law, and her sister. She was soon undress'd; for she had no jewels to deposite in their caskets, nor fine laces to fold with the nicest exactness. Undressing to her was properly discovering, not putting off ornaments: for as all her charms were the gifts of Nature, she could divest herself of none. How, reader, shall I give thee an adequate idea of this lovely young creature? the bloom of roses and lilies might a little illustrate her complexion, or their smell her sweetness: but to comprehend her entirely, conceive youth, health, bloom, neatness, and innocence, in her bridal-bed; conceive all these in their utmost perfection, and you may place the charming Fanny's picture before your eyes.

Joseph no sooner heard she was in bed, than he fled with the utmost eagerness to her. A minute carried him into her arms, where we shall leave this happy couple to enjoy the private rewards of their constancy; rewards so great and sweet, that I apprehend Joseph neither envied the noblest duke, nor Fanny the finest duchess that night.

The third day, Mr Wilson and his wife, with their son and daughter returned home; where they now live together in a state of bliss scarce equalled. Mr Booby hath with unprecedented generosity given Fanny a fortune of two thousand pounds, which Joseph hath laid out in a little estate in the same parish with his father, which he now occupies (his father having stocked it for him); and Fanny presides with most excellent management in his dairy; where, however, she is not at present very able to bustle much, being, as Mr Wilson informs me in his letter, extremely big with her first child.

Mr Booby hath presented Mr Adams with a living of one hundred and thirty pounds a-year. He at first refused it, resolving not to quit his parishioners, with whom he had lived so long: but, on recollecting he might keep a curate at this living, he hath been lately inducted into it.

The pedlar, besides several handsome presents both from Mr Wilson and Mr Booby, is, by the latter's interest, made an exciseman; a trust which he discharges with such justice, that he is greatly beloved in his neighbourhood.

As for the Lady Booby, she returned to London in a few days, where a young captain of dragoons, together with eternal parties at cards, soon obliterated the memory of Joseph.

Joseph remains bless'd with his Fanny, whom he doats on with the utmost tenderness, which is all returned on her side. The happiness of this couple is a perpetual fountain of pleasure to their fond parents; and what is particularly remarkable, he declares he will imitate them in their retirement; nor will be prevailed on by any booksellers, or their authors, to make his appearance in high-life.

THE END.

