

Bodleian Libraries

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

This book is part of the collection held by the Bodleian Libraries and scanned by Google, Inc. for the Google Books Library Project.

For more information see:

<http://www.bodleian.ox.ac.uk/dbooks>

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 2.0 UK: England & Wales (CC BY-NC-SA 2.0) licence.

25.515.

THE WORKS
OF
THOMAS GRAY.

TALBOYS AND WHEELER, PRINTERS, OXFORD.

Engraved by H. N. Crellin.

THOMAS GRAY.

Published by Harding, Triphook, & Leopard, Finsbury Square, London, Jan. 20, 1825.

J. H. 1825.

THE WORKS
OF
THOMAS GRAY,
CONTAINING HIS
POEMS AND CORRESPONDENCE, WITH MEMOIRS
OF HIS
LIFE AND WRITINGS.

A NEW EDITION,
CONTAINING SOME ADDITIONS, NOT BEFORE PRINTED, WITH NOTES OF THE VARIOUS EDITORS.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. I.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR HARDING, TRIPHOOK, AND LEPARD,
FINSBURY SQUARE.

MDCCLXXV.

515.

CONTENTS OF THE FIRST VOLUME.

	PAGE
LIFE of Gray	xvii

POEMS ADDRESSED TO, AND IN MEMORY OF, MR. GRAY.

Upon his Odes, by David Garrick, Esq.	ci
Ode on the Death of Gray, by the Earl of Carlisle	ciii
Lines to the Memory of Gray, by Mr. Mason	cvii
Fragment of an Ode on the Death of Gray	cx
Epitaph on Gray's Monument, in Westminster Abbey, by Mr. Mason	cxiv

GRAY'S POEMS.

ODE
I. On the Spring	1
II. On the Death of a favourite Cat	8
III. On a distant Prospect of Eton College	12
IV. Hymn to Adversity	22
V. The Progress of Poesy	27
VI. The Bard	46
VII. For Music	68
VIII. The Fatal Sisters	78
IX. The Descent of Odin	86
X. The Triumphs of Owen	97
XI. The Death of Hoel	101
Sonnet on the Death of Mr. West	105
Epitaph on Mrs. Clarke	107
— on Sir William Williams	109
Elegy, written in a Country Churchyard	110
A Long Story	130

THE POSTHUMOUS POEMS AND FRAGMENTS
OF MR. GRAY.

	PAGE
Translation of a Passage from Statius	143
Agrippina ; a Tragedy	145
The Alliance of Education and Government	161
Stanzas to Mr. Bentley	174
Ode on the Pleasure arising from Vicissitude	176
Sketch of his own Character	182
Amatory Lines	183
Song	184
Tophet ; an Epigram	185
Impromptu, on the Seat and Ruins of a deceased Nobleman	187
The Candidate	189

POEMATA.

Hymeneal on the Marriage of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales	193
Luna Habitabilis	196
Sapphic Ode, to Mr. West	200
Alcaic Fragment	203
Lines addressed to Mr. West	203
Elegiac Verses	204
Carmen ad C. Favonium Zephyrinum	205
Fragment on the Gaurus	207
A Farewell to Florence	210
Imitation of an Italian Sonnet	211
Alcaic Ode, written in the Album of the Grande Chartreuse	212
Greek Epigram	214
Heroic Epistle from Sophonisba to Masinissa	215
De Principiis Cogitandi	218

THE LIFE
OF
THOMAS GRAY.

THERE are few, perhaps, that have read and admired the Elegy in a Country Churchyard, who have not realized the Author's pathetic prediction, that the sympathy he displayed for the fortunes of the indigent and ignoble, would excite in survivors an inquiring interest after his own. This interest was indeed evinced in the eagerness with which the Letters of the Poet were read after his death, and is still shown in their undiminished popularity. The causes of this continued favour might afford matter for curious and useful inquiry in the present day, when it is the fashion for poets to anticipate all posthumous memorial, by a strain of attractive egotism, in which genius is constantly set forth as a licence for lighter faults, and a palliation for the worst. Such a taste as this can certainly be little gratified in perusing, long after his death, the Me- moirs of a retired and virtuous Poet, and of an unambitious scholar. Still, however, there are found those who delight to contemplate genius exempt from that petulant jealousy which too often accompanies it, and erudition neither obtrusive nor presumptuous; and if these are to be found any where, it is in the character of Gray.

Of the ancestry of our Poet little is known, except that he had a right, acknowledged by the Earl Gray, to bear the arms of that noble house. His grandfather, as Mr. Mason informs us, was a considerable merchant in the city of London, and his father, Mr. Philip Gray, also followed business; although, by the effects of an indolent and sullen temper, he rather diminished than increased his paternal fortune. His trade was that of a money-scrivener, and it has been observed as remarkable, that Milton's father was of the same profession. A character so unpromising as Mr. Philip Gray's met with a complete contrast in that of his wife, whose original name was Dorothy Antrobus. She was the mother of twelve children, but of these only Thomas, who was the fifth, survived the period of infancy. He was born in Cornhill, on the 26th of December, 1716, and at a very early age was narrowly rescued from the fatal disorder which had carried off his brothers and sisters: this was suffocation, arising from fulness of blood, and the subject of the present memoir would certainly have fallen a victim to it, had not his mother, with her own hand, opened a vein, and relieved him from the most violent paroxysm. This act of maternal presence of mind may be considered as characteristic of that parent, whom, in after life, Mr. Gray never mentioned without a sigh, and whom he has so pathetically commemorated in the epitaph he placed over her remains.

Through the ignorance and unfeeling temper of Mr. Philip Gray, his son would have been left perfectly without education, had not Mrs. Gray procured him admission at Eton by means of her brother, Mr. Antrobus, at that time one of the assistant masters, and a fellow of St. Peter's College, Cambridge. To the care of this uncle, and to the hard-earned fruits of his mother's unassisted industry, was the future poet indebted for that instruction, which gave at once scope and energy to the powers of his exalted mind. His early proficiency has been pronounced very great, by an authority which is indisputable—that of the learned Mr. Bryant, who ranked next to him at school; and it is certain, that out of the term of school hours his time was not wasted. It was in reading Virgil as the pastime of his boyhood, that he describes his earliest fondness for poetry to have originated, and his friend West has aptly and beautifully represented their common employments in these unfettered moments, as leading

“ Through many a flowery path and shelly grot,
Where learning lulled them in his private maze.”

It was at Eton that Gray formed his first intimacy with Horace Walpole; and the coterie composed of these two, Asheton and West, was called the quadruple alliance. Nor was this union dissolved when Gray removed to Peter-house, Walpole to King's College, and Mr. West to Christ Church Oxford. It is from the period of this change, which took place in the year 1734, that Mr. Gray's published correspondence with Mr. West commences; and the best picture of his juvenile days is to be found in this intercourse with the friend whom he had chosen, as most congenial to himself in feelings and pursuits.

That ingenious young man was the son of the Right Honourable Richard West, Chancellor of Ireland; and his grandfather, by the mother's side, was the famous Bishop Burnet. Like his friend, he carried with him to the University the reputation of a scholar, and at that time, Mr. Mason says, his genius was reckoned the most brilliant of the two. This judgment that writer conceives to be ill-founded, “for though,” he adds, “Mr. West's part in that correspondence will undoubtedly show that he possessed very extraordinary talents.

yet, on Mr. Gray's side, there seems superadded to these, such a manly precision of taste and maturity of judgment, as would induce one to believe Mr. Walpole's phrase not very hyperbolic, who has often asserted to me, that 'Gray never was a boy.'"

Upon first going up to College, after allowing themselves to indulge almost exclusively in the delights of classical literature, both these young men appear to have found much that was contrary to their tastes in the studies and general society of the Universities; and perhaps there is nothing very extraordinary in the circumstance, even though those seats of learning had been better constituted than they certainly were, at that time. Both Oxford and Cambridge have indeed shown themselves anxious, since the period alluded to, to improve their several systems, and the former especially, as she had, perhaps, deeper errors to eradicate, has undergone a more complete reformation. Still, however, it is found that the dignity of profound learning is to youthful spirits monotonous and unprepossessing, and minds of a quick and lively temperare offended with that just arrangement, by which laborious industry is enabled, equally with brilliant genius, to meet its reward. The disposition of Gray, naturally retired and melancholy, was little likely to relish a dissipated society, tinged, as it must have been, with the excesses of the time, nor could he feel much more companionship among those devoted to studies in which he took no pleasure. Hence he preferred seclusion, with all its distastefulness, and made it his solace to laugh or to rail in the ear of his friends. Poetry was his banquet, and one born for the delights of imagination, might be allowed to cast a passing sneer at the perplexities of mathematical or scholastic science; but it is not so easy to apologize for that more matured disgust and incessant ridicule, which Mr. Gray afterwards displayed on all occasions, toward a place in which he was content to pass his days, and this at a time when the University was graced by such names as Bentley, Middleton, and Tunstall, Waterland, Long, and Professor Saunderson.

Of the nature of Mr. Gray's studies, during his residence of four years at Cambridge little can be ascertained, except that he did not choose the course usually followed; and yet few, who are able to form a judgment of his powers of application, will be disposed to take him at his word, when he playfully tells his friend, that almost all the employments of his hours might be best explained by negatives: it is probable that he was then laying the foundation of that vast general knowledge for which he was afterwards so distinguished, and one thing is certain, that his poetical powers were not dormant. He composed some Latin verses on the marriage of the Prince of Wales, and wrote, at the request of his College, the lines entitled Luna Habitabilis. He also enclosed to West a translation of a part of the fourth book of Statius, of which only a few lines are preserved by Mr. Mason; a Sapphic Ode, and Alcaic Fragment, as well as a translation from the Pastor Fido, and Gierusalemme Liberata, neither of which last have been published. To the letters which accompanied these effusions, he received answers from his friend, perpetually complaining of feeble health and dejected spirits; and a poem, in particular, addressed "Ad Amicos," which, besides its classical beauty and genuine pathos, derives a deeper and sadder interest from that peculiar tone of melancholy, which is the usual forerunner of early decline.

In September, 1738, Mr. Gray left Cambridge, about six months after his friend had removed from Christ Church to the Inner Temple: and the interval, until March in the following year, he spent at his father's house in Cornhill, intending also to enter on the profession of the Law. This design, however, was interrupted by a proposal from Mr. Horace Walpole, that he should become the companion of his travels abroad, and by the end of March they had both set out on their way to France. Their course was that usually taken by travellers at that period and since, and therefore, if the reader should find little new information in our Author's own account, in his letters, he nevertheless cannot fail of being pleased with the thousand new observations on objects, which even at that time had become sufficiently familiar. Paris was, of course, the first place to be visited, and there our travellers fell in with the Lords Holderness and Waldegrave, and also with Lord Conway and his brother. With the two latter they proceeded to Rheims, where they spent three months, chiefly in order to perfect themselves in the language, and thence went on by Dijon to Lyons. There they spent some time, in the course of which they made a diversion to the Convent of La Grande Chartreuse, in Savoy, returning by Geneva. It had been the intention of Mr. Walpole to have spent the winter in the south of France; this, however, was superseded by a wish now expressed by his father, that he should hasten into Italy, and in consequence, immediately crossing the Alps at Mount Cenis, they proceeded by Turin and Genoa to Parma, and thence through Reggio, Modena, and Bologna, across the Apennines to Florence. Here they spent the winter, in the company of Mr. Horace (afterwards Sir Horace) Mann, the British Envoy; enjoying the best society, and surveying the wonders of art, collected by the taste and wealth of the house of Medicis. Mr. Gray, as he was very constant in his visits to the gallery, spent much time in forming catalogues, in classing, and making observations on the pictures of the first masters, so that his native taste was thus improved by a very complete acquaintance with the principles and excellence of the art. The intelligence, at length, that Pope Clement the Twelfth was dead, and the prospect of being present at a new election, hastened the travellers to Rome, which they reached by the beginning of April. Between two and three months were spent in viewing the wrecks of the ancient, and the wonders of the modern city, and also in making excursions to places of eminent interest, either for natural beauty or classical association. Among these were Frascati, and the cascades of Tivoli; the sight of which inspired our Author with that beautiful Alcaic Ode, inscribed "ad C. Favonium Zephyrinum." As the conclave of Cardinals prolonged their sitting without any prospect of an immediate choice, Mr. Gray set out with Mr. Walpole for Naples, which was the southern point of their tour, and which they reached by about the middle of June. As the discovery of the ancient town of Herculaneum had been but recently made, the excavations at Portici became an object of high curiosity, and after examining these, and spending too short a time in so delightful a neighbourhood, they returned to Rome, and thence again to Florence, where they settled themselves for the whole autumn and winter following.

Throughout Mr. Gray's correspondence at this period there occur expressions, which shew that in many points the arrangement of the time and course of these journeyings, was not such as he himself would have chosen, had he possessed the means of perfect independence. His own inclination evidently would have detained him longer at Rome, and doubtless he would have preferred enlarging his mind by new scenes of ancient interest, to enjoying the indolent pleasures of Florence, which he compares to absolute annihilation. Mr. Walpole's passion was gay society, and of this Florence furnished abundance; nor was it surprising that, supplied as he was with ample means, he should suit his own youthful inclination.

Mr. Gray found, on his arrival, one particular cause of distress, in a letter he received from his friend West, exhibiting a dejection of mind unusual even in one who was naturally pensive and melancholy. That amiable young man had conceived a morbid disinclination to the profession he had chosen, notwithstanding that his father's high rank and credit, and the possession of numerous friends, offered him peculiar advantages in it. Already had he received excellent advice on the subject—such as true wisdom and knowledge of the world alone could dictate—from a gentleman^a who had been official secretary to his father in Ireland, and who felt a tie of gratitude binding him to render this service to the son of his patron. This, however, had not its effect, as Mr. West's dislike to the laborious study of the common law was too deeply rooted, and may evidently be traced to the debility of a sinking constitution. Nor was Mr. Gray more successful, although in the tenderness and prudence of his counsel he showed himself in the light of a true friend; for we find afterwards, in the Works of Lord Orford, a letter from Mr. West soliciting interest for a commission in the army.

Not long after Mr. Walpole had determined to spend some months more in Florence, he received intelligence of the immediate election of a new Pope, and though only four days' journey from Rome, the heat and mal'aria prevented him and his companion from travelling to witness the ceremony. They both, therefore, remained where they were, and in the course of the following month Mr. Gray sent to Mr. West a copy of Latin verses, on the Gaurus mountain. Besides these, he composed, some time during his stay in this place, the commencement of the Poem "de Principiis Cogitandi," and sent the first fifty-three lines of it to his friend in the following spring, with his Farewell to Florence, and Translation of a Song by Buondelmonte.

^a This gentleman's name was Williams, and the most admirable letter he wrote to Mrs. West, for the benefit of her son, may be seen in the "Selections from the Gentleman's Magazine."

On the 24th of April our travellers set off on their way homeward, and laid their course through Bologna for Venice. At Reggio, however, arose an unfortunate dispute, which ended in their sudden separation; and of this dispute and separation Mr. Walpole was afterwards content to bear the blame. He represents, as the cause of the quarrel, that Gray was "too serious a companion" for him. "Gray," he says, "was for antiquities, &c. while I was for perpetual balls and plays:—the fault was mine." The difference of temper here mentioned has been already hinted at, and had probably, for a considerable time, been preparing the mind of both parties for the crisis of a rupture. Walpole was vain, and had early been accustomed to flattery; Gray was no courtier, and might on his part, have betrayed something of discontent at being so long dependant, in his own movements, on those of another. But for information on the immediate cause of this quarrel, we are indebted to Mr. Mitford, who states, on what would claim to be considered good authority, that Mr. Walpole, suspecting Gray of having spoken ill of him to his friends in England, clandestinely opened a letter of his and re-sealed it; an injury which Mr. Gray very properly resented. If any thing could add to the meanness of such an action, it was the cowardly manner in which it is slurred over in Mr. Walpole's general acknowledgment of blame, and that too as though he thought the world, judging by its own maxims, would readily acquit him.

Deprived thus of the means of gratifying his enlarged curiosity, on the scale that he had hitherto done, Mr. Gray proceeded alone to Venice, and there remained, only till he was provided with the means of returning to England. This was about the middle of July, and he followed in his return, nearly the same route as that, by which he had travelled southward, through Verona, Milan, Turin, and Lyons: and as he was now accompanied only by a single laquais de voyage, he satisfied the reasonable anxiety of his friends for his health and safety by constant communications. One important deviation he made from the direct course, in order to visit once more the awful solitudes of the Grande Chartreuse, and though perturbed, as he must have been, by a variety of considerations, his mind was yet free to expatiate with the enthusiasm of a poet, and, it may be added, with a poet's melancholy, on the stupendous scenes which had at first so impressed his imagination. This may clearly be seen from that beautiful Alcaic Ode, which he wrote in the Album of the fathers of the convent.

The circumstances in which Mr. Gray was placed on his return from abroad, cannot be better described than in the words of Mr. Mason. "He found his father's constitution almost entirely worn out by very severe attacks of the gout, to which he had been for many years subject; and, indeed, the next return of that distemper was fatal to him. This happened about two months^b after his son reached London.

It has been before observed, that Mr. Philip Gray was of a reserved and indolent temper; he was also morose, unsocial, and obstinate; defects which, if not inherent in his disposition, might probably arise from his bodily complaints. His indolence had led him to neglect the business of his profession; his obstinacy to build a country house at Wanstead, without acquainting either his wife or son with the design (to which he knew they would be very averse) till it was executed. This building, which he undertook late in life, was attended with very considerable expense, which might almost be called so much money thrown away; since, after his death, it was found necessary to sell the house for two thousand pounds less than its original cost. Mr. Gray, therefore, at this time found his patrimony so small, that it would by no means enable him to prosecute the study of the law, without his becoming burthensome to his mother and aunt. These two sisters had for many years carried on a trade^d separate from that of Mrs. Gray's husband; by which having acquired what would support them decently for the rest of their lives, they left off business soon after his death, and retired to Stoke, near Windsor, to the house of their other sister, Mrs. Rogers, lately become the widow of a gentleman^e of that name. Both of them wished Mr. Gray to follow the profession for which he had been originally intended, and would undoubtedly have contributed all in their power to enable him to do it with ease and convenience. He, on his part, though he had taken his resolution of declining it, was too delicate to hurt two persons for whom he had so tender an affection, by peremptorily declaring his real intentions; and therefore changed, or pretended to change, the line of that study; and,

^b He came to town about the 1st of September, 1741. His father died the 6th of November following, at the age of sixty-five.—MASON.

^d They kept a kind of India warehouse on Cornhill, under the joint names of Gray and Antrobus.—MASON.

^e Mr. Rogers had in the earlier part of his life followed the profession of the law, but retired from business many years before his death. I suppose he was the uncle mentioned in Sect. I. Letter ix.—MASON.

accordingly, the latter end of the subsequent year went to Cambridge, to take his Bachelor's degree in Civil Law.

But the narrowness of his circumstances was not the only thing that distressed him at this period. He had, as we have seen, lost the friendship of Mr. Walpole abroad: he had also lost much time in his travels; a loss which application could not easily retrieve, when so severe and laborious a study as that of the common law was to be the object of it; and he well knew that, whatever improvement he might have made in this interval, either in taste or science, such improvement would stand him in little stead with regard to his present situation and exigencies. This was not all: his other friend, Mr. West, he found, on his return, oppressed by sickness and a load of family misfortunes; which, were I fully acquainted with them, it would not be my inclination here to dwell upon. These the sympathizing heart of Mr. Gray made his own. He did all in his power (for he was now with him in London) to soothe the sorrows of his friend, and to try to alleviate them by every office of the purest and most perfect affection: but his cares were vain. The distresses of Mr. West's mind had already too far affected a body, from the first, weak and delicate. His health declined daily, and therefore he left town in March, 1742, and, for the benefit of the air, went to David Mitchell's, Esq. at Popes, near Hatfield, Hertfordshire."

For the tristia vitæ, by which he was encompassed, Mr. Gray sought a solace in his muse, and during the winter commenced his first English composition, the Death of Agrippina. The choice of this subject and his mode of dramatizing it, is traced by Mr. Mason to the impression produced on his mind by the Britannicus of M. Racine, as he saw it acted in Paris. It certainly is constructed on the model of French tragedy, and as such, perhaps, possesses hardly sufficient interest for English representation. The observations, indeed, of the author himself upon it, may, with some deduction, be considered as just, that "it talks all in figures and mere poetry, instead of nature and the language of real passion." If, however, in this view, we are led to subscribe to the harsh judgment of Dr. Johnson, and deem it "no loss to the English stage, that Agrippina was never finished," we must be convinced that it was a great loss to the closet, and one which the Author's studious application to other pursuits has not compensated.

When he sent what he had written to Mr. West, in Hertfordshire, he received from him some free and friendly criticisms on the length of the speeches, and also on the language. The first objection was obviated by dividing the speech of Agrippina, and the second Mr. Gray answered in the same spirit in which it had been made. But though the strictures were certainly not well founded, and failed to convince his judgment, they were yet sufficient to remove that complacency which is absolutely necessary to successful composition ; and this was probably one cause that a work of so fair a promise was never finished. Besides this, Mr. Gray sent, for the perusal of his friend, a translation of Propertius, a Greek Epigram, and an Heroic Epistle in the manner of Ovid, from Sophonisba to Massanissa. In return for them he received some Latin lines to a Cough, and a beautiful Invocation to Spring. The former of these was written by Mr. West, in one of the very paroxysms which were destroying the shattered wreck of his frame. And in this little fact there is something so deeply affecting, so like the fable of the Swan dying in Music, that it must have sunk deeply into the heart of a friend so affectionate as his. It may indeed be doubted, whether Mr. Gray anticipated so rapid a decline as that which Mr. West was undergoing, or whether he disguised his apprehensions even from himself ; but leaving town, at the commencement of June, he despatched from Stoke the Ode to Spring, which he had then just written, and which stands first in the order of his printed poems. The letter which contained it was sent back unopened, as he to whom it was addressed had ceased to struggle with the troubles and the pains of mortality, and was removed far beyond even the call of friendship. Mr. West died on the first of June, only twenty days after he had concluded a letter to Mr. Gray with the words "vale et vive paulisper cum vivis." "So little," observes Mr. Mason, "was this amiable youth then aware of the short time that he himself should be numbered amongst the living."

There is, as Mr. Mason farther observes, a kind of presentiment in that pathetic piece which Mr. Gray enclosed too late to his beloved friend, and the anecdote itself throws a "melancholy grace" over the Ode on the Prospect of Eton College, and on that to Adversity; both of them written in the August following: "for as both poems abound with pathos, those who have feeling hearts will feel this excellence the more strongly, when they know the cause whence it arose; and the unfeeling will, perhaps, learn to respect what they cannot taste, when they are prevented from imputing to a splenetic melancholy, what in fact sprung from the most benevolent of all sensations."—"The first impulse of his sorrow for the death of his friend gave birth to a very tender Sonnet, in English, on the Petrarchian model; and also to a sublime apostrophe, in hexameters, written in the genuine strain of classical majesty, with which he intended to begin one of his books, De Principiis Cogitandi."

From his education at Eton, Mr. Gray became early attached to Latin composition, and, for a long time after this, preferred his own poetry in that language, to what he had written in English. This, however, was the last of his productions in Latin, and, perhaps, the most laboured of all his poems. The considerations which induced him to lay aside the design, were, according to Mr. Mason, the little popularity acquired by the Cardinal de Polignac's Anti-Lucretius; a poem which had the honour of being revised by Boileau and Louis XIV. Mr. Mitford, however, rather attributes the ill success of this latter work to its length, as it consisted of thirteen thousand lines, and to the want of sufficient variety and digression in the composition. It is probable that the Elegy in a Country Churchyard was begun about this time, and the tone of melancholy which pervades it had its origin, doubtless, in that same deep regret which had not yet subsided in the mind of the author, and which, the remaining years of his life were insufficient to efface.

In the autumn of this year, 1742, Mr. Gray went up to Cambridge, as has been already noticed, to take the degree of Bachelor in Civil Law. And notwithstanding the early prejudices he had taken against that University, and that these prejudices were rather augmented than diminished by his long absence, he yet made that place his residence for the remainder of his life. This Mr. Mason accounts for by his love of books, which was ever his ruling passion, and the straitness of his circumstances, which prevented him from gratifying it. "For, to a man," observes his friend and biographer, "who could not conveniently purchase even a small library, what situation so eligible as that which affords free access to a number of larger ones? This reason also accounts for another singular fact. We have seen that, during his residence at Stoke, in the spring and summer of this same year, 1742, he wrote a considerable part of his more finished poems. Hence one would be naturally led to conclude, that on his return to Cambridge, when the ceremony of taking his degree was over, the quiet of the place would have prompted him to continue the cultivation of his poetical talents, and that immediately, as the muse seems in this year to have peculiarly inspired him; but this was not the case. Reading, he has often told me, was much more agreeable to him than writing; he therefore now laid aside composition almost entirely, and applied himself with intense assiduity to the study of the best Greek authors; in-somuch that, in the space of about six years, there were hardly any writers of note in that language which he had not only read, but digested; remarking, by the mode of commonplace, their contents, their difficult and corrupt passages, and all this with the accuracy of a critic added to the diligence of a student."

Once, it is true, we find his mind diverted from these severer pursuits into the channel of original composition; and the subject which engaged his attention was the learned dullness of the place in which he dwelt. But the design of this work, which has been entitled, A Hymn to Ignorance, was never completed, although the fragment which remains has quite enough merit to make us sincerely regret that it was so soon interrupted. It has, Mr. Mason thinks, internal evidence of being written early after the Author's settlement in Cambridge; and certainly much of its spirit is caught from the fourth book of the Dunciad, which had then but recently made its appearance.

Among our Author's cotemporaries at the University, with whom he contracted an early and lasting intimacy, was Mr. Stonehewer, who was successively tutor and secretary to the Duke of Grafton, and afterwards, by his interest, auditor of excise; Dr. Middleton, author of a treatise on the Roman Senate, and Mr. (afterwards Dr.) Wharton, of Old Park, near Durham. With this last gentleman Mr. Gray commenced, about the time of his return to Cambridge, a correspondence, by means of which we become acquainted with the chief events of a life so retired as his. Among the most important of these was his reconciliation with Mr. Walpole, which took place in the year 1745, through the intervention of a lady who wished well to both parties: and some details of the affair, as they are contained in a letter first published by Mr. Mitford, may not be uninteresting to the reader. "I went," writes Mr. Gray, "the following evening to see the party, (as Mrs. Foible says,) and was something abashed at his confidence: he came to meet me, kissed me on both sides with all the ease of one who receives an acquaintance just come out of the country, squatted me into a fauteuil, begun to talk of the town, and this and that and t'other, and continued with little interruption for three hours, when I took my leave very indifferently pleased, but treated with monstrous good-breeding, I supped with him next night; (as he desired;) Asheton was there, whose formalities tickled me inwardly, for he (I found) was to be angry about the letter I had written him. However, in going home together our hackney coach jumbled us into a sort of reconciliation: he hammered out somewhat like an excuse, and I received it very readily, because I cared not twopence whether it were true or not, so we grew the best acquaintance imaginable, and I sat with him on Sunday some hours alone, when he informed me of abundance of anecdotes, much to my satisfaction, and, in short, opened (I really believe) his heart to me with that sincerity, that I found I had still less reason to have a good opinion of him than (if possible) I ever had before. Next morning I breakfasted alone with Mr.

Walpole; when we had all the eclaircissement I ever expected, and I left him far better satisfied than I have been hitherto. When I return, I shall see him again."

This explanation was valuable, as it opened the way to such intercourse as might gradually be ripened into lasting cordiality. This, indeed, could only be the effect of time; for when Mr. Walpole, for the first time after his return, invited Gray to Strawberry-hill, the latter assured him that he would accept his hospitality on the terms of civility alone; never on those of friendship, which was forever cancelled between them. But even this reply did not interrupt Mr. Walpole in the advances he was still induced to make, partly from a natural warmth and friendliness of temper, and partly, no doubt, from the consciousness of his first aggression. Both motives are creditable to him; and it would have been impossible, even for one of a colder and more repulsive disposition than Mr. Gray certainly possessed, to have adhered to the letter of his own stipulation. We find, accordingly, that their correspondence was renewed about two years after, and in the year 1747, Mr. Gray wrote, at Mr. Walpole's request, the Ode on the Death of his favourite Cat. Certainly considerable progress must have been made towards friendly intimacy before the past difference could be alluded to, in such terms as we find Mr.

Gray making use of in one of his letters. "It is," he says, "a tenet with me, (a simple one perhaps you will say,) that if ever two people who love one another come to breaking, it is for want of timely eclaireissement, a full and precise one, without witnesses or mediators, and without reserving any one disagreeable circumstance for the mind to brood upon in silence."

One of Mr. Walpole's subsequent letters expresses a wish that Mr. Gray would collect all that had been written by their deceased friend Mr. West, in order that it might be published, together with his own poems. This, however, Mr. Gray declined, from the fear that their joint productions would not be sufficient for one tolerable-sized volume. He was, however, induced to have his Ode on the Prospect of Eton College, printed separately by Dodsley; and it is remarkable that on its first publication, it seems to have excited very little attention.

About the same time Mr. Gray gives the following account of his occupation, which may afford some notion of his general method of spending his time at Cambridge. "My works," he says, "are not so considerable as you imagine, I have read Pausanias and Athenæus all through, and Æschylus again. I am now in Pindar and Lysias; for I take verse and prose together, like bread and cheese."

He had also begun at this time some tables of chronology, on which he bestowed much time and application, augmenting the fruits of his own research from the labours of Marsham, Bentley, and Dodwell. The plan on which he went, was to range in separate columns, of which there were nine in each page, the Olympiads, the names of the archons at Athens, the public affairs of Greece, and the philosophers, poets, and orators ; thus forming an historical epitome from the 30th to the 113th Olympiad, a period of 332 years.

These engagements were, as he himself expresses it, cruelly interrupted early in the year 1748, by the destruction of his house in Cornhill by fire, a loss which seriously affected his slender income, notwithstanding that the property was insured. It also prevented him from paying a long promised visit to his friend Dr. Wharton, at Durham.

In one respect the event might have a favourable effect, in breaking in upon the settled routine of those pursuits, by which he was so much engrossed ; for in August, in this same year, we find his poetical powers once more in action ; and the result was his fine philosophical fragment on the Alliance of Education and Government. His object, he says, was to show that they must necessarily concur, in order to produce great and good men. And had the design been completed, we may agree with Mr. Mason in his assertion, that it would have been one of the most capital poems in our own or any other language. "I am not able," says that author, "to inform the reader how many essays he meant to write upon the subject; nor do I believe he ever so far settled his plan as to determine that point: but since his theme was as extensive as human nature, (an observation he himself makes in a subsequent letter on the 'Esprit des Loix,') it is plain the whole work would have been considerable in point of size. He was busily employed in it at the time when M. de Montesquieu's book was first published: on reading it, he said the Baron had forestalled some of his best thoughts; and yet the reader will find, from the small fragment he has left, that the two writers differ a little in one very material point, viz. the influence of soil and climate on national manners^f. Some time after he had thoughts of resuming his plan, and of dedicating it, by an introductory Ode, to M. de Montesquieu; but that great man's death, which happened in 1755, made him drop his design finally."

When the fragment was first written, Mr. Gray was anxious that, in its unfinished state, it should be seen only by his most particular friends, and of the number of these were Mr. Wharton and Mr. Stone-hewer. It is probable also that Mr. Mason was himself one to whom the manuscript was early shown, as Mr. Gray had made his acquaintance more than a year previous to this time. The origin of their intimacy was in Mr. Gray's revising, at the request of a friend, the Monody on the Death of Pope, and other juvenile pieces, written in imitation of Milton, and being struck with Mr. Mason's amiable simplicity of manners, as much as by his poetical merits, he used his influence to procure his election to a fellowship at Pembroke Hall. His efforts were indeed met by many obstacles, but after a suspense of some years were ultimately successful.

^f See L'Esprit des Loix, Liv. xiv. ch. 2, &c.

In the year 1749, Mr. Gray heard of the death of his aunt, Mrs. Mary Antrobus, and in the grateful remembrance of much kindness he had received from her, he deeply lamented her loss, but he seems to have felt more keenly the effect such a stroke would have upon his mother; and tenderly did he apply the purest and most soothing topics of consolation. It is impossible to say whether the event itself had any influence in hastening to its conclusion the Elegy in a Country Churchyard; but certain it is, that he sent it in a finished state to Mr. Walpole, and in consequence of that gentleman's high approval, the manuscript was handed about so extensively, that, at last, it fell into the hands of some persons conducting the Magazine of Magazines. By them it was first printed, but so garbled by errors of the press, that Mr. Gray begged it might be given to Dodsley, to publish a correct edition, though without a name. This exquisite poem, which has become inseparably blended with the language of our country, and which will doubtless endure as long, was received on its appearance with a due measure of applause, not alone from those of taste or condition, but from all classes indiscriminately. And this simple truth will form a juster commentary on its beauties, than any dogmas of authoritative criticism. Those who cannot judge can yet feel, and, perhaps, the most flattering tribute an author can receive, is the approbation of those who know not why they admire. If, however, any should inquire more exactly what were its claims to this general favour, it may be said that they are founded in that spirit of tender and contemplative melancholy pervading the whole piece, which harmonizes with feelings implanted in every breast; and thus forms the truest and most universal source of genuine poetry. Another main excellence of the Elegy, is the manner in which scenes of natural beauty, or pictures of rustic life are blended with associations to which they ever give birth, producing an assemblage of delightful images which are presented to the mind of every one familiarly, and, as it were, in the spontaneous current of his own thoughts.

Among numerous persons distinguished in fashionable life, to whom the Elegy was communicated previous to its publication was Lady Cobham, who then resided at the family mansion at Stoke Poges: and whose admiration of the poem made her very desirous to become acquainted with the author. In this she succeeded, through the means of her relatives, Miss Speed and Lady Schaub; and Mr. Gray's own account of his introduction into this amiable family forms the subject of the Long Story, which he wrote in ballad measure, for the amusement of the ladies above mentioned. Like the Elegy, this also was long passed about from hand to hand, although the opinions of the judging world upon it were far more divided than in the former instances. "By some," says Mr. Mason, "it was thought a masterpiece of original humour; by others, a wild and fantastical farrago." That same writer seems to imagine, that this was owing to the mixed character of Mr. Gray's humour, combined, as it was, with wit and fancy. Whether or no this remark be well founded, we are certainly at liberty to question the justness of Mr. Walpole's assertion, (made in a letter to Mr. Cole,) that Gray's fort lay in works of humour. In his few poetical attempts of this class, he seldom appears to trifle easily, and does not always keep clear of silliness or vulgarity.

— It was not until nearly two years after this, that he sent to Dodsley, for publication, the first Odes in the order in which they now stand, together with the Elegy and the Long Story. The latter of these was avowedly published for the sake of some grotesque designs, which Mr. Bentley, the son of the celebrated critic, and the friend of Walpole, had made to illustrate it. But besides these, it was the wish of Mr. Walpole to have prefixed a portrait of the Author to this publication: he, however, exclaimed so violently against it, that the idea was abandoned, although the plate, from an original picture by Echardt, was already half completed. The general success of Mr. Bentley in the drawings for this edition induced Gray to address to him the lines, which have a place among the rest of his posthumous works. The thought which gave birth to them might have been suggested by Pope's Epistle to Jervas; but in the execution there is so much original beauty, that these stanzas would deserve to rank with the Poet's most successful effusions, were there not something like excess in the strain of compliment which they contain.

The pleasure which Mr. Gray must have derived from the general and deserved popularity of the works which he had now presented to the public, was not to be long unalloyed. His mother, whose declining health he had watched with grateful tenderness, was now taken from him, and his feelings on the occasion are best exhibited in the monument he erected to her memory, which he inscribed as to one who needed no panegyric from the son she had so tenderly nurtured, but the brief simplicity of his own genuine sorrow.

The following is the epitaph which marked the united graves of Mrs. Gray and her sister in the churchyard of Stoke Pogeis :

IN THE VAULT BENEATH ARE DEPOSITED, IN HOPE OF A JOYFUL RESURRECTION,
 THE REMAINS OF
MARY ANTROBUS.
 SHE DIED, UNMARRIED, NOV. V. MDCCXLIX.
 AGED LXVI.

IN THE SAME PIOUS CONFIDENCE,
 BESIDE HER FRIEND AND SISTER,
 HERE SLEEP THE REMAINS OF DOROTHY GRAY, WIDOW,
 THE CAREFUL TENDER MOTHER
 OF MANY CHILDREN, ONE OF WHOM ALONE
 HAD THE MISFORTUNE TO SURVIVE HER.
 SHE DIED MARCH XI. MDCCLIII.
 AGED LXVII.

It might almost be supposed, that Gray's imagination was rendered more vigorous by the influence of subsiding grief; for since the period which immediately followed the death of Mr. West, his genius was never so fertile as it showed itself some time after this affliction; so much so, indeed, that Mr. Walpole used to say of him, that he was at this time "in flower." Within the year subsequent to the event last mentioned, he had written the Ode on the Progress of Poesy, had begun the Bard, and, probably, the Fragment on the Pleasure of Vicissitude, not to mention another lyrical idea, which, he says, he now had in his head, but which he never further developed, than to write a short argument in prose, which was found among his papers. The scope of it is, that the true way to encourage genius is to leave it perfectly unfettered.

The finished Ode on the Progress of Poesy, was sent by Mr. Gray to Dr. Wharton and Mr. Stonehewer, who both urged him to publish it singly; but to this he objected, wishing, no doubt, to wait until his other designs should be completed.

In the summer of the year 1755 he went into Hampshire, on a visit to Mr. Chute of the Vine, a common friend of his and Mr. Walpole, in the course of which he explored the beauties of that part of the southern coast; but, on his return, was attacked by what he himself considered to be symptoms of gout, and there can be little doubt that this was the first approach of that disorder, which long preyed upon his spirits and constitution, and at length sent him to his grave, as it had done both his parents, at a time of life by no means advanced^c. For the present it did but form a painful and debilitating check to his favourite pursuits, and the only circumstance which occurred, for some time, worth notice, was his removal from Peter-house to Pembroke Hall. "This," he says himself, "may be looked upon as an era in a life so barren of events as mine; yet I shall treat it in Voltaire's manner, and only tell you, that I left my lodgings, because the rooms were noisy, and the people of the house dirty." The real fact was, that he had long been disturbed by some young men, whose rank and fortune seem to have procured for them unjustifiable license; and, in consequence of perpetual annoyance from the rooms on his staircase, he had provided himself with a rope-ladder, to make his escape in case of need. As, however, these insults were intentional and continued, he thought it necessary to complain to the superiors of the society, and not meeting with such attention as he felt his remonstrance required he summarily quitted the college. To the mention of these facts Mr. Mason adds an observation, "that the slight manner in which Mr. Gray mentions this affair when writing to his most intimate friend, does honour to the placability of his disposition."

^c Mr. Mitford informs us, that Gray kept in his pocket a journal for this year, besides a diary of the weather and a very accurate calendar of observations on natural history, a regular account of his health, in Latin. In the course of this, there occur, in almost every page, expressions like the following: "Insomnia crebra, atque expergiscenti surdus quidam doloris sensus; frequens etiam in regione sterni oppressio, et cordialgia gravis, fere sempiterna."

In this interval the Bard had been neglected, and might have shared the fate of so many of Gray's beginnings, if his attention had not been called to the subject by the performance of Parry, the blind Welsh harper, who appeared in Cambridge at this time.

The imagination of Gray was struck by the manner in which he adapted the most exquisite melody to the wild legends and rugged verse of his native mountains: and this simple circumstance was a sufficient stimulus to him to put the finishing hand to this splendid Ode. He shortly after went to town with the intention of publishing it, together with the former Ode on the Progress of Poesy. Mr. Walpole, however, hearing of his errand, hastened to Dodsley's, and, as he says, snatched them out of his hand, insisting that they should be the first fruits of a press he had just set up at Strawberry-hill. Thus, accordingly, were these productions ushered to the world, exciting the rapture of many, the ridicule of a few, and the wonder of almost all. The Author himself seemed to betray, previously to the publication, a little mistrust of general favour, and by the motto^d he selected for the former of the two Odes, he showed himself prepared for the charge of obscurity. In the case of the Bard, its prophetic character afforded an obvious plea in answer to this charge, and certainly there was truth in the remark, that it was only unintelligible to those who were ignorant of the merest outlines of English history. This, however, would not apply to the Progress of Poesy: and here the words of Pindar formed the seven-fold shield, which the Author presented to all who complained that they could not understand.

It is true, those who brought this allegation were little pleased to be told that, therefore, they were not among the happy few to whom the Author wished to be intelligible; and some, no doubt, felt inclined to object to the principle of this poetic aristocracy, which Warburton, however, seems to sanction in the eulogium he pronounces on the Odes in question. "The world," he said, "never passed so just an opinion upon any thing as upon them; for that in other things they have affected to like or dislike: whereas here they own they do not understand; but yet they understand them as well as Milton or Shakspeare, whom they are obliged, by fashion, to admire." Without, however, proceeding to this length of supercilious exclusion, we may yet remark in defence of Pindar and Gray, that in painting and music we allow of beauties discernible only to the practised eye and ear, and it may be difficult to assign a reason why the same should not be the case in poetry, which appeals to faculties, certainly not less varying in different individuals, and no less under the influence of external circumstances.

^d Φωναντα συνεουσιν. Vocal to the intelligent alone.—See Pind. Ol. II. v. 152.

The title of Pindaric belongs to these two celebrated productions, partly from the form of their versification, framed correctly on the model of the Theban bard, which had been mistaken by Cowley and a crowd of imitators after him; but partly also their just claim to this appellation is founded in the bold sublimity of the imagery, and the subtile rapidity of the transitions. The almost imperceptible manner, in which Pindar passes from one dimly-marked allusion to another, is one great source of his obscurity, but then, to this he was chiefly compelled by the nature of his subjects. These of themselves admitted of little poetical ornament, and hence he was eager to catch the slightest opportunity, which a single word sometimes affords him, to soar away into loftier themes: but this he does with such a stately ease and majesty as, perhaps, no imitator has ever attained. Besides this, the allusions themselves are with him, drawn from some historical tradition, or political prejudice of current interest in his time, or, as is still oftener the case, from some important point of religious belief, and always are they subservient to the deep and solemn tone of morality which he every where assumes. This, it must be owned, is not the case when Mr. Gray introduces to us the Muses and Jupiter, Idalia, Cytheræa, Mars and Hyperion: and this of itself must form an important difference between the general manner and, perhaps, the obscurity of Pindar, and that of Gray.

It may possibly be amusing to the reader to hear from himself some of the opinions formed of the Odes we have been considering, by the fashionable and critical world at that time. "The family you mention near me," he says in a letter to Dr. Wharton, "are full as civil as ever; Miss Speed seems to understand; and to all such as do not, she says—φωναντα συνετοισιν—in so many words. And this is both my motto and comment. I am afraid you mistake Mr. Roper's complaisance for approbation. Dr. Brown (I hear) says, they are the best¹ Odes in our language. Mr. Garrick, the best in our's or any other. I should not write this immodest panegyric, did not you guess at the motive of their applause. Lord Lyttleton and Mr. Shenstone admire, but wish they were a little clearer. Lord Barrington's explanation, I think, I told you before, so will not repeat it. Mr. Fox thinks, if the Bard sung his song but once over, King Edward could not possibly understand him. Indeed I am of his opinion, and am certain, if he had sung it fifty times, it was impossible the king should know a jot the more about Edward III. and Queen Elizabeth, and Spenser and Milton, &c. * * Mr. Wood (Mr. Pitt's Wood) is disappointed in his expectations. Dr. Akenside criticises opening a source^k with a key. The Critical Review you have seen, or may see. He is in raptures, (they say, it is Professor Franklin,) but mistakes the Æolian^l lyre for the harp of Æolus, and on this mistake finds a compliment and a criticism."

¹ From a note communicated to me by my friend Mr. Boswell, I find that on the 29th June, 1757, Gray received forty guineas for his two Odes.

At the close of this year the office of Poet Laureate became vacant by the death of Cibber, and the Duke of Devonshire, at that time Lord Chamber-

^k "Thine too these golden keys, immortal boy,
This can unlock the gates of joy,
Of horror that, and thrilling fears,
Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears."

Progress of Poesy, III. 1. ver. 91.

^l See Critical Review, vol. vii. p. 31.

lain, wishing Mr. Gray to succeed to it, desired his brother, Lord John Cavendish, to make the offer to him through Mr. Mason. Mr. Gray, however, declined accepting it, although it was proposed to him as a sinecure ; and in this refusal he seems to have been influenced by the want of character in those who had held the place since the days of Rowe. This had in his eye degraded the office far more than the imbecility of its recent possessor.

The same letter in which he expressed his feelings on this subject, contains also a complaint of low spirits, and a degree of listlessness which seems to have shut up all the powers of his mind. Nor was the state of his spirits likely to be improved by the duty which he felt devolving upon him, of tending the sickness of his two aunts, Mrs. Oliffe and Mrs. Rogers, now his only remaining relations. The former had but lately suffered an attack of paralysis, and the latter was the subject of a yet severer malady, from which death released her in the autumn of the year 1758.

In July, 1759, the British Museum was opened to the public, and the opportunity of examining the unknown stores of literature, contained in the Harleian and Cottonian collections of manuscripts, induced Mr. Gray to change for a while his place of abode ; and in the month of July he came up to London, and settled himself near the Museum, in Southampton Row. Here he remained for more than two years, and in that time his attention appears to have been occupied too deeply and too pleasantly to be materially disturbed by two parodies which appeared on the Bard and the Ode on the Progress of Poesy. They were the joint productions of two gentlemen, one named Lloyd, and the other Colman, who pointed their ridicule equally against Mr. Gray and Mr. Mason. Neither of these was, however, disposed to be irritable, and Gray in particular was quite ready himself to bestow on the productions themselves such praise as they deserved; so far was his temper removed from that caustic spirit of resentment which some poets have exhibited in vindicating their fame.

About this time the attention of the public was called to those extraordinary Erse fragments, as they were entitled, which Mr. Macpherson professed to have gathered from the traditionary melodies of his Highland countrymen, and to have literally translated. Mr. Gray was, among others, early captivated by their wild and enthusiastic spirit of poetry, and from the first, he judiciously resolved not to allow his doubts on the subject of their authenticity to bias his mind unfavourably as to the merit of the poems themselves. On this point, therefore, he pronounces his opinion distinctly, and with much animation. In one of his letters to Dr. Wharton he thus speaks : “ If you have seen Stonehewer, he has probably told you of my old Scotch (or rather Irish) poetry. I am gone mad about them. They are said to be translations (literal and in prose) from the Erse tongue, done by one Macpherson, a young clergyman in the Highlands. He means to publish a collection he has of these specimens of antiquity ; but what plagues me is, I cannot come at any certainty on that head. I was so struck, so extasié with their infinite beauty, that I writ into Scotland to make a thousand inquiries. The letters I have in return are ill-wrote, ill-reasoned, unsatisfactory, calculated (one would imagine) to deceive one, and yet not cunning enough to do it cleverly. In short, the whole external evidence would make one believe these fragments (for so he calls them, though nothing can be more entire) counterfeit ; but the internal is so strong on the other side, that I am resolved to believe them genuine, spite of the devil and the kirk. It is impossible to convince me, that they were invented by the same man that writes me these letters. On the other hand, it is almost as hard to suppose, if they are original, that he should be able to translate them so admirably. What can one do? since Stonehewer went, I have received another of a very different and inferior kind, (being merely descriptive,) much more modern than the former, (he says,) yet very old too. This too in its way is extremely fine. In short, this man is the very dæmon of poetry, or he has lighted on a treasure hid for ages." In his eagerness to pursue the question of authenticity, Gray directed his inquiries to every source likely to furnish information: and among others, he received a reply from David Hume, which he acknowledges to afford the most satisfactory account of the matter he could obtain; and, indeed, this communication seems to have determined him on the side of those who maintained the antiquity of these extraordinary compositions. If so, Mr. Gray's sentiments on the point must be considered as the more unprejudiced, as they were at variance with those of his most intimate friends, and of Mason in particular, who, in the Memoirs, cannot even allow him to express his opinion without breaking in, to show how widely they differed from his own.

It was likewise during the period of his stay in London, that Gray wrote the Epitaph on Sir William Williams, who was killed at the siege of Belleisle. It was composed at the request of Mr. Montague, and, as it was undertaken as a task, the Author does not appear to have satisfied himself in the execution of it.

Some time subsequently he returned to Cambridge, and in the summer of 1762 visited his friend Dr. Wharton, at Old Park. On his return, though disappointed by bad weather of the sight of Kirkstall Abbey, he yet made a diversion to Chatsworth and Hardwick; and, on his arrival in town, first heard of the death of Dr. Turner, Professor of Modern History to the University of Cambridge. By the earnest suggestion of his friends he was induced to make application, through the friendly medium of Sir Edward Erskine, for the vacant place, which was in the appointment of Lord Bute. That nobleman returned a very civil refusal, though joined with great professions of his desire to serve him on any future occasion; and the Professorship was given to Mr. Bocket, tutor to Sir James Lowther.

In the beginning of the year following Gray received intelligence of an unexpected panegyrist, on a soil to which he knew not that his fame had extended. This was the ingenious and accomplished Count Algarotti, to whom Gray's Poems, as well as those of Mason, had been communicated by Mr. Taylor Howe, an honorary Fellow of Pembroke Hall, at this time travelling in Italy. Not insensible to the value of such an admirer, Gray availed himself of the opportunity, his acquaintance with that gentleman afforded him, to exchange one or two communications with the polite Italian; and when Mr. Howe first had thoughts of publishing the Count's Works in England, Gray warmly encouraged the design. He afterwards, indeed, found reason to alter his opinion on this point, and when the project was again mentioned, after Signor Algarotti's death, he rather dissuaded it, fearing the great inaccuracy which then prevailed in the printing of foreign books, and thinking that the knowledge of the Italian language was not sufficiently extensive in this country to secure for the work an adequate circulation.

During this part of his life Mr. Gray was subject to continued attacks of gout and to other afflicting maladies, for one of which he was obliged, about this time, to submit to a severe operation. He found, however, much relief, both to his bodily infirmities and to his spirits, which were always more or less affected from excursions during the summer, in the course of which his natural love of observation led him to examine closely all that was beautiful or curious in his native country. For the benefit of tourists like himself, he formed a list of objects worthy of notice, (such as gentlemen's seats, antiquities, &c.) in England and Wales, which he drew out on the blank leaves of Kitchen's Atlas. After his death it was printed by Mason, for private circulation among the Author's particular friends.

In the year 1765 he extended his tour to Scotland; and after visiting Edinburgh he proceeded, on the invitation of Lord Strathmore, to Glames Castle. In a place so remarkable for the beauty of its situation, and the recollections with which it is associated, he spent some days much to his satisfaction, and thence diverging into the wildnesses of Scottish scenery, he took the route through Dunkeld to Taymouth, and advancing to the pass of Gilli-krankie, returned by the Blair of Athol. The most important circumstance, however, which arose out of Mr. Gray's visit to this country, was the acquaintance it enabled him to form with the admired author of the Minstrel. During a few days which they spent in one another's society at Glames, an obvious congeniality of taste and sentiment led them to contract a cordial friendship; and shortly after Mr. Beattie (who was Professor of Moral Philosophy and Logic in the Mareschal College at Aberdeen) sent to Mr. Gray, in the name of that Society, the offer of a Doctor's degree. This, indeed, the latter thought it prudent to decline, as he had not proceeded beyond the degree of Bachelor of Civil Law in his own University.

In the following year, 1766, he chose Kent for the scene of his ramble, and in the course of the next visited Derbyshire, whence he was led on as far as Aston, the residence of Mr. Mason, who was then in much affliction from the loss of his wife. On his return thence, he received from Mr. Beattie a flattering request, that he would allow his Works to be printed at Glasgow by the celebrated Foulis.

To this Mr. Gray was ready enough to consent on his own part, but, unfortunately, he had but lately given leave to Dodsley to prepare a new edition, and this, he feared, would interfere materially with Foulis's views of profit. The book, however, made its appearance from the hands of both publishers; but in it the Long Story was omitted, and the reason for this was, that the plates, for the sake of which it had appeared in the first edition, were now worn out. To supply this defect in quantity, Mr. Gray added the Norwegian and Welsh fragments, which he had probably written some time before; and he also furnished some notes, chiefly to the Pindaric Odes: and this he did partly, as he says, to make acknowledgment where he was under obligation, and partly out of spite against the world for not understanding him.

Now it was that our Poet received, unsolicited, the appointment for which he had formerly applied in vain. On the accidental death of Mr. Brocket, the Professorship of Modern History was offered him by the Duke of Grafton, in the handsomest terms of compliment, and at the express command of his Sovereign. The emolument of this office was about four hundred a year, and though a constant residence in the University was required, we may suppose that Mr. Gray would readily acquiesce from obligation in that to which he had so long submitted from choice. "His business as Professor," says his ingenious friend and biographer, "consisted of two parts; one, the teaching of modern languages; the other, the reading of lectures on modern history. The patent which created the office, authorised him to execute the former of these by deputies; the latter, the same patent prescribed to him, to commence by reading a public lecture in the schools, and to continue to do so, once at least in every term. As this patent did not ascertain the language in which the lecture was to be read, he was at liberty to do it either in Latin or English; he chose the former, and, I think, rather injudiciously: because, though no man, in the earlier part of his life, was more ready in Latin composition, he had now lost the habit, and might, therefore, well have excused himself, by the nature of his subject, from any super-added difficulty of language. However, immediately on his appointment, he sketched out an admirable plan for his inauguration speech; in which, after enumerating the preparatory and auxiliary studies requisite, such as Ancient History, Geography, Chronology, &c.^m he descended to the authentic sources of the science, such as public treaties, state-records, private correspondence of ambassadors, &c. He also wrote the exordium of this thesis; not, indeed, in a manner correct enough to be here given by way of fragment; but so spirited, in point of sentiment, as leaves it much to be lamented, that he did not proceed to its completion. At the same time he drew up, and laid before the Duke of Grafton, just then chosen Chancellor of the University, three different schemes for regulating the method of choosing pupils, privately to be instructed by him: one of these was so much approved as to be sent to Oxford, in order to be observed by the new Professor, then appointed in that place.

^m Amongst these auxiliaries, he has set down Memoria Technica; an art in which he had much exercised himself when young. I find many memorial verses among his scattered papers: and I suspect he found good account in the practice; for few men were more ready and more accurate in their dates and events than our Author.

The office above mentioned, to which the Duke of Grafton was elected, had been vacated by the death of the celebrated Duke of Newcastle; and on this occasion Gray was induced so far to overcome his natural cautious and retiring timidity, as to offer spontaneously his service in writing the Ode for Music at the Installation. But, though he undertook this from a sense of duty, and from the desire, that "Gratitude should not sit silent, and leave Expectation to sing," these very feelings seem to have greatly oppressed him in the performance. "He considered it," says Mr. Mathias, "as a sort of task, as a set composition; and a considerable time passed, before he could prevail upon himself, or rather, before he actually felt the power, to begin it. But one morning, after breakfast, Mr. Nicholls called on him, and knocking at his chamber-door, Mr. Gray got up hastily, and threw it open himself, and running up to him, in a hurried tone exclaimed, 'Hence avaunt; 'tis holy ground!' Mr. Nicholls was so astonished, that he thought his senses were deranged; but Mr. Gray in a moment after resumed his usual pleasing manner, and repeating several verses at the beginning of that inimitable composition, said—'Well: I have begun the Ode, and now I shall finish it.' 'It would seem,' adds the learned narrator, 'by this interesting anecdote, that the genius of Gray sometimes resembled the armed apparition in Shakspeare's master-tragedy; 'He would not be commanded.'"

Mr. Gray waited with some impatience till the ceremony of the installation was over, in order to set off on a tour to the lakes of Cumberland and Westmoreland, and, as he expected to be accompanied by Dr. Wharton, he took Old Park in his way. That gentleman, however, was siezed, on the very outset of this interesting journey, by a severe attack of asthma, which obliged him to return. And though Mr. Gray was thus left to prosecute his journey alone, we can hardly be brought to regret a circumstance, to which we owe that animated and picturesque account he has given us in the journal, which he wrote expressly for the amusement of his absent friend. "He that reads," says Dr. Johnson, "his epistolary narration wishes, that to travel, and to tell his travels, had been more of his employment; but it is by studying at home, that we must obtain the ability of travelling with intelligence and improvement."

Notwithstanding the beneficial effects of these excursions, constant sickness, accompanied by a great degree of mental depression, was making, every year, deeper inroads into Mr. Gray's constitution; and now that he possessed the comforts of an easy competence, he could promise himself but a short time to enjoy them. His declining days, however, were not without the soothing influence of social intercourse, and, indeed, few persons have been more happy than Mr. Gray in the possession of friends, eminent for genius and for worth. To have been intimate with such men as Dr. Hurd and Dr. Farmer, was in itself a high distinction. But there were also others, with whom years of uninterrupted intercourse had placed him on terms of closer companionship. Such was his college friend, Dr. Wharton, and the amiable Mr. Stonehewer. But in Mason he found a kindred spirit, a poet, a philosopher, and an accomplished man: nor was this all; the strictest purity of principles and of life were indispensable in those who aspired to the honour of Mr. Gray's esteem. But when these qualifications were united, as in the case of Mason and Beattie, with true genius, they excited in him an admiration, which he was not backward in expressing. In the case of the latter, Mr. Gray's regard was met by an equal return of confidence, as is shown in the readiness with which Dr. Beattie, about this time, submitted the first book of the Minstrel to his judgment, and the candour with which he received his criticisms. Nor did Mr. Gray's benevolent temper allow him to confine his friendship to those of equal years and experience with himself. Many years after he had finally established his residence at Cambridge, he discovered in the high attainments and amiable qualities of Mr. Norton Nicholls, (then but just entering on his University career,) that which claimed and obtained his warmest regard. And a yet more striking instance of ardent attachment, with a greater disparity of years, appears in Mr. Gray's intimacy with a young man named Bonstetten, who was of Swiss extraction, and son to the Baillie of Neon, in the canton of Berne. A combination of rare and noble endowments, which met in him, seem to have revived in the mind of Gray those feelings, which in the spring of life had been withered in fruitless regrets over the grave of his earliest friend. In his correspondence with this young man, at the period to which our narrative has descended, there is exhibited a warmth of regard, that sets the character of the writer in the most amiable light, and an almost paternal tenderness in admonishing his friend of the dangers incident to his youth.

In the summer of the year 1770, Mr. Nicholls was Mr. Gray's companion in a six-weeks' tour through Gloucestershire, Worcestershire and Monmouthshire; and though in following the course of the Wye, and wandering amid the beauties which adorn its banks, he felt awhile the exhilarating influence, such scenes are calculated to impart, yet he only returned to experience the keener assaults of a wasting malady. He speaks in his letters of a cough, and of "mechanical low spirits," which he attempted in vain to amuse by forming projects of future excursions, never, alas! to be realized. This morbid dejection, of which he complains, was now much increased by his anxiety about his Professorship, which he had held nearly three years, without having fulfilled any of the duties annexed to it; and though the feeble state of his health and spirits rendered him perfectly incompetent to the exertion of body and mind, which those duties required, yet he could not reconcile it to his feelings, to receive the profits of an appointment in which he performed no service. Hence, after a painful struggle, he had at length formed the resolution, which he expressed to Mr. Mason, of resigning the office. And this, no doubt, he would have done, had not death delivered him from the trial.

By the solicitations of his friend Bonstetten, he had entertained thoughts of visiting Switzerland, in the succeeding summer: but this idea had been given up some time before his hereditary malady struck its mortal blow. The fatal symptoms of approaching dissolution first appeared in the spring of the year 1771; and their progress and melancholy termination shall be given in the words of Mr. Mason: "The gout had, for several years, attacked him in a weakly and unfixed manner; and the great temperance which he observed, particularly in regard to his drinking, served, perhaps, to prevent any severe paroxysm, but by no means eradicated the constitutional malady. In the latter end of May, 1771, just about the time he wrote the last letter, he removed to London, where he became feverish, and his dejection of spirits increased: the weather being then very sultry, our common friend, Dr. Gisbourneⁿ, advised him, for an opener and freer air, to remove from his lodgings in Jermyn-street to Kensington, where he frequently attended him, and where Mr. Gray so far got the better of his disorder, as to be able to return to Cambridge; meaning from thence to set out very soon for Old Park, in hopes that travelling, from which he usually received so much benefit, would complete his cure: but, on the ⁿ Physician to his Majesty's household.

24th of July, while at dinner in the college-hall, he felt a sudden nausea, which obliged him to rise from table and retire to his chamber. This continued to increase, and nothing staying on his stomach, he sent for his friend Dr. Glynn, who, finding it to be the gout in that part, thought his case dangerous, and called in Dr. Plumtree, the physical Professor: they prescribed to him the usual cordials given in that distemper, but without any good effect; for, on the 29th, he was seized with a strong convulsion fit, which, on the 30th, returned with increased violence, and on the next evening he expired. He was sensible at times, almost to the last, and from the first aware of his extreme danger; but expressed no visible concern at the thoughts of his approaching dissolution."

"Mihi, præter acerbitatem amici erepti, auget mœstitiam, quod adsidere valetudini, fovere deficientem, satiari vultu, complexu, non contigit^o." I was then on the eastern side of Yorkshire, at a distance from the direct post, and, therefore, did not receive the melancholy intelligence soon enough to be able to reach Cambridge, before his corpse had been carried to the place he had, by will, appointed for its interment. To see the last rites duly performed, therefore, fell to the lot of Dr. Brown ; I had only to join him, on his return from the funeral, in executing the other trusts, which his friendship had authorized us jointly to perform."

^o Vita Agricolaë, cap. xlv.

From the foregoing narrative it will be seen that the life of Mr. Gray was spent in the enjoyment of literary leisure, which frugal habits and a contented mind allowed him to indulge, in a state of perfect independence. And though his days were passed in retirement, which, at times, amounted to absolute seclusion, he never banished from his bosom the genuine feelings of social benevolence, nor did it ever enter his thoughts, though he was not without his share of suffering and disappointment, that a poet and recluse was entitled to be a misanthrope.

"The predominant bias of his mind," to use the expression of Mr. Mathias, "was a strong attachment to virtue ; 'to the exercise of right reason,' as he used frequently to call it, in the words of Plato. And if any person were mentioned to him as a man of ability, of genius, or of science, he always inquired, 'Is he good for any thing?'"

His refined taste and familiar acquaintance with the language of Italy, led him to take pre-eminent delight in studying the writers of that country, both in prose and verse. From the poets, indeed, and especially the Tuscan, he may be almost said to have taken the model of his own compositions, although his attachment to these did not cause him to undervalue the poets of his own country ; and he is said never to have sat down to write without " reading some portion of the works of Spenser." Of Dryden he was so great an admirer, that he could not bear to hear him criticised, and at all times he confessed his delight in the terse and polished beauties of Pope.

The extent of Mr. Gray's general knowledge can hardly be described in terms sufficiently comprehensive, since by constant reading, the delight and solace of his days, he added to the most ample stores of classical learning, all that may be included under the title of polite literature : and, with the exception of pure mathematics, and the studies immediately connected with them, he is said to have combined a competent knowledge on every subject, with a consummate mastery of most.

At one period of his life, he had formed the design of editing the works of Strabo, and in this view he entered with a spirit of deep and successful research into the details of ancient geography ; but more particularly into those relating to Persia and India, comparing the statements of the best writers with the results of modern discovery.

Besides this, he spent much time in forming abstracts and making comments on the works of Plato, which, together with his notes on Aristophanes, have been published in the work of Mr. Mathias. And although from these extemporary adversaria, we may discover the care, with which Mr. Gray brought his collateral knowledge to bear on the subject before him, yet it may be necessary to caution the general reader against viewing them in a wrong light. All that are contained in this portion of Mr. Gray's works are only the ordinary exercises of an acute and enlightened scholar, performed singly with a view to his own benefit, both in assisting his memory and collecting his thoughts within a short compass. So that, without entering on the question of the propriety of submitting such performances to the public eye, it may be sufficient to state, that they are not to be looked upon as the standard (though, to the candid student, they will afford considerable evidence) of that vast erudition, which we know Mr. Gray to have possessed. But a work, on which he bestowed the most exact attention, even to the minutia of arranging and transcribing, was the Greek "Anthologia," which he enriched with many additional epigrams, besides emendations, and a great number of explanatory notes. In this occupation, however, Mr. Mason thinks that Gray had no thoughts of making his labours public; and, indeed, the only work which he seems to have commenced, seriously, with this intention, was a history of English poetry. To this undertaking he alludes in his preface to the Norse Imitations, published in the second edition of his Poems; and in prosecuting it, he wished to have combined his efforts with those of his friend Mason. The plan of the work was first suggested to him by a loose and scrawled sheet, which had come under his notice from the hands of Dr. Warburton. It was a list sketched out by Pope, and founded on an original idea of his, that the works of different poets might be classed, according to their several schools, in the same way that those of painters had been. With this object in view, Gray commenced his remarks on the voluminous works of Lydgate, and also a treatise on English rhyme, both which are printed in the edition of Mr. Mathias. He was, however, induced to desist from the attempt, by computing the vast labour it would involve, (which, perhaps, could not have been estimated till the trial was made,) and also by hearing that the task had been undertaken by Mr. Thomas Warton, Fellow of Trinity College, Oxford. And the manner in which Mr. Gray submitted to that gentleman, at his request, the plan he had drawn out for his own work, showed at once his modesty and his candour.

For the last ten years of his life, Mr. Gray devoted his attention particularly to the study of natural history. By the instructions of his uncle Antrobus he was a considerable botanist at the age of fifteen, "and often said," as we learn from Mr. Mason, "that he thought it a singular felicity to have engaged in it; as, besides the constant amusement it gave him in his chamber, it led him more frequently out into the fields; and, by making his life less sedentary, improved the general course of his health and spirits." Of his attainments in the department of zoology, the following character is given by the Reverend Mr. Tyson, of Bene't College, a gentleman fully competent to form a judgment on this subject. "In this class of animals (the Mammalia) he has concentrated what the old writers and the diffuse Buffon have said upon the subject; he has universally adopted the concise language of Linnæus, and has given it an elegance which the Swede had no idea of; but there is little of his own in this class, and it served him only as a common-place, but it is such a common-place as few men but Mr. Gray could form. In the birds and fishes he has most accurately described all that he had an opportunity of examining: but the volume of insects is the most perfect; on those of England there is certainly nothing so complete. In regard to the plants, there is little else than the English names and their native soils, extracted from the Species Plantarum of Linnæus. I suppose no man was so thorough a master of his system; he has selected the distinguishing marks of each animal, &c. with the greatest judgment ; and, what no man else, probably, could have done, he has made the German Latin of Linnæus purely classical."

But his observations were directed, not only to the appearances of nature, but likewise to the monuments of past times ; and on the subject of antiquities he may be considered a complete proficient. He was well versed in the works of Dugdale, Hearne, and Spelman ; and Pennant, in the preface to his Antiquities of London, confesses himself indebted to him for much valuable information. As far as it is subservient to an acquaintance with antiquities, he also made himself master of heraldry ; and his knowledge of architecture may properly be mentioned here ; for, as his attention was chiefly directed to the Gothic, he seems to have studied the peculiarities of that style rather with the feelings of an antiquary than an artist. On this subject Mr. Mason thus speaks : " He had seen, and accurately studied in his youth, while abroad, the Roman proportions on the spot, both in ancient ruins and in the works of Palladio. In his later years he applied himself to consider those stupendous structures of more modern date, that adorn our own country ; which, if they have not the same grace, have undoubtedly equal dignity. He endeavoured to trace this mode of building, from the time it commenced, through its various changes, till it arrived at its perfection, in the reign of Henry the Eighth, and ended in that of Elizabeth. For this purpose he did not so much depend upon written accounts, as that internal evidence which the buildings themselves give of their respective antiquity ; since they constantly furnish to the well-informed eye, arms, ornaments, and other undubitable marks, by which their several ages may be ascertained. By these means he arrived at so very extraordinary a pitch of sagacity, as to be enabled to pronounce, at first sight, on the precise time when every particular part of any of our cathedrals was erected. He invented also several terms of art, the better to explain his meaning on this subject." In the entire range of the fine arts Mr. Gray's knowledge was by no means conformed to an ordinary standard, and in his observations upon them, the enthusiasm of a genuine admirer is easily distinguishable from the fashionable jargon of professed amateurs. In the study of painting, his tour in Italy had afforded him every advantage for an acquaintance with the works of highest merit ; and so well did he avail himself of these, and so exact was his discrimination of the peculiarities of different schools, and of different masters in each, that he once amused himself with framing subjects, in his own mind, suited to the style severally of the artists he most admired ^p. There has likewise been published, since his death, a list of painters, from the

^p As this document will, no doubt, be interesting to the reader, it is here subjoined :

“ An Altar-piece.—Guido.

The top, a heaven; in the middle, at a distance, the Padre Eterno indistinctly seen, and lost, as it were, in glory. On either hand, angels of all degrees in attitudes of adoration and wonder. A little lower, and next the eye, supported on the wings of seraphs, Christ, the principal figure, with an air of calm and serene majesty, his hand extended, as commanding the elements to their several places: near him an angel of superior rank bearing the golden compasses (that Milton describes;) beneath, the chaos, like a dark and turbulent ocean, only illumined by the spirit, who is brooding over it.

A small picture.—Correggio.

Eve newly created, admiring her own shadow in the lake*.

Another.—Domenichino.

Medea in a pensive posture, with revenge and maternal affection striving in her visage; her two children at play, sporting with one another before her. On one side a bust of Jason, to which they bear some resemblance.

A statue.—Michael Angelo.

Agave in the moment she returns to her senses; the head of her son, fallen on the ground from her hand§.

A picture.—Salvator Rosa.

Æneas and the Sybil sacrificing to Pluto by torch-light in

* The famous Venus of this master, now in the possession of Sir William Hamilton, proves how judiciously Mr. Gray fixed upon his pencil for the execution of this charming subject.—

MASON.

§ Vide Ovid. Met. lib. iii. l. 701, &c.—MASON.

revival of the art, drawn up by him ; and in this he is said to have brought to light one, eminent both as the wood, the assistants in a fright. The day beginning to break, so as dimly to show the mouth of the cavern.

Sigismonda with the heart of Guiscardo before her. I have seen a small print on this subject, where the expression is admirable, said to be graven from a picture of Correggio †.

Another.—Albano, or the Parmeggiano.

Iphigenia asleep by the fountain-side, her maids about her ; Cymon gazing and laughing ‡.

Another.—Domenichino, or the Caracci.

Electra with the urn, in which she imagined were her brother's ashes, lamenting over them ; Orestes smothering his concern.

Another.—Correggio.

Ithuriel and Zephon entering the bower of Adam and Eve ; they sleeping. The light to proceed from the angels.

Another.—Nicholas Poussin.

Alcestis dying ; her children weeping, and hanging upon her robe ; the youngest of them, a little boy, crying too, but appearing rather to do so, because the others are afflicted, than from any † Afterwards, when he had seen the original in the possession of the late Sir Luke Schaub, he always expressed the highest admiration of it ; though we see, by his here giving it to Salvator Rosa, he thought the subject too horrid to be treated by Correggio ; and, indeed, I believe, it is agreed that the capital picture in question is not of his hand.—MASON.

‡ This subject has been often treated ; once, indeed, very curiously by Sir Peter Lely, in the way of portrait, when his sacred Majesty, Charles the Second, represented Cymon, and the Duchess of Cleveland and Mrs. Eleanor Gwin, (in as indecent attitudes as his royal taste could prescribe,) were Iphigenia and her attendants.—MASON.

a painter and as a poet, whose name had been long forgotten. Mr. H. Walpole also, in his Anecdotes of Painting, has acknowledged himself to be under much obligation to the judgment and information of his former fellow-traveller.

Of his taste in music Mr. Mason thus speaks: "It was founded on the best models, those great masters in Italy, who flourished about the same time with his favourite Pergolesi. Of his and of Leo's, Bononcini's, Vinci's, and Hasse's works, he made a valuable collection while abroad, chiefly of such of their vocal compositions as he had himself heard and admired; observing in his choice of these the same judicious rule, which he followed in making his collection of prints; which was not so much to get to-

sense of the reason of their sorrow: her right arm should be round this, her left extended towards the rest, as recommending them to her lord's care; he fainting and supported by his attendants.

Salvator Rosa.

Hannibal passing the Alps; the mountaineers rolling down rocks upon his army; elephants tumbling down the precipices.

Another.—Domenichino.

Arria giving Claudius's order to Pætus, and stabbing herself at the same time.

N. Poussin, or Le Sueur.

Virginius murdering his daughter; Appius at a distance, starting up from his tribunal; the people amazed, but few of them seeing the action itself."

gether complete sets of the works of any master, as to select those (the best in their kind) which would recall to his memory the capital pictures, statues, and buildings which he had seen and studied. By this means, as he acquired in painting great facility and accuracy in the knowledge of hands, so in music he gained supreme skill in the more refined powers of expression ; especially when we consider that art, as an adjunct to poetry : for vocal music, and that only, (excepting, perhaps, the lessons of the younger Scarlatti) was what he chiefly regarded. His instrument was the harpsicord ; on which, though he had little execution, yet, when he sung to it, he so modulated the small powers of his voice⁹, as to be able to convey to the intelligent hearer no common degree of satisfaction. This, however, he could seldom be prevailed upon to do, even by his most intimate acquaintance.

After taking this cursory view of that store of knowledge, with which Mr. Gray's comprehensive mind was furnished, a remark or two may be allowed on the general character of his employments ; and if these should at all wear the aspect of censure, they will still be pardoned by such, as do not necessarily connect the duty of a biographer with that of a panegyrist. The ordinary course of Mr. Gray's occupation seems marked universally by eager and insatiate curiosity, and by patient industry. But, however gratifying he might find it to have the free choice of his own pursuits, it may yet be questioned whether the want of a direct profession, to concentrate his thoughts and give an impulse to his studies, was not a serious alloy to his enjoyment. The ground of this surmise is in those frequent expressions of listless dissatisfaction, which occur in his correspondence, and which, uttered as they were from the recess of his seclusion, seem to betray a hankering after some stronger impulse, or ulterior object of pursuit, even than the acquisition of knowledge. Nor is this suspicion less likely to be just, because the subject of it was himself unwilling to acknowledge its truth. In one of his letters to Dr. Wharton he uses the following language: "To find one's self business (I am persuaded) is the great art of life; and I am never so angry, as when I hear my acquaintance wishing they had been bred to some poking profession, or employed in some office of drudgery, as if it were pleasanter to be at the command of other people, than at one's own; as if they could not go unless they were wound up; yet I know and feel what they mean by this complaint: it proves that some spirit, something of genius (more than common) is required to teach a man how to employ himself." Now there are numbers, perfectly ready to acknowledge the pre-eminent strength and capacity of Mr. Gray's mind, and to admire the extraordinary richness of his imagination, who would yet be disposed to doubt, whether he did altogether spend his time, as the truest genius would dictate. The remark made by Gibbon, on the unfinished poem on the union of Education and Government, certainly inclines to this opinion, and by many the sincere regret of that acute writer would be applied to a considerable portion of our poet's studies. The complaint of such is, that a man, possessed of talents, calculated to confer the noblest benefits on mankind, should have so often exercised them on pursuits, with which minds of the most ordinary power might be fully competent to cope, or in making acquisitions, of the highest value in themselves, but from which himself, and the immediate circle of his associates were alone to reap the benefit. With regard, indeed, to himself, there can be no doubt that the pursuits in which he was engaged, in the highest degree tended to the refining and enlightening of his own mind, and thus were eminently conducive to the virtues which adorned his character. But he who possesses extraordinary endowments, possesses extraordinary means of benefitting his fellow-creatures, and the neglect to employ these means is, in a certain view, a kind of dereliction of duty. It appears, that Mr. Gray was himself conscious of a deficiency in this respect, when it was too late; and on his death-bed, he is said to have regretted that he had not done more for literature. One cause, which checked him in extending to the world at large the benefits of his own acquirements, was that weakness to which his best friends acknowledge him to have been subject. This was a dread of being thought an author by profession; and so far, indeed, as that character is connected with a merchandize of knowledge, he certainly in no degree possessed it; for even before his income was augmented, as it was on the death of his near relatives, his wants never appear to have exceeded his means of supplying them, and always left an ample surplus for purposes of well-directed charity.

⁹ He was much admired for his singing in his youth ; yet he was so shy in exercising this talent, that Mr. Walpole tells me, he never could but once prevail on him to give a proof of it ; and then it was with so much pain to himself, that it gave him no manner of pleasure.—MASON.

In regard to poetry, his greatest admirers will be the first to lament that he did not write more; and the immense mental fatigue arising from the habit of finishing, with the utmost exactness, every part of his compositions, as he proceeded, was no doubt the cause that he did not^r. But it also appears, that there were certain periods at which he was totally incompetent to this kind of writing ; at least such was his own notion, and, notwithstanding the animadversions of Dr. Johnson upon it, there is good ground for believing it just. In a letter to Dr. Wharton, he says : “ I by no means pretend to inspiration, but yet I affirm that the faculty in question is by no means voluntary. It is the result (I suppose) of a certain disposition of mind, which does not depend on one’s self, and which I have not felt this long time. You that are a witness how seldom this spirit has moved me in my life, may easily give credit to what I say.” In writing also to Mr. Walpole, he expresses himself thus : “ I will be candid, and avow to you, that till fourscore and ten, whenever the humour takes me, I will write, because I like it ; and because I like myself better when I do so. If I do not write much, it is because I cannot.”

^rThe following circumstance is related by Mr. Mathias, in the valuable postscript to his edition: "When Mr. Nicholls once asked Mr. Gray, why he never finished that incomparable

On the subject of Mr. Gray’s political opinions, fragment on the Alliance between good Government and good Education, in order to produce the Happiness of Mankind, he said, he could not ; and then explained himself in words of this kind, or to this effect : ‘ I have been used to write chiefly lyric poetry, in which, the poems being short, I have accustomed myself to polish every part of them with care ; and as this has become a habit, I can scarcely write in any other manner : the labour of this in a long poem would hardly be tolerable, and, if accomplished, it might possibly be deficient in effect by wanting the chiaro-oscuro.’ ”

Mr. Walpole expresses himself doubtfully, and says, that sometimes he inclined to the side of authority, sometimes to that of the people: and in his religious principles, the leading feature was an inveterate aversion to scepticism, and to those who professed themselves its advocates. "He once," says Mr. Mathias, "made it his particular request to a friend of his, who was going to the continent, that he would not pay a visit to Voltaire; and when his friend replied, 'What can a visit from a person like me to him signify?' he rejoined, with peculiar earnestness, 'Sir, every tribute to such a man signifies.'"

In Mr. Gray's ordinary manners, there seems to have been something a little repulsive to a first approach; and this, perhaps, arose from an air of excessive delicacy and fastidiousness, which imposed constraint on those, who could not discern the genuine benevolence that was disguised under this affectation. There was also in his behaviour a certain degree of reserve, which was by some imputed to disdain for those inferior to himself in knowledge, although, in reality, this feeling was never entertained by him, except towards pretenders to science. "I am sorry," says the excellent Dr. Beattie, in writing to a friend, "you did not see Mr. Gray on his return: you would have been much pleased with him. Setting aside his merit as a poet, which, however, in my opinion, is greater than any of his cotemporaries can boast, in this or any other nation, I found him possessed of the most exact taste, the soundest judgment, and most extensive learning. He is happy in a singular facility of expression. His conversation abounds in original observations, delivered with no appearance of sententious formality, and seeming to arise spontaneously, without study or premeditation. I passed two very agreeable days with him at Glamis, and found him as easy in his manners, and as communicative and frank, as I could have wished." Of his conversation, Mr. Walpole says, that "it was so circumspect, that it seemed unnatural, though it was only pure English." And, perhaps, the following comparison, made by Mr. Cole, his particular friend, may assist the reader to complete his idea of this distinguished master of the British lyre:

"I am apt to think," says the above-named gentleman, "that the characters of Voiture and Mr. Gray were very similar. They were both little men, very nice and exact in their persons and dress, most lively and agreeable in conversation, and both of them full of affectation."

With this portrait we may naturally conclude these remarks, which have been introduced only to fill up the short, but comprehensive sketch, of Mr Gray's character, which was drawn, immediately after his death, by the Rev. William Temple, rector of St. Gluviers, in Cornwall, and with which Mr. Mason concludes his truly valuable Memoirs :

“ Perhaps he was the most learned man in Europe. He was equally acquainted with the elegant and profound parts of science, and that not superficially but thoroughly. He knew every branch of history, both natural and civil ; had read all the original historians of England, France, and Italy ; and was a great antiquarian. Criticism, metaphysics, morals, politics, made a principal part of his plan of study ; voyages and travels of all sorts were his favourite amusement : and he had a fine taste in painting, prints, architecture, and gardening ^s. With such a fund of knowledge, his conversation must have been equally instructing and entertaining ; but he was also a good man, a well-bred man, a man of virtue and humanity. There is no character without some speck, some imperfection ; and I think the greatest defect in his was, an affectation in delicacy, or rather effeminacy ^t, and a visible fastidiousness, or contempt and disdain of his inferiors in science. He also had, in some degree, that weakness which dis-

^s He has disclaimed any skill in this art in the thirty-sixth Letter of the fourth Section, and usually held it in less estimation than, I think, it deserves, declaring himself to be only charmed with the bolder features of unadorned nature.

^t This is rightly put : it was rather an affectation in delicacy gusted Voltaire so much in Mr. Congreve^u: though he seemed to value others, chiefly according to the progress they had made in knowledge^x, yet he could not bear to be considered himself merely as a man of letters; and though without birth, or fortune, or station, his desire was to be looked upon as a private independent gentleman, who read for his and effeminacy than the things themselves; and he chose to put on this appearance chiefly before persons whom he did not wish to please.

^u I have often thought that Mr. Congreve might very well be vindicated on this head. It seldom happens that the vanity of authorship continues to the end of a man's days; it usually soon leaves him, where it found him; and if he has not something better to build his self-approbation upon than that of being a popular writer, he generally finds himself ill at ease, if respected only on that account. Mr. Congreve was much advanced in years when the young French poet paid him this visit; and, though a man of the world, he might now feel that indifference to literary fame which Mr. Gray, who always led a more retired and philosophic life, certainly felt much earlier. Both of them, therefore, might reasonably, at times, express some disgust, if their quiet was intruded upon by persons, who thought they flattered them by such intrusion.

^x It was not on account of their knowledge that he valued mankind. He contemned, indeed, all pretenders to literature, but he did not select his friends from the literary class, merely because they were literate. To be his friend, it was always either necessary that a man should have something better than an improved understanding, or at least that Mr. Gray should believe he had.

amusement. Perhaps it may be said, What signifies so much knowledge, when it produced so little? Is it worth taking so much pains to leave no memorial, but a few poems? But let it be considered, that Mr. Gray was to others, at least innocently employed; to himself, certainly beneficially. His time passed agreeably; he was every day making some new acquisition in science; his mind was enlarged, his heart softened, his virtue strengthened; the world and mankind were shown to him without a mask; and he was taught to consider every thing as trifling, and unworthy of the attention of a wise man, except the pursuit of knowledge, and the practice of virtue, in that state wherein God hath placed us."

THE
LAST WILL AND TESTAMENT
OF
MR. THOMAS GRAY.

EXTRACTED FROM THE REGISTRY OF THE PREROGATIVE
COURT OF CANTERBURY.

IN the Name of God. Amen. I Thomas Gray, of Pembroke Hall, in the University of Cambridge, being of sound mind and in good health of body, yet ignorant how long these blessings may be indulged me, do make this my Last Will and Testament in manner and form following. First, I do desire that my body may be deposited in the vault, made by my late dear mother in the churchyard of Stoke-Pogeis, near Slough, in Buckinghamshire, by her remains, in a coffin of seasoned oak, neither lined, nor covered, and (unless it be very inconvenient) I could wish that one of my executors may see me laid in the grave, and distribute among such honest and industrious poor persons in the said parish as he thinks fit, the sum of ten pounds in charity.—Next, I give to George Williamson, Esq. my second cousin, by the father's side, now of Calcutta, in Bengal, the sum of five hundred pounds reduced Bank annuities, now standing in my name. I give to Anna Lady Goring, also my second cousin by the father's side, of the county of Sussex, five hundred pounds reduced Bank annuities, and a pair of large blue and white old Japan china jars. Item, I give to Mary Antrobus, of Cambridge, spinster, my second cousin, by the mother's side, all that my freehold estate and house, in the parish of St. Michael, Cornhill, London, now let at the yearly rent of sixty-five pounds, and in the occupation of Mr. Nortgeth, perfumer, provided that she pay, out of the said rent, by half-yearly payments, Mrs. Jane Olliffe, my aunt, of Cambridge, widow, the sum of twenty pounds per annum during her natural life; and after the decease of the said Jane Olliffe, I give the said estate to the said Mary Antrobus, to have and to hold to her heirs and assigns for ever. Further; I bequeath to the said Mary Antrobus the sum of six hundred pounds new South-sea annuities, now standing in the joint names of Jane Olliffe and Thomas Gray, but charged with the payment of five pounds per annum to Graves Stokeley of Stoke-Pogeis, in the county of Bucks, which sum of six hundred pounds, after the decease of the said annuitant, does (by the will of Anna Rogers, my late aunt) belong solely and entirely to me, together with all overplus of interest in the mean time accruing. Further, if at the time of my decease there shall be any arrear of salary due to me from his Majesty's Treasury, I give all such arrears to the said Mary Antrobus. Item, I give to Mrs. Dorothy Comyns, of Cambridge, my other second cousin by the mother's side, the sums of six hundred pounds old South-sea annuities, of three hundred pounds four per cent. Bank annuities consolidated, and of two hundred pounds three per cent. Bank annuities consolidated, all now standing in my name. I give to Richard Stonehewer, Esq. one of his Majesty's Commissioners of Excise, the sum of five hundred pounds reduced Bank annuities, and I beg his acceptance of one of my diamond rings. I give to Dr. Thomas Wharton, of Old Park, in the Bishopric of Durham, five hundred pounds reduced Bank annuities, and desire him also to accept of one of my diamond rings. I give to my servant, Stephen Hempstead, the sum of fifty pounds reduced Bank annuities, and, if he continues in my service to the time of my death, I also give him all my wearing-apparel and linen. I give to my two cousins above-mentioned, Mary Antrobus and Dorothy Comyns, all my plate, watches, rings, china-ware, bed-linen and table-linen, and the furniture of my chambers, at Cambridge, not otherwise bequeathed, to be equally and amicably shared between them. I give to the Reverend William Mason, Precentor of York, all my books, manuscripts, coins, music, printed or written, and papers of all kinds, to preserve or destroy at his own discretion. And after my just debts and the expenses of my funeral are discharged, all the residue of my personal estate whatsoever, I do hereby give and bequeath to the said Reverend William Mason, and to the Reverend Mr. James Browne, President of Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, to be equally divided between them, desiring them to apply the sum of two hundred pounds to an use of charity concerning which I have already informed them. And I do hereby constitute and appoint them, the said William Mason and James Browne, to be joint executors of this my Last Will and Testament. And if any relation of mine, or other legatee, shall go about to molest or commence any suit against my said executors in the execution of their office, I do, as far as the law will permit me, hereby revoke and make void all such bequests or legacies as I had given to that person or persons, and give it to be divided between my said executors and residuary legatees, whose integrity and kindness I have so long experienced, and who can best judge of my true intention and meaning. In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and seal this 2d day of July, 1770.

THO. GRAY.

Signed, sealed, published, and declared by the said Thomas Gray, the testator, as and for his Last Will and Testament, in the presence of us, who in his presence and at his request, and in the presence of each other, have signed our names as witnesses hereto.

RICHARD BAKER.
THOMAS WILSON.
JOSEPH TURNER.

Proved at London the 12th of August, 1771, before the Worshipful Andrew Coltre Ducarel, Doctor of Laws and Surrogate, by the oaths of the Reverend William Mason, Clerk, Master of Arts, and the Reverend James Browne, Clerk, Master of Arts, the executors, to whom administration was granted, having been first sworn duly to administer.

JOHN STEVENS.
HENRY STEVENS. } Deputy Registers,
GEO. GOSTLING, Jun. }

POEMS,

ADDRESSED TO, AND IN MEMORY OF,

MR. GRAY.

TO MR. GRAY, UPON HIS ODES.

BY DAVID GARRICK, ESQ.^a

REPINE not, Gray, that our weak dazzled eyes
Thy daring heights and brightness shun ;
How few can trace the eagle to the skies,
Or, like him, gaze upon the sun!

Each gentle reader loves the gentle Muse,
That little dares and little means ;
Who humbly sips her learning from Reviews,
Or flutters in the Magazines.

No longer now from Learning's sacred store
Our minds their health and vigour draw ;
Homer and Pindar are revered no more,
No more the Stagyrice is law.

Though nursed by these, in vain thy Muse appears
To breathe her ardours in our souls ;
In vain to sightless eyes and deadened ears
The lightning gleams, the thunder rolls:

^a From the original MS. in the possession of the late Isaac Reed, Esq.

Yet droop not, Gray, nor quit thy heaven-born art ;
Again thy wondrous powers reveal ;
Wake slumbering Virtue in the Briton's heart,
And rouse us to reflect and feel !

With ancient deeds our long-chilled bosoms fire,
Those deeds that mark Eliza's reign !
Make Britons Greeks again, then strike the lyre,
And Pindar shall not sing in vain.

ODE

ON

THE DEATH OF MR. GRAY.

BY THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE EARL OF CARLISLE.

—◆—

WHAT spirit's that which mounts on high,
Borne on the arms of every tuneful Muse?
His white robes flutter to the gale:
They wing their way to yonder opening sky,
In glorious state through yielding clouds they sail,
And scents of heavenly flowers on earth diffuse.

What avails the Poet's art?
What avails his magic hand?
Can he arrest Death's pointed dart,
Or charm to sleep his murderous band?

Well I know thee, gentle shade!
That tuneful voice, that eagle eye.—
Quick bring me flowers that ne'er shall fade,
The laurel wreath that ne'er shall die;

With every honour deck his funeral bier,
For he to every Grace and every Muse was dear!

The listening Dryad, with attention still,
On tiptoe oft would near the Poet steal,
To hear him sing upon the lonely hill
Of all the wonders of th' expanded vale,

The distant hamlet, and the winding stream,
The steeple shaded by the friendly yew,
Sunk in the wood the sun's departing gleam,
The grey-robed landscape stealing from the view.

Or wrapt in solemn thought^a, and pleasing woe,
O'er each low tomb he breathed his pious strain,
A lesson to the village swain,
And taught the tear of rustic grief to flow!—

But soon with bolder note^b, and wilder flight,
O'er the loud strings his rapid hand would run:
Mars hath lit his torch of war,
Ranks of heroes fill the sight!
Hark! the carnage is begun!
And see the furies, through the fiery air,
O'er Cambria's frightened land the screams of horror bear!

^a This alludes to Mr. Gray's Elegy, written in a Country Churchyard.

^b The Bard, a Pindaric Ode.

Now led by playful Fancy's hand^c
 O'er the white surge he treads with printless feet,
 To magic shores he flies, and fairy land,
 Imagination's blest retreat.

Here roses paint the crimson way,
 No setting sun, eternal May,
 Wild as the Priestess of the Thracian fane,
 When Bacchus leads the maddening train,
 His bosom glowing with celestial fire,
 To harmony he struck the golden lyre;
 To harmony each hill and valley rung!
 The bird of Jove, as when Apollo sung,
 To melting bliss resigned his furious soul,
 With milder rage his eyes began to roll,
 The heaving down his thrilling joys confest,
 Till by a mortal's hand subdued he sunk to rest.

O, guardian angel of our early day,
 Henry^d, thy darling plant must bloom no more!
 By thee attended, pensive would he stray,
 Where Thames soft murmuring laves his winding shore.

Thou badest him raise the moralizing song,
 Through life's new seas the little bark to steer;
 The winds are rude and high, the sailor young;
 Thoughtless, he spies no furious tempest near,

^c The Progress of Poesy, a Pindaric Ode.

^d Ode on a distant Prospect of Eton College.

Till to the Poet's hand the helm you gave,
From hidden rocks an infant crew to save!

Ye fiends who rankle in the human heart^e,
Delight in woe, and triumph in our tears,
Resume again
Your dreadful reign ;

Prepare the iron scourge, prepare the venom'd dart,
Adversity no more with lenient air appears:

The snakes that twine about her head
Again their frothy poison shed ;

For who can now her whirlwind flight control,
Her threatening rage beguile ?

He who could still the tempest of her soul,
And force her livid lips to smile,

To happier seats is fled !

Now seated by his Thracian sire,

At the full feast of mighty Jove,

To heavenly themes attunes his lyre,

And fills with harmony the realms above !

^e Hymn to Adversity.

LINES

TO

THE MEMORY OF MR. GRAY.

EXTRACTED FROM THE THIRD BOOK OF MASON'S "ENGLISH GARDEN."

CLOSED is that curious ear, by death's cold hand,
That marked each error of my careless strain
With kind severity ; to whom my Muse
Still loved to whisper, what she meant to sing
In louder accent ; to whose taste supreme
She first and last appealed, nor wished for praise,
Save when his smile was herald to her fame.
Yes, thou art gone ; yet friendship's faltering tongue
Invokes thee still ; and still, by fancy soothed,
Fain would she hope her Gray attends the call.
Why then, alas ! in this my favourite haunt,
Place I the urn, the bust, the sculptured lyre^a,

^a Mr. Gray died July 31st, 1771. This book was begun a few months after. The three following lines allude to a rustic alcove the Author was then building in his garden, in which he placed a medallion of his friend, and an urn ; a lyre over the

Or fix this votive tablet, fair inscribed
 With numbers worthy thee, for they are thine?
 Why, if thou hearest me still, these symbols sad
 Of fond memorial? Ah! my pensive soul!
 He hears me not, nor ever more shall hear
 The theme his candour, not his taste approved.

Oft, " smiling as in scorn," oft would he cry,
 " Why waste thy numbers on a trivial art,
 That ill can mimic even the humblest charms
 Of all-majestic nature?" at the word
 His eye would glisten, and his accents glow
 With all the poet's frenzy, " Sovereign queen!
 Behold, and tremble, while thou viewest her state
 Throned on the heights of Skiddaw: call thy art
 To build her such a throne; that art will feel
 How vain her best pretensions. Trace her march
 Amid the purple crags of Borrowdale;
 And try like those to pile thy range of rock
 In rude tumultuous chaos. See! she mounts
 Her naiad car, and, down Lodore's dread cliff
 Falls many a fathom, like the headlong Bard
 My fabling fancy plunged in Conway's flood;

entrance with the motto from Pindar, which Mr. Gray had prefixed to his Odes, ΦΩΝΑΝΤΑ ΣΥΝΕΤΟΙΣΙ: and under it, on a tablet, this stanza, taken from the first edition of his Elegy written in a Country Churchyard:

Here scattered oft, the loveliest of the year,
 By hands unseen, are showers of violets found;
 The redbreast loves to build and warble here,
 And little footsteps lightly print the ground.

Yet not like him to sink in endless night :
For, on its boiling bosom, still she guides
Her buoyant shell, and leads the wave along ;
Or spreads it broad, a river, or a lake,
As suits her pleasure ; will thy boldest song
E'er brace the sinews of enervate art
To such dread daring? will it even direct
Her hand to emulate those softer charms
That deck the banks of Dove, or call to birth
The bare romantic crags, and copses green,
That sidelong grace her circuit, whence the rills,
Bright in their crystal purity, descend
To meet their sparkling queen? around each fount
The hawthorns crowd, and knit their blossomed sprays

To keep their sources sacred. Here, even here;
Thy art, each active sinew stretched in vain,
Would perish in its pride. Far rather thou Confess her scanty power, correct, control,
Tell her how far, nor farther, she may go;
And rein with reason's curb fantastic taste."

Yes, I will hear thee, dear lamented shade,
And hold each dictate sacred. What remains Unsung shall so each leading rule select
As if still guided by thy judgment sage ;
While, as still modelled to thy curious ear,
Flow my melodious numbers ; so shall praise,
If aught of praise the verse I weave may claim,
From just posterity reward my song.

FRAGMENT OF AN ODE

ON THE

DEATH OF MR. GRAY.

* * * * *

FAIR are the gardens of the Aonian mount,
And sweet those blooming flowers
Which paint the Maiden's bowers;
And clear the waters of the gurgling fount:
Swift they wind through chequered alleys;
Huddling down to th' open valleys;
Where the quick ripple in the sunbeams plays,
Turning to endless forms each glance of twinkling blaze.

O'er the gay scene th' enamoured inmates roam;
And gather fresh ideas as they rise
From Nature's manifold supplies.
Alas! for whom?
Many a gleam of sprightly thought,
Many a sad and sable mood,
Whether from dazzling lustre brought,
Or nursed by shades of darksome wood,

Keep death-like silence on their native shore,
 Since he, that gave them speech, is heard no more.

Flown is the spirit of Gray,
 Like common breath, to mingle with the air:
 Yet still those Goddesses' peculiar care,
 That breathe harmonious lay.

Retired to yonder grassy mound
 In leaves of dusky hue encompassed round,
 They bid their plaintive accents fill
 The covert hollows of the bosomed hill:
 With liquid voice and magic hand
 Calliope informs the band:
 Hushed are the warblers of the grove, attentive to the sound.

“ Soft and slow

Let the melting measures flow,
 Nor lighter air disturb majestic woe.
 And thou, sage Priestess^a of our holy fire,
 Who sawest the Poet's flame expire,
 Thy precious drops profusely shed
 O'er his well-deserving head.
 Thou nurtur'd'st once a grateful throng,
 When Milton poured the sweets of song
 On Lycidas sunk low^b.

^a Cambridge University, where Gray died.

^b In 1638 the University published a volume of poems to the memory of Mr. Edward King, Milton's Lycidas.

" Now wake that faithful lyre—mute dulness reigns :
 Your echoes waft no more the friendly theme ;
 Clogged with thick vapours from the neighbouring plains,
 Where old Cam hardly moves his sluggard stream.
 But when some public cause
 Claims festive song, or more melodious tear,
 Discordant murmurs grate mine ear.
 Ne'er modelled by Pierian laws,
 Then idly glares full many a motley toy,
 Anacreontic grief, and creeping strains of joy.

" Far other modes were thine,
 Victim of hasty fate,
 Whom now the powers of melody deplore ;
 Whether in lofty state^c
 Thou badest thy train divine
 Of raptures on Pindaric pinions soar ;
 Or hoping from thyself to fly
 To childhood's careless scenes^d,
 Thou sentest a warm refreshing eye
 On Nature's faded greens:

" Or when thy calm and stedfast mind
 With philosophic reach profound
Self-pleasing vanities resigned,

^c See Gray's Pindaric Odes.

^d Ode on a distant Prospect of Eton College.

Fond of the look, that loves the ground^e;
 Discerned by Reason's equal light,
 How gaudy Fortune cheats the sight;
 While the coarse Maid, inured to pain,
 Supports the labouring heart, and Virtue's happiest reign.

“ But most the music of thy plaintive moan^f
 With lengthened note detains the listening ear,
 As lost in thought thou wanderest all alone,
 Where spirits hover round their mansions drear.

“ By Contemplation's eye serenely viewed,
 Each lowly object wears an awful mien:
 'Tis our own blindness veils the latent good:
 The works of Nature need but to be seen.

“ Thou sawest her beaming from the hamlet sires
Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade;
 Where now, still faithful to their wonted fires^g,
 Thy own dear ashes are for ever laid.”

^e Hymn to Adversity.

^f Churchyard Elegy.

^g Gray was buried at Stoke, the scene of the Elegy.

EPITAPH

ON

MR. GRAY'S MONUMENT,

IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

BY MR. MASON.

No more the Grecian Muse unrivalled reigns ;
To Britain let the nations homage pay !
She boasts a Homer's fire in Milton's strains,
A Pindar's rapture in the lyre of Gray.

Gray's Poems.

ODE I.

ON THE SPRING^a.

LO! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours,
Fair Venus' train, appear,

^a The original manuscript title which Mr. Gray gave to this Ode was NOONTIDE; probably he then meant to write two more, descriptive of Morning and Evening. His unfinished Ode* opens with a fine description of the former, and his Elegy with as beautiful a picture of the latter; which perhaps he might, at that time, have meditated upon for the exordium of an Ode; but this is only conjecture. It may, however, be remarked, that these three capital descriptions abound with ideas which affect the ear more than the eye, and therefore go beyond the powers of picturesque imitation.—MASON.

The common reader will probably acquiesce in the judgment Mr. Wakefield passes on the sentiments of this Ode—that they are unaffected, instructive, and sublime. About the language there may be greater difference of opinion. Dr. Johnson, who has truth even in his spleen, says it is too luxuriant.

Ver. 1. Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours.]

———“The rosy-bosom'd Spring
To weeping Fancy pines.”

Thomson's Spring, v. 1007.

“The Graces and the rosy-bosom'd Hours.”

Milton's Comus, v. 986.

It is observable, that the epithet rosy-bosom'd is employed by these Poets, with unusual latitude, to signify, with bosoms full

* On the Pleasure arising from Vicissitude.

Disclose the long-expecting flowers,
And wake the purple year!

of roses; very differently from the ῥοδοδακτυλος Ἡως of Homer, and the rosy-finger'd morn of Milton.—WAKEFIELD.

Hours.] This application of the hours—the Ωραι of the Greeks, is conceived in the genuine spirit of ancient poetry. Nonnus has two verses worth quoting on this occasion.

Θυγατρες λυκαβαντος αελλοποδοιο τοκης

Εις δομον ηθειο ροδωπιδες ηιον Ωραι.

With rosy-blooming face the hours appear,

The daughters of the tempest-footed year.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 2. Fair Venus' train.] Venus is here employed, in conformity to the mythology of the Greeks, as the source of creation and beauty—as the principle that pervades and invigorates universal nature; and with peculiar propriety on this occasion, because a new creation, as it were, takes place with the commencement of the Spring, after the languor and inactivity of Winter.

Καλειται δε ἡ Αφροδιτη παναιτη, δια το κᾶν τῷ ουρανῷ και εν τῇ γῇ και θαλασῇ τῇ δυναμιν αὐτης θεωρεισθαι.

Venus is stiled the universal cause, inasmuch as her energy is visible even in the heavens, the earth, and the sea. Phornut. de Nat. Deor.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 3. Disclose the long-expecting * flowers.]

“ In that soft season, when descending showers

Call forth the greens, and wake the rising flowers.”

Pope's Temple of Fame, b. i. 1.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 4. The purple year.]

———— “ Vere rubenti.”

Virgil. Geo. ii. 319.—WAKEFIELD.

* One or two early editions have long-expected. This was probably an error of the press, since the expression, as it now stands, is new and far more poetical. Besides this, it bears a resemblance to an idea in West's Ode on the Backwardness of Spring, of which Gray expressed his approbation. See Sect. III. Letter VII.

The Attic warbler pours her throat, 5
 Responsive to the cuckoo's note,
 The untaught harmony of Spring:
 While, whisp'ring pleasure as they fly,
 Cool Zephyrs through the clear blue sky
 Their gather'd fragrance fling. 10

Where'er the oak's thick branches stretch
 A broader browner shade,

" Ipsa gemis purpurantem pinget annum floribus."
 Apuleius Pervigilium, ver. 13.

Pope has the same expression :

" And lavish Nature paints the purple year."
 Past. i. 28.

Ver. 5. The Attic warbler pours her throat.]
 ————" Where the attic bird
 Trills her thick-warbled notes the Summer long."
 Par. Reg. iv. 245.

Pours her throat.] This is a very bold and poetical expression, and an admirable improvement of the original form in the Greek and Roman classics.

————— χέει αυδην.
 Hes. Scut. Herc. 396.—WAKEFIELD.

" Is it for thee the linnet pours his throat?"
 Pope's Essay on Man, iii. 33.

Ver. 8. ———Whisp'ring pleasure.]
 ————" Now gentle gales
 Fanning their odoriferous wings, dispense
Native perfumes, and whisper whence they stole Those balmy spoils."——— Par. Lost, iv. 156.

Ver. 12. ———Browner shade.]
 " And breathes a browner horror on the woods."
 Pope's Eloisa to Abelard.

Where'er the rude and moss-grown beech
 O'er-canopies the glade,
 Beside some water's rushy brink 15
 With me the Muse shall sit, and think
 (At ease reclin'd in rustic state)
 How vain the ardour of the crowd,
 How low, how little are the proud,
 How indigent the great! 20

Still is the toiling hand of Care ;
 The panting herds repose :

—————" Highest woods
 Spread their umbrage broad,
 And brown as evening." Par. Lost, ix. 1087.

Mason has adopted the same expression :

" Yon oak with his broad brown arms Chills the pale plain beneath him." Caract. 4.

Ver. 14. O'er-canopies the glade.]

—————" A bank
 O'er-canopied with lucious woodbine."
 Shakspeare's Mids. Night's Dream.

" I sat me down to watch upon a bank
 With ivy canopied, and interwove
 With flaunting honey-suckle.

Milton's Comus, 543.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 19. How low, how little are the proud,
 How indigent the great!

VARIATION.

How low, how indigent the proud,
 How little are the great!

Thus it stood in Dodsley's Miscellany, where it was first published. The author corrected it on account of the point of little and great. It certainly had too much the appearance of a con-

Yet hark, how through the peopled air
 The busy murmur glows !
 The insect youth are on the wing, 25
 Eager to taste the honied Spring, cetto, though it expressed his meaning better than the present reading.—MASON.

Ver. 24. The busy murmur glows.] Mr. Wakefield quotes from Virgil, and from Lucretius, legiones—classem—opus fervere ; and an anonymous critic remarks, that the English language contains few instances of a metaphor formed by applying to objects, which are subject to one sense, terms which exclusively belong to another. It is done in the verse before us ; and the following lines from Sophocles afford good examples of it.

Παιαν δε λαμπει. Œdip. Tyr. 187.

Ελαμψε γαρ του νιφοεντος,

Αρτιως Ψανεισα,

Ραμα Παρνασσου. Ib. 473.

Ver. 25. The insect youth are on the wing.]
 “Luditque favis emissa juvenus.”

Virg. Georg. iv. 22.

There is also much similarity between this verse and one quoted by Wakefield from Thomson's Summer, v. 241.

“Waked by his warmer ray, the reptile young

Come winged abroad.—

Ten thousand forms, ten thousand different tribes

People the blaze.”

Ver. 26. ———The honied Spring.]

“While the bee with honied thigh.” Il Pens. 14.

“That on the green turf suck the honied flowers.”

Lycidas. 140.

“The bait of honied words.” Sams. Agon. 1066.—WAK.

In reference to this place Dr. Johnson complains, “that a late practice has arisen of giving to adjectives derived from substantives, the termination of the participle.” The passages above cited by Mr. Wakefield, if they do not afford sufficient authority for the practice, at least shew that it is not a recent one.

And float amid the liquid noon ;
 Some lightly o'er the current skim,
 Some shew their gaily-gilded trim
 Quick-glancing to the sun.

30

To Contemplation's sober eye
 Such is the race of Man :
 And they that creep, and they that fly,
 Shall end where they began.

"Every language," says the same annotator, "is enriched and improved by the introduction of words of so easy a derivation as the one in dispute. The Latin word mellitus, seems to be exactly similar."

Ver. 27. And float amid the liquid noon.]

"Nare per æstatem liquidam." Virg. Georg. lib. iv.

Ver. 30. Quick-glancing to the sun.]

—————"Sporting with quick glance,

Show to the sun their wav'd coats dropt with gold."

Par. Lost, book vii.

Ver. 31. To Contemplation's sober eye.]

"While insects from the threshold preach," &c.

M. GREEN in the Grotto.

Dodsley's Miscellany, vol. v. p. 161.

This Poem is quoted at length by Gray, in a letter to Mr. Walpole. See Sect. iv. Letter xxv. He there says, "I here send you a bit of a thing for two reasons; first, because it is one of your favourite's, Mr. Green; and next, because I would do justice: the thought on which my second Ode turns, (the present Poem was originally placed first in order,) was manifestly stole from thence. Not that I knew it at the time, but having seen this many years before; to be sure it printed itself on my memory, and, forgetting the author, I took it for my own.

Mr. Wakefield considers our author as indebted in this stanza to a passage in Thompson's Summer, 342 :—

Alike the busy and the gay 35
 But flutter through life's little day,
 In Fortune's varying colours drest :
 Brush'd by the hand of rough Mischance,
 Or chill'd by age, their airy dance
 They leave, in dust to rest. 40

Methinks I hear, in accents low,
 The sportive kind reply :
 Poor moralist ! and what art thou ?
 A solitary fly !
 Thy joys no glitt'ring female meets, 45
 No hive hast thou of hoarded sweets,
 No painted plumage to display :
 On hasty wings thy youth is flown,
 Thy sun is set, thy spring is gone—
 We frolic while 'tis May. 50

“Thick in yon stream of light, a thousand ways,
 Upward and downward, thwarting and convolv'd,
 The quivering nations sport ; 'till, tempest-wing'd,
 Fierce Winter sweeps them from the face of day.
 E'en so luxurious men, unheeding, pass
 An idle Summer-life in Fortune's shine,
 A season's glitter ! thus they flutter on
 From toy to toy, from vanity to vice !
 Till blown away by Death, Oblivion comes Behind, and strikes them from the book of life.”

Ver. 49. Thy sun is set.]

—— πανθ' ἄλιον αμμι δεδνκειν. Theoc. Id. i.

ODE II.

ON THE DEATH OF A FAVOURITE CAT,

Drowned in a Tub of Gold Fishes^a.

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
 Where China's gayest art had dy'd
 The azure flowers that blow ;
 Demurest of the tabby kind,
 The pensive Selima, reclin'd, 5
 Gaz'd on the lake below.

^a This little piece was written some years later than the third and fourth Odes; and Mr. Mason informs us, that, after the death of Mr. Gray, Mr. Walpole placed the vase in question on a pedestal at Strawberry-hill, with the first four lines of this Ode for its inscription :

'Twas on this vase's lofty side, &c.

Ver. 3. "The azure flowers that blow," shew resolutely a rhyme is sometimes made when it cannot be found.—JOHNSON.

Mr. Wakefield himself is constrained to admit that there is here an inexcusable redundancy. Mr. Mitford pleads authority, but unfortunately leaves his reader to decide whether the example of antiquity can sanction a fault. It must, however, be observed, that the line cited from the fifth Ode, is not a similar instance, as the word blow is there subservient to the preposition which precedes.

"The laughing flowers, that round them blow,"

Ver. 6. Gaz'd on the lake below.] It is a proof of no ordinary skill thus to confer dignity on so trivial a subject; and the same dexterity is conspicuous throughout the Ode. A happy exertion of this talent has eminently distinguished Virgil, Boileau, and Pope.—WAKEFIELD.

Her conscious tail her joy declar'd ;
 The fair round face, the snowy beard,
 The velvet of her paws,
 Her coat, that with the tortoise vies, 10
 Her ears of jet, and emerald eyes,
 She saw ; and purr'd applause.

Still had she gaz'd ; but 'midst the tide
 Two angel forms were seen to glide,
 The Genii of the stream : 15
 Their scaly armour's Tyrian hue
 Through richest purple to the view
 Betray'd a golden gleam.

The hapless Nymph with wonder saw :
 A whisker first, and then a claw, 20

Ver. 14. Two angel forms.]

VARIATION.

Two beauteous forms.—Dodsley's Misc. First edit.

Ver. 16. Their scaly armour's Tyrian hue
 Through richest purple to the view
 Betray'd a golden gleam.]

“ The field, all iron, cast a gleaming brown.”

Par. Reg. iii. 326.

“ *Aureus ipse ; sed in foliis, quæ plurima circum
 Funduntur, viola subluceat purpura nigræ.*”

Virg. Georg. iv. 274.

Ver. 19. The hapless Nymph.] Impartiality obliges us to acknowledge, that this and the concluding stanza are very much inferior to the rest of the Ode, and altogether unworthy of the elegance and taste of Mr. Gray.—WAKEFIELD.

With many an ardent wish,
 She stretch'd, in vain, to reach the prize :
 What female heart can gold despise ?
 What Cat's averse to fish ?

Presumptuous Maid ! with looks intent 25
 Again she stretch'd, again she bent,
 Nor knew the gulf between.
 (Malignant Fate sat by, and smil'd)
 The slipp'ry verge her feet beguil'd,
 She tumbled headlong in. 30

Eight times emerging from the flood
 She mew'd to ev'ry wat'ry God,
 Some speedy aid to send.
 No Dolphin came, no Nereid stirr'd ;

Ver. 25. Presumptuous Maid.] This stanza will almost compensate the mediocrity of the preceding.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 31. Eight times, &c.] A humorous allusion to the vulgar notion of a cat's vivacity. Mr. Bourne, whose elegiac poetry is the sweetest of any in the Latin language, has a pretty epigram upon this subject.

DEFENDIT NUMERUS.

“ Blandior indulisit, felis, tibi parca ; novena
 Nam tibi net Lachesis fila novena colo.
 Hinc, si missa voles celsi de culmine tecti,
 Decidis in tutos præcipitata pedes.
 Nec miseram, licet infestent lanique canesque,
 Te lanii exanimant, exanimantve canes.
 Si moriari semel, si bis, si terve, quaterve,
 Plusquam dimidia parte superstes eris.”—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 34. No Dolphin came.] Alluding to the story of Arion,

Nor cruel Tom, nor Susan heard. 35
 A fav'rite has no friend!

From hence, ye beauties, undeceiv'd,
 Know, one false step is ne'er retriev'd,
 And be with caution bold.
 Not all that tempts your wand'ring eyes 40
 And heedless hearts, is lawful prize,
 Nor all that glisters gold.

related by Herodotus; who was compelled by the mariners to throw himself into the sea, and was conveyed on the back of a dolphin safe to land.—Clio, 24.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 42. Nor all that glisters gold.] Mr. Mitford displays his usual research in pointing out by a variety of quotations, the ancient use of this familiar proverb. One of his instances is from Chaucer's Charone Yemanne's Tale, ver. 164. 30.

“ But all thing which shineth as the gold
 Ne is no gold, as I have herd it told.”

Another is from Spenser's Faerie Queene, ii. 8. 14.

“ Yet gold all is not that doth golden seem.”

It is to be regretted that this concluding verse of the Ode, pointed as it is, should be irrelevant to the general subject. Dr. Johnson says, in his usual manner, “ if what glistered had been gold, the cat would not have gone into the water; and, if she had, would not less have been drowned.”

ODE III^a.ON A DISTANT PROSPECT OF ETON COLLEGE^b.

Ἀνθρῶπος, ἰκανὴ προφασίς εἰς τὸ δυστυχεῖν.

MENANDER.

YE distant spires, ye antique towers,
That crown the wat'ry glade,

^a This was the first English production of Mr. Gray which appeared in print. It was published in folio, by Dodsley, in 1747; about the same time, at Mr. Walpole's request, Mr. Gray sat for his picture to Echart, in which, on a paper which he held in his hand, Mr. Walpole wrote the title of this Ode; and to intimate his own high and just opinion of it, as a first production, added this line of Lucan, by way of motto:

Nec licuit populis parvum te, Nile, videre.

Phars. lib. x. l. 296.—MASON.

^b "The prospect of Eton College," says Dr. Johnson, "suggests nothing to Gray, which every beholder does not equally think and feel."

By this confession, then, the sentiments are natural, and consonant to the feelings of humanity: and surely this property is no discredit to any composition, but, on the contrary, the greatest recommendation of it.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 1. Ye distant spires.] These spires and towers are addressed by the poet without any use or intention; for nothing is afterwards asserted of them, and they are introduced only to be dismissed in silence, and without further notice. The Towers of London, in the second epode of the Bard, are not apostrophized with so little meaning.

Where grateful Science still adores
 Her Henry's^c holy shade ;
 And ye, that from the stately brow 5
 Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below
 Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
 Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers among Wanders the hoary Thames along
 His silver-winding way. 10

^c King Henry the Sixth, Founder of the College.

Ver. 4. Her Henry's holy shade.] So in the Bard, ii. 3.

“ And spare the meek usurper's holy head.”

Shakspeare, in Richard the Third, twice applies the same epithet; and in the Installation Ode our author's expression, murdered saint, is applicable enough (notwithstanding Henry was never actually canonized) to the monarch who, as has been well said, would have adorned a cloister, though he disgraced a crown.

Ver. 5. ————The stately brow
 Of Windsor's heights.]

—————“ And now to where Majestic Windsor lifts his princely brow.”

Thomson's Summer, 1411.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 8. Whose turf, whose shade, whose flowers.] That is, the turf of whose lawn, the shade of whose grove, the flowers of whose mead. So in Shakspeare. “ The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's eye, tongue, sword;” that is, “ The courtier's eye, the soldier's sword, the scholar's tongue.” This singularity often occurs in Mr. Pope.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 10. His silver-winding way.] Mr. Wakefield has a complaint against this compound epithet. The silver-shedding tears of Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver. Act iii. sc. 1. and the silver-quivering rills of Pope, might perhaps have reconciled him to it, if he had recollected them. Both these expressions, as well as one from Dart's Westminster Abbey, are cited in this place by Mr. Mitford.

“ Where Thames in silver-currents winds his way,”

Ah, happy hills ! ah, pleasing shade !
 Ah, fields belov'd in vain !
 Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
 A stranger yet to pain !
 I feel the gales that from ye blow 15
 A momentary bliss bestow,
 As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
 My weary soul they seem to sooth,
 And, redolent of joy and youth,
 To breathe a second spring. 20

Say, Father Thames, for thou hast seen
 Full many a sprightly race,

Ver. 11. Ah, happy hills ! ah, pleasing shade !] Mr. Wakefield here quotes from the Odyssey, O. 397. And it may be remarked, that the ancients were by no means unacquainted with that species of pathos, which is derived from the melancholy delight of early remembrance. The feeling which induces us to dress up the past in a fancied superiority of enjoyment, is natural and universal ; nor can the indulgence of it be pernicious, so long as it does not interfere with the necessary energies of the present hour.

Ver. 19. And, redolent of joy and youth.]

“ And bees their honey redolent of spring,”

Dryden's Pythag. System.—GRAY.

As Gray refers this expression to Dryden, it is probable that he was not acquainted with any earlier authority. Dr. Johnson is highly offended at it, as passing beyond the utmost limits of our language, and of common apprehension. The critic, perhaps, never in his life partook of the feelings here described, or possibly he would not have objected to the expression.

Ver. 21. Say, Father Thames, &c.]

“ Say, Father Thames, whose gentle pace

Gives leave to view, what beauties grace

Your flowery banks, if you have seen.”—Green's Grotto.

Disporting on thy margent green,
 The paths of pleasure trace ;
 Who foremost now delight to cleave, 25
 With pliant arm, thy glassy wave ?
 The captive linnet which enthrall ?
 What idle progeny succeed
 To chase the rolling circle's speed,
 Or urge the flying ball ? 30

While some on earnest business bent
 Their murm'ring labours ply
 'Gainst graver hours that bring constraint
 To sweeten liberty :
 Some bold adventurers disdain 35
 The limits of their little reign,

The ill-natured criticism of Dr. Johnson on this line cannot be refuted better than it has been by Mr. Mitford. "His supplication to Father Thames, to tell him who drives the hoop, or tosses the ball, is useless and puerile. Father Thames had no better means of knowing than himself."—Are we by this rule of criticism to judge the following passage in the twentieth chapter of Rasselas? "As they were sitting together, the princess cast her eyes on the river that flowed before her: answer, said she, great Father of Waters, thou that rollest thy floods through eighty nations, to the invocation of the daughter of thy native king. Tell me, if thou waterest, through all thy course, a single habitation, from which thou dost not hear the murmurs of complaint."

Ver. 23. Disporting on thy margent green.]

"By slow Meander's margent green
 And in the violet-embroider'd vale."

Milt. Com. 232.

And unknown regions dare descry :
 Still as they run they look behind,
 They hear a voice in every wind,
 And snatch a fearful joy. 40

Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed,
 Less pleasing when possest ;
 The tear forgot as soon as shed,
 The sunshine of the breast :
 Theirs buxom health, of rosy hue, 45
 Wild wit, invention ever new,
 And lively cheer, of vigour born ;
 The thoughtless day, the easy night,

Ver. 38. Still as they run they look behind.]

“ Nunc omnes terrent auræ, sonus excitat omnis

Suspensum, et pariter comitique onerique timentem.”

Virg. Æn. ii. 725.

—————“ Non sine vano Aurarum et silvæ metu.” HOF.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 41. Gay hope is theirs by fancy fed.] This is at once poetical and just: and yet there seems to be an impropriety in the next verse—

Less pleasing when possest :

for though the object of hope may truly be said to be less pleasing in possession than in the fancy; yet Hope in person cannot possibly be possessed.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 44. The sunshine of the breast.]

“ Eternal sunshine of the spotless mind.”

Pope's Eloisa to Abelard.

Ver. 45. Theirs buxom health, &c.] “ His epithet, buxom health, is not elegant: he seems not to understand the word.”—JOHNSON.

The meanings of the word, given by Dr. Johnson, are gay, lively, brisk, from Crashaw; and wanton, jolly, from Dryden.

The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
That fly the approach of morn. 50

Alas ! regardless of their doom,
The little victims play ;
No sense have they of ills to come,
Nor care beyond to-day :
Yet see how all around them wait 55
The ministers of human fate,
And black Misfortune's baleful train !
Ah, show them where in ambush stand,
To seize their prey, the murtherous band !
Ah, tell them they are men ! 60

These shall the fury Passions tear,
The vultures of the mind,

Ver. 49. The spirits pure, the slumbers light.] Mr. Mitford quotes from Pope's imitation of Horace, i. 73.

" The temperate sleeps, and spirits light as air.

Ver. 55. Yet see how all around them wait.] This representation of the ministers of Fate, and the two succeeding stanzas, which exhibit the variety of human passions, with their several attributes, blends moral instruction with all the animation and sublimity of poetry.—WAKEFIELD.

Mr. Mitford discovers the origin of these two lines in Broome's Ode on Melancholy, p. 28.

" While round, stern ministers of Fate, Pain, and disease, and sorrow wait."

Ver. 61. Fury Passions.] I do not know that any poet, ancient or modern, has given so complete a picture of the passions in so short a compass.—WAKEFIELD.

The fury Passions is from Pope's Essay on Man, iii. 167.

Disdainful Anger, pallid Fear,
 And Shame that sculks behind ;
 Or pining Love shall waste their youth, 65
 Or Jealousy, with rankling tooth,
 That inly gnaws the secret heart ;
 And Envy wan, and faded Care,
 Grim-visag'd comfortless Despair,
 And Sorrow's piercing dart. 70

Ambition this shall tempt to rise,
 Then whirl the wretch from high
 To bitter Scorn a sacrifice,
 And grinning Infamy.
 The stings of Falsehood those shall try, 75
 And hard Unkindness' alter'd eye,

Ver. 66. Or Jealousy, with rankling tooth.] Mr. Mitford traces the resemblance of this line to one in Spenser's Faerie Queene, vi. 23.

“ But gnawing Jealousy, out of their sight, Sitting alone, his bitter lips did bite.”

Ver. 68. Envy wan.]

“ With praise enough for Envy to look wan.”

Milton's Sonnets.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 69. Grim-visag'd comfortless Despair.] Grim-visaged is from Shakspeare, Rich. III. act i. sc. 1; and the following passage from the Comedy of Errors, act v. sc. 1. is here quoted by Mr. Mitford:

“ But moody and dull Melancholy,
Kinsman to grim and comfortless Despair.”

Ver. 76. And hard Unkindness' alter'd eye.] The elision here is ungraceful, and hurts this otherwise beautiful line: one of the same kind in the second line of the first Ode makes the same blemish; but I think they are the only two to be found in

That mocks the tear it forc'd to flow ;
 And keen Remorse with blood defiled,
 And moody Madness laughing wild
 Amid severest woe.

80

Lo! in the vale of years beneath
 A griesly troop are seen, this correct writer ; and I mention them here, that succeeding poets may not look upon them as authorities. The judicious reader will not suppose that I would condemn all elisions of the genitive case, by this stricture on those which are terminated by rough consonants. Many there are which our ear readily admits, and which use has made familiar to it.—MASON.

Ver. 79. And moody Madness laughing wild.]

“ Madness laughing in her ireful mood.”

Dryden's Palamon and Arcite.—GRAY.

Ver. 81. Lo! in the vale of years beneath.] A most happy idea! and the whole stanza is exquisitely beautiful, and will not be disgraced by appearing in the same view with a passage in Paradise Lost, where description is carried to its highest pitch of excellence.

—————“ Immediately a place
 Before his eyes appear'd, sad, noisome, dark ;
 A lazarus-house it seem'd ; wherein were laid
 Numbers of all diseas'd ; all maladies
 Of ghastly spasm, or racking torture, qualms
 Of heart-sick agony, all feverous kinds,
 Convulsions, epilepsies, fierce catarrhs,
 Intestine stone and ulcer, colick pangs,
 Demoniack phrenzy, moaping melancholy,
 And moon-struck madness, pining atrophy,
 Marasmus, and wide-wasting pestilence,
 Dropsies, and asthmas, and joint-racking rheums.
 Dire was the tossing, deep the groans : Despair
 Tended the sick, busied from couch to couch ;
 And over them triumphant Death his dart Shook.”

Book xi. ver. 477.—WAKEFIELD.

b.

The painful family of Death,
 More hideous than their queen :
 This racks the joints, this fires the veins, . 85
 That every labouring sinew strains,
 Those in the deeper vitals rage :
 Lo ! Poverty, to fill the band,
 That numbs the soul with icy hand,
 And slow-consuming Age. 90

To each his sufferings : all are men,
 Condemn'd alike to groan ;
 The tender for another's pain,
 Th' unfeeling for his own.
 Yet, ah ! why should they know their fate, 95
 Since sorrow never comes too late,

· Ver. 83. The painful family.] Mr. Mitford cites Pope's Essay on Man, ii. 118.

“ Hate, Fear, and Grief, the family of Pain.”

The expression is also imitated by Porteus, in his Poem on Death :

—————“ Let loose sin,
 And Death, and all the family of Pain.”

Ver. 95. Yet, ah ! why should they know their fate,
 Since sorrow never comes too late.]

We meet with the same thought in Milton's Comus :

“ Peace, brother, be not over exquisite
 To cast the fashion of uncertain evils.
 For grant they be so, while they rest unknown,
 What need a man forestall his date of grief,
 And run to meet what he would most avoid ?”

Terence was their author :

“ Nam nos omnes, quibus alicunde aliquis objectus est
 labos,

Omne quod est interea tempus, prius quam id rescitum est, lucro est.” Hee. iii. i. 6.—WAKEFIELD.

And happiness too swiftly flies?
 Thought would destroy their paradise.
 No more;—where ignorance is bliss,
 'Tis folly to be wise.

100

Ver. 97. And happiness too swiftly flies.]

“ Optima quæque dies miseris mortalibus ævi
 Prima fugit: subeunt morbi, tristisque senectus:
 Et labor, et duræ rapit inclementia mortis.”

Virg. Georg. iii. 66.—WAREFIELD.

Ver. 98. Thought would destroy, &c.]

Καιτοι σε και νυν τουτο γε ζηλουν εχω,
 Οθ' ουνεκ' ουδεν τωνδ' επαισθανει κακων.
 Εν τφ φρονειν γαρ μηδεν ηδιστος βιος.

Soph. Ajax, 552.—WAREFIELD.

IV.

HYMN TO ADVERSITY ^a.

Ζηνα—

* * * * *

Τον φρονειν Βροτους ὀδωσαντα, τον παθη μαθος
Θεντα κυριως εχειν.

Æschylus, in Agamemnon, ver. 181.

DAUGHTER of Jove, relentless Power,
Thou tamer of the human breast,

^a This was the original title given to this Poem by the author, and was only altered by Mr. Mason, as he says, for the sake of uniformity in the page. The piece itself was first published, together with the Elegy in a Country Church-yard, in Dodsley's Collection.

Of this piece, at once poetical and rational, I will not by slight objections violate the dignity.—JOHNSON.

Ver. 1. Daughter of Jove, relentless Power.] Although the present motto was not at first affixed to this Hymn, yet it may reasonably be supposed that the author, in this line, had his thoughts upon the passage from Æschylus, rather than on the Πρεσβα Διος θυγατηρ Ατη of Homer, which is also quoted by Mr. Mitford, But the allusion to ancient mythology at all, in a Poem of a moral and pathetic character, has surely a chilling and unnatural effect. Verse 35 seems liable to the same objection.

Ver. 2. Thou tamer of the human breast.]

“Then he. Great tamer of all human art.”

Dunciad, i. 143.

Whose iron scourge and tort'ring hour
 The bad affright, afflict the best !
 Bound in thy adamantine chain, 5
 The proud are taught to taste of pain,
 And purple tyrants vainly groan
 With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.

When first thy sire to send on earth
 Virtue, his darling child, designed, 10
 To thee he gave the heavenly birth,
 And bade to form her infant mind.
 Stern rugged Nurse ! thy rigid lore
 With patience many a year she bore :

Ver. 3. Whose iron scourge and tort'ring hour.] There seems to be some little impropriety and incongruity in this. Consistency of figure rather required some material image, like iron scourge and adamantine chain.—WAKEFIELD.

If there be any impropriety, says Mr. Mitford, in this, it must rest with Milton, from whom Gray borrowed the verse :

—————" When the scourge
 Inexorably, and the torturing hour,
 Calls us to penance." Par. Lost, ii. 90.

Ver. 5. Bound in thy adamantine chain.]

" Αδαμαντινων δεσμων εν αρρηκτοις πεδαις."

Æschyl. Prom. Vinc. —WAKEFIELD.

" In adamantine chains, and penal fire."

Milton, Par. Lost, i. 48.

" In adamantine chains shall death be bound."

Pope, Mess. ver. 47.

Ver. 7. And purple tyrants vainly groan.]

" Purpurei metuunt tyranni." HOR.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 9. When first thy sire to send on earth.] This stanza is a convincing proof, that Mr. Gray could unite with strength and grandeur, ease, simplicity, and nature.—WAKEFIELD.

What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know, 15
And from her own she learn'd to melt at others' woe.

Scar'd at thy frown terrific, fly
Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
Wild Laughter, Noise, and thoughtless Joy,
And leave us leisure to be good. 20
Light they disperse, and with them go
The summer friend, the flattering foe ;
By vain Prosperity received,
To her they vow their truth, and are again believed.

Wisdom in sable garb arrayed, 25
Immers'd in rapt'rous thought profound,

Ver. 16. And from her own she learn'd to melt at others' woe.]

———“ Whose breasts ne'er learned to glow
For others' good, or melt at others' woe.”

Pope's Elegy on an unfortunate Lady, 45.

Ver. 18. Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,]

“ Hence vain deluding joys,
The brood of Folly.”

Milton, Il Pens. 1.

Ver. 25. Wisdom in sable garb arrayed.]

“ O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue.”

Milton, Il Pens. 16.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 26. Immers'd in rapt'rous thought profound,

And Melancholy, silent maid,

With leaden eye that loves the ground.]

“ With even step and musing gait,
And looks commercing with the skies,

Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes :

There held in holy passion still,

Forget thyself to marble, till

With a sad leaden downward cast

Thou fix them on the earth as fast.”—Il Pens. 38.—WAK.

And Melancholy, silent maid,
 With leaden eye that loves the ground,
 Still on thy solemn steps attend :
 Warm Charity, the general friend, 30
 With Justice, to herself severe,
 And Pity, dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh ! gently on thy suppliant's head,
 Dread Goddess, lay thy chastening hand !
 Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad, 35
 Not circled with the vengeful band
 (As by the impious thou art seen)
 With thundering voice, and threatening mien,
 With screaming Horror's funeral cry,
 Despair, and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty : 40

Thy form benign, oh Goddess, wear,
 Thy milder influence impart,
 Thy philosophic train be there
 To soften, not to wound my heart.
 The generous spark extinct revive, 45
 Teach me to love, and to forgive,

Ver. 41. Thy form benign, oh Goddess, wear.] This last stanza breathes a most amiable spirit of benevolence, and dictates a lesson of pure and sublime morality, delivered in the utmost propriety and simplicity of language. It leaves the mind completely satisfied, and finishes with inimitable strength and fulness :—

What others are to feel, and know myself a Man.

WAKEFIELD.

Exact my own defects to scan,
What others are to feel, and know myself a Man.

Ver. 47. Exact my own defects to scan.] The many hard consonants which occur in this line hurt the ear; Mr. Gray perceived it himself, but did not alter it, as the words themselves were those which best conveyed his idea, and therefore he did not choose to sacrifice sense to sound.—MASON.

In an Ode to Disappointment, by the late lamented H. Kirk White, there are several passages obviously taken from the Poem before us.

ODE V.

THE PROGRESS OF POESY ;

A PINDARIC ODE^a.

ΦΩΝΑΝΤΑ ΣΥΝΕΤΟΙΣΙΝ' ΕΣ
 ΔΕ ΤΟ ΠΑΝ, ἑρμηνεῶν
 Χατίζει. Pind. Olymp. ii. v. 152.

I. 1.

AWAKE, Æolian lyre, awake,
 And give to rapture all thy trembling strings.

^a When the author first published this and the following Ode, he was advised, even by his friends, to subjoin some few explanatory notes ; but had too much respect for the understanding of his readers to take that liberty.—GRAY.

Mr. Gray found himself obliged to alter this determination, as some, who pretended to criticise, had begun by blundering in the first line, and mistook the Æolian lyre for the harp of Æolus. See Critical Review, vol. iv. p. 167. This error called for the note which follows below.

Ver. 1. Awake, Æolian lyre, awake.]

IMITATION.

“ Awake, my glory: awake, lute and harp.”

David's Ps.—GRAY.

In his manuscript it originally stood,

Awake, my lyre: my glory, wake.

And it would have been lucky for the above-mentioned critics, if it had been thus printed.—MASON.

From Helicon's harmonious springs

A thousand rills their mazy progress take :

The laughing flowers that round them blow, 5

Drink life and fragrance as they flow.

Now the rich stream of music winds along,

Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong,

Pindar styles his own poetry, with its musical accompaniments, Αιολικὴ μολπή, Αιολιδεὶς χορδαί, Αιολιδῶν πνοαὶ αὐλῶν, Æolian song, Æolian strings, the breath of the Æolian flute.—GRAY.

Ver. 3. From Helicon's harmonious springs.] The subject and simile, as usual with Pindar, are united. The various sources of poetry, which gives life and lustre to all it touches, are here described; its quiet majestic progress enriching every subject (otherwise dry and barren) with a pomp of diction and luxuriant harmony of numbers; and its more rapid and irresistible course, when swoln and hurried away by the conflict of tumultuous passions.—GRAY.

Ver. 5. The laughing flowers that round them blow.] Mr. Mitford has here from Petronius, cap. 127.

“Albaque de viridi riserunt lilia prato :”

and from Achilles Tatius ;

“Τὸ πεταλὸν τῷ ζεφυρῷ γέλα.”

The metaphors which have been drawn by different poets from laughter are remarkable, perhaps above all others, for their boldness and variety. The Psalmist makes the vallies to laugh and sing with plenty : and Æschylus, Prom. Vinc. 90. calls the bright dimpling of the waves beneath the sun :

“Ἀνηριθμὸν γέλασμα.”

Ver. 6. Drink life and fragrance as they flow.]

———“Irriguumque bibant violaria fontem.”

Virg. Georg. iv. 32.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 7. Now the rich stream of music winds along.] A resemblance has been pointed out, by Dr. Berdmore of the Charterhouse, between this passage and the following from Horace :

Through verdant vales, and Ceres' golden reign :
 Now rolling down the steep amain, 10
 Headlong, impetuous, see it pour :
 The rocks and nodding groves rebellow to the roar.

I. 2.

Oh ! Sovereign of the willing soul,
 Parent of sweet and solemn-breathing airs,
 Enchanting shell ! the sullen Cares 15
 And frantic Passions hear thy soft controul.

———“ Quod adest, memento
 Componere æquus : Cætera fluminis
 Ritu feruntur, nunc medio alveo
 Cum pace delabentis Etruscum
 In mare, nunc lapides adesos,
 Stirpesque raptas, et pecus, et domos
 Volventis una, non sine montium
 Clamore, vicinæque silvæ.” Lib. iii. Od. xxix. 32.

Ver. 8. Deep, majestic, smooth, and strong.]
 “ While in more lengthen'd notes, and slow,
 The deep, majestic, solemn organs blow.”

Pope's Cecilia.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 12. The rocks and nodding groves rebellow to the roar.]
 Gray seems in his rapture to confound the images of spreading sound and running water. A “ stream of music” may be allowed ; but where does music, however “ smooth and strong,”
 after having visited the “ verdant vales,” roll down “ the steep amain,” so as that “ rocks and nodding groves rebellow to the roar.” If this be said of music, it is nonsense ; if it be said of water, it is nothing to the purpose.—JOHNSON.

Ver. 13. Oh ! Sovereign of the willing soul.] Power of harmony to calm the turbulent sallies of the soul. The thoughts are borrowed from the first Pythian of Pindar.—GRAY.

Ver. 15. ———The sullen Cares
 And frantic Passions———]

On Thracia's hills the Lord of War
 Has curb'd the fury of his car,
 And dropt his thirsty lance at thy command.
 Perching on the sceptred hand

20

"Quorundam discutiendæ tristes cogitationes: ad quod symphoniam, et cymbala, strepitusque proficiunt." Cels. de Med. iii. 18.—And so in the Old Testament, "Saul's evil spirit of melancholy was soothed by the lyre of David."

"A solemn air, and the best comforter
 To an unsettled fancy, cure thy brains."

Tempest, v. iii.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 20. Perching on the sceptred hand.]

— "εὐδει δ' ἀνα σκαπτῷ Διὸς αἰετός, ὠ-κειαν πτερυγ' ἀμφοτέρωθεν χαλαzais,
 Ἀρχὸς οὐρανῶν κελαινῶπιν δ' ἐπὶ οἱ νεφέλαν
 Ἀγκυλῷ κρατὶ, γλεφαρῶν
 Ἄδῃ κλαιστρῶν, κατεχευαs. ὁ δὲ κνωσῶν ὕγρον νῶτον αἰῶρει, ταῖs ῥιπαῖs κατασχομένος. καὶ γὰρ βιατας Ἀρης, τραχείαν ἀνευθε λιπῶν
 Ἐγγεῶν ἀκμαν, ἰαίνει καρδίαν
 Κωματι."——

Pind. Pyth. i. 9.

This description of the bird of Jupiter, Mr. Gray, in his own edition, modestly calls "a weak imitation of some incomparable lines in the first Pythian of Pindar;" but if they are compared with Mr. Gilbert West's translation of the above lines, (though far from a bad one,) their superior energy to his version will appear very conspicuous.

"Perch'd on the sceptre of the Olympian king
 The thrilling darts of harmony he feels;
 And indolently hangs his rapid wing,
 While gentle sleep his closing eyelid seals,
 And o'er his heaving limbs in loose array,
 To every balmy gale the ruffling feathers play.

Of Jove, thy magic lulls the feather'd king
 With ruffled plumes and flagging wing :
 Quench'd in dark clouds of slumber lie
 The terror of his beak, and lightnings of his eye,

Here, if we except the second line, we find no imagery or expression of the lyrical cast. The rest are loaded with unnecessary epithets, and would better suit the tamer tones of elegy.

West's Pindar, vol. i. p. 85.

The same passage has been imitated by Akenside in his Hymn to the Naiads :

————— “ With slackened wings,
 While now the solemn concert breathes around,
 Incumbent o'er the sceptre of his lord
 Sleeps the stern eagle, by the number'd notes
 Possess'd, and satiate with the melting tone,
 Sovereign of birds! The furious God of War
 His darts forgetting, and the winged wheels
 That bear him vengeful o'er the embattled plain,
 Relents, and soothes his once fierce heart to ease.”

Mr. Mitford, after citing the above, observes, “ As the images are transposed by Gray, it has been thought that the transition from Thracia's Hills, and the Lord of War, to the eagle, is too violent even for lyric poetry.”

Ver. 22. With ruffled plumes and flagging wing.] If the ruffled plumes of Mr. Gray, and the ruffling feathers of West, are intended to express the υγρον υωρον of their original, the adaptation is certainly not a happy one. In the word υγρον is conveyed the idea of that glossy sleekness which, as the slumbering bird heaves up its back, gives to it the appearance of moisture. To this beautiful expression of the Greek poet, perhaps no one has ventured to approach so near as Milton, when he also speaks of music :

“ At every fall smoothing the raven down
 Of Darkness, till it smiled.” Comus, 251.

I. 3.

Thee the voice, the dance, obey, 25
 Temper'd to thy warbled lay.
 O'er Idalia's velvet green
 The rosy-crowned Loves are seen
 On Cytherea's day ;
 With antic Sport, and blue-eyed Pleasures, 30
 Frisking light in frolic measures ;
 Now pursuing, now retreating,

Ver. 25. Thee the voice, the dance, obey.] Power of harmony to produce all the graces of motion in the body.—GRAY.

Ver. 27. O'er Idalia's velvet green.] Idalia's velvet green has something of cant. An epithet or metaphor drawn from nature ennobles art: an epithet or metaphor drawn from art degrades nature.—JOHNSON.

Mr. Wakefield replies to the above criticism by bringing several authorities, beginning with Dr. Johnson himself. Pope's [page] is a velvet lawn, shaven by the scythe, and levelled by the roller.—Lives of the Poets.

“ Through the velvet leaves the wind
 All unseen 'gan passage find.”

Love's Lab. Lost, act iv. sc. 4.

“ Left and abandoned of his velvet friends,
 That is, the deer.” As You Like It.

Young has used the same words, velvet green, in his Universal Passion, Sat. 5.

Ver. 32. Now pursuing, now retreating,
 Now in circling troops they meet.]

“ Και χορος αμφιλαφης, και εν ουρεσιν εψιασθαι.”

Hym. Dion. 3.

“ Οι δ' οτε μεν θρεξασκον επισταμενοισι ποδεσσι.—
 Αλλοτε δ' αυ θρεξασκον επι στιχας αλληλοισι.”

Hom. Il. Σ. 599, 602.

Now in circling troops they meet :
 To brisk notes in cadence beating,
 Glance their many-twinkling feet. 35
 Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare :

" Come, knit hands, and beat the ground
 In a light fantastic round."

Comus, 143.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 35. Glance their many-twinkling feet.]

" Μαρμαρυγας θηερο ποδων' θαυμαζε δε θυμφ."

Hom. Od. Θ.—GRAY.

" Or rustling turn the many-twinkling leaves
 Of Aspin tall." Thomson's Spring, 155.

Many-twinkling was formerly censured as not analogical ;
 we may say " many-spotted," but scarcely many-spotting.—
 JOHNSON.

Ver. 36. Slow melting strains their Queen's approach declare.]
 This and the five flowing lines which follow are sweetly introduced by the short and unequal measures that precede them :
 the whole stanza is indeed a master-piece of rhythm, and charms the ear by its well-varied cadence, as much as the imagery which it contains ravishes the fancy. " There is," says our Author in one of his manuscript papers, " a tout ensemble of sound, as well as of sense, in poetical composition, always necessary to its perfection. What is gone before still dwells upon the ear, and insensibly harmonizes with the present line, as in that succession of fleeting notes which is called melody." Nothing can better exemplify the truth of this fine observation than his own poetry.—MASON.

Mr. Mitford observes that the variety of measure in this stanza is produced by a change of accent, and not by a change of cadence, as in Pope's Ode on St. Cecilia's Day. The effect here is, in consequence, much less forced and artificial. The reader, who may have been accustomed to point to these exquisite lines as a certain proof of Mr. Gray's power in descriptive poetry, will perhaps hardly forgive Mr. Mitford for bringing to light the following lines, written by Barton Booth, the famous actor :

Where'er she turns the Graces homage pay.
 With arms sublime, that float upon the air,
 In gliding state she wins her easy way :
 O'er her warm cheek, and rising bosom, move 40
 The bloom of young Desire and purple light of Love.

" Now to a slow and melting air she moves,
 So like in air, in shape, in mien,
 She passes for the Paphian queen ;
 The Graces all around her play,
 The wond'ring gazers die away ;
 Whether her easy body bend,
 Or her faire bosom heave with sighs ;
 Whether her graceful arms extend,
 Or gently fall, or slowly rise ;
 Or returning, or advancing,
Swimming round, or sidelong glancing,
 Strange force of motion that subdues the soul."

Ver. 37. Where'er she turns the Graces homage pay.]
 There is an allusion in this verse to that well-known passage of Tibullus :

" Illam, quicquid agit, quoquo vestigia vertit, Componit furtim, subsequiturque decor."

Ver. 41. The bloom of young Desire and purple light of Love.]

" Λαμπει δ' επι πορφυρεγσι Παρειησι φως ερωτος."

Phrynichus apud Athenæum.—GRAY.

—————" Lumenque juventæ

Purpureum, et lætos oculis afflârat honores."

Virg. Æn. i. 590.—WAKEFIELD.

Mr. Mitford quotes from Claudian, Rap. Proserp. i. 270.

—————" Niveos infecit purpura vultus

Per liquidas succensa genas, castæque pudoris Illuxere faces."

II. 1.

Man's feeble race what ills await!
 Labour, and Penury, the racks of Pain,
 Disease, and Sorrow's weeping train,
 And Death, sad refuge from the storms of Fate!
 The fond complaint, my song, disprove, 46
 And justify the laws of Jove.
 Say, has he given in vain the heavenly Muse?
 Night, and all her sickly dews,
 Her spectres wan, and birds of boding cry, 50
 He gives to range the dreary sky;
 Till down the eastern cliffs afar
 Hyperion's march they spy, and glitt'ring shafts of war.

Ver. 42. Man's feeble race what ills await.] To compensate the real and imaginary ills of life, the Muse was given to mankind by the same Providence that sends the day, by its cheerful presence, to dispel the gloom and terrors of the night.—GRAY.

Ver. 49. Night, and all her sickly dews.] Dr. Hurd, in his edition of Cowley, supposes Gray to allude to the following lines of his author:

“ Night and her ugly subjects thou dost fright,
 And Sleep, the lazy owl of night;
 Asham'd and fearful to appear,
 They skreen their horrid shapes with the black hemisphere.”

Ver. 52. Till down the eastern cliffs afar
 Hyperion's march they spy, and glitt'ring shafts of war.]

“ Or seen the morning's well-appointed star
 Come marching up the eastern hills afar.”

COWLEY.—GRAY.

Gray has followed all the earlier English writers, with but one or two exceptions, in giving the above quantity, Hyperion. It occurs again in the Hymn to Ignorance, ver. 12.

Ver. 53.—Glitt'ring shafts of war.]

“ Non radii volis, neque lucida tela dici.” Lucret. i. 148.

II. 2.

In climes beyond the solar road,
 Where shaggy forms o'er ice-built mountains roam,
 The Muse has broke the twilight gloom 56
 To cheer the shivering Native's dull abode.
 And oft, beneath the odorous shade
 Of Chili's boundless forests laid,
 She deigns to hear the savage youth repeat, 60
 In loose numbers wildly sweet,
 Their feather-cinctured chiefs, and dusky loves.
 Her track, where'er the goddess roves,

“Luciferique pavent letalia tela dici.”

Ausonii Mosell. 269.—WAKEFIELD.

To these Mr. Mitford adds a quotation from Euripides, Phœnissæ, 171.

Ἔωις ὅμοια φλεγέθων βολαίῳ αἰλίου.

Ver. 54. In climes beyond the solar road.] Extensive influence of poetic genius over the remotest and most uncivilized nations; its connection with liberty, and the virtues that naturally attend on it.—[See the Erse, Norwegian, and Welch Fragments, the Lapland and American Songs.]—GRAY.

“Extra anni solisque vias—.” Virg. Æn. vi. 797.

“Tutta lontana dal camin del sole.”

Petrarch, Canzon. 2.—GRAY.

“Out of the solar walk, and heaven's high way.”

Dryden's Thenod. August. stanza 12.

“Far as the solar walk and milky way.”

Pope's Essay on Man, i. 102.

Ver. 61. In loose numbers wildly sweet.] The loose texture of this verse is most happily analogous to the meaning. It reminds one of Milton's character of Shakspeare.

“Or sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child,

Warble his native wood-notes wild.” WAKEFIELD.

Glory pursue, and generous shame,
Th' unconquerable mind, and Freedom's holy flame.

II. 3.

Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep, 66
Isles, that crown th' Ægean deep,
Fields, that cool Ilissus laves,
Or where Mæander's amber waves
In lingering labyrinths creep, 70
How do your tuneful echoes languish,
Mute, but to the voice of anguish!

Ver. 64. Glory pursue, and generous shame.] This use of the verb plural after the first substantive is in Pindar's manner, Nem. x. 91. Pyth. iv. 318 Hom. II. E. 774.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 66. Woods, that wave o'er Delphi's steep.] Progress of poetry from Greece to Italy, and from Italy to England. Chaucer was not unacquainted with the writings of Dante or of Petrarch. The Earl of Surry, and Sir Thomas Wyatt, had travelled in Italy, and formed their taste there; Spenser imitated the Italian writers; Milton improved on them: but this school expired soon after the Restoration, and a new one arose on the French model, which has subsisted ever since.—GRAY.

Ver. 69. Or where Mæander's amber waves.]

“ There Susa by Choaspes, amber stream.”

Par. Reg. iii. 288.

“ Rolls o'er Elysian flowers her amber stream.”

Par. Lost, iii. 359.

Which is from Callimachus:

———το δ', ὡστ' αλεκτρινον, ὑδωρ

Εξ αμαρων ανεθνε. Hymn. in Cer. 29.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 70. In lingering labyrinths creep.]

———“ Tardis ubi flexibus errat

Mincius.” Virg. Georg. iii. 14.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 71. How do your tuneful echoes languish.] In the

Where each old poetic mountain
 Inspiration breath'd around ;
 Every shade and hallow'd fountain 75
 Murmur'd deep a solemn sound :
 Till the sad Nine, in Greece's evil hour,
 Left their Parnassus for the Latian plains.
 Alike they scorn the pomp of tyrant Power,
 And coward Vice, that revels in her chains. 80
 When Latium had her lofty spirit lost,
 They sought, oh Albion! next thy sea-encircled coast.

III. 1.

Far from the sun and summer-gale,
 In thy green lap was Nature's Darling^a laid,

Quarterly Review, vol. xi. p. 314. a resemblance is traced between these lines and the following from Addison's letter to Lord Halifax :

“ Poetic fields encompass me around,
 And still I seem to tread on classic ground ;
 For here the Muse so oft her harp has strung,
 That not a mountain rears its head unsung ;
 Renowned in verse each shady thicket grows,
 And every stream in heavenly numbers flows.”

See Letter II.

Ver. 80. And coward Vice, that revels in her chains.]

“ Servitude, that hugs her chain.”

Ode on the Installation.—WAKEFIELD.

The position here laid down, Dr. Johnson says, is false. “ In the time of Dante and Petrarch, from whom we derive our first school of poetry, Italy was overrun by ‘ tyrant power’ and ‘ coward vice :’ nor was our state much better when we first borrowed the Italian arts.”

^a Shakspeare.

What time, where lucid Avon stray'd, 85
 To him the mighty mother did unveil

Ver. 83. Far from the sun and summer-gale.] An ingenious person, who sent Mr. Gray his remarks anonymously on this and the following Ode soon after they were published, gives this stanza and the following a very just and well-expressed eulogy: "A poet is never more conciliating than when he praises favourite predecessors in his art. Milton is not more the pride than Shakspeare the love of their country: it is therefore equally judicious to diffuse a tenderness and a grace through the praise of Shakspeare, as to extol in a strain more elevated and sonorous the boundless soarings of Milton's epic imagination." The critic has here well noted the beauty of contrast which results from the two descriptions; yet it is further to be observed, to the honour of our Poet's judgment, that the tenderness and grace in the former does not prevent it from strongly characterizing the three capital perfections of Shakspeare's genius; and when he describes his power of exciting terror, (a species of the sublime,) he ceases to be diffuse, and becomes, as he ought to be, concise and energetical.—MASON.

Ver. 84. In thy green lap was Nature's Darling laid.]

"The flowery May, who from her green lap throws
 The yellow cowslip, and the pale primrose."

Milton's Song on May Morning.—GRAY.

Nature's Darling occurs in Cleveland's Poems, p. 314.

"Here lies, within this stony shade,
Nature's Darling; whom she made
 Her fairest model, her brief story,
 In him heaping all her glory."

Ver. 86. To him the mighty mother did unveil

Her awful face.] Wicked memory brings into the mind the Queen of the Dunces, and destroys all the pleasure of the description by an unlucky contrast.

"The mighty mother, and her son, who brings
 The Smithfield muses to the ear of kings."

Pope's Dunciad, i. 1.

Her awful face : the dauntless child
 Stretch'd forth his little arms, and smil'd.
 " This pencil take," she said, " whose colours clear
 Richly paint the vernal year : 90
 Thine too these golden keys, immortal Boy !
 This can unlock the gates of joy ;
 Of horror that, and thrilling fears,
 Or ope the sacred source of sympathetic tears."

III. 2.

Nor second He^b, that rode sublime 95
 Upon the seraph-wings of Ecstasy,
 The secrets of th' abyss to spy,
 He pass'd the flaming bounds of place and time :
 The living Throne, the sapphire-blaze,
 Where angels tremble while they gaze, 100
 He saw ; but, blasted with excess of light,
 Clos'd his eyes in endless night.

" A veil of fogs dilates her awful face."

Idem, i. 218.—WAKEFIELD.

^b Milton.

Ver. 98. He passed the flaming bounds of place and time.]

" Flammantia mœnia mundi." Lucret. i. 74.—GRAY.

Ver. 99. The living Throne, the sapphire-blaze.] " For the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels, and above the firmament that was over their heads was the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire stone. This was the appearance of the glory of the Lord.—Ezek. i. 20, 26, 28.—GRAY.

Ver. 101. He saw ; but, blasted with excess of light.]

—" Oculos ausus attollere contra."

Lucret.—WAKEFIELD.

Behold, where Dryden's less presumptuous car,
 Wide o'er the fields of glory bear
 Two coursers of ethereal race, 105
 With necks in thunder cloth'd, and long-resounding pace.

III. 3.

Hark, his hands the lyre explore!
 Bright-eyed Fancy, hovering o'er,
 Scatters from her pictur'd urn
 Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn. 110

Ver. 102. Closed his eyes in endless night.]

“Οφθαλμων μεν αμερσε· διδου δ' ηδειαν αιωδην.”

Homer, Od. θ. v. 64.—GRAY.

Mr. Mitford says that the blindness of Homer was accounted for in the same poetical way by the ancients. It was, they say, the phantom of his hero, Achilles, called up by his own desire, which took away his sight by its overwhelming brightness.

The account of Milton's blindness, if we suppose it caused by study in the formation of his poem, a supposition surely allowable, is poetically true and happily imagined.—JOHNSON.

Ver. 106. With necks in thunder cloth'd, and long-resounding pace.]

“Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder.” JOB.

This verse and the foregoing are meant to express the stately march and sounding energy of Dryden's rhymes.—GRAY.

Mr. Mitford quotes the following account of Dryden from Pope:

“Waller was smooth; but Dryden taught to join
 The varying verse, the full resounding line,
 The long majestic march, and energy divine.”

Ver. 110. Thoughts that breathe, and words that burn.]

“Words that weep, and tears that speak.”

COWLEY.—GRAY.

But ah! 'tis heard no more——

Oh! Lyre divine, what daring spirit
Wakes thee now? Though he inherit
Nor the pride, nor ample pinion,
That the Theban eagle^c bear,
Sailing with supreme dominion

115

Ver. 111. But ah! 'tis heard no more.] We have had in our language no other Odes of the sublime kind, than that of Dryden on St. Cecilia's Day; for Cowley, who had his merit, yet wanted judgment, style, and harmony, for such a task. That of Pope is not worthy of so great a man. Mr. Mason, indeed, of late days, has touched the true chords, and with a masterly hand, in some of his choruses; above all, in the last of Caractacus:

“Hark! heard ye not yon footstep dread?” &c.—GRAY.

Ver. 114. ————Ample pinion.] This image of Pinder is principally derived from a passage in Horace, in which he contrasts himself with the Theban bard; a passage, which for elegance of thought, beauty of expression, and melody of verse, is not excelled by any part of his lyric compositions.

“Multa dircaem levat aura cygnum
Tendit, Antoni, quoties in altos
Nubium fractus. Ego apis matinae
More modoque,
Grata carpentis thyma per laborem
Plurimum, circa nemus uvidique
Tiburis ripas, operosa parvus
Carmina fingo.”

WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 115. That the Theban eagle bear.]

“Διός προς ορνυχα θειον.”

Olymp. ii.

^c Pindar.

Pindar compares himself to that bird, and his enemies to ravens that croak and clamour in vain below, while it pursues its flight, regardless of their noise.—GRAY.

Mr. Mitford quotes—

“Like to an eagle in his kingly pride
Soaring through his wide empire of the aire.”

Spenser's Faerie Queene, v. iv. 42.

Through the azure deep of air :
Yet oft before his infant eyes would run

Ver. 117. Through the azure deep of air.]

“ Coeli fretum :”

ENNIUS.

———“ Æris mare magnum.”

Lucret. ii. 151. v. 277.—WAKEFIELD.

The critic quoted (p. 39.) concludes his remarks on this Ode, which he had written after his observations on the Bard, in a manner which accounts, in my opinion, for the superior pleasure that it has given to him, and also to the generality of readers. “ I quit,” says he, “ this Ode with the strongest conviction of its abundant merit ; though I took it up, (for this last attentive perusal,) persuaded that it was not a little inferior to the other. They are not the treasures of imagination only that have so copiously enriched it : it speaks, but surely less feelingly than the Bard, (still my favourite,) to the heart. Can we in truth be equally interested for the fabulous exploded gods of other nations, (celebrated in the first half of this Ode,) as by the story of our own Edwards and Henrys, or allusions to it? Can a description, the most perfect language ever attained to, of tyranny expelling the Muses from Parnassus, seize the mind equally with the horrors of Berkley Castle, with the apostrophe to the tower?

‘ And spare the meek usurper’s holy head !’

“ I do not mean, however, wholly to decry fabulous subjects or allusions, nor more than to suggest the preference due to historical ones, where happily the poet’s fertile imagination supplies him with a plentiful choice of both kinds, and he finds himself capable of treating both, according to their respective natures, with equal advantage.”

It will not surely be improper at the conclusion of this Ode, so peculiarly admirable for the musical flow of its numbers, to mention one circumstance relative to English lyric poetry in general, and much to its honour, which has lately been communicated to me by an ingenious friend. It is this:—“ That it can fully, at least when in the hands of such a master, support its harmony without the assistance of music. For there is great reason to believe, that in the Greek Ode, of which we are taught to think so highly, the power of numbers was little perceived without the effectual aid of a musical accompaniment. And we have in proof of this supposition the express testimonies of Cicero and Quintilian. The first, in his Orator, (a finished performance, and of which he speaks himself in the highest terms, Ep. Fam. vi. 18.) makes the following observation: "Sed in versibus res est apertior: quamquam etiam a modis quibusdam, cantu remoto, soluta esse videatur oratio, maximeque id in optimo quoque eorum poëtarum, qui Ἀυρίχοι a Græcis nominantur: quos cum cantu spoliaveris, nuda pæne remanet oratio."—Orator, No. 183. He gives a farther instance from the poets of his own country, which I do not here cite as any additional proof of the point in question, but as the clearest illustration of his meaning in the foregoing quotation. "Quorum similia sunt quædam etiam apud nostros: velut illa in Thyeste,

Such forms, as glitter in the Muse's ray
With orient hues, unborrow'd of the sun : 120

Quemnam te esse dicam? qui tardâ in senectute:

Et quæ sequuntur: quæ, nisi cum tibicen accessit, orationi sunt solutæ simillima."—Ibid. The second testimony, that of Quintilian, is also full to our present purpose. "Poëtas certe legendos Oratori futuro concesserint: num igitur hi sine Mucice? at si quis tam cæcus animi est, ut de aliis dubitet; illos certe, qui carmina ad lyram composuerunt."—Quintilianus, lib. i. cap. 17. Here we see, that, whatever might be the case with some other kinds of poetry, in the Ode the want of an accompanying lyre could not be dispensed with.

Thus then, if we rely on these classical authorities, stood the Greek Ode; claiming, in the exhibition of a beauty so essential to its perfection, the kind assistance of an inferior art: while the lyrics of Mr. Gray, with the richness of imagery and the glow of expression, breathe also the various modulations of an intrinsic and independent melody.

For this singular advantage, so little known or considered,

Yet shall he mount, and keep his distant way
Beyond the limits of a vulgar fate,
Beneath the Good how far—but far above the Great.

we are certainly indebted to rhyme; and, whatever opinion may be formed of its use in other kinds of poetry, we may conclude from hence that it is a necessary support to the harmony of our Ode.

ODE VI.

THE BARD^a

PINDARIC.

I. 1

“ RUIN seize thee, ruthless King!
 Confusion on thy banners wait!
 Though fann'd by Conquest's crimson wing,
 They mock the air with idle state.

^a This Ode is founded on a tradition current in Wales, that Edward the First, when he completed the conquest of that country, ordered all the Bards that fell into his hands to be put to death.—GRAY.

Ver. 1. Ruin seize thee, ruthless King.] This abrupt execration plunges the reader into that sudden fearful perplexity which is designed to predominate through the whole. The irresistible violence of the prophet's passions bears him away, who, as he is unprepared by a formal ushering in of the speaker, is unfortified against the impressions of his poetical frenzy, and overpowered by them, as sudden thunders strike the deepest. All readers of taste, I fancy, have felt this effect from the passage; they will be pleased, however, to see their own feelings so well expressed as they are in this note.—MASON.

Dr. Johnson, although he does not condemn the abruptness of this exordium, endeavours to undervalue it as a mere technical beauty, and creditable only to the inventor.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 4. They mock the air with idle state.]

“ Mocking the air with colours idly spread.”

Shakspeare's King John.—GRAY.

Helm, nor hauberk's twisted mail, 5
 Nor e'en thy virtues, Tyrant, shall avail
 To save thy secret soul from nightly fears,
 From Cambria's curse, from Cambria's tears!"
 Such were the sounds, that o'er the crested pride
 Of the first Edward scatter'd wild dismay, 10
 As down the steep of Snowden's shaggy side
 He wound with toilsome march his long array.
 Stout Glo'ster stood aghast in speechless trance:
 "To arms!" cried Mortimer, and couch'd his quivering lance.

Ver. 5. Helm, nor hauberk's twisted mail.] The hauberk was a texture of steel ringlets, or rings interwoven, forming a coat of mail, that sat close to the body, and adapted itself to every motion.—GRAY.

The initial resemblance or alliterations, "ruin, ruthless, helm or hauberk," are below the grandeur of a poem that endeavours at sublimity.—JOHNSON.

Ver. 9. Such were the sounds, that o'er the crested pride.]
 "The crested adder's pride."

Dryden's Indian Queen.—GRAY.

Ver. 11. As down the steep of Snowden's shaggy side.] Snowden was a name given by the Saxons to that mountainous tract which the Welch themselves call Craigian-eryri: it included all the highlands of Caernarvonshire and Merionethshire, as far east as the river Conway. R. Hygden, speaking of the castle of Conway, built by King Edward the First, says, "Ad ortum amnis Conway ad clivum montis Eryri;" and Matthew of Westminster, (ad ann. 1283.) "Apud Aberconway ad pedes montis Snowdoniæ fecit erigi castrum forte."—GRAY.

Ver. 13. Stout Glo'ster stood aghast in speechless trance.] Gilbert de Clare, surnamed the Red, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford, son-in-law to King Edward.—GRAY.

I. 2.

On a rock, whose haughty brow 15
 Frowns o'er old Conway's foaming flood,
 Robed in the sable garb of woe,
 With haggard eyes the Poet stood ;
 (Loose his beard, and hoary hair Stream'd, like a meteor, to the troubled air ;) 20

Ver. 14. "To arms!" cried Mortimer, and couch'd his quivering lance.] Edmond de Mortimer, Lord of Wigmore.

They both were Lords Marchers, whose lands lay on the borders of Wales, and probably accompanied the king in this expedition.—GRAY.

Ver. 15. On a rock.] The turbulent impetuosity of the preceding stanza, and the sedate majesty of this, form a most pleasing and animated contrast.—WAKEFIELD.

——Whose haughty brow.] So Homer, επ' οφρουσι καλλι- κολωνης—επ' οφρυος, et επ' οφρουσι—αιγιαλοιο—Moseus, et Apollonius Rhodius: and St. Luke—της οφρυος του ορους—iv. 29. of his Gospel.—"Ecce! supercilio clivosi tramitis." Virg.—Homer says with greater boldness, ιλιος οφρυοεισσα: but Mr. Gray's correspondent term, frowns, is a happy continuation of the figure.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 17. Robed in the sable garb of woe.]

"Perpetuo mærore, et nigra veste senescant."

Juvenal. Sat. x. 245.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 19. Loose his beard, and hoary hair.] The image was taken from a well-known picture of Raphael, representing the Supreme Being in the vision of Ezekiel: there are two of these paintings, both believed to be originals; one at Florence, the other in the Duke of Orleans' collection at Paris.—GRAY.

Mr. Gray never saw the large Cartoon, done by the same divine hand, in the possession of the Duke of Montagu, at his seat at Boughton, in Northamptonshire, else I am persuaded he would have mentioned it in this note. The two finished

And with a master's hand, and prophet's fire,
 Struck the deep sorrows of his lyre.
 "Hark, how each giant oak, and desert cave,
 Sighs to the torrent's awful voice beneath!
 O'er thee, oh King! their hundred arms they wave, 25
 Revenge on thee in hoarser murmurs breathe ;

pictures abroad (which I believe are closet-pieces) can hardly have so much spirit in them as this wonderful drawing ; it gave me the sublimest idea I ever received from painting. Moses breaking the tables of the law, by Parmegiano, was a figure which Mr. Gray used to say came still nearer to his meaning than the picture of Raphael.—MASON.

See Sir Joshua Reynolds's Works, vol. ii. p. 195.

It has been observed as somewhat singular, that the two figures here mentioned, as having suggested the idea of the Bard, are themselves widely different from one another in their general expression.

Ver. 20. Stream'd, like a meteor, to the troubled air.]

"Who forthwith from the glittering staff unfurl'd
 The imperial ensign, which full high advanc'd,
 Shone, like a meteor, streaming to the wind."

Par. Lost, i. 535.—WAKEFIELD.

A line yet more resembling the above occurs in Heywood's "Four 'Prentices of London."

"In Sion's towers hangs his victorious flag,
 Blowing defiance this way ; and it shews
 Like a red meteor in the troubled air."

Mr. Mitford quotes several passages in which long hair is compared to a meteor. The following are two of the number :

"His tawny beard was th' equal grace
 Both of his wisdom and his face.

* * * * *

This hairy meteor did denounce
 The fall of sceptres, and of crowns."

Hudibras, Pt. i. Cant. i. 247.

Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day,
To high-born Hoel's harp, or soft Llewellyn's lay."

I. 3.

" Cold is Cadwallo's tongue,
That hush'd the stormy main :

30

" Which holy vow he firmly kept :
And most devoutly wore
A grisly meteor on his face."

Butler's Remains, p. 135.

Ver. 27. Vocal no more, since Cambria's fatal day.] Mr. Wakefield quotes, as an analogous expression, the " auritas fidibus querens" of Horace ; and for further remarks upon the word, the reader may consult Huntingford's Apology for his Monstrophies, p. 31.

Ver. 28. To high-born Hoel's harp, or soft Llewellyn's lay.] " Hoel," observes Mr. Mitford, " is called high-born, as being the son of Owen Gwynedd, prince of North Wales." See Jones's Relics, vol. ii. p. 36. Evans's Specimens, p. 36. and Southey's Madoc, vol. ii. p. 162. Llewellyn's poetry, we are told, was characterized by his countrymen as a soft lay, and the Bard is himself styled the tender-hearted prince.

Dr. Evans mentions Cadwallo and Urien among those Bards of whom no works remain : see his " Dissertatio de Bardis," p. 78.

Mr. Mitford supposes that Modred was changed by our Author, euphoniæ gratia, from Myrddin ab Morvryn, called Merlin the Wild. There is a Poem of his called the " Orchard," in Jones's Relics, vol. i. p. 24. He fought under King Arthur in 542, at the battle of Camlau, and accidentally slew his own nephew.

Ver. 30. That hush'd the stormy main.]

" Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song."

Mids. Night's Dream.—WAKEFIELD.

Brave Urien sleeps upon his craggy bed :
 Mountains, ye mourn in vain
 Modred, whose magic song
 Made huge Plinlimmon bow his cloud-topt head.
 On dreary Arvon's shore they lie, 35
 Smear'd with gore, and ghastly pale :
 Far, far aloof th' affrighted ravens sail ;
 The famish'd eagle screams, and passes by.
 Dear lost companions of my tuneful art,
 Dear, as the light that visits these sad eyes, 40

Ver. 34.———Cloud-topt head.]

“ The cloud-capt towers.” Shakspeare.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 35. On dreary Arvon's shore they lie.] The shores of Caernarvonshire opposite to the Isle of Anglesey.—GRAY.

Ver. 37. Far, far aloof th' affrighted ravens sail.] Lucan presents us with a similar circumstance :

———“ Pererrat

Corpora cæsorum, tumulis projecta negatis.

Continuo fugere lupi, fugere revulsis

Unguibus impastæ volucres.” Phars. vi. 625.

And Lucretius :

“ Multaque humi cum inhumata jacerent corpora supra

Corporibus, tamen alituum genus atque ferarum

Aut procul absiliebat.” vi. 1213.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 38. The famish'd eagle screams, and passes by.] Camden and others observe, that eagles used annually to build their aerie among the rocks of Snowdon, which from thence (as some think) were named by the Welch Craigian-eryrie, or the Craggs of the Eagles. At this day (I am told) the highest point of Snowdon is called the Eagle's Nest. That bird is certainly no stranger to this island, as the Scots, and the people of Cumberland, Westmoreland, &c. can testify: it even has built its nest in the peak of Derbyshire. [See Willoughby's Ornithol. published by Ray.—GRAY.

d.

Dear, as the ruddy drops that warm my heart,
 Ye died amidst your dying country's cries—
 No more I weep. They do not sleep.
 On yonder cliffs, a griesly band,
 I see them sit ; they linger yet, 45
 Avengers of their native land :
 With me in dreadful harmony they join,
 And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line."

II. 1.

" Weave the warp, and weave the woof,
 The winding-sheet of Edward's race. 50

Ver. 40. Dear, as the light that visits these sad eyes,
 Dear, as the ruddy drops that warm my heart.]
 " As dear to me as are the ruddy drops,
That visit my sad heart."
 Shakspeare's Jul. Cæs. act ii. sc. 2.—GRAY.
 ——" O luce magis dilecta, sorori."

Virg. Æn. iv. 31.—WAKEFIELD.

" Dearer than eyesight." King Lear, act i. sc. 2.

Ver. 42. Ye died amidst your dying country's cries.]
 " And greatly falling with a falling state." POPE.
 " And could not fall but with thy country's fate."
 Dryden.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 43. No more I weep. They do not sleep.] Here, says the anonymous critic, a vision of triumphant revenge is judiciously made to ensue, after the pathetic lamentation which precedes it. Breaks—double rhymes—an appropriated cadence—and an exalted ferocity of language forcibly picture to us the uncontrollable tumultuous workings of the prophet's stimulated bosom.—MASON.

Ver. 48. And weave with bloody hands the tissue of thy line.] See the Norwegian Ode that follows.—GRAY.

Ver. 49. Weave the warp, and weave the woof.] Can there

Give ample room, and verge enough
 The characters of hell to trace.
 Mark the year, and mark the night,
 When Severn shall re-echo with affright
 The shrieks of death, through Berkley's roof that ring, 55
 Shrieks of an agonizing King!

be an image more just, apposite, and nobly imagined than this tremendous tragical winding-sheet? In the rest of this stanza the wildness of thought, expression, and cadence, are admirably adapted to the character and situation of the speaker, and of the bloody spectres, his assistants. It is not indeed peculiar to it alone, but a beauty that runs throughout the whole composition, that the historical events are briefly sketched out by a few striking circumstances, in which the Poet's office of rather exciting and directing, than satisfying the reader's imagination, is perfectly observed. Such abrupt hints, resembling the several fragments of a vast ruin, suffer not the mind to be raised to the utmost pitch by one image of horror, but that instantaneously a second and a third are presented to it, and the affection is still uniformly supported.—Anon. Critic.

Ver. 51. Give ample room, and verge enough.]

“ I have a soul that like an ample shield
 Can take in all, and verge enough for more.”

Dryden's Sebast. act i. sc. 1.

Ver. 55. The shrieks of death, through Berkley's roof that ring.] Edward the Second, cruelly butchered in Berkley Castle.—GRAY.

Mr. Mitford quotes the following lines from Drayton's Barons' Wars, v. 67.

“ Berkley, whose fair seat hath been famous long,
 Let thy sad echoes shriek a deadly sound
 To the vast air ; complain his grievous wrong,
 And keep the blood that issued from his wound.”

She-wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs,
 That tear'st the bowels of thy mangled mate,
 From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs
 The scourge of heav'n! What terrors round him wait! 60

Ver. 57. She-wolf of France, with unrelenting fangs.] Isabel of France, Edward the Second's adulterous Queen.—GRAY.

Mr. Mitford has here taken unnecessary pains to shew that lupa in Latin means a bad woman; but surely not bad in the sense in which the corresponding word is used in the above line. For though it is true that the Queen is spoken of in the note as an adulteress, yet in the text, as well as in Shakspeare's Henry VI. pt. iii. the "she-wolf of France" is only spoken of in connection with relentless cruelty.

Ver. 59. From thee be born, who o'er thy country hangs.] Triumphs of Edward the Third in France.—GRAY.

Ver. 60. —————What terrors round him wait!
 Amazement in his van, with Flight combined.]
 This imagery is from Virgil:

—————"Circumque atræ formidinis ora, Iræque, insidiæque, Dei comitatus, aguntur."

Æn. xii. 335.

The original idea is in Homer, Il. E. 740.—But Shakspeare is still more picturesque and natural:

—————"At his heels
 Leasht in, like hounds, should Famine, Sword, and Fire,
 Crouch for employments."

Henry Vth. Prologue.—WAKEFIELD.

Mr. Mitford quotes two lines from Oldham's Ode on Homer, stanza iii.

"Where'er he does his dreadful standard bear, Horror stalks in the van, and slaughter in the rear."
 And if the reader have an appetite for parallel quotations, the following, from Churchill, may not be lost upon him:
 "Froze January, leader of the year,
 Minced pies in the van, and calves' heads in the rear."

Amazement in his van, with Flight combin'd,
And Sorrow's faded form, and solitude behind."

II. 2.

"Mighty victor, mighty lord,
Low on his funeral couch he lies!
No pitying heart, no eye, afford 65
A tear to grace his obsequies.
Is the sable warrior fled?
Thy son is gone. He rests among the dead.
The swarm, that in thy noon-tide beam were born?
Gone to salute the rising morn. 70

Ver. 64. Low on his funeral couch he lies.] Death of that King, abandoned by his children, and even robbed in his last moments by his courtiers and his mistress.—GRAY.

Ver. 65. No pitying heart, no eye, afford.] This is elliptical: "Is there no pitying heart? Will no eye afford"—If this be not admitted, the poet is guilty of a great impropriety in applying a tear literally to the eye, and figuratively to the heart, in the same sentence: which, however, by the comma at eye, seems to have been his intention.—WAKEFIELD.

The same form of expression occurs in the Installation Ode:

"Thy liberal heart, thy judging eye,
The flower unheeded shall descry."

Ver. 67. Is the sable warrior fled.] Edward, the Black Prince, dead some time before his father.—GRAY.

Ver. 69. The swarm, that in thy noon-tide beam were born.] The summer friends, in the Hymn to Adversity.

This image is inexpressibly beautiful, but not superior to that which it so happily and unaffectedly introduces.—WAKEFIELD.

—————"Around thee call
The gilded swarm, that wantons in the sunshine
Of thy full favour."—— Agrippina.

Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr blows,
 While proudly riding o'er the azure realm
 In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes ;
 Youth on the prow, and Pleasure at the helm ;

The following lines, though they contain a sentiment similar to that in the text, yet more closely resemble those in the Ode to Spring :

“ And what will then become of all
 Those whom now you servants call ?
 Like swallows, when their summer's done,
 They'll fly, and seek some warmer sun.”

T. Carew's Poems..

Ver. 71. Fair laughs the morn, and soft the zephyr blows.] Magnificence of Richard the Second's reign.—See Froissard, and other contemporary writers.—GRAY.

It is always entertaining, and sometimes useful, to be informed how a writer frequently improves on his original thoughts ; on this account I have occasionally set down the few variations which Mr. Gray made in his lyrical compositions. The six lines before us convey, perhaps, the most beautiful piece of imagery in the whole Ode, and were a wonderful improvement on those which he first wrote ; which, though they would appear fine in an inferior poet, are infinitely below those which supplanted them. I find them in one of his corrected manuscripts as follow :

“ Mirrors of Saxon truth and loyalty,
 Your helpless old expiring master view !
 They hear not : scarce Religion dares supply
 Her muttered requiems, and her holy dew.
 Yet thou, proud boy, from Pomfret's walls shall send
 A sigh, and envy oft thy happy grandsire's end.”

MASON.

For similar imagery the reader may refer to Milton's Samson Agonistes, 710. to Shakspeare's Merchant of Venice, act ii. sc. 6. and Spenser's Vision of Petrarch, ii.

Regardless of the sweeping Whirlwind's sway, 75
That, hush'd in grim repose, expects his evening prey."

II. 3.

" Fill high the sparkling bowl,
The rich repast prepare,

Ver. 75. Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's sway.] See the Fragment on Education and Government:

" And when the Deluge burst with sweepy sway."

Ver. 76. That, hushed in grim repose, expects his evening prey.] This representation of the whirlwind, under the image of a beast of prey lying in ambush in the day-time, expectant of the night, is not only perfectly just and natural, but incomparably sublime.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 77. Fill high the sparkling bowl.] Richard the Second (as we are told by Archbishop Scroop and the confederate lords in their manifesto, by Thomas of Walsingham, and all the older writers) was starved to death. The story of his assassination, by Sir Piers of Exon, is of much later date.—GRAY.

This stanza (as an ingenious friend remarks) has exceeding merit. It breathes in a lesser compass, what the Ode breathes at large, the high spirit of lyric enthusiasm. The transitions are sudden and impetuous; the language full of fire and force; and the imagery carried, without impropriety, to the most daring height. The manner of Richard's death by famine exhibits such beauties of personification, as only the richest and most vivid imagination could supply. From thence we are hurried, with the wildest rapidity, into the midst of battle; and the epithet kindred places at once before our eyes all the peculiar horrors of civil war. Immediately, by a transition most striking and unexpected, the poet falls into a tender and pathetic address; which, from the sentiments, and also from the numbers, has all the melancholy flow, and breathes all the plaintive soft-

Reft of a crown, he yet may share the feast :
 Close by the regal chair 80
 Fell Thirst and Famine scowl
 A baleful smile upon their baffled guest.
 Heard ye the din of battle bray,
 Lance to lance, and horse to horse ?
 Long years of havoc urge their destined course, 85
 And through the kindred squadrons mow their way.

ness, of Elegy. Again the scene changes ; again the Bard rises into an allegorical description of carnage, to which the metre is admirably adapted : and the concluding sentence of personal punishment on Edward is denounced with a solemnity, that chills and terrifies.—MASON.

The similarity of this passage to the following lines of Virgil, Æn. vi. 603. could not escape the author of "Specimens of Literary Resemblances."

—————"Lucent genialibus altis
 Aurea fulcra toris, epulæque ante ora paratæ
 Regifico luxu : Furiarum maxima juxta
 Accubat, et manibus prohibet contingere mensas, Exsurgitque facem attollens, atque intonat ore."

Ver. 82. A baleful smile upon their baffled guest.] What can exceed the terrible sublimity of this picture? and what is at all worthy to be put in competition with it, except that of Milton, which our author seems to have had in view?

"He ceased, for both seemed highly pleased ; and Death Grinn'd horrible, a ghastly smile." Par. Lost, ii. 845.

In Newton's edition the reader may see, that Homer, Statius, Cowley, Ariosto, and Tasso, have a similar beauty, not equal to this of Milton.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 83. Heard ye the din of battle bray.] Ruinous wars of York and Lancaster.—GRAY.

Ver. 86. Kindred squadrons.]

"Cognatasque acies." Lucan. i. 4.—WAKEFIELD.

Ye towers of Julius, London's lasting shame,
 With many a foul and midnight murder fed,
 Revere his consort's faith, his father's fame,
 And spare the meek usurper's holy head ! 90
 Above, below, the rose of snow,
 Twined with her blushing foe, we spread:
 The bristled Boar in infant gore
 Wallows beneath the thorny shade.

Ver. 87. Ye towers of Julius, London's lasting shame.] Henry the Sixth, George Duke of Clarence, Edward the Fifth, Richard Duke of York, &c. believed to be murdered secretly in the Tower of London. The oldest part of that structure is vulgarly attributed to Julius Cæsar.—GRAY.

Ver. 89. Revere his consort's faith.] Margaret of Anjou, a woman of heroic spirit, who struggled hard to save her husband and her crown.—GRAY.

—His father's fame.] Henry the Fifth.—GRAY.

Ver. 90. And spare the meek usurper's holy head.] Henry the Sixth, very near being canonized. The line of Lancaster had no right of inheritance to the crown.—GRAY.

Ver. 91. Above, below, the rose of snow.] The white and red roses, devices of York and Lancaster.—GRAY.

Ver. 93. The bristled Boar in infant gore.] The silver boar was the badge of Richard the Third; whence he was usually known in his own time by the name of the boar.—GRAY.

The crest, or bearing of a warrior was often used as a "nom de guerre." Thus Richard the Third acquired his well-known epithet—"the Boar of York." See notes to Scott's Lay of the Last Minstrel, p. 300.

Mr. Mitford, who cites the above note in this place, quotes also the following lines from the Mirror for Magistrates :

"At Stonie Stratford being upon my way,
 The bloodie bore my uncle that did aime."

See page 740.

Now, brothers, bending o'er th' accursed loom, 95
Stamp we our vengeance deep, and ratify his doom."

III. 1.

" Edward, lo! to sudden fate
(Weave we the woof. The thread is spun.)
Half of thy heart we consecrate.
(The web is wove. The work is done.) 100
Stay, oh stay! nor thus forlorn
Leave me unblest'd, unpitied, here to mourn :
In yon bright track, that fires the western skies,
They melt, they vanish from my eyes.
But oh! what solemn scenes on Snowdon's height
Descending slow, their glittering skirts unroll? 106
Visions of glory, spare my aching sight,
Ye unborn ages, crowd not on my soul!
No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail.
All hail, ye genuine Kings! Britannia's issue, hail!"

Ver. 99. Half of thy heart we consecrate.] Eleanor of Castile died a few years after the conquest of Wales. The heroic proof she gave of her affection for her lord is well known. The monuments of his regret and sorrow for the loss of her, are still to be seen at Northampton, Gaddington, Waltham, and other places.—GRAY.

Ver. 102. Leave me unblest'd, unpitied, here to mourn.]

"Leave your despairing Caradoc to mourn."

See Letter xxxvi. Sect. 3.

Ver. 109. No more our long-lost Arthur we bewail.] It was the common belief of the Welsh nation, that King Arthur was still alive in Fairyland, and should return again to reign over Britain.—GRAY.

III. 2.

"Girt with many a baron bold, 111
 Sublime their starry fronts they rear ;
 And gorgeous dames, and statesmen old
 In bearded majesty, appear.
 In the midst a form divine ! 115
 Her eye proclaims her of the Briton-line ;
 Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face,
 Attempered sweet to virgin grace.

"Sic Britonum ridenda fides, et credulus error, Arturum expectat, expectabitque perenne."

Iscanus, De Bell. Troj. lib. iii. 466. cited by Mr. Mitford.

VARIATION.—Vers. 109, 110.

"From Cambria's thousand hills a thousand strains Triumphant tell aloud, another Arthur reigns."—MS.—MASON.
 Ver. 110. All hail, ye genuine Kings! Britannia's issue, hail.]
 Both Merlin and Taliessin had prophesied, that the Welsh should regain their sovereignty over this island; which seemed to be accomplished in the house of Tudor.—GRAY.

VARIATION.—Vers. 111, 112.

"Youthful knights and barons bold,
 With dazzling helm, and horrent spear." MS.—MASON.

Ver. 113. And gorgeous dames, and statesmen old.] With equal or even greater dignity in his Ode on the Installation:

"High potentates, and dames of royal birth,
 And mitred fathers in long order go."

———"Unde omnes longo ordine possit Adversos legere, et venientum discere vulnus."

Æn. vi. 754.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 114. In bearded majesty, appear.] An anonymous critic has observed an inconsistency in this epithet:—since the Bard, whose beard is compared to a meteor, would not be likely to discover much that was majestic in the short curled beards of Elizabeth's days.—See Selections from Gent. Mag. vol. ii. 237.

Ver. 117. Her lion-port, her awe-commanding face.] Speed,

What strings symphonious tremble in the air,
 What strains of vocal transport round her play!
 Hear from the grave, great Taliessin, hear! 121
 They breathe a soul to animate thy clay.
 Bright Rapture calls, and soaring, as she sings,
 Waves in the eye of heaven her many-coloured wings."

III. 3.

" The verse adorn again 125
 Fierce war, and faithful love, relating an audience given by Queen Elizabeth to Paul Dzialinski, ambassador of Poland, says, " And thus she, lion-like rising, daunted the malapert orator no less with her stately port and majestic deporture, than with the tartnesse of her princelie checkes."—GRAY.

" Tell me, have ye seene her angelike face,
 Like Phœbe fayre ?
 Her heavenly haveour, her princely grace,
 Can you well compare ?
 The redde rose medled with the white yfere,
 In either cheeke depeincten lively chere:
 Her modest eye,
 Her majestie,
 Where have you seene the like but there?"

Spenser's April.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 121. Hear from the grave, great Taliessin, hear.] Taliessin, chief of the Bards, flourished in the sixth century. His works are still preserved, and his memory is held in high veneration among his countrymen.—GRAY.

Ver. 123. Bright Rapture calls, and soaring, as she sings.] Mr.
 Mitford quotes from Congreve's Ode to Lord Godolphin :

" And soars with rapture while she sings." Stanza vi.

Ver. 126. Fierce war, and faithful love.]

" Fierce wars and faithful loves shall moralize my song."

Spenser's Proëme to the Faerie Queene.—GRAY.

And truth severe, by fairy fiction drest.
 In buskin'd measures move
 Pale grief, and pleasing pain,
 With horror, tyrant of the throbbing breast^d. 130
 A voice, as of the cherub-choir,
 Gales from blooming Eden bear^e;
 And distant warblings lessen on my ear,
 That lost in long futurity expire. 134
 Fond impious man, think'st thou yon sanguine cloud,
 Raised by thy breath, has quench'd the orb of day?

^d Spakspeare.

^e Milton.

Ver. 133. And distant warblings lessen on my ear.] The succession of poets after Milton's time.—GRAY.

“Till, by degrees, remote and small,
 The strains decay
 And melt away,
 In a dying dying fall.”

Pope's Cecilia.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 135. ————— Yon sanguine cloud.] He has a still bolder figure in the Fatal Sisters :

“Horror covers all the heath :
 Clouds of carnage blot the sun.”

So Pindar—φονον νεφελαν—a cloud of slaughter : Nem. ix. and πολεμοιο νεφος—a cloud of war. Nem. ix.

This conduct of the allegorical comparison of the Sun is exactly after Pindar's manner, and is much more animated and in the spirit of lyric poetry, than a formal introduction of the simile.—WAKEFIELD.

An expression somewhat similar occurs in Thomson's Autumn :

—————“The sanguine flood Rolls a broad slaughter o'er the plains of heaven.”

Mr. Mitford thinks the passage to be taken from Vida :
 Vide Hymn. D. Andreae. Apost. v. 99. t. i. p. 335.

To-morrow he repairs the golden flood,
 And warms the nations with redoubled ray.
 Enough for me: with joy I see
 The different doom our fates assign. 140
 Be thine despair, and sceptred care;
 To triumph, and to die, are mine."
 He spoke, and headlong from the mountain's height
 Deep in the roaring tide he plunged to endless night ^f.

^f The original argument of this capital Ode, as its author had set it down in one of the pages of his common-place book, is as follows: "The army of Edward I. as they march through a deep valley, are suddenly stopped by the appearance of a venerable figure seated on the summit of an inaccessible rock, who, with a voice more than human, reproaches the king with all the misery and desolation which he had brought on his country; foretells the misfortunes of the Norman race, and with prophetic spirit declares, that all his cruelty shall never extinguish the noble ardour of poetic genius in this island; and that men shall never be wanting to celebrate true virtue and valour in immortal strains, to expose vice and infamous pleasure, and boldly censure tyranny and oppression. His song ended, he precipitates himself from the mountain, and is swallowed up by the river that rolls at its foot."

"Fine as the conclusion of this Ode is at present, I think it would have been still finer, if he could have executed it according to this plan; but, unhappily for his purpose, instances of English poets were wanting. Spenser had that enchanting flow of verse which was peculiarly calculated to celebrate virtue and valour; but he chose to celebrate them, not literally, but in allegory. Shakspeare, who had talents for every thing, was undoubtedly capable of exposing vice and infamous pleasure; and the drama was a proper vehicle for his satire: but we do not ever find that he professedly made this his object; nay, we know that, in one inimitable character, he has so contrived as to make vices of the worst kind, such as cowardice, drunkenness, dishonesty, and lewdness, not only laughable, but almost amiable; for with all these sins on his head, who can help liking Falstaff? Milton, of all our great poets, was the only one who boldly censured tyranny and oppression; but he chose to deliver this censure, not in poetry, but in prose. Dryden was a mere court parasite to the most infamous of all courts. Pope, with all his laudable detestation of corruption and bribery, was a Tory; and Addison, though a Whig, and a fine writer, was unluckily not enough of a poet for his purpose. On these considerations Mr. Gray was necessitated to change his plan towards the conclusion: hence we perceive, that in the last epode he praises Spenser only for his allegory, Shakspeare for his powers of moving the passions, and Milton for his epic excellence. I remember the Ode lay unfinished by him for a year or two on this very account; and I hardly believe that it would ever have had his last hand, but for the circumstance of his hearing Parry play on the Welsh harp at a concert at Cambridge, (see Letter xxxv. sect. iv.) which he often declared inspired him with the conclusion.

“ Mr. Smith, the musical composer and worthy pupil of Mr. Handel, had once an idea of setting this Ode, and of having it performed by way of serenata or oratorio. A common friend of his and Mr. Gray’s interested himself much in this design, and drew out a clear analysis of the Ode, that Mr. Smith might more perfectly understand the poet’s meaning. He conversed also with Mr. Gray on the subject, who gave him an idea for the overture, and marked also some passages in the Ode, in order to ascertain which should be recitative, which air, what kind of air, and how accompanied. This design was, however, not executed; and therefore I shall only (in order to give the reader a taste of Mr. Gray’s musical feelings) insert in this place what his sentiments were concerning the overture. ‘ It should be so contrived as to be a proper introduction to the Ode; it might consist of two movements, the first descriptive of the horror and confusion of battle, the last a march grave and majestic, but expressing the exultation and insolent security of conquest. This movement should be composed entirely of wind instruments, except the kettle-drum, heard at intervals. The da capo of it must be suddenly broke in upon, and put to silence by the clang of the harp in a tumultuous rapid movement, joined with the voice, all at once, and not ushered in by any symphony. The harmony may be strengthened by any other stringed instrument; but the harp should every where prevail, and form the continued running accompaniment, submitting itself to nothing but the voice.'

" I cannot quit this and the preceding Ode, without saying a word or two concerning the obscurity which has been imputed to them, and the preference which, in consequence, has been given to his Elegy. It seems as if the persons, who hold this opinion, suppose that every species of poetry ought to be equally clear and intelligible: than which position nothing can be more repugnant to the several specific natures of composition, and to the practice of ancient art. Not to take Pindar and his Odes for an example, (though what I am here defending were written professedly in imitation of him,) I would ask, are all the writings of Horace, his Epistles, Satires, and Odes, equally perspicuous? Among his Odes, separately considered, are there not remarkable differences of this very kind? Is the spirit and meaning of that which begins, ' Descende cœlo, et dic, age, tibiâ,' Ode iv. lib. 3, so readily comprehended as ' Persicos odi, puer, apparatus,' Ode xxxviii. lib. 1. And is the latter a finer piece of lyrical composition on that account? Is ' Integer vitæ, scelerisque purus,' Ode xxii. lib. 1, superior to ' Pindarum quisquis studet æmulari,' Ode ii. lib. 4; because it may be understood at the first reading, and the latter not without much study and reflection? Now between these Odes, thus compared, there is surely equal difference in point of perspicuity, as between the Progress of Poesy, and the Prospect of Eton College; the Ode on the Spring, and the Bard. ' But,' say these objectors, ' the end of poetry is universally to please. Obscurity, by taking off from our pleasure, destroys that end.' I will grant, that if the obscurity be great, constant, and insurmountable, this is certainly true; but if it be only found in particular passages, proceeding from the nature of the subject and the very genius of the composition, it does not rob us of our pleasure, but super-adds a new one, which arises from conquering a difficulty ; and the pleasure which accrues from a difficult passage, when well understood, provided the passage itself be a fine one, is always more permanent than that which we discover at the first glance. The Lyric Muse, like other fine ladies, requires to be courted, and retains her admirers the longer for not having yielded too readily to their solicitations. This argument, ending as it does in a sort of simile, will, I am persuaded, not only have its force with the intelligent readers, (the ΣΥΝΕΤΟΙ,) but also with the men of fashion : as to critics of a lower class, it may be sufficient to transcribe, for their improvement, an unfinished remark, or rather maxim, which I found amongst our author's papers ; and which he probably wrote on occasion of the common preference given to his Elegy. 'The Gout de comparaison (as Bruyere styles it) is the only taste of ordinary minds. They do not know the specific excellence either of an author or a composition : for instance, they do not know that Tibullus spoke the language of nature and love ; that Horace saw the vanities and follies of mankind with the most penetrating eye, and touched them to the quick ; that Virgil ennobled even the most common images by the graces of a glowing, melodious, and well-adapted expression ; but they do know that Virgil was a better poet than Horace ; and that Horace's Epistles do not run so well as the Elegies of Tibullus.'—MASON.

VII.

ODE FOR MUSIC^a.

(IRREGULAR.)

I.

“ HENCE, avaunt, ('tis holy ground,
 Comus, and his midnight crew,
 And Ignorance with looks profound,
 And dreaming Sloth of pallid hue,

^a This Ode was performed in the Senate-house at Cambridge, July 1, 1769, at the Installation of His Grace Augustus Henry Fitzroy, Duke of Grafton, Chancellor of the University.

Ver. 1. Hence, avaunt, ('tis holy ground.)] This exordium awakens and animates the attention, and forms a very pleasing contrast with the majestic tranquillity of the next stanza: in which respects it resembles the opening of the Bard.—WAKEFIELD.

The author, however, in his hurry, seems to have fallen into an error in connecting the abrupt exclamations of the first line with nouns in the third person. Not so Milton:

“ Hence, vain deluding joys.”

Or Shakspeare:

“ Conscience avaunt.”

Ver. 2. Comus, and his midnight crew.]

“ Meanwhile welcome joy, and feast,
 Midnight shout, and revelry,
 Topsy dance, and jollity.”

Comus, 102.—WAKEFIELD.

Mad Sedition's cry profane, 5
 Servitude that hugs her chain,
 Nor in these consecrated bowers.
 Let painted Flattery hide her serpent-train in flowers.
 Nor Envy base, nor creeping Gain,
 Dare the Muse's walk to stain, 10
 While bright-eyed Science watches round :
 Hence, away, 'tis holy ground !"

II.

From yonder realms of empyrean day
 Bursts on my ear th' indignant lay :
 There sit the sainted sage, the bard divine, 15
 The few, whom genius gave to shine
 Through every unborn age, and undiscover'd clime.
 Rapt in celestial transport they ;

Ver. 7. Nor in these consecrated bowers.]

“ Near to her close and consecrated bower.”

Mids. Night's Dream.

Ver. 11. While bright-eyed Science watches round.]

—————“ Bright-eyed fancy.” Progress of Poesy.

Ver. 15. There sit the sainted sage, the bard divine.] This assemblage of the great ornaments of virtue and of genius is a magnificent exhibition, and happily suited to the place of that solemnity, which gave birth to this Ode. The rhymes—divine—shine—and clime—are not sufficiently distinct to stand without offence so near together : and clime is at much too great a distance from the correlative terminations—sublime—rhyme—at the end of the stanza, to answer the expectation of the ear. And this objection affects two other stanzas of this Ode.—WAKE-FIELD.

Yet hither oft a glance from high
 They send of tender sympathy 20
 To bless the place, where on their opening soul
 First the genuine ardour stole.
 'Twas Milton struck the deep-ton'd shell,
 And, as the choral warblings round him swell,
 Meek Newton's self bends from his state sublime, 25
 And nods his hoary head, and listens to the rhyme.

III.

"Ye brown o'er-arching groves,
 That contemplation loves,

Ver. 17, 18. Through every unborn age, and undiscovered clime.

Rapt in celestial transport they.]

These two lines are certainly somewhat obscure, and Mr. Wakefield is not much more perspicuous in his attempt to explain them. The meaning will perhaps be best caught from the following parallel quotation :

"Nations unborn your mighty name shall sound,
 And worlds applaud that must not yet be found."

Pope's Essay on Criticism, 193.

Ver. 26. And nods his hoary head, and listens to the rhyme.]

"E'en mitred Rochester would nod the head."

Pope's Prol. to Sat. 143.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 27. Ye brown o'er-arching groves.] This stanza being supposed to be sung by Milton, is very judiciously written in the metre which he fixed upon for the stanza of his Christmas Hymn.—MASON.

It is, however, remarked by Mr. Wakefield, that the last line but one of Gray's Sonnet is longer by two syllables than the corresponding verse in his original.

———"O'er-arching groves."

Where willowy Camus lingers with delight!
 Oft at the blush of dawn 30
 I trod your level lawn,
 Oft woo'd the gleam of Cynthia silver-bright
 In cloisters dim, far from the haunts of Folly,
 With Freedom by my side, and soft-eyed Melancholy."

IV.

But hark! the portals sound, and pacing forth 35
 With solemn steps and slow,

The scenery is improved, we will suppose, since Milton's time.

" Nuda nec arva placent umbrasque negantia molles : Quam male Plæbicolis convenit ille locus !"

WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 30. Oft at the blush of dawn.] Mr. Wakefield traces throughout this stanza an evident reference to Milton's Il Penseroso :

" To arched walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves,
 Sweet bird, that shun'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy!
 Thee chauntress oft the woods among
 I woo to hear thy even-song ;
 And missing thee, I walk unseen
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wandering moon,
 Riding near her highest noon.

* * * * *

But let my due feet never fail
 To walk the studious cloysters pale."

Ver. 35. But hark! the portals sound, and pacing forth.]
 The visionary procession of the worthies and benefactors of the High potentates, and dames of royal birth,

 And mitred fathers in long order go :
 Great Edward, with the lilies on his brow
 From haughty Gallia torn, 40
 And sad Chatillon, on her bridal morn
 That wept her bleeding Love, and princely Clare,
 And Anjou's heroine, and the paler rose,
 The rival of her crown and of her woes,

University, which is here exhibited with so much solemnity, is extremely interesting, and a noble effort of our poet's imagination.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 36. With solemn steps and slow.]

“ With wandering steps and slow.”

Milton, Par. Lost, xii. 648.

Ver. 39. Great Edward, with the lilies on his brow.] Edward the Third, who added the fleur de lys of France to the arms of England. He founded Trinity College.—MASON.

Ver. 41. And sad Chatillon, on her bridal morn.] Mary de Valentia, Countess of Pembroke, daughter of Guy de Chatillon, Comte de St. Paul in France: of whom tradition says, that her husband, Audemar de Valentia, Earl of Pembroke, was slain at a tournament on the day of his nuptials. She was the foundress of Pembroke College or Hall, under the name of Aula Mariæ de Valentia.—MASON.

Ver. 42. That wept her bleeding Love, and princely Clare.] Elizabeth de Burg, Countess of Clare, was wife of John de Burg, son and heir of the Earl of Ulster, and daughter of Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester, by Joan of Acres, daughter of Edward the First. Hence the Poet gives her the epithet of “ princely.” She founded Clare Hall.—MASON.

Ver. 43. And Anjou's heroine——] Margaret of Anjou, wife of Henry the Sixth, foundress of Queen's College. The poet has celebrated her conjugal fidelity in the former Ode: VI. epode 2, line 13.—MASON.

- And either Henry there, 45
 The murdered saint, and the majestic lord,
 That broke the bonds of Rome.
 (Their tears, their little triumphs o'er,
 Their human passions now no more,
 Save Charity, that glows beyond the tomb.) 50
 All that on Granta's fruitful plain
 Rich streams of regal bounty poured,
 And bad these awful fanes and turrets rise.
 To hail their Fitzroy's festal morning come ;
 And thus they speak in soft accord 55
 The liquid language of the skies :

V.

- “ What is grandeur, what is power?
 Heavier toil, superior pain.
 What the bright reward we gain?
 The grateful memory of the good. 60
 Sweet is the breath of vernal shower,
 The bee's collected treasures sweet,

Ver. 43. ————Paler rose.] Elizabeth Widville, wife of Edward the Fourth, (hence called the paler rose, as being of the House of York.) She added to the foundation of Margaret of Anjou.—MASON.

Ver. 50. Save Charity, that glows beyond the tomb.] “ Charity never faileth.”—St. Paul, 1 Cor. xiii. 8.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 56. The liquid language of the skies.]

———“ Cui liquidem pater Vocem.” HOR. Lib. i. Od. xxiv. 3.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 61. Sweet is the breath of vernal shower.]

“ Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet.”

Milton, Par. Lost, iv. 641.

Sweet music's melting fall, but sweeter yet
The still small voice of gratitude."

VI.

Foremost and leaning from her golden cloud 65
The venerable Margaret see!
" Welcome, my noble son, (she cries aloud,)
To this, thy kindred train, and me :
Pleased in thy lineaments we trace
A Tudor's fire, a Beaufort's grace. 70
Thy liberal heart, thy judging eye,
The flower unheeded shall descry,

———" Ουτε γαρ ὑπνος,

Ουτ' εαρ εξαπινας γλυκερωτερον, ουτε μελισσαις
Ανθεα, ὅσον εμιν μουσαι φιλαι. Theoc. Id. θ. v. 33.

Ver. 64. The still small voice of gratitude.] " After the fire, a still small voice," 1 Kings xix. 12. We find the same expressions again in a rejected stanza of the Elegy :

" Hark how the sacred calm that breathes around
Bids every fierce tumultuous passion cease ;
In still small accents whispering from the ground,
A grateful earnest of eternal peace. WAKEFIELD.

The following saying, ascribed to Mr. Chute, occurs in one of the Letters of our Author. See Sect. iv. Letter xxiii. " The still small voice of Poetry was not made to be heard in a crowd."

Ver. 66. The venerable Margaret see.] Countess of Richmond and Derby; the mother of Henry the Seventh, foundress of St. John's and Christ's Colleges.—MASON.

Ver. 70. A Tudor's fire, a Beaufort's grace.] The Countess was a Beaufort, and married to a Tudor : hence the application of this line to the Duke of Grafton, who claims descent from both these families.—MASON.

Ver. 71. Thy liberal heart, thy judging eye.] In these six verses, which are not more commendable for beauty of thought

And bid it round heaven's altars shed
 The fragrance of its blushing head :
 Shall raise from earth the latent gem 75
 To glitter on the diadem.

VII.

“ Lo ! Granta waits to lead her blooming band,
 Not obvious, not obtrusive, she
 No vulgar praise, no venal incense flings ;
 Nor dares, with courtly tongue refined, 80
 Profane thy inborn royalty of mind :
 She reveres herself and thee.
 With modest pride to grace thy youthful brow,
 The laureate wreath, that Cecil wore, she brings, than simplicity of language, our Author points out, with infinite address, the circumstances of his own case.—WAKEFIELD.

There is a peculiarity of expression in this line, of which a similar instance has been already noticed in the Bard : note to line 64.

Ver. 72. The flower unheeded shall descry.] We find, as Mr. Mitford observes, the flower and the gem again in the Elegy.

Ver. 78. Not obvious, not obtrusive, she.]

“ Not obvious, nor obtrusive, but retired.”

Par. Lost, viii. 504.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 82. She reveres herself and thee.]

—“ Παντων δε μαλιστα' αισχυνηο σαυτον.”

Pythag. Golden verses.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 83. With modest pride to grace thy youthful brow.]

“ Yielded with coy submission, modest pride.”

Par. Lost, iv. 310.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 84. The laureate wreath, that Cecil wore, she brings.] Lord Treasurer Burleigh was Chancellor of the University in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.—MASON.

And to thy just, thy gentle hand, 85
 Submits the Fasces of her sway,
 While spirits blest above, and men below
 Join with glad voice the loud symphonious lay."

VIII.

" Through the wild waves as they roar,
 With watchful eye and dauntless mien, 90
 Thy steady course of honour keep,
 Nor fear the rocks, nor seek the shore :
 The star of Brunswick smiles serene,
 And gilds the horrors of the deep."

Ver. 85. And to thy just, thy gentle hand.] Mr. Wakefield compares this with Horace,—“ lenibus imperiis ;” and Milton’s “ gentle sway :” but Mr. Mitford discovers a yet closer resemblance to Dryden, Threnod. August, 284 :

“ And with a willing hand restores
The fasces of the main.”

Ver. 92. Nor fear the rocks, nor seek the shore.] The deep follows just below, or the poet would have written :

Nor fear the deep, nor seek the shore—which had been more accurate ; for so his original :

“ Rectius vives, licini, neque altum
 Semper urguendo, neque, dum procellas
 Cautus horrescis, nimium premendo
 Littus iniquum.” Hor. Lib. ii. Od. x. 1.—WAKEFIELD.

This Ode, to which, on the title, I have given the epithet of irregular, is the only one of the kind which Mr. Gray ever wrote ; and its being written occasionally, and for music, is a sufficient apology for the defect. Exclusive of this, (for a defect it certainly is,) it appears to me, in point of lyrical arrangement and expression, to be equal to most of his other Odes. It is remarkable that, amongst the many irregular Odes which have been written in our own language, Dryden's and Pope's, on St. Cecilia's Day, are the only ones that may properly be said to have lived. The reason is, (as it is hinted in a note on Letter xxx. Sect. 4. of the Memoirs,) that this mode of composition is so extremely easy, that it gives the writer an opening to every kind of poetical licentiousness: whereas the regularly repeated stanza, and still more the regular succession of strophe, antistrophe, and epode, put so strong a curb on the wayward imagination, that when she has once paced in it, she seldom chooses to submit to it a second time. It is therefore greatly to be wished, in order to stifle in their birth a quantity of compositions, which are at the same time wild and jejune, that regular Odes and these only, should be deemed legitimate amongst us.

The Cambridge edition (published at the expence of the University) is here followed; but I have added at the bottom of the page a number of explanatory notes, which this Ode seemed to want still more than that which preceded it; especially when given, not to the University only, but the public in general, who may be reasonably supposed to know little of the particular founders of different Colleges and their history here alluded to. For the sake of uniformity in the page, I have divided the Ode into stanzas, and discarded the musical divisions of recitative, air, and chorus; but shall here insert them in order, according as the different stanzas were set by Dr. Randal, Professor of Music.

- Stanza 1. The first eight lines "air," the four last "chorus."
 Stanza 2. "Recitative" throughout, but accompanied at the sixth line.
 Stanza 3. "Air."
 Stanza 4. "Recitative" throughout, the last nine lines accompanied.
 Stanza 5. "Air Quartetto." The musical reader will easily see and admire how well this stanza is suited to that species of music.
 Stanza 6. First six lines "recitative;" the rest of the stanza, beginning at "thy liberal heart," "air."
 Stanza 7. "Recitative" throughout.
 Stanza 8. "Grand chorus," and well suited for that purpose.

MASON.

ODE VIII.

THE FATAL SISTERS.

FROM THE NORSE TONGUE.

To be found in the Orcades of Thormodus Torfæus ; Hafniæ, 1697, folio ; and also in Bartholinus, p. 617. lib. iii. c. 1. 4to.

—♦—

Vitt er orpit fyrir valfalli, &c.

In the eleventh century Siguard, Earl of the Orkney islands, went with a fleet of ships and a considerable body of troops into Ireland, to the assistance of Sictryg with the silken beard, who was then making war on his father-in-law Brian, king of Dublin: the earl and all his forces were cut to pieces, and Sictryg was in danger of a total defeat; but the enemy had a greater loss by the death of Brian their king, who fell in the action. On Christmas-day^a, (the day of the battle,) a native of Caithness, in Scotland, of the name of Darrud, saw at a distance a number of persons on horseback, riding full speed towards a hill, and seeming to enter into it. Curiosity led him to follow them, till looking through an opening in the rocks, he saw twelve gigantic figures resembling women:

^a The people of the Orkney islands were Christians, yet did not become so till after A. D. 966, probably it happened in 995; but though they and the other Gothic nations no longer worshipped their old divinities, yet they never doubted of their existence, or forgot their ancient mythology, as appears from the history of Olaus Tryggueson.—GRAY.

they were all employed about a loom ; and as they wove, they sung the following dreadful song ; which when they had finished, they tore the web into twelve pieces, and (each taking her portion) galloped six to the north, and as many to the south. These were the Valkyriur, female divinities, servants of Odin, (or Woden,) in the Gothic mythology. Their name signifies Chusers of the slain. They were mounted on swift horses, with drawn swords in their hands ; and in the throng of battle selected such as were destined to slaughter, and conducted them to Valhalla, the hall of Odin, or paradise of the brave ; where they attended the banquet, and served the departed heroes with horns of mead and ale.

Now the storm begins to lower,
 (Haste, the loom of hell prepare,)
 Iron sleet of arrowy shower
 Hurtles in the darkened air.

Glittering lances are the loom, 5
 Where the dusky warp we strain,

Ver. 1. Now the storm begins to lower.] The design Mr. Gray had in publishing this and the succeeding poems, is stated in a letter to Mr. Walpole : see Sect. iv. Letter 80.

Mr. Wakefield disdains to comment upon them, as being translations ; this before us, however, is by no means a literal one, and has been esteemed inferior to those which follow.

Ver. 3. Iron sleet of arrowy shower.]

“ How quick they wheeled ; and, flying, behind them shot
 Sharp sleet of arrowy shower.”

Milton's Par. Reg. iii. 324.—GRAY.

Ver. 4. Hurtles in the darkened air.]

“ The noise of battle hurtled in the air.”

Shakspeare's Jul. Cæs.—GRAY.

Weaving many a soldier's doom,
Orkney's woe, and Randver's bane.

See the griesly texture grow !
('Tis of human entrails made,) 10
And the weights, that play below,
Each a gasping warrior's head.

Shafts for shuttles, dipt in gore,
Shoot the trembling cords along.
Sword, that once a monarch bore, 15
Keep the tissue close and strong.

Mista, black terrific maid,
Sangrida, and Hilda, see,
Join the wayward work to aid :
'Tis the woof of victory. 20

Ere the ruddy sun be set,
Pikes must shiver, javelins sing,
Blade with clattering buckler meet,
Hauberk crash, and helmet ring.

(Weave the crimson web of war) 25
Let us go, and let us fly,
Where our friends the conflict share,
Where they triumph, where they die.

Ver. 17. Mista, black terrific maid.] This name does not occur in the original, but we have instead, beside those in the next line, Hiorthrimula and Swipula. The name Geira, in line 32, is, in the original, Gunna.

As the paths of fate we tread,
Wading through th' ensanguined field, 30
Gondula, and Geira, spread
O'er the youthful king your shield.

We the reins to slaughter give,
Ours to kill, and ours to spare:
Spite of danger he shall live. 35
(Weave the crimson web of war.)

They, whom once the desert-beach
Pent within its bleak domain,
Soon their ample sway shall stretch
O'er the plenty of the plain. 40

Low the dauntless Earl is laid,
Gored with many a gaping wound:
Fate demands a nobler head;
Soon a king shall bite the ground.

Long his loss shall Eirin weep, 45
Ne'er again his likeness see;
Long her strains in sorrow steep,
Strains of immortality!

Horror covers all the heath,
Clouds of carnage blot the sun. 50
Sisters, weave the web of death;
Sisters, cease; the work is done.

Hail the task, and hail the hands !
 Songs of joy and triumph sing !
 Joy to the victorious bands ; 55
 Triumph to the younger king.

Mortal, thou that hear'st the tale,
 Learn the tenor of our song.
 Scotland, through each winding vale
 Far and wide the notes prolong. 60

Sisters, hence with spurs of speed :
 Each her thundering falchion wield ;
 Each bestride her sable steed.
 Hurry, hurry to the field !

The occasion of Mr. Gray's writing (for it may be rather called so than versifying this and the three following Odes, however closely he has done them) is given in his Life, prefixed to this volume, and his reason for first publishing them in the eightieth letter of the fourth section. Their best comment, since it is the best illustration of their excellency, will be to insert here the Latin versions of the originals from whence they were taken ; as it is probable that many readers, who have hitherto admired them as compositions, have not compared them with those literal versions for want of having the books (which are not common ones) at hand.

Ex Orcadibus Thormodi Torfæi. Hafniæ, 1697.

Lætè diffunditur
 Ante stragem futuram
 Sagittarum nubes :
 Depluit sanguis :

Jam hastis applicatur
 Cineracea
 Tela virorum,
 Quam amicæ texunt
 Rubro subtegmine
 Randveri mortis.

Texitur hæc tela
 Intestinis humanis,
 Staminique strictè alligantur
 Capita humana,
 Sunt sanguine rorata
 Hastæ pro insilibus,
 Textoria instrumenta ferrea,
 Ac sagittæ pro radiis:
 Densabimus gladiis
 Hanc victoriae telam.

Prodeunt ad texendum Hilda,
 Et Hiorthrimula,
 Sangrida, et Swipula;
 Cum strictis gladiis;
 Hastile frangetur,
 Scutum diffindetur,
 Ensisque
 Clypeo illidetur.

Texamus, texamus
 Telam Darradar!
 Hunc (gladium) rex juvenis
 Prius possidebat.
 Prodeamus,
 Et cohortes intremus,
 Ubi nostri amici
 Armis dimicant!

Texamus, texamus
 Telam Darradi^a ;
 Et regi deinde
 Deinde adhæreamus !
 Ibi videbant
 Sanguine rorata scuta
 Gunna et Gondula,
 Quæ regem tutabantur.

Texamus, texamus
 Telam Darradi !
 Ubi arma concrepant
 Bellacium virorum.
 Non sinamus eum
 Vitâ privari :
 Habent Valkyriæ
 Cædis potestatem.

Illi populi terras regent,
 Qui deserta promontoria
 Anteà incolebant.
 Dico potenti regi
 Mortem imminere.
 Jam sagittis occubuit comes ;

Et Hibernis
 Dolor accidet,
 Qui nunquam
 Apud viros delebitur.
 Jam tela texta est.
 Campus verò (sanguine) roratus ;

^a So Thormodus interprets it, as though Darradar were the name of the person who saw this vision ; but in reality it signifies a range of spears, from daur hasta, and radir ordo.—GRAY.

Terras percurret
Conflictus militum.

Nunc horrendum est
Circumspicere,
Cum sanguinea nubes
Per aëra volitet :
Tingetur aer
Sanguine virorum,
Antequam vaticinia nostra
Omnia corruant.

Benè canimus
De rege juvene,
Victoriae carmina multa :
Bene sit nobis canentibus.
Discat autem ille,
Qui auscultat,
Bellica carmina multa,
Et viris referat.

Equitemus in equis,
Quoniam efferimus gladios strictos
Ex hoc loco.

ODE IX.

THE VEGTAM'S KIVITHA ;

OR,

THE DESCENT OF ODIN.

FROM THE NORSE TONGUE.

The original is to be found in Sæmund's Edda, and in Bartholinus, De Causis contemnendæ Mortis; Hafniæ, 1689, quarto, lib. iii. c. ii. p. 632.

Upreis Odinn allda gaufr, &c.

UP rose the king of men with speed,
And saddled strait his coal-black steed ;

Ver. 1. Up rose the king of men with speed.] The original of this Ode does not open thus abruptly, but introduces the story here related by some prefatory lines, which are translated by Mr. Herbert in his Select Iceland Poetry, where the reader may find further information illustrative of the original text.

When the anxiety of Odin was excited by an intimation that his son should be slain, all the gods were interested to avert the catastrophe ; but they could not themselves determine how far their measures to prevent it would be successful. In this uncertainty the king of men rises up from the assembly of divinities, resolved himself to ascertain the event from the surest authority.

Down the yawning steep he rode,
 That leads to Hela's drear abode.
 Him the dog of darkness spied ; 5
 His shaggy throat he open'd wide,
 While from his jaws, with carnage fill'd,
 Foam and human gore distill'd :
 Hoarse he bays with hideous din,
 Eyes that glow, and fangs that grin ; 10
 And long pursues, with fruitless yell,
 The father of the powerful spell.

Ver. 4. That leads to Hela's drear abode.] Nifheimr, the hell of the Gothic nations, consisted of nine worlds, to which were devoted all such as died of sickness, old age, or by any other means than in battle : over it presided Hela, the goddess of death.—MASON.

Hela, in the Edda, is described with a dreadful countenance, and her body half flesh-colour and half blue.—GRAY.

Ver. 5. Him the dog of darkness spied.] The Edda gives this dog the name of Managarmar ; he fed upon the lives of those that were to die.

There is a description very similar to this in Sackville's (Lord Buckhurst) Induction to the Mirror for Magistrates :

“ We passed on with steps and pace unmeet,
 A rumbling noise confused with howl and bark
 Of dogs, shook all the ground under our feet,
 And struck the din within our ears so deep,
 As half distraught unto the ground I fell,
 Besought return, and not to visit hell.

* * * * *

We had not long forth past, but that we saw
 Black Cerberus, the hideous hound of hell,
 With bristles reared, and with a three-mouthed jaw,
 Fore-dinning th' air with his horrible yell.”

Onward still his way he takes,
 (The groaning earth beneath him shakes,)
 Till full before his fearless eyes 15
 The portals nine of hell arise.

Right against the eastern gate,
 By the moss-grown pile he sate ;
 Where long of yore to sleep was laid
 The dust of the prophetic maid. 20
 Facing to the northern clime,
 Thrice he traced the Runic rhyme ;
 Thrice pronounced, in accents dread,
 The thrilling verse that wakes the dead ;
 Till from out the hollow ground 25
 Slowly breathed a sullen sound.

PROPHETESS.

What call unknown, what charms presume
 To break the quiet of the tomb ?
 Who thus afflicts my troubled sprite,
 And drags me from the realms of night? 30
 Long on these mouldering bones have beat
 The winter's snow, the summer's heat,
 The drenching dews, and driving rain!
 Let me, let me sleep again.

Ver. 24. The thrilling verse that wakes the dead.] The original word is vallgaldr ; from valr mortuus, and galdr incantatio.—GRAY.

Thrilling is surely in this place a peculiarly fine epithet.

Ver. 34. Let me, let me sleep again.] An anonymous critic

POEMS. 89

Who is he, with voice unblest,
That calls me from the bed of rest? 35

ODIN.

A traveller, to thee unknown,
Is he that calls, a warrior's son.
Thou the deeds of light shalt know ;
Tell me what is done below, 40
For whom yon glittering board is spread,
Drest for whom yon golden bed?

PROPHETESS.

Mantling in the goblet see
The pure beverage of the bee:
O'er it hangs the shield of gold ; 45
'Tis the drink of Balder bold:
Balder's head to death is given.
Pain can reach the sons of heaven!
Unwilling I my lips uncloze:
Leave me, leave me to repose. 50

(see Quarterly Review, vol. ix.) has cited the following passage from Lucan, Phars. vi. 320 :

—————" Sic postquam fata peregit,
Stat vultu moestus tacito, mortemque reposcit."

Ver. 40. Tell me what is done below.] Odin we find, both from this Ode and the Edda, was solicitous about the fate of his son Balder, who had dreamed he was soon to die. The Edda mentions the manner of his death, when killed by Odin's other son Hoder; and also that Hoder was himself slain afterwards by Vali the son of Odin and Rinda, consonant with this prophesy.

ODIN.

Once again my call obey,
 Prophetess, arise, and say,
 What dangers Odin's child await,
 Who the author of his fate?

Ver. 50. Leave me, leave me to repose.] "Quid, oro, me post Lethæa pocula, jam Stygiis paludibus innatantem ad momentariæ vitæ reducit officia? Desine jam, precor, desine, ac me in meam quietem permitte." Apuleii Memor. ii. 40. The anonymous critic above mentioned, who also quotes this passage, observes, that "the whole story, if compared with this Ode, will exhibit a strong resemblance between the Thessalian and Norwegian incantations."

Ver. 51. Once again my call obey,
 Prophetess, arise, and say.]

Women were looked upon by the Gothic nations as having a peculiar insight into futurity; and some there were that made profession of magic arts and divination. These travelled round the country, and were received in every house with great respect and honour. Such a woman bore the name of Volva Seidkona, or Spakona. The dress of Thorbiorga, one of these prophetesses, is described at large in Eirik's Rauda Sogu, (apud Bartholin. lib. i. cap. iv. p. 688.) She had on a blue vest, spangled all over with stones, a necklace of glass beads, and a cap made of the skin of a black lamb lined with white cat-skin. She leaned on a staff adorned with brass, with a round head set with stones, and was girt with an Hunlandish belt, at which hung her pouch full of magical instruments. Her buskins were of rough calf-skin, bound on with thongs studded with knobs of brass, and her gloves of white cat-skin, the fur turned inwards," &c. They were also called Fiolkyngi, or Fiol-kunnug, i. e. Multi-scia: and Visindakonu, i. e. Oraculorum Mulier, Nornir; i. e. Parcæ.—GRAY.

PROPHETESS.

In Hoder's hand the hero's doom ; 55
 His brother sends him to the tomb.
 Now my weary lips I close:
 Leave me, leave me to repose.

ODIN.

Prophetess, my spell obey,
 Once again arise, and say, 60
 Who th' avenger of his guilt,
 By whom shall Hoder's blood be spilt?

PROPHETESS.

In the caverns of the west,
 By Odin's fierce embrace comprest,
 A wonderous boy shall Rinda bear, 65
 Who ne'er shall comb his raven-hair,
 Nor wash his visage in the stream,
 Nor see the sun's departing beam,
 Till he on Hoder's corse shall smile
 Flaming on the funeral pile. 70
 Now my weary lips I close :
 Leave me, leave me to repose.

ODIN.

Yet awhile my call obey ;
 Prophetess, awake, and say,
 What virgins these, in speechless woe, 75
 That bend to earth their solemn brow,

Ver. 75. What virgins these, in speechless woe.] These were probably the Nornir or Parcæ, just now mentioned ; their names

That their flaxen tresses tear,
 And snowy veils that float in air?
 Tell me whence their sorrows rose :
 Then I leave thee to repose. 80

PROPHETESS.

Ha! no traveller art thou,
 King of men, I know thee now ;
 Mightiest of a mighty line——

ODIN.

No boding maid of skill divine
 Art thou, nor prophetess of good ; 85
 But mother of the giant brood!

were Urda, Verdandi, and Skulda ; they were the dispensers of good destinies. As their names signify time past, present, and future, it is probable they were always invisible to mortals : therefore, when Odin asks this question on seeing them, he betrays himself to be a god ; which elucidates the next speech of the prophetess.—MASON.

Ver. 86. But mother of the giant brood.] In the Latin, “ Mater trium gigantum.” He means, therefore, probably, Angerbode, who, from her name, seems to be “ no prophetess of good,” and who bore to Lok, as the Edda says, three children ; the Wolf Fenris, the great Serpent of Midgard, and Hela, all of them called giants in that wild but curious system of mythology ; with which, if the reader wishes to be acquainted, he had better consult the translation of M. Mallet’s Introduction to the History of Denmark, than the original itself, as some mistakes of consequence are corrected by the translator. The book is entitled, “ Northern Antiquities.” Printed for Carnan, 1770, 2 vols. 8vo.—MASON.

PROPHETESS.

Hie thee hence, and boast at home,
 That never shall inquirer come
 To break my iron-sleep again ;
 Till Lok has burst his ten-fold chain ; 90
 Never, till substantial night
 Has re-assum'd her ancient right ;
 Till wrapt in flames, in ruin hurl'd,
 Sinks the fabric of the world.

Ver. 90. Till Lok has burst his ten-fold chain.] Lok is the evil being, who continues in chains till the twilight of the god approaches, when he shall break his bonds; the human race, the stars, and sun, shall disappear; the earth sink in the seas, and fire consume the skies: even Odin himself, and his kindred deities, shall perish.—GRAY.

The Vegtam's Kivitha, from Bartholinus, lib. iii. c. ii. p. 632.

Surgebat Odinus,
 Virorum summus
 Et Sleipnerum^b
 Ephippio stravit.
 Equitabat deorsum
 Nifhelam versus.
 Obviam habuit catellum
 Ab Helæ habitaculis venientem ;

Huic sanguine aspersa erant
 Pectus anterius,
 Rictus, morbendi avidus,
 Ex maxillarum infima :

^b Sleipner was the horse of Odin, which had eight legs. Vide Edda.

Allatrabat ille,
Et rictum diduxit
Magiæ patri,
Et diu latrabat.

Equitavit Odinus
(Terra subtus tremuit)
Donec ad altum veniret
Helæ habitaculum.
Tum equitavit Odinus
Ad orientale ostii latus,
Ubi fatidicæ
Tumulum esse novit.

Sapienti carmina
Mortuos excitantia cecinit,
Boream inspexit,
Literas (tumulo) imposuit,
Sermones proferre cœpit,
Responsa poposcit,
Donec invita surgeret,
Et mortuorum sermonem proferret.

FATIDICA. Quisnam hominum
Mihi ignotorum
Mihi facere præsumit
Tristem animam ?
Nive eram, et
Nimbo aspersa,
Pluviâque rorata :
Mortua diu jacui.

ODINUS. Viator nō minor,
Bellatoris filius sum.
Enarra mihi, quæ apud Helam geruntur ;
Ego tibi quæ in mundo.
Cuinam sedes auro stratæ sunt,
Lecti pulchri,
Auro ornati ?

F. Hic Baldero medo
 Paratus extat,
 Purus potus,
 Scuto superinjecto :
 Divina verò soboles
 Dolore afficietur.
 Invita hæc dixi,
 Jamque silebo.

O. Noli, Fatidica, tacere.
 Te interrogare volo,
 Donec omnia novero.
 Adhuc scire volo,
 Quisnam Baldero
 Necem inferet,
 Ac Odini filium
 Vitâ privabit?

F. Hodus excelsum fert
 Honoratum fratrem illûc.
 Is Baldero
 Necem inferet,
 Et Odini filium
 Vitâ privabit.
 Invita hæc dixi,
 Jamque tacebo.

O. Noli tacere, Fatidica,
 Adhuc te interrogare volo,
 Donec omnia novero.
 Adhuc scire volo,
 Quisnam Hodo
 Odium rependet,
 Aut Balderi interfectorem
 Occidendo rogo adaptet?

F. Rinda filium pariet
 In habitaculis occidentalibus:

Hic Odini filius,
Unam noctem natus, armis utetur ;
Manum non lavabit,
Nec caput pectet,
Antequam rogo imponet
Balderi inimicum.
Invita hæc dixi,
Jamque tacebo.

O. Noli tacere, Fatidica,
Adhuc te interrogare volo.
Quænam sint virgines,
Quæ præ cogitationibus lachrymantur,
Et in cœlum jaciunt
Cervicum pepla ?
Hoc solum mihi dicas,
Nam prius non dormies.

F. Non tu viator es,
Ut antea credidi ;
Sed potius Odinus,
Virorum summus.

O. Tu non es Fatidica,
Nec sapiens fœmina,
Sed potiens trium
Gigantum mater.

F. Equita domum, Odine,
Ac in his gloriare :
Nemo tali modo veniet
Ad sciscitandum,
Usque dum Lokus
Vinculis solvatur,
Et Deorum crepusculum
Dissolventes aderint.

ODE X.

THE TRIUMPHS OF OWEN^a.

A FRAGMENT.

FROM THE WELSH.

OWEN'S praise demands my song,
 Owen swift, and Owen strong ;
 Fairest flower of Roderic's stem,
 Gwyneth's ^b shield, and Britain's gem.
 He nor heaps his brooded stores, 5
 Nor on all profusely pours ;
 Lord of every regal art,
 Liberal hand, and open heart.

Big with hosts of mighty name,
 Squadrons three against him came ; 10
 This the force of Eirin hiding,
 Side by side as proudly riding,

^a From Mr. Evans's Specimens of the Welsh Poetry; London, 1764, quarto. pp. 25, and 127. Owen succeeded his father Griffin in the principality of North Wales, A. D. 1120. This battle was fought near forty years afterwards.

^b North Wales.

On her shadow long and gay
 Lochlin^c ploughs the watery way ;
 There the Norman sails afar, 15
 Catch the winds, and join the war:
 Black and huge along they sweep,
 Burdens of the angry deep.

Dauntless on his native sands
 The dragon-son of Mona stands ; 20
 In glittering arms and glory drest,
 High he rears his ruby crest.
 There the thundering strokes begin,
 There the press, and there the din ;
 Talymalfra's rocky shore 25
 Echoing to the battle's roar.

^c Denmark.

Ver. 20. The dragon-son of Mona stands.] The red dragon is the device of Cadwallader, which all his descendants bore on their banners.—MASON.

Mona is here put for the isle of Anglesea, to which the combined fleets of Iceland, Denmark, and Norway, directed their invasion on the territory of Prince Owen Gwynedd. A part of the assailing force was landed from the fleet in the frith of Menai ; and a kind of mixed engagement ensued, some fighting from the shore, others from ships. Dr. Evans accounts for the great slaughter, by supposing that the battle took place at low water, so that they could not sail. "This," he adds, "will doubtless remind many of the spirited account, delivered by the noblest historian of ancient Greece, of a similar conflict on the shore of Pylus, between the Athenians and Spartans, under the gallant Brasidas." Thucyd. Bel. Pelop. lib. iv. cap. 12.

Check'd by the torrent-tide of blood,
 Backward Meinai rolls his flood ;
 While, heaped his master's feet around,
 Prostrate warriors gnaw the ground. 30
 Where his glowing eye-balls turn,
 Thousand banners round him burn :
 Where he points his purple spear,
 Hasty, hasty Rout is there,
 Marking with indignant eye 35
 Fear to stop, and shame to fly.
 There Confusion, Terror's child,
 Conflict fierce, and Ruin wild,
 Agony, that pants for breath,
 Despair and honourable Death. 40
 * * * * *

Ver. 27. Check'd by the torrent-tide of blood.] This and the three following lines are not in the former editions, but are now added from the author's MSS.—MASON.

Mr. Gray entitles this Ode, in his own edition, a FRAGMENT ; but from the prose version of Mr. Evans, which I shall here insert, it will appear that nothing is omitted, except a single hyperbole at the end, which I print in italics.

Panegyric upon Owen Gwynedd, Prince of North Wales, by Gwalchmai, the son of Melir, in the year 1137^d.

I will extol the generous hero, descended from the race of Roderic, the bulwark of his country ; a prince eminent for his good qualities, the glory of Britain, Owen the brave and expert in arms, a prince that neither hoardeth nor coveteth riches.

^d See Evans's Specimen of Welsh Poetry, p. 25, and for the original Welsh, p. 127.

Three fleets arrived, vessels of the main; three powerful fleets of the first rate, furiously to attack him on the sudden: one from Jwerddon^e; the other full of well-armed Lochlynians^f, making a grand appearance on the floods; the third from the transmarine Normans, which was attended with an immense, though successful, toil.

The Dragon of Mona's sons was so brave in action, that there was a great tumult on their furious attack; and before the prince himself there was vast confusion, havoc, conflict, honourable death, bloody battle, horrible consternation, and upon Tal Malvre a thousand banners; there was an outrageous carnage, and the rage of spears and hasty signs of violent indignation. Blood raised the tide of the Menäi, and the crimson of human gore stained the brine. There were glittering cuirasses, and the agony of gashing wounds, and the mangled warriors prostrate before the chief, distinguished by his crimson lance. Lloegria was put into confusion; the contest and confusion was great; and the glory of our prince's wide-wasting sword shall be celebrated in an hundred languages to give him his merited praise.

^e Iceland.

^f Danes and Norwegians.

ODE XI.

THE DEATH OF HOEL.

SELECTED FROM THE GODODIN^a.

HAD I but the torrent's might,
 With headlong rage and wild affright
 Upon Deïra's squadrons hurled,
 To rush, and sweep them from the world!

Too, too secure in youthful pride, 5
 By them, my friend, my Hoel died,
 Great Cian's son : of Madoc old
 He ask'd no heaps of hoarded gold ;
 Alone in nature's wealth arrayed,
 He asked, and had the lovely maid. 10

To Cattraeth's vale in glittering row
 Twice two hundred warriors go ;

^a Of Aneurim, styled the Monarch of the Bards. He flourished about the time of Taliessin, A. D. 570. This Ode is extracted from the Gododin, (see Mr. Evans's Specimens, p. 71 and 73,) and now first published.—MASON.

Ver. 11. To Cattraeth's vale in glittering row.] The Bards of those days did not claim the privilege of Archilochus or Horace: they could fight as well as sing. Thus the Gododin of

Every warrior's manly neck
 Chains of regal honour deck,
 Wreathed in many a golden link : 15
 From the golden cup they drink
 Nectar, that the bees produce,
 Or the grape's ecstatic juice.
 Flushed with mirth and hope they burn :
 But none from Cattræth's vale return, 20
 Save Aëron brave, and Conan strong,
 (Bursting through the bloody throng,)
 And I, the meanest of them all,
 That live to weep, and sing their fall. 24

Aneurim is an heroic poem, in celebration of a combat, in which he himself, with three hundred warriors of the first rank, was engaged. He and two others alone survived, and there seems to have been some reason for this destruction. The Welshmen of that generation were, like their high-spirited descendants, very fond of ale, or at least of a beverage which then supplied all the purposes of it; and it was this fatal passion, as appears from the original extract annexed, which ruined the fortunes of the day at Cattræth.

Ver. 24. That live to weep and sing their fall.] The lively writer of a poem, entitled "Prospectus and Specimen of an intended National Work," has reprobated the tone of sentimental modesty which our author has here given to the warrior-bard :

" And bold Aneurim, all bedripped with gore
 Bursting by force from the beleaguered glen,
 Arrogant, haughty, fierce, of fiery mood,
 Not meek and mean, as Gray misunderstood."

I find amongst Mr. Gray's papers a few more lines taken from other parts of the Gododin, which I shall here add, with their respective Latin versions. They may serve to shew succeeding poets the manner in which the spirit of these their ancient predecessors in the art may best be transfused into a modern imitation of them.

HAVE ye seen the tusky boar,
Or the bull, with sullen roar,
On surrounding foes advance?
So Caradoc bore his lance.

Quando ad bellum properabat Caradocus,
Filius apri silvestris qui truncando mutilavit hostes,
Taurus aciei in pugnæ conflictu,
Is lignum (i. e. hastam) ex manu contorsit.

CONAN's name, my lay, rehearse,
Build to him the lofty verse,
Sacred tribute of the bard,
Verse, the hero's sole reward.
As the flame's devouring force;
As the whirlwind in its course;
As the thunder's fiery stroke,
Glancing on the shivered oak;
Did the sword of Conan mow
The crimson harvest of the foe.

Debitus est tibi cantus qui honorem assecutus es maximum,
Qui eras instar ignis, tonitruï, et tempestatis,
Viribus eximie, eques bellicose, Rhudd Fedel, bellum meditaris.

From the extract of the Gododin, which Mr. Evans has given us in his "Dissertatio de Bardis," in the forementioned book,

I shall here transcribe those particular passages which Mr. Gray selected for imitation in this Ode.

Si mihi liceret vindictam in Deirorum populum ferre,
 Æque ac diluvium omnes unâ strage prostrarem.
 Amicum enim amisi incautus,
 Qui in resistendo firmus erat.
 Non petiit magnanimus dotem a socero
 Filius CIANI ex strenuô Gwyngwn ortus.

Viri ibant ad Cattraeth, et fuère insignes,
 Vinum et mulsum ex aureis poculis erat eorum potus.
 Trecenti et sexaginta tres aureis torquibus insigniti erant ;
 Ex iis autem, qui nimio potu madidi ad bellum properabant,
 Non evasère nisi tres, qui sibi gladiis viam muniebant ;
 Scilicet bellator de Acron, et Conanus Dacarawd,
 Et egomet ipse (scilicet Bardus Aneurinus) sanguine rubens :
 Aliter ad hoc carmen compingendum non superstes fuisset.

Whoever compares Mr. Gray's poetical versions of these four lyrical pieces with the literal translations which I have here inserted, will, I am persuaded, be convinced that nothing of the kind was ever executed with more fire, and, at the same time, more judgment. He keeps up through them all the wild romantic spirit of his originals ; elevates them by some well-chosen epithet or image where they flag, yet in such a manner as is perfectly congruous with the general idea of the poems ; and if he either varies or omits any of the original thoughts, they are only of that kind which, according to our modern sentiments, would appear vulgar or ludicrous : two instances of this kind occur in the latter part of this last Ode. How well has he turned the idea of the fourth line : " Ex iis qui nimio potu madidi !" and the conclusion, " Aliter ad hoc carmen compingendum," &c. The former of which is ridiculous ; the latter insipid.

SONNET

ON THE

DEATH OF MR. RICHARD WEST.

IN vain to me the smiling mornings shine,
 And reddening Phœbus lifts his golden fire :
 The birds in vain their amorous descant join ;
 Or cheerful fields resume their green attire :
 These ears, alas! for other notes repine, 5
 A different object do these eyes require :
 My lonely anguish melts no heart but mine ;
 And in my breast th' imperfect joys expire.
 Yet morning smiles the busy race to cheer,
 And new-born pleasure brings to happier men: 10

If what Boileau says be true in his " Art Poetique," that
 " Un sonnet sans defauts vaut seul un long poeme," the merit of this little poem is decided. It is written in strict observance of those strict rules, which the poet there lays down.
 Vide " Art Poetique, Chant. ii. line 82." Milton, I believe, was the first of our English poets who exactly followed the Italian model: our author varies from him only in making the rhymes in the two first quartetts alternate, which is more agreeable to the English ear than the other method of arranging them.—
 MASON.

The fields to all their wonted tribute bear .
 To warm their little loves the birds complain :
 I fruitless mourn to him that cannot hear,
 And weep the more, because I weep in vain.

Ver. 14. And weep the more, because I weep in vain.] Mr. Mitford quotes Cibber's alteration of Richard the Third, act ii. sc. 2:

" So must we weep, because we weep in vain." ,

Also the saying ascribed to Solon :

" Δι' αυτο δε τουτο δακρυω, οτι ουδεν ανυττω."

Rogers in his Italy has—

" And all clung round him weeping bitterly ; Weeping the more because they wept in vain."

EPITAPH

ON

MRS. CLARKE^a.

Lo! where this silent marble weeps,
 A friend, a wife, a mother sleeps ;
 A heart, within whose sacred cell
 The peaceful virtues lov'd to dwell.
 Affection warm, and faith sincere, 5
 And soft humanity were there.
 In agony, in death resign'd,
 She felt the wound she left behind.
 Her infant image here below,
 Sits smiling on a father's woe : 10

^a This lady, the wife of Dr. Clarke, physician at Epsom, died April 27, 1757; and is buried in the church of Beckenham, Kent.

Ver. 7. In agony, in death resign'd.] In the place of this and the three next verses originally stood the following lines:

To hide her cares her only art,
 Her pleasure, pleasures to impart.
 In lingering pain, in death resign'd,
 Her latest agony of mind
 Was felt for him, who could not save
 His all from an untimely grave.

Whom what awaits, while yet he strays
Along the lonely vale of days?
A pang, to secret sorrow dear ;
A sigh ; an unavailing tear ;
Till time shall every grief remove. 15
With life, with memory, and with love.

Ver. 11. Whom what awaits, while yet he strays.] The construction here is a little hard, and creates obscurity, which is always least to be pardoned in an epitaph.—MASON.

EPITAPH

ON

SIR WILLIAM WILLIAMS.

HERE, foremost in the dangerous paths of fame,
Young Williams fought for England's fair renown;
His mind each muse, each grace adored his frame,
Nor envy dared to view him with a frown.

At Aix his voluntary sword he drew, 5
There first in blood his infant honour sealed;
From fortune, pleasure, science, love, he flew,
And scorned repose when Britain took the field.

With eyes of flame, and cool undaunted breast,
Victor he stood on Bellisle's rocky steps— 10
Ah, gallant youth! this marble tells the rest,
Where melancholy friendship bends, and weeps.

^a This Epitaph (hitherto unpublished) was written at the request of Mr. Frederic Montagu, who intended to have inscribed it on a monument at Bellisle, at the siege of which this accomplished youth was killed, 1761; but from some difficulty attending the erection of it, this design was not executed.

This is as perfect, in its kind, as the foregoing sonnet. Sir William Williams, in the expedition to Aix, was on board the Magnanime with Lord Howe; and was deputed to receive the capitulation.—MASON.

ELEGY,

WRITTEN

IN A COUNTRY CHURCH-YARD^a.

THE curfew tolls the knell of parting day,
The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea,

^a The most popular of all our Author's publications; it ran through eleven editions in a very short space of time; was finely translated into Latin by Messrs. Ansty and Roberts; and in the same year another, though I think inferior, version of it was published by Mr. Lloyd. The reader is informed, in the Memoirs, of the time and manner of its first publication. He originally gave it only the simple title of "Stanzas, written in a Country Church-yard." I persuaded him first to call it an ELEGY, because the subject authorized him so to do; and the alternate measure, in which it was written, seemed peculiarly fit for that species of composition. I imagined too that so capital a poem, written in this measure, would, as it were, appropriate it in future to writings of the sort; and the number of imitations which have since been made of it (even to satiety) seem to prove that my notion was well founded. In the first manuscript copy of this exquisite poem, I find the conclusion different from that which he afterwards composed; and though his after-thought was unquestionably the best, yet there is a pathetic melancholy in the four rejected stanzas, which highly claims preservation. I shall therefore give them as a variation in their proper place.—MASON.

The reasons of that universal approbation, with which this Elegy has been received, may be learned from the comprehensive encomium of Dr. Johnson.—"It abounds with images,

The ploughman homeward plods his weary way,
And leaves the world to darkness and to me.

Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight, 5
And all the air a solemn stillness holds, which find a mirrour in every mind ; and with sentiments, to which every bosom returns an echo."—WAKEFIELD.

"Had Gray written nothing but his Elegy, high as he stands, I am not sure that he would not stand higher ; it is the cornerstone of his glory."—LORD BYRON.

Ver. 1. The curfew tolls the knell of parting day.]

—————" Squilla di lontano
Che paia l' giorno pianger, che si muore."

Dante Purg. l. 8.—GRAY.

Dr. Warton would spoil the tranquil simplicity of this line, by introducing a pause with a note of admiration after the word tolls. That affectation of solemnity and suddenness in his musing, which is so offensive in Young, is no where to be found in our Author.

Mr. Wakefield cites from the Night Thoughts the following :

"It is the knell of my departed hours."

Ver. 2. The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea.]

—————" Δειπνηστος εην, και επηλυθε μηλα Παντοθεν εξ αγρων." Hom. Od. xvii. 170.

Ver. 3. The ploughman homeward plods his weary way.] It has been observed that there is a slight error, one, however, which the general reader will readily pardon, in the introduction of the returning ploughman into the evening landscape, as the labour of the plough is, in this country, always over by three o'clock in the afternoon.

Ver. 4. And leaves the world to darkness and to me.] Mr. Mitford cites a similar expression from Petrarch :

"Quando 'l sol bagna in mar 'l aurato cerco,
E 'l aer nostro, e la mia mente imbruna."

Ver. 5. Now fades the glimmering landscape on the sight.]

Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
And drowsy tinklings lull the distant folds :

Save that from yonder ivy-mantled tower,
The moping owl does to the moon complain 10

An admirable description of twilight in few words.—But nobody has excelled Mr. Mason upon this topic :

“ While through the west, where sinks the crimson day,
Meek twilight slowly sails, and waves her banners grey.”

WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 7. Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight.]

—————“ Ere the bat hath flown
His cloystered flight ; ere to black Hecate's summons
The shard-borne beetle with his drowsy hums
Hath rung night's yawning peal.”

Macbeth, act iii. sc. 2.

Here is another of Dr. Johnson's modern words, as he would have us to believe them—CLOYSTERED flight.

“ What time the gray-fly winds her sultry horn.”

Lycidas.

Collins has imitated these passages in his Ode to Evening.

“ Now air is hush'd, save where the weak-eyed bat
With short shrill shrieks fits by on leathern wing ;
Or where the beetle winds
His small but sullen horn,

As oft he rises midst the twilight path

Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum.” WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 10. The moping owl does to the moon complain.] Shakspeare, in Julius Cæsar, act. iv. sc. 3. speaks of a dog baying the moon ; and Philips, in his Winter-piece at Copenhagen, says of the wolves :

“ Or to the moon in icy vallies howl.”

Which is from Shakspeare :

“ And the wolf howls the moon.”

Mids. Night's Dream.—WAKEFIELD.

Of such as, wandering near her secret bower,
Molest her ancient solitary reign.

Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade,
Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap,
Each in his narrow cell for ever laid, 15
The rude forefathers of the hamlet sleep.

Ver. 12. Molest her ancient solitary reign.]

—————“ Desertaque regna Pastorum.” Virg. Georg. iii. 476.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 13. Beneath those rugged elms, that yew-tree's shade.]
Mr. Mitford has extracted the following imitation of this passage from “ Les Jardins” of the Abbè De Lille:

“ Voyez sous ces vieux ifs la tombe, où vont se rendre,
Ceux qui, courbés pour vous sur des sillons ingrats,
Au sein de la misère espèrent le trépas.
Rougiriez-vous d'orner leurs humbles sépultures ?
Vous n'y pouvez graver d'illustres aventures.
Sans doute. Depuis l'aube, où le coq matinal
Des rustiques travaux leur donne le signal,
Jusques à la veillée, où leur jeune famille
Environne avec eux le sarment qui pétille,
Dans les mêmes travaux roulent en paix leurs jours.
Des guerres, des traités n'en marquent point le cours.
Naître, souffrir, mourir, c'est toute leur histoire ;
Mais leur cœur n'est point sourd au bruit de leur mémoire.
Quel homme vers la vie, au moment du départ ;
Ne se tourne, et ne jette un triste et long regard ?
A l'espoir d'un regret ne sent pas quelque charme,
Et des yeux d'un ami n'attend pas une larme ?” C. iv. p. 86.

Ver. 14. Where heaves the turf in many a mouldering heap.]

“ Those graves with bending ozier bound,
That nameless heave the crumbled ground.”

Parnell's Night Piece, 29.—WAKEFIELD.

The breezy call of incense-breathing Morn,
 The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed,
 The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn,
 No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed. 20

Ver. 17. The breezy call of incense-breathing Morn.]

“ Αυρη δ' εκ ποταμου ψυχρη πνεει ηωθη προ.”

Odyss. v. 469.

“ The river-breezes whisper morn's approach.”

Mr. Wakefield, who quotes the above line, appeals for confirmation to a learned Scholiast on Apollonius Rhodius. But surely it was not necessary to send us so far to learn what must have been felt by every one who has ever been out of bed by day-break.

“ And early, ere the odorous breath of morn
 Awakes the slumbering leaves.” Comus, 56.

“ Now when as sacred light began to dawn
 In Eden on the humid flowers, that breathed
 Their morning incense.”—

Par. Lost, ix. 192.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 18. The swallow twittering from the straw-built shed.]

The swallow-people—— there

They twitter cheerful.” Thomson's Autumn.

And Anacreon reproves the loquacious swallow for breaking his dreams with her early twitterings.

The following couplet from Ausonius is cited in this place by Mr. Mitford :

“ *Mane jam clarum reserat fenestras,
 Jam strepit nidis vigilax hirundo.*”

Auson. p. 94, ed. Tollii.

Ver. 19. The cock's shrill clarion, or the echoing horn.]

“ The cock, that is the trumpet to the morn,
 Doth with his lofty and shrill sounding throat
 Awake the God of day.”

Hamlet.

“ While the cock with lively din
 Scatters the rear of darkness thin.” L'Allegro.

For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
 Or busy housewife ply her evening care ;
 No children run to lisp their sire's return,
 Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.

—"The crested cock, whose clarion sounds
 The silent hours." Par. Lost, viii. 443.

"Oft listening, how the hounds and horn
 Cheerly rouse the slumbering morn,
 From the side of some hoar hill,
 Through the high wood echoing shrill."

L'Allegro.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 20. No more shall rouse them from their lowly bed.]
 Some readers, keeping in mind the narrow cell above mentioned, have mistaken the lowly bed in this verse for the grave; as, if I rightly recollect, Lloyd has done in his Latin translation of the Elegy: a most puerile and ridiculous blunder.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 21. For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn.]
 This stanza, which is tenderness itself, owes some obligations to former poets. Similar circumstances of domestic assiduity and love are thus depicted by Lucretius:

"At jam non domus accipiet te læta; neque uxor
 Optima, nec dulces occurrent oscula nati
 Præripere, et tacita pectus dulcedine tangent." iv. 907.
 "Interea dulces pendent circum oscula nati."

Virg. Georg. ii. 523.

Of the man perishing in the snow, Thomson says:

"In vain for him the officious wife prepares
 The fire fair-blazing, and the vestment warm:
 In vain his little children, peeping out
 Into the mingling storm, demand their sire
 With tears of artless innocence. Alas!
 Nor wife, nor children, more shall he behold,
 Nor friends, nor sacred home." Winter, 311.

Horace has given us a few touches of the same picture:

"Quod si pudica mulier in partem juvans
 Domum atque dulces liberos,

h.

Oft did the harvest to their sickle yield, 25
 Their furrow oft the stubborn glebe has broke :
 How jocund did they drive their team afield !
 How bowed the woods beneath their sturdy stroke !

Let not Ambition mock their useful toil,
 Their homely joys, and destiny obscure ; 30
 Nor Grandeur hear with a disdainful smile
 The short and simple annals of the poor.

The boast of Heraldry, the pomp of Power,
 And all that Beauty, all that Wealth e'er gave,

Sacrum vestutis extruat lignis focum
 Lassi sub adventum viri."

Epod. ii. 39.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 24. Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.]

" Ουδέ τι μιν παιδες ποτι γουνασι παππαζουσιν, Ελθοντ' εκ πολεμοιο, και αυνης δημοσητος."

Iliad, E. 408.

Ver. 27. How jocund did they drive their team afield.]

" We drove afield." Lycidas, 27.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 28. How bowed the woods beneath their sturdy stroke.]

" But to the roote bent his sturdie stroake,
 And made many woundes in the waste oake."

Spenser's February.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 33. The boast of Heraldry, the pomp of Power.] Mr. Mitford considers our Author as under obligation, in this stanza, to his friend West's Monody on the Death of Queen Caroline :

" Ah me ! what boots us all our boasted power,
 Our golden treasure, and our purple state ;
 They cannot ward th' inevitable hour,
 Nor stay the fearful violence of fate."

Dodsley's Misc. ii. 279.

Awake alike th' inevitable hour. 35
 The paths of glory lead but to the grave.

Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault,
 If Memory o'er their tomb no trophies raise
 Where through the long-drawn isle and fretted vault
 The pealing anthem swells the note of praise. 40

Can storied urn, or animated bust,
 Back to its mansion call the fleeting breath?
 Can Honour's voice provoke the silent dust,
 Or Flattery soothe the dull cold ear of death?

Ver. 37. Nor you, ye proud, impute to these the fault.] This stanza is ennobled by what our Author calls thrilling verse; an amazing swell and magnificence of expression, productive of those sensations, which Milton will best describe:

“ There let the pealing organ blow
 To the full-voiced quire below,
 In service high, and anthems clear,
 As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
 Dissolve me into ecstasies,
 And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.” II Pens.

“ When from the censer clouds of fragrance roll,
 And swelling organs lift the rising soul.”

Eloisa.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 41. Can storied urn, or animated bust.]

“ Non, Torquate, genus, non te facundia, non te Restituet pietas.” Horace.

“ Nor can thy eloquence, nor noble birth,
 Nor e'en thy virtues give thee back to life.”

WAKEFIELD

“ Heroes in animated marble frown.”

Pope's Temple of Fame, 7

Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid 45
 Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire;
 Hands, that the rod of empire might have swayed,
 Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre :

But Knowledge to their eyes her ample page
 Rich with the spoils of Time did ne'er unroll; 50
 Chill Penury repressed their noble rage,
 And froze the genial current of the soul.

Ver. 44. Or Flattery soothe the dull cold ear of death.] The peculiar expressiveness of these two heavy-sounding epithets placed together, is caught from Shakspeare's Henry VIII. act iii. sc. 2.

—"When I am forgotten, as I shall be,
 And sleep in dull cold marble."

Ver. 46. Some heart once pregnant with celestial fire.] Longinus, who is remarkable for a richness and sublimity of language, has the same metaphor :

"Χρη—τας ψυχας ανατρεφειν προς τα μεγαθη, και ωσπερ εγκυμονας αι ποιειν γενναιου παραστηματος."—De Sub. ix.

"We ought to prepare and foster our souls for the reception of sublime ideas, and to make them pregnant, as it were, with these generous affections."—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 48. Or waked to ecstasy the living lyre.] The expression "living lyre" occurs in Cowley; and in Pope's Windsor Forest we have the following :

"Who now shall charm the shades where Cowley strung
 His living harp, and lofty Denham sung." WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 51. Chill Penury repressed their noble rage.]

"Be justly warmed with your own native rage."

Pope's Prol. to Cato, 43.

It is an excellent word, taken from the οργη of the Greeks.—WAKEFIELD.

Full many a gem, of purest ray serene,
 The dark unfathomed caves of ocean bear :
 Full many a flower is born to blush unseen, 55
 And waste its sweetness on the desert air.

Ver. 53. Full many a gem, of purest ray serene.] A writer in the Quarterly Review, vol. ix. cites the following passage from Bishop Hall's Contemplations, as a singular instance of accidental resemblance:—"There is many a rich stone laid up in the bowells of the earth, many a faire pearle in the bosome of the sea, that never was seene, nor never shall bee."—Line vi. p. 872.

So Milton, in his Comus, speaks of the —————"Sea-girt isles,

 That, like to rich and various gems, inlay
 The unadorned bosom of the deep." Ver. 21.

Ver. 55. Full many a flower is born to blush unseen.]

"There kept my charms concealed from mortal eye,
 Like roses that in deserts bloom and die."

Pope's Rape of the Lock, iv. 157.—WAKEFIELD.

"In distant wilds, by human eyes unseen,
 She rears her flowers, and spreads her velvet green;
 Pure gurgling rills the lonely desert trace,
 And waste their music on the savage race."

The above passage, from Young's Universal Passion, is quoted in the Quarterly Review, and the critic there observes, that our Author is under two distinct obligations to it within the compass of three lines.

The two following passages are noticed by Mr. Mitford :

"Like beauteous flowers which vainly waste their scent
 Of odours in unhaunted deserts."

Chamberlayne's Pharonida, pt. ii. b. iv. p. 94.

"Like woodland flowers, which paint the desert glades,
 And waste their sweets in unfrequented shades."

A. Philips' Thule, p. 135.

This whole stanza of Gray, however, bears a yet closer re-

Some village Hampden, that, with dauntless breast,
 The little tyrant of his fields withstood ;
 Some mute inglorious Milton here may rest,
 Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood. 60 semblance to the following lines of Celio Magno, which are quoted in the fifth volume of the Edinburgh Review, p. 51.

“ Ma (qual in parte ignota
 Ben ricca gemma altrui cela il suo pregio,
 O fior, ch' alta virtù ha in se reposita)
 Visse in sen di castità nascosta
 In sua virtute e'n Dio contento visse
 Lunge dal viso mondan, che l'alma intrica.”

The last two lines are compared with the ninth stanza of the Elegy. The expression “ desert air,” Mr. Wakefield discovers in Pindar :

—————“ Ερημος δι' αιθερος.” Olymp. i. 10.

Ver. 57. Some village Hampden, that, with dauntless breast.] What son of freedom is not in raptures with this tribute of praise to such an exalted character in immortal verse? This honourable testimony and the noble detestation of arbitrary power, with which it is accompanied, might possibly be one cause of Dr. Johnson's animosity against our poet. Upon this topic, the critic's feelings, we know, were irritability itself, and tremblingly alive all o'er. WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 60. Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood.] Mr. Edwards, the author of Canons of Criticism, considering that there was one very important defect in this part of the Poem, endeavoured to supply it by the following lines ; intended to come in in this place :

“ Some lovely fair, whose unaffected charms
 Shone with attraction to herself unknown ;
 Whose beauty might have blessed a monarch's arms,
 Whose virtue cast a lustre on a throne.”

There is another stanza which is not given here, as it is

Th' applause of listening senates to command,
 The threats of pain and ruin to despise,
 To scatter plenty o'er a smiling land,
 And read their history in a nation's eyes,

Their lot forbade : nor circumscribed alone 65
 Their growing virtues, but their crimes confined ;
 Forbade to wade through slaughter to a throne,
 And shut the gates of Mercy on mankind,

The struggling pangs of conscious Truth to hide,
 To quench the blushes of ingenuous Shame, 70
 Or heap the shrine of Luxury and Pride
 With incense kindled at the Muse's flame.

thought by some, that in it Mr. Edwards has not done justice to his subject.

67. Forbade to wade through slaughter to a throne,
 And shut the gates of Mercy on mankind.]
 " And swam to empire through the purple flood."

Pope's Temple of Fame, 347.

These two verses are a specimen of sublimity of the purest kind, like the simple grandeur of Hebrew poetry ; depending solely on the thought, unassisted by epithets and the artificial decorations of expression.

Shakspeare has something of the same idea : " I'll turn my mercy out of doors."—Tempest, act iii. sc. 2.—WAKEFIELD.

Also in Henry V. act iii. sc. 2 :

" The gates of Mercy shall be all shut up."

And in Henry VI. part iii.

" Open thy gate of Mercy, gracious Lord."

Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife,
 Their sober wishes never learned to stray ;
 Along the cool sequestered vale of life
 They kept the noiseless tenor of their way.

75

Yet e'en these bones from insult to protect
 Some frail memorial still erected nigh,

Ver. 73. Far from the madding crowd's ignoble strife.]

VARIATION.

“ The thoughtless world to majesty may bow,
 Exalt the brave, and idolize success ;
 But more to Innocence their safety owe,
 Than Power, or Genius, e'er conspired to bless.

And thou, who mindful of the unhonoured dead,
 Dost in these notes their artless tale relate,
 By Night and lonely Contemplation led
 To wander in the gloomy walks of Fate :

Hark! how the sacred calm, that breathes around,
 Bids every fierce tumultuous passion cease ;
 In still small accents whispering from the ground,
 A grateful earnest of eternal peace.

No more, with reason and thyself at strife,
 Give anxious cares and endless wishes room ;
 But through the cool sequestered vale of life
 Pursue the silent tenor of thy doom.”

And here the poem was originally intended to conclude, before the happy idea of the hoary-headed swain, &c. suggested itself to him. I cannot help hinting to the reader, that I think the third of these rejected stanzas equal to any in the whole Elegy.—MASON.

Ver. 78. Some frail memorial still erected nigh.] The resem-

With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture decked,
 Implores the passing tribute of a sigh. 80

Their name, their years, spelt by th' unlettered Muse,
 The place of fame and elegy supply :
 And many a holy text around she strews,
 That teach the rustic moralist to die.

For who, to dumb Forgetfulness a prey, 85
 This pleasing anxious being e'er resigned,
 Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day,
 Nor cast one longing lingering look behind?

blance of this and the four next lines to the following of Celio Magno, is pointed out in the number of the Edinburgh Review, already referred to :

“ Una (one of the muses) di scolpir si sforza
 Nel dura marmo, e porvi ad altrui voglia
 Breve detto, che'l nome e i meriti accoglia.”

Ver. 79. With uncouth rhymes and shapeless sculpture decked.] In Gray's Elegy, is there an image more striking than his “ shapeless sculpture?”—LORD BYRON.

Ver. 87. Left the warm precincts of the cheerful day.] A fine improvement on the original :

—————“ Dias in luminis oras.” Lucret. i. 23.

Ver. 88. Nor cast one longing lingering look behind.] There is a pathetic passage in Euripides, which has a striking resemblance to this admirable stanza :

—————“ *Καιπερ σμικρον εμπνεουσ' ετι,
 Βλεψαι προς αυγας βουλεται τας ηλιου,
 Ως ουποτ' αυθις, αλλα νυν πανυστατον
 Ακτινα κυκλον θ' ηλιου προσοψεται.*”

Alcest. 205.—WAKEFIELD.

On some fond breast the parting soul relies,
 Some pious drops the closing eye requires ; 90
 E'en from the tomb the voice of Nature cries,
 E'en in our ashes live their wonted fires.

Ver. 89. On some fond breast the parting soul relies.] To Mr. Mitford we are indebted for the following from Drayton's Moses :

" It is some comfort to a wretch to die,
 (If there be comfort in the way of death,)
 To have some friend, or kind alliance by
 To be officious at the parting breath."

Vol. iv. p. 1564. ed. 1753.

Ver. 90. Some pious drops the closing eye requires.] Conformable to this sentiment is the wish of Solon :

" Μηδε μοι ακλαυστος θανατος μολοι· αλλα φιλοισι Καλλειποιμι θανων αλγεα και στοναχας."

Ver. 5. ed. Brunck.—WAKEFIELD.

In a similar strain is that pathetic lament :

" No friend's complaint, no kind domestic tear Pleas'd thy pale ghost, or grac'd thy mournful bier."

Pope's Elegy, 81.

Ver. 92. E'en in our ashes live their wonted fires.]

" Ch'i veggio nel pensier, dolce mio fuoco,
 Fredda una lingua, et due begli occhi chiusi
 Rimaner doppo noi pien di faville."

Petrarch, Son. 169.—GRAY.

" Yet in our ashen cold, is fire yreken."

Chaucer's Reve's Prol. ver. 3880. p. 186.

" Awake and faithful to her wonted fires."

Thus it stood in the first and some following editions, and I think rather better ; for the authority of Petrarch does not destroy the appearance of quaintness in the other : the thought, however, is rather obscurely expressed in both readings. He means to say, in plain prose, that we wish to be remembered by our friends after our death, in the same manner as when alive

For thee, who, mindful of the unhonoured dead,
 Dost in these lines their artless tale relate ;
 If chance, by lonely Contemplation led, 95
 Some kindred spirit shall enquire thy fate,

Haply some hoary-headed swain may say,
 " Oft have we seen him at the peep of Dawn
 Brushing with hasty steps the dews away,
 To meet the sun upon the upland lawn : 100

we wished to be remembered by them in our absence : this would be expressed clearer, if the metaphorical term fires was rejected, and the line run thus :

" Awake and faithful to her first desires."

I do not put this alteration down for the idle vanity of aiming to amend the passage, but purely to explain it.—MASON.

Mr. Wakefield, in jealousy for his Author's credit, is very angry with Mason's criticism and explanation of the passage, and he substitutes a paraphrase of his own. Whatever be the difference of his interpretation, he lets out the secret, that the words of the Elegy need interpretation ; and this itself is a severe censure.

Ver. 99. Brushing with hasty steps the dews away.] Much in the same manner Thomson :

" Oft let me wander o'er the dewy fields,
 Where freshness breathes, and dash the trembling drops
 From the bent bush, as through the verdant maze
 Of sweet-briar hedges I pursue my walk."

Spring, 103.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 100. To meet the sun upon the upland lawn.]

" On the high brow of yonder hanging lawn."

After which, in his first manuscript, followed this stanza :

" Him have we seen the greenwood side along,
 While o'er the heath we hied, our labour done,
 Oft as the woodlark piped her farewell song,
 With wistful eyes pursue the setting sun."

“ There at the foot of yonder nodding beech,
 That wreathes its old fantastic roots so high,
 His listless length at noontide would he stretch,
 And pore upon the brook that babbles by.

“ Hard by yon wood, now smiling as in scorn, 105
 Muttering his wayward fancies he would rove;
 Now drooping, woeful wan, like one forlorn,
 Or crazed with Care, or crossed in hopeless Love.

I rather wonder that he rejected this stanza, as it not only has the same sort of Doric delicacy which charms us peculiarly in this part of the poem, but also completes the account of his whole day: whereas, this evening scene being omitted, we have only his morning walk, and his noon-tide repose.—MASON.

Ver. 101. “ There at the foot of yonder nodding beech.]

“ Propter aquæ rivum sub ramis arboris altæ.”

Lucretius.—WAKEFIELD.

“ Near a brook shaded by a lofty tree.”

Ver. 103. His listless length at noontide would he stretch.]

The following lines are cited in this place by Mr. Mitford :

—————“ Spread
 His listless limbs at noontide on the marge
 Of smooth translucent pools.”

Scott's Amwell, p. 22. Park's ed.

Ver. 104. And pore upon the brook that babbles by.]

—————“ Divided by a babbling brook.”

Thomson's Spring, 643.

Several thoughts of this stanza are taken from Shakspeare :

“ Under an oak, whose antique root peeps out
 Upon the brook, which brawls along this wood.”

As You Like It, act ii. sc. 1.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 107. Now drooping, woeful wan, like one forlorn.] So Spenser :

“ One morn I missed him on the customed hill,
 Along the heath, and near his favourite tree ; 110
 Another came ; nor yet beside the rill,
 Nor up the lawn, nor at the wood was he :

“ The next, with dirges due in sad array,
 Slow through the church-way path we saw him borne :—
 Approach and read (for thou can’st read) the lay 115
 Graved on the stone beneath yon aged thorn.”

“ All as the sheepe, such was the shepheard’s looke :
 For pale and wanne he was, (alas ! the while,)
 May seem he loved, or else some care he tooke.”

January, Ver. 8.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 116. Graved on the stone beneath yon aged thorn.] Between this line and the Epitaph, Mr. Gray originally inserted a very beautiful stanza, which was printed in some of the first editions, but afterwards omitted, because he thought (and in my opinion very justly) that it was too long a parenthesis in this place. The lines, however, are, in themselves, exquisitely fine, and demand preservation :

“ There scattered oft, the earliest of the year,
 By hands unseen are showers of violets found ;
 The redbreast loves to build and warble there,
 And little footsteps lightly print the ground.”—M.

I find the first traces of this beautiful idea in an Epitaph upon Timon in the Anthologia :

“ Ως επ’ εμοι μη δ’ ορνις εν ειαρι κουφον ερειδοι Ιχνος.”

“ Nor print the feathered warbler in the spring
 His little footstep lightly on my grave.”

Whether Gray’s Elegy, or Collins’s Dirge in Cymbeline, was prior in point of time, I cannot determine. This thought, which is found in both poems, is wrought up unquestionably to much

THE EPITAPH.

Here rests his head upon the lap of earth
 A youth, to Fortune and to Fame unknown:
 Fair Science frowned not on his humble birth,
 And Melancholy marked him for her own. 120

Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere,
 Heaven did a recompence as largely send:

greater perfection in the Elegy; though I would not be understood by this preference to disparage the other poem, which breathes a genuine pathos, and is impressed with indubitable marks of an original wildness of imagination and true genius.

“ To fair Fidele’s grassy tomb
 Soft maids and village hinds shall bring
 Each opening sweet, of earliest bloom,
 And rifle all the breathing spring.”

* * * * *
 * * * * *

“ The redbreast oft at evening hours
 Shall kindly lend his little aid,
 With hoary moss and gathered flowers,
 To deck the ground where thou art laid.”

Collins—

“ Had fortune smiled propitious as his muse”— would have been the only cotemporary capable of attaining the excellence of Mr. Gray. His natural powers, his enthusiasm, and his feelings, seem to have qualified him for all that is sublime and beautiful in poetry.—WAKEFIELD.

Ver. 117. Here rests his head upon the lap of earth.] The classical reader is much indebted to Mr. Mitford for reminding him in this place of that truly pathetic sentence of Pliny, Hist. Nat. ii. 63:—“ Nam terra novissime complexa gremio jam a reliquâ natura abnegatos, tum maxime, ut mater operit.”

Ver. 121. Large was his bounty, and his soul sincere.] The

He gave to misery (all he had) a tear,
 He gained from heaven ('twas all he wished) a friend.

No farther seek his merits to disclose, 125
 Or draw his frailties from their dread abode,
 (There they alike in trembling hope repose,
 The bosom of his Father and his God.

editor of Cowley's Works has observed, that Gray seems to have had his eye on the following lines :

“ *Large was his soul, as large a soul as e'er
 Submitted to inform a body here.*”

Vol. i. p. 119.—Hurd's ed.

Ver. 127. There they alike in trembling hope repose.]

———“ Paventosa speme.” Petr. Son. 114.—GRAY.

A writer in the Quarterly Review has observed that Hooker, “ whose sublimities sometimes touch on the confines of very noble poetry,” has defined hope to be a “ trembling expectation of things far removed.”

Ver. 128. The bosom of his Father and his God.] The Epitaph before us has been commented on, and translated into different languages, by various men of eminence, most of them divines. Did it ever occur to any of these, that there was an impropriety in making the bosom of Almighty God an abode for human frailty to repose in?

Unless the author meant by the word bosom, only remembrance, there is surely a very strange inconsistency in the expression.

A LONG STORY^a.

IN Britain's isle, no matter where,
 An ancient pile of building stands :
 The Huntingdons and Hattons there
 Employed the power of fairy hands

^a Mr. Gray's Elogy, previous to its publication, was handed about in MS. and had, amongst other admirers, the Lady Cobham, who resided in the mansion-house at Stoke-Pogeis. The performance inducing her to wish for the Author's acquaintance, Lady Schaub and Miss Speed, then at her house, undertook to introduce her to it. These two ladies waited upon the Author at his aunt's solitary habitation, where he at that time resided, and not finding him at home, they left a card behind them. Mr. Gray, surprised at such a compliment, returned the visit; and as the beginning of this intercourse bore some appearance of romance, he gave the humorous and lively account of it which the Long Story contains.—WAKEFIELD.

This piece was rejected by Mr. Gray in the second edition of his poems: being, however, reinstated by his executor, it has retained its place ever since.

Ver. 2. An ancient pile of building stands.] The mansion-house at Stoke-Pogeis, then in the possession of Viscountess Cobham. The style of building, which we now call Queen Elizabeth's, is here admirably described, both with regard to its beauties and defects; and the third and fourth stanzas delineate the fantastic manners of her time with equal truth and humour. The house formerly belonged to the Earls of Huntingdon and the family of Hatton.—MASON.

Ver. 4. Employed the power of fairy hands.] The reader

Your history whither are you spinning!
Can you do nothing but describe? 20

A house there is (and that's enough)
From whence one fatal morning issues
A brace of warriors, not in buff,
But rustling in their silks and tissues.

The first came cap-à-pie from France, 25
Her conquering destiny fulfilling,
Whom meaner beauties eye askance,
And vainly ape her art of killing.

The other amazon kind heaven
Had armed with spirit, wit, and satire; 30
But Cobham had the polish given,
And tipped her arrows with good-nature.

To celebrate her eyes, her air—
Coarse panegyrics would but tease her;
Melissa is her "nom de guerre." 35
Alas, who would not wish to please her!

With bonnet blue and capuchine,
And aprons long, they hid their armour;

Ver. 23. A brace of warriors, not in buff.] The reader is already apprised who these ladies were: the two descriptions are prettily contrasted; and nothing can be more happily turned than the compliment to Lady Cobham in the eighth stanza.—
MASON.

And veiled their weapons, bright and keen,
 In pity to the country farmer. 40

Fame, in the shape of Mr. P—t,
 (By this time all the parish know it,)
 Had told that thereabouts there lurked
 A wicked imp they call a poet ;

Who prowled the country far and near, 45
 Bewitch'd the children of the peasants,
 Dried up the cows, and lamed the deer,
 And sucked the eggs, and killed the pheasants.

My lady heard their joint petition,
 Swore by her coronet and ermine, 50
 She'd issue out her high commission
 To rid the manor of such vermin.

The heroines undertook the task,
 Through lanes unknown, o'er stiles they ventured,
 Rapped at the door, nor stayed to ask, 55
 But bounce into the parlour entered.

The trembling family they daunt,
 They flirt, they sing, they laugh, they tattle,

Ver. 41. Fame, in the shape of Mr. P—t.] I have been told that this gentleman, a neighbour and acquaintance of Mr. Gray's in the country, was much displeas'd at the liberty here taken with his name ; yet, surely, without any great reason.—MASON.

Rummage his mother, pinch his aunt,
 And up stairs in a whirlwind rattle. 60

Each hole and cupboard they explore,
 Each creek and cranny of his chamber,
 Run hurry-scurry round the floor,
 And o'er the bed and tester clamber;

Into the drawers and china pry, 65
 Papers and books, a huge imbroglio!
 Under a tea-cup he might lie,
 Or creased, like dogs-ears, in a folio.

On the first marching of the troops,
 The Muses, hopeless of his pardon, 70
 Conveyed him underneath their hoops
 To a small closet in the garden.

Ver. 67. Under a tea-cup he might lie.] It cannot be doubted that Mr. Gray, when he wrote this, had in his mind the following lines of Prior's Dove, which are quoted here by Mr. Mitford :

“ Her keys he takes, her door unlocks,
 Through wardrobe and through closet bounces,
 Peeps into every chest and box,
 Turns all her furbelows and flounces.”

* * * * *
 * * * * *

“ I marvel much, she smiling said,
 Your poultry cannot yet be found :
 Lies he in yonder slipper dead,
 Or, may be, in the tea-pot drowned,”

So Rumour says : (who will, believe.)
 But that they left the door ajar,
 Where, safe and laughing in his sleeve, 75
 He heard the distant din of war.

Short was his joy. He little knew
 The power of magic was no fable ;
 Out of the window, wisk, they flew,
 But left a spell upon the table. 80

Ver. 80. But left a spell upon the table.] Fancy is here so much blended with the humour, that I believe the two stanzas which succeed this line are among those which are the least relished by the generality. The description of the spell, I know, has appeared to many persons absolutely unintelligible ; yet if the reader adverts to that peculiar idea which runs through the whole, I imagine the obscurity complained of will be removed. An incident, we see, so slight as the simple matter of fact, required something like machinery to enliven it : accordingly the Author chose, with propriety enough, to employ for that purpose those notions of witchcraft, ghosts, and enchantment, which prevailed at the time when the mansion-house was built. He describes himself as a demon of the lowest class, a wicked imp, who lamed the deer, &c. against whose malevolent power Lady Cobham (the gloriana of the piece) employs two superior enchantresses. Congruity of imagery, therefore, required the card they left upon the table to be converted into a spell. Now all the old writers on these subjects are very minute in describing the materials of such talismans. Hence, therefore, his grotesque idea of a composition of transparent bird-lime, edged with invisible chains, in order to catch and draw him to the tribunal. Without going further for examples of this kind of imagery than the poet's own Works, let me instance two passages of the serious kind, similar to this ludicrous one. In his Ode, entitled the Bard :

The words too eager to unriddle,
 The poet felt a strange disorder ;
 Transparent bird-lime formed the middle,
 And chains invisible the border.

So cunning was the apparatus, 85
 The powerful pot-hooks did so move him,
 That, will he, nill he, to the great house
 He went, as if the devil drove him.

Yet on his way (no sign of grace,
 For folks in fear are apt to pray) 90
 To Phœbus he preferred his case,
 And begged his aid that dreadful day.

The godhead would have backed his quarrel ;
 But with a blush, on recollection,
 Owned that his quiver and his laurel 95
 'Gainst four such eyes were no protection.

“ Above, below, the rose of snow,” &c.

And again, in the Fatal Sisters :

“ See the griesly texture grow.”

It must, however, be allowed, that no person can fully relish this burlesque, who is not much conversant with the old romance-writers, and with the poets who formed themselves on their model.—MASON.

Ver. 89. Yet on his way (no sign of grace.] The humour of this and the following stanza is more pure, and consequently more obvious. It might have been written by Prior, and the wit at the end is much in his best manner.—MASON.

The court was sate, the culprit there,
 Forth from their gloomy mansions creeping,
 The lady Janes and Joans repair,
 And from the gallery stand peeping: 100

Such as in silence of the night
 Come (sweep) along some winding entry,
 (Styack^b has often seen the sight)
 Or at the chapel-door stand sentry:

In peaked hoods and mantles tarnished, 105
 Sour visages, enough to scare ye,
 High dames of honour once, that garnished
 The drawing-room of fierce Queen Mary.

The peeress comes. The audience stare,
 And doff their hats with due submission: 110
 She curtsies, as she takes her chair,
 To all the people of condition.

Ver. 99. The lady Janes and Joans repair.] Here fancy is again uppermost, and soars as high on her comic, as on another occasion she does on her lyric wing: for now a chorus of ghostly old women of quality come to give sentence on the culprit poet, just as the spirits of Cadwallo, Urien, and Hoel join the Bard in dreadful symphony to denounce vengeance on Edward I. The route of Fancy, we see, is the same, both on the humorous and sublime occasion. No wonder, therefore, if either of them should fail of being generally tasted.—MASON.

^b The housekeeper.

Ver. 105. In peaked hoods and mantles tarnished.] The description is here excellent, and I should think would please universally.—MASON.

The bard, with many an artful fib,
 Had in imagination fenced him,
 Disproved the arguments of Squib^c, 115
 And all that Groom^d could urge against him.

But soon his rhetoric forsook him,
 When he the solemn hall had seen ;
 A sudden fit of ague shook him,
 He stood as mute as poor Maclean^e. 120

Yet something he was heard to mutter,
 " How in the park beneath an old tree, (Without design to hurt the butter,
 Or any malice to the poultry,)

He once or twice had penned a sonnet ; 125
 Yet hoped, that he might save his bacon :
 Numbers would give their oaths upon it,
 He ne'er was for a conjurer taken."

The ghostly prudes with hagged^f face
 Already had condemned the sinner. 130

^c Groom of the chamber.

^d The steward.

^e A famous highwayman, hanged the week before.—G.

This stanza is of the sort where wit rather than fancy prevails, consequently much in Prior's manner.—MASON.

^f Hagged, i. e. the face of a witch or hag: the epithet hagard has been sometimes mistaken, as conveying the same idea; but it means a very different thing, viz. wild and farouche, and is

My lady rose, and with a grace—
 She smiled, and bid him come to dinner ‡.

“ Jesu-Maria ! Madam Bridget,
 Why, what can the Viscountess mean ?
 (Cried the square-hoods in woful fidget) 135
 The times are altered quite and clean !

Decorum’s turned to mere civility ;
 Her air and all her manners show it.
 Commend me to her affability !
 Speak to a commoner and poet !” 140

[Here five hundred stanzas are lost.]

And so God save our noble king,
 And guard us from long-winded lubbers,
 That to eternity would sing,
 And keep my lady from her rubbers.

taken from an unreclaimed hawk, called an hagar ; in which its proper sense the poet uses it finely on a sublime occasion :

“ Clothed in the sable garb of woe,
 With hagar eyes the poet stood.”

See Ode vi.—MASON.

‡ Here the story finishes ; the exclamation of the ghosts which follows is characteristic of the Spanish manners of the age when they are supposed to have lived ; and the five hundred stanzas, said to be lost, may be imagined to contain the remainder of their long-winded expostulation.—MASON.

THE POSTHUMOUS POEMS AND FRAGMENTS OF GRAY.

TRANSLATION

OF

A PASSAGE FROM STATIUS^a.

THEB. lib. vi. ver. 704—724.

THIRD in the labours of the disc came on,
 With sturdy step and slow, Hippomedon ;
 Artful and strong he poised the well-known weight,
 By Phlegyas warned, and fired by Mnestheus' fate,
 That to avoid, and this to emulate. 5
 His vigorous arm he tried before he flung,
 Braced all his nerves, and every sinew strung ;
 Then, with a tempest's whirl, and wary eye,
 Pursued his cast, and hurled the orb on high ;
 The orb on high tenacious of its course, 10
 True to the mighty arm that gave it force,
 Far overleaps all bound, and joys to see
 Its ancient lord secure of victory.
 The theatre's green height and woody wall
 Tremble ere it precipitates its fall ; 15
 The ponderous mass sinks in the cleaving ground,
 While vales and woods and echoing hills rebound.

^a See Sect. I. Letter II.

As when from Ætna's smoking summit broke,
The eyeless Cyclops heaved the craggy rock ;
Where Ocean frets beneath the dashing oar, 20
And parting surges round the vessel roar ;
'Twas there he aimed the meditated harm,
And scarce Ulysses 'scaped his giant arm.
A tiger's pride the victor bore away,
With native spots and artful labour gay, 25
A shining border round the margin rolled,
And calmed the terrors of his claws in gold.

Cambridge, May 8, 1736.

A G R I P P I N A ;

A TRAGEDY.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

AGRIPPINA, the Empress-mother.

NERO, the Emperor.

POPPEA, believed to be in love with Otho.

OTHO, a young man of quality, in love with Poppæa.

SENECA, the Emperor's Preceptor.

ANICETUS, Captain of the Guards.

DEMETRIUS, the Cynic, friend to Seneca.

ACERONIA, Confidant to Agrippina.

SCENE, the Emperor's villa at Baiæ.

ARGUMENT.

“The drama opens with the indignation of Agrippina, at receiving her son's orders from Anicetus to remove from Baiæ, and to have her guard taken from her. At this time Otho having conveyed Poppæa from the house of her husband, Rufus Crispinus, brings her to Baiæ, where he means to conceal her among the crowd ; or, if his fraud is discovered, to have recourse to the Emperor's authority ; but, knowing the lawless temper of Nero, he determines not to have recourse to that expedient, but on the utmost necessity. In the mean time he commits her to the care of Anicetus, whom he takes to be his friend, and in whose age he thinks he may safely confide. Nero is not yet come to Baiæ ; but Seneca, whom he sends before him, informs Agrippina of the accusation concerning Rubellius Plancus, and desires her to clear herself, which she does briefly ; but demands to see her son, who, on his arrival, acquits her of all suspicion, and restores her to her honours. In the mean while, Anicetus, to whose care Poppæa had been entrusted by Otho, contrives the following plot to ruin Agrippina : he betrays his trust to Otho, and brings Nero, as it were by chance, to the sight of the beautiful Poppæa ; the Emperor is immediately struck with her charms, and she, by a feigned resistance, increases his passion ; though, in reality, she is from the first dazzled with the prospect of empire, and forgets Otho : she therefore joins with Anicetus in his design of ruining Agrippina, soon perceiving that it will be for her interest. Otho, hearing that the Emperor had seen Poppæa, is much enraged ; but not knowing that this interview was obtained through the treachery of Anicetus, is readily persuaded by him to see Agrippina in secret, and acquaint her with his fears that her son Nero would marry Poppæa. Agrippina, to support her own power, and to wean the Emperor from the love of Poppæa, gives Otho encouragement, and promises to support him. Anicetus secretly introduces Nero to hear their discourse ; who resolves immediately on his mother's death, and, by Anicetus's means, to destroy her by drowning. A solemn feast, in honour of their reconciliation, is to be made ; after which, she being to go by sea to Bauli, the ship is so contrived as to sink or crush her ; she escapes by accident, and returns to Baiæ. In this interval Otho has an interview with Poppæa ; and being duped a second time by Anicetus and her, determines to fly with her into Greece, by means of a vessel which is to be furnished by Anicetus ; but he, pretending to remove Poppæa on board in the night, conveys her to Nero's apartment : she then encourages and determines Nero to banish Otho, and finish the horrid deed he had attempted on his mother. Anicetus undertakes to execute his resolves ; and, under pretence of a plot upon the Emperor's life, is sent with a guard to murder Agrippina, who is still at Baiæ in imminent fear, and irresolute how to conduct herself. The account of her death, and the Emperor's horror and fruitless remorse, finishes the drama^a.—MASON.

ACT I.—SCENE I.

AGRIPPINA. ACERONIA.

AGRIPPINA.

'Tis well, begone! your errand is perform'd :

[Speaks as to Anicetus entering.

The message needs no comment. Tell your master,

His mother shall obey him. Say you saw her

Yielding due reverence to his high command :

Alone, unguarded and without a lictor, 5

As fits the daughter of Germanicus,

Say, she retired to Antium; there to tend

Her household cares, a women's best employment.

^a I refer the reader to the 13th and 14th books of the Annals of Tacitus for the facts on which this story is founded : by turning to that author, he will easily see how far the poet thought it necessary to deviate from the truth of history. I shall only further observe, that as such a fable could not possibly admit of any good character, it is terror only, and not pity, that could be excited by this tragedy, had it been completed. Yet it was surely capable of exciting this passion in a supreme degree ; if, what the critics tells us be true, that crimes, which illustrious persons commit, affect us from the very circumstance of their rank, because we unite with that our fears for the public weal.—MASON.

What if you add, how she turned pale and trembled ;
 You think you spied a tear stand in her eye, 10
 And would have dropped, but that her pride restrained it ?

(Go ! you can paint it well) 'twill profit you,
 And please the stripling. Yet 'twould dash his joy
 To hear the spirit of Britannicus
 Yet walks on earth: at least there are who know 15
 Without a spell to raise, and bid it fire
 A thousand haughty hearts, unused to shake
 When a boy frowns, nor to be lured with smiles
 To taste of hollow kindness, or partake
 His hospitable board: they are aware 20
 Of th' unpledged bowl, they love not aconite.

ACERONIA.

He's gone: and much I hope these walls alone
 And the mute air are privy to your passion.
 Forgive your servant's fears, who sees the danger
 Which fierce resentment cannot fail to raise 25
 In haughty youth, and irritated power.

Ver. 10. You think you spied a tear stand in her eye.] This is uttered somewhat in the spirit of Queen Katharine's address to Cardinal Wolsey :

—Sir,

I am about to weep ; but thinking that
 We are a queen, (or long have dreamed so,) certain
 The daughter of a king, my drops of tears
 I'll turn to sparks of fire. King Henry VIII. act ii. sc. 4.

The resemblance may appear slight ; and yet it is matter of surprise to find even this coincidence of expression in the pride of injured innocence, and the disappointment of guilty ambition.

AGRIPPINA.

And dost thou talk to me, to me, of danger,
 Of haughty youth and irritated power,
 To her that gave it being, her that armed
 This painted Jove, and taught his novice hand 30
 To aim the forked bolt ; while he stood trembling,
 Scared at the sound, and dazzled with its brightness?

'Tis like, thou hast forgot, when yet a stranger
 To adoration, to the grateful steam
 Of flattery's incense, and obsequious vows 35
 From voluntary realms, a puny boy,
 Decked with no other lustre, than the blood
 Of Agrippina's race, he lived unknown
 To fame, or fortune ; haply eyed at distance
 Some edileship, ambitious of the power 40
 To judge of weights and measures ; scarcely dared
 On expectation's strongest wing to soar
 High as the consulate, that empty shade
 Of long-forgotten liberty : when I
 Oped his young eye to bear the blaze of greatness ; 45
 Shewed him where empire towered, and bade him strike

The noble quarry. Gods ! then was the time
 To shrink from danger ; fear might then have worn
 The mask of prudence ; but a heart like mine,
 A heart that glows with the pure Julian fire, 50
 If bright ambition from her craggy seat
 Display the radiant prize, will mount undaunted, Gain the rough heights, and grasp the dangerous honour.

ACERONIA.

Through various life I have pursued your steps,
 Have seen your soul, and wondered at its daring : 55
 Hence rise my fears. Nor am I yet to learn
 How vast the debt of gratitude which Nero
 To such a mother owes; the world, you gave him,
 Suffices not to pay the obligation.

I well remember too (for I was present) 60
 When in a secret and dead hour of night,
 Due sacrifice performed with barbarous rites
 Of muttered charms, and solemn invocation,
 You bade the Magi call the dreadful powers,
 That read futurity, to know the fate 95
 Impending o'er your son: their answer was,
 If the son reign, the mother perishes.

Perish (you cried) the mother! reign the son!
 He reigns, the rest is heaven's; who oft has bade,
 Even when its will seemed wrote in lines of blood, 70
 Th' unthought event disclose a whiter meaning.
 Think too how oft in weak and sickly minds
 The sweets of kindness lavishly indulged Rankle to gall; and benefits too great
 To be repaid, sit heavy on the soul, 75
 As unrequited wrongs. The willing homage
 Of prostrate Rome, the senate's joint applause,
 The riches of the earth, the train of pleasures
 That wait on youth, and arbitrary sway:
 These were your gift, and with them you bestowed 80
 The very power he has to be ungrateful.

AGRIPPINA.

Thus ever grave and undisturbed reflection
 Pours its cool dictates in the madding ear
 Of rage, and thinks to quench the fire it feels not.
 Say'st thou I must be cautious, must be silent, 85
 And tremble at the phantom I have raised?
 Carry to him thy timid counsels. He Perchance may heed them: tell him too, that one
 Who had such liberal power to give, may still
 With equal power resume that gift, and raise 90
 A tempest that shall shake her own creation
 To its original atoms—tell me! say
 This mighty Emperor, this dreaded hero,
 Has he beheld the glittering front of war?
 Knows his soft ear the trumpet's thrilling voice, 95
 And outcry of the battle? Have his limbs
 Sweat under iron harness? Is he not
 The silken son of dalliance, nursed in ease

Ver. 82. Thus ever grave and undisturbed reflection.] At this place commenced the fragment, which the Author transmitted to his friend West, expressing his preference of the seventeen lines which follow, above the rest that he had then written. There is a peculiar justness in the imagery employed in line 91, as it is taken from the system of that philosophy which was then in fashion—the Epicurean. The expression “silken son of dalliance,” in line 98, is one of which the Author himself seems to doubt the propriety. It may perhaps, however, find a partial support from a line in the Dunciad:

“To where the Seine, obsequious as she runs, Pours at great Bourbon's feet her silken sons.”

B. iv. p. 298.

And pleasure's flowery lap?—Rubellius lives,
 And Sylla has his friends, though schooled by fear 100
 To bow the supple knee, and court the times
 With shows of fair obeisance; and a call,
 Like mine, might serve belike to wake pretensions
 Drowsier than theirs, who boast the genuine blood
 Of our imperial house. 105

ACERONIA.

Did I not wish to check this dangerous passion,
 I might remind my mistress that her nod
 Can rouse eight hardy legions, wont to stem
 With stubborn nerves the tide, and face the rigour
 Of bleak Germania's snows. Four, not less brave, 110
 That in Armenia quell the Parthian force
 Under the warlike Corbulo, by you
 Marked for their leader: these, by ties confirmed,
 Of old respect and gratitude, are yours.
 Surely the Masians too, and those of Egypt, 115
 Have not forgot your sire: the eye of Rome,
 And the Prætorian camp have long revered,
 With custom'd awe, the daughter, sister, wife,
 And mother of their Cæsars.

Ver. 106. Did I not wish to check this dangerous passion.]
 The speech of Agrippina, continuing as it did in the Author's manuscript, from line 82 to the end of the scene, was acknowledged to be too long. Mr. Mason was hence induced to make an interruption, by adapting some parts of it to the character of Acronia.

AGRIPPINA.

Ha! by Juno,

It bears a noble semblance. On this base 120
 My great revenge shall rise; or say we sound
 The trump of liberty; there will not want,
 Even in the servile senate, ears to own
 Her spirit-stirring voice; Soranus there,
 And Cassius; Vetus too, and Thræsea, 125
 Minds of the antique cast, rough, stubborn souls,
 That struggle with the yoke. How shall the spark
 Unquenchable, that glows within their breasts,
 Blaze into freedom, when the idle herd (Slaves from the womb, created but to stare, 130
 And bellow in the Circus) yet will start,
 And shake them at the name of liberty,
 Stung by a senseless word, a vain tradition;
 As there were magic in it? Wrinkled beldams
 Teach it their grandchildren, as somewhat rare 135
 That anciently appeared, but when, extends Beyond their chronicle—oh! 'tis a cause
 To arm the hand of childhood, and rebrace
 The slackened sinews of time-wearied age.
 Yes, we may meet, ungrateful boy, we may! 140
 Again the buried genius of old Rome
 Shall from the dust uprear his reverend head,

Ver. 141. Again the buried genius of old Rome.]

“Rome’s ancient genius o’er its ruins spread,
 Shakes off the dust, and rears his reverend head.”

Pope’s Essay on Criticism, ver. 699.

Roused by the shout of millions: there before
 His high tribunal thou and I appear.
 Let majesty sit on thy awful brow, 145
 And lighten from thy eye: around thee call
 The gilded swarm that wantons in the sunshine
 Of thy full favour; Seneca be there
 In gorgeous phrase of laboured eloquence
 To dress thy plea, and Burrhus strengthen it 150
 With his plain soldier's oath, and honest seeming.
 Against thee, liberty and Agrippina:
 The world, the prize; and fair befall the victors.
 But soft! why do I waste the fruitless hours
 In threats unexecuted? Haste thee, fly 155
 These hated walls that seem to mock my shame,
 And cast me forth in duty to their lord.

ACERONIA.

'Tis time to go, the sun is high advanced,
 And, ere mid-day, Nero will come to Baiæ.

AGRIPPINA.

My thought aches at him; not the basilisk 160
 More deadly to the sight, than is to me

Ver. 148. ————— Seneca be there, &c.] Tacitus thus speaks of the two favourites here mentioned. "Hi rectores imperatoriæ juventæ, et pari in societate potentiæ, concordēs, diversâ arte, ex æquo pollebant. Burrus militaribus curis, et severitate morum: Seneca præceptis eloquentiæ, et comitate honestâ."—Taciti Annales, xiii. c. 2.

The cool injurious eye of frozen kindness.
 I will not meet its poison Let him feel
 Before he sees me.

ACERONIA.

Why then stays my sovereign,
 Where he so soon may—

AGRIPPINA.

Yes, I will be gone, 165
 But not to Antium—all shall be confessed,
 Whate'er the frivolous tongue of giddy fame
 Has spread among the crowd; things, that but whispered

Have arched the hearer's brow, and riveted
 His eyes in fearful ecstasy: no matter 170
 What; so't be strange, and dreadful.—Sorceries,
 Assassinations, poisonings—the deeper
 My guilt, the blacker his ingratitude.

And you, ye manes of ambition's victims,
 Enshrined Claudius, with the pitied ghosts 175
 Of the Syllani, doomed to early death,
 (Ye unavailing horrors, fruitless crimes!)
 If from the realms of night my voice ye hear,
 In lieu of penitence, and vain remorse,
 Accept my vengeance. Though by me ye bled, 180
 He was the cause. My love, my fears for him,
 Dried the soft springs of pity in my heart,
 And froze them up with deadly cruelty.
 Yet if your injured shades demand my fate,

If murder cries for murder, blood for blood, 185
 Let me not fall alone ; but crush his pride,
 And sink the traitor in his mother's ruin.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.

OTHO, POPPÆA.

OTHO.

Thus far we're safe. Thanks to the rosy queen
 Of amorous thefts : and had her wanton son
 Lent us his wings, we could not have beguiled 190
 With more elusive speed the dazzled sight
 Of wakeful jealousy. Be gay securely ;
 Dispel, my fair, with smiles, the timorous cloud
 That hangs on thy clear brow. So Helen looked,
 So her white neck reclined, so was she borne 195
 By the young Trojan to his gilded bark
 With fond reluctance, yielding modesty,
 And oft reverted eye, as if she knew not
 Whether she feared, or wished to be pursued.

* * * * *

“The Britannicus of M. Racine, I know, was one of Mr. Gray's most favourite plays; and the admirable manner in which I have heard him say that he saw it represented at Paris^b, seems to have led him to choose the death of Agrippina for this his first and only effort in the drama. The execution of it also, as far as it goes, is so very much in Racine's taste, that I suspect, if that great poet had been born an Englishman, he would have written precisely in the same style and manner. However, as there is at present in this nation a general prejudice against declamatory plays, I agree with a learned friend, who perused the manuscript, that this fragment will be little relished by the many; yet the admirable strokes of nature and character with which it abounds, and the majesty of its diction, prevent me from withholding from the few, who I expect will relish it, so great a curiosity (to call it nothing more) as part of a tragedy written by Mr. Gray. These persons well know, that till style and sentiment be a little more regarded, mere action and passion will never secure reputation to the author, whatever they may do to the actor. It is the business of the one "to strut and fret his hour upon the stage;" and if he frets and struts enough, he is sure to find his reward in the plaudit of an upper gallery: but the other ought to have some regard to the cooler judgment of the closet; for I will be bold to say, that if Shakspeare himself had not written a multitude of passages which please there as much as they do on the stage, his reputation would not stand so universally high as it does at present. Many of these passages, to the shame of our theatrical taste, are omitted constantly in the representation: but I say not this from conviction that the mode of writing, which Mr. Gray pursued, is the best for dramatic purposes. I think myself, what I have asserted elsewhere^c, that a medium between the French and English taste would be preferable to either; and yet this medium, if hit with the greatest nicety, would fail of success on our theatre, and that for a very obvious reason. Actors (I speak of the troop collectively) must all learn to speak as well as act, in order to do justice to such a drama."—MASON.

^b By Mademoiselle Dumesnil.

Notwithstanding the general resemblance between the above fragment and the tragedy of Racine, there occur scarcely any direct parallelisms of expression. The only passage in the French play worth referring to in this view, is the speech of Agrippina, beginning "Ah l'on s'efforce," in the third scene of the third act.

^c See Letters prefixed to Elfrida, particularly Letter II.

HYMN TO IGNORANCE;

A FRAGMENT.

HAIL, horrors, hail! ye ever gloomy bowers,
 Ye gothic fanes, and antiquated towers,
 Where rushy Camus' slowly-winding flood
 Perpetual draws his humid train of mud :
 Glad I revisit thy neglected reign, 5
 Oh take me to thy peaceful shade again.
 But chiefly thee, whose influence breathed from high
 Augments the native darkness of the sky ;
 Ah, Ignorance! soft salutary power!
 Prostrate with filial reverence I adore. 10
 Thrice hath Hyperion rolled his annual race,
 Since weeping I forsook thy fond embrace.
 Oh say, successful dost thou still oppose
 Thy leaden ægis 'gainst our ancient foes?
 Still stretch, tenacious of thy right divine, 15
 The massy sceptre o'er thy slumbering line?
 And dews Lethean through the land dispense
 To steep in slumbers each benighted sense?
 If any spark of wit's delusive ray
 Break out, and flash a momentary day, 20

Ver. 19. If any spark of wit's delusive ray.] An expression somewhat similar occurs in the Dunciad :

" Wit shoots in vain its momentary fires ;
 The meteor drops, and in a flash expires."

Book iv. ver. 633.

With damp, cold touch forbid it to aspire,
And huddle up in fogs the dangerous fire.

Oh say—she hears me not, but, careless grown,
Lethargic nods upon her ebon throne.

Goddess! awake, arise, alas my fears! 25

Can powers immortal feel the force of years?
Not thus of old, with ensigns wide unfurled,
She rode triumphant o'er the vanquished world;
Fierce nations owned her unresisted might,
And all was ignorance, and all was night. 30

Oh! sacred age! Oh! times for ever lost!
(The schoolman's glory, and the churchman's boast.)
For ever gone—yet still to fancy new,
Her rapid wings the transcient scene pursue,
And bring the buried ages back to view. 35

High on her car, behold the grandam ride

Ver. 27. Not thus of old, with ensigns wide unfurled.] We here fully discover the identity of our Author's personification with the goddess of the Dunces, and the extent of their power is described in language somewhat similar :

“ See, round the poles, where keener spangles shine,
Where spices smoke beneath the burning line,
(Earth's wide extremes,) her sable flag displayed ;
And all the nations covered in her shade !”

Dunciad, book iii. 61.

* * * * *
* * * * *

“ Thus, at her felt approach, and secret might,
Art after art goes out, and all is night.”

Ver. 345.

Like old Sesostris with barbaric pride ;
 * * * a team of harnessed monarchs bend.

* * * * *

Ver. 37. Like old Sesostris with barbaric pride.] The following lines are pointed out by Mr. Mitford in this place :

“Sesostris-like, such charioteers as these May drive six harnessed monarchs if they please.”

Young's Love of Fame, Sat. v.

THE ALLIANCE
OF
EDUCATION AND GOVERNMENT;

A FRAGMENT^a.

Ποταγ' ὦ γαθε' ταν γαρ αιδαν
Ουτι πω εις Αιδαν γε τον εκλελαθοντα φυλαξεις.
THEOC. Id. i. 63.

ESSAY I.

As sickly plants betray a niggard earth,
Whose barren bosom starves her generous birth,

^a Mr. Gibbon has expressed his opinion of this Poem of our Author in the following exclamation of regret. If there is any censure implied in the question, it is to be feared that Mr. Mitford's remarks will not obviate it.

“ Instead of compiling tables of chronology and natural history, why did not Mr. Gray apply the powers of his genius to finish the Philosophic Poem, of which he has left us such an exquisite specimen ?”—Decl. and Fall, vol. iii. p. 248. 4to. ed.

Ver. 1. As sickly plants betray a niggard earth.] If any copies of this Essay would have authorised me to have made an alteration in the disposition of the lines, I would, for the sake of perspicuity, have printed the first twelve in the following manner; because I think the poetry would not have been in the

Nor genial warmth, nor genial juice retains,
 Their roots to feed, and fill their verdant veins:
 And as in climes, where Winter holds his reign, 5
 The soil, though fertile, will not teem in vain,
 Forbids her gems to swell, her shades to rise,
 Nor trusts her blossoms to the churlish skies :
 So draw mankind in vain the vital airs,
 Unformed, unfriended, by those kindly cares, 10
 That health and vigour to the soul impart,
 Spread the young thought, and warm the opening heart :

So fond Instruction on the growing powers
 Of nature idly lavishes her stores,
 If equal Justice with unclouded face 15
 Smile not indulgent on the rising race,
 And scatter with a free, though frugal hand,
 Light golden showers of plenty o'er the land :

least hurt by such a transposition, and the poet's meaning would have been much more readily perceived. I put them down here for that purpose :

As sickly plants betray a niggard earth,
 Whose barren bosom starves her generous birth,
 Nor genial warmth, nor genial juice retains
 Their roots to feed, and fill their verdant veins :
 So draw mankind in vain the vital airs,
 Unformed, unfriended by those kindly cares,
 That health and vigour to the soul impart,
 Spread the young thought, and warm the opening heart.
 And as in climes, where Winter holds his reign,
 The soil, though fertile, will not teem in vain,
 Forbids her gems to swell, her shades to rise,
 Nor trusts her blossoms to the churlish skies :
 So fond Instruction, &c.

MASON.

But Tyranny has fixed her empire there,
 To check their tender hopes with chilling fear, 20
 And blast the blooming promise of the year.

This spacious animated scene survey,
 From where the rolling orb, that gives the day,
 His sable sons with nearer course surrounds
 To either pole, and life's remotest bounds, 25

How rude so e'er th' exterior form we find,
 Howe'er opinion tinge the varied mind,
 Alike to all, the kind, impartial Heaven
 The sparks of truth and happiness has given:
 With sense to feel, with memory to retain, 30

They follow pleasure, and they fly from pain;
 Their judgment mends the plan their fancy draws,
 Th' event presages, and explores the cause;
 The soft returns of gratitude they know,
 By fraud elude, by force repel the foe; 35

Ver. 24. His sable sons with nearer course surrounds.] Horace has characterized the regions of the south in a similar manner:

—————Sub curru nimum propinqui

Solis.

Lib. i. Od. 22.

Ver. 27. Howe'er opinion tinge the varied mind.] It is possible that the mere mention of opinion recalled to the Author's mind a couplet in the "Essay on Man," which for beauty of imagery, and sedate harmony of versification, has seldom been equalled. It is in reference to the trifles which form the business of human life that the Poet speaks:

"Meanwhile opinion gilds, with varying rays,
 Those painted clouds that beautify our days."

Ep. ii. 283.

l.

While mutual wishes, mutual woes endear
The social smile and sympathetic tear.

Say, then, through ages by what fate confined
To different climes seem different souls assigned?
Here measured laws and philosophic ease 40
Fix, and improve the polished arts of peace;
There Industry and Gain their vigils keep,
Command the winds, and tame th' unwilling deep:
Here Force and hardy deeds of blood prevail;
There languid Pleasure sighs in every gale. 45
Oft o'er the trembling nations from afar
Has Scythia breathed the living cloud of war ;

Ver. 36. While mutual wishes, mutual woes endear.] The Deity, in the language of the poet already alluded to,

“ On mutual wants built mutual happiness.”

Essay on Man, Ep. iii. 112.

“ Wants, frailties, passions, closer still ally
The common interest, and endear the tie.”

Ep. ii. 253.

Ver. 47. Has Scythia breathed the living cloud of war.] The most celebrated of the early irruptions of the Scythians into the neighbouring countries is that under the conduct of Madyes, about the year of the creation 3350, when they broke into Asia, during the reign of Cyaxares, king of the Medes, and conqueror of the Assyrians, plundered it at discretion, and kept possession of it during twenty-eight years. Many successive incursions, attended with every kind of desolation, are enumerated by historians; particularly those, in A. D. 252, during the reign of Gallus and Volusianus, and in 261, under that of Gallienus. Under the Greek emperors also, to mention only the years 1053 and 1191, it appears that the Scythians still continued their accustomed ravages. In later times, the like spirit of sudden and destructive invasion has constantly prevailed; and these same

And, where the deluge burst, with sweepy sway
 Their arms, their kings, their gods were rolled away.
 As oft have issued, host impelling host, 50
 The blue-eyed myriads from the Baltic coast.
 The prostrate South to the destroyer yields
 Her boasted titles, and her golden fields :
 With grim delight the brood of Winter view
 A brighter day, and heavens of azure hue ; 55

Scythians, under their modern name of Tartars, have, at different periods, over-run Asia, and even some parts of Europe : it is sufficient, on this point, to recall to the reader's memory the name of Gingis-Chan, Octai, and Tamerlane.—MASON.

Ver. 50. As oft have issued, host impelling host.] Mr. Mitford quotes from Thomson's Liberty :

“ Hence many a people, fierce with freedom rushed
 From the rude iron regions of the north

To Libyan deserts, swarm protruding swarm.” iv. 803.

Ver. 51. The blue-eyed myriads from the Baltic coast.] The different nations of Germans, who inhabited or bordered on this coast, have been always distinguished by their various emigrations in search of a better soil and climate, and of a more commodious settlement. The reader will readily recollect the expedition of the Teutones, who joined the Cimbri, when they invaded the Roman territories to the united amount, it is said, of 300,000 fighting men ; the many inroads of the Germans into Gaul, under the conduct of Ariovistus ; and the numerous irruptions, into the Roman empire, of the Suevi, the Goths, the Vandals, and lastly of the Lombards ; most of which nations came originally from the coasts here mentioned. The epithet “ blue-eyed ” exhibits a distinguishing feature of the ancient Germans ; and is particularly remarked by Tacitus and Juvenal. “ Truces et cærulei oculi,” observes the former, “ de Popul. German.” cap. 4. ; and the latter, “ Cærulea quis stupuit Germani lumina ? Sat. 13. ver. 164.—MASON.

Ver. 54. With grim delight the brood of Winter view.] It

Scent the new fragrance of the breathing rose,
 And quaff the pendent vintage as it grows.
 Proud of the yoke, and pliant to the rod,
 Why yet does Asia dread a monarch's nod,
 While European Freedom still withstands 60
 Th' encroaching tide that drowns her lessening lands;
 And sees far off, with an indignant groan,
 Her native plains, and empires once her own?
 Can opener skies and suns of fiercer flame
 O'erpower the fire, that animates our frame; 65
 As lamps, that shed at eve a cheerful ray,
 Fade and expire beneath the eye of day?

may not be improper here, after admiring the noble vein of poetical expression and imagery which adorns this description, to relate an incident in itself curious, which shows the propriety of it. The Normans, who came originally from Norway and Scandinavia, having, after a century of ravages, settled themselves in Neustria, (since called Normandy,) in 912, were invited into the southern parts of Italy, in the year 1018, by Gaimar, prince of Salerno. The ambassadors, by his particular direction, carried with them a quantity of citrons, and of other rare fruits, as the most alluring proof of the mildness of the climate. He thought (and the event showed he was right in thinking so) that this "brood of winter," delighted with the taste and fragrance of these delicacies, would the more readily consent to his proposal. [See Leo Ostiensis in his "Chron. Cassin," and Petavius, "Rationarium Temp." pars. prim. lib. viii.] Mr. Gray's judgment, in what remains to us of this Essay, is very remarkable. He borrows from poetry his imagery, his similes, and his expressions; but his thoughts are taken, as the nature of the poem requires, from history and observation.—
 MASON.

Need we the influence of the northern star
 To string our nerves and steel our hearts to war?
 And, where the face of Nature laughs around, 70
 Must sickening Virtue fly the tainted ground?
 Unmanly thought! what seasons can controul,
 What fancied zone can circumscribe the soul,
 Who, conscious of the source from whence she springs,
 By Reason's light, on Resolution's wings, 75
 Spite of her frail companion, dauntless goes
 O'er Lybia's deserts and through Zembla's snows?
 She bids each slumbering energy awake,
 Another touch, another temper take,
 Suspends th' inferior laws that rule our clay : 80
 The stubborn elements confess her sway ;
 Their little wants, their low desires, refine,
 And raise the mortal to a height divine.
 Not but the human fabric from the birth
 Imbibes a flavour of its parent earth : 85
 As various tracts enforce a various toil,
 The manners speak the idiom of their soil.
 An iron-race the mountain-cliffs maintain,
 Foes to the gentler genius of the plain :
 For where unwearied sinews must be found 90
 With side-long plough to quell the flinty ground,

Ver. 91. With side-long plough to quell the flinty ground.]
 So Goldsmith's hardy peasant of the Alps :

—“ Drives his venturous ploughshare to the steep,
 Or seeks the den, where snow-tracks mark the way,
 And drags the struggling savage into day.”

Traveller.

To turn the torrent's swift-descending flood,
 To brave the savage rushing from the wood,
 What wonder, if, to patient valour trained,
 They guard with spirit, what by strength they gained?
 And while their rocky ramparts round they see, 96
 The rough abode of want and liberty,
 (As lawless force from confidence will grow,)
 Insult the plenty of the vales below?
 What wonder, in the sultry climes, that spread 100
 Where Nile redundant o'er his summer-bed
 From his broad bosom life and verdure flings,
 And broods o'er Egypt with his watery wings,
 If with adventurous oar and ready sail
 The dusky people drive before the gale; 105
 Or on frail floats to neighbouring cities ride,
 That rise and glitter o'er the ambient tide

* * * * *

Ver. 103. And broods o'er Egypt with his watery wings.]
 The image seems to be taken from the figure of Jupiter Pluvius, as represented on the Antonine Pillar. But the whole passage rises to a height beyond the powers either of sculpture or painting to ascend. The critic would, with difficulty, find any description in antiquity which exceeds this in point of true sublimity.—MASON.

Ver. 105. The dusky people drive before the gale.]
 "And where in pomp the sun-burnt people ride
 On painted barges, o'er the teeming tide."

Dryden's Virgil, Georg. iv. 409.

Ver. 107. That rise and glitter o'er the ambient tide.] The foregoing account of the river Nile, while it is embellished with all the graces of description, is given at the same time in exact conformity to truth and reality; as the reader will observe from the following citation : " Le Nil portoit par tout la fécondité avec ses eaux salutaires, unissoit les villes entre elles, et la grande Mer avec la Mer Rouge, entretenoit le commerce au dedans et au dehors du royaume, et le fortifioit contre l'ennemi : de sorte qu'il étoit tout ensemble et le nourricier, et le défenseur de l'Egypte. On lui abandonnoit la campagne : mais les villes, rehaussées avec des travaux immenses, et s'élevant comme des iles au milieu des eaux, regardoient avec joie de cette hauteur toute la plaine inondée et tout ensemble fertilissée par le Nil."—Bossuet, Disc. sur l'Hist. trois. part.—MASON.

On carefully reviewing the scattered papers in prose, which Mr. Gray writ, as hints for his own use in the prosecution of this Work, I think it best to form part of them into a kind of Commentary ; they will serve greatly to elucidate (as far as they go) the method of his reasoning.—MASON.

COMMENTARY.

The Author's subject being (as we have seen) The necessary Alliance between a good Form of Government and a good Mode of Education, in order to produce the Happiness of Mankind, the Poem opens with two similes ; an uncommon kind of exordium : but which, I suppose, the Poet intentionally chose, to intimate the analogical method he meant to pursue in his subsequent reasonings. First, he asserts that men without education are like sickly plants in a cold or barren soil, (line 1 to 5, and 8 to 12 ;) and secondly, he compares them, when unblest with a just and well-regulated government, to plants that will not blossom or bear fruit in an unkindly and inclement air, (line 5 to 9, and 13 to 22.) Having thus laid down the two propositions he means to prove, he begins by examining into the characteristics which (taking a general view of mankind) all men have in common one with another, (line 22 to 39 ;) they covet pleasure and avoid pain, (line 31 ;) they feel gratitude for benefits, (line 34 ;) they desire to avenge wrongs, which they effect either by force or cunning, (line 35;) they are linked to each other by their common feelings, and participate in sorrow and in joy, (line 36, 37.) If then all the human species agree in so many moral particulars, whence arises the diversity of national characters? This question the poet puts at line 38, and dilates upon it to line 64. Why, says he, have some nations shewn a propensity to commerce and industry; others to war and rapine; others to ease and pleasure? (line 42 to 46.) Why have the northern people overspread in all ages, and prevailed over the southern? (line 46 to 58.) Why has Asia been, time out of mind, the seat of despotism, and Europe that of freedom? (line 54 to 64.) Are we from these instances to imagine men necessarily enslaved to the inconveniencies of the climate where they were born? (line 64 to 72.) Or are we not rather to suppose there is a natural strength in the human mind, that is able to vanquish and break through them? (line 72 to 84.) It is confessed, however, that men receive an early tincture from the situation they are placed in, and the climate which produces them, (line 84 to 88.) Thus the inhabitants of the mountains, inured to labour and patience, are naturally trained to war, (line 88 to 96;) while those of the plain are more open to any attack, and softened by ease and plenty, (line 96 to 99.) Again, the Ægyptians, from the nature of their situation, might be the inventors of home navigation, from a necessity of keeping up an intercourse between their towns during the inundations of the Nile, (line 99 to * * *.) Those persons would naturally have the first turn to commerce who inhabited a barren coast like the Tyrians, and were persecuted by some neighbouring tyrant; or were drove to take refuge on some shoals, like the Venetian and Hollander; their discovery of some rich island, in the infancy of the world, described. The Tartar, hardened to war by his rigorous climate and pastoral life, and by his disputes for water and herbage in a country without land-marks, as also by skirmishes between his rival clans, was consequently fitted to conquer his rich southern neighbours, whom ease and luxury had enervated: yet this is no proof that liberty and valour may not exist in southern climes, since the Syrians and Carthaginians gave noble instances of both ; and the Arabians carried their conquests as far as the Tartars. Rome also (for many centuries) repulsed those very nations, which, when she grew weak, at length demolished her extensive empire^b. * * *

^b The reader will perceive that the Commentary goes further than the text. The reason for which is, that the Editor found it so on the paper from which he formed that comment ; and as the thoughts seemed to be those which Mr. Gray would have next graced with the harmony of his numbers, he held it best to give them in continuation. There are other maxims on different papers, all apparently relating to the same subject, which are too excellent to be lost ; these therefore (as the place in which he meant to employ them cannot be ascertained) I shall subjoin to this note, under the title of detached sentiments.

“ Man is a creature not capable of cultivating his mind but in society, and in that only where he is not a slave to the necessities of life.

“ Want is the mother of the inferior arts, but Ease that of the finer ; as eloquence, policy, morality, poetry, sculpture, painting, architecture, which are the improvements of the former.

“ The climate inclines some nations to contemplation and pleasure : others to hardship, action, and war ; but not so as to incapacitate the former for courage and discipline, or the latter for civility, politeness, and works of genius.

“ It is the proper work of education and government united to redress the faults that arise from the soil and air.

“ The principal drift of education should be to make men think in the northern climates, and act in the southern.

“ The different steps and degrees of education may be compared to the artificer’s operations upon marble ; it is one thing to dig it out of the quarry, and another to square it ; to give it gloss and lustre, call forth every beautiful spot and vein, shape it into a column, or animate it into a statue.

‘ To a native of free and happy governments his country is always dear ;

He loves his old hereditary trees.’

COWLEY.

while the subject of a tyrant has no country ; he is therefore selfish and base-minded ; he has no family, no posterity, no desire of fame ; or, if he has, of one that turns not on its proper object.

“ Any nation that wants public spirit, neglects education, ridicules the desire of fame, and even of virtue and reason, must be ill-governed.

“ Commerce changes entirely the fate and genius of nations, by communicating arts and opinions, circulating money, and introducing the materials of luxury ; she first opens and polishes the mind, then corrupts and enervates both that and the body.

“ Those invasions of effeminate southern nations by the warlike northern people, seem (in spite of all the terror, mischief, and ignorance which they brought with them) to be necessary evils ; in order to revive the spirit of mankind, softened and broken by the arts of commerce, to restore them to their native liberty and equality, and to give them again the power of supporting danger and hardship ; so a comet, with all the horrors that attend it as it passes through our system, brings a supply of warmth and light to the sun, and of moisture to the air.

“ The doctrine of Epicurus is ever ruinous to society : it had its rise when Greece was declining, and perhaps hastened its dissolution, as also that of Rome ; it is now propagated in France and in England, and seems likely to produce the same effect in both.

“ One principal characteristic of vice in the present age is the contempt of fame.

“ Many are the uses of good fame to a generous mind : it extends our existence and example into future ages ; continues and propagates virtue, which otherwise would be as short-lived as our frame ; and prevents the prevalence of vice in a generation more corrupt even than our own. It is impossible to conquer that natural desire we have of being remembered ; even criminal ambition and avarice, the most selfish of all passions, would wish to leave a name behind them.”

Thus, with all the attention that a connoisseur in painting employs in collecting every slight outline as well as finished drawing which led to the completion of some capital picture, I have endeavoured to preserve every fragment of this great poetical design. It surely deserved this care, as it was one of the noblest which Mr. Gray ever attempted ; and also, as far as he carried it into execution, the most exquisitely finished. That he carried it no further is, and must ever be, a most sensible loss to the republic of letters.—MASON.

STANZAS

TO MR. BENTLEY^a;A FRAGMENT.

IN silent gaze the tuneful choir among,
 Half pleased, half blushing, let the Muse admire,
 While Bentley leads her sister-art along,
 And bids the pencil answer to the lyre.

See, in their course, each transitory thought 5
 Fixed by his touch a lasting essence take ;
 Each dream, in fancy's airy colouring wrought
 To local symmetry and life awake !

^a These lines were written as a compliment to Mr. Bentley, who had designed some illustrations for Mr. Gray's Poems, and in particular a head-piece to the Long Story. That the panegyric may not be thought excessive, Mr. Mason has informed us, that the original drawings, which were long preserved with care at Strawberry Hill, were infinitely superior to the published engravings of them : so much so, that he who had only seen the latter, could by no means judge of the excellence of the former. To confirm this statement, it should be remembered, that for the sake of one of these designs, Mr. Gray was content to risk his poetical credit by the publication of the Long Story.

The tardy rhymes that used to linger on,
 To Censure cold, and negligent of Fame, 10
 In swifter measures animated run,
 And catch a lustre from his genuine flame.

Ah! could they catch his strength, his easy grace,
 His quick creation, his unerring line;
 The energy of Pope they might efface, 15
 And Dryden's harmony submit to mine.

But not to one in this benighted age
 Is that diviner inspiration given,
 That burns in Shakspeare's or in Milton's page,
 The pomp and prodigality of heaven. 20

As when conspiring in the diamond's blaze,
 The meaner gems that singly charm the sight,
 Together dart their intermingled rays,
 • And dazzle with a luxury of light.

Enough for me, if to some feeling breast 25
 My lines a secret sympathy 'impart^b;
 And as their pleasing influence 'flows confest,'
 A sigh of soft reflection 'heaves the heart.'

* * * * *

Ver. 10. To Censure cold, and negligent of Fame.]

"Careless of censure, not too fond of fame."

Pope's Essay on Criticism, p. 699.

^b A corner of the Author's manuscript being here torn off, Mr. Mason has endeavoured to fill up the chasm by the words printed in inverted commas.

O D E

ON THE PLEASURE ARISING FROM

VICISSITUDE^a.

Now the golden Morn aloft
 Waves her dew-bespangled wing,
 With vermil cheek, and whisper soft
 She wooes the tardy Spring :
 Till April starts, and calls around 5
 The sleeping fragrance from the ground ;
 And lightly o'er the living scene
 Scatters his freshest, tenderest green.

^a This Poem, left unfinished by the Author, is given with the additions of Mr. Mason printed in inverted commas. That ingenious editor was assisted in his attempt to complete the original design, by finding the following hasty note among Mr. Gray's papers: " Contrast between the winter past and the coming spring. Joy owing to the vicissitude.—Many who never feel the delight.—Sloth.—Envy.—Ambition. How much happier the rustic, who feels it, though he knows not how."

I have heard Mr. Gray say, that M. Gresset's " Epitre à ma Sœur" (see his works in the Amsterdam edition, 1748, p. 180.) gave him the first idea of this Ode; and whoever compares it with the French poem, will find some slight traits of resemblance, but chiefly in our Author's seventh stanza.—MASON.

New-born flocks, in rustic dance,
 Frisking ply their feeble feet ; 10
 Forgetful of their wintry trance,
 The birds his presence greet :
 But chief, the sky-lark warbles high
 His trembling thrilling ecstasy ;
 And, lessening from the dazzled sight, 15
 Melts into air and liquid light.

Rise, my soul! on wings of fire,
 Rise the rapturous choir among ;
 Hark! 'tis Nature strikes the lyre,
 And leads the general song : 20
 ' Warm let the lyric transport flow,
 Warm, as the ray that bids it glow ;
 And animates the vernal grove
 With health, with harmony, and love.'

Yesterday the sullen year 25
 Saw the snowy whirlwind fly ;
 Mute was the music of the air,
 The herd stood drooping by :
 Their raptures now that wildly flow,
 No yesterday, nor morrow know ; 30
 'Tis man alone that joy descries
 With forward, and reverted eyes.

Ver. 31. 'Tis man alone that joy descries.] Mr. Mitford here refers to a passage in Hamlet :

“ Since he that made us with such large discourse, Looking before and after.”

Smiles on past Misfortune's brow
 Soft Reflection's hand can trace ;
 And o'er the cheek of Sorrow throw 35
 A melancholy grace ;
 While Hope prolongs our happier hour,
 Or deepest shades, that dimly lower
 And blacken round our weary way,
 Gilds with a gleam of distant day. 40

Still, where rosy Pleasure leads,
 See a kindred Grief pursue ;
 Behind the steps that Misery treads,
 Approaching Comfort view :
 The hues of bliss more brightly glow, 45
 Chastised by sabler tints of woe ;
 And blended form, with artful strife,
 The strength and harmony of life.

See the wretch, that long has tost
 On the thorny bed of pain, 50

Ver. 43. Behind the steps that Misery treads.] A resemblance has been here pointed out to some lines in the " Essay on Man :"

" See some strange comfort every state attend,
 And pride bestowed on all, a common friend :
 See some fit passion every age supply,
 Hope travels on, nor quits us when we die."

Ep. ii. 270.

Ver. 47. And blended form, with artful strife.]
 " Those lights and shades, whose well-accorded strife Gives all the strength, and colour of our life."

Ver. 49. See the wretch, that long has tost.] The following

At length repair his vigour lost,
 And breathe and walk again :
 The meanest floweret of the vale,
 The simplest note that swells the gale,
 The common sun, the air, the skies, 55
 To him are opening Paradise.

Humble Quiet builds her cell,
 Near the source whence Pleasure flows ;
 She eyes the clear crystalline well,
 And tastes it as it goes. 60
 ' While' far below the ' madding' crowd
 ' Rush headlong to the dangerous flood,'

is certainly one of the traits of resemblance, alluded to by Mr. Mason, though it can hardly be called a slight one :

“ O ! jours de la convalescence !

Jours d'une pure volupté :

C'est une nouvelle naissance,

Un rayon d'immortalité.

Quel feu ! tous les plaisirs ont volé dans mon ame,

J' adore avec transport le céleste flambeau ;

Tout m' intéresse, tout m' enflâme—

Pour moi, l'univers est nouveau.

* * * * *

Les plus simples objets ; le chante d'un Fauvette,

Le matin d'un beau jour, la verdure des bois,

La fraîcheur d'une violette ;

Milles spectacles, qu' autrefois,

On voyoit avec nonchalance,

Transportent aujourd'hui, présentent des appas

Inconnus à l' indifférence ;

Et que la foule ne voit pas.” Gresset, tom. i. p. 145.

Where broad and turbulent it sweeps,
 ' And' perish in the boundless deeps.

Mark where Indolence and Pride, 65

' Soothed by Flattery's tinkling sound,'
 Go, softly rolling, side by side,

Their dull, but daily round :

' To these, if Hebe's self should bring
 The purest cup from Pleasure's spring, 70

Say, can they taste the flavour high
 Of sober, simple, genuine Joy ?

' Mark Ambition's march sublime

Up to Power's meridian height ;

While pale-eyed Envy sees him climb, 75

And sickens at the sight.

Phantoms of danger, death, and dread,

Float hourly round Ambition's head ;

While Spleen, within his rival's breast,

Sits brooding on her scorpion nest. 80

' Happier he, the peasant, far,

From the pangs of passion free,

That breathes the keen yet wholesome air

Of rugged penury.

He, when his morning task is done, 85

Can slumber in the noontide sun ;

And hie him home, at evening's close,

To sweet repast, and calm repose.

POEMS.

181

' He, unconscious whence the bliss,
 Feels, and owns in carols rude, 90
That all the circling joys are his,
 Of dear Vicissitude.
From toil he wins his spirits light,
From busy day the peaceful night ;
Rich, from the very want of wealth, 95
In Heaven's best treasures, peace and health.'

SKETCH OF HIS OWN CHARACTER,
WRITTEN IN 1761,

AND FOUND IN ONE OF HIS POCKET-BOOKS.

Too poor for a bribe, and too proud to importune ;
He had not the method of making a fortune :
Could love, and could hate, so was thought somewhat odd ;
No very great wit, he believed in a God :
A post or a pension he did not desire, 5
But left church and state to Charles Townshend^a and Squire^b.

Ver. 4. No very great wit, he believed in a God.] The reader may perhaps be reminded of the following lines in Pope's Moral Essays :

“ Flavia's a wit, has too much sense to pray ;
To toast our wants and wishes, is her way ;
Nor asks of God, but of her stars, to give
The mighty blessing, ‘ while we live, to live.’ ”

Ep. ii. 87.

^a The Right Honourable Charles Townsend, who distinguished himself by bringing forward in Parliament many important measures, among which was the Militia-bill. He, at this time, held the office of Chancellor of the Exchequer.

^b Dr. Samuel Squire was a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, and was known as the author of several literary, as well as theological, publications. In the course of the year in which these lines were written, he was preferred to the See of St. David's.

AMATORY LINES^a.

WITH Beauty, with Pleasure surrounded, to languish—

To weep without knowing the cause of my anguish ;
To start from short slumbers, and wish for the morning—

To close my dull eyes when I see it returning ;
Sighs sudden and frequent, looks ever dejected—
Words that steal from my tongue, by no meaning connected!

Ah, say, fellow-swains, how these symptoms befell me?

They smile, but reply not—Sure Delia can tell me!

^a We are indebted to Mr. Warton for preserving to us these lines, which first appeared in his edition of Pope, vol. i. p. 285.

SONG^a.

THYRSIS, when we parted, swore
 Ere the spring he would return—
 Ah! what means yon violet flower,
 And the bud that decks the thorn?
 'Twas the lark that upward sprung! 5
 'Twas the nightingale that sung!

Idle notes! untimely green!
 Why this unavailing haste?
 Western gales and skies serene
 Prove not always winter past. 10
 Cease, my doubts, my fears to move—
 Spare the honour of my love.

^a This Song was first printed in a letter to the Countess of Ailsbury, from Mr. H. Walpole, who says, that it was written at the request of Miss Speed, to an old Air of Geminiani: the thought is from the French.

TOPHET;

AN EPIGRAM^a.

THUS Tophet looked ; so grinned the brawling fiend,
Whilst frighted prelates bowed and called him
friend.

^a This Epigram was written underneath a portrait of Mr. Etough, etched by the Rev. Michael Tyson, of Bene't College. The subject of our Author's ridicule was rector of Therfield, Herts, and of Colmworth, Bedfordshire ; and in such different terms is he described by persons who knew him, that it is no easy matter to reconcile the discrepancy, or discover the truth. All indeed agree that he was eccentric, both in character and personal appearance. One represents him as originally a Scots Presbyterian, and hawking about wares, which he carried at his back : as afterwards turning churchman, and getting preferment by hallooing at elections. Finally, he is described as disgustingly mean and nasty in his dress and appearance. And yet this man was liberally patronized by Sir Robert Walpole, and intimate with the Archbishop of Canterbury. The story of the pedlar's pack is proved to be a "trick of imagination," and we are further told, that Mr. Etough contracted a disorder from an excessive attention to the cleanliness of his person. He was exceedingly charitable, punctual in performing the duties of his

Our mother-church, with half-averted sight,
Blushed as she blessed her griesly proselite ;
Hosannas rung through hell's tremendous borders,
And Satan's self had thoughts of taking orders.

parish, and conducted his household with all the attention to comfort which an ample income warranted.—See Nichols's Literary Anecdotes, vol. viii. p. 261.

IMPROMPTU^a;

SUGGESTED BY A VIEW, IN 1766, OF THE SEAT AND RUINS OF
A DECEASED NOBLEMAN, AT KINGSGATE, KENT.

OLD, and abandoned by each venal friend,
Here H——d formed the pious resolution
To smuggle a few years, and strive to mend
A broken character and constitution.

On this congenial spot he fixed his choice ; 5
Earl Goodwin trembled for his neighbouring sand ;
Here sea-gulls scream, and cormorants rejoice,
And mariners, though shipwrecked, dread to land.

^a Lord Holland is said to have built his mansion on the model of Cicero's Villa Formiana, at Baiæ. The house itself is now gone to decay, and the mimic ruins which surrounded it are become real ones.

Ver. 8. And mariners, though shipwrecked, dread to land.] Mr. Matthias ascribes the keen sarcasm which pervades this description to an impulse of virtuous indignation at some reports, "mixed up with all the bitterness of the political prejudices of the time." He tells us, that he himself has visited the spot "with other views and other thoughts:" and in the summer aspect of the scene, he found beauties worth commemorating in a very elegant Latin Ode.

Here reign the blustering north and blighting east,
No tree is heard to whisper, bird to sing ; 10
Yet Nature could not furnish out the feast,
Art he invokes new horrors still to bring.

Here mouldering fanes and battlements arise,
Turrets and arches nodding to their fall ;
Unpeopled monasteries delude our eyes, 15
And mimic desolation covers all.

“ Ah ! ” said the sighing peer, “ had B—te^b been true,
Nor M—’s, R—’s, B—’s friendship vain,
Far better scenes than these had blest our view,
And realized the beauties which we feign. 20

“ Purged by the sword, and purified by fire,
Then had we seen proud London’s hated walls ;
Owls would have hooted in St. Peter’s choir,
And foxes stunk and littered in St. Paul’s.”

^b The blank is filled up in the manuscript with the name of Bute ; and those in the next line originally stood, Shelburne’s, Rigby’s, Calcraft’s.

THE CANDIDATE;

OR,

THE CAMBRIDGE COURTSHIP^a.

WHEN sly Jemmy Twitcher had smugged up his face,
 With a lick of court white-wash, and pious grimace,
 A wooing he went, where three sisters of old
 In harmless society guttle and scold.

“ Lord ! sister,” says Physic to Law, “ I declare,
 Such a sheep-biting look, such a pick-pocket air !
 Not I for the Indies :—you know I’m no prude,—
 But his name is a shame,—and his eyes are so lewd !
 Then he shambles and straddles so oddly—I fear—
 No—at our time of life ’twould be silly, my dear.”

“ I don’t know,” says Law, “ but methinks for his look,
 ’Tis just like the picture in Rochester’s book ;
 Then his character, Phyzzy,—his morals—his life—
 When she died, I can’t tell, but he once had a wife.
 They say he’s no Christian, loves drinking and w——g,
 And all the town rings of his swearing and roaring !

^a The occasion of these lines was an active canvass, begun by Lord Sandwich, for the office of High Steward to the University of Cambridge.

His lying and filching, and Newgate-bird tricks ;—
Not I—for a coronet, chariot and six.”

Divinity heard, between waking and dozing,
Her sisters denying, and Jemmy proposing :
From table she rose, and with bumper in hand,
She stroked up her belly, and stroked down her band—
“ What a pother is here about wenching and roaring !
Why, David loved catches, and Solomon w——g :
Did not Israel filch from the Egyptians of old
Their jewels of silver and jewels of gold ?
The prophet of Bethel, we read, told a lie :
He drinks—so did Noah ;—he swears—so do I :
To reject him for such peccadillos, were odd ;
Besides, he repents—for he talks about G—

TO JEMMY.

“ Never hang down your head, you poor penitent elf, Come buss me—I'll be Mrs. Twitcher myself.”

* * * * *

POEMATA.

H Y M E N E A L

ON THE MARRIAGE OF HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS
THE PRINCE OF WALES^a.

IGNARÆ nostrûm mentes, et inertia corda,
Dum curas regum, et sortem miseramur iniquam,
Quæ solio affixit, vetuitque calescere flammâ
Dulci, quæ dono divûm, gratissima serpit
Viscera per, mollesque animis lene implicat æstus; 5
Nec teneros sensus, Veneris nec præmia nôrunt,
Eloquiumve oculi, aut facunda silentia linguæ:

Scilicet ignorant lacrymas, sævosque dolores,
Dura rudimenta, et violentæ exordia flammæ;
Scilicet ignorant, quæ flumine tinxit amaro 10
Tela Venus, cæcique armamentaria Divi,
Irasque, insidiasque, et tacitum sub pectore vulnus;
Namque sub ingressu, primoque in limine Amoris
Luctus et ultrices posuere cubilia Curæ;

^a This Poem was first printed in the Cambridge Collection, 1736, fol. In line 12 there is an error in metre, which it is singular should have escaped the notice of the writer, and the University that suffered it to be printed. It is, as Mr. Mitford observes, not a mistake of the press, as the line is composed of two hemisticks of Virgil.

Intus habent dulces Risus, et Gratia sedem, 15
 Et roseis resupina toris, roseo ore Voluptas :
 Regibus huc faciles aditus ; communia spernunt
 Ostia, jamque expers duris custodibus istis
 Panditur accessus, penetraliaque intima Templi.

Tuque Oh! Angliacis, Princeps, spes optima reg-nis, 20

Ne tantum, ne finge metum : quid imagine captus
 Hæres, et mentem pictura pascis inani ?
 Umbram miraris : nec longum tempus, et ipsa
 Ibit in amplexus, thalamosque ornabit ovantes.
 Ille tamen tabulis inhians longum haurit amorem, 25
 Affatu fruitur tacito, auscultatque tacentem
 Immemor artificis calami, risumque, ruboremque
 Aspicit in fucis, pictæque in virginis ore :
 Tanta Venus potuit ; tantus tenet error amantes.

Nascere, magna Dies, qua sese AUGUSTA Bri-tanno 30

Committat Pelago, patriamque relinquat amœnam ;
 Cujus in adventum jam nunc tria regna secundos
 Attolli in plausus, dulcique accensa furore
 Incipiunt agitare modos, et carmina dicunt :
 Ipse animo sedenim juvenis comitatur euntem 35
 Explorat ventos, atque auribus aëra captat,
 Atque auras, atque astra vocat crudelia ; pectus
 Intentum exultat, surgitque arrecta cupido ;
 Incusat spes ægra fretum, solitoque videtur
 Latior effundi pontus, fluctusque morantes. 40

Nascere, Lux major, qua sese AUGUSTA Britanno
 Committat juveni totam, propriamque dicabit ;
 At citius (precor) Oh ! cedas melioribus astris ;
 Nox finem pompæ, finemque imponere curis
 Possit, et in thalamos furtim deducere nuptam ; 45
 Sufficiat requiemque viris, et amantibus umbras :
 Adsit Hymen, et subridens cum matre Cupido
 Accedant, sternantque toros, ignemque ministrent ;
 Illicet haud pictæ incandescit imagine formæ
 Ulterius juvenis, verumque agnoscit amorem. 50

Sculptile sicut ebur, faciemque arsisse venustam
 Pygmaliona canunt : ante hanc suspiria ducit,
 Alloquiturque amens, flammamque et vulnera narrat ;
 Implorata Venus jussit cum vivere signum,
 Fœmineam inspirans animam ; quæ gaudia surgunt,
 Audiit ut primæ nascentia murmura linguæ, 56
 Luctari in vitam, et paulatim volvere ocellos
 Sedulus, aspexitque novâ splendescere flammâ ;
 Corripit amplexu vivam, jamque oscula jungit
 Acria confestim, recipitque rapitque ; prioris 60
 Immemor ardoris, Nymphæque oblitus eburneæ.

THO. GRAY. Pet. Coll.

LUNA HABITABILIS^a.

DUM Nox rorantes, non incommitata per auras
 Urget equos, tacitoque inducit sidera lapsu ;
 Ultima, sed nulli soror inficianda sororum,
 Hunc mihi, Musa ; tibi patet alti janua cœli,
 Astra vides, nec te numeri, nec nomina fallunt. 5
 Huc mihi, Diva veni ; dulce est per aperta serena
 Vere frui liquido, campoque errare silenti ;
 Vere frui dulce est ; modo tu dignata petentem
 Sis comes, et mecum gelidâ spatiere sub umbrâ.
 Scilicèt hos orbés, cœli hæc decora alta putandum est,
 Noctis opes, nobis tantum lucere ; virûmque 11
 Ostentari oculis, nostræ laquearia terræ,
 Ingentes scenas, vastique aulæa theatri ?
 Oh ! quis me pennis æthræ super ardua sistet
 Mirantem, propiusque dabit convexa tueri ; 15
 Teque adeo, undè fluens reficet lux mollior arva,
 Pallidiorque dies, tristes solata tenebras ?
 Sic ego, subridens Dea sic ingressa vicissim :

^a These verses were written by desire of the College, in 1737. They were first printed in the "Musæ Etonensis," vol. ii. p. 107, without the Author's name, and are referred to by Mr. Mason, in his Memoirs of Gray.

Non pennis opus hîc, supera ut simul illa petamus :
 Disce, Puer, potiùs cœlo deducere Lunam ; 20
 Neu crede ad magicas te invitum accingier artes,
 Thessalicosve modos ; ipsam descendere Phœben
 Conspecies novus Endymion ; seque offeret ultrò
 Visa tibi ante oculos, et notâ major imago.

Quin tête admoveas (tumuli supèr aggere spectas)
 Compositum tubulo ; simul imum invade canalem 26
 Sic intentâ acie, cœli simul alta patescent
 Atria ; jamque, ausus Lunaria visere regna,
 Ingredière solo, et caput inter nubila condas.

Ecce autem ! vitri se in vertice sistere Phœben 30
 Cernis, et Océanum, et crebris Freta consita terris
 Panditur ille atram faciem caligine condens
 Sublustri ; refugitque oculos, fallitque tuentem ;
 Integram Solis lucem quippè haurit aperto
 Fluctu avidus radiorum, et longos imbibit ignes : 35
 Verum his, quæ, maculis variata nitentibus, auro
 Cœrula discernunt, celso sese insula dorso
 Plurima protrudit, prætentaque littora saxis ;
 Liberior datur his quoniàm natura, minusque
 Lumen depascunt liquidum ; sed tela diei 40
 Detorquent, retròque docent se vertere flammæ.

Hinc longos videas tractus, terrasque jacentes
 Ordine candenti, et claros se attollere montes ;
 Montes quæis Rhodope assurgat, quibus Ossa nivali
 Vertice ; tum scopulis infrà pendentibus antra 45
 Nigrescunt clivorum umbrâ, nemorumque tenebris.
 Non rores illi, aut desunt sua nubila mundo ;
 Non frigus gelidum, atque herbis gratissimus imber

His quoque nota ardet picto Thaumantias arcu,
Os roseum Auroræ, propriique crepuscula cæli. 50

Et dubitas tantum certis cultoribus orbem
Destitui? exercent agros, sua mœnia condunt
Hi quoque, vel Martem invadunt, curantque triumphos

Victores: sunt hic etiam sua præmia laudi;
His metus, atque amor, et mentem mortalia tangunt.
Quin, uti nos oculis jam nunc juvat ire per arva, 56
Lucentesque plagas Lunæ, pontumque profundum;
Idem illos etiã ardor agit, cum se aureus effert
Sub sudum globus, et terrarum ingentior orbis;
Scilicèt omne æquor tum lustrant, scilicèt omnem 60
Tellurem, gentesque polo sub utroque jacentes;
Et quidam æstivi indefessus ad ætheris ignes
Pervigilat, noctem exercens, cœlumque fatigat;
Jam Galli apparent, jam se Germania latè
Tollit, et albescens pater Apenninus ad auras; 65
Jam tandem in Borean, en! parvulus Anglia nævus (Quanquam aliis longè fulgentior) extulit oras;
Formosum extemplò lumen, maculamque nitentem
Invisunt crebri Proceres, serùmque tuendo;
Hærent, certatimque suo cognomine signant: 70
Forsitan et Lunæ longinquus in orbe Tyrannus
Se dominum vocat, et nostrâ se jactat in aulâ.
Terras possim alias propiori sole calentes
Narrare, atque alias, jubaris queis parcior usus,
Lunarum chorus, et tenuis penuria Phœbi; 75
Nî, meditans eadem hæc audaci evolvere cantu,
Jam pulset citharam soror, et præludia tentet.

Non tamen has proprias laudes, nec facta silebo
 Jampridè in fatis, patriæque oracula famæ.
 Tempus erit, sursùm totos contendere cœtus 80
 Quo cernes longo excursu, primosque colonos Migrare in Lunam, et notos mutare Penates :
 Dum stupet obtutu tacito vetus íncola, longèque
 Insolitas explorat aves, classemque volentem.

Ut quondàm ignotum marmor, camposque natantes
 Tranavit Zephyros visens, nova regna, Columbus ; 86
 Litora mirantur circùm, mirantur et undæ
 Inclusas acies ferro, turmasque biformes,
 Monstraque fœta armis, et non imitabile fulmen.
 Fœdera mox icta, et gemini commercia mundi, 90
 Agminaque assueto glomerata sub æthere cerno.
 Anglia, quæ pelagi jamdudum torquet habenas,
 Exercetque frequens ventos, atque imperat undæ ;
 Aëris attollet fascès, veteresque triumphos
 Hùc etiam feret, et victis dominabitur auris. 95

SAPPHIC ODE^a.

TO MR. WEST.

BARBARAS ædes aditure mecum
 Quas Eris semper fovet inquieta,
 Lis ubi latè sonat, et togatum
 Æstuat agmen

Dulcius quanto, patulis sub ulmi 5
 Hospitæ ramis temerè jacentem
 Sic libris horas, tenuique inertes
 Fallere Musâ?

Sæpe enim curis vagor expeditâ
 Mente; dum, blandam meditans Camænam,
 Vix malo rori, meminive seræ 11
 Cedere nocti;

Et, pedes quò me rapiunt, in omni
 Colle Parnassum videor videre
 Fertilem sylvæ, gelidamque in omni 15
 Fonte Aganippen.

^a This is considered by Mr. Mason as the first original production of Gray's Muse; the two former copies of verses having been imposed as exercises.

Risit et Ver me, facilesque Nymphæ
 Nare captantem, nec ineleganti,
 Manè quicquid de violis eundo
 Surripit aura : 20

Me reclinatum teneram per herbam ;
 Quà leves cursus aqua cunque ducit,
 Et moras dulci strepitu lapillo
 Nectit in omni.

Hæ novo nostrum ferè pectus anno 25
 Simplices curæ tenuere, cœlum
 Quamdiù sudum explicuit Favonî
 Purior hora :

Otia et campos nec adhuc relinquo,
 Nec magis Phœbo Clytie fidelis ; 30
 (Ingruant venti licet, et senescat Mollior æstas.)

Namque, seu, lætos hominum labores
 Prataque et montes recreante curru,
 Purpurâ tractus oriens Eoos 35
 Vestit, et auro ;

Sedulus servo veneratus orbem
 Prodigum splendoris : amœniori
 Sive dilectam meditatatur igne
 Pingere Calpen ; 40

Usque dum, fulgore magis magis jam
Languido circum, variata nubes
Labitur furtim, viridisque in umbras

Scena recessit.

O ego felix, vice si (nec unquam 45
Surgerem rursus) simili cadentem
Parca me lenis sineret quieto

Fallere Letho!

Multa flagranti radiisque cincto
Integris ah! quam nihil inviderem, 50
Cum Dei ardentis medius quadrigas Sentit Olympus.

ALCAIC FRAGMENT.

—◆—

O LACRYMARUM fons, tenero sacros
Ducentium orus ex animo ; quater
Felix ! in imo qui scatentem
Pectore te, pia Nympha, sensit.

LATIN LINES ;

ADDRESSED TO MR. WEST, FROM GENOA.

—◆—

HORRIDOS tractus, Boreæque linquens
Regna Taurini fera, molliorem
Advehor brumam, Genuæque amantes
Litora soles.

ELEGIAC VERSES,

OCCASIONED BY THE SIGHT OF THE PLAINS WHERE
THE BATTLE OF TREBIA WAS FOUGHT.

QUA Trebie glaucas salices intersecat undâ,
Arvaque Romanis nobilitata malis.
Visus adhuc amnis veteri de clade rubere,
Et suspirantes ducere mœstus aquas ;
Maurorumque ala, et nigræ increbescere turmæ,
Et pulsa Ausonidum ripa sonare fugâ.

CARMEN

AD

C. FAVONIUM ZEPHYRINUM.

(Enclosed to Mr. West, after a visit to Frascati, and the cascades of Tivoli.)

MATER rosarum, cui teneræ vigent
 Auræ Favonî, cui Venus it comes Lasciva, Nympharum choreis
 Et volucrum celebrata cantu!
 Dic, non inertem fallere quâ diem 5
 Amat sub umbrâ, seu sinit aureum
 Dormire plectrum, seu retentat
 Pierio Zephyrinus antro
 Furore dulci plenus, et immemor
 Reptantis inter frigora Tusculi 10
 Umbrosa, vel colles Amici
 Palladiæ superantis Albæ.
 Dilecta Fauno, et capripedum choris
 Pineta, testor vos, Anio minax
 Quæcunque per clivos volutus 15
 Præcipiti tremefecit amne,
 Illius altum Tibur, et Æsulæ

Audisse sylvas nomen amabiles,
 Illius et gratas Latinis
 Naisin ingeminâsse rupes ; 20
 Nam me Latinæ Naides uvidâ
 Vidère ripâ, quâ niveas levi
 Tam sæpe lavit rore plumas
 Dulcè canens Venusinus ales ;
 Mirum ! canenti conticuit nemus, 25
 Sacrique fontes, et retinent adhuc
 (Sic Musa jussit) saxa molles
 Docta modos, veteresque lauri.
 Mirare nec tu me Citharæ rudem
 Claudis laborantem numeris : loca 30
 Amœna, jucundumque vir incompositum docuere carmen ;
 Hærent sub omni nam folio nigri
 Phœbea lucî (credite) somnia,
 Argutiusque et lympha et auræ
 Nescio quid solito loquuntur. 35

FRAGMENT OF A LATIN POEM

ON

THE GAURUS^a.

NĒC procūl infelix se tollit in æthera Gaurus,
 Prospiciens vitreum lugenti vertice pontum :
 Tristior ille diu, et veteri desuetus olivâ
 Gaurus, pampineæque eheu jam nescius umbræ ;
 Horrendi tam sæva premit vicinia montis, 5
 Attonitumque urget latus, exuritque ferentem.
 Nam fama est olim, mediâ dum rura silebant
 Nocte, Deo victa, et molli perfusa quiete,
 Infremuisse æquor ponti, auditamque per omnes
 Latè tellurem surdùm immugire cavernas : 10
 Quo sonitu nemora alta tremunt ; tremit excita tuto
 Parthenopæa sinu, flammantisque ora Vesevi.
 At subitò se aperire solum, vastosque recessus
 Pandere sub pedibus, nigrâque voragine fauces ;

^a These verses were written by Gray, and sent to his friend West, with a reference to Sandys's Travels, book iv. pp. 275, 277, 278. See Sect. II. Letter xxvii. A translation of them was printed in the Gents. Mag. July, 1775.

Tum piceas cinerum glomerare sub æthere nubes 15
Vorticibus rapidis, ardentique imbre procellam.

Præcipites fugere feræ, perque avia longè
Sylvarum fugit pastor, juga per deserta,
Ah, miser! increpitans sæpè altâ voce per umbram
Nequicquam natos, creditque audire sequentes. 20

Atque ille excelso rupis de vertice solus
Respectans notasque domos, et dulcia regna,
Nil usquàm videt infelix præter mare tristi
Lumine percussum, et pallentes sulphure campos,
Fumumque, flammisque, rotataque turbine saxa. 25

Quin ubi detonuit fragor, et lux reddita cœlo;
Mæstos confluere agricolas, passuque videres
Tandem iterum timido deserta requirere tecta:
Sperantes, si forte oculis, si forte darentur
Uxorum cineres, miserorumve ossa parentum 30

(Tenuia, sed tanti saltem solatia luctûs)
Unà colligere et justâ componere in urnâ.

Uxoribus nusquam cineres, nusquam ossa parentum
(Spem miseram!) assuetosve Lares, aut rura videbunt.

Quippe ubi planities campi diffusa jacebat; 35

Mons novus: ille supercilium, frontemque favillâ
Incanum ostentans, ambustis cautibus, æquor
Subjectum, stragemque suam, mæsta arva, minaci
Despicit imperio, soloque in littore regnat.

Hinc infame loci nomen, multosque per annos 40

Immemor antiquæ laudis, nescire labores

Vomeris, et nullo tellus revirescere cultu.

Non avium colles, non carmine matutino

Pastorum resonare; adeò undique dirus habebat

Informes latè horror agros saltusque vacantes. 45

Sæpius et longè detorquens navita proram
Monstrabat digito littus, sævæque revolvens
Funera narrabat noctis, veteremque ruinam.

Montis adhuc facies manet hirta atque aspera
saxis :

Sed furor extinctus jamdudum, et flamma quievit, 50

Quæ nascenti aderat ; seu fortè bituminis atri
Defluxere olîm rivi, atque effœta lacuna
Pabula sufficere ardori, viresque recusat ;
Sive in visceribus meditans incendia jam nunc
(Horrendùm) arcanis glomerat genti esse futuræ 55
Exitio, sparsos tacitusque recolligit ignes.

Raro per clivos haud secius ordine vidi
Canescentem oleam : longum post tempus amicti
Vite virent tumuli ; patriamque revisere gaudens
Bacchus in assuetis tenerum caput exerit arvis 60
Vix tandem, infidoque audet se credere cœlo.

A

FAREWELL TO FLORENCE^a.

* * OH Fæsulæ amœna

Frigoribus juga, nec nimiùm spirantibus auris !
 Alma quibus Tusci Pallas decus Apennini
 Esse dedit, glaucâque suâ canescere sylvâ !
 Non ego vos posthàc Arni de valle videbo 5
 Porticibus circum, et candenti cincta coronâ
 Villarum longè nitido consurgere dorso,
 Antiquamve Ædem, et veteres præferre Cupressus
 Mirabor, tectisque super pendentia tecta.

^a See Sect. II, Letter xxx.

IMITATION

OF

AN ITALIAN SONNET

OF SIGNIOR ABBATE BUONDELMONTE ^a.

LUSIT amicitiae interdum velatus amictu,
 Et benè compositâ veste fefellit Amor.
 Mox iræ assumpsit cultus, faciemque minantem,
 Inque odium versus, versus et in lacrymas :
 Ludentem fuge, nec lacrymanti, aut crede furenti
 Idem est dissimili semper in ore Deus.

SPESSE Amor sotto la forma
 D'amistà ride, e s'asconde
 Poi si mischia, e si confonde
 Con lo sdegno, e col rancor.
 In Pietade cì si trasforma ;
 Par trastullo, e par dispetto ;
 Mà nel suo diverso aspetto
 Sempr' egli, è l' istesso Amor^b.

^a See Sect. II. Letter xxx.

^b The above song was imitated in English by Mr. Walpole, in his Letters to West, (vol. iv. of his Works,) and since by Rogers ; see his Poems.

ALCAIC ODE,

WRITTEN IN THE ALBUM OF THE GRANDE CHAR-TREUSE, IN DAUPHINY, AUGUST, 1741^a.

OH Tu, severi Religio loci, Quocunque gaudes nomine (non leve
Nativa nam certè fluenta
Numen habet, veteresque sylvas ;
Præsentiorem et conspicimus Deum 5
Per invias rupes, fera per juga,
Clivosque præruptos, sonantes
Inter aquas, nemorumque noctem ;
Quàm si repostus sub trabe citreâ
Fulgeret auro, et Phidiacâ manu) 10
Salve vocanti rite, fesso et

^a See Sect. II. Letter xxx.

We saw in the eighth and eleventh letters of the second Section how much Mr. Gray was struck with the awful scenery which surrounds the Chartreuse, at a time his mind must have been in a far more tranquil state than when he wrote this excellent Ode. It is marked, I think, with all the finest touches of his melancholy Muse, and flows with such an originality of expression, that one can hardly lament he did not honour his own language by making it the vehicle of this noble imagery and pathetic sentiment.—MASON.

Da placidam juveni quietem.
Quod si invidendis sedibus, et frui
Fortuna sacrâ lege silentii

Vetat volentem, me resorbens 15

In medios violenta fluctus :
Saltem remoto des, Pater, angulo
Horas senectæ ducere liberas ;

Tutumque vulgari tumultu
Surripias, hominumque curis. 20

GREEK EPIGRAM^a.

Ἄζόμενος πολύθηρον ἐκηβόλου ἄλσος ἀνάσσει,
 Τᾶς δεινᾶς τεμένη λεῖπε κυναγέ θεᾶς,
 Μοῦνοι ἄρ' ἔνθα κύνων ζαθέων κλαγγεῦσιν ὑλάγμοι,
 Ἄνταχεῖς Νυμφᾶν ἀγροτερᾶν κελάδω.

^a See Sect. III. Letter x.

In the twelfth letter of the first section, Mr. Gray says of his friend's translation of an Epigram of Posidippus, "Græcam illam ἀφελειαν mirifice sapit." The learned reader, I imagine, will readily give this tetrastic the same character.—MASON.

PART OF

AN HEROIC EPISTLE

FROM SOPHONISBA TO MASINISSA^a.

EGREGIUM accipio promissi Munus amoris,
 Inque manu mortem, jam fruitura, fero :
 Atque utinam citius mandasses, luce vel una ;
 Transieram Stygios non inhonesta lacus.
 Victoris nec passa toros, nova nupta, mariti, 5
 Nec fueram fastus, Roma superba, tuos.
 Scilicet hæc partem tibi, Masinissa, triumphii
 Detractam, hæc pompæ jura minora suæ
 Imputat, atque uxor quòd non tua pressa catenis,
 Objecta et sævæ plausibus orbis eo : 10
 Quin tu pro tantis cepisti præmia factis,
 Magnum Romanæ pignus amicitiaë!
 Scipiadaë excuses, oro, si tardius utar
 Munere. Non nimiùm vivere, crede, velim.
 Parva mora est, breve sed tempus mea fama requirit :
 Detinet hæc animam cura suprema meam. 16

^a See Sect. III. Letter x.

Quæ patriæ prodesse meæ Regina ferebar,
 Inter Elisæas gloria prima nurus,
 Ne videar flammæ nimis indulsisse secundæ,
 Vel nimis hostiles extimuisse manus. 20
 Fortunam atque annos liceat revocare priores,
 Gaudiaque heu! quantis nostra repensa malis.
 Primitiasne tuas meministi atque arma Syphacis
 Fusa, et per Tyrias ducta trophæa vias?
 (Laudis at antiquæ forsân meminisse pigebit, 25 Quodque decus quondam causa ruboris erit.)
 Tempus ego certe memini, felicia Pœnis
 Quo te non puduit solvere vota deis;
 Mœniaque intrantem vidi: longo agmine duxit
 Turba salutantum, purpureique patres. 30
 Fœminea ante omnes longe admiratur euntem
 Hæret et aspectu tota caterva tuo.
 Jam flexi, regale decus, per colla capilli,
 Jam decet ardenti fuscus in ore color!
 Commendat frontis generosa modestia formam, 35
 Seque cupit laudi surripuisse suæ.
 Prima genas tenui signat vix flore juventas,
 Et dextræ soli credimus esse virum.
 Dum faciles gradiens oculos per singula jactas,
 (Seu rexit casus lumina, sive Venus) 40
 In me (vel certè visum est) conversa morari
 Sensi; virgineus perculit ora pudor.
 Nescio quid vultum molle spirare tuendo,
 Credideramque tuos lentius ire pedes.
 Quærebam, juxta æqualis si dignior esset, 45
 Quæ poterat visus detinuisse tuos:

Nulla fuit circum æqualis quæ dignior esset,
Asseruitque decus conscia forma suum.
Pompæ finis erat. Totâ vix nocte quievi,
Sin premat invitæ lumina victa sopor, 50
Somnus habet pompas, eademque recursat imago ;
Atque iterum hesterno munere victor ades.

* * * * *

DIDACTIC POEM,

UNFINISHED :

ENTITLED,

DE PRINCIPIIS COGITANDI.

LIBER PRIMUS. AD FAVONIUM.

General plan of the Poem.—First, Invocation to Mr. Locke. Address to Favonius, showing the use and importance of the design.—Beginning.—Connexion of the soul and body : nerves, the instruments of sensation.—Touch, the first and most extensive sense, described.—Begins before the birth ; pain, our first idea when born.—Seeing, the second sense.—Digressive encomium of light. The gradual opening and improvement of this sense, and that of hearing ; their connexion with the higher faculties of the mind : sense of beauty and order, and harmony annexed to them. From the latter, our delight in eloquence, poetry, and music derived.—Office of the taste and smell. Internal sense of reflection, whereby the mind views its own powers and operation, compared to a young wood-nymph admiring herself in some fountain.—Admission of ideas, some by a single sense, some by two, others by every way of sensation and reflection. Instance in a person born blind, he has no ideas of light and colours ; but he has those of figure, motion, extension, and space, (objects both of the sight and touch.) Third sort, those which make their entrance into the mind by every channel alike ; as pleasure and pain, power, existence, unity, and succession. Properties of bodies, whereby they make themselves known to us. Primary qualities : magnitude, solidity, mobility, texture and figure.

* * *

UNDE Animus scire incipiat ; quibus inchoet orsa
 Principiis seriem rerum, tenuemque catenam
 Mnemosyne : Ratio unde rudi sub pectore tardum
 Augeat imperium ; et primum mortalibus ægris
 Ira, Dolor, Metus, et Curæ nascantur inanes^a, 5
 Hinc canere aggredior. Nec dedignare canentem,
 O decus ! Angliacæ certe O lux altera gentis !
 Si quâ primus iter monstras, vestigia conor
 Signare incertâ, tremulâque insistere plantâ.
 Quin potius duc ipse (potes namque omnia) sanctum

^a The first six lines plainly intimate, that his general design was to be comprised in four books.

The first, On the Origin of our Ideas.

Unde Animus scire incipiat.——

The second. On the Distribution of these Ideas in the Memory.

——Quibus inchoet orsa

Principiis seriem rerum, tenuemque catenam

Mnemosyne.——

The third. On the Province of Reason, and its gradual Improvement.

——Ratio unde rudi sub pectore, tardum

Augeat imperium.——

The fourth. On the Cause and Effects of the Passions.

——Et primum mortalibus ægris

Ira, Dolor, Metus, et Curæ nascantur inanes. MASON.

Ad limen (si ritè adeo, si pectore puro,) 11
 Obscuræ reserans Naturæ ingentia claustra.
 Tu cæcas rerum causas, fontemque severum
 Pande, Pater ; tibi enim, tibi, veri magne Sacerdos,
 Corda patent hominum, atque altæ penetralia Mentis.
 Tuque aures adhibe vacuas, facilesque, Favonî, 16
 (Quod tibi crescit opus) simplex nec despice carmen,
 Nec vatem : non illa leves primordia motus,
 Quanquam parva, dabunt. Lætum vel amabile quicquid
 Usquam oritur, trahit hinc ortum ; nec surgit ad auras,
 Quin ea conspirent simul, eventusque secudent. 21
 Hinc variæ vitæ artes, ac mollior usus,
 Dulce et amicitæ vinclum : Sapientia dia
 Hinc roseum accendit lumen, vultuque sereno
 Humanas aperit mentes, nova gaudia monstrans, 25
 Deformesque fugat curas, vanosque timores :
 Scilicet et rerum crescit pulcherrima Virtus.
 Illa etiam, quæ te (mirùm) noctesque diesque
 Assiduè fovet inspirans, linguamque sequentem
 Temperat in numeros, atque horas mulcet inertes ;
 Aurea non aliâ se jactat origine Musa. 31
 Principio, ut magnum foedus Natura creatrix
 Firmavit, tardis jussitque inolescere membris
 Sublimes animas ; tenebroso in carcere partem
 Noluit ætheream longo torpere veterno : 35
 Nec per se proprium passa exercere vigorem est,
 Ne sociæ molis conjunctos sperneret artus,
 Ponderis oblita, et cœlestis conscia flammæ.
 Idcirco innumero ductu tremere undique fibras.

Nervorum instituit : tum toto corpore miscens 40
 Implicuit latè ramos, et sensile textum,
 Implevitque humore suo (seu lymphæ vocanda,
 Sive aura est) tenuis certè, atque levissima quædam
 Vis versatur agens, parvosque infusa canales
 Perfluit ; assiduè externis quæ concita plagis, 45
 Mobilis, incussique fidelis nuntia motûs,
 Hinc indè accensâ contage relabitur usque
 Ad superas hominis sedes, arcemque cerebri.
 Namque illic posuit solium, et sua templa sacravit
 Mens animi : hanc circum coëunt, densoque feruntur
 Agmine notitiæ, simulacraque tenuia rerum : 51
 Ecce autem naturæ ingens aperitur imago
 Immensæ, variique patent commercia mundi.

Ac uti longinquis descendunt montibus amnes
 Velivulus Tamisis, flaventisque Indus arenæ, 55
 Euphratesque, Tagusque, et opimo flumine Ganges,
 Undas quisque suas volvens, cursuque sonoro
 In mare prorumpunt : hos magno acclinis in antro
 Excipit Oceanus, natorumque ordine longo
 Dona recognoscit venientûm, ultròque serenat 60
 Cæruleam faciem, et diffuso marmore ridet.
 Haud aliter species properant se inferre novellæ
 Certatim menti, atque aditus quino agmine complent.

Primas tactus agit partes, primusque minutæ
 Laxat iter cæcum turbæ, recipitque ruentem. 65
 Non idem huic modus est, qui fratribus : amplius ille
 Imperium affectat senior, penitusque medullis,
 Visceribusque habitat totis, pellisque recentem.
 Funditur in telam, et latè per stamina vivit.

Necdum etiam matris puer eluctatus ab alvo 70
 Multiplices solvit tunicas, et vincula rupit ;
 Sopitus molli somno, tepidoque liquore
 Circumfusus adhuc: tactus tamen aura lacessit
 Jamdudum levior sensus, animamque reclusit.
 Idque magis simul, ac solitum blandumque calorem
 Frigore mutavit cœli, quod verberat acri 76
 Impete inassuetos artus : tum sævior adstat
 Humanæque comes vitæ Dolor excipit ; ille
 Cunctantem frustrà et tremulo multa ore querentem
 Corripit invadens, ferreisque amplectitur ulnis. 80
 Tum species primùm patefacta est candida Lucis (Usque vices adeò Natura bonique, malique, Exæquat, justâque manu sua damna rependit)
 Tum primùm, ignotosque bibunt nova lumina soles.
 Carmine quo, Dea, te dicam, gratissima cœli 85
 Progenies, ortumque tuum ; gemmantia rore
 Ut per prata levi lustras, et floribus halans
 Purpureum Veris gremium, scenamque virentem
 Pingis, et umbriferos colles, et cærula regna ?
 Grata te, Venerisque Lepos, et mille Colorum, 90
 Formarumque chorus sequitur, motusque decentes.
 At caput invisum Stygiis Nox atra tenebris
 Abdidit, horrendæque simul Formidinis ora,
 Pervigilesque æstus Curarum, atque anxius Angor :
 Undique lætitiâ florent mortalia corda, 95
 Purus et arridet largis fulgoribus Æther.
 Omnia nec tu ideò invalidæ se pandere Menti
 (Quippe nimis teneros posset vis tanta diei Perturbare, et inexpertos confundere visus)

Nec capere infantes animos, neu cernere credas 100
 Tam variam molem, et miræ spectacula lucis :
 Nescio quâ tamen hæc oculos dulcedine parvos
 Splendida percussit novitas, traxitque sequentes ;
 Nonne videmus enim, latis inserta fenestris
 Sicubi se Phœbi dispergant aurea tela, 105
 Sive lucernarum rutilus colluxerit ardor,
 Extemplo hùc obverti aciem, quæ fixa repertos
 Haurit inexpletum radios, fruiturque tuendo.

Altior huic verò sensu, majorque videtur
 Addita, Judicioque arcè connexa potestas, 110
 Quod simul atque ætas volventibus auxerit annis,
 Hæc simul, assiduo depascens omnia visu,
 Perspiciet, vis quanta loci, quid polleat ordo,
 Juncturæ quis honos, ut res accendere rebus
 Lumina conjurant inter se, et mutua fulgent. 115

Nec minor in geminis viget auribus insita virtus,
 Nec tantum in curvis quæ pervigil excubet antris
 Hinc atque hinc (ubi Vox tremefecerit ostia pulsu Aëriis invecta rotis) longèque recurset :
 Scilicet Eloquio hæc sonitus, hæc fulminis alas, 120
 Et mulcere dedit dictis et tollere corda,
 Verbaque metiri numeris, versuque ligare
 Repperit, et quicquid discant Libethrides undæ,
 Calliope quotiès, quotiès Pater ipse canendi
 Evolvat liquidum carmen, calamove loquenti 125
 Inspiret dulces animas, digitisque figuret.

At medias fauces, et linguæ humentia templa
 Gustus habet, quæ se insinuet jucunda saporum
 Luxuries, dona Autumni, Bacchique voluptas.

Naribus interea consedit odora hominum vis, 130
 Docta leves captare auras, Panchaia quales
 Vere novo exhalat, Floræve quod oscula fragrant
 Roscida, cum Zephyri furtim sub vesperis horâ
 Respondet votis, mollemque aspirat amorem.

Tot portas altæ capitis circumdedit arci 135
 Alma Parens, sensûsque vias per membra reclusit ;
 Haud solas : namque intus agit vivata facultas,
 Quâ sese explorat, contemplatusque repentè
 Ipse suas animus vires, momentaque cernit.
 Quid velit, aut possit, cupiat, fugiatve, vicissim 140
 Percipit imperio gaudens ; neque corpora fallunt
 Morigera ad celeres actus, ac numina mentis.

Qualis Hamadryadum quondam si fortè sororum
 Una, novos peragrans saltus, et devia rura ;
 (Atque illam in viridi suadet procumbere ripâ 145
 Fontis pura quies, et opaci frigoris umbra)
 Dum prona in latices speculi de margine pendet,
 Mirata est subitam venienti occurrere Nympham :
 Mox eosdem, quos ipsa, artus, eadem ora gerentem
 Unâ inferre gradus, unâ succedere sylvæ 150
 Aspicit alludens ; seseque agnoscit in undis.
 Sic sensu interno rerum simulacra suarum
 Mens ciet, et proprios observat conscia vultus.
 Nec verò simplex ratio, aut jus omnibus unum
 Constat imaginibus. Sunt quæ bina ostia nôrunt ;
 Hæ privos servant aditus ; sine legibus illæ 156
 Passim, qua data porta, ruunt, animoque propinquant.
 Respice, cui a cunis tristes extinxit ocellos,
 Sæva et in eterna mersit natura tenebras :

Illi ignota dies lucet, vernusque colorum 160

Offusus nitor est, et vivæ gratia formæ.

Corporis at filum, et motus, spatiumque, locique

Intervalla datur certo dignoscere tactu :

Quandoquidem his iter ambiguum est, et janua duplex,

Exclusæque oculis species irrumpere tendunt 165

Per digitos. Atqui solis concessa potestas

Luminibus blandæ est radios immittere lucis.

Undique proporrò sociis, quacunque patescit

Notitiæ campus, mistæ lasciva feruntur

Turba voluptatis comites, formæque dolorum 170

Terribiles visu, et portâ glomerantur in omni.

Nec vario minus introïtu magnum ingruit Illud,

Quo facere et fungi, quo res existere circùm

Quamque sibi proprio cum corpore scimus, et ire

Ordine, perpetuoque per ævum flumine labi. 175

Nunc age quo valeat pacto, quâ sensilis arte

Affectare viam, atque animi tentare latebras

Materies (dictis aures adverte faventes)

Exsequar. Imprimis spatii quam multa per æquor

Millia multigenis pandant se corpora seclis, 180

Expende. Haud unum invenies, quod mente licebit

Amplecti, nedum propriùs deprendere sensu,

Molis egens certæ, aut solido sine robore, cujus

Denique mobilitas linquit, texturave partes,

Ulla nec orarum circumcæsura coërcet. 185

Hæc conjuncta adeò totâ compage fatetur

Mundus, et extremo clamant in limine rerum,

(Si rebus datur extremum) primordia. Firmat

Hæc eadem tactus (tactum quis dicere falsum

Audeat?) hæc oculi nec lucidus arguit orbis. 190
 Inde potestatum enasci densissima proles ;
 Nam quodcunque ferit visum, tangive laborat,
 Quicquid nare bibis, vel concava concipit auris,
 Quicquid lingua sapit, credas hoc omne, necesse est
 Ponderibus, textu, discursu, mole, figurâ 195
 Particulas præstare leves, et semina rerum.
 Nunc oculos igitur pascunt, et luce ministrâ
 Fulgere cuncta vides, spargique coloribus orbem,
 Dum de sole trahunt alias, aliasque supernè
 Detorquent, retròque docent se vertere flammæ. 200
 Nunc trepido inter se fervent corpuscula pulsu,
 Ut tremor æthera per magnum, latèque natantes
 Aurarum fluctus avidi vibrantiâ claustra
 Auditûs queat allabi, sonitumque propaget.
 Cominûs interdum non ullo interprete per se 205
 Nervorum invadunt teneras quæscientia fibras,
 Sensiferumque urgent ultrò per viscera motum.

* * * * *

LIBER QUARTUS.

HACTENUS haud segnis Naturæ arcana retexi
 Musarum interpres, primusque Britanna per arva
 Romano liquidum deduxi flumine rivum.
 Cum Tu opere in medio, spes tanti et causa laboris,
 Linqvis, et æternam fati te condis in umbram! 5
 Vidi egomet duro graviter concussa dolore
 Pectora, in alterius non unquam lenta dolorem;
 Et languere oculos vidi, et pallascere amantem
 Vultum, quo nunquam Pietas nisi rara, Fidesque,
 Altus amor Veri, et purum spirabat Honestum. 10
 Visa tamen tardi demùm inclementia morbi
 Cessare est, reducemque iterùm roseo ore Salutem
 Speravi, atque unà tecum, dilecte Favoni!
 Credulus heu longos, ut quondàm, fallere Soles:
 Heu spes nequicquam dulces, atque irrita vota! 15
 Heu mæstos Soles, sine te quos ducere flendo
 Per desideria, et questus jam cogor inanes!
 At Tu, sancta anima, et nostri non indiga luctûs,
 Stellanti templo, sincerique ætheris igne,
 Unde orta es, frueri; atque ô si segura, nec ultra 20
 Mortalis, notos olim miserata labores
 Respectes, tenuesque vacet cognoscere curas;

Humanam si fortè altâ de sede procellam
Contemplêre, metus, stimulosque cupidinis acres,
Gaudiaque et gemitus, parvoque in corde tumultum
Irarum ingentem, et sævos sub pectore fluctus; 26
Respice et has lacrymas, memori quas ictus amore
Fundo; quod possum, juxtâ lugere sepulchrum
Dum juvat, et mutæ vana hæc jactare favillæ.

* * * * *

END OF VOL. I.

THE WORKS
OF
THOMAS GRAY.

TALBOYS AND WHEELER, PRINTERS, OXFORD.

• THE WORKS
OF
THOMAS GRAY,
CONTAINING HIS
POEMS AND CORRESPONDENCE, WITH MEMOIRS
OF HIS
LIFE AND WRITINGS.

A NEW EDITION,
CONTAINING SOME ADDITIONS, NOT BEFORE PRINTED, WITH NOTES OF THE VARIOUS EDITORS.

IN TWO VOLUMES.

VOL. II.

LONDON:
PRINTED FOR HARDING, TRIPHOOK, AND LEPARD,
FINSBURY SQUARE.
MDCCLXXV.

CONTENTS OF THE SECOND VOLUME.

SECTION I

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	1
LETTER
I. From Mr. West. Complains of his friend's silence	4
II. To Mr. West. Answer to the former	5
III. From Mr. West. Approbation of the Version. Ridicule on the Cambridge Collection of Verses on the Marriage of the Prince of Wales. Mr. Mason's remarks on Gray's sentiments concern- ing the mode of academical education	6
IV. To Mr. West. On the little encouragement which he finds given to classical learning at Cambridge. His aversion to metaphysical and mathematical studies	9
V. From Mr. West. Answer to the former; advises his correspondent not to give up poetry when he applies himself to the law	11
VI. To Mr. Walpole. Excuse for not writing to him, &c.	13
VII. From Mr. West. A Poetical Epistle, addressed to his friends, taken in part from Tibullus and a Prose Letter of Mr. Pope	13
VIII. To Mr. West. Thanks him for his Poetical Epistle. Complains of low spirits. Lady Walpole's death, and his concern for Mr. H. Walpole	19

LETTER	PAGE
IX. To Mr. Walpole. How he spends his own time in the country. Meets with Mr. Southern, the dramatic poet	20
X. To Mr. Walpole. Supposed manner in which Mr. Walpole spends his time in the country	21
XI. From Mr. West. Sends him a translation in Latin, of a Greek Epigram	23
XII. To Mr. West. A Latin Epistle, in answer to the foregoing	24
XIII. From Mr. West, on leaving the University, and removing to the Temple	25
XIV. To Mr. West, in Latin, with a Sapphic Ode	27
XV. From Mr. West. Thanks for his Ode, which formed the commencement of the preceding letter. His idea of Sir Robert Walpole	27
XVI. To Mr. Walpole. Congratulates him on his new place. Whimsical description of the quadrangle of Peter-house	28
XVII. To Mr. West. On his leaving the University	29
XVIII. From Mr. West. Sends him a Latin Elegy, in answer to Mr. Gray's Sapphic Ode	31

SECTION II.

Connecting narrative. Mr. Gray goes abroad with Mr. Walpole. Corresponds, during his tour, with his parents and Mr. West	32
I. To his mother. His voyage from Dover. Description of Calais; Abbeville; Amiens. Face of the country, and dress of the people	35
II. To Mr. West. Monuments of the kings of France at St. Denis, &c. French opera and music. Actors, &c.	38

CONTENTS.

iii

LETTER	PAGE
III. To Mr. West. Palace of Versailles. Its gardens and water-works. Installation of the Knights du St. Esprit	42
IV. To his mother. Rheims. Its cathedral. Disposition and amusements of its inhabitants	45
V. To his father. Face of the country between Rheims and Dijon. Description of the latter. Monastery of the Carthaginians and Cistercians	47
VI. To Mr. West. Lyons. Beauty of its environs. Roman antiquities	49
VII. From Mr. West. His wishes to accompany his friend. His retired life in London. Address to his lyre, in Latin sapphics, on the prospect of Mr. Gray's return	51
VIII. To his mother. Lyons. Excursion to the Grande Chartreuse. Solemn and romantic approach to it. His reception there, and commendation of the monastery	53
IX. To his father. Geneva. Advantage of a free government exhibited in the very look of the people. Beauty of the Lake, and plenty of its fish	55
X. To his mother. Journey over the Alps to Turin. Singular accident in passing over them. Method of travelling over Mount Cenis	57
XI. To Mr. West. Turin. Its Carnival. More of the views and scenery on the road to the Grande Chartreuse. Wild and savage prospects amongst the Alps, agreeable to Livy's description	60
XII. To Mr. West. Genoa. Music. The Doge. Churches and the Palazzo Doria	63
XIII. To his mother. Paintings at Modena. Bologna. Beauty and richness of Lombardy	65
XIV. To his mother. The Apennines. Florence and its gallery	67

*a.

LETTER	PAGE
XV. To Mr. West. Journey from Genoa to Florence. —Elegiac verses, occasioned by the sight of the plains where the battle of Trebiæ was fought	70
XVI. From Mr. West. Latin Elegy, expressing his wishes to see Italy and Greece	71
XVII. To his mother. Death of the Pope. Intended departure for Rome. First and pleasing ap- pearance of an Italian spring	72
XVIII. To his mother. Cathedral of Sienna. Viterbo. Distant sight of Rome. The Tiber. Entrance into the city. St. Peter's. Introduction of the Cardinal d'Auvergne into the Conclave	73
XIX. To his mother. Illumination of St. Peter's on Good Friday, &c.	77
XX. To Mr. West. Comic account of the palace of the Duke of Modena at Tivoli. The Anio. Its cas- cade. Situation of the town. Villas of Horace and Mecænas, and other remains of antiquity. Modern aqueducts. A grand Roman ball	78
XXI. To Mr. West. Ludicrous allusion to ancient Ro- man customs. Albano and its Lake. Castle Gondolfo. Prospect from the palace; an obser- vation of Mr. Walpole's on the views in that part of Italy. Latin inscriptions ancient and modern	82
XXII. To his mother. Road to Naples. Beautiful si- tuation of that city. Its Bay. Of Baiæ, and several other antiquities. Some account of the first discovery of an ancient town, now known to be Herculaneum	86
XXIII. To his father. Departure from Rome and return to Florence. No likelihood of the Conclave s- rising. Some of the Cardinals dead. Description of the Pretender, his sons, and court. Procession at Naples. Sight of the king and queen. Mildness of air at Florence . . .	88

CONTENTS.

V

LETTER	PAGE
XXIV. From Mr. West. . On his quitting the Temple, and reason for it	91
XXV. To Mr. West. Answer to the foregoing letter. Some account of Naples and its environs, and of Mr. Walpole's and his return to Florence. An universal war upon the point of breaking out	92
XXVI. To his mother. Excursion to Bologna. Elec- tion of a Pope ; description of his person, with an odd speech which he made to the Car- dinals in the Conclave	92
XXVII. To Mr. West. Allusion to an Alcaic Ode en- closed in Letter xxi. &c.	99
XXVIII. To his father. Uncertainty of the route he shall take in his return to England. Magni- ficence of the Italians in their reception of strangers, and parsimony when alone. The great applause which the new Pope meets with. One of his Bons Mots	102
XXIX. To his father. Total want of amusement at Flo- rence, occasioned by the late Emperor's fu- neral not being public. A procession to avert the ill effects of a late inundation. Intention of going to Venice. An invasion from the Neapolitans apprehended. The inhabitants of Tuscany dissatisfied with the government	103
XXX. To Mr. West. The time of his departure from Florence determined. Alteration in his tem- per and spirits. Difference between an Ita- lian fair and an English one	105

LETTER	PAGE
Account of Mr. Gray's return home, and of his second visit to the Grande Chartreuse, where he wrote an Alcaic Ode, which concludes the Section	108

SECTION III.

I. From Mr. West. His spirits not as yet improved by country air. Has begun to read Tacitus, but does not relish him	109
II. To Mr. West. Earnest hopes for his friend's better health, as the warm weather comes on. Defence of Tacitus, and his character. Of the new Dunciad. Sends him a speech from the first scene of his Agrippina	109
III. From Mr. West. Criticism on his friend's tragic style. Latin hexameters on his own Cough	111
IV. To Mr. West. Thanks for his verses. On Joseph Andrews. Defence of old words in tragedy	113
V. From Mr. West. Answer to the former, on the subject of antiquated expressions	116
VI. To Mr. West. Has laid aside his tragedy. Difficulty of translating Tacitus	119
VII. From Mr. West. With an English Ode on the approach of May	121
VIII. To Mr. West. Criticises his Ode. Of his own classical studies	123
IX. From Mr. West. Answer to the foregoing	124
X. To Mr. West. Of his own peculiar species of melancholy. Inscription for a Wood, in Greek

CONTENTS.

vii

LETTER	PAGE
hexameters. Argument and exordium of a Latin Heroic Epistle from Sophonisba to Massinissa	125
Mr. Gray goes to Stoke Pogeis, where he writes his Ode to Spring.—Death of Mr. West	127

SECTION IV.

Introduction	129
I. To Mr. Wharton. On taking his degree of Bachelor of Civil Law, &c.	129
II. To Mr. Walpole. On the rebellion in Scotland. On Mr. Pope	131
III. To Mr. Wharton. On his own indolence. On Akenside's Pleasures of Imagination	133
IV. To Mr. Wharton. On Thucydides and Aristotle. List of ancient classical authors; and books on criticism and antiquity	136
V. To Mr. Wharton. On his own feelings. College news	138
VI. To Mr. Walpole. On Cibber. On Spence's Polymetis	140
VII. To Mr. Walpole. On Spence's Polymetis	143
VIII. To Mr. Walpole. On Mr. Walpole's cat	146
IX. To Mr. Wharton. Destruction of his house at Cornhill by fire. Lines from Gresset; and account of his poems. Character of Mr. Mason	147
X. To Mr. Wharton. Account of Gresset's Works, &c.	149
XI. To Mr. Wharton. On Montesquieu's L'Esprit des Loix	150
XII. To Mr. Wharton. Account of Montesquieu's book. Crebillon's Catalina. Norden's Travels. Birch's State Papers	151

LETTER	PAGE
XIII. To Mr. Wharton. Account of the Duke of Newcastle's Installation. Character of Mason. On a Fellowship for Mr. Stonehewer .	153
XIV. To his mother. On the death of his aunt .	155
XV. To Mr. Walpole. Sends him the Elegy in a Country Churchyard	156
XVI. To Mr. Wharton. On Dr. Middleton's death. On Buffon, Henault, &c.	157
XVII. To Mr. Wharton. Allusion to the Long Story, and the Elegy in a Country Churchyard .	159
XVIII. To Mr. Walpole. Wishes him to get the Elegy in a Country Churchyard printed by Dodsley	160
XIX. To Mr. Walpole. On Mason's Elfrida .	161
XX. To Mr. Walpole. On Mason's Elfrida. On the Elegy in a Country Churchyard. Peregrine Pickle	162
XXI. To Mr. Walpole. On Mr. Walpole's Memoirs of his own Time. On Middleton's Posthumous Works	164
XXII. To Mr. Walpole. On his own poems .	166
XXIII. To Mr. Walpole. On Dodsley's Collection of Poems	168
XXIV. To Mr. Walpole. On the same subject as the former	173
XXV. To Mr. Walpole. On Walpole's Memoirs of his own Time	175
XXVI. To Mr. Wharton. On Mad. de Maintenon's Letters	176
XXVII. To Mr. Walpole. On his own poems .	178
XXVIII. To Mr. Mason. On his father's death .	180
XXIX. To Mr. Wharton. On Gothic architecture .	181
XXX. To Mr. Wharton. Sends him the Ode on the Progress of Poesy	183

CONTENTS.

ix

LETTER	PAGE
XXXI. To Mr. Stonehewer. On M. Bacarde's book on Herculaneum. On Voltaire . . .	188
XXXII. To Dr. Wharton. Leaves Peter-house; and enters of Pembroke Hall. On Sully's Me- moirs	189
XXXIII. To Dr. Wharton. On the change of ministry. On the king of Prussia. Memoirs de la Porte, and Madame Staal	192
XXXIV. To Mr. Mason. Mentions his own indolence. On the reviewers. On Mason's Caractacus	192
XXXV. To Mr. Mason. On Mr. Parry. On the Bard. On the Ballad of Hardicanute	193
XXXVI. To Mr. Walpole. On the Bard	197
XXXVII. To Mr. Walpole. On Hardicanute	197
XXXVIII. To Mr. Walpole. On Rousseau's Heloise	198
XXXIX. To Mr. Hurd. Criticisms on the Bard	199
XL. To Mr. Mason. His opinion of Caractacus	201
XLI. To Mr. Mason. On his own feelings. On Caractacus. On Mason's Elegy. Declines the office of Poet Laureat	206
XLII. To Dr. Wharton. Mentions his present em- ployments	209
XLIII. To Dr. Wharton. On depression of spirits. The tragedy of Agis, by the author of Doug- las. Dodsley's Miscellany	209
XLIV. To Dr. Wharton. On the loss of Dr. Whar- ton's son	212
XLV. To Mr. Stonehewer. Character of Lord Shaft- bury. Supplement to the foregoing. On the attributes of the Deity	217
XLVI. To Mr. Palgrave. Advice in travelling	221
XLVII. To Mr. Mason. On Mason's Caractacus	222
XLVIII. To Mr. Palgrave. Account of his reading in the British Museum	224

LETTER	PAGE
XLIX. To Dr. Wharton. On the advantages of being busy. Taste in gardening. Froissart. The king of Prussia's poetry. Sterne, &c. . . .	225
L. To Mr. Stonehewer. On D'Alembert. Ossian	229
LI. To Dr. Clark. On Dr. Chapman's death. On the Erse Fragments	232
LII. To Mr. Mason. On Colman's Odes to Obscurity and Oblivion. On the Erse Fragments. Letter from David Hume	233
LIII. To Dr. Wharton. On Old Park. The Nouvelle Heloise. A Swedish and English calendar. Mr. Stillingfleet	235
LIV. To Mr. Mason. On Rousseau's Heloise. On the Opera	238
LV. To Mr. Mason. On his expectation of being made Residentiary of York. On Lord *'s illness. Reasons for writing an Epitaph on Sir William Williams	240
LVI. To Mr. Walpole. Returns thanks for the anecdotes of painting. On an historical plan of Mr. Walpole's	242
LVII. To Dr. Wharton. Gives an account of his journey in Yorkshire. Description of Wentworth Castle. Hardwicke. Professor Turner's death. Asks for the Professorship of Modern History. Is refused	248
LVIII. To Mr. Mason. On Count Algarotti's approbation of his and Mr. Mason's poetry. Gothic architecture. Plagiary in Helvetius from Elfrida	250
LIX. To Mr. Brown. Sends him a message to write to Mr. Howe relating to Count Algarotti, and recommending the Erse Poems	257
LX. Count Algarotti to Mr. Gray. Complimentary, and sending him some dissertations of his own	258

CONTENTS.

xi

LETTER	PAGE
LXI. To Dr. Wharton. Rousseau's Emile.	259
LXII. To Mr. Howe. Observations on Count Algarotti's Works. On English gardening	261
LXIII. To Mr. Nicholls. On the improvement of his health. Southampton and the adjacent country	263
LXIV. To Mr. Walpole. Receives the Castle of Otranto. Reads Rousseau's Letters	266
LXV. To Mr. Palgrave. Instructions on his travels	267
LXVI. To Dr. Wharton. Journal of a tour in the North	270
LXVII. To Mr. Beattie. Invites Mr. Beattie to Glames Castle	279
LXVIII. To Mr. Beattie. Declines the honour of a degree offered by the University of Aberdeen. Thoughts on the pursuit of poetry	280
LXIX. To Mr. Walpole. Advice to Mr. Walpole on his illness. Frontispiece to a Work by the Duchess of Newcastle	282
LXX. To Mr. Bentham. Various observations on Gothic architecture	284
LXXI. To Dr. Wharton. On Mr. Mason. Observations on politics. Mr. Walpole	288
LXXII. To Dr. Wharton. Description of part of Kent. On the ministry. New Bath Guide	290
LXXIII. To Mr. Nicholls. On the death of his mother	292
LXXIV. To Mr. Mason. On the death of his wife	293
LXXV. To Mr. Beattie. Observations on a poem by Mr. Beattie. On Ferguson's Essay on the History of Civil Society	294
LXXVI. To Mr. Beattie. On printing Mr. Gray's Poems at Glasgow	296
LXXVII. To Mr. Howe. Dissuades him from publishing Count Algarotti's Works in England. Character of them	298

LETTER	PAGE
LXXVIII. To Mr. Beattie. On the Glasgow edition of his poems	300
LXXIX. To Mr. Walpole. On Mr. Walpole's Historic Doubts	302
LXXX. To Mr. Walpole. On an edition of his own poems. Walpole's Historic Doubts	306
LXXXI. To Mr. Walpole. On Sir William Cornwallis's Essays. On Richard III.	309
LXXXII. To the Duke of Grafton. Returns thanks for the Professorship of Modern History	311
LXXXIII. To Mr. Nicholls. Describes the manner in which the Professorship was bestowed on him	312
LXXXIV. To Mr. Beattie. On his own poems. Tells him of his appointment to the Professorship	313

 SECTION V.

I. To Mr. Nicholls. On the death of Mr. Nicholls's uncle. Consolation and advice	315
II. To Mr. Nicholls. On Mr. Nicholls's garden. Ode to the Duke of Grafton. De la Lande's Voyage through Italy. Shenstone's Letters	317
III. To Mr. Beattie. Reason for his writing the Installation Ode. Mr. Foulis. Purposes going towards the North of England	319
IV. To Dr. Wharton. Mentions his intended journey to Old Park. Complains of hot weather. Journal of his tour	321
V. To Mr. Bonstetten. Describes the character of a genius truly philosophical	349
VI. To Dr. T. Warton, with a sketch of the history of English poetry	351

CONTENTS.

xiii

LETTER	PAGE
VII. To Dr. Wharton. Journal continued . . .	355
VIII. To Mr. Bonstetten. Laments their separation .	357
IX. To Mr. Bonstetten	358
X. To Mr. Beattie. Observations on the Minstrel, and on the Essay on Truth	359
XI. To Mr. Nicholls. On Froissart. Observations on Isocrates	362
XII. To Dr. Wharton. Mentions his tour in Wales. Complains of low spirits	364

THE
LIFE OF THOMAS GRAY.

Gray's Letters.

SECTION I.

INTRODUCTION.

I WILL promise my reader that he shall, in the following pages, seldom behold Mr. Gray in any other light than that of a scholar and a poet: and though I am more solicitous to shew that he was a virtuous, a friendly, and an amiable man, than either; yet this solicitude becomes unnecessary from the very papers which he has bequeathed me, and which I here arrange for the purpose: since in these the qualities of his head and heart so constantly appear together, and the fertility of his fancy so intimately unites with the sympathetic tenderness of his soul, that were it in my intention, I should find it impossible to disjoin them.

According to the plan which I have formed for arranging these papers, a part of the letters which I have already mentioned will here find their proper place^a.

^a I am well aware that I am here going to do a thing which the cautious and courtly Dr. Sprat (were he now alive) would highly censure. He had, it seems, a large collection of his friend Mr. Cowley's letters, "a way of writing in which he peculiarly excelled, as in these he always express the native tenderness and innocent

They will give a much clearer idea both of Mr. Gray and his friend, at this early period, than any narrative of mine. They will include also several specimens of their juvenile compositions, and, at the same time, mark the progress they had made in literature. They will ascertain, not only the scope and turn of their genius, but of their temper. In a word, Mr. Gray will become his own biographer, both in this and the rest of the Sections, into which I divide this work. By which means, and by the assistance of a few notes which I shall occasionally add, it may be hoped that nothing will be omitted which may tend to give a regular and clear delineation of his life and character.

But as this is the earliest part of their correspondence, and includes only the time which passed between Mr. Gray's admission into the University and his going gaiety of his heart : yet the Doctor was of opinion, that nothing of this nature should be published, and that the letters that pass between particular friends (if they are written as they ought to be) can scarce ever be fit to see the light." What! not when they express the native tenderness and innocent gaiety of a heart like Mr. Cowley's? No, by no means, "for in such letters the souls of men appear undrest, and in that negligent habit they may be fit to be seen by one or two in a chamber, but not to go abroad in the street." See Life of Cowley, page 38, Hurd's Edition.

Such readers as believe it incumbent on every well-bred soul never to appear but in full dress, will think that Dr. Sprat has reason on his side ; but I suspect that the generality will, notwithstanding, wish he had been less scrupulously delicate, and lament that the letters in question are not now extant. Of one thing I am fully confident, that, had this been the case, the judicious Dr. Hurd would have found his critical labour much lessened, when, in pure charity to this amiable writer, he lately employed himself in separating, abroad, it may be reasonably expected, that the manner rather than the matter of these letters must constitute their principal merit; they will therefore be chiefly acceptable to such ingenuous youths, who, being about the same age, have a relish for the same studies, and bosoms susceptible of the same warmth of friendship. To these I address them; in the pleasing hope that they may prompt them to emulate their elegant simplicity, and, of course, to study with more care the classic models from which it was derived. If they do this, I shall not be much concerned if graver readers think them unimportant, or even trifling.—MASON.

His pleasing moral from his pointed wit.

LETTER I.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

You use me very cruelly : you have sent me but one letter since I have been at Oxford, and that too agreeable not to make me sensible how great my loss is in not having more. Next to seeing you is the pleasure of seeing your hand-writing ; next to hearing you is the pleasure of hearing from you. Really and sincerely I wonder at you, that you thought it not worth while to answer my last letter. I hope this will have better success in behalf of your quondam school-fellow ; in behalf of one who has walked hand in hand with you, like the two children in the wood,

Through many a flowery path and shelly grot,
Where learning lull'd us in her private^b maze.

The very thought, you see, tips my pen with poetry, and brings Eton to my view. Consider me very seriously here in a strange country, inhabited by things that call themselves Doctors and Masters of Arts ; a country flowing with syllogisms and ale, where Horace and Virgil are equally unknown ; consider me, I say, in this melancholy light, and then think if something be not due to

Yours.

Christ Church, Nov. 14, 1735.

P. S. I desire you will send me soon, and truly and positively, a history^c of your own time.

^b This expression prettily distinguishes their studies when out of the public school, which would naturally, at their age, be vague and desultory.—M.

^c Alluding to his grandfather's history.

LETTER II.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

PERMIT me again to write to you, though I have so long neglected my duty, and forgive my brevity, when I tell you it is occasioned wholly by the hurry I am in to get to a place where I expect to meet with no other pleasure than the sight of you ; for I am preparing for London in a few days at furthest. I do not wonder in the least at your frequent blaming my indolence, it ought rather to be called ingratitude, and I am obliged to your goodness for softening so harsh an appellation. When we meet it will, however, be my greatest of pleasures to know what you do, what you read, and how you spend your time, &c. and to tell you what I do not read, and how I do not, &c. for almost all the employment of my hours may be best explained by negatives : take my word and experience upon it, doing nothing is a most amusing business ; and yet neither something nor nothing gives me any pleasure. When you have seen one of my days, you have seen a whole year of my life ; they go round and round like the blind horse in the mill, only he has the satisfaction of fancying he makes a progress, and gets some ground ; my eyes are open enough to see the same dull prospect, and to know that, having made four-and-twenty steps more, I shall be just where I was : I may, better than most people, say my life is but a span, were I not afraid lest you should not believe that a person so short-lived could write even so long a letter as this ; in short, I believe I must not send you the history of my own time, till I can send you that also of the reformation.^d However, as the most undeserving people in the world must sure have the vanity to wish somebody had a regard for them, so I need not wonder at my own, in being pleased that you care about me. You need not doubt, therefore, of having a first row in the front box of my little heart, and I believe you are not in danger of being crowded there; it is asking you to an old play, indeed, but you will be candid enough to excuse the whole piece for the sake of a few tolerable lines.

^d Carrying on the allusion to the other history written by Mr. West's grandfather.—M.

For this little while past I have been playing with Statius; we yesterday had a game at quoits together: you will easily forgive me for having broke his head, as you have a little pique to him. I send you my translation, which I did not engage in because I liked that part of the poem, nor do I now send it to you because I think it deserves it, but merely to shew you how I mispend my days^e.

* * * * *

Cambridge, May 8, 1736.

LETTER III.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

I AGREE with you that you have broke Statius's head, but it is in like manner as Apollo broke Hyacinth's—you have foiled him infinitely at his own weapon. I must insist on seeing the rest of your translation, and then I will examine it entire, and compare it with the Latin, and be very wise and severe, and put on an inflexible face, such as becomes the character of a true son of Aristarchus, of hypercritical memory. In the mean while,

^e Then follows the translation, which is placed among the poetical works at the end of the first Volume.

“ And calm'd the terrors of his claws in gold,”

Is exactly Statius—Summos auro mansueverat ungues. I never knew before that the golden fangs on hammer-cloths were so old a fashion. Your Hymenêal^f I was told was the best in the Cambridge Collection before I saw it, and, indeed, it is no great compliment to tell you I thought it so when I had seen it; but sincerely it pleased me best. Methinks the college bards have run into a strange taste on this occasion. Such soft, unmeaning stuff about Venus and Cupid, and Peleus and Thetis, and Zephyrs and Dryads, was never read. As for my poor little Eclogue it has been condemned and beheaded by our Westminster judges; an exordium of about sixteen lines absolutely cut off, and its other limbs quartered in a most barbarous manner. I will send it you in my next as my true and lawful heir, in exclusion of the pretender, who has the impudence to appear under my name.

^f Published in the Cambridge Collection of verses on the Prince of Wales's marriage. I have not thought it necessary to insert these hexameters, as adulatory verses of this kind, however well written, deserve not to be transmitted to posterity; and, indeed, are usually buried, as they ought to be, in the trash with which they are surrounded. Every person, who feels himself a poet, ought to be above prostituting his powers on such occasions, and extreme youth (as was the case with Mr. Gray) is the only thing that can apologise for his having done it.—M.

It has been observed that this apology is quite unnecessary, as there is no appearance whatever of adulation in the poem. There is however in one place a careless error in metre, and in general too free a use of expressions and verses of Virgil, for so short a composition. These and some other faults certainly deny it the merit of a perfect performance, even of its kind.—ED.

As yet I have not looked into Sir Isaac. Public disputations I hate; mathematics I reverence; history, morality, and natural philosophy have the greatest charms in my eye; but who can forget poetry? they call it idleness, but it is surely the most enchanting thing in the world, ac dulce otium et pœne omni negotio pulchrius.

I am, dear sir, yours, while I am
R. W.

Christ Church, May 24, 1736.

[The following letter seems to require some little preface, not so much as it expresses Mr. Gray's juvenile sentiments, concerning the mode of our academical education, as that these sentiments prevailed with him through life, and that he often declared them, with so little reserve, as to create him many enemies. It is certain that, at the time when he was admitted, and for some years after, Jacobitism, and its concomitant hard drinking, prevailed still at Cambridge, much to the prejudice not only of good manners, but of good letters: for, if this spirit was then on the decline, it was not extinguished till after the year 1745. But we see (as was natural enough in a young man) he laid the blame rather on the mode of education than the mode of the times; and to this error the uncommon proficiency he had made at Eton in classical learning might contribute, as he found himself in a situation where that species of merit held not the first rank. However this be, it was necessary not to omit this feature of his mind, when employed in drawing a general likeness of it; and what colours could be found so forcible as his own to express its true light and shadow? I would further observe, that whatever truth there might be in his satire at the time it was written, it can by no means affect the present state of the university. There is usually a much greater fluctuation of taste and manners in an academical, than a national body; occasioned (to use a scholastic metaphor) by that very quick succession of its component parts, which often goes near to destroy its personal identity. Whatever therefore may be true of such a society at one time, may be, and generally is, ten years after absolutely false.[§]—M.

LETTER IV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

You must know that I do not take degrees, and, after this term, shall have nothing more of college impertinences to undergo, which I trust will be some pleasure to you, as it is a great one to me. I have endured lectures daily and hourly since I came last, supported by the hopes of being shortly at full liberty to give myself up to my friends and classical companions, who, poor souls! though I see them fallen into great contempt with most people here, yet I cannot help sticking to them, and out of a spirit of obstinacy (I think) love them the better for it; and indeed, what can I do else? Must I plunge into metaphysics? Alas, I cannot see in the dark; nature has not furnished me with the optics of a cat. Must I pore upon mathematics? Alas, I cannot see in too much light; I am no eagle. It is very possible that two and two make four, but I would not give four farthings to demonstrate this ever so clearly; and if these be the profits of life, give me the amusements of it. The people I behold all around me, it seems, know all this and more, and yet I do not know one of them who inspires me with any ambition of being like him. Surely it was of this place, now Cambridge, but formerly known by the name of Babylon, that the Prophet spoke when he said, "the wild beasts of the desert shall dwell there, and their houses shall be full of doleful creatures, and owls shall build there, and satyrs shall dance there; their forts and towers shall be a den for ever, a joy of wild asses; there shall the great owl make her nest, and lay and hatch and gather under her shadow; it shall be a court of dragons; the screech owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest." You see here is a pretty collection of desolate animals, which is verified in this town to a tittle, and perhaps it may also allude to your habitation, for you know all types may be taken by abundance of handles; however, I defy your owls to match mine.

[§] The very just observations of Mr. Mason are entirely satisfactory in removing from the universities the effect of any unfavourable impressions which this letter might create. Nor are the remarks of Mr. Matthias less successful in behalf of the mathematics. In regard to these, it is sufficient to observe that the sentiments of Gray are obviously juvenile, and are just such, as a young man, possessed of imaginative talent, and accustomed to rather a desultory course of poetical reading, would be likely to express.—ED.

If the default of your spirits and nerves be nothing but the effect of the hyp, I have no more to say. We all must submit to that wayward queen; I too in no small degree own her sway,

I feel her influence while I speak her power.

But if it be a real distemper, pray take more care of your health, if not for your own, at least for our sakes, and do not be so soon weary of this little world: I do not know what refined^h friendships you may have contracted in the other, but pray do not be in a hurry to see your acquaintance above; among your terrestrial familiars, however, though I say it that should not say it, there positively is not one that has a greater esteem for you than

Yours most sincerely, &c.

Peterhouse, Dec. 1736.

LETTER V.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

I CONGRATULATE you on your being about to leave college,ⁱ and rejoice much you carry no degrees with you: for I would not have had You dignified, and I not, for the world—you would have insulted me so. My eyes, such as they are, like yours, are neither metaphysical nor mathematical; I have, nevertheless, a great respect for your connoisseurs that way, but am always contented to be their humble admirer. Your collection of desolate animals pleased me much; but ^h This thought is very juvenile, but perhaps he meant to ridicule the affected manner of Mrs. Rowe's Letters of the Dead to the Living; a book which was, I believe, published about this time.—M.

ⁱ I suspect that Mr. West mistook his correspondent; who, in saying he did not take degrees, meant only to let his friend know that he should soon be released from lectures and disputations. It is certain that Mr. Gray continued at college near two years after the time he wrote the preceding letter.—M.

Oxford, I can assure you, has her owls that match yours, and the prophecy has certainly a squint that way. Well, you are leaving this dismal land of bondage, and which way are you turning your face? Your friends, indeed, may be happy in you, but what will you do with your classic companions? An inn of court is as horrid a place as a college, and a moot case is as dear to gentle dulness as a syllogism. But wherever you go, let me beg you not to throw poetry "like a nauseous weed away:" cherish its sweets in your bosom, they will serve you now and then to correct the disgusting sober follies of the common law, Misce stultitiam consiliis brevem, Dulce est desipere in loco; so said Horace to Virgil, those two sons of Anac in poetry, and so say I to you, in this degenerate land of pigmies,

Mix with your grave designs a little pleasure,
Each day of business has its hour of leisure.

In one of these hours I hope, dear sir, you will sometimes think of me, write to me, and know me yours,

Ἐξάνθα, μὴ κεῖθε νόψ, ἵνα εἶδομεν ἄμφω.^k that is, write freely to me and openly, as I do to you; and, to give you a proof of it, I have sent you an elegy¹ of Tibullus translated. Tibullus, you must know, is my favourite elegiac poet; for his language is more elegant and his thoughts more natural than Ovid's. Ovid excells him only in wit, of which no poet had more ^k Hom. Iliad. A. v. 363.

¹ This I omit for the reason given in a preceding note, and for another also, because it is not written in alternate but heroic rhyme; which I think is not the species of English measure adapted to elegiac poetry.—M.

in my opinion. The reason I choose so melancholy a kind of poesie, is because my low spirits and constant ill health (things in me not imaginary, as you surmise, but too real, alas! and, I fear, constitutional) “have tuned my heart to elegies of woe;” and this likewise is the reason why I am the most irregular thing alive at college; for you may depend upon it I value my health above what they call discipline. As for this poor unlicked thing of an elegy, pray criticise it unmercifully, for I send it with that intent. Indeed your late translation of Statius might have deterred me, but I know you are not more able to excel others, than you are apt to forgive the want of excellence, especially when it is found in the production of

Your most sincere friend.

Christ Church, Dec. 22, 1736.

LETTER VI.^m

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

You can never weary me with the repetition of any thing that makes me sensible of your kindness; since that has been the only idea of any social happiness that

^m Mr. Walpole, on my informing him that it was my intention to publish the principal part of Mr. Gray's correspondence with Mr. West, very obligingly communicated to me the letters which he had also received from Mr. Gray at the same period. From this collection I have selected such as I thought would be most likely to please the generality of readers; omitting, though with regret, many of the more sprightly and humorous sort, because either from their personality, or some other local circumstance, they did not seem so well adapted to hit the public taste. I shall say more upon this subject in a subsequent Section, when I give my idea of Mr. Gray's peculiar vein of humour.—M.

I have almost ever received, and which (begging your pardon for thinking so differently from you in such cases) I would by no means have parted with for an exemption from all the uneasinesses mixed with it: but it would be unjust to imagine my taste was any rule for yours; for which reason my letters are shorter and less frequent than they would be, had I any materials but myself to entertain you with. Love and brown sugar must be a poor regale for one of your goût; and, alas! you know I am by trade a grocer.ⁿ Scandal (if I had any) is a merchandize you do not profess dealing in; now and then, indeed, and to oblige a friend, you may perhaps slip a little out of your pocket, as a decayed gentlewoman would a piece of right mecklin, or a little quantity of run tea, but this only now and then, not to make a practice of it. Monsters appertaining to this climate you have seen already, both wet and dry. So you perceive within how narrow bounds my pen is circumscribed, and the whole contents of my share in our correspondence may be reduced under the two heads of Ist, You; 2dly, I: the first is indeed a subject to expatiate upon, but you might laugh at me for talking about what I do not understand; the second is so tiny, so tiresome, that you shall hear no more of it, than that it is ever

Yours.

Peterhouse, Dec. 23, 1736.

ⁿ i. e. A man who deals only in coarse and ordinary wares: to these he compares the plain sincerity of his own friendship, undisguised by flattery; which, had he chosen to carry on the allusion, he might have termed the trade of a confectioner.—M.

LETTER VII.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

I HAVE been very ill, and am still hardly recovered. Do you remember Elegy 5th, book the 3d, of Tibullus, Vos tenet, &c. and do you remember a letter of Mr. Pope's, in sickness, to Mr. Steele? This melancholy elegy, and this melancholy letter, I turned into a more melancholy epistle of my own, during my sickness, in the way of imitation; and this I send to you and my friends at Cambridge, not to divert them, for it cannot, but merely to shew them how sincere I was when sick: I hope my sending it to them now may convince them I am no less sincere, though perhaps more simple, when well.

AD AMICOS.°

Yes, happy youths, on Camus' sedgy side,
 You feel each joy that friendship can divide;
 Each realm of science and of art explore,
 And with the ancient blend the modern lore.
 Studios alone to learn whate'er may tend
 To raise the genius or the heart to mend:
 Now pleas'd along the cloister'd walk you rove,
 And trace the verdant mazes of the grove,
 Where social oft, and oft alone, ye chuse
 To catch the zephyr and to court the muse.

° Almost all Tibullus's elegy is imitated in this little piece, from whence his transition to Mr. Pope's letter is very artfully contrived, and bespeaks a degree of judgment much beyond Mr. West's years.—M.

Mean time at me, (while all devoid of art
 These lines give back the image of my heart,)
 At me the pow'r that comes or soon or late,
 Or aims, or seems to aim, the dart of Fate ;
 From you remote, methinks, alone I stand
 Like some sad exile in a desert land ;
 Around no friends their lenient care to join
 In mutual warmth, and mix their heart with mine.
 Or real pains, or those which fancy raise,
 For ever blot the sunshine of my days ;
 To sickness still, and still to grief a prey,
 Health turns from me her rosy face away.

Just heav'n ! what sin, ere life begins to bloom,
 Devotes my head untimely to the tomb ;
 Did e'er this hand against a brother's life
 Drug the dire bowl or point the murd'rous knife ?
 Did e'er this tongue the slanderer's tale proclaim,
 Or madly violate my Maker's name ?
 Did e'er this heart betray a friend or foe,
 Or know a thought but all the world might know ?
 As yet just started from the lists of time,
 My growing years have scarcely told their prime ;
 Useless, as yet, through life I've idly run,
 No pleasures tasted, and few duties done.
 Ah ! who, ere autumn's mellowing suns appear,
 Would pluck the promise of the vernal year ;
 Or, ere the grapes their purple hue betray,
 Tear the crude cluster from the mourning spray.
 Stern power of Fate, whose ebon sceptre rules
 The Stygian deserts and Cimmerian pools,
 Forbear, nor rashly smite my youthful heart,
 A victim yet unworthy of thy dart ;

Ah, stay till age shall blast my withering face,
 Shake in my head, and falter in my pace ;
 Then aim the shaft, then meditate the blow,
 And^p to the dead my willing shade shall go.

How weak is man to Reason's judging eye !
 Born in this moment, in the next we die ;
 Part mortal clay, and part ethereal fire,
 Too proud to creep, too humble to aspire.
 In vain our plans of happiness we raise,
 Pain is our lot, and patience is our praise ;
 Wealth, lineage, honours, conquest, or a throne,
 Are what the wise would fear to call their own.
 Health is at best a vain precarious thing,
 And fair-fac'd youth is ever on the wing ;
 'Tis^q like the stream, beside whose wat'ry bed
 Some blooming plant exalts his flow'ry head,
 Nurs'd by the wave the spreading branches rise,
 Shade all the ground and flourish to the skies ;
 The waves the while beneath in secret flow,
 And undermine the hollow bank below ;
 Wide and more wide the waters urge their way,
 Bare all the roots and on their fibres prey.
 Too late the plant bewails his foolish pride,
 And sinks, untimely, in the whelming tide.

^p Here he quits Tibullus; the ten following verses have but a remote reference to Mr. Pope's letter.—M.

^q " Youth, at the very best, is but the betrayer of human life in a gentler and smoother manner than age; 'tis like the stream that nourishes a plant upon a bank, and causes it to flourish and blossom to the sight, but at the same time is undermining it at the root in secret." Pope's Works, vol. vii. page 254, 1st. edit. Warburton.—Mr. West, by prolonging his paraphrase of this simile, gives ad-

But why repine, does life deserve my sigh?^s
 Few will lament my loss whene'er I die.
 For^r those the wretches I despise or hate,
 I neither envy nor regard their fate.
 For me, whene'er all-conquering Death shall spread
 His wings around my unrepining head,
 I care not^s; though this face be seen no more,
 The world will pass as cheerful as before;
 Bright as before the day-star will appear,
 The fields as verdant, and the skies as clear;
 Nor storms nor comets will my doom declare,
 Nor signs on earth, nor portents in the air;
 Unknown and silent will depart my breath,
 Nor Nature e'er take notice of my death.
 Yet some there are (ere spent my vital days)
 Within whose breasts my tomb I wish to raise.
 Lov'd in my life, lamented in my end,
 Their praise would crown me as their precepts mend:
 To them may these fond lines my name endear,
 Not from the Poet, but the Friend sincere.

Christ Church July 4, 1737.

ditional beauty from that very circumstance, but he ought to have introduced it by Mr. Pope's own thought, "Youth is a betrayer;" his couplet preceding the simile conveys too general a reflection. M.

r "I am not at all uneasy at the thought that many men, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me." Vide ibid.—M.

s "The morning after my exit the sun will rise as bright as ever, the flowers smell as sweet, the plants spring as green:" so far Mr. West copies his original; but, instead of the following part of the sentence, "People will laugh as heartily and marry as fast as they used to do," he inserts a more solemn idea,

Nor storms nor comets, &c.

justly perceiving that the elegiac turn of his epistle would not admit

LETTER VIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

AFTER a month's expectation of you, and a fortnight's despair, at Cambridge, I am come to town, and to better hopes of seeing you. If what you sent me last be the product of your melancholy, what may I not expect from your more cheerful hours? For by this time the ill health that you complain of is (I hope) quite departed, though, if I were self-interested, I ought to wish for the continuance of any thing that could be the occasion of so much pleasure to me. Low spirits are my true and faithful companions; they get up with me, go to bed with me, make journeys and returns as I do; nay, and pay visits, and will even affect to be jocose, and force a feeble laugh with me; but most commonly we sit alone together, and are the prettiest insipid company in the world. However, when you come, I believe they must undergo the fate of all humble companions, and be discarded. Would I could turn them to the same use that you have done, and make an Apollo of them. If they could write such verses with me, not hartshorn nor spirit of amber, nor all that furnishes the closet of an apothecary's widow, should persuade me to part with them: but, while I write to you, I hear the bad news of Lady Walpole's death on Saturday night last. Forgive me if the thought of what my poor Horace must feel, on that account, obliges me to have done in reminding you that I am

London, Aug. 22, 1737.

Yours, &c.

so ludicrous a thought, as it was in its place in Mr. Pope's familiar letter; so that we see, young as he was, he had obtained the art of judiciously selecting, one of the first provinces of good taste.—M.

LETTER IX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

I WAS hindered in my last, and so could not give you all the trouble I would have done. The description of a road, which your coach wheels have so often honoured, it would be needless to give you; suffice it that I arrived safe^t at my uncle's, who is a great hunter in imagination; his dogs take up every chair in the house, so I am forced to stand at this present writing: and, though the gout forbids him galloping after them in the field, yet he continues still to regale his ears and nose with their comfortable noise and stink. He holds me mighty cheap, I perceive, for walking when I should ride, and reading when I should hunt. My comfort amidst all this is, that I have, at the distance of half a mile, through a green lane, a forest (the vulgar call it a common) all my own, at least as good as so, for I spy no human thing in it but myself. It is a little chaos of mountains and precipices; mountains, it is true, that do not ascend much above the clouds, nor are the declivities quite so amazing as Dover cliff; but just such hills as people, who love their necks as well as I do, may venture to climb, and craggs that give the eye as much pleasure as if they were more dangerous: both vale and hill are covered with most venerable beeches, and other very reverend vegetables, that, like most other ancient people, are always dreaming out their old stories to the winds,

And as they bow their hoary tops relate,
 In murm'ring sounds, the dark decrees of Fate;
 While visions, as poetic eyes avow,
 Cling to each leaf, and swarm on every bough.

^t At Burnham in Buckinghamshire.

At the foot of one of these squats me I, (Il penseroso) and there grow to the trunk for a whole morning. The timorous hare and sportive squirrel gambol around me like Adam in Paradise, before he had an Eve; but I think he did not use to read Virgil, as I commonly do there. In this situation I often converse with my Horace, aloud too; that is, talk to you, but I do not remember that I ever heard you answer me. I beg pardon for taking all the conversation to myself, but it is entirely your own fault. We have old Mr. Southern at a gentleman's house a little way off, who often comes to see us; he is now seventy-seven years old^u, and has almost wholly lost his memory; but is as agreeable as an old man can be, at least I persuade myself so when I look at him, and think of Isabella and Oroonoko. I shall be in town in about three weeks. Adieu.

September, 1737.

LETTER X.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE^x.

I SYMPATHIZE with you in the sufferings which you foresee are coming upon you. We are both at present, I imagine, in no very agreeable situation; for my ^u He lived nine years longer, and died at the great age of eighty-six. Mr. Gray always thought highly of his pathetic powers, at the same time that he blamed his ill taste for mixing them so injudiciously with farce, in order to produce that monstrous species of composition called Tragi-comedy.—M.

^x At this time with his father at Houghton. Mr. Gray writes from the same place he did before, from his uncle's house in Buckinghamshire.—M.

part I am under the misfortune of having nothing to do, but it is a misfortune which, thank my stars, I can pretty well bear. You are in a confusion of wine, and roaring, and hunting, and tobacco, and, Heaven be praised, you too can pretty well bear it; while our evils are no more I believe we shall not much repine. I imagine, however, you will rather choose to converse with the living dead, that adorn the walls of your apartments, than with the dead living, that deck the middles of them; and prefer a picture of still life to the realities of a noisy one, and, as I guess, will imitate what you prefer, and for an hour or two at noon will stick yourself up as formal as if you had been fixed in your frame for these hundred years, with a pink or rose in one hand, and a great seal ring on the other. Your name, I assure you, has been propagated in these countries by a convert of yours, one * *, who has brought over his whole family to you; they were before pretty good Whigs, but now they are absolute Walpolians. We have hardly any body in the parish but knows exactly the dimensions of the hall and saloon at Houghton, and begin to believe that the lanthorn^y is not so great a consumer of the fat of the land as disaffected persons have said: for your reputation, we keep to ourselves your not hunting nor drinking hogan, either of which here would be sufficient to lay your honour in the dust. To-morrow se'nnight I hope to be in town, and not long after at Cambridge.

I am, &c.

Burnham, Sept. 1737.

^y A favourite object of Tory satire at the time.

LETTER XI.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

RECEIVING no answer to my last letter, which I writ above a month ago, I must own I am a little uneasy. The slight shadow of you I had in town, has only served to endear you to me the more. The moments I passed with you made a strong impression upon me. I singled you out for a friend, and I would have you know me to be yours, if you deem me worthy. Alas, Gray, you cannot imagine how miserable my time passes away. My health and nerves and spirits are, thank my stars, the very worst, I think, in Oxford. Four-and-twenty hours of pure unalloyed health together, are as unknown to me as the 400,000 characters in the Chinese vocabulary. One of my complaints has of late been so over-civil as to visit me regularly once a month—jam certus conviva. This is a painful nervous head-ach, which perhaps you have sometimes heard me speak of before. Give me leave to say, I find no physic comparable to your letters. If, as it is said in Ecclesiasticus, "Friendship be the physic of the mind," prescribe to me, dear Gray, as often and as much as you think proper, I shall be a most obedient patient.

————— Non ego
Fidis irascar medicis, offender amicis.

I venture here to write you down a Greek Epigram^z, which I lately turned into Latin, and hope you will excuse it.

^z Of Posidippus. Vide Anthologia, H. Stephan. p. 220. Mr. Gray in his MS. notes to this edition of the Anthologia (of which I shall give an account in a subsequent section) inserts this translation, and adds, "Descriptio pulcherrima et quæ tenuem illum Græco-

Perspicui puerum ludentem in margine rivi
 Immersit vitreæ limpidus error aquæ :
 At gelido ut mater moribundum e flumine traxit
 Credula, et amplexu funus inane fovet :
 Paulatim puer in dilecto pectore, somno
 Languidus, æternum lumina composuit.

Adieu ! I am going to my tutor's lectures on one Puffendorff, a very jurisprudent author as you shall read on a summer's day.

Believe me yours, &c.

Christ Church, Dec. 2, 1738.

LETTER XII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

LITERAS mi Favoni^a ! abs te demum, nudius-tertius credo, accepi plane mellitas, nisi forte qua de ægritudine quadam tua dictum : atque hoc sane mihi habitum est non paulo acerbius, quod te capitis morbo implicitum esse intellexi ; oh morbum mihi quam odiosum ! qui de industria id agit, ut ego in singulos menses, dii boni, quantis jucunditatibus orbarer ! quam ex animo mihi dolendum est, quod

—————Medio de fonte leporum
 Surgit amari aliquid.—————

Salutem mehercule, nolo, tam parvipendas, atq ; amicis tam improbe consulas : quanquam tute fortassis æstuas angusto limite mundi, viamq ; (ut dicitur) affectas rum spiritum mirifice sapit ;” and in conclusion, “ Posidippus inter principes Anthologiæ poetas emicat, Ptolemæi Philadelphi seculo vixit.”—M.

^a Mr. Gray in all his Latin compositions, addressed to this gentleman, calls him Favonius, in allusion to the name of West.—M.

Olympo, nos tamen non esse tam sublimes, utpote qui hisce in sordibus et fæce diutius paululum versari volumus, reminiscendum est: illæ tuæ Musæ, si te ament modo, derelinqui paulisper non nimis ægre patientur: indulge, amabo te, plusquam soles, corporis exercitationibus: magis te campus habeat, aprico magis te dedas otio, ut ne id ingenium quod tam cultum curas, diligenter nimis dum foves, officiosarum matrum ritu, interimas. Vide quæso, quam ιατρικῶς tecum agimus, ἠδ' ἐπιθήσω

Φάρμαχ', ἃ κεν πάνσησι μελαινάων ὀδυνάων.

si de his pharmacis non satis liquet; sunt festivitates meræ, sunt facetiæ et risus; quos ego equidem si adhibere nequeo, tamen ad præcipiendum (ut medicorum fere mos est) certe satis sim; id, quod poetice sub finem epistolæ lusisti, mihi gratissimum quidem accidit; admodum Latine coctum et conditum tetrasticon, Græcam tamen illam ἀφελείαν mirifice sapit: tu quod restat, vide, sodes, hujusce hominis ignorantiam; cum, unde hoc tibi sit depromptum, (ut fatear) prorsus nescio: sane ego equidem nihil in capsis reperio quo tibi minimæ partis solutio fiat. Vale, et me ut soles, ama.

A. D. 11 Kalend. Februar.

LETTER XIII.^b

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

I OUGHT to answer you in Latin, but I feel I dare not enter the lists with you—cupidum, pater optime,

^b This was written in French, but as I doubted whether it would stand the test of polite criticism so well as the preceding would of vires deficiunt. Seriously, you write in that language with a grace and an Augustan urbanity that amazes me: your Greek too is perfect in its kind. And here let me wonder that a man, longe Græcorum doctissimus, should be at a loss for the verse and chapter whence my epigram is taken. I am sorry I have not my Aldus with me, that I might satisfy your curiosity; but he, with all my other literary folks, are left at Oxford, and therefore you must still rest in suspense. I thank you again and again for your medical prescription. I know very well that those "risus, festivitates, et facetiæ" would contribute greatly to my cure, but then you must be my apothecary as well as physician, and make up the dose as well as direct it: send me, therefore, an electuary of these drugs, made up secundum artem, "et eris mihi magnus Apollo," in both his capacities, as a god of poets and god of physicians. Wish me joy of leaving my college, and leave yours as fast as you can. I shall be settled at the Temple very soon.

Dartmouth-street, Feb. 21, 1737-8.

LETTER XIV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

* * * * *

Ohe! amicule noster, et unde, sodes tu μουσοπάτακτος adeo repente evasisti? jam te rogitaturum credo. Nes-learned, I chose to translate so much of it as I thought necessary, in order to preserve the chain of correspondence.—M.

^c A Saphic ode and Alcaic fragment, which this letter contained, may be seen arranged among the poetical works in the first volume.

cio hercle, sic plane habet. Quicquid enim nugarum ἐπὶ σχολῆς inter ambulandum in palimpsesto scriptitavi, hisce te maxime impertiri visum est, quippe quem probare, quod meum est, aut certe ignoscere solitum probe novi: bona tua venia sit si forte videar in fine subtristior; nam risui jamdudum salutem dixi; etiam paulo mœstitiæ studiosiorem factum scias, promptumque, Καίνοϊς παλαιὰ δακρύοις στένειν κακά.

* * * * *

Sed de me satis. Cura ut valeas.

Jun. 1738.

LETTER XV.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

I RETURN you a thousand thanks for your elegant Ode, and wish you every joy you wish yourself in it. But, take my word for it, you will never spend so agreeable a day here as you describe: alas! the sun with us only rises to shew us the way to Westminster-hall. Nor must I forget thanking you for your little Alcaic fragment. The optic Naiads are infinitely obliged to you.

I was last week at Richmond Lodge with Mr. Walpole, for two days, and dined with Cardinal Fleury:^d as far as my short sight can go, the character of his great art and penetration is very just; he is indeed

Nulli penetrabilis astro.

^d Sir Robert Walpole.

I go to-morrow to Epsom, where I shall be for about a month. Excuse me, I am in haste^e, but believe me always, &c.

August 29, 1738.

LETTER XVI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

MY dear Sir, I should say Mr. Inspector General of the Exports and Imports^f; but that appellation would make but an odd figure in conjunction with the three familiar monosyllables above written, for

Non bene conveniunt nec in una sede morantur
Majestas et amor.

Which is, being interpreted, Love does not live at the Custom-house: however, by what style, title, or denomination soever you choose to be dignified or distinguished hereafter, these three words will stick by you like a burr, and you can no more get quit of these and your Christian name, than St. Anthony could of his pig. My motions at present (which you are pleased to ask after) are much like those of a pendulum or (Dr. Longically^g speaking) oscillatory. I swing from Chapel

^e Mr. West seems to have been indeed in haste when he writ this letter; else, surely his fine taste would have led him to have been more profuse in his praise of the Alcaic fragment. He might, I think, have said, without paying too extravagant a compliment to Mr. Gray's genius, that no poet of the Augustan age ever produced four more perfect lines, or what would sooner impose upon the best critic, as being a genuine ancient composition.—M.

^f Mr. Walpole was just named to that post, which he exchanged soon after for that of Usher of the Exchequer.—M.

^g Dr. Long, the master of Pembroke-hall, at this time read lectures in experimental philosophy.—M.

or Hall home, and from home to Chapel or Hall. All the strange incidents that happen in my journeys and returns I shall be sure to acquaint you with ; the most wonderful is, that it now rains exceedingly, this has refreshèd the prospect^h, as the way for the most part lies between green fields on either hand, terminated with buildings at some distance, castles, I presume, and of great antiquity. The roads are very good, being, as I suspect, the works of Julius Cæsar's army ; for they still preserve, in many places, the appearance of a pavement in pretty good repair, and, if they were not so near home, might perhaps be as much admired as the Via Appia : there are at present several rivulets to be crossed, and which serve to enliven the view all around. The country is exceeding fruitful in ravens and such black cattle ; but, not to tire you with my travels, I abruptly conclude

Yours, &c.

August, 1738.

LETTER XVII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

I AM coming away all so fast, and leaving behind me, without the least remorse, all the beauties of Sturbridge Fair. Its white bears may roar, its apes may wring their hands, and crocodiles may cry their eyes out, all's one for that ; I shall not once visit them, nor ^h All that follows is a humorously-hyperbolic description of the quadrangle of Peterhouse.—M.

so much as take my leave. The university has published a severe edict against schismatical congregations, and created half a dozen new little procterlings to see its orders executed, being under mighty apprehensions lest Henleyⁱ and his gilt tub should come to the fair and seduce their young ones: but their pains are to small purpose; for lo! after all, he is not coming.

I am at this instant in the very agonies of leaving college, and would not wish the worst of my enemies a worse situation. If you knew the dust, the old boxes, the bedsteads, and tutors, that are about my ears, you would look upon this letter as a great effort of my resolution and unconcernedness in the midst of evils. I fill up my paper with a loose sort of version of that scene in Pastor Fido that begins, Care selve beati^k.

Sept. 1738.

ⁱ Orator Henley.

^k This Latin version is extremely elegiac, but, as it is only a version, I do not insert it. Mr. Gray did not begin to learn Italian till about a year and a half before he translated this scene; and I find amongst his papers an English translation of part of the fourth Canto of Tasso's Gierusalem Liberata, done previously to this, which has great merit. In a letter to Mr. West, dated March, 1737, he says, "I learn Italian like any dragon, and in two months am got through the sixteenth book of Tasso, whom I hold in great admiration: I want you to learn too, that I may know your opinion of him; nothing can be easier than that language to any one who knows Latin and French already, and there are few so copious and expressive." In the same letter he tells him, "that his college has set him a versifying on a public occasion, (viz. those verses which are called Tripes,) on the theme of Luna est habitabilis." The poem, I believe, is to be found in the Musæ Etonenses. I would further observe, on this occasion, that though Mr. Gray had lately read and translated Statius, yet when he attempted composition, his judgment immediately directed him to the best model of versification; ac-

LETTER XVIII.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

I THANK you again and again for your two last most agreeable letters. They could not have come more a-propos; I was without any books to divert me, and they supplied the want of every thing: I made them my classics in the country; they were my Horace and Tibullus—Non ita loquor assentandi causa, ut probe nosti si me noris, verum quia sic mea est sententia. I am but just come to town, and, to shew you my esteem of your favours, I venture to send you, by the penny post, to your father's, what you will find on the next page; I hope it will reach you soon after your arrival, your boxes out of the waggon, yourself out of the coach, and tutors out of your memory.

Adieu! we shall see one another, I hope, to-morrow.

ELEGIA.

Quod mihi tam gratæ misisti dona Camœnæ,
 Qualia Mænalius Pan Deus ipse velit,
 Amplector te, Graie, et toto corde reposco,
 Oh desiderium jam nimis usque meum:
 Et mihi rura placent, et me quoq; sæpe volentem
 Duxerunt Dryades per sua prata Deæ;
 Sicubi lympa fugit liquido pede, sive virentem
 Magna, decus nemoris, quercus opacat humum:
 Illuc mane novo vagor, illuc vespere sero,
 Et, noto ut jacui gramine, nota cano.

cordingly his hexameters are, as far as modern ones can be, after the manner of Virgil: they move in the succession of his pauses, and close with his elisions.—M.

Nec nostræ ignorant divinam Amaryllida sylvæ:
 Ah, si desit amor, nil mihi rura placent.
 Ille jugis habitat Deus, ille in vallibus imis,
 Regnat et in Cœlis, regnat et Oceano;
 Ille gregem taurosque domat, sæviq; leonem
 Seminis; ille feros, ultus Adonin, apros:
 Quin et fervet amore nemus, ramoq; sub omni
 Contentu tremulo plurima gaudet avis.
 Duræ etiam in sylvis agitant connubia plantæ,
 Dura etiam et fertur saxa animasse Venus.
 Durior et saxis, et robore durior ille est,
 Sincero siquis pectore amare vetat:
 Non illi in manibus sanctum deponere pignus,
 Non illi arcanum cor aperire velim;
 Nescit amicitias, teneros qui nescit amores:
 Ah! si nulla Venus, nil mihi rura placent.
 Me licet a patria longe in tellure juberent
 Externa positum ducere fata dies;
 Si vultus modo amatus adesset, non ego contra Plorarem magnos voce querente Deos.
 At dulci in gremio curarum obliviam ducens
 Nil cuperem præter posse placere meæ;
 Nec bona fortunæ aspiciens, neq; munera regum,
 Illa intra optarem brachia cara mori.

Sept. 17, 1738.

Mr. Gray, on his return to town, continued at his father's house in Cornhill till the March following, in which interval Mr. Walpole being disinclined to enter so early into the business of Parliament, prevailed on Sir Robert Walpole to permit him to go abroad, and on Mr. Gray (as was said before) to be the companion of his travels. Mr. West spent the greatest part of the winter with his mother and sister at Epsom, during which time a letter or two more passed between the two friends. But these I think it unnecessary to insert, as I have already given sufficient specimens of the blossoms of their genius. The reader of taste and candour will, I trust, consider them only as such; yet will be led to think that, as the one produced afterwards "fruits worthy of paradise," the other would also have produced them, had he lived to a more mature age.—M.

SECTION II.

[AS I allot this section entirely to that part of Mr. Gray's life, which he spent in travelling through France and Italy, my province will be chiefly that of an Éditor ; and my only care to select, from a large collection of letters written to his parents and to his friend Mr. West, those parts which, I imagine, will be most likely either to inform or amuse the reader. The multiplicity of accounts, published both before and after the time when these letters were written, of those very places which Mr. Gray describes, will necessarily take from them much of their novelty ; yet the elegant ease of his epistolary style has a charm in it for all readers of true taste, that will make every apology of this sort needless. They will perceive, that as these letters were written without even the most distant view of publication, they are essentially different in their manner of description from any other that have either preceded or followed them ; add to this, that they are interspersed occasionally with some exquisitely finished pieces of Latin poetry, which he composed on the spot for the entertainment of his friend. But, not to anticipate any part of the reader's pleasure, I shall only further say, to forewarn him of a disappointment, that this correspondence is defective towards the end, and includes no description either of Venice or its territory ; the last places which Mr. Gray visited. This defect was occasioned by an unfortunate disagreement between him and Mr. Walpole, arising from the difference of their tempers. The former being, from his earliest years, curious, pensive, and philosophical; the latter gay, lively, and consequently inconsiderate¹: this therefore occasioned their separation at Reggio. Mr. Gray went before him to Venice; and staying there only till he could find means of returning to England, he made the best of his way home, repassing the Alps, and following almost the same rout through France by which he had before gone to Italy.]—M.

LETTER I.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Amiens, April 1, N. S. 1739.

As we made but a very short journey to-day, and came to our inn early, I sit down to give you some account of our expedition. On the 29th (according to the style here) we left Dover at twelve at noon, and with a pretty brisk gale, which pleased every body mighty well, except myself, who was extremely sick

¹ In justice to the memory of so respectable a friend, Mr. Walpole enjoins me to charge himself with the chief blame in their quarrel; confessing that more attention and complaisance, more deference to a warm friendship, superior judgment and prudence, might have prevented a rupture that gave much uneasiness to them both, and a lasting concern to the survivor; though, in the year 1744, a reconciliation was effected between them, by a lady who wished well to both parties.—M.

The mention of Florence instead of Reggio in Dr. Johnson's account of this unfortunate separation is a mistake. But the supposition that Gray was actuated, in the dispute, by an unreasonable "fervour of independence" is certainly gratuitous. ED.

the whole time; we reached Calais by five: the weather changed, and it began to snow hard the minute we came into the harbour, where we took the boat, and soon landed. Calais is an exceeding old, but very pretty town, and we hardly saw any thing there that was not so new and so different from England, that it surprised us agreeably. We went the next morning to the great church, and were at high mass, (it being Easter-Monday.) We saw also the Convent of the Capuchins, and the nuns of St. Dominic; with these last we held much conversation, especially with an English nun, a Mrs. Davis, of whose work I sent you, by the return of the packet, a letter-case to remember her by. In the afternoon we took a post-chaise (it still snowing very hard) for Boulogne, which was only eighteen miles further. This chaise is a strange sort of conveyance, of much greater use than beauty, resembling an ill-shaped chariot, only with the door opening before instead of the side; three horses draw it, one between the shafts, and the other two on each side, on one of which the postillion rides, and drives too^m. This vehicle will, upon occasion, go four-score miles a-day; but Mr. Walpole, being in no hurry, chooses to make easy journeys of it, and they are easy ones indeed; for the motion is much like that of a sedan; we go about six miles an hour, and commonly change horses at the end of it. It is true they are no very graceful steeds, but they go well, and through roads which they say are bad for France, but to me they seem gravel walks and bowling-greens; in short, it would be the finest travelling in the world, were it not for the inns, which are most terrible places indeed. But to describe our progress somewhat more regularly, we came into Boulogne when it was almost dark, and went out pretty early on Tuesday morning, so that all I can say about it is, that it is a large, old, fortified town, with more English in it than French. On Tuesday we were to go to Abbéville, seventeen leagues, or fifty-one short English miles; but by the way we dined at Montreuil, much to our hearts' content, on stinking mutton cutlets, addled eggs, and ditch water. Madame, the hostess, made her appearance in long lap-pets of bone lace and a sack of linsey-woolsey. We supped and lodged pretty well at Abbéville, and had time to see a little of it before we came out this morning. There are seventeen convents in it, out of which we saw the chapels of the Minims and the Carmelite nuns. We are now come further thirty miles to Amiens, the chief city of the province of Picardy. We have seen the cathedral, which is just what that of Canterbury must have been before the Reformationⁿ. It is about the same size, a huge Gothic building, beset on the outside with thousands of small statues, and within adorned with beautiful painted windows, and a vast number of chapels dressed out in all their finery of ⁿ It has excited some surprise that Gray should have made this comparison between structures so utterly unlike, as the two here mentioned. His correct and well-informed eye must have perceived the difference in their character, and we are constrained to suppose, either with Mr. Mitford, that this description was thought by him to be sufficiently accurate to give his mother an idea of what he had seen, or else that the comparison refers only to the pomp and circumstance of catholic service, for which the two cathedrals were alike designed. ED.

^m This was before the introduction of post-chaises here, else it would not have appeared a circumstance worthy notice.—M.

altar-pieces, embroidery, gilding, and marble. Over the high altar are preserved, in a very large wrought shrine of massy gold, the reliques of St. Firmin, their patron saint. We went also to the chapels of the Jesuits and Ursuline nuns, the latter of which is very richly adorned. To-morrow we shall lie at Clermont, and next day reach Paris. The country we have passed through hitherto has been flat, open, but agreeably diversified with villages, fields well cultivated, and little rivers. On every hillock is a wind-mill, a crucifix, or a Virgin Mary dressed in flowers, and a sarcenet robe; one sees not many people or carriages on the road; now and then indeed you meet a strolling friar, a countryman with his great muff, or a woman riding astride on a little ass, with short petticoats, and a great head-dress of blue wool. * * *

LETTER II.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Paris, April 12, 1739.

Enfin, donc, me voici à Paris. Mr. Walpole is gone out to supper at Lord Conway's, and here I remain alone, though invited too. Do not think I make a merit of writing to you preferably to a good supper; for these three days we have been here have actually given me an aversion to eating in general. If hunger be the best sauce to meat, the French are certainly the worst cooks in the world; for what tables we have seen have been so delicately served, and so profusely, that, after rising from one of them, one imagines it impossible ever to eat again. And now, if I tell you all I have in my head, you will believe me mad, mais n'importe, courage, allons! for if I wait till my head grow clear and settle a little, you may stay long enough for a letter. Six days have we been coming hither, which other people do in two; they have not been disagreeable ones; through a fine open country, admirable roads, and in an easy conveyance; the inns not absolutely intolerable, and images quite unusual presenting themselves on all hands. At Amiens we saw the fine cathedral, and eat pate de perdrix; passed through the park of Chantilly by the Duke of Bourbon's palace, which we only beheld as we passed; broke down at Lusarche; stopt at St. Denis, saw all the beautiful monuments of the kings of France, and the vast treasures of the abbey, rubies and emeralds as big as small eggs, crucifixes and vows, crowns and reliquaries, of inestimable value; but of all their curiosities the thing the most to our tastes, and which they indeed do the justice to esteem the glory of their collection, was a vase of an entire onyx, measuring at least five inches over, three deep, and of great thickness. It is at least two thousand years old, the beauty of the stone and sculpture upon it (representing the mysteries of Bacchus) are beyond expression admirable; we have dreamed of it ever since. The jolly old Benedictine, that shewed us the treasures, had in his youth been ten years a soldier; he laughed at all the reliques, was very full of stories, and mighty obliging. On Saturday evening we got to Paris, and were driving through the streets, a long while before we knew where we were. The minute we came, voila Milors Holderness, Conway, and his brother; all stayed supper, and till two o'clock in the morning, for here nobody ever sleeps; it is not the way: Next day go to dine at my Lord Holderness's; there was the Abbé

Prevot, author of the Cleveland, and several other pieces much esteemed; the rest were English. At night we went to the Pandore; a spectacle literally, for it is nothing but a beautiful piece of machinery of three scenes. The first represents the chaos, and by degrees the separation of the elements. The second, the temple of Jupiter, and the giving of the box to Pandora. The third, the opening of the box, and all the mischiefs that ensued. An absurd design, but executed in the highest perfection, and that in one of the finest theatres in the world; it is the grande salle des machines in the Palais des Tuileries. Next day dined at Lord Waldegrave's; then to the opera. Imagine to yourself for the drama four acts^o entirely unconnected with each other, each founded on some little history, skilfully taken out of an ancient author, e. g. Ovid's Metamorphoses, &c. and with great address converted into a French piece of gallantry. For instance, that which I saw, called the Ballet de la Paix, has its first act built upon the story of Nireus. Homer having said he was the handsomest man of his time, the poet, imagining such a one could not want a mistress, has given him one. These two come in and sing sentiment in lamentable strains, neither air nor recitative; only, to one's great joy, they are every now and then interrupted by a dance, or, (to one's great sorrow) by a chorus that borders the stage from one end to the other, and screams, past all power of simile to represent. The second act was Baucis and Philemon. Baucis is a beautiful young shepherdess, and Philemon her swain. Jupiter falls in love with her, but nothing will prevail upon her ; so it is all mighty well, and the chorus sing and dance the praises of Constancy. The two other acts were about Iphis and Ianthe, and the Judgment of Paris. Imagine, I say, all this transacted by cracked voices, trilling divisions upon two notes and a half, accompanied by an orchestra of humstrums, and a whole house more attentive than if Farinelli sung, and you will almost have formed a just notion of the thing^p. Our astonishment at their absurdity you can never conceive; we had enough to do to express it by screaming an hour louder than the whole dramatis personæ. We have also seen twice the Comedie Française; first, the Mahomet Second, a tragedy that has had a great run of late; and the thing itself does not want its beauties, but the actors are beyond measure delightful. Mademoiselle Gaussin (Mr. Voltaire's Zara) has with a charming (though little) person the most pathetic tone of voice, the finest expression in her face, and most proper action imaginable. There is also a Dufrêne, who did the chief character, a handsome man, and a prodigious fine actor. The second we saw was the Philosophe marié, and here they performed as well in comedy; there is a Mademoiselle Quinault, somewhat in Mrs. Clive's way, and a Monsieur Grandval, in the nature of Wilks, who is the genteest thing in the world. There are several more would be much admired in England, and many (whom we have not seen) much celebrated here. Great part of our time is spent in seeing churches and palaces full of fine pictures, &c. the quarter of which is not yet exhausted. For my part, I could entertain myself this month merely with the common streets and the people in them. * * *

^o The French opera has only three acts, but often a prologue on a different subject, which (as Mr. Walpole informs me, who saw it at the same time) was the case in this very representation.—M.

^p Our author's sentiments here seem to correspond entirely with those which J. J. Rousseau afterwards published in his famous Lettre sur la Musique Française. In a French letter also, which Mr. Gray writ to his friend soon after this, he calls their music "des miaulemens et des hurlemens effroyables, mêlés avec un tintamarre du diable : voilà la musique Française en abrégé."—M.

LETTER III.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Paris, May 22, 1739.

AFTER the little particulars aforesaid I should have proceeded to a journal of our transactions for this week past, should have carried you post from hence to Versailles, hurried you through the gardens to Trianon, back again to Paris, so away to Chantilly. But the fatigue is perhaps more than you can bear; and, moreover, I think I have reason to stomach your last piece of gravity. Supposing you were in your soberest mood, I am sorry you should think me capable of ever being so dissip  , so evapor  , as not to be in a condition of relishing any thing you could say to me. And now, if you have a mind to make your peace with me, arouse ye from your megrims and melancholies, and (for exercise is good for you) throw away your night-cap, call for your jack-boots, and set out with me, last Saturday evening, for Versailles—and at eight o'clock passing through a road speckled with vines, and villas, and hares, and partridges, we arrive at the great avenue, flanked on either hand with a double row of trees about half a mile long, and with the palace itself to terminate the view; facing which, on each side of you, is placed a semi-circle of very handsome buildings, which form the stables. These we will not enter into, because you know we are no jockies. Well! and is this the great front of Versailles? What a huge heap of littleness! it is composed, as it were, of three courts, all open to the eye at once, and gradually diminishing till you come to the royal apartments, which on this side present but half a dozen windows and a balcony. This last is all that can be called a front, for the rest is only great wings. The hue of all this mass is black, dirty red, and yellow; the first proceeding from stone changed by age; the second, from a mixture of brick; and the last, from a profusion of tarnished gilding. You cannot see a more disagreeable tout-ensemble; and, to finish the matter, it is all stuck over in many places with small busts of a tawny hue between every window. We pass through this to go into the garden, and here the case is indeed altered; nothing can be vaster and more magnificent than the back front: before it a very spacious terrace spreads itself, adorned with two large basins; these are bordered and lined (as most of the others) with white marble, with handsome statues of bronze reclined on their edges. From hence you descend a huge flight of steps into a semi-circle formed by woods, that are cut all round into niches, which are filled with beautiful copies of all the famous antique statues in white marble. Just in the midst is the basin of Latona; she and her children are standing on the top of a rock in the middle, on the sides of which are the peasants, some half, some totally changed into frogs, all of which throw out water at her in great plenty. From this place runs on the great alley, which brings you into a complete round where is the basin of Apollo, the biggest in the gardens. He his rising in his car, out of the water, surrounded by nymphs and tritons, all in bronze, and finely executed ; and these, as they play, raise a perfect storm about him : beyond this is the great canal, a prodigious long piece of water, that terminates the whole : all this you have at one coup d'oeil in entering the garden, which is truly great. I cannot say as much of the general taste of the place ; every thing you behold savours too much of art ; all is forced, all is constrained about you ; statues and vases sowed every where without distinction ; sugar-loaves and minced-pies of yew ; scrawl-work of box, and little squirting jets-d'eau, besides a great sameness in the walks, cannot help striking one at first sight, not to mention the silliest of labyrinths, and all Æsop's fables in water ; since these were designed in usum Delphini only. Here then we walk by moonlight, and hear the ladies and the nightingales sing. Next morning, being Whit-Sunday, make ready to go to the installation of nine knights du Saint Esprit, Cambis, is one^q ; high mass celebrated with music, great crowd, much incense, King, Queen, Dauphin, Mesdames, and court ; knights arrayed by his Majesty ; reverences before the altar, not bows, but curtsies ; stiff hams ; much tittering among the ladies ; trumpets, kettle-drums, and fifes. My dear West, I am vastly delighted with Trianon, all of us with Chantilly ; if you would know why, you must have patience, for I can hold my pen no longer, except to tell you that I saw Britannicus last night ; all the characters, particularly Agrippina and Nero, done to perfection ; to-morrow Phædra and Hippolitus. We are making you a little bundle of petites pieces ; there is nothing in them, but they are acting at present ; there are too Crebillon's Letters, and Amusemens sur le langage des Bêtes, said to be of one Bougeant, a Jesuit; they are both esteemed, and lately come out. This day se'nnight we go to Rheims.

^q The Comte de Cambis was lately returned from his embassy in England.

LETTER IV.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Rheims, June 21, N. S. 1739.

WE have now been settled almost three weeks in this city, which is more considerable upon account of its size and antiquity, than from the number of its inhabitants, or any advantages of commerce. There is little in it worth a stranger's curiosity, besides the cathedral church, which is a vast gothic building of a surprising beauty and lightness, all covered over with a profusion of little statues and other ornaments. It is here the kings of France are crowned by the Archbishop of Rheims, who is the first peer, and the primate of the kingdom: the holy vessel made use of on that occasion, which contains the oil, is kept in the church of St. Nicasius hard by, and is believed to have been brought by an angel from heaven at the coronation of Clovis, the first Christian king^r. The streets in general have but a melancholy aspect, the houses all old; the public walks run along the side of the great moat under the ramparts, where one hears a continual croaking of frogs; the country round about is one great plain ^r This vessel, called the Holy Ampulla, was said to have been brought to Saint Remigius by a dove, for the service here mentioned. The oil within never decreased from that day till it was thrown with its sacred receptacle on the floor of the abbey where it was kept, by order of the national convention. ED.

covered with vines, which at this time of the year afford no very pleasing prospect, as being not above a foot high. What pleasures the place denies to the sight it makes up to the palate; since you have nothing to drink but the best champagne in the world, and all sort of provisions equally good. As to other pleasures, there is not that freedom of conversation among the people of fashion here, that one sees in other parts of France; for though they are not very numerous in this place, and consequently must live a good deal together, yet they never come to any great familiarity with one another. As my Lord Conway had spent a good part of his time among them, his brother, and we with him, were soon introduced into all their assemblies: as soon as you enter, the lady of the house presents each of you a card, and offers you a party at quadrille; you sit down, and play forty deals without intermission, excepting one quarter of an hour, when every body rises to eat of what they call the gouter, which supplies the place of our tea, and is a service of wine, fruits, cream, sweetmeats, crawfish, and cheese. People take what they like, and sit down again to play; after that, they make little parties to go to the walks together, and then all the company retire to their separate habitations. Very seldom any suppers or dinners are given; and this is the manner they live among one another; not so much out of any aversion they have to pleasure, as out of a sort of formality they have contracted by not being much frequented by people who have lived at Paris. It is sure they do not hate gaiety any more than the rest of their country people, and can enter into diversions, that are once proposed, with a good grace enough: for instance, the other evening we happened to be got together in a company of eighteen people, men and women of the best fashion here, at a garden in the town to walk ; when one of the ladies bethought herself of asking, Why should not we sup here? immediately the cloth was laid by the side of a fountain under the trees, and a very elegant supper served up ; after which another said, Come, let us sing, and directly began herself : from singing we insensibly fell to dancing, and singing in a round ; when somebody mentioned the violins, and immediately a company of them was ordered : minuets were begun in the open air, and then came country-dances, which held till four o'clock next morning ; at which hour the gayest lady there proposed, that such as were weary should get into their coaches, and the rest of them should dance before them with the music in the van ; and in this manner we paraded through all the principal streets of the city, and waked every body in it. Mr. Walpole had a mind to make a custom of the thing, and would have given a ball in the same manner next week, but the women did not come into it ; so I believe it will drop, and they will return to their dull cards, and usual formalities. We are not to stay above a month longer here, and shall then go to Dijon, the chief city of Burgundy, a very splendid and a very gay town ; at least such is the present design.

LETTER V.

MR. GRAY TO HIS FATHER.

Dijon, Friday, Sept. 11, N. S. 1739.

WE have made three short days journey of it from Rheims hither, where we arrived the night before last : the road we have passed through has been extremely agreeable; it runs through the most fertile part of Champagne by the side of the river Marne, with a chain of hills on each hand at some distance, entirely covered with woods and vineyards, and every now and then the ruins of some old castle on their tops; we lay at St. Dizier the first night, and at Langres the second, and got hither the next evening time enough to have a full view of the city in entering it: it lies in a very extensive plain covered with vines and corn, and consequently is plentifully supplied with both. I need not tell you that it is the chief city of Burgundy, nor that it is of great antiquity; considering which, one should imagine it ought to be larger than one finds it. However, what it wants in extent, is made up in beauty and cleanliness, and in rich convents and churches, most of which we have seen. The palace of the states is a magnificent new building, where the Duke of Bourbon is lodged when he comes every three years to hold that assembly, as governor of the province. A quarter of a mile out of the town is a famous abbey of Carthusians, which we are just returned from seeing. In their chapel are the tombs of the ancient Dukes of Burgundy, that were so powerful till at the death of Charles the Bold, the last of them, this part of his dominions was united by Lewis XI. to the crown of France. To-morrow we are to pay a visit to the Abbot of the Cistercians, who lives a few leagues off, and who uses to receive all strangers with great civility; his abbey is one of the richest in the kingdom; he keeps open house always, and lives with great magnificence. We have seen enough of this town already to make us regret the time we spent at Rheims; it is full of people of condition, who seem to form a much more agreeable society than we found in Champagne; but as we shall stay here but two or three days longer, it is not worth while to be introduced into their houses. On Monday or Tuesday we are to set out for Lyons, which is two days journey distant, and from thence you shall hear again from me.

LETTER VI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Lyons, Sept. 18, N. S. 1739.

SAVEZ vous bien, mon cher ami, que je vous hais, que je vous deteste? voila des termes un peu forts; and that will save me, upon a just computation, a page of paper and six drops of ink; which, if I confined myself to reproaches of a more moderate nature, I should be obliged to employ in using you according to your deserts. What! to let any body reside three months at Rheims, and write but once to them? Please to consult Tully de Amicit. page 5, line 25, and you will find it said in express terms, "Ad amicum inter Remos relegatum mense uno quinquies scriptum esto;" nothing more plain, or less liable to false interpretations. Now because I suppose it will give you pain to know we are in being, I take this opportunity to tell you that we are at the ancient and celebrated Lugdunum, a city situated upon the confluence of the Rhône and Saône, (Arar, I should say,) two people, who, though of tempers extremely unlike, think fit to join hands here, and make a little party to travel to the Mediterranean in company; the lady comes gliding along through the fruitful plains of Burgundy, "incredibili lenitate, ita ut oculis in utram partem fluit judicari non possit;" the gentleman runs all rough and roaring down from the mountains of Switzerland to meet her ; and with all her soft airs she likes him never the worse ; she goes through the middle of the city in state, and he passes incog. without the walls, but waits for her a little below. The houses here are so high, and the streets so narrow, as would be sufficient to render Lyons the dismalest place in the world, but the number of people, and the face of commerce diffused about it, are, at least, as sufficient to make it the liveliest : between these two sufficiencies, you will be in doubt what to think of it ; so we shall leave the city, and proceed to its environs, which are beautiful beyond expression ; it is surrounded with mountains, and those mountains all bedropped and bespeckled with houses, gardens, and plantations of the rich Bourgeois, who have from thence a prospect of the city in the vale below on one hand, on the other the rich plains of the Lyonnais, with the rivers winding among them, and the Alps, with the mountains of Dauphiné, to bound the view. All yesterday morning we were busied in climbing up mount Fourviere, where the ancient city stood perched at such a height, that nothing but the hopes of gain could certainly ever persuade their neighbours to pay them a visit : here are the ruins of the emperors' palaces, that resided here, that is to say, Augustus and Severus ; they consist in nothing but great masses of old wall, that have only their quality to make them respected. In a vineyard of the Minims are remains of a theatre ; the fathers, whom they belong to, hold them in no esteem at all, and would have shewed us their sacristy and chapel instead of them : the Ursuline nuns have in their garden some Roman baths, but we having the misfortune to be men, and heretics, they did not think proper to admit us. Hard by are eight arches of a most magnificent aqueduct, said to be erected by Antony, when his legions were quartered here: there are many other parts of it dispersed up and down the country, for it brought the water from a river many leagues off in La Forez. Here are remains too of Agrippa's seven great roads which met at Lyons; in some places they lie twelve feet deep in the ground: in short, a thousand matters that you shall not know, till you give me a description of the Pais de Tombridge, and the effect its waters have upon you.

LETTER VII.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

Temple, Sept. 28, 1739.

IF wishes could turn to realities, I would fling down my law books and sup with you to-night. But, alas! here am I doomed to fix, while you are fluttering from city to city, and enjoying all the pleasures which a gay climate can afford. It is out of the power of my heart to envy you your good fortune, yet I cannot help indulging a few natural desires; as, for example, to take a walk with you on the banks of the Rhône, and to be climbing up mount Fourviere;

Jam mens prætrepidans avet vagari:
Jam læti studio pedes vigescunt.

However, so long as I am not deprived of your correspondence, so long shall I always find some pleasure in being at home. And, setting all vain curiosity aside, when the fit is over, and my reason begins to come to herself, I have several other powerful motives which might easily cure me of my restless inclinations: amongst these, my mother's ill state of health is not the least; which was the reason of our going to Tunbridge, so that you cannot expect much description or amusement from thence. Nor indeed is there much room for either; for all diversions there may be reduced to two articles, gaming and going to church. They were pleased to publish certain Tunbrigiana this season; but such ana! I believe there were never so many vile little verses put together before. So much for Tunbridge: London affords me as little to say. What! so huge a town as London? Yes, consider only how I live in that town. I never go into the gay world or high world, and consequently receive nothing from thence to brighten my imagination. The busy world I leave to the busy; and am resolved never to talk politics till I can act at the same time. To tell old stories, or prate of old books, seems a little musty; and toujours chapon bouilli, won't do. However, for want of better fare, take another little mouthful of my poetry.

O meæ jucunda comes quietis!
 Quæ fere ægrotum solita es levare
 Pectus, et sensim ah! nimis ingruentes
 Fallere curas:

Quid canes? quanto Lyra dic furore
 Gesties, quando hac reducem sodalem
 Glauciam^s gaudere simul videbis
 Meque sub umbra?

^s He gives Mr. Gray the name of Glaucias frequently in his Latin verse, as Mr. Gray calls him Favonius.—M.

LETTER VIII.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Lyons, Oct. 13, N. S. 1739.

IT is now almost five weeks since I left Dijon, one of the gayest and most agreeable little cities of France, for Lyons, its reverse in all these particulars. It is the second in the kingdom in bigness and rank, the streets excessively narrow and nasty ; the houses immensely high and large ; (that, for instance, where we are lodged, has twenty-five rooms on a floor, and that for five stories ;) it swarms with inhabitants like Paris itself, but chiefly a mercantile people, too much given up to commerce to think of their own, much less of a stranger's diversions. We have no acquaintance in the town, but such English as happen to be passing through here, in their way to Italy and the South, which at present happen to be near thirty in number. It is a fortnight since we set out from hence upon a little excursion to Geneva. We took the longest road, which lies through Savoy, on purpose to see a famous monastery, called the grand Chartreuse, and had no reason to think our time lost. After having travelled seven days very slow (for we did not change horses, it being impossible for a chaise to go post in these roads) we arrived at a little village, among the mountains of Savoy, called Echelles ; from thence we proceeded on horses, who are used to the way, to the mountain of the Chartreuse : it is six miles to the top ; the road runs winding up it, commonly not six feet broad ; on one hand is the rock, with woods of pine-trees hanging over head ; on the other, a monstrous precipice, almost perpendicular, at the bottom of which rolls a torrent, that sometimes tumbling among the fragments of stone that have fallen from on high, and sometimes precipitating itself down vast descents with a noise like thunder, which is still made greater by the echo from the mountains on each side, concurs to form one of the most solemn, the most romantic, and the most astonishing scenes I ever beheld: add to this the strange views made by the craggs and cliffs on the other hand; the cascades that in many places throw themselves from the very summit down into the vale, and the river below; and many other particulars impossible to describe; you will conclude we had no occasion to repent our pains. This place St. Bruno chose to retire to, and upon its very top founded the aforesaid convent, which is the superior of the whole order. When we came there, the two fathers, who are commissioned to entertain strangers, (for the rest must neither speak one to another, nor to any one else,) received us very kindly; and set before us a repast of dried fish, eggs, butter, and fruits, all excellent in their kind, and extremely neat. They pressed us to spend the night there, and to stay some days with them; but this we could not do, so they led us about their house, which is, you must think, like a little city; for there are one hundred fathers, besides three hundred servants, that make their clothes, grind their corn, press their wine, and do every thing among themselves: the whole is quite orderly and simple; nothing of finery, but the wonderful decency, and the strange situation, more than supply the place of it. In the evening we descended by the same way, passing through many clouds that were then forming themselves on the mountain's side. Next day we continued our journey by Chamberry, which, though the chief city of the Dutchy, and residence of the King of Sardinia, when he comes into this part of his dominions, makes but a very mean and insignificant appearance ; we lay at Aix, once famous for its hot baths, and the next night at Annecy ; the day after, by noon, we got to Geneva. I have not time to say any thing about it, nor of our solitary journey back again. * * *

LETTER IX.

MR. GRAY TO HIS FATHER.

Lyons, Oct. 25, N. S. 1739.

IN my last I gave you the particulars of our little journey to Geneva ; I have only to add, that we staid about a week, in order to see Mr. Conway settled there : I do not wonder so many English choose it for their residence ; the city is very small, neat, prettily built, and extremely populous ; the Rhône runs through the middle of it, and it is surrounded with new fortifications, that give it a military compact air ; which, joined to the happy, lively countenances of the inhabitants, and an exact discipline always as strictly observed as in time of war, makes the little republic appear a match for a much greater power ; though perhaps Geneva, and all that belongs to it, are not of equal extent with Windsor and its two parks. To one that has passed through Savoy, as we did, nothing can be more striking than the contrast, as soon as he approaches the town. Near the gates of Geneva runs the torrent Arve, which separates it from the King of Sardinia's dominions ; on the other side of it lies a country naturally, indeed, fine and fertile ; but you meet with nothing in it but meagre, ragged, bare-footed peasants, with their children, in extreme misery and nastiness ; and even of these no great numbers : you no sooner have crossed the stream I have mentioned but poverty is no more ; not a beggar, hardly a discontented face to be seen ; numerous and well-dressed people swarming on the ramparts ; drums beating ; soldiers, well clothed and armed, exercising ; and folks, with business in their looks, hurrying to and fro ; all contribute to make any person, who is not blind, sensible what a difference there is between the two governments, that are the causes of one view and the other. The beautiful lake, at one end of which the town is situated, its extent, the several states that border upon it, and all its pleasures, are too well known for me to mention them. We sailed upon it as far as the dominions of Geneva extend, that is, about two leagues and a half on each side ; and landed at several of the little houses of pleasure that the inhabitants have built all about it, who received us with much politeness. The same night we eat part of a trout, taken in the lake, that weighed thirty-seven pounds ; as great a monster as it appeared to us, it was esteemed there nothing extraordinary, and they assured us, it was not uncommon to catch them of fifty pounds ; they are dressed here, and sent post to Paris, upon some great occasions ; nay, even to Madrid, as we are told. The road we returned through was not the same we came by : we crossed the Rhône at Seyssel, and passed for three days among the mountains of Bugey, without meeting with any thing new : at last we came out into the plains of La Bresse, and so to Lyons again. Sir Robert has written to Mr. Walpole, to desire he would go to Italy, which he has resolved to do, so that all the scheme of spending the winter in the south of France is laid aside, and we are to pass it in a much finer country. You may imagine I am not sorry to have this opportunity of seeing the place in the world that best deserves it: besides, as the Pope (who is eighty-eight, and has been lately at the point of death) cannot probably last a great while, perhaps we may have the fortune to be present at the election of a new one, when Rome will be in all its glory. Friday next we certainly begin our journey; in two days we shall come to the foot of the Alps, and six more we shall be in passing them. Even here the winter is begun; what then must it be among those vast snowy mountains, where it is hardly ever summer. We are, however, as well armed as possible against the cold, with muffs, hoods, and masks of beaver, fur boots, and bear-skins. When we arrive at Turin, we shall rest after the fatigues of the journey. * * *

LETTER X.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Turin, Nov. 7, N. S. 1739.

I AM this night arrived here, and have just set down to rest me, after eight days tiresome journey: for the three first we had the same road we before passed through to go to Geneva; the fourth we turned out of it, and for that day and the next travelled rather among than upon the Alps, the way commonly running through a deep valley by the side of the river Arc, which works itself a passage, with great difficulty and a mighty noise, among vast quantities of rocks, that have rolled down from the mountain tops. The winter was so far advanced, as in great measure to spoil the beauty of the prospect; however, there was still somewhat fine remaining amidst the savageness and horror of the place: the sixth we began to go up several of these mountains; and as we were passing one, met with an odd accident enough: Mr. Walpole had a little fat black spaniel, that he was very fond of, which he sometimes used to set down, and let it run by the chaise side. We were at that time in a very rough road, not two yards broad at most; on one side was a great wood of pines, and on the other a vast precipice; it was noon-day, and the sun shone bright, when all of a sudden, from the wood-side, (which was as steep upwards, as the other part was downwards,) out rushed a great wolf, came close to the head of the horses, seized the dog by the throat, and rushed up the hill again with him in his mouth. This was done in less than a quarter of a minute; we all saw it, and yet the servants had not time to draw their pistols, or do any thing to save the dog[†]. If he had not been there, and the creature had thought fit to lay hold of one of the horses; chaise, and we, and all must inevitably have tumbled above fifty fathoms perpendicular down the precipice. The seventh we came to Lanebourg, the last town in Savoy; it lies at the foot of the famous mount Cenis, which is so situated as to allow no room for any way but over the very top of it. Here the chaise was forced to be pulled to pieces, and the baggage and that to be carried by mules: we ourselves were wrapped up in our furs, and seated upon a sort of matted chair without legs, which is carried upon poles in the manner of a bier,

[†] This odd incident might have afforded Mr. Gray a subject for an ode, which would have been a good companion to that on the death of a favourite cat.—M.

and so begun to ascend by the help of eight men. It was six miles to the top, where a plain opens itself about as many more in breadth, covered perpetually with very deep snow, and in the midst of that a great lake of unfathomable depth, from whence a river takes its rise, and tumbles over monstrous rocks quite down the other side of the mountain. The descent is six miles more, but infinitely more steep than the going up; and here the men perfectly fly down with you, stepping from stone to stone with incredible swiftness in places where none but they could go three paces without falling^u. The immensity of the precipices, the roaring of the river and torrents that run into it, the huge craggs covered with ice and snow, and the clouds below you and about you, are objects it is impossible to conceive without seeing them; and though we had heard many strange descriptions of the scene, none of them at all came up to it. We were but five hours in performing the whole, from which you may judge of the rapidity of the men's motion. We are now got into Piedmont, and stopped a little while at La Ferriere, a small village about three quarters of the ^u Walpole gives the following animated account of this descent, in a letter to West, from Turin. "Lo," as the song says, "we are in fair Italy." I wonder we are, for on the highest precipice of mount Cenis, the devil of Discord, in the similitude of sour wine, had got amongst our Alpine savages and set them a fighting, with Gray and me in the chairs: they rushed him by me on a crag, where there was scarce room for a cloven foot; the least slip had tumbled us into such a fog, and such an eternity, as we should never have found our way out of again. We were eight days coming hither from Lyons, the four last in crossing the Alps. Such uncouth rocks and uncomely inhabitants, my dear West, I hope I shall never see them again.—ED.

way down, but still among the clouds, where we began to hear a new language spoken round about us ; at last we got quite down, went through the Pás de Suse, a narrow road among the Alps, defended by two fortresses, and lay at Bossolens : next evening, through a fine avenue of nine miles in length, as straight as a line, we arrived at this city, which, as you know, is the capital of the principality, and the residence of the King of Sardinia. * * *^x We shall stay here, I believe, a fortnight, and proceed for Genoa, which is three or four days journey to go post.

I am, &c.

LETTER XI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Turin, Nov. 16, N. S. 1739.

AFTER eight days journey through Greenland, we arrived at Turin. You approach it by a handsome avenue of nine miles long, and quite straight. The entrance is guarded by certain vigilant dragons, called Douäniers, who mumbled us for some time. The city is not large, as being a place of strength, and consequently confined within its fortifications ; it has many beauties and some faults ; among the first are streets all laid out by the line, regular uniform buildings, fine walks that surround the whole, and in general a good lively clean appearance: but the houses are of brick plaistered, which is apt to want repairing; the windows of oiled paper, which is apt to be torn; and every thing very slight, which is apt to tumble down. There is an excellent opera, but it is only in the carnival: balls every night, but only in the carnival: masquerades too, but only in the carnival. This carnival lasts only from Christmas to Lent; one half of the remaining part of the year is passed in remembering the last, the other in expecting the future carnival. We cannot well subsist upon such slender diet, no more than upon an execrable Italian comedy, and a puppet-show, called Rappresentazione d'un' anima dannata, which, I think, are all the present diversions of the place; except the Marquis de Cavailac's Conversazione, where one goes to see people play at ombre, and taroc, a game with twenty-two cards all painted with suns and moons, and devils and monks. Mr. Walpole has been at court; the family are at present at a country palace, called La Venerie. The palace here in town is the very quintessence of gilding and looking-glass; inlaid floors, carved pannels, and painting, wherever they could stick a brush. I own I have not, as yet, any where met with those grand and simple works of art, that are to amaze one, and whose sight one is to be the better for: but those of Nature have astonished me beyond expression. In our little journey up to the Grande Chartreuse, I do not remember to have gone ten paces without an exclamation, that there was no restraining: not a precipice, not a torrent, not a cliff, but is pregnant with religion and poetry. There are certain scenes that would awe an atheist into belief, without the help of other argument. One need not have a very fantastic imagination to see spirits there at noon-day:

^x That part of the letter here omitted, contained only a description of the city ; which, as Mr. Gray has given it to Mr. West in the following letter, and that in a more lively manner, I thought it unnecessary to insert. A liberty I have taken in other parts of this correspondence, in order to avoid repetitions.—M.

you have Death perpetually before your eyes, only so far removed, as to compose the mind without frightening it. I am well persuaded St. Bruno was a man of no common genius, to choose such a situation for his retirement; and perhaps should have been a disciple of his, had I been born in his time. You may believe Abelard and Heloïse were not forgot upon this occasion; if I do not mistake, I saw you too, every now and then, at a distance among the trees; il me semble, que j'ai vu ce chien de visage là quelque part. You seemed to call to me from the other side of the precipice, but the noise of the river below was so great, that I really could not distinguish what you said; it seemed to have a cadence like verse^y. In your next you will be so good to let me know what it was. The week we have since passed among the Alps, has not equalled the single day upon that mountain, because the winter was rather too far advanced, and the weather a little foggy. However, it did not want its beauties; the savage rudeness of the view is inconceivable without seeing it: I reckoned, in one day, thirteen cascades, the least of which was, I dare say, one hundred feet in height. I had Livy in the chaise with me, and beheld his "Nives cœlo prope immistæ, tecta informia imposita rupibus, pecora jumentaque torrida frigore, homines intonsi et inculti, anima-

^y There is much interest, as well as much advantage, in tracing to their origin any sublime poetical thoughts, and viewing the manner in which they first arose in the mind of their author. It may fairly be proposed, at least as matter of question, whether there are not traceable, in this whole passage, some elements of the description and opening address of the "Bard." We have here, in the fancy of the romantic traveller, the "grisly band" of spirits on the cliff, and the single figure of his friend speaking, in a cadence like verse, across the torrent that roared below.—ED.

lia inanimaque omnia rigentia gelu ; omnia confragosa, præruptaque." The creatures that inhabit them are, in all respects, below humanity ; and most of them, especially women, have the tumidum gutter, which they call goscia. Mount Cenis, I confess, carries the permission^z mountains have, of being frightful, rather too far ; and its horrors were accompanied with too much danger to give one time to reflect upon their beauties. There is a family of the Alpine monsters I have mentioned, upon its very top, that in the middle of winter calmly lay in their stock of provisions and firing, and so are buried in their hut for a month or two under the snow. When we were down it, and got a little way into Piedmont, we began to find " Apricos quosdam colles, rivosque prope sylvas, et jam humano cultu digniora loca." I read Silius Italicus too, for the first time ; and wished for you, according to custom. We set out for Genoa in two days time.

LETTER XII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Genoa, Nov. 21, 1739.

HORRIDOS tractus, Boreæq; linquens

Regna Taurini fera, molliorem

Advehor brumam, Genuæq; amantes

Litora soles.

At least, if they do not, they have a very ill taste ; for I never beheld any thing more amiable : only figure to ^z A phrase borrowed from Madame De Sevigné, who quotes a bon mot on Pelison, qu'il abusoit de la permission qu'ont les hommes d'être laids.—M.

yourself a vast semi-circular basin full of fine blue sea, and vessels of all sorts and sizes, some sailing out, some coming in, and others at anchor ; and all round it palaces and churches peeping over one another's heads, gardens and marble terraces full of orange and cypress-trees, fountains, and trellis-works covered with vines, which all together compose the grandest of theatres. This is the first coup d'oeil, and is almost all I am yet able to give you an account of, for we arrived late last night. To-day was, luckily, a great festival, and in the morning we resorted to the church of the Madonna delle Vigne, to put up our little orisons ; (I believe I forgot to tell you, that we have been sometime converts to the holy catholic church;) we found our lady richly dressed out, with a crown of diamonds on her own head, another upon the child's, and a constellation of wax lights burning before them : shortly after came the Doge, in his robes of crimson damask, and a cap of the same, followed by the senate in black. Upon his approach began a fine concert of music, and among the rest two eunuchs' voices, that were a perfect feast to ears that had heard nothing but French operas for a year. We listened to this, and breathed nothing but incense for two hours. The Doge is a very tall, lean, stately, old figure, called Costantino Balbi ; and the senate seem to have been made upon the same model. They said their prayers, and heard an absurd white friar preach, with equal devotion. After this we went to the Annonciata, a church built by the family Lomellini, and belonging to it ; which is, indeed, a most stately structure, the inside wholly marble of various kinds, except where gold and painting take its place. From hence to the Palazzo Doria. I should make you sick of marble if I told you how it was lavished here upon the porticoes, the balustrades, and terraces, the lowest of which extends quite to the sea. The inside is by no means answerable to the outward magnificence; the furniture seems to be as old as the founder of the family^a. Their great embossed silver tables tell you, in bas-relief, his victories at sea; how he entertained the Emperor Charles, and how he refused the sovereignty of the commonwealth when it was offered him; the rest is old-fashioned velvet chairs, and gothic tapestry. The rest of the day has been spent, much to our hearts' content, in cursing French music and architecture, and in singing the praises of Italy. We find this place so very fine, that we are in fear of finding nothing finer. We are fallen in love with the Mediterranean sea, and hold your lakes and your rivers in vast contempt. This is as Waller says; and I am sorry to think of leaving it in a week for Parma, although it be

“The happy country where huge lemons grow,”

The happy country where huge cheese grow.

LETTER XIII.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Bologna, Dec. 9, N. S. 1739.

OUR journey hither has taken up much less time than I expected. We left Genoa (a charming place, and one that deserved a longer stay) the week before last ; crossed the mountains, and lay that night at Tortona, the next at St. Giovanni, and the morning after came to Piacenza. That city (though the capital of a dutchy) made so frippery an appearance, that instead of spending some days there, as had been intended, we only dined, and went on to Parma ; staid there all the following day, which was passed in visiting the famous works of Correggio in the Dome, and other churches. The fine gallery of pictures, that once belonged to the Dukes of Parma, is no more here ; the King of Naples has carried it all thither, and the city had not merit enough to detain us any longer, so we proceeded through Reggio to Modena ; this, though the residence of its Duke, is an ill-built melancholy place, all of brick, as are most of the towns in this part of Lombardy : he himself lives in a private manner, with very little appearance of a court about him ; he has one of the noblest collections of paintings in the world, which entertained us extremely well the rest of that day and a part of the next ; and in the afternoon we came to Bologna : so now you may wish us joy of being in the dominions of his Holiness. This is a populous city, and of great extent : all the streets have porticoes on both sides, such as surround a part of Covent-garden, a great relief in summer time in such a climate ; and from one of the principal gates to a church of the Virgin, (where is a wonder-working picture, at three miles distance,) runs a corridore of the same sort, lately finished, and, indeed, a most extraordinary performance. The churches here are more remarkable for their paintings than architecture, being mostly old structures of brick ; but the palaces are numerous, and fine enough to supply us with somewhat worth seeing from morning till night. The country of Lombardy, hitherto, is one of the most beautiful imaginable ; the roads broad, and exactly straight, and on either hand vast plantations of trees, chiefly mulberries and olives, and not a tree without a vine twining about it and spreading among its branches. This scene, indeed, which must be the most lovely in the world during the proper season, is at present all deformed by the winter, which here is rigorous enough for the time it lasts ; but one still sees the skeleton of a charming place, and reaps the benefit of its product, for the fruits and provisions are admirable ; in short, you find every thing, that luxury can desire, in perfection. We have now been here a week, and shall stay some little time longer. We are at the foot of the Appennine mountains ; it will take up three days to cross them, and then we shall come to Florence, where we shall pass the Christmas. Till then we must remain in a state of ignorance as to what is doing in England, for our letters are to meet us there : if I do not find four or five from you alone, I shall wonder.

^a The famous Andrea Doria.

LETTER XIV.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Florence, Dec. 19, N. S. 1739.

WE spent twelve days at Bologna (chiefly as most travellers do) in seeing sights ; for as we knew no mortal there, and as it is no easy matter to get admission into any Italian house, without very particular recommendations, we could see no company but in public places ; and there are none in that city but the churches. We saw, therefore, churches, palaces, and pictures from morning to night ; and the 15th of this month set out for Florence, and began to cross the Appennine mountains ; we travelled among and upon them all that day, and, as it was but indifferent weather, were commonly in the middle of thick clouds, that utterly deprived us of a sight of their beauties : for this vast chain of hills has its beauties, and all the vallies are cultivated ; even the mountains themselves are many of them so within a little of their very tops. They are not so horrid as the Alps, though pretty near as high ; and the whole road is admirably well kept, and paved throughout, which is a length of fourscore miles and more : we left the Pope's dominions, and lay that night in those of the Grand Duke at Fiorenzuola, a paltry little town, at the foot of Mount Giogo, which is the highest of them all. Next morning we went up it ; the post-house is upon its very top, and usually involved in clouds, or half buried in the snow. Indeed there was none of the last at the time we were there, but it was still a dismal habitation. The descent is most excessively steep, and the turnings very short and frequent ; however, we performed it without any danger, and in coming down could dimly discover Florence, and the beautiful plain about it, through the mists ; but enough to convince us, it must be one of the noblest prospects upon earth in summer. That afternoon we got thither ; and Mr. Mann^b, the resident, had sent his servant to meet us at the gates, and conduct us to his house. He is the best and most obliging person in the world. The next night we were introduced at the Prince of Craon's assembly, (he has the chief power here in the Grand Duke's absence.) The Princess, and he, were extremely civil to the name of Walpole, so we were asked to stay supper, which is as much as to say, you may come and sup here whenever you please; for after the first invitation this is always understood. We have also been at the Countess Suarez's, a favourite of the late Duke, and one that gives the first movement to every thing gay that is going forward here. The news is every day expected from Vienna of the Great Duchess's delivery; if it be a boy, here will be all sorts of balls, masquerades, operas, and illuminations; if not, we must wait for the carnival, when all those things come of course. In the mean time it is impossible to want entertainment; the famous gallery, alone, is an amusement for months; we commonly pass two or three hours every morning in it, and one has perfect leisure to consider all its beauties. You know it contains many hundred antique statues, such as the whole world cannot match, besides the vast collection of paintings, medals, and precious stones, such as no other prince was ever master of; in short, all that the rich and powerful house of Medicis has in so many years got together^c. And besides this city abounds with so many palaces and churches, that you can hardly place yourself any where without having some fine one in view, or at least some statue or fountain, magnificently adorned; these, undoubtedly, are far more numerous than Genoa can pretend to; yet, in its general appearance, I cannot think that Florence equals it in beauty. Mr. Walpole is just come from being presented to the Electress Palatine Dowager ; she is a sister of the late Great Duke's ; a stately old lady, that never goes out but to church, and then she has guards, and eight horses to her coach. She received him with much ceremony, standing under a huge black canopy, and, after a few minutes talking, she assured him of her good will, and dismissed him : she never sees any body but thus in form ; and so she passes her life^d, poor woman! * * *

^b Now Sir Horace Mann, and Envoy Extraordinary at the same court.—M.

^c He catalogued and made occasional short remarks on the pictures, &c. which he saw here, as well as at other places, many of which are in my possession, but it would have swelled this work too much if I had inserted them.—M.

LETTER XV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Florence, Jan. 15, 1740.

I THINK I have not yet told you how we left that charming place Genoa : how we crossed a mountain of green marble, called Buchetto : how we came to Tortona, and waded through the mud to come to Castel St. Giovanni, and there eat mustard and sugar with a dish of crows' gizzards : secondly, how we passed the famous plains,

Qua Trebie glaucas salices intersecat unda,
 Arvaque Romanis nobilitata malis.
 Visus adhuc amnis veteri de clade rubere,
 Et suspirantes ducere mæstus aquas ;
 Maurorumque ala, et nigrae increbrescere turmae,
 Et pulsa Ausonidum ripa sonare fuga :

Nor, thirdly, how we passed through Piacenza, Parma, Modena, entered the territories of the Pope ; stayed ^d Persons of very high rank, and withal very good sense, will only feel the pathos of this exclamation.—M.

twelve days at Bologna; crossed the Appennines, and afterwards arrived at Florence. None of these things have I told you, nor do I intend to tell you, till you ask me some questions concerning them. No not even of Florence itself, except that it is as fine as possible, and has every thing in it that can bless the eyes. But, before I enter into particulars, you must make your peace both with me and the Venus de Medicis, who, let me tell you, is highly and justly offended at you for not inquiring, long before this, concerning her symmetry and proportions. * * *

LETTER XVI.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

ELEGIA.^e

ERGO desidiæ videor tibi crimine dignus ;
 Et merito: victas do tibi sponte manus.
 Arguor et veteres nimium contemnere Musas,
 Irata et nobis est Medicæa Venus.
 Mene igitur statuas et inania saxa vereri !
 Stultule! marmorea quid mihi cum Venere ?
 Hic veræ, hic vivæ, Veneres, et mille per urbem,
 Quarum nulla queat non placuisse Jovi.
 Cedite Romanæ formosæ et cedite Graiæ,
 Sintque oblita Helenæ nomen et Hermionæ !
 Et, quascunque refert ætas vetus, Heroinæ :
 Unus honor nostris jam venit Angliasin.
 Oh quales vultus, Oh quantum numen ocellis !
 I nunc et Tuscas improbe confer opes.

^e The letter which accompanied this little elegy is not extant. Probably it was only inclosed in one to Mr. Walpole.—M.

Ne tamen hæc obtusa nimis præcordia credas,
 Neu me adeo nulla Pallade progenitum :
 Testor Pieridumque umbras et flumina Pindi
 Me quoque Calliopes semper amasse choros ;
 Et dudum Ausonias urbes, et visere Graias
 Cura est, ingenio si licet ire meo :
 Sive est Phidiacum marmor, seu Mentoris æra,
 Seu paries Coo nobilis e calamo ;
 Nec minus artificum magna argumenta recentum
 Romanique decus nominis et Veneti :
 Qua Furor et Mavors et sævo in Marmore vultus,
 Quaque et formoso mollior ære Venus.
 Quaque loquax spirat fucus, vivique labores,
 Et quicquid calamo dulcius ausa manus :
 Hic nemora, et sola mærens Melibœus in umbra,
 Lymphaque muscoso prosiliens lapide ;
 Illic majus opus, faciesque in pariete major
 Exurgens, Divum et numina Cœlicolum ;
 O vos fælices, quibus hæc cognoscere fas est,
 Et tota Italia, qua patet usque, frui !
 Nulla dies vobis eat injucunda, nec usquam
 Noritis quid sit tempora amara pati.

LETTER XVII.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Florence, March 19, 1740.

THE Pope^f is at last dead, and we are to set out for Rome on Monday next. The Conclave is still sitting there, and likely to continue so some time longer, as the two French Cardinals are but just arrived, and the German ones are still expected. It agrees mighty ill with those that remain inclosed: Ottoboni is already dead of an apoplexy; Altieri and several others are said to be dying or very bad: yet it is not expected to break up till after Easter. We shall lie at Sienna the first night, spend a day there, and in two more get to Rome. One begins to see in this country the first promises of an Italian spring, clear unclouded skies, and warm suns, such as are not often felt in England; yet, for your sake, I hope at present you have your proportion of them, and that all your frosts, and snows, and short breaths are, by this time, utterly vanished. I have nothing new or particular to inform you of; and if you see things at home go on much in their old course, you must not imagine them more various abroad. The diversions of a Florentine Lent are composed of a sermon in the morning, full of hell and the devil; a dinner at noon, full of fish and meagre diet; and, in the evening, what is called a conversazione, a sort of assembly at the principal people's houses, full of I cannot tell what: besides this, there is twice a week a very good concert. * * *

^f Clement the Twelfth.

LETTER XVIII.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Rome, April 2, N. S. 1740.

THIS is the third day since we came to Rome, but the first hour I have had to write to you in. The journey from Florence cost us four days, one of which was spent at Sienna, an agreeable, clean, old city, of no great magnificence, or extent ; but in a fine situation, and good air. What it has most considerable is its cathedral, a huge pile of marble, black and white laid alternately, and laboured with a gothic niceness and delicacy in the old-fashioned way. Within too are some paintings and sculpture of considerable hands. The sight of this, and some collections that were shewed us in private houses, were a sufficient employment for the little time we were to pass there ; and the next morning we set forward on our journey through a country very oddly composed ; for some miles you have a continual scene of little mountains cultivated from top to bottom with rows of olive-trees, or else elms, each of which has its vine twining about it, and mixing with the branches ; and corn sown between all the ranks. This, diversified with numerous small houses and convents, makes the most agreeable prospect in the world : but, all of a sudden, it alters to black barren hills, as far as the eye can reach, that seem never to have been capable of culture, and are as ugly as useless. Such is the country for some time before one comes to Mount Radicofani, a terrible black hill, on the top of which we were to lodge that night. It is very high, and difficult of ascent, and at the foot of it we were much embarrassed by the fall of one of the poor horses that drew us. This accident obliged another chaise, which was coming down, to stop also ; and out of it peeped a figure in a red cloak, with a handkerchief tied round its head, which, by its voice and mien, seemed a fat old woman ; but, upon its getting out, appeared to be a Senesino, who was returning from Naples to Sienna, the place of his birth and residence. On the highest part of the mountain is an old fortress, and near it a house built by one of the Grand Dukes for a hunting seat, but now converted into an inn: it is the shell of a large fabric, but such an inside, such chambers, and accommodations, that your cellar is a palace in comparison; and your cat sups and lies much better than we did; for, it being a saint's eve, there were nothing but eggs. We devoured our meagre fare; and, after stopping up the windows with the quilts, were obliged to lie upon the straw beds in our clothes. Such are the conveniences in a road, that is, as it were, the great thoroughfare of all the world. Just on the other side of this mountain, at Ponte-Centino, one enters the patrimony of the church; a most delicious country, but thinly inhabited. That night brought us to Viterbo, a city of a more lively appearance than any we had lately met with; the houses have glass windows, which is not very usual here; and most of the streets are terminated by a handsome fountain. Here we had the pleasure of breaking our fast on the leg of an old hare, and some broiled crows. Next morning, in descending Mount Viterbo, we first discovered (though at near thirty miles distance) the cupola of St. Peter's, and a little after began to enter on an old Roman pavement, with now and then a ruined tower, or a sepulchre on each hand. We now had a clear view of the city, though not to the best advantage, as coming along a plain quite upon a level with it; however, it appeared very vast, and surrounded with magnificent villas and gardens. We soon after crossed the Tiber, a river that ancient Rome made more considerable than any merit of its own could have done: however, it is not contemptibly small, but a good handsome stream; very deep, yet somewhat of a muddy complexion. The first entrance of Rome is prodigiously striking. It is by a noble gate, designed by Michael Angelo, and adorned with statues: this brings you into a large square, in the midst of which is a vast obelisk of granite, and in front you have at one view two churches of a handsome architecture, and so much alike that they are called the twins; with three streets, the middlemost of which is one of the longest in Rome. As high as my expectation was raised, I confess, the magnificence of this city infinitely surpasses it. You cannot pass along a street but you have views of some palace, or church, or square, or fountain, the most picturesque and noble one can imagine. We have not yet set about considering its beauties, ancient and modern, with attention; but have already taken a slight transient view of some of the most remarkable. St. Peter's I saw the day after we arrived, and was struck dumb with wonder. I there saw the Cardinal d'Auvergne, one of the French ones, who, upon coming off his journey, immediately repaired hither to offer up his vows at the high altar, and went directly into the Conclave; the doors of which we saw opened to him, and all the other immured Cardinals came thither to receive him. Upon his entrance they were closed again directly. It is supposed they will not come to an agreement about a Pope till after Easter, though the confinement is very disagreeable. I have hardly philosophy enough to see the infinity of fine things, that are here daily in the power of any body that has money, without regretting the want of it; but custom has the power of making things easy to one. I have not yet seen his majesty of Great Britain, &c. though I have the two boys in the gardens of the Villa Borgese, where they go a-shooting almost every day; it was at a distance, indeed, for we did not choose to meet them, as you may imagine. This letter (like all those the English send, or receive) will pass through the hands of that family, before it comes to those it was intended for. They do it more honour than it deserves; and all they will learn from thence will be, that I desire you to give my duty to my father, and wherever else it is due, and that I am, &c.

LETTER XIX.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Rome, April 15, 1740. Good-Friday.

TO-DAY I am just come from my paying adoration at St. Peter's to three extraordinary reliques, which are exposed to public view only on these two days in the whole year, at which time all the confraternities in the city come in procession to see them. It was something extremely novel to see that vast church, and the most magnificent in the world, undoubtedly, illuminated (for it was night) by thousands of little crystal lamps, disposed in the figure of a huge cross at the high altar, and seeming to hang alone in the air. All the light proceeded from this, and had the most singular effect imaginable as one entered the great door. Soon after came one after another, I believe, thirty processions, all dressed in linen frocks, and girt with a cord, their heads covered with a cowl all over, only two holes to see through left. Some of them were all black, others red, others white, others party-coloured; these were continually coming and going with their tapers and crucifixes before them; and to each company, as they arrived and knelt before the great altar, were shewn from a balcony, at a great height, the three wonders, which are, you must know, the head of the spear that wounded Christ ; St. Veronica's handkerchief, with the miraculous impression of his face upon it ; and a piece of the true cross, on the sight of which the people thump their breasts, and kiss the pavement with vast devotion. The tragical part of the ceremony is half a dozen wretched creatures, who with their faces covered, but naked to the waist, are in a side chapel disciplining themselves with scourges full of iron prickles ; but really in earnest, as our eyes can testify, which saw their backs and arms so raw we should have taken it for a red satin doublet torn, and shewing the skin through, had we not been convinced of the contrary by the blood which was plentifully sprinkled about them. It is late ; I give you joy of Porto Bello, and many other things, which I hope are all true^g. * * * *

LETTER XX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Tivoli, May 20, 1740.

THIS day being in the palace of his Highness the Duke of Modena, he laid his most serene commands upon me to write to Mr. West, and said he thought it for his glory, that I should draw up an inventory of all his most serene possessions for the said West's perusal.—Imprimis, a house, being in circumference a quarter of a mile, two feet and an inch ; the said house containing ^g The same objects are described almost in the same words as above, in a postscript which was added by Gray to a letter from Walpole to West, and which it is not thought necessary here to insert.—ED.

the following particulars, to wit, a great room. Item, another great room ; item, a bigger room ; item, another room ; item, a vast room ; item, a sixth of the same ; a seventh ditto ; an eighth as before ; a ninth as abovesaid ; a tenth (see No. 1.) ; item, ten more such, besides twenty besides, which, not to be too particular, we shall pass over. The said rooms contain nine chairs, two tables, five stools, and a cricket. From whence we shall proceed to the garden, containing two millions of superfine laurel hedges, a clump of cypress trees, and half the river Teverone, that pisses into two thousand several chamber-pots. Finis.—Dame Nature desired me to put in a list of her little goods and chattels, and, as they were small, to be very minute about them. She has built here three or four little mountains, and laid them out in an irregular semi-circle ; from certain others behind, at a greater distance, she has drawn a canal, into which she has put a little river of her's, called Anio ; she has cut a huge clift between the two innermost of her four hills, and there she has left it to its own disposal ; which she has no sooner done, but, like a heedless chit, it tumbles headlong down a declivity fifty feet perpendicular, breaks itself all to shatters, and is converted into a shower of rain, where the sun forms many a bow, red, green, blue, and yellow. To get out of our metaphors without any further trouble, it is the most noble sight in the world. The weight of that quantity of waters, and the force they fall with, have worn the rocks they throw themselves among into a thousand irregular crags, and to a vast depth. In this channel it goes boiling along with a mighty noise till it comes to another steep, where you see it a second time come roaring down (but first you must walk two miles farther) a greater height than before, but not with that quantity of waters ; for, by this time it has divided itself, being crossed and opposed by the rocks, into four several streams, each of which, in emulation of the great one, will tumble down too; and it does tumble down, but not from an equally elevated place; so that you have at one view all these cascades intermixed with groves of olive and little woods, the mountains rising behind them, and on the top of one (that which forms the extremity of one of the half-circle's horns) is seated the town itself. At the very extremity of that extremity, on the brink of the precipice, stands the Sybils' temple, the remains of a little rotunda, surrounded with its portico, above half of whose beautiful Corinthian pillars are still standing and entire; all this on one hand. On the other, the open Campagna of Rome, here and there a little castle on a hillock, and the city itself on the very brink of the horizon, indistinctly seen (being eighteen miles off) except the dome of St. Peter's, which, if you look out of your window, wherever you are, I suppose, you can see. I did not tell you that a little below the first fall, on the side of the rock, and hanging over that torrent, are little ruins which they shew you for Horace's house, a curious situation to observe the “ Præceps Anio, et Tiburni lucus, et uda

“ Mobilibus pomaria rivis.”

Mæcenas did not care for such a noise, it seems, and built him a house (which they also carry one to see) so situated that it sees nothing at all of the matter, and for any thing he knew there might be no such river in the world. Horace had another house on the other side of the Teverone, opposite to Mæcenas's; and they told us there was a bridge of communication, by which “ andava il detto Signor per trastullarsi coll istesso Orazio.” In coming hither we crossed the Aquæ Albulæ, a vile little brook that stinks like a fury, and they say it has stunk so these thousand years. I forgot the Piscina of Quintilius Varus, where he used to keep certain little fishes. This is very entire, and there is a piece of the aqueduct that supplied it too; in the garden below is old Rome, built in little, just as it was, they say. There are seven temples in it, and no houses at all: they say there were none.

May 21.

We have had the pleasure of going twelve miles out of our way to Palestrina. It has rained all day as if heaven and us were coming together. See my honesty, I do not mention a syllable of the temple of Fortune, because I really did not see it; which, I think, is pretty well for an old traveller. So we returned along the Via Prænestina, saw the Lacus Gabinus and Regillus, where, you know, Castor and Pollux appeared upon a certain occasion. And many a good old tomb we left on each hand, and many an aqueduct,

Dumb are whose fountains, and their channels dry.

There are, indeed, two whole modern ones, works of Popes, that run about thirty miles a-piece in length; one of them conveys still the famous Aqua Virgo to Rome, and adds vast beauty to the prospect. So we came to Rome again, where waited for us a splendidissimo regalo of letters; in one of which came you, with your huge characters and wide intervals, staring. I would have you to know, I expect you should take a handsome crow-quill when you write to me, and not leave room for a pin's point in four sides of a sheet royal. Do you but find matter, I will find spectacles.

I have more time than I thought, and I will employ it in telling you about a ball that we were at the other evening. Figure to yourself a Roman villa; all its little apartments thrown open, and lighted up to the best advantage. At the upper end of the gallery, a fine concert, in which La Diamantina, a famous virtuosa, played on the violin divinely, and sung angelically; Giovannino and Pasqualini (great names in musical story) also performed miraculously. On each side were ranged all the secular grand monde of Rome, the Ambassadors, Princesses, and all that. Among the rest, Il Serenissimo Pretendente (as the Mantova gazette calls him) displayed his rueful length of person, with his two young ones, and all his ministry around him. "Poi nacque un grazioso ballo," where the world danced, and I sat in a corner regaling myself with iced fruits, and other pleasant rinfrescatives.

LETTER XXI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Rome, May, 1740.

* * * * *

I AM to-day just returned from Alba, a good deal fatigued; for you know the Appian is somewhat tiresome¹. We dined at Pompey's; he indeed was gone

^h This letter begun with a beautiful Alcaic Ode, which is inserted among the rest of the Poems.—ED.

¹ However whimsical this humour may appear to some readers, I chose to insert it, as it gives me an opportunity of remarking, that Mr. Gray was extremely skilled in the customs of the ancient Rofor a few days to his Tusculan, but by the care of his Villicus, we made an admirable meal. We had the dugs of a pregnant sow, a peacock, a dish of thrushes, a noble scarus just fresh from the Tyrrhene, and some conchyliæ of the Lake with garum sauce: for my part I never eat better at Lucullus's table. We drank half a dozen cyathi a-piece of ancient Alban to Pholoë's health; and, after bathing, and playing an hour at ball, we mounted our essedum again, and proceeded up the mount to the temple. The priests there entertained us with an account of a wonderful shower of birds' eggs, that had fallen two days before, which had no sooner touched the ground, but they were converted into gudgeons; as also that the night past, a dreadful voice had been heard out of the Adytum, which spoke Greek during a full half hour, but nobody understood it. But quitting my Romanities, to your great joy and mine, let me tell you in plain English, that we come from Albano. The present town lies within the inclosure of Pompey's villa in ruins. The Appian way runs through it, by the side of which, a little farther, is a large old tomb, with five pyramids upon it, which the learned suppose to be the burying-place of the family, because they do not know whose it can be else. But the vulgar assure you it is the sepulchre of the Curiatii, and by that name (such is their power) it goes. One drives to Castel Gondolfo, a house of the Pope's, situated on the top of one of the Collinette, that forms a brim to mans; and has catalogued, in his common place book, their various eatables, wines, perfumes, clothes, medicines, &c. with great precision, referring under every article to passages in the Poets and Historians where their names are mentioned.—M.

the basin, commonly called the Alban lake. It is seven miles round ; and directly opposite to you, on the other side, rises the Mons Albanus, much taller than the rest, along whose side are still discoverable (not to common eyes) certain little ruins of the old Alba longa. They had need be very little, as having been nothing but ruins ever since the days of Tullus Hostilius. On its top is a house of the Constable Colonna's, where stood the temple of Jupiter Latialis. At the foot of the hill Gondolfo, are the famous outlets of the lake, built with hewn stone, a mile and a half under ground. Livy, you know, amply informs us of the foolish occasion of this expence, and gives me this opportunity of displaying all my erudition, that I may appear considerable in your eyes. This is the prospect from one window of the palace. From another you have the whole Campagna, the city, Antium, and the Tyrrhene sea (twelve miles distant) so distinguishable, that you may see the vessels sailing upon it. All this is charming. Mr. Walpole says our memory sees more than our eyes in this country. Which is extremely true ; since for realities, Windsor, or Richmond Hill, is infinitely preferable to Albano or Frascati. I am now at home, and going to the window to tell you it is the most beautiful of Italian nights, which, in truth, are but just begun, (so backward has the spring been here, and every where else, they say.) There is a moon ! there are stars for you ! Do you not hear the fountain ? Do not you smell the orange flowers ? That building yonder is the convent of S. Isidore ; and that eminence, with the cypress trees and pines upon it, the top of M. Quirinal. This is all true, and yet my prospect is not two hundred yards in length. We send you some Roman inscriptions to entertain you.

The first two are modern, transcribed from the Vatican library by Mr. Walpole.

Pontifices olim quem fundavere priores
 Præcipuâ Sixtus perficit arte tholum^k;
 Et Sixti tantum se gloria tollit in altum,
 Quantum se Sixti nobile tollit opus:
 Magnus honos magni fundamina ponere templi,
 Sed finem cæptis ponere major honos
 Saxa agit Amphion, Thebana ut mænia condat:
 Sixtus et immensæ pondera molis agit^l.
 Saxa trahunt ambo longe diversa: sed arte
 Hæc trahit Amphion; Sixtus et arte trahit.
 At tantum exsuperat Dirçæum Amphiona Sixtus,
 Quantum hic exsuperat cætera saxa lapis.

Mine is ancient, and I think not less curious. It is exactly transcribed from a sepulchral marble, at the villa Giustiniani. I put stops to it, when I understand it.

DIs Manibus
 Claudia, Pistes
 Primus Conjugi
 Optumæ, Sanctæ,
 Et Piæ, Benemeritate.

Non æquos, Parcæ, statuistis stamina vitæ.
 Tam bene compositos potuistis sede tenere.
 Amissa est conjux. cur ego et ipse moror?
 Si · bella · esse · mi · iste · mea · vivere · debuit ·
 Tristia contigerunt qui amissâ conjuge vivo.
 Nil est tam miserum, quam totam perdere vitam.
 Nec vita enasci dura peregistis crudelia pensa, sorores,
 Ruptaque deficiunt in primo munere fusi.
 O nimis injustæ ter denos dare munus in annos,
 Deceptus · grautus · fatum · sic · pressit · egestas ·
 Dum vitam tulero, Primus Pistes lugea conjugium.

^k Sixtus V. built the dome of St. Peter's.

^l He raised the obelisk in the great area,

LETTER XXII.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Naples, June 17, 1740.

OUR journey hither was through the most beautiful part of the finest country in the world ; and every spot of it, on some account or other, famous for these three thousand years past^m. The season has hitherto been just as warm as one would wish it ; no unwholesome airs, or violent heats, yet heard of : the people call it a backward year, and are in pain about their corn, wine, and oil ; but we, who are neither corn, wine, nor oil, find it very agreeable. Our road was through Velletri, Cisterna, Terracina, Capua, and Aversa, and so to Naples. The minute one leaves his Holiness's dominions, the face of things begins to change from wide uncultivated plains to olive groves and well-tilled fields of corn, intermixed with ranks of elms, every one of which has its vine twining about it, and hanging in festoons between the rows from one tree to another. The great old fig-trees, the oranges in full bloom, and myrtles in every hedge, make one of the delightfulest scenes you can conceive ; besides that, the roads are wide, well-kept, and full of passengers, a sight I have not beheld this long time. My wonder still increased upon entering the city, which I think, for number of people, outdoes both Paris and London. The streets are one continued market, and thronged with populace so much that a coach can hardly pass. The common sort are a jolly lively kind of animals, more industrious than Italians usually are: they work till evening; then they take their lute or guitar, (for they all play,) and walk about the city, or upon the sea-shore with it, to enjoy the fresco. One sees their little brown children jumping about stark naked, and the bigger ones dancing with castanets, while others play on the cymbal to them. Your maps will shew you the situation of Naples; it is on the most lovely bay in the world, and one of the calmest seas: it has many other beauties besides those of nature. We have spent two days in visiting the remarkable places in the country round it, such as the bay of Baiæ, and its remains of antiquity; the lake Avernus, and the Solfatara, Charon's grotto, &c. We have been in the Sybils' cave, and many other strange holes underground; (I only name them, because you may consult Sandy's Travels;) but the strangest hole I ever was in, has been to-day at a place called Portici, where his Sicilian Majesty has a country seat. About a year ago, as they were digging, they discovered some part of ancient buildings above thirty feet deep in the ground: curiosity led them on, and they have been digging ever since; the passage they have made, with all its turnings and windings, is now more than a mile long. As you walk, you see parts of an amphitheatre, many houses adorned with marble columns, and incrustated with the same; the front of a temple, several arched vaults of rooms painted in fresco. Some pieces of painting have been taken out from hence, finer than any thing of the kind before discovered, and with these the King has adorned his palace: also a number of statues, medals, and gems; and more are dug out every day. This is known to be a Roman townⁿ, that in the Emperor Titus's time was overturned by a furious eruption of Mount Vesuvius, which is hard by. The wood and beams remain so perfect that you may see the grain; but burnt to a coal, and dropping into dust upon the least touch. We were to-day at the foot of that mountain, which at present smokes only a little, where we saw the materials that fed the stream of fire, which about four years since ran down its side. We have but a few days longer to stay here; too little in conscience for such a place. * * *

^m Mr. Gray wrote a minute description of every thing he saw in this tour from Rome to Naples ; as also of the environs of Rome, Florence, &c. But as these papers are apparently only memorandums for his own use, I do not think it necessary to print them, although they abound with many uncommon remarks and pertinent classical quotations. The reader will please to observe throughout this Section, that it is not my intention to give Mr. Gray's travels, but only extracts from the letters which he writ during his travels.—M.

LETTER XXIII.

MR. GRAY TO HIS FATHER.

Florence, July 16, 1740.

AT my return to this city, the day before yesterday, I had the pleasure of finding yours dated June the 9th. The period of our voyages, at least towards the south, is come, as you wish. We have been at Naples, spent nine or ten days there, and returned to Rome, where finding no likelihood of a Pope yet these three months, and quite wearied with the formal assemblies, and little society of that great city, Mr. Walpole determined to return hither to spend the summer, where he imagines he shall pass his time more agreeably than in the tedious expectation of what, when it happens, will ⁿ Herculaneum.

only be a great show. For my own part, I give up the thoughts of all that with but little regret ; but the city itself I do not part with so easily, which alone has amusements for whole years. However, I have passed through all that most people do, both ancient and modern ; what that is you may see, better than I can tell you in a thousand books. The Conclave we left in greater uncertainty than ever ; the more than ordinary liberty they enjoy there, and the unusual coolness of the season, makes the confinement less disagreeable to them than common, and, consequently, maintains them in their irresolution. There have been very high words, one or two (it is said) have come even to blows ; two more are dead within this last month, Cenci and Portia : the latter died distracted ; and we left another (Altieri) at the extremity : yet nobody dreams of an election till the latter end of September. All this gives great scandal to all good catholics, and every body talks very freely on the subject. The Pretender (whom you desire an account of) I have had frequent opportunities of seeing at church, at the corso, and other places ; but more particularly, and that for a whole night, at a great ball given by Court Patrizii to the Prince and Princess Craon, (who were come to Rome at that time, that he might receive from the hands of the Emperor's minister there the order of the golden fleece,) at which he and his two sons were present. They are good fine boys, especially the younger, who has the more spirit of the two, and both danced incessantly all night long. For him, he is a thin ill-made man, extremely tall and awkward, of a most unpromising countenance, a good deal resembling King James the Second, and has extremely the air and look of an idiot, particularly when he laughs or prays : the first he does not often, the latter continually. He lives private enough with his little court about him, consisting of Lord Dunbar, who manages every thing, and two or three of the Preston Scotch Lords, who would be very glad to make their peace at home.

We happened to be at Naples on Corpus Christi day, the greatest feast in the year, so had an opportunity of seeing their Sicilian Majesties to advantage. The King walked in grand procession, and the Queen (being big with child) sat in the balcony. He followed the host to the church of St. Clara, where high mass was celebrated to a glorious concert of music. They are as ugly a little pair as one can see: she a pale girl, marked with the small-pox; and he a brown boy with a thin face, a huge nose, and as ungain as possible.

We are settled here with Mr. Mann in a charming apartment; the river Arno runs under our windows, which we can fish out of. The sky is so serene, and the air is so temperate, that one continues in the open air all night long in a slight night-gown without any danger; and the marble bridge is the resort of every body, where they hear music, eat iced fruits, and sup by moon-light; though as yet (the season being extremely backward every where) these amusements are not begun. You see we are now coming northward again, though in no great haste; the Venetian and Milanese territories, and either Germany, or the South of France, (according to the turn the war may take,) are all that remain for us, that we have not yet seen: as to Loretto, and that part of Italy, we have given over all thoughts of it.

LETTER XXIV.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

Bond-Street, June 5, 1740.

I LIVED at the Temple till I was sick of it: I have just left it, and find myself as much a lawyer as I was when I was in it. It is certain, at least, I may study the law here, as well as I could there. My being in chambers did not signify to me a pinch of snuff. They tell me my father was a lawyer, and, as you know, eminent in the profession; and such a circumstance must be of advantage to me. My uncle too makes some figure in Westminster Hall, and there's another advantage; then my grandfather's name would get me many friends. Is it not strange that a young fellow, that might enter the world with so many advantages, will not know his own interest? &c. &c. What shall I say in answer to all this? For money, I neither doat upon it nor despise it: it is a necessary stuff enough. For ambition, I do not want that neither; but it is not to sit upon a bench. In short, is it not a disagreeable thing to force one's inclination, especially when one's young? not to mention that one ought to have the strength of a Hercules to go through our common law; which, I am afraid, I have not. Well! but then, say they, if one profession does not suit you, you may choose another more to your inclination. Now I protest I do not yet know my own inclination, and I believe, if that was to be my direction, I should never fix at all: there is no going by a whethercock. I could say much more on this subject, but there is no talking tête-à-tête cross the Alps. Oh the folly of young men, that never know their own interest! they never grow wise till they are ruined! and then nobody pities them, nor helps them. Dear Gray! consider me in the condition of one that has lived these two years without any person that he can speak freely to. I know it is very seldom that people trouble themselves with the sentiments of those they converse with; so they can chat about trifles, they never care whether your heart aches or no. Are you one of these? I think not. But what right have I to ask you this question? Have we known one another enough, that I should expect or demand sincerity from you? Yes, Gray, I hope we have; and I have not quite such a mean opinion of myself, as to think I do not deserve it. But, Signor, is it not time for me to ask something about your further intentions abroad? Where do you propose going next? an in Apuliam? nam illo si adveneris, tanquam Ulysses, cognosces tuorum neminem. Vale. So Cicero prophesies in the end of one of his letters^o—and there I end.

Yours, &c.

LETTER XXV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Florence, July 16, 1740.

You do yourself and me justice, in imagining that you merit, and that I am capable of sincerity. I have

^o This letter (written apparently in much agitation of mind, which Mr. West endeavours to conceal by an unusual carelessness of manner) is chiefly inserted to introduce the answer to it; which appears to me to be replete with delicate feeling, manly sense, and epistolary ease. If the reader should think as highly of it as I do, let me remind him that the writer is not yet quite four and twenty years old.—M.

not a thought, or even a weakness, I desire to conceal from you : and consequently, on my side, deserve to be treated with the same openness of heart. My vanity perhaps might make me more reserved towards you, if you were one of the heroic race, superior, to all human failings : but as mutual wants are the ties of general society, so are mutual weaknesses of private friendship, supposing them mixed with some proportion of good qualities ; for where one may not sometimes blame, one does not much care ever to praise. All this has the air of an introduction designed to soften a very harsh reproof that is to follow ; but it is no such matter : I only meant to ask, Why did you change your lodging ? Was the air bad, or the situation melancholy ? If so, you are quite in the right. Only, is it not putting yourself a little out of the way of a people, with whom it seems necessary to keep up some sort of intercourse and conversation, though but little for your pleasure or entertainment, (yet there are, I believe, such among them as might give you both,) at least for your information in that study, which, when I left you, you thought of applying to ? for that there is a certain study necessary to be followed, if we mean to be of any use in the world, I take for granted ; disagreeable enough, (as most necessities are,) but, I am afraid, unavoidable. Into how many branches these studies are divided in England, every body knows ; and between that which you and I had pitched upon, and the other two, it was impossible to balance long. Examples shew one that it is not absolutely necessary to be a blockhead to succeed in this profession. The labour is long, and the elements dry and unentertaining ; nor was ever any body (especially those that afterwards made a figure in it) amused, or even not disgusted in the beginning ; yet, upon a further acquaintance, there is surely matter for curiosity and reflection. It is strange if, among all that huge mass of words, there be not somewhat intermixed for thought. Laws have been the result of long deliberation, and that not of dull men, but the contrary ; and have so close a connection with history, nay, with philosophy itself, that they must partake a little of what they are related to so nearly. Besides, tell me, have you even made the attempt? Was not you frightened merely with the distant prospect? Had the Gothic character and bulkiness of those volumes (a tenth part of which perhaps it will be no further necessary to consult, than as one does a dictionary) no ill effect upon your eye? Are you sure, if Coke had been printed by Elzevir, and bound in twenty neat pocket volumes, instead of one folio, you should never have taken him up for an hour, as you would a Tully, or drank your tea over him? I know how great an obstacle ill spirits are to resolution. Do you really think, if you rid ten miles every morning, in a week's time you should not entertain much stronger hopes of the chancellorship, and think it a much more probable thing than you do at present? The advantages you mention are not nothing ; our inclinations are more than we imagine in our own power ; reason and resolution determine them, and support under many difficulties. To me there hardly appears to be any medium between a public life and a private one ; he who prefers the first, must put himself in a way of being serviceable to the rest of mankind, if he has a mind to be of any consequence among them : nay, he must not refuse being in a certain degree even dependent upon some men who are so already. If he has the good fortune to light on such as will make no ill use of his humility, there is no shame in this : if not, his ambition ought to give place to a reasonable pride, and he should apply to the cultivation of his own mind those abilities which he has not been permitted to use for other's service. Such a private happiness (supposing a small competence of fortune) is almost always in every one's power, and the proper enjoyment of age, as the other is the employment of youth. You are yet young, have some advantages and opportunities, and an undoubted capacity, which you have never yet put to the trial. Set apart a few hours, see how the first year will agree with you, and at the end of it you are still the master: if you change your mind, you have only got the knowledge of a little somewhat that can do no hurt, or give you cause of repentance. If your inclination be not fixed upon any thing else, it is a symptom that you are not absolutely determined against this, and warns you not to mistake mere indolence for inability. I am sensible there is nothing stronger against what I would persuade you to, than my own practice; which may make you imagine I think not as I speak. Alas! it is not so; but I do not act what I think, and I had rather be the object of your pity, than that you should be that of mine; and, be assured, the advantage that I may receive from it, does not diminish my concern in hearing you want somebody to converse with freely, whose advice might be of more weight, and always at hand. We have some time since come to the southern period of our voyages; we spent about nine days at Naples. It is the largest and most populous city, as its environs are the most deliciously fertile country, in all Italy. We sailed in the bay of Baia, sweated in the Solfatara, and died in the grotto del Cane, as all strangers do; saw the Corpus Christi procession, and the King and Queen, and the city underground, (which is a wonder I reserve to tell you of another time,) and so returned to Rome for another fortnight; left it (left Rome!) and came hither for the summer. You have seen an Epistle^p to Mr. Ashton, that seems to me full of spirit and thought, and a good deal of poetic fire. I would know your opinion. Now I talk of verses, Mr. Walpole and I have frequently wondered you should never mention a certain imitation of Spencer, published last year by a namesake^q of yours, with which we are all enraptured and enmarvailed.

Florence, July 31, 1740.

^rI am employed pour barbouiller une page de sept pouces et demie en hauteur, et cinq en largeur; and to inform you that we are at Florence, a city of Italy, and capital of Tuscany; the latitude I cannot justly tell, but it is governed by a Prince, called Great Duke; an excellent place to employ all one's animal sensations in, but utterly contrary to one's rational powers. I have struck a medal upon myself; the device is this, O, and the motto nihilissimo, which I take in the most concise manner to contain a full account of my person, sentiments, occupations, and late glorious successes. If you choose to be annihilated too, you cannot do better than undertake this journey. Here you shall get up at twelve o'clock, breakfast till three, dine till five, sleep till ^pThe reader will find this in Dodsley's Miscellany, and also amongst Mr. Walpole's Fugitive Pieces.—M.

^qGilbert West, Esq. This poem, "On the Abuse of Travelling," is also in Dodsley's Miscellany.—M.

^rWhat follows was added as a postscript to a letter from Walpole to West. See Walpole's works, vol. iv.—ED.

six, drink cooling liquors till eight, go to the bridge till ten, sup till two, and so sleep till twelve again.

Labore fessi venimus larem ad nostrum,
Desideratoque acquiescimus lecto !
Hoc est, quod unum est, pro laboribus tantis.
O quid solutis est beatius curis ?

We shall never come home again ; a universal war is just upon the point of breaking out ; all outlets will be shut up. I shall be secure in my nothingness, while you that will be so absurd as to exist, will envy me. You don't tell me what proficiency you make in the noble science of defence. Don't you start still at the sound of a gun ? Have you learned to say, Ha, ha ! and is your neck clothed with thunder ? are your whiskers of a tolerable length ? and have you got drunk yet with brandy and gunpowder ? Adieu, noble Captain.

LETTER XXVI.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Florence, Aug. 21, N. S. 1740.

IT is some time since I have had the pleasure of writing to you, having been upon a little excursion cross the mountains to Bologna. We set out from hence at sun-set, passed the Apennines by moon-light, travelling incessantly till we came to Bologna at four in the afternoon next day. There we spent a week agreeably enough, and returned as we came. The day before yesterday arrived the news of a Pope ; and I have the mortification of being within four days journey of Rome, and not seeing his coronation, the heats being violent, and the infectious air now at its height. We had an instance, the other day, that it is not only fancy. Two country fellows, strong men, and used to the country about Rome, having occasion to come from thence hither, and travelling on foot, as common with them, one died suddenly on the road; the other got hither, but extremely weak, and in a manner stupid: he was carried to the hospital, but died in two days. So, between fear and laziness, we remain here, and must be satisfied with the accounts other people give us of the matter. The new Pope is called Benedict XIV. being created Cardinal by Benedict XIII. the last Pope but one. His name is Lambertini, a noble Bolognese, and Archbishop of that city. When I was first there, I remember to have seen him two or three times; he is a short fat man, about sixty-five years of age, of a hearty, merry countenance, and likely to live some years. He bears a good character for generosity, affability, and other virtues; and, they say, wants neither knowledge nor capacity. The worst side of him is, that he has a nephew or two; besides a certain young favourite, called Melara, who is said to have had, for some time, the arbitrary disposal of his purse and family. He is reported to have made a little speech to the Cardinals in the Conclave, while they were undetermined about an election, as follows: "Most eminent Lords, here are three Bolognese of different characters, but all equally proper for the Popedom. If it be your pleasures to pitch upon a saint, there is Cardinal Gotti; if upon a politician, there is Aldrovandi; if upon a booby, here am I." The Italian is much more expressive, and, indeed, not to be translated; wherefore, if you meet with any body that understands it, you may shew them what he said in the language he spoke it. "Emin^{ssimi}. Sigrⁱ.

^s See Catulli Carm. xxxi. v. 7.

Ci siamo tré, diversi sì, mà tutti idonei al Papato. Si vi piace un santo, c'è l'Gotti; se volete una testa scaltra, e politica, c'è l'Aldrovandé; se un coglione, ecco mi!" Cardinal Coscia is restored to his liberty, and, it is said, will be to all his benefices. Corsini, (the late Pope's nephew,) as he has no hand in this election, it is hoped will be called to account for all his villanous practices. The Pretender, they say, has resigned all his pretensions to his eldest boy, and will accept of the Grand Chancellorship, which is thirty thousand crowns a year; the pension he has at present is only twenty thousand. I do not affirm the truth of this article; because, if he does, it is necessary he should take the ecclesiastical habit, and it will sound mighty odd to be called his Majesty the Chancellor.—So ends my Gazette.

LETTER XXVII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Florence, Sept. 25, N. S. 1740.

WHAT I send you now, as long as it is, is but a piece of a poem. It has the advantage of all fragments, to need neither introduction nor conclusion: besides, if you do not like it, it is but imagining that which went before, and came after, to be infinitely better. Look in Sandy's Travels for the history of Monte Barbaro, and Monte Nuovo^t.

^t To save the reader trouble, I here insert the passage referred to: "West of Cicero's villa stands the eminent Gaurus, a stony and desolate mountain, in which there are diverse obscure caverns, choaked almost with earth, where many have consumed much fruitless industry in searching for treasure. The famous Lucrine lake extended

* * * * *

There was a certain little Ode^u set out from Rome, in a letter of recommendation to you, but possibly fell into the enemies' hands, for I never heard of its arrival. It is a little impertinent to inquire after its welformerly from Avernus to the aforesaid Gaurus: but is now no other than a little sedgy plash, choaked up by the horrible and astonishing eruption of the new mountain; whereof, as oft as I think, I am easy to credit whatsoever is wonderful. For who here knows not, or who elsewhere will believe, that a mountain should arise (partly out of a lake and partly out of the sea) in one day and a night, unto such a height as to contend in altitude with the high mountains adjoining? In the year of our Lord 1538, on the 29th of September, when for certain days foregoing the country hereabout was so vexed with perpetual earthquakes, as no one house was left so entire as not to expect an immediate ruin; after that the sea had retired two hundred paces from the shore, (leaving abundance of fish, and springs of fresh water rising in the bottom,) this mountain visibly ascended, about the second hour of the night, with an hideous roaring, horribly vomiting stones and such store of cinders as overwhelmed all the building thereabout, and the salubrious baths of Tripergula, for so many ages celebrated; consumed the vines to ashes, killing birds and beasts: the fearful inhabitants of Puzzol flying through the dark with their wives and children; naked, defiled, crying out, and detesting their calamities. Manifold mischiefs have they suffered by the barbarous, yet none like this which Nature inflicted.—This new mountain, when newly raised, had a number of issues; at some of them smoking and sometimes flaming; at others disgorging rivulets of hot waters; keeping within a terrible rumbling; and many miserably perished that ventured to descend into the hollowness above. But that hollow on the top is at present an orchard, and the mountain throughout is bereft of his terrors.”—Sandy's Travels, book iv. page 275. 277 and 278.—M.

The circumstances here described form the subject of a beautiful Latin Fragment, for which see Vol I.—ED.

^u The Alcaic Ode contained in Letter XXI. which appears in its proper place.—ED.

fare ; but you, that are a father, will excuse a parent's foolish fondness. Last post I received a very diminutive letter ; it made excuses for its unentertainingness, very little to the purpose ; since it assured me, very strongly, of your esteem, which is to me the thing ; all the rest appear but as the petits agrémens, the garnishing of the dish. P. Bougeant, in his Langage des Bêtes, fancies that your birds, who continually repeat the same note, say only in plain terms, " Je vous aime, ma chere ; ma chere, je vous aime ;" and that those of greater genius indeed, with various trills, run divisions upon the subject ; but that the fond, from whence it all proceeds, is " toujours je vous aime." Now you may, as you find yourself dull or in humour, either take me for a chaffinch or nightingale ; sing your plain song, or shew your skill in music, but in the bottom let there be, toujours de l'Amitié.

As to what you call my serious letter, be assured, that your future state is to me entirely indifferent. Do not be angry, but hear me ; I mean with respect to myself. For whether you be at the top of Fame, or entirely unknown to mankind ; at the council-table, or at Dick's coffee-house ; sick and simple, or well and wise ; whatever alteration mere accident works in you, (supposing it utterly impossible for it to make any change in your sincerity and honesty, since these are conditions sine qua non,) I do not see any likelihood of my not being yours ever.

LETTER XXVIII.

MR. GRAY TO HIS FATHER.

Florence, Oct. 9, 1740.

THE beginning of next spring is the time determined for our return at furthest; possibly it may be before that time. How the interim will be employed, or what route we shall take, is not so certain. If we remain friends with France, upon leaving this country we shall cross over to Venice, and so return through the cities north of the Po to Genoa; from thence take a felucca to Marseilles, and come back through Paris. If the contrary fall out, which seems not unlikely, we must take the Milanese, and those parts of Italy in our way to Venice; from thence pass through the Tirol into Germany, and come home by the Low-countries. As for Florence, it has been gayer than ordinary for this last month, being one round of balls and entertainments, occasioned by the arrival of a great Milanese lady; for the only thing the Italians shine in, is their reception of strangers. At such times every thing is magnificence: the more remarkable, as in their ordinary course of life they are parsimonious, even to a degree of nastiness. I saw in one of the vastest palaces in Rome, (that of Prince Pamfilio,) the apartment which he himself inhabited, a bed that most servants in England would disdain to lie in, and furniture much like that of a soph at Cambridge, for convenience and neatness. This man is worth 30,000*l.* sterling a year. As for eating, there are not two Cardinals in Rome that allow more than six paoli, which is three shillings a day, for the expense of their table; and you may imagine they are still less extravagant here than there. But when they receive a visit from any friend, their houses and persons are set out to the greatest advantage, and appear in all their splendour; it is, indeed, from a motive of vanity, and with the hopes of having it repaid them with interest, whenever they have occasion to return the visit. I call visits going from one city of Italy to another; for it is not so among acquaintance of the same place on common occasions. The new Pope has retrenched the charges of his own table to a sequin (ten shillings) a meal. The applause which all he says and does meets with, is enough to encourage him really to deserve fame. They say he is an able and honest man; he is reckoned a wit too. The other day, when the senator of Rome came to wait upon him, at the first compliments he made him, the Pope pulled off his cap: his master of the ceremonies, who stood by his side, touched him softly, as to warn him that such a condescension was too great in him, and out of all manner of rule: upon which he turned to him and said, "Oh! I cry you mercy, good master, it is true, I am but a novice of a Pope; I have not yet so much as learned ill manners." * * *

LETTER XXIX.

MR. GRAY TO HIS FATHER.

Florence, ^x Jan. 12, 1741.

WE still continue constant at Florence, at present one of the dullest cities of Italy. Though it is ^x Between the date of this and the foregoing letter the reader will perceive an interval of full three months: as Mr. Gray saw no new places during this period, his letters were chiefly of news and common occurrences, and are therefore omitted.

the middle of the Carnival there are no public diversions ; nor is masquerading permitted as yet. The Emperor's obsequies are to be celebrated publicly the 16th of this month ; and, after that, it is imagined every thing will go on in its usual course. In the mean time, to employ the minds of the populace, the government has thought fit to bring into the city in a solemn manner, and at a great expense, a famous statue of the Virgin, called the Madonna dell'Impruneta, from the place of her residence, which is upon a mountain seven miles off. It never has been practised but at times of public calamity ; and was done at present to avert the ill effects of a late great inundation, which it was feared might cause some epidemical distemper. It was introduced a fortnight ago in procession, attended by the council of regency, the senate, the nobility, and all the religious orders, on foot and bare-headed, and so carried to the great church, where it was frequented by an infinite concourse of people from all the country round. Among the rest I paid my devotions almost every day, and saw numbers of people possessed with the devil, who were brought to be exorcised. It was indeed in the evening, and the church-doors were always shut before the ceremonies were finished, so that I could not be eye-witness of the event ; but that they were all cured is certain, for one never heard any more of them the next morning. I am to-night just returned from seeing our Lady make her exit with the same solemnities she entered. The show had a finer effect than before, for it was dark ; and every body (even those of the mob that could afford it) bore a white wax flambeau. I believe there were at least five thousand of them, and the march was near three hours in passing before the window. The subject of all this devotion is supposed to be a large Tile with a rude figure in bas-relief upon it. I say supposed, because since the time it was found (for it was found in the earth in ploughing) only two people have seen it; the one was, by good luck, a saint; the other was struck blind for his presumption. Ever since she has been covered with seven veils; nevertheless, those who approach her tabernacle cast their eyes down, for fear they should spy her through all her veils. Such is the history, as I had it from the lady of the house where I stood to see her pass; with many other circumstances, all which she firmly believes, and ten thousand beside.

We shall go to Venice in about six weeks, or sooner. A number of German troops are upon their march into this State, in case the King of Naples thinks proper to attack it. It is certain he has asked the Pope's leave for his troops to pass through his country. The Tuscans in general are much discontented, and foolish enough to wish for a Spanish government, or any rather than this. * * * *

LETTER XXX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

Florence, April 21, 1741.

I KNOW not what degree of satisfaction it will give you to be told that we shall set out from hence the 24th of this month, and not stop above a fortnight at any place in our way. This I feel, that you are the principal pleasure I have to hope for in my own country. Try at least to make me imagine myself not indifferent to you; for I must own I have the vanity of desiring to be esteemed by somebody, and would choose that somebody should be one whom I esteem as much as I do you. As I am recommending myself to your love, methinks I ought to send you my picture; (for I am no more what I was, some circumstances excepted, which I hope I need not particularize to you;) you must add then, to your former idea, two years of age, a reasonable quantity of dullness, a great deal of silence, and something that rather resembles, than is, thinking; a confused notion of many strange and fine things that have swum before my eyes for some time, a want of love for general society, indeed an inability to it. On the good side you may add a sensibility for what others feel, and indulgence for their faults and weaknesses, a love of truth, and detestation of every thing else. Then you are to deduct a little impertinence, a little laughter, a great deal of pride, and some spirits. These are all the alterations I know of, you perhaps may find more. Think not that I have been obliged for this reformation of manners to reason or reflection, but to a severer school-mistress, Experience. One has little merit in learning her lessons, for one cannot well help it; but they are more useful than others, and imprint themselves in the very heart. I find I have been haranguing in the style of the Son of Sirach, so shall finish here, and tell you that our route is settled as follows: first to Bologna for a few days, to hear the Viscontina sing; next to Reggio, where is a fair. Now, you must know, a fair here is not a place where one eats gingerbread or rides upon hobby-horses; here are no musical clocks, nor tall Leicestershire women; one has nothing but masquing, gaming, and singing. If you love operas, there will be the most splendid in Italy, four tip-top voices, a new theatre, the Duke and Dutchess in all their pomps and vanities. Does not this sound magnificent? Yet is the city of Reggio but one step above

Old Brentford. Well; next to Venice by the 11th of May, there to see the old Doge wed the Adriatic Whore. Then to Verona, so to Milan, so to Marseilles, so to Lyons, so to Paris, so to West, &c. in sæcula sæculorum Amen.

Eleven months, at different times, have I passed at Florence; and yet (God help me) know not either people or language. Yet the place and the charming prospects demand a poetical farewell, and here it is.

* * * * *

I will send you, too, a pretty little Sonnet of a Sig^r. Abbate Buondelmonte, with my imitation of it.

* * * * *

Here comes a letter from you—I must defer giving my opinion of Pausanias^y till I can see the whole, and only have said what I did in obedience to your commands. I have spoken with such freedom on this head, that it seems but just you should have your revenge; and therefore I send you the beginning, not of an epic Poem, but of a metaphysic^z one. Poems and metaphysics (say you, with your spectacles on) are inconsistent things. A metaphysical Poem is a contradiction in terms. It is true, but I will go on. It is Latin too to increase the absurdity. It will, I suppose, put you in mind of the man who wrote a Treatise of Canon Law

^y Some part of a tragedy under that title, which Mr. West had begun; but I do not find amongst Mr. Gray's papers either the sketch itself, or Mr. Gray's free critique upon it, which he here mentions.—M.

^z The beginning of the first book of a didactic Poem, "De Principiis Cogitandi." The fragment which he now sent contained the first 53 lines. The reader will find a further account of his design, and all that he finished of the Poem, in a subsequent Section.—M.

in hexameters. Pray help me to the description of a mixed mode, and a little Episode about Space.

Mr. Walpole and Mr. Gray set out from Florence at the time specified in the foregoing Letter. When Mr. Gray left Venice, which he did the middle of July following, he returned home through Padua, Verona, Milan, Turin, and Lyons. From all which places he writ either to his Father or Mother with great punctuality: but merely to inform them of his health and safety; about which (as might be expected) they were now very anxious, as he travelled with only a 'Laquais de Voyage.' These letters do not even mention that he went out of his way to make a second visit to the Grande Chartreuse^a, and there wrote in the Album of the fathers the following Alcaic Ode, with which I conclude this section^b.—M.

* * * *

^a He was at Turin the 15th of August, and began to cross the Alps the next day. On the 25th he reached Lyons; therefore it must have been between these two dates that he made this visit.—M.

^b See vol 1.

SECTION III.

LETTER I.^c

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

I WRITE to make you write, for I have not much to tell you. I have recovered no spirits as yet ; but, as I am not displeas'd with my company, I sit purring by the fire-side in my arm-chair with no small satisfaction. I read too sometimes, and have begun Tacitus, but have not yet read enough to judge of him ; only his Pannonian sedition in the first book of his annals, which is just as far as I have got, seem'd to me a little tedious. I have no more to say, but to desire you will write letters of a handsome length, and always answer me within a reasonable space of time, which I leave to your discretion.

Popes, March 28, 1742.

P. S. The new Dunciad !^d qu'en pensez vous ?

LETTER II.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

I TRUST to the country, and that easy indolence you say you enjoy there, to restore you your health and spirits ; and doubt not but, when the sun grows

^c This letter is inserted as introductory only to the answer which follows.—M.

^d The fourth book of the Dunciad had just been published separately, at the same time that Colley Cibber was declared to be the Hero of the Poem.—Ed.

warm enough to tempt you from your fire-side, you will (like all other things) be the better for his influence. He his my old friend, and an excellent nurse, I assure you. Had it not been for him, life had often been to me intolerable. Pray do not imagine that Tacitus, of all authors in the world, can be tedious. An annalist, you know, is by no means master of his subject ; and I think one may venture to say, that if those Pannonian affairs are tedious in his hands, in another's they would have been insupportable. However, fear not, they will soon be over, and he will make ample amends. A man, who could join the brilliant of wit, and concise sententiousness peculiar to that age, with the truth and gravity of better times, and the deep reflection and good sense of the best moderns, cannot choose but have something to strike you. Yet what I admire in him above all this, is his detestation of tyranny, and the high spirit of liberty that every now and then breaks out, as it were, whether he would or no. I remember a sentence in his Agricola that (concise as it is) I always admired for saying much in a little compass. He speaks of Domitian, who upon seeing the last will of that general, where he had made him coheir with his wife and daughter, " Satis constabat lætatum eum, velut honore, judicioque: tam cæca et corrupta mens assiduis adulationibus erat, ut nesciret a bono patre non scribi hæredem, nisi malum principem."

As to the Dunciad, it is greatly admired : the Genii of Operas and Schools, with their attendants ; the pleas of the Virtuosos and Florists, and the yawn of dullness in the end, are as fine as any thing he has written. The Metaphysician's part is to me the worst ; and here and there a few ill-expressed lines, and some hardly intelligible.

I take the liberty of sending you a long speech of Agrippina; much too long, but I could be glad you would retrench it. Aceronia, you may remember, had been giving quiet counsels. I fancy, if it ever be finished, it will be in the nature of Nat. Lee's Bedlam Tragedy, which had twenty-five acts, and some odd scenes.

LETTER III.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

Popes, April 4, 1742.

I OWN in general I think Agrippina's speech too long^e; but how to retrench it, I know not: but I have something else to say, and that is in relation to the style, which appears to me too antiquated. Racine was of another opinion; he no where gives you the phrases of Ronsard: his language is the language of the times, and that of the purest sort; so that his French is reckoned a standard. I will not decide what style is fit for our English stage; but I should rather choose one that bordered upon Cato, than upon Shakespear. One may imitate (if one can) Shakespear's manner, his surprising strokes of true nature, his expressive force in painting characters, and all his other beauties; preserving at the same time our own language. Were Shakespear alive now, he would write a different style from what he did. These are my sentiments upon these matters : perhaps I am wrong, for I am neither a Tarpa, nor am I quite an Aristarchus. You see I write freely both of you and Shakespear ; but it is as good as writing not freely, where you know it is acceptable.

^e The Editor has obviated this objection, not by retrenching, but by putting part of it into the mouth of Aceronia, and by breaking it in a few other places. Originally it was one continued speech from the line "Thus ever grave and undisturbed reflection," to the end of the scene; which was undoubtedly too long for the lungs of any actress.—M.

I have been tormented within this week with a most violent cough ; for when once it sets up its note, it will go on, cough after cough, shaking and tearing me for half an hour together ; and then it leaves me in a great sweat, as much fatigued as if I had been labouring at the plough. All this description of my cough in prose, is only to introduce another description of it in verse, perhaps not worth your perusal ; but it is very short, and besides has this remarkable in it, that it was the production of four o'clock in the morning, while I lay in my bed tossing and coughing, and all unable to sleep.

Ante omnes morbos importunissima tussis,
 Quà durare datur, traxitque sub ilia vires :
 Dura etenim versans imo sub pectore regna,
 Perpetuo exercet teneras luctamine costas,
 Oraque distortet, vocemque immutat anhelam :
 Nec cessare locus : sed sævo concita motu
 Molle domat latus, et corpus labor omne fatigat :
 Unde molesta dies, noctemque insomnia turbant.
 Nec Tua, si mecum Comes hic jucundus adesses,
 Verba juvare queant, aut hunc lenire dolorem
 Sufficiant tua vox dulcis, nec vultus amatus.

Do not mistake me, I do not condemn Tacitus : I was then inclined to find him tedious : the German sedition sufficiently made up for it ; and the speech of Germanicus, by which he reclaims his soldiers, is quite masterly. Your new Dunciad I have no conception of. I shall be too late for our dinner if I write any more.

Yours.

LETTER IV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

London, April, Thursday.

You are the first who ever made a muse of a cough ; to me it seems a much more easy task to versify in one's sleep, (that indeed you were of old famous for^f,) than for want of it. Not the wakeful nightingale (when she had a cough) ever sung so sweetly. I give you thanks for your warble, and wish you could sing yourself to rest. These wicked remains of your illness will sure give way to warm weather and gentle exercise ; which I hope you will not omit as the season advances. Whatever low spirits, and indolence the effect of them, may advise to the contrary, I pray you add five steps to your walk daily for my sake ; by the help of which, in a month's time, I propose to set you on horseback.

I talked of the Dunciad as concluding you had seen it ; if you have not, do you choose I should get and send it to you ? I have myself, upon your recommendation, been reading Joseph Andrews. The incidents are ill laid and without invention ; but the characters have a great deal of nature, which always pleases even in her lowest shapes. Parson Adams is perfectly well ; so is Mrs. Slipslop, and the story of Wilson ; and throughout he shews himself well read in stage-coaches, country squires, inns, and inns of court. His reflections upon high people and low people, and misses and masters, are very good. However the exaltedness of some minds (or rather as I shrewdly suspect their insipidity and want of feeling or observation) may make them insensible to these light things, (I mean such as characterize and paint nature,) yet surely they are as weighty and much more useful than your grave discourses upon the mind^g, the passions, and what not. Now as the paradisaical pleasures^h of the Mahometans consist in playing upon the flute and lying with Houris, be mine to read eternal new romances of Marivaux and Crebillon.

^f I suppose at Eton School.

You are very good in giving yourself the trouble to read and find fault with my long harangues. Your freedom (as you call it) has so little need of apologies, that I should scarce excuse your treating me any otherwise; which, whatever compliment it might be to my vanity, would be making a very ill one to my understanding. As to matter of style, I have this to say; the language of the ageⁱ is never the language of poetry; except among the French, whose verse, where the thought or image does not support it, differs in nothing from prose. Our poetry, on the contrary, has a language peculiar to itself; to which almost every one, that has written, has added something by enriching it with foreign idioms and derivatives: nay sometimes words of their own com-

^g He seems here to glance at Hutchinson, the disciple of Shaftsbury; of whom he had not a much better opinion than of his master.—M.

^h Whimsically put.—But what shall we say of the present taste of the French, when a writer whom Mr. Gray so justly esteemed as M. Marivaux is now held in such contempt, that Marivauder is a fashionable phrase amongst them, and signifies neither more than less, than our own fashionable phrase of prosing? As to Crebillon, 'twas his “Egaremens du Cœur et de l'Esprit” that our author chiefly esteemed; he had not, I believe, at this time published his more licentious pieces.—M.

ⁱ Nothing can be more just than this observation; and nothing more likely to preserve our poetry from falling into insipidity, than pursuing the rules here laid down for supporting the diction of it; particularly with respect to the drama.—M.

position or invention. Shakespear and Milton have been great creators this way; and no one more licentious than Pope or Dryden, who perpetually borrow expressions from the former. Let me give you some instances from Dryden, whom every body reckons a great master of our poetical tongue.—Full of museful mopeings—unlike the trim of love—a pleasant beverage—a roundelay of love—stood silent in his mood—with knots and knares deformed—his ireful mood—in proud array—his boon was granted—and disarray and shameful rout—wayward but wise—furbished for the field—the foiled dodderd oaks—disherited—smouldring flames—retchless of laws—crones old and ugly—the beldam at his side—the grandam-hag—villanize his father's fame.—But they are infinite: and our language not being a settled thing (like the French) has an undoubted right to words of an hundred years old, provided antiquity have not rendered them unintelligible. In truth, Shakespear's language is one of his principal beauties; and he has no less advantage over your Addisons and Rowes in this, than in those other great excellencies you mention. Every word in him is a picture. Pray put me the following lines into the tongue of our modern dramatics:

But I, that am not shaped for sportive tricks,
 Nor made to court an amorous looking-glass:
 I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's majesty
 To strut before a wanton ambling nymph:
 I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
 Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
 Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
 Into this breathing world, scarce half made up—

And what follows. To me they appear untranslatable; and if this be the case, our language is greatly degenerated. However, the affectation of imitating Shakespear may doubtless be carried too far ; and is no sort of excuse for sentiments ill-suited, or speeches ill-timed, which I believe is a little the case with me. I guess the most faulty expressions may be these—silken son of dalliance—drowsier pretensions—wrinkled beldams—arched the hearer's brow and riveted his eyes in fearful extasy. These are easily altered or omitted : and indeed if the thoughts be wrong or superfluous, there is nothing easier than to leave out the whole. The first ten or twelve lines are, I believe, the best^k ; and as for the rest, I was betrayed into a good deal of it by Tacitus ; only what he has said in five words, I imagine I have said in fifty lines : such is the misfortune of imitating the inimitable. Now, if you are of my opinion, una litura may do the business better than a dozen ; and you need not fear unravelling my web. I am a sort of spider ; and have little else to do but spin it over again, or creep to some other place and spin there. Alas ! for one who has nothing to do but amuse himself, I believe my amusements are as little amusing as most folks. But no matter ; it makes the hours pass, and is better than ἐν ἀμαθίᾳ καὶ ἀμουσίᾳ καταβιδῶναι. Adieu !

LETTER V.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

To begin with the conclusion of your letter, which is Greek, I desire that you will quarrel no more with your ^k The lines which he means here are from—Thus ever grave and undisturb'd reflection—to Rubellius lives. For the part of the scene, which he sent in his former letter, began there.—M.

manner of passing your time. In my opinion it is irreproachable, especially as it produces such excellent fruit ; and if I, like a saucy bird, must be pecking at it, you ought to consider that it is because I like it. No una litura I beg you, no unravelling of your web, dear Sir ! only pursue it a little further, and then one shall be able to judge of it a little better. You know the crisis of a play is in the first act ; its damnation or salvation wholly rests there. But till that first act is over, every body suspends his vote ; so how do you think I can form, as yet, any just idea of the speeches in regard to their length or shortness ? The connection and symmetry of such little parts with one another must naturally escape me, as not having the plan of the whole in my head ; neither can I decide about the thoughts whether they are wrong or superfluous ; they may have some future tendency which I perceive not. The style only was free to me, and there I find we are pretty much of the same sentiment : for you say the affectation of imitating Shakespear may doubtless be carried too far ; I say as much and no more. For old words we know are old gold, provided they are well chosen. Whatever Ennius was, I do not consider Shakespear as a dunghil in the least : on the contrary, he is a mine of ancient ore, where all our great modern poets have found their advantage. I do not know how it is ; but his old expressions¹ have more energy in them than ours, and are even more adapted to poetry ; certainly, where they are judiciously and sparingly inserted, they add a certain grace to the composition ; in the same manner as Poussin gave a beauty to his pictures by his knowledge in the ancient proportions : but should he, or any other painter, carry the imitation too far, and neglect that best of models Nature, I am afraid it would prove a very flat performance. To finish this long criticism : I have this further notion about old words revived, (is not this a pretty way of finishing?) I think them of excellent use in tales ; they add a certain drollery to the comic, and a romantic gravity to the serious, which are both charming in their kind ; and this way of charming Dryden understood very well. One need only read Milton to acknowledge the dignity they give the epic. But now comes my opinion that they ought to be used in tragedy more sparingly, than in most kinds of poetry. Tragedy is designed for public representation, and what is designed for that should be certainly most intelligible. I believe half the audience that come to Shakespear's plays do not understand the half of what they hear.—But finissons enfin.—Yet one word more.—You think the ten or twelve first lines the best, now I am for the fourteen last ;^m add, that they contain not one word of ancientry.

¹ Shakespear's energy does not arise so much from these old expressions, (most of which were not old in his time,) but from his artificial management of them. This artifice in the great poet is de-

I rejoice you found amusement in Joseph Andrews. But then I think your conceptions of Paradise a little upon the Bergerac. Les lettres du Seraphim R. a Madame la Cherubinesse de Q. What a piece of extravagance would there be !

veloped with much exactness by Dr. Hurd in his excellent note on this passage in Horace's Ep. ad Pisones.

Dixeris egregie, notum si callida verbum
Reddiderit junctura novum.

See Hurd's Horace, vol. i. edit. 4th. p. 49.—M.

^m He means the conclusion of the first scene.—But here and throughout his criticism on old words, he is not so consistent as his correspondent ; for he here insists that all ancientry should be struck out, and in a former passage he admits it may be used sparingly.—M.

And now you must know that my body continues weak and enervate. And for my animal spirits, they are in perpetual fluctuation: some whole days I have no relish, no attention for any thing; at other times I revive, and am capable of writing a long letter, as you see; and though I do not write speeches, yet I translate them. When you understand what speech, you will own that it is a bold and perhaps a dull attempt. In three words, it is prose, it is from Tacitus, it is of Germanicus. Peruse, perpend, pronounceⁿ.

LETTER VI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

London, April, 1742.

I SHOULD not have failed to answer your letter immediately, but I went out of town for a little while, which hindered me. Its length (besides the pleasure naturally accompanying a long letter from you) affords me a new one, when I think it is a symptom of the recovery of your health, and flatter myself that your bodily strength returns in proportion. Pray do not forget to mention the progress you make continually. As to Agrippina, I begin to be of your opinion; and find myself (as women are of their children) less enamoured of my productions the older they grow. She^o is laid up to sleep till next summer; so bid her good night. I think you have translated Tacitus very justly, that is, freely; and accommodated his thoughts to the turn and genius of our language; which, though I com-

ⁿ This speech I omit to print, as I have generally avoided to publish mere translations either of Mr. Gray or his friend.—M.

^o He never after awakened her; and I believe this was occasioned by the strictures which his friend had made on his dramatic style;

mend your judgment, is no commendation of the English tongue, which is too diffuse, and daily grows more and more enervate. One shall never be more sensible of this, than in turning an author like Tacitus. I have been trying it in some parts of Thucydides, (who has a little resemblance of him in his conciseness,) and endeavoured to do it closely, but found it produced mere nonsense^p. If you have any inclination to see what figure Tacitus makes in Italian, I have a Tuscan translation of Davanzati, much esteemed in Italy; and will send you the same speech you sent me; that is, if you care for it. In the mean time accept of Propertius^q. * * *

which (though he did not think them well founded, as they certainly were not) had an effect which Mr. West, we may believe, did not intend them to have. I remember some years after I was also the innocent cause of his delaying to finish his fine Ode on the Progress of Poetry. I told him, on reading the part he shewed me, that "though I admired it greatly, and thought that it breathed the very spirit of Pindar, yet I suspected it would by no means hit the public taste." Finding afterwards that he did not proceed in finishing it, I often expostulated with him on the subject; but he always replied, "No, you have thrown cold water upon it." I mention this little anecdote, to shew how much the opinion of a friend, even when it did not convince his judgment, affected his inclination.—M.

^p If, in the course of these attempts, Gray ever turned over the literal translation made by Hobbes of Malmsbury, he must have been convinced that there was a period when the style of English prose much resembled, or, at least, was easily adapted to that of Thucydides, together with the stiffness it partook largely of the energy of the Athenian. And while we admire the ease and gracefulness introduced by Addison and writers of his day, we must certainly bring them in guilty of impairing the vigour of our language.—ED.

^q A translation of the first Elegy of the second book in English rhyme; omitted for the reason given in the last note but one.—M.

Mr. Mason carried this principle of rejection somewhat too far; and we owe much to Mr. Matthias for bringing to light this, and other similar compositions.—ED.

LETTER VII.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

Popes, May 5, 1742.

WITHOUT any preface I come to your verses, which I read over and over with excessive pleasure, and which are at least as good as Propertius. I am only sorry you follow the blunders of Broukhusius, all whose insertions are nonsense. I have some objections to your antiquated words, and am also an enemy to Alexandrines; at least I do not like them in Elegy. But after all, I admire your translation so extremely, that I cannot help repeating I long to shew you some little errors you are fallen into by following Broukhusius^r. * * * Were I with you now, and Propertius with your verses lay upon the table between us, I could discuss this point in a moment; but there is nothing so tiresome as spinning out a criticism in a letter; doubts arise, and explanations follow, till there swells out at least a volume of undigested observations: and all because you are not with him whom you want to convince. Read only the letters between Pope and Cromwell in proof of this; they dispute without end. Are you aware now that I have an interest all this while in banishing criticism from our correspondence? Indeed I have; for I am going to write down a little Ode (if it deserves the name) for your perusal, which I am afraid will hardly stand that test. Nevertheless I leave you at your full liberty; so here it follows.

^r I have omitted here a paragraph or two, in which different lines of the Elegy were quoted, because I had previously omitted the translation of it.—M.

ODE

Dear Gray, that always in my heart
Possessest far the better part,
What mean these sudden blasts that rise
And drive the Zephyrs from the skies?
O join with mine thy tuneful lay,
And invoke the tardy May.

Come, fairest Nymph, resume thy reign!
Bring all the Graces in thy train!
With balmy breath, and flowery tread,
Rise from thy soft ambrosial bed;
Where, in elysian slumber bound,
Embow'ring myrtles veil thee round.

Awake, in all thy glories drest,
Recal the Zephyrs from the west;
Restore the sun, revive the skies,
At mine, and Nature's call, arise!
Great Nature's self upbraids thy stay,
And misses her accustom'd May.

See! all her works demand thy aid;
The labours of Pomona fade:
A plaint is heard from ev'ry tree;
Each budding flow'ret calls for thee;
The birds forget to love and sing;
With storms alone the forests ring.

Come then, with Pleasure at thy side,
Diffuse thy vernal spirit wide;

Create, where'er thou turn'st thy eye,
 Peace, Plenty, Love, and Harmony ;
 Till ev'ry being share its part,
 And heaven and earth be glad at heart.

LETTER VIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

London, May 8, 1742.

I REJOICE to see you putting up your prayers to the May : she cannot choose but come at such a call. It is as light and genteel as herself. You bid me find fault ; I am afraid I cannot ; however I will try. The first stanza (if what you say to me in it did not make me think it the best) I should call the worst of the five, (except the fourth line.) The two next are very picturesque, Miltonic, and musical ; her bed is so soft and so snug that I long to lie with her. But those two lines, " Great Nature," are my favourites. The exclamation of the flowers is a little step too far. The last stanza is full as good as the second and third ; the last line bold, but I think not too bold. Now, as to myself and my translation, pray do not call names. I never saw Broukhusius in my life. It is Scaliger who attempted to range Propertius in order ; who was, and still is, in sad condition^s. * * * You see, by what I sent you, that I converse, as usual, with none but the dead ; they are my old friends, and almost make me long to be with them. You will not wonder therefore, that I, who live only in times past, am able to tell you no news of the present. I have finished the Peloponnesian War much to my honour, and a tight conflict it was, I promise you. I have drank and sung with Anacreon for the last fortnight, and am now feeding sheep with Theocritus. Besides, to quit my figure, (because it is foolish,) I have run over Pliny's Epistles and Martial ἐκ παρέργου; not to mention Petrarch, who, by the way, is sometimes very tender and natural. I must needs tell you three lines in Anacreon, where the expression seems to me inimitable. He is describing hair as he would have it painted.

^s Here some criticism on the Elegy is omitted for a former reason.

Ἐλικας δ' ἐλευθέρους μοι,
Πλοκάμων ἄτακτα συνθεῖς
Ἄφες ὡς θέλουσι κεῖσθαι.

Guess, too, where this is about a dimple.

Sigilla in mento impressa Amoris digitulo
Vestigio demonstrant mollitudinem.

LETTER IX.

MR. WEST TO MR. GRAY.

Popes, May 11, 1742.

YOUR fragment is in Aulus Gellius; and both it and your Greek delicious. But why are you thus melancholy? I am so sorry for it, that you see I cannot forbear writing again the very first opportunity; though I have little to say except to expostulate with you about it. I find you converse much with the dead, and I do not blame you for that; I converse with them too, though not indeed with the Greek. But I must condemn you for your longing to be with them. What, are there no joys among the living? I could almost cry out with Catullus, Alphene immemor, atque unanimis false sodalibus! xxx. 1.

But to turn an accusation thus upon another, is ungenerous; so I will take my leave of you for the present with a "Vale, et vive paulisper cum vivis."

LETTER X.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WEST.

London, May 27, 1742.

MINE, you are to know, is a white melancholy, or rather leucocholy for the most part; which though it seldom laughs or dances, nor ever amounts to what one calls joy or pleasure, yet is a good easy sort of a state, and a ça ne laisse que de s'amuser. The only fault of it is insipidity; which is apt now and then to give a sort of ennui, which makes one form certain little wishes that signify nothing. But there is another sort, black indeed, which I have now and then felt, that has somewhat in it like Tertullian's rule of faith, Credo quia impossibile est; for it believes, nay, is sure of every thing that is unlikely, so it be but frightful; and, on the other hand, excludes and shuts its eyes to the most possible hopes, and every thing that is pleasurable; from this the Lord deliver us! for none but he and sunshiny weather can do it. In hopes of enjoying this kind of weather, I am going into the country for a few weeks, but shall be never the nearer any society; so, if you have any charity, you will continue to write. My life is like Harry the Fourth's supper of hens. " Poulets à la broche, poulets en ragôut, poulets en hâchis, poulets en fricasées." Reading here, reading there; nothing but books with different sauces. Do not let me lose my dessert then; for though that be reading too, yet it has a very different flavour. The May seems to be come since your invitation; and I propose to bask in her beams and dress me in her roses.

Et Caput in verna semper habere rosa.

Propert. iii. 3. 44.

I shall see Mr. * * and his wife, nay, and his child too, for he has got a boy. Is it not odd to consider one's contemporaries in the grave light of husband and father? There is my Lords * * and * * *, they are statesmen: do not you remember them dirty boys playing at cricket? As for me, I am never a bit the older, nor the bigger, nor the wiser than I was then: no, not for having been beyond the sea. Pray how are you?

I send you an inscription for a wood joined to a park of mine; (it is on the confines of Mount Cithæron, on the left hand as you go to Thebes;) you know I am no friend to hunters, and hate to be disturbed by their noise.

* * * * *

Here follows also the beginning of an Heroic Epistle; but you must give me leave to tell my own story first, because historians differ. Massinissa was the son of Gala, king of the Massyli; and, when very young, at the head of his father's army, gave a most signal overthrow to Syphax, king of the Masæsylians, then an ally of the Romans. Soon after Asdrubal, son of Gisgo the Carthaginian general, gave the beautiful Sophonisba, his daughter, in marriage to the young prince. But this marriage was not consummated on account of Massinissa's being obliged to hasten into Spain, there to command his father's troops, who were auxiliaries of the Carthaginians. Their affairs at this time began to be in a bad condition; and they thought it might be greatly for their interest, if they could bring over Syphax to themselves. This in time they actually effected; and, to strengthen their new alliance, commanded Asdrubal to give his daughter to Syphax. (It is probable their ingratitude to Massinissa arose from the great change of affairs, which had happened among the Massylians during his absence; for his father and uncle were dead, and a distant relation of the royal family had usurped the throne.) Sophonisba was accordingly married to Syphax; and Massinissa, enraged at the affront, became a friend to the Romans. They drove the Carthaginians before them out of Spain, and carried the war into Africa, defeated Syphax, and took him prisoner; upon which Cirtha (his capital) opened her gates to Lælius and Massinissa. The rest of the affair, the marriage, and the sending of poison, every body knows. This is partly taken from Livy, and partly from Appian.

* * * * *

Immediately after writing the preceding letter, Mr. Gray went upon a visit to his relations at Stoke; where he writ that beautiful little Ode which stands first in his collection of poems. He sent it as soon as written to his beloved friend; but he was dead^u ^t See vol. I.

^u This singular anecdote is founded on a marginal note in his common-place book, where that Ode is transcribed, and the following before it reached Hertfordshire. He died * only twenty days after he had written the letter to Mr. Gray, which concluded with "Vale, et vive paulisper cum vivis." So little was the amiable youth then aware of the short time that he himself would be numbered amongst the living.

memorandum annexed: "Written at Stoke the beginning of June 1742, and sent to Mr. West, not knowing he was then dead."—M.

* He was buried at Hatfield, (the house called Popes being in that parish.) On a grave-stone in the chancel is the following plain inscription: "Here lieth the body of Richard West, Esq. only son to the Right Honourable Richard West, late Lord Chancellor of Ireland, who died the first of June, 1742, in the twenty-sixth year of his age."—M.

SECTION IV.

THE three foregoing sections have carried the reader through the juvenile part of Mr. Gray's life, and nearly, alas, to half of its duration! Those which remain, though less diversified by incidents, will, notwithstanding, I flatter myself, be equally instructive and amusing, as several of his most intimate friends have very kindly furnished me with their collections of his letters; which, added to those I have myself preserved, will enable me to select from them many excellent specimens of his more mature judgment, correct taste, and extensive learning, blended at the same time with many amiable instances of his sensibility.—M.

LETTER I.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON ^y.Cambridge, Dec. 27, 1742.

I OUGHT to have returned you my thanks a long time ago for the pleasure, I should say prodigy, of your letter; for such a thing has not happened above twice within this last age to mortal man, and no one here can conceive what it may portend. You have heard, I suppose, how I have been employed a part of the time; how, by my own indefatigable application for these ten years past, and by the care and vigilance of that worthy magistrate the Man in Blue^z, (who, I assure you, has not spared his labour, nor could have done more for his own son.) I am got half way to the top of jurisprudence^a, and bid as fair as another body to open a case of impotency with all decency and circumspection. You see my ambition. I do not doubt but some thirty years hence I shall convince the world and you that I am a very pretty young fellow; and may come to shine in a profession, perhaps the noblest of all, except manmidwifery. As for you, if your distemper and you can but agree about going to London, I may reasonably expect in a much shorter time to see you in your three-cornered villa, doing the honours of a well-furnished table with as much dignity, as rich a mein, and as capacious a belly as Dr. Mead. Methinks I see Dr. * * at the lower end of it, lost in admiration of your goodly person and parts, cramming down his envy (for it will rise) with the wing of a pheasant, and drowning it in neat Burgundy. But not to tempt your asthma too much with such a prospect, I should think you might be almost as happy and as great as this, even in the country. But you know best, and I should be sorry to say any thing that might stop you in the career of glory :

^y Of Old-Park, near Durham. With this gentleman Mr. Gray contracted an acquaintance very early; and though they were not educated together at Eton, yet afterwards at Cambridge, when the Doctor was fellow of Pembroke Hall, they became intimate friends, and continued so to the time of Mr. Gray's death.—M.

^z A servant of the Vice-chancellor's for the time being, usually known by the name of Blue-coat, whose business it is to attend acts for degrees, &c.—M.

^a i. e. Bachelor of Civil Law.—M.

far be it from me to hamper the wheels of your gilded chariot. Go on, Sir Thomas; and when you die, (for even physicians must die,) may the faculty in Warwick Lane erect your statue in the very niche of Sir John Cutler's.

I was going to tell you how sorry I am for your illness, but I hope it is too late now: I can only say that I really was very sorry. May you live a hundred Christmasses, and eat as many collars of brawn stuck with rosemary^b.

Adieu! &c.

LETTER II.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE^c.

DEAR SIR,

Cambridge, Feb. 3, 1746.

You are so good to enquire after my usual time of coming to town: it is at a season when even you, the ^b In transcribing this letter, Mr. Mason has made some alterations of words and expressions, which are perhaps unnecessary. These Mr. Mitford has corrected in his edition, from the original manuscript. He also places the name of Askew in the space left blank by Mason, and has inserted a sneer upon the University of Cambridge, not very creditable to the good taste and more matured judgment of our author.—ED.

^c Many of the letters addressed to Walpole, in this section, are printed from the quarto edition of his works. This first was written shortly after an eclaircissement had taken place between him and Gray, of which some account is given in a letter, published by Mr. Mitford, from the latter to Dr. Wharton. The reconciliation seems to have been as cordial as could be expected, from the nature of the rupture, and the original offence which Walpole had given.—ED.

perpetual friend of London, will, I fear, hardly be in it—the middle of June: and I commonly return thither in September; a month when I may more probably find you at home.

Our defeat to be sure is a rueful affair for the honour of the troops; but the Duke is gone it seems with the rapidity of a cannon-bullet to undefeat us again. The common people in town at least know how to be afraid; but we are such uncommon people here as to have no more sense of danger, than if the battle had been fought when and where the battle of Cannæ was. The perception of these calamities, and of their consequences, that we are supposed to get from books, is so faintly impressed, that we talk of war, famine, and pestilence, with no more apprehension than of a broken head, or of a coach overturned between York and Edinburgh. I heard three people, sensible middle-aged men, (when the Scotch were said to be at Stamford, and actually were at Derby,) talking of hiring a chaise to go to Caxton (a place in the high road) to see the Pretender and the Highlanders as they passed.

I can say no more for Mr. Pope, (for what you keep in reserve may be worse than all the rest.) It is natural to wish the finest writer, one of them, we ever had, should be an honest man. It is for the interest even of that virtue, whose friend he professed himself, and whose beauties he sung, that he should not be found a dirty animal. But, however, this is Mr. Warburton's business, not mine, who may scribble his pen to the stumps, and all in vain, if these facts are so^d. It is not from what he told me about himself that I thought well of him, but from a humanity and goodness of heart, eye, and greatness of mind, that runs through his private correspondence, not less apparent than are a thousand little vanities and weaknesses mixed with those good qualities; for nobody ever took him for a philosopher.

^d Pope was at this time but recently dead, and his memory was suffering from the malignity of Bolingbroke, and the hired aspersions

If you know any thing of Mr. Mann's state of health and happiness, or the motions of Mr. Chute homewards, it will be a particular favour to inform me of them, as I have not heard this half year from them.

I am sincerely yours.

LETTER. III.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Peterhouse, April 26, 1746.

You write so feelingly to Mr. Brown, and represent your abandoned condition in terms so touching, that what gratitude could not effect in several months, compassion has brought about in a few days; and broke that strong attachment, or rather allegiance, which I and all here owe to our sovereign lady and mistress the president of presidents and head of heads, (if I may be permitted to pronounce her name, that ineffable Octogrammaton,) the power of Laziness. You must know she had been pleased to appoint me (in preference to so many old servants of her's who had spent their whole lives in qualifying themselves for the office) grand picker of straws and push-pin player to her Supinity, (for that of Mallet. The facts themselves were indeed against him, without the exaggeration they met with: but when Warburton appealed to the judgment of charity, the world decided in his favour.—Ed.

is her title.) The first is much in the nature of lord president of the council ; and the other like the groom-porter, only without the profit ; but as they are both things of very great honour in this country, I considered with myself the load of envy attending such great charges ; and besides (between you and me) I found myself unable to support the fatigue of keeping up the appearance that persons of such dignity must do, so I thought proper to decline it, and excused myself as well as I could. However, as you see such an affair must take up a good deal of time, and it has always been the policy of this court to proceed slowly, like the Imperial, and that of Spain, in the dispatch of business, you will on this account the easier forgive me, if I have not answered your letter before.

You desire to know, it seems, what character the Poem^e of your young friend bears here. I wonder that you ask the opinion of a nation, where those, who pretend to judge, do not judge at all ; and the rest (the wiser part) wait to catch the judgment of the world immediately above them ; that is, Dick's and the Rainbow coffee-houses. Your readier way would be to ask the ladies that keep the bar in those two theatres of criticism. However, to shew you that I am a judge, as well as my countrymen, I will tell you, though I have rather turned it over than read it, (but no matter ; no more have they,) that it seems to me above the middling ; and now and ^e The Pleasures of Imagination : from the posthumous publication of Dr. Akenside's Poems, it should seem that the author had very much the same opinion afterwards of his own work, which Mr. Gray here expresses : since he undertook a reform of it, which must have given him, had he concluded it, as much trouble as if he had written it entirely new.—M.

then, for a little while, rises even to the best, particularly in description. It is often obscure, and even unintelligible; and too much infected with the Hutchinson jargon. In short, its great fault is, that it was published at least nine years too early. And so methinks in a few words, "à la mode du Temple," I have very pertly dispatched what perhaps may for several years have employed a very ingenious man worth fifty of myself.

You are much in the right to have a taste for Socrates; he was a divine man. I must tell you, by way of news of the place, that the other day a certain new professor made an apology for him an hour long in the schools; and all the world, except Trinity college, brought in Socrates guilty^f.

The muse is gone, and left me in far worse company; if she returns, you will hear of her. As to her child^g (since you are so good as to enquire after it) it is but a puling chit yet, not a bit grown to speak of; I believe, poor thing, it has got the worms that will carry it off at last. Mr. Trollope and I are in a course of tar-water; he for his present, and I for my future distempers. If you think it will kill me, send away a man and horse directly; for I drink like a fish.

Yours, &c.

^f I venture to borrow Mr. Mitford's correct reading of this sentence, which Mason has rendered unintelligible.—Ed.

^g He here means his Poem, "De Principiis Cogitandi." See the last section.—M.

LETTER IV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Cambridge, Dec. 11, 1746.

I WOULD make you an excuse, (as indeed I ought,) if they were a sort of thing I ever gave any credit to myself in these cases; but I know they are never true. Nothing so silly as indolence when it hopes to disguise itself: every one knows it by its saunter, as they do his Majesty (God bless him) at a masquerade, by the firmness of his tread, and the elevation of his chin. However, somewhat I had to say that has a little shadow of reason in it. I have been in town, (I suppose you know,) flaunting about at all kind of public places with two friends lately returned from abroad. The world itself has some attraction in it to a solitary of six years standing: and agreeable well-meaning people of sense (thank heaven there are so few of them) are my peculiar magnet. It is no wonder then, if I felt some reluctance at parting with them so soon; or if my spirits, when I returned back to my cell, should sink for a time, not indeed to storm and tempest, but a good deal below changeable. Besides, Seneca says, (and my pitch of philosophy does not pretend to be much above Seneca,) “Nunquam mores, quos extuli, refero. Aliquid ex eo quod composui, turbatur: aliquid ex his, quæ fugavi, redit.” And it will happen to such as us, mere imps of science. Well it may, when wisdom herself is forced often

————— in sweet retired solitude
 To plume her feathers, and let grow her wings,
 That in the various bustle of resort
 Were all too ruffled, and sometimes impair’d^h.

^h See Milton’s Comus, v. 376.

It is a foolish thing that without money one cannot either live as one pleases, or where or with whom one pleases. Swift somewhere says, that money is liberty ; and I fear money is friendship too and society, and almost every external blessing. It is a great, though an ill-natured comfort, to see most of those who have it in plenty, without pleasure, without liberty, and without friends.

I am not altogether of your opinion as to your historical consolation in time of trouble : a calm melancholy it may produce, a stiller sort of despair, (and that only in some circumstances, and on some constitutions;) but I doubt no real comfort or content can ever arise in the human mind, but from hope.

I take it very ill you should have been in the twentieth year of the warⁱ, and yet say nothing of the retreat before Syracuse : is it, or is it not, the finest thing you ever read in your life? and how does Xenophon or Plutarch agree with you? For my part I read Aristotle, his poetics, politics, and morals ; though I do not well know which is which. In the first place, he is the hardest author by far I ever meddled with. Then he has a dry conciseness, that makes one imagine one is perusing a table of contents rather than a book : it tastes for all the world like chopped hay, or rather like chopped logic ; for he has a violent affection to that art, being in some sort his own invention ; so that he often loses himself in little trifling distinctions and verbal niceties ; and, what is worse, leaves you to extricate him as well as you can. Thirdly, he has suffered vastly from the transcribers, as all authors of great brevity necessarily must. Fourthly and lastly, he has abundance of fine uncommon things, which make him well worth the pains he gives one. You see what you are to expect from him.

ⁱ Thucydides, l. vii.

LETTER V.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

January, 1747.

It is doubtless an encouragement to continue writing to you, when you tell me you answer me with pleasure. I have another reason which would make me very copious, had I any thing to say; it is, that I write to you with equal pleasure, though not with equal spirits, nor with like plenty of materials: please to subtract then so much for spirit, and so much for matter; and you will find me, I hope, neither so slow nor so short, as I might otherwise seem. Besides, I had a mind to send you the remainder of Agrippina, that was lost in a wilderness of papers. Certainly you do her too much honour: she seemed to me to talk like an old boy, all in figures and mere poetry, instead of nature and the language of real passion. Do you remember Approchez-vous, Neron^k?—Who would not rather have thought of that half line than all Mr. Rowe's flowers of eloquence? However, you will find the remainder here at the end in an outrageous long speech: it was begun above four years ago, (it is a misfortune you know my age, else I might have added,) when I was very young. Poor West put a stop to that tragic torrent he saw breaking in upon him:—have a care, I warn you not to set open the flood-gate again, lest it drown you and me and the bishop and all.

^k Agrippina, in Racine's tragedy of Britannicus.

I am very sorry to hear you treat philosophy and her followers like a parcel of monks and hermits, and think myself obliged to vindicate a profession I honour, bien que je n'entienne pas boutique, (as Mad. Sevigné says.) The first man that ever bore the name, if you remember, used to say, that life was like the Olympic games, (the greatest public assembly of his age and country,) where some came to shew their strength and agility of body, as the champions; others, as the musicians, orators, poets and historians, to shew their excellence in those arts; the traders to get money; and the better sort to enjoy the spectacle, and judge of all these. They did not then run away from society for fear of its temptations; they passed their days in the midst of it: conversation was their business: they cultivated the arts of persuasion, on purpose to shew men it was their interest, as well as their duty, not to be foolish, and false, and unjust; and that too in many instances with success; which is not very strange: for they shewed by their life that their lessons were not impracticable; and that pleasures were no temptations, but to such as wanted a clear perception of the pains annexed to them^l. But I have done preaching à la Grecque. Mr. Ratcliffe^m made a shift to behave very rationally without their instructions, at a season which they took a great deal of pains to fortify themselves and others against : one would not desire to lose one's head with a better grace. I am particularly satisfied with the last embrace to all the people about him. Sure it must be somewhat embarrassing to die before so much good company !

^l Never perhaps was a more admirable picture drawn of true philosophy and its real and important services; services not confined to the speculative opinions of the studious, but adapted to the common purposes of life, and promoting the general happiness of mankind; not upon the chimerical basis of a system, but on the immutable foundations of truth and virtue.—M.

^m Brother to the Earl of Derwentwater. He was executed at Tyburn, December, 1746, for having been concerned in the rebellion of Scotland.—M.

You need not fear but posterity will be ever glad to know the absurdity of their ancestors : the foolish will be glad to know they were as foolish as they, and the wise will be glad to find themselves wiser. You will please all the world then ; and if you recount miracles you will be believed so much the sooner. We are pleased when we wonder ; and we believe because we are pleased. Folly and wisdom, and wonder and pleasure, join with me in desiring you would continue to entertain them : refuse us if you can.

Adieu, dear Sir !

LETTER VI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Cambridge, 1747.

I HAD been absent from this place a few days, and at my return found Cibber's bookⁿ upon my table: I return you my thanks for it, and have already run over a considerable part: for who could resist Mrs. Letitia Pilkington's recommendation? (By the way, is there any such gentlewoman^o? or has somebody put on the style of a scribbling woman's panegyric to deceive and laugh at Colley?) He seems to me full as pert and ⁿ Entitled " Observations on Cicero's Character," or some such thing ; for I have not the book by me, and it has been long since forgot.—M.

^o This lady made herself more known some time after the date of this letter.—M.

as dull as usual. There are whole pages of commonplace stuff, that for stupidity might have been wrote by Dr. Waterland, or any other grave divine, did not the flirting saucy phrase give them at a distance an air of youth and gaiety: it is very true, he is often in the right with regard to Tully's weaknesses; but was there any one that did not see them? Those, I imagine, that would find a man after God's own heart, are no more likely to trust the Doctor's recommendation than the Players; and as to Reason and Truth, would they know their own faces do you think, if they looked in the glass, and saw themselves so bedizened in tattered fringe and tarnished lace, in French jewels, and dirty furbelows, the frippery of a stroller's wardrobe?

Literature, to take it in its most comprehensive sense, and include every thing that requires invention or judgment, or barely application and industry, seems indeed drawing apace to its dissolution, and remarkably since the beginning of the war. I remember to have read Mr. Spence's pretty book^p; though (as he then had not been at Rome for the last time) it must have increased greatly since that in bulk. If you ask me what I read, I protest I do not recollect one syllable; but only in general, that they were the best bred sort of men in the world, just the kind of frinds one would wish to meet in a fine summer's evening, if one wished to meet any at all. The heads and tails of the dialogues,

^p Polymetis, or an enquiry concerning the agreement between works of the Roman poets, and the remains of the ancient artists. Mr. Spence was professor of poetry to the University of Oxford, and his work is thus spoken of by Bishop Lowth, in a note on his twelfth Prælection on Hebrew Poetry: "Hac autem vide accurate et scienter explicata a viro doctissimo Josepho Spence in opere erudito juxta atque eleganti cui titulus Polymetis."—ED.

published separate in 16mo. would make the sweetest reading in natiur for young gentlemen of family and fortune, that are learning to dance^q. I rejoice to hear there is such a crowd of dramatical performances coming upon the stage. Agrippina can stay very well, she thanks you, and be damned at leisure: I hope in God you have not mentioned, or shewed to any body that scene; (for trusting in its badness, I forgot to caution you concerning it;) but I heard the other day, that I was writing a play, and was told the name of it, which nobody here could know, I am sure. The employment you propose to me much better suits my inclination; but I much fear our joint-stock would hardly compose a small volume; what I have is less considerable than you would imagine, and of that little we should not be willing to publish all. * * * r

^q This ridicule on the Platonic way of dialogue (as it was aimed to be, though nothing less resembles it) is, in my opinion, admirable. Lord Shaftsbury was the first who brought it into vogue, and Mr. Spence (if we except a few Scotch writers) the last who practised it. As it has now been laid aside some years, we may hope, for the sake of true taste, that this frippery mode of composition will never come into fashion again; especially since Dr. Hurd has pointed out, by example as well as precept, wherein the true beauty of dialogue-writing consists.—M.

^r What is here omitted was a short catalogue of Mr. West's poetry then in Mr. Gray's hands; the reader has seen as much of it in the three foregoing sections as I am persuaded his friend would have published, had he prosecuted the task which Mr. Walpole recommended to him, that of printing his own and Mr. West's poems in the same volume; and which we also perceive from this letter, he was not averse from doing. This therefore seems to vindicate the Editor's plan in arranging these papers; as he is enabled by it not only to shew what Mr. West would have been, but what Mr. Gray was, I mean not as a poet, for that the world knew before, but as an

This is all I can any where find. You, I imagine, may have a good deal more. I should not care how unwise the ordinary run of readers might think my affection for him, provided those few, that ever loved any body, or judged of any thing rightly, might, from such little remains, be moved to consider what he would have been ; and to wish that heaven had granted him a longer life and a mind more at ease.

I send you a few lines, though Latin, which you do not like, for the sake of the subject^s; it makes part of a large design, and is the beginning of the fourth book, which was intended to treat of the passions. Excuse the three first verses ; you know vanity, with the Romans, is a poetical licence.

LETTER VII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Cambridge, 1747.

I HAVE abundance of thanks to return you for the entertainment Mr. Spence's book has given me, which I have almost run over already ; and I much fear (see what it is to make a figure) the breadth of the margin, and the neatness of the prints, which are better done than one could expect, have prevailed upon me to like it far better than I did in manuscript ; for I think it is not the very genteel deportment of Polymetis, nor the lively wit of Mysagetes, that have at all corrupted me.

universal scholar, and (what is still of more consequence) as an excellent moral man.—M.

* The admirable apostrophe to Mr. West at the beginning of the fragment " De Principiis Cogitandi."—M.

There is one fundamental fault, from whence most of the little faults throughout the whole arise. He professes to neglect the Greek writers, who could have given more instruction on the very heads he professes to treat, than all the others put together ; who does not know, that upon the Latin, the Sabine, and Etruscan mythology, (which probably might themselves, at a remoter period of time, owe their origin to Greece too,) the Romans ingrafted almost the whole religion of Greece to make what is called their own? It would be hard to find any one circumstance that is properly of their invention. In the ruder days of the republic, the picturesque part of their religion (which is the province he has chose, and would be thought to confine himself to) was probably borrowed entirely from the Tuscans, who, as a wealthy trading people, may be well supposed, and indeed are known, to have had the arts flourishing in a considerable degree among them. What could inform him here, but Dio. Halicarnassus (who expressly treats of those times with great curiosity and industry) and the remains of the first Roman writers? The former he has neglected as a Greek ; and the latter, he says, were but little acquainted with the arts, and consequently are but of small authority. In the better ages, when every temple and public building in Rome was peopled with imported deities and heroes, and when all the artists of reputation they made use of were Greeks, what wonder, if their eyes grew familiarized to Grecian forms and habits ; (especially in a matter of this kind, where so much depends upon the imagination;) and if those figures introduced with them a belief of such fables, as first gave them being, and dressed them out in their various attributes, it was natural then, and (I should think) necessary, to go to the source itself, the Greek accounts of their own religion ; but to say the truth, I suspect he was little conversant in those books and that language ; for he rarely quotes any but Lucian, an author that falls in every body's way, and who lived at the very extremity of that period he has set to his inquiries, later than any of the poets he has meddled with, and for that reason ought to have been regarded as but an indifferent authority ; especially being a Syrian too. His book (as he says himself) is, I think, rather a beginning than a perfect work ; but a beginning at the wrong end ; for if any body should finish it by inquiring into the Greek mythology, as he proposes, it will be necessary to read it backward.

There are several little neglects, that one might have told him of, which I noted in reading it hastily ; as page 311, a discourse about orange-trees, occasioned by Virgil's " inter odoratum lauri nemus," where he fancies the Roman laurus to be our laurel ; though undoubtedly the bay-tree, which is odoratum, and (I believe) still called lauro, or alloro, at Rome ; and that the " malum medicum" in the Georgic is the orange ; though Theophrastus, whence Virgil borrowed it, or even Pliny, whom he himself quotes, might convince him it is the cedratro which he has often tasted at Florence. Page 144, is an account of Domenichino's cardinal virtues, and a fling at the Jesuits, neither of which belong to them : the painting is in a church of the Barnabiti, dedicated to St. Carlo Borromeo, whose motto is HUMILITAS. Page 151, in a note, he says, the old Romans did not regard Fortune as a deity ; though Servius Tullius (whom she was said to be in love with ; nay, there was actually an affair between them) founded her temple in Foro Boario. By the way, her worship was Greek, and this king was educated in the family of Tarquinius Priscus, whose father was a Corinthian ; so it is easy to conceive how early the religion of Rome might be mixed with that of Greece^t, &c. &c.

Dr. Middleton has sent me to-day, a book on the Roman Senate, the substance of a dispute between Lord Hervey and him, though it never interrupted their friendship, he says, and I dare say not.

LETTER VIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Cambridge, March 1, 1747.

As one ought to be particularly careful to avoid blunders in a compliment of condolence, it would be a sensible satisfaction to me (before I testify my sorrow, and the sincere part I take in your misfortune) to know for certain, who it is I lament. I knew Zara and Selima, (Selima, was it? or Fatima?) or rather I knew them both together ; for I cannot justly say which was which. Then as to your handsome cat, the name you distinguish her by, I am no less at a loss, as well knowing one's handsome cat is always the cat one likes best ; or, if one be alive and the other dead, it is usually the latter that is the handsomest. Besides, if the point were never so clear, I hope you do not think me so ill-bred or so imprudent as to forfeit all my interest in the survivor :

^t The reader, after having seen the authority adduced in a former note, in favour of Mr. Spence's work, may perhaps mistrust the criticism contained in this letter. Mr. Nichols says in his Literary Anecdotes, " Mr. Gray's chief objection is, that the author has illustrated the subject from the Roman, and not from the Grecian poets ;" that is, that he has not performed what he never undertook, nay, what he expressly did not undertake.—ED.

Oh no! I would rather seem to mistake, and imagine to be sure it must be the tabby one that had met with this sad accident. Till this affair is a little better determined, you will excuse me if I do not begin to cry;

“Tempus inane peto, requiem, spatiumque doloris.”

Which interval is the more convenient, as it gives time to rejoice with you on your new honours^u. This is only a beginning; I reckon next week we shall hear you are a Freemason, or a Gormogon at least.—Heigh ho! I feel (as you to be sure have done long since) that I have very little to say, at least in prose. Somebody will be the better for it; I do not mean you, but your cat, feuë Mademoiselle Selime, whom I am about to immortalize for one week or fortnight, as follows, * * * *x. There's a poem for you, it is rather too long for an epitaph.

LETTER IX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Stoke, June 5, 1748.

YOUR friendship has interested itself in my affairs so naturally, that I cannot help troubling you a little with a detail of them, * * * * *y. And ^u Mr. Walpole was about this time elected a Fellow of the Royal Society.—M.

^x The reader need hardly be told, that the 4th Ode in the collection of his poems was inserted in the place of these asterisks. This letter (as some other slight ones have been) is printed chiefly to mark the date of one of his compositions.—M.

^y The paragraph here omitted contained an account of Mr. Gray's loss of a house by fire in Cornhill, and the expense he should be at in rebuilding it. Though it was insured, he could at this time ill bear to lay out the additional sum necessary for the purpose.—M.

now, my dear Wharton, why must I tell you a thing so contrary to my own wishes and yours? I believe it is impossible for me to see you in the North, or to enjoy any of those agreeable hours I had flattered myself with. This business will oblige me to be in town several times during the summer, particularly in August, when half the money is to be paid; besides the good people here would think me the most ruinous and careless of mortals, if I should take such a journey at this time. The only satisfaction I can pretend to, is that of hearing from you, and particularly at this time when I was bid to expect the good news of an increase of your family. Your opinion of Diodorus is doubtless right: but there are things in him very curious, got out of better authorities now lost. Do you remember the Ægyptian history, and particularly the account of the gold mines? My own readings have been cruelly interrupted: what I have been highly pleased with, is the new comedy from Paris by Gresset, called le Mechant; if you have it not, buy his works altogether in two little volumes, they are collected by the Dutch booksellers, and consequently contain some trash; but then there are the Ver-vert, the Epistle to P. Bougeant, the Chartreuse, that to his sister, an Ode on his Country, and another on Mediocrity, and the Sidnei, another comedy, all which have great beauties: there is also a poem lately published by Thomson, called the Castle of Indolence, with some good stanzas in it. Mr. Mason is my acquaintance; I liked that Ode^z much, but have ^z Ode to a Water Nymph, published about this time in Dodsley's Miscellany. On reading what follows, many readers, I suspect, will think me as simple as ever, in forbearing to expunge the paragraph: but as I publish Mr. Gray's sentiments of authors, as well living as found no one else that did. He has much fancy, little judgment, and a good deal of modesty : I take him for a good and well meaning creature ; but then he is really in simplicity a child, and loves every body he meets with : he reads little or nothing ; writes abundance, and that with a design to make his fortune by it. My best compliments to Mrs. Wharton and your family : does that name include any body I am not yet acquainted with?

LETTER X.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Stoke, August 19, 1748.

I AM glad you have had any pleasure in Gresset ; he seems to me a truly elegant and charming writer ; the Mechant is the best comedy I ever read ; his Edward I can scarce get through, it is puerile ; though there are good lines, such as this for example :

“ Le jour d’un nouveau regne est le jour-des ingrats.”

But good lines will make any thing rather than a good play : however, you are to consider this is a collection made up by the Dutch booksellers ; many things unfinished or written in his youth, or designed not for the world, but to make his friends laugh, as the Lutrin dead, without reserve, I should do them injustice, if I was more scrupulous with respect to myself. My friends, I am sure, will be much amused with this and another passage hereafter of a like sort. My enemies, if they please, may sneer at it ; and say, which they will very truly, that twenty-five years have made a very considerable abatement in my general philanthropy. Men of the world will not blame me for writing from so prudent a motive, as that of making my fortune by it ; and yet the truth, I believe at the time was, that I was perfectly well satisfied, if my publications furnished me with a few guineas to see a play or an opera.—M.

vivant, &c. There are two noble lines ; which, as they are in the middle of an Ode to the King, may perhaps have escaped you :

“ Le cri d’un peuple heureux est la seule éloquence,
“ Qui sçait parler des Rois.”

Which is very true, and should have been a hint to himself not to write odes to the king at all.

As I have nothing more to stay at present, I fill my paper with the beginning of an essay ; what name to give it I know not ; but the subject is the Alliance of Education and Government : I mean to shew that they must both concur to produce great and useful men. I desire your judgment upon it before I proceed any further.

[This letter was accompanied by the first 57 lines of the Ethical Fragment contained in vol. I. about 50 lines more make up all that the author ever completed of his original design.—ED.]

LETTER XI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Cambridge, March 9, 1748-9.

YOU ask for some account of books. The principal I can tell you of is a work of the President Montesquieu, the labour of twenty years ; it is called L’Esprit des Loix, two vols. 4to. printed at Geneva. He lays down the principles on which are founded the three sorts of Government—Despotism, the limited Monarchy, and the Republican ; and shews how from these are deduced the laws and customs by which they are guided and maintained ; the education proper to each form ; the influence of climate, situation, religion, &c. on the minds of particular nations and on their policy. The subject you see, is as extensive as mankind; the thoughts perfectly new, generally admirable as they are just, sometimes a little too refined. In short, there are faults, but such as an ordinary man could never have committed. The style very lively and concise; (consequently sometimes obscure;) it is the gravity of Tacitus, whom he admires, tempered with the gaiety and fire of a Frenchman. The time of night will not suffer me to go on; but I will write again in a week.

LETTER XII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Cambridge, April 25, 1749.

I PERCEIVE that second parts are as bad to write as they can be to read; for this, which you ought to have had a week after the first, has been a full month in coming forth. The spirit of laziness (the spirit of the place) begins to possess even me, who have so long declaimed against it; yet has it not so prevailed, but that I feel that discontent with myself, that ennui, that ever accompanies it in its beginnings. Time will settle my conscience; time will reconcile me to this languid companion: we shall smoke, we shall tipple, we shall doze together: we shall have our little jokes like other people, and our old stories: brandy will finish what port began; and a month after the time you will see in some corner of a London Evening-Post, "Yesterday died the Reverend Mr. John Gray, Senior Fellow of Clare-Hall, a facetious companion, and well respected by all that knew him. His death is supposed to have been occasioned by a fit of an apoplexy, being found fallen out of bed with his head in the chamber-pot."

In the meanwhile, to go on with my account of new books. Montesquieu's work, which I mentioned before, is now publishing anew in two vols. octavo. Have you seen old Crebillon's Catalina, a tragedy, which has had a prodigious run at Paris? Historical truth is too much perverted in it, which is ridiculous in a story so generally known; but if you can get over this, the sentiments and versification are fine, and most of the characters (particularly the principal one) painted with great spirit.

Mr. Birch, the indefatigable, has just put out a thick octavo of original papers of Queen Elizabeth's time; there are many curious things in it, particularly letters from Sir Robert Cecil (Salisbury) about his negotiations with Henry IVth of France, the Earl of Monmouth's odd account of Queen Elizabeth's death, several peculiarities of James Ist, and Prince Henry, &c. and above all, an excellent account of the state of France, with characters of the king, his court, and ministry, by Sir George Carew, ambassador there. This, I think, is all new worth mentioning, that I have seen or heard of; except a Natural History of Peru, in Spanish, printed at London, by Don —— something, a man of learning, sent thither by that court on purpose.

You ask after my Chronology. It was begun, as I told you, almost two years ago, when I was in the midst of Diogenes Laertius and his philosophers, as a proemium to their works. My intention in forming this table was not so much for public events, though these too have a column assigned them, but rather in a literary way to compare the time of all great men, their writings, and their transactions. I have brought it from the thirtieth Olympiad, where it begins, to the hundred and thirteenth; that is, three hundred and thirty-two years^a. My only modern assistants were Marsham, Dodwell, and Bentley.

I have since that read Pausanias and Athenæus all through, and Æschylus again. I am now in Pindar and Lysias; for I take verse and prose together like bread and cheese.

LETTER XIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Cambridge, August 8, 1749.

I PROMISED Dr. Keene long since to give you an account of our magnificences here^b; but the newspapers, and he himself in person, have got the start of my indolence, so that by this time you are well acquainted with all the events that adorned that week of wonders. Thus much I may venture to tell you, because it is probable nobody else has done it, that our friend * *’s zeal and eloquence surpassed all power of description. Vesuvio in an eruption was not more violent than his utterance, nor (since I am at my mountains) Pelion, with all its pine-trees in a storm of wind, more impetuous than his action; and yet the Senate-House still stands, and (I thank God) we are all safe and well at your service. I was ready to sink for him, and scarce dared to look about me, when I was sure it was ^a This laborious work was formed much in the manner of the President Henault’s “Histoire de France.” Every page consisted of nine columns; one for the Olympiad, the next for the Archons, the third for the public affairs of Greece, the three next for the Philosophers, and the three last for Poets, Historians, and Orators. I do not find it carried further than the date above mentioned.—M.

^b The Duke of Newcastle’s installation as Chancellor of the University.—M.

all over ; but soon found I might have spared my confusion ; all people joined to applaud him. Every thing was quite right ; and I dare swear, not three people here but think him a model of oratory ; for all the Duke's little court came with a resolution to be pleased ; and when the tone was once given, the University, who ever wait for the judgment of their betters, struck into it with an admirable harmony : for the rest of the performances, they were just what they usually are. Every one, while it lasted, was very gay and busy in the morning, and very owlish and very tipsy at night : I make no exceptions from the Chancellor to Blue-coat. Mason's Ode was the only entertainment that had any tolerable elegance ; and, for my own part, I think it (with some little abatements) uncommonly well on such an occasion. Pray let me know your sentiments ; for doubtless you have seen it. The author of it grows apace into my good graces, as I know him more ; he is very ingenious, with great good nature and simplicity ; a little vain, but in so harmless and so comical a way, that it does not offend one at all ; a little ambitious, but withal so ignorant in the world and its ways, that this does not hurt him in one's opinion ; so sincere and so undisguised, that no mind, with a spark of generosity, would ever think of hurting him, he lies so open to injury ; but so indolent, that if he cannot overcome this habit, all his good qualities will signify nothing at all. After all, I like him so well, I could wish you knew him.

LETTER XIV.

MR. GRAY TO HIS MOTHER.

Cambridge, Nov. 7, 1749.

THE unhappy news I have just received from you equally surprises and afflicts me^c. I have lost a person I loved very much, and have been used to from my infancy; but am much more concerned for your loss, the circumstances of which I forbear to dwell upon, as you must be too sensible of them yourself; and will, I fear more and more need a consolation that no one can give, except He who has preserved her to you so many years, and at last, when it was his pleasure, has taken her from us to himself: and perhaps, if we reflect upon what she felt in this life, we may look upon this as an instance of his goodness, both to her, and to those that loved her. She might have languished many years before our eyes in a continual increase of pain, and totally helpless; she might have long wished to end her misery without being able to attain it; or perhaps even lost all sense, and yet continued to breathe; a sad spectacle to such as must have felt more for her than she could have done for herself. However you may deplore your own loss, yet think that she is at last easy and happy; and has now more occasion to pity us than we her. I hope, and beg, you will support yourself with that resignation we owe to Him who gave us our being for our good, and who deprives us of it for the same reason. I would have come to you directly, but ^c The death of his aunt, Mrs. Mary Antrobus, who died the 5th of November, and was buried in a vault in Stoke churchyard, near the chancel door, in which also his mother and himself (according to the direction in his will) were afterwards buried.

you do not say whether you desire I should or not ; if you do, I beg I may know it, for there is nothing to hinder me, and I am in very good health.

LETTER XV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Stoke, June 12, 1750.

As I live in a place, where even the ordinary tattle of the town arrives not till it is stale, and which produces no events of its own, you will not desire any excuse from me for writing so seldom, especially as of all people living I know you are the least a friend to letters spun out of one's own brains, with all the toil and constraint that accompanies sentimental productions. I have been here at Stoke a few days ; (where I shall continue good part of the summer;) and having put an end to a thing, whose beginning you have seen long ago, I immediately send it you^d. You will, I hope, look upon it in the light of a thing with an end to it ; a merit that most of my writings have wanted, and are like to want, but which this epistle I am determined shall not want, when it tells that I am ever

Yours.

Not that I have done yet ; but who could avoid the temptation of finishing so roundly and so cleverly in the manner of good Queen Anne's days? Now I have talked of writings, I have seen a book, which is by this time in the press, against Middleton, (though without naming him,) by Asheton. As far as I can judge from a very hasty reading, there are things in it new and ingenious, but rather too prolix, and the style here and there favouring too strongly of sermon. I imagine it will do him credit. So much for other people, now to self again. You are desired to tell me your opinion, if you can take the pains, of these lines. I am once more

^d This was the Elegy in the Churchyard.

Ever yours.

LETTER XVI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Stoke, August 9, 1750.

ARISTOTLE says^e (one may write Greek to you without scandal) that Οἱ [γὰρ] τόποι οὐ διαλύουσι τὴν φιλίαν ἀπλῶς, ἀλλὰ τὴν ἐνέργειαν. Ἐὰν δὲ χρόνιος ἡ ἀπουσία γένηται, καὶ τῆς φιλίας δοκεῖ λήθην ποιεῖν ὅθεν εἴρηται, Πολλὰς δὲ φιλίας ἀπροσηγορία διέλυσεν.

But Aristotle may say whatever he pleases, I do not find myself at all the worse for it. I could indeed wish to refresh my ἐνέργεια a little at Durham by the sight of you, but when is there a probability of my being so happy? It concerned me greatly when I heard the other day that your asthma continued at times to afflict you, and that you were often obliged to go into the country to breathe; you cannot oblige me more than by giving me an account both of the state of your body and mind: I hope the latter is able to keep you cheerful and easy in spite of the frailties of its companion. As to my own, it can neither do one nor the other; and I have the mortification to find my spiritual part the most infirm thing about me. You have doubtless heard of the loss I have had in Dr. Middleton, whose house was the only easy place one could find to converse in at Cambridge: for my part I find a friend so uncommon a thing, that I cannot help regretting even an old acquaintance, which is an indifferent likeness of it; and though I do not approve the spirit of his books, methinks 'tis pity the world should lose so rare a thing as a good writer^f.

^e Vide Ethica Nicomach. l. θ. cap 5.

My studies cannot furnish a recommendation of many new books to you. There is a defence "de l'Esprit des Loix," by Montesquieu himself; it has some lively things in it, but is very short, and his adversary appears to be so mean a bigot that he deserved no answer. There are three vols. in 4to. of "Histoire du Cabinet du Roi, by Messrs. Buffons and d'Aubenton;" the first is a man of character, but I am told have hurt it by this work. It is all a sort of introduction to natural history; the weak part of it is a love of system which runs through it; the most contrary thing in the world to a science entirely grounded upon experiments, and which has nothing to do with vivacity of imagination^g. However, I cannot help commending the general view which he gives of the face of the earth, followed by a particular one of all the known nations, their peculiar figure and manners, which is the best epitome of geography I ever met with, and written with sense and elegance; in short, these books are well worth turning over. The Memoirs of the Abbé de Mongon, in five vols. are highly commended, but I have not seen them. He was engaged in several embassies to Germany, England, &c. during ^f Mr. Gray used to say, that good writing not only required great parts, but the very best of those parts.—M.

^g One cannot therefore help lamenting, that Mr. Gray let his imagination lie dormant so frequently, in order to apply himself to this very science.—M.

the course of the late war. The President Henault's "Abrégé Chronologique de l'Histoire de France," I believe I have before mentioned to you as a very good book of its kind.

• LETTER XVII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Dec. 17, 1750.

OF my house I cannot say much^h, I wish I could; but for my heart it is no less yours that it has long been; and the last thing in the world that will throw it into tumults is a fine lady. The verses, you so kindly try to keep in countenance, were written merely to divert Lady Cobham and her family, and succeeded accordingly; but being shewed about in town are not liked there at all. Mrs. * *, a very fashionable personage, told Mr. Walpole that she had seen a thing by a friend of his which she did not know what to make of, for it aimed at every thing, and meant nothing; to which he replied, that he had always taken her for a woman of sense, and was very sorry to be undeceived. On the other hand, the stanzasⁱ which I now inclose to you have had the misfortune, by Mr. Walpole's fault, to be made still more public, for which they certainly were never meant; but it is too late to complain. They have been so applauded, it is quite a shame to repeat it: I mean not to be modest; but it is a shame for those who have said such superlative things about them, that I cannot repeat them.

^h The house he was rebuilding in Cornhill. See Letter VII. of of this Section.—M.

ⁱ Elegy in a Country Churchyard.

I should have been glad that you and two or three more people had liked them, which would have satisfied my ambition on this head amply. I have been this month in town, not at Newcastle-house ; but diverting myself among my gay acquaintance, and return to my cell with so much the more pleasure. I dare not speak of my future excursion to Durham for fear of a disappointment, but at present it is my full intention.

LETTER XVIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Cambridge, Feb. 11, 1751.

As you have brought me into a little sort of distress, you must assist me, I believe, to get out of it as well as I can. Yesterday I had the misfortune of receiving a letter from certain gentlemen, (as their bookseller expresses it,) who have taken a Magazine of Magazines into their hands: they tell me that an ingenious Poem, called reflections in a Country Churchyard, has been communicated to them, which they are printing forthwith; that they are informed that the excellent author of it is I by name, and that they beg not only his indulgence, but the honour of his correspondence, &c. As I am not at all disposed to be either so indulgent, or so correspondent, as they desire, I have but one bad way left to escape the honour they would inflict upon me; and therefore am obliged to desire you would make Dodsley print it immediately (which may be done in less than a week's time) from your copy, but without my name, in what form is most convenient for him, but on his best paper and character; he must correct the press himself, and print it without any interval between the stanzas, because the sense is in some places continued beyond them; and the title must be—Elegy, written in a Country Churchyard. If he would add a line or two to say it came into his hands by accident, I should like it better. If you behold the Magazine of Magazines in the light that I do, you will not refuse to give yourself this trouble on my account, which you have taken of your own accord before now. If Dodsley do not do this immediately he may as well let it alone.

LETTER XIX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

MY DEAR SIR,

Ash-Wednesday, Cambridge, 1751.

You have indeed conducted with great decency my little misfortune: you have taken a paternal care of it, and expressed much more kindness than could have been expected from so near a relation. But we are all frail; and I hope to do as much for you another time. Nurse Dodsley has given it a pinch or two in the cradle, that (I doubt) it will bear the marks of as long as it lives. But no matter: we have ourselves suffered under her hands before now; and, besides, it will only look the more careless, and by accident as it were. I thank you for your advertisement, which saves my honour, and in a manner bien flatteuse pour moi, who should be put to it even to make myself a compliment in good English.

You will take me for a mere poet, and a fetcher and carrier of sing-song, if I tell you that I intend to send you the beginning of a drama^j; not mine, thank God, as you'll believe, when you hear it is finished, but wrote by a person whom I have a very good opinion of. It is (unfortunately) in the manner of the ancient drama, with choruses, which I am, to my shame, the occasion of; for, as great part of it was at first written in that form, I would not suffer him to change it to a play fit for the stage, as he intended, because the lyric parts are the best of it, and they must have been lost. The story is Saxon, and the language has a tang of Shakespear, that suits an old-fashioned fable very well. In short, I don't do it merely to amuse you, but for the sake of the author, who wants a judge, and so I would lend him mine: yet not without your leave, lest you should have us up to dirty our stockings at the bar of your house, for wasting the time and politics of the nation. Adieu, Sir!

I am ever yours.

LETTER XX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Cambridge, March 3, 1751.

ELFRIDA (for that is the fair one's name) and her author are now in town together. He has promised me, that he will send a part of it to you some morning while he is there; and (if you shall think it worth while to descend to particulars) I should be glad you would tell me very freely your opinion about it; for he shall know nothing of the matter that is not fit for the ears of a tender parent—though, by the way, he has ingenuity and merit enough (whatever his drama may have) to bear hearing his faults very patiently. I must only beg you not to shew it, much less let it be copied; for it will be published, though not as yet.

^j This was the Elfrida of Mr. Mason.

I do not expect any more editions^k, as I have appeared in more magazines than one. The chief errata were sacred bower for secret; hidden for kindred; (in spite of dukes and classics;) and frowning as in scorn for smiling. I humbly propose, for the benefit of Mr. Dodsley and his matrons, that take awake for a verb, that they should read asleep, and all will be right^l. Gil Blas is the Lying Valet in five acts. The fine lady has half-a-dozen good lines dispersed in it. Pompey is the hasty production of a Mr. Coventry, (cousin to him you knew,) a young clergyman^m: I found it out by three characters, which once made part of a comedy that he shewed me of his own writing. Has that miracle of tenderness and sensibility (as she calls it) Lady Vane given you any amusement? Peregrine, whom she uses as a vehicle, is very poor indeed, with a few exceptions. In the last volume is a ^k Of the Elegy in the Churchyard.

^l The verse to which he alludes is this:

“ Ev’n from the tomb the voice of nature cries;
 “ Ev’n in our ashes live their wonted fires.”

The last line of which he had at first written thus:

“ Awake and faithful to her wonted fires.”

^m This was a pleasing jeu d’esprit, entitled Pompey the Little, or the Adventures of a Lap-dog. It is of the cousin here referred to, that the Rev. W. Cole thus speaks: “ Henry Coventry was a Fellow of Magdalen College, [Cambridge.] When he first came up to the University, he was of a religious enthusiastic turn of mind, as was Mr. H. Walpole, even so much as to go with Asheton, his then great friend, to pray with the prisoners in the castle. Afterward both Mr. Coventry and Mr. Walpole took to the infidel side of the question.” See Nichols’s Anecdotes, p. 569.—ED.

character of Mr. Lyttleton, under the name of Gosling Scrag, and a parody of part of his Monody, under the notion of a Pastoral on the death of his grandmother.

I am ever yours.

LETTER XXI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Cambridge, October 8, 1751.

I SEND you thisⁿ (as you desire) merely to make up half-a-dozen ; though it will hardly answer your end in furnishing out either a head or tail-piece. But your own Fable^o may much better supply the place. You have altered it to its advantage ; but there is still something a little embarrassed here and there in the expression. I rejoice to find you apply (pardon the use of so odious a word) to the history of your own times. Speak, and spare not. Be as impartial as you can ; and, after all, the world will not believe you are so, though you should make as many protestations as Bishop Burnet. They will feel in their own breast, and find it very possible to hate fourscore persons, yea, ninety and nine : so you must rest satisfied with the testimony of your own conscience. Somebody has laughed at Mr. Dodsley, or at me, when they talked of the bat : I have nothing more, either nocturnal or diurnal, to deck his miscellany with. We have a man here that writes a good hand ; but he has little failings that hinder my ⁿ The Hymn to Adversity.

^o The Entail.

recommending him to you^p. He is lousy, and he is mad: he sets out this week for Bedlam; but if you insist upon it, I don't doubt he will pay his respects to you. I have seen two of Doctor Middleton's unpublished works. One is about forty-four pages in quarto against Dr. Waterland, who wrote a very orthodox book on the Importance of the Doctrine of the Trinity, and insisted, that Christians ought to have no communion with such as differ from them in fundamentals. Middleton enters no farther into the doctrine itself than to shew, that a mere speculative point can never be called a fundamental; and that the earlier fathers, on whose concurrent tradition Waterland would build, are so far, when they speak of the three persons, from agreeing with the present notion of our Church, that they declare for the inferiority of the Son, and seem to have no clear and distinct idea of the Holy Ghost at all. The rest is employed in exposing the folly and cruelty of stiffness and zealotism in religion, and in shewing that the primitive ages of the Church, in which tradition had its rise, were (even by confession of the best scholars and most orthodox writers) the æra of nonsense and absurdity. It is finished, and very well wrote; but has been mostly incorporated into his other works, particularly the Inquiry: and for this reason I suppose he has writ upon it, "This wholly laid aside." The second is in Latin, on Miracles; to shew, that of the two methods of defending Christianity—one from its intrinsic evidence, the holiness and purity of its doctrines; the other from its external, the miracles said to be wrought to confirm it—the first has been little attended to by reason of its difficulty; the second much insisted upon, because it appeared an easier task ; but that it can in reality prove nothing at all. “ Nobilis illa quidem defensio (the first) quam si obtinere potuissent, rem simul omnem expediisse, causamque penitus vicisse viderentur. At causa hujus defendendæ labor cum tanta argumentandi cavillandique molestia conjunctus ad alteram, quam dixi, defensionis viam, ut commodiorum longe et faciliorem, plerosque adegit—ego vero istiusmodi defensione religionem nostram non modo non confirmari, sed dubiam potius suspectamque reddi existimo.” He then proceeds to consider miracles in general, and afterwards those of the pagans, compared with those of Christ. I only tell you the plan, for I have not read it out; (though it is short;) but you will not doubt to what conclusion it tends. There is another thing, I know not what, I am to see. As to the Treatise on Prayer, they say it is burnt indeed. Adieu!

^p As an amanuensis.

LETTER XXII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

YOUR pen wa too rapid to mind the common form of a direction, and so, by omitting the words near Windsor, your letter has been diverting itself at another Stoke, near Aylesbury, and came not to my hands till to-day. The true original chairs were all sold, when the Huntingdon's broke; there are nothing now but Halsey chairs, not adapted to the squareness of a gothic dowager's rump. And, by the way, I do not see how the uneasiness and uncomfortableness of a coronation chair can be any objection with you: every chair that is easy is modern, and unknown to our ancestors. As I remember, there were certain low chairs, that looked like ebony, at Esher, and were old and pretty. Why should not Mr. Bentley improve upon them?— I do not wonder at Dodsley. You have talked to him of six Odes, for so you are pleased to call every thing I write, though it be but a receipt to make apple-dump-lings. He has reason to gulp when he finds one of them only a long story. I don't know but I may send him very soon (by your hands) an Ode to his own tooth, a high Pindaric upon stilts, which one must be a better scholar than he is to understand a line of, and the very best scholars will understand but a little matter here and there. It wants but seventeen lines of having an end, I don't say of being finished. As it is so unfortunate to come too late for Mr. Bentley, it may appear in the fourth volume of the Miscellanies, provided you don't think it execrable, and suppress it. Pray, when the fine book is to be printed^q, let me revise the press, for you know you can't; and there are a few trifles I could wish altered.

I know not what you mean by hours of love, and cherries, and pine-apples. I neither see nor hear any thing here, and am of opinion that is the best way. My compliments to Mr. Bentley, if he be with you.

I am yours ever.

I desire you would not shew that epigram I repeated to you^r, as mine. I have heard of it twice already as coming from you.

^q The edition of his Odes, printed at Strawberry-hill.—M.

^r The epigram here alluded to cannot be ascertained with certainty.—M.

LETTER XXIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

I AM obliged to you for Mr. Dodsley's book^s; and, having pretty well looked it over, will (as you desire) tell you my opinion of it. He might, methinks, have spared the graces in his frontispiece, if he chose to be economical, and dressed his authors in a little more decent raiment—not in whited-brown paper and distorted characters, like an old ballad. I am ashamed to see myself; but the company keeps me in countenance: so to begin with Mr. Tickell. This is not only a state-poem, (my ancient aversion,) but a state-poem on the peace of Utrecht. If Mr. Pope had wrote a panegyric on it, one could hardly have read him with patience: but this is only a short-winded imitator of Addison; who had himself not above three or four notes in poetry, sweet enough indeed, like those of a German flute, but such as soon tire and satiate the ear with their frequent return. Tickell has added to this a great poverty of sense, and a string of transitions that hardly become a school-boy. However, I forgive him for the sake of his Ballad^t, which I always thought the prettiest in the world. All there is of M. Green here has been printed before: there is a profusion of wit every where; reading would have formed his judgment, and harmonized his verse, for even his wood-notes often break out into strains of real poetry and music. The School-mistress is excellent in its kind, and masterly; and (I am sorry to differ from you, but) London is to me one of those few imitations, that have all the ease and all the spirit of an original. The same man's^u verses at the opening of Garrick's theatre are far from bad. Mr. Dyer (here you will despise me highly) has more of poetry in his imagination, than almost any of our number; but rough and injudicious. I should range Mr. Bramston only a step or two above Dr. King, who is as low in my estimation as in yours. Dr. Evans is a furious madman; and pre-existence is nonsense in all her altitudes. Mr. Lyttleton is a gentle elegiac person. Mr. Nugent^x sure did not write his own Ode^y. I like Mr. Whitehead's little poems, I mean the Ode on a Tent, the Verses to Garrick, and particularly those to Charles Townshend, better than any thing I had seen before of him. I gladly pass over H. Browne, and the rest, to come at you. You know I was of the publishing side, and thought your reasons against it none; for though, as Mr. Chute said extremely well, the still small voice of Poetry was not made to be heard in a crowd; yet Satire will be heard, for all the audience are by nature her friends; especially when she appears in the spirit of Dryden, with his strength, and often with his versification; such as you have caught in those lines on the Royal Unction, on the Papal Dominion, and Convents of both Sexes; on Henry VIII. and Charles II. for these are to me the shining parts of your Epistle^z. There are many lines I could wish corrected, and some blotted

^s His Collection of Poems.

^t Colin and Lucy; beginning,

“Of Leinster fam'd for maidens fair.”

^u Doctor Samuel Johnson.

^x Afterwards Earl Nugent.

^y That addressed to Mr. Pulteney.

^z Epistle from Florence to Thomas Asheton, tutor to the Earl of Plymouth.

out, but beauties enough to atone for a thousand worse faults than these. The opinion of such as can at all judge, who saw it before in Dr. Middleton's hands, concurs nearly with mine. As to what any one says, since it came out; our people (you must know) are slow of judgment: they wait till some bold body saves them the trouble, and then follow his opinion; or stay till they hear what is said in town, that is, at some bishop's table, or some coffee-house about the Temple. When they are determined, I will tell you faithfully their verdict. As for the Beauties^a, I am their most humble servant. What shall I say to Mr. Lowth, Mr. Ridley, Mr. Rolle, the Reverend Mr. Brown, Seward? &c. If I say, Messieurs! this is not the thing; write prose, write sermons, write nothing at all; they will disdain me and my advice. What then would the sickly peer^b have done, that spends so much time in admiring every thing that has four legs, and fretting at his own misfortune in having but two; and cursing his own politic head and feeble constitution, that won't let him be such a beast as he would wish? Mr. S. Jenyns now and then can write a good line or two—such as these—

Snatch us from all our little sorrows here,
Calm every grief, and dry each childish tear, &c.

I like Mr. Aston Hervey's Fable; and an Ode (the last of all) by Mr. Mason, a new acquaintance of mine, whose Musæus too seems to carry with it the promise at least of something good to come. I was glad to see you distinguished who poor West was, before his

^a The Epistle to Mr. Eckardt, the painter.

^b Lord Hervey.

charming Ode^c, and called it any thing rather than a Pindaric. The town is an owl, if it don't like Lady Mary^d, and I am surprised at it: we here are owls enough to think her Eclogues very bad; but that I did not wonder at. Our present taste is Sir T. Fitz-Osborne's Letters. I send you a bit of a thing for two reasons: first, because it is one of your favourites, Mr. M. Green; and next, because I would do justice. The thought on which my second Ode^e turns is manifestly stole from hence:—not that I knew it at the time, but, having seen this many years before, to be sure it imprinted itself on my memory, and, forgetting the author, I took it for my own. The subject was the Queen's Hermitage.

* * * * *

Though yet no palace grace the shore
 To lodge the pair you^f should adore;
 Nor abbeys great in ruins rise,
 Royal equivalents for vice;
 Behold a grot in Delphic grove
 The Graces and the Muses love;
 A temple from vain-glory free,
 Whose goddess is Philosophy;
 Whose sides such licens'd idols^g crown,
 As Superstition would pull down;
 The only pilgrimage I know,
 That men of sense would choose to go.

^c Monody on the Death of Queen Caroline.

^d Lady Mary W. Montagu's Poems.

^e The Ode to Spring.

^f Speaking to the Thames.

^g The four busts.

Which sweet abode, her wisest choice,
 Urania cheers with heavenly voice ;
 While all the Virtues gather round
 To see her consecrate the ground.

If thou, the god with winged feet,
 In council talk of this retreat ;
 And jealous gods resentment shew
 At altars rais'd to men below :
 Tell those proud lords of heaven, 'tis fit
 Their house our heroes should admit.
 While each exists (as poets sing)
 A lazy, lewd, immortal thing ;
 They must, or grow in disrepute,
 With earth's first commoners recruit.

Needless it is, in terms unskill'd,
 To praise whatever Boyle should build.
 Needless it is the busts to name
 Of men, monopolists of fame ;
 Four chiefs adorn the modest stone
 For virtue, as for learning, known.
 The thinking sculpture helps to raise
 Deep thoughts, the genii of the place :
 To the mind's ear, and inward sight,
 There silence speaks, and shade gives light :
 While insects from the threshold preach,
 And minds dispos'd to musing teach ;
 Proud of strong limbs and painted hues,
 They perish by the slightest bruise,
 Or maladies begun within
 Destroy more slow life's frail machine :
 From maggot-youth through change of state
 They feel like us the turns of fate :

Some born to creep, have lived to fly,
 And chang'd earth's cells for dwellings high :
 And some, that did their six wings keep,
 Before they died, been forced to creep.
 They politics, like ours, profess :
 The greater prey upon the less.
 Some strain on foot huge loads to bring,
 Some toil incessant on the wing :
 Nor from their vigorous schemes desist
 Till death ; and then they're never mist.
 Some frolic, toil, marry, increase,
 Are sick and well, have war and peace ;
 And broke with age in half a day
 Yield to successors, and away.

* * * *

Adieu! I am yours ever.

LETTER XXIV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Nov. Tuesday, Cambridge.

IT is a misfortune to me to be at a distance from both of you at present. A letter can give one so little idea of such matters! * * * * I always believed well of his heart and temper, and would gladly do so still. If they are as they should be, I should have expected every thing from such an explanation ; for it is a tenet with me, (a simple one, you'll perhaps say,) that if ever two people, who love one another, come to breaking, it is for want of a timely eclaireissement, a full and precise one, without witnesses or mediators, and without reserving any one disagreeable circumstance for the mind to brood upon in silence.

I am not totally of your mind as to Mr. Lyttleton's Elegy, though I love kids and fawns as little as you do. If it were all like the fourth stanza, I should be excessively pleased. Nature and sorrow, and tenderness, are the true genius of such things; and something of these I find in several parts of it: (not in the orange-tree:) poetical ornaments are foreign to the purpose, for they only shew a man is not sorry;—and devotion worse; for it teaches him, that he ought not to be sorry, which is all the pleasure of the thing. I beg leave to turn your weathercock the contrary way. Your Epistle^h I have not seen a great while, and Doctor M. is not in the way to give me a sight of it: but I remember enough to be sure all the world will be pleased with it, even with all its faults upon its head, if you don't care to mend them. I would try to do it myself, (however hazardous,) rather than it should remain unpublished. As to my Eton Ode, Mr. Dodsley is *padrone*ⁱ. The second^k you had I suppose you do not think worth giving him: otherwise, to me it seems not worse than the former. He might have Selima^l too, unless she be of too little importance for his patriot-collection; or perhaps the connexions you had with her may interfere. Che so io? Adieu!

I am yours ever.

^h From Florence to Thomas Asheton.

ⁱ To publish in his Collection of Poems.

^k The Ode to Spring.

^l The Ode on Mr. Walpole's cat, drowned in the tub of gold-fish.

LETTER. XXV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Cambridge, Dec. Monday.

THIS comes du fond de ma cellule to salute Mr. H. W. not so much him that visits and votes, and goes to White's and to court; as the H. W. in his rural capacity, snug in his tub on Windsor-hill, and brooding over folios of his own creation: him that can slip away, like a pregnant beauty, (but a little oftener,) into the country, be brought to-bed perhaps of twins, and whisk to town again the week after with a face as if nothing had happened. Among all the little folks, my godsons and daughters, I cannot choose but inquire more particularly after the health of one; I mean (without a figure) the Memoires^m: do they grow? Do they unite, and hold up their heads, and dress themselves? Do they begin to think of making their appearance in the world, that is to say, fifty years hence, to make posterity stare, and all good people cross themselves? Has Asheton (who will be then Lord Bishop of Killaloe, and is to publish them) thought of an aviso all' letture to prefix to them yet, importing, that if the words church, king, religion, ministry, &c. be found often repeated in this book, they are not to be taken literally, but poetically, and as may be most strictly reconcileable to the faith then established;—that he knew the author well when he was a young man; and can testify, upon the honour of his function, that he said his prayers regularly and devoutly, had a profound reverence for the clergy, and firmly believed every thing that was the fashion in those days?

^m Memoirs of his own time, which Mr. Walpole was then writing.

When you have done impeaching my Lord Lovat, I hope to hear de vos nouvelles, and moreover, whether you have got Colonel Conway yet? Whether Sir C. Williams is to go to Berlin? What sort of a prince Mitrirate may be?—and whatever other tidings you choose to refresh an anchoret with. Frattanto I send you a scene in a tragedyⁿ: if it don't make you cry, it will make you laugh; and so it moves some passion, that I take to be enough. Adieu, dear Sir!

I am sincerely yours.

LETTER XXVI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Dec. 19, 1752.

HAVE you read Madame de Maintenon's letters? They are undoubtedly genuine; they begin very early in her life, before she married Scarron, and continue after the king's death to within a little while of her own: they bear all the marks of a noble spirit (in her adversity particularly) of virtue and unaffected devotion; insomuch, that I am almost persuaded she was actually married to Lewis the XIVth. and never his mistress: and this not out of any policy or ambition, but conscience: for she was what we should call a bigot, yet with great good sense: in short, she was too good for a court. Misfortunes in the beginning of her life had formed her mind (naturally lively and impatient) to reflection and a habit of piety. She was always miserable while she had the care of Madame de Montespan's children; timid and very cautious of making ⁿ The first scene in Mr. Gray's unfinished Tragedy of Agrippina. See vol. I.

use of that unlimited power she rose to afterwards, for fear of trespassing on the King's friendship for her; and after his death not at all afraid of meeting her own.

I do not know what to say to you with regard to Racine; it sounds to me as if any body should fall upon Shakespear, who indeed lies infinitely more open to criticism of all kinds; but I should not care to be the person that undertook it. If you do not like Athaliah or Britannicus, there is no more to be said, I have done^o.

Bishop Hall's Satires, called Virgidemiæ, are lately republished. They are full of spirit and poetry; as much of the first as Dr. Donne, and far more of the latter: they were written at the University when he was about twenty-three years old, and in Queen Elizabeth's time.

You do not say whether you have read the Crito^p.

^o After some general remarks on the genius and writings of Racine, the lively translator of Aristotle's Poetics says, in reference to this place, "I have often wondered what it was that could attach Mr. Gray so strongly to a poet, whose genius was so little analogous to his own. I confess I cannot, even in the dramatic fragment given us by Mr. Mason, discover any other resemblance to Racine than in the length of the speeches. Its fault, indeed, is Racine's: its beauties are surely of a higher order. What pity that a work should have been smothered in its birth, by a little cold and trifling criticism!"—We have, indeed, been told, that "it was certainly no loss to the English stage, that Agrippina was never finished:" but we have been told it by the same critic who has pronounced also, that the Bard of Gray only endeavours at sublimity; who saw in the juvenile poems of Milton "no promise of Paradise Lost;" and who has admitted, with seeming complacency, into the catalogue of English Poets, such names as Blackmore, Yalden, and Pomfret—

"Alcandrumque Haliumque Næmonaque Prytanimque."—ED.

^p Of Plato.

I only recommend the dramatic part of the Phædo to you, not the argumentative. The subject of the Erastæ is good ; it treats of that peculiar character and turn of mind which belongs to a true philosopher, but it is shorter than one would wish. The Euthyphro I would not read at all.

LETTER XXVII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE

Stoke, Jan. 1753.

I AM at present at Stoke, to which place I came at half an hour's warning upon the news I received of my mother's illness, and did not expect to have found her alive ; but when I arrived she was much better, and continues so. I shall therefore be very glad to make you a visit at Strawberry-hill, whenever you give me notice of a convenient time. I am surprised at the print^a, which far surpasses my idea of London gravings : the drawing itself was so finished, that I suppose it did not require all the art I had imagined to copy it tolerably. My aunts seeing me open your letter, took ^a A proof print of the Cul de Lampe, which Mr. Bentley designed for the Elegy in a Country Churchyard, and which represents a village-funeral ; this occasioned the pleasant mistake of his two aunts. The remainder of the letter relates entirely to the projected publication of Mr. Bentley's designs, which were printed after by Dodsley this same year. The latter part of it, where he so vehemently declares against having his head prefixed to that work, will appear highly characteristic to those readers who were personally acquainted with Mr. Gray. The print, which was taken from an original picture, painted by Echart, in Mr. Walpole's possession, was actually more than half engraved ; but afterwards on this account suppressed.—M.

it to be a burying-ticket, and asked whether any body had left me a ring; and so they still conceive it to be, even with all their spectacles on. Heaven forbid they should suspect it to belong to any verses of mine, they would burn me for a poet. On my own part I am satisfied, if this design of yours succeed so well as you intend it; and yet I know it will be accompanied with something not at all agreeable to me.—While I write this, I receive your second letter.—Sure, you are not out of your wits! This I know, if you suffer my head to be printed, you will infallibly put me out of mine. I conjure you immediately to put a stop to any such design. Who is at the expense of engraving it, I know not; but if it be Dodsley, I will make up the loss to him. The thing as it was, I know, will make me ridiculous enough; but to appear in proper person, at the head of my works, consisting of half a dozen Ballads in thirty pages, would be worse than the pillory. I do assure you, if I had received such a book, with such a frontispiece, without any warning, I believe it would have given me a palsy: therefore I rejoice to have received this notice, and shall not be easy till you tell me all thoughts of it are laid aside. I am extremely in earnest, and cannot bear even the idea.

I had written to Dodsley if I had not received yours, to tell him how little I liked the title which he meant to prefix; but your letter has put all that out of my head. If you think it necessary to print these explanations^r for the use of people that have no eyes, I should be glad to have them a little altered. I am, to my shame, in your debt for a long letter; but I cannot think of any thing else till you have set me at ease on this matter.

^r See the above-mentioned designs, where the explanations here alluded to are inserted.—M.

LETTER XXVIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

Durham, Dec. 26, 1753.

A LITTLE while before I received your melancholy letter, I had been informed by Mr. Charles Avison of one of the sad events you mention^s. I know what it is to lose persons that one's eyes and heart have long been used to; and I never desire to part with the remembrance of that loss, nor would wish you should. It is something that you had a little time to acquaint yourself with the idea beforehand; and that your father suffered but little pain, the only thing that makes death terrible. After I have said this, I cannot help expressing my surprise at the disposition he has made of his affairs. I must (if you will suffer me to say so) call it great weakness; and yet perhaps your affliction for him is heightened by that very weakness; for I know it is possible to feel an additional sorrow for the faults of those we have loved, even where that fault has been greatly injurious to ourselves. Let me desire you not to expose yourself to any further danger in the midst of that scene of sickness and death; but withdraw as soon as possible to some place at a little distance in the country: for I do not, in the least, like the situation you are in. I do not attempt to console you on the situation your fortune is left in ; if it were far worse, the good opinion I have of you tells me, you will never the sooner do any thing mean or unworthy of yourself ; and consequently I cannot pity you on this account, but I sincerely do the new loss you have had of a good and friendly man, whose memory I honour. I have seen the scene you describe, and know how dreadful it is ; I know too I am the better for it. We are all idle and thoughtless things, and have no sense, no use in the world any longer than that sad impression lasts ; the deeper it is engraved the better.

^s The death of my father, and of Dr. Marmaduke Pricket, a young physician of my own age, with whom I was brought up from my infancy, who died of the same infectious fever.—M.

LETTER XXIX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WHARTON.

Stoke, Sept. 18, 1754.

I AM glad you enter into the spirit of Strawberry-castle ; it has a purity and propriety of gothicism in it (with very few exceptions) that I have not seen elsewhere. My Lord Radnor's vagaries I see did not keep you from doing justice to his situation, which far surpasses every thing near it ; and I do not know a more laughing scene than that about Twickenham and Richmond. Dr. Akenside, I perceive, is no conjurer in architecture ; especially when he talks of the ruins of Persepolis, which are no more gothic than they are Chinese. The Egyptian style (see Dr. Pococke, not his discourses, but his prints) was apparently the mother of the Greek ; and there is such a similitude between the Egyptian and those Persian ruins, as gave Diodorus room to affirm, that the old buildings of Persia were certainly performed by Egyptian artists : as to the other part of your friend's opinion, that the gothic manner is the Saracen or Moorish, he has a great authority to support him, that of Sir Christopher Wren ; and yet I cannot help thinking it undoubtedly wrong. The palaces in Spain I never saw but in description, which gives us little or no idea of things ; but the Doge's palace at Venice I have seen, which is in the Arabesque manner : and the houses of Barbary you may see in Dr. Shaw's book, not to mention abundance of other Eastern buildings in Turkey, Persia, &c. that we have views of ; and they seem plainly to be corruptions of the Greek architecture, broke into little parts indeed, and covered with little ornaments, but in a taste very distinguishable from that which we call gothic. There is one thing that runs through the Moorish buildings that an imitator would certainly have been first struck with, and would have tried to copy ; and that is the cupolas which cover every thing, baths, apartments, and even kitchens ; yet who ever saw a gothic cupola ? It is a thing plainly of Greek original. I do not see any thing but the slender spires that serve for steeples, which may perhaps be borrowed from the Saracen minarets on their mosques.

I take it ill you should say any thing against the Mole, it is a reflection I see cast at the Thames. Do you think that rivers, which have lived in London and its neighbourhood all their days, will run roaring and tumbling about like your tramontane torrents in the North ? No, they only glide and whisper.

LETTER XXX.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Cambridge, March 9, 1755.

* * * * *

I do not pretend to humble any one's pride; I love my own too well to attempt it. As to mortifying their vanity, it is too easy and too mean a task for me to delight in. You are very good in shewing so much sensibility on my account: but be assured my taste for praise is not like that of children for fruit; if there were nothing but medlars and black-berries in the world, I could be very well content to go without any at all. I dare say that Mason, though some years younger than I, was as little elevated with the approbation of Lord * * and Lord * *, as I am mortified by their silence.

With regard to publishing, I am not so much against the thing itself, as of publishing this Ode alone. I have two or three ideas more in my head; what is to come of them? must they too come out in the shape of little sixpenny flams, dropping one after another till Mr. Dodsley thinks fit to collect them with Mr. This's Song, and Mr. Tother's Epigram, into a pretty volume? I am sure Mason must be sensible of this, and therefore cannot mean what he says; neither am I quite of your opinion with regard to strophe and antistrophe^u setting ^t This Letter commenced with the Ode on the Progress of Poesy.

^u He often made the same remark to me in conversation, which led me to form the last Ode of Caractacus in shorter stanzas: but we must not imagine that he thought the regular Pindaric method without its use; though, as he justly says, when formed in long stanzas, aside the difficulty of execution, methinks it has little or no effect on the ear, which scarce perceives the regular return of metres at so great a distance from one another: to make it succeed, I am persuaded the stanzas must not consist of above nine lines each at the most. Pindar has several such odes.

[Mr. Gray intimates, in the foregoing letter, that he had two or three more lyrical ideas in his head: one of these was the BARD, the exordium of which was at this time finished; I say finished, because his conceptions, as well as his manner of disposing them, were so singularly exact, that he had seldom occasion to make many, except verbal emendations, after he had first committed his lines to paper. It was never his method to sketch his general design in careless verse^x, he always finished it does not fully succeed in point of effect on the ear: for there was nothing which he more disliked than that chain of irregular stanzas which Cowley introduced, and falsely called Pindaric; and which, from the extreme facility of execution, produced a number of miserable imitators. Had the regular return of strophe, antistrophe, and epode no other merit than that of extreme difficulty, it ought, on this very account, to be valued; because we well know that "easy writing is no easy reading." It is also to be remarked, that Mr. Congreve, who (though without any lyrical powers) first introduced the regular Pindaric form into the English language, made use of the short stanzas which Mr. Gray here recommends. See his Ode to the Queen: Works, vol. III. p. 438. Ed. Birm.—M.

^x I have many of his critical letters by me on my own compositions: letters which, though they would not much amuse the public in general, contain excellent lessons for young poets: from one of these I extract the following passage, which seems to explain this matter more fully: "Extreme conciseness of expression, yet pure, perspicuous, and musical, is one of the grand beauties of lyric poetry: this I have always aimed at, and could never attain. The necessity of rhyming is one great obstacle to it: another, and perhaps a stronger, is that way you have chosen, of casting down your as he proceeded; this, though it made his execution slow, made his compositions more perfect. I think, however, that this method was only calculated to produce such short works as generally employed his poetical pen; and that from pursuing it, he grew tired of his larger designs before he had completed them. The fact seems to justify my opinion.—M. [Another of the ideas, first thoughts carelessly and at large, and then clipping them here and there at leisure. This method, after all possible pains, will leave behind it a laxity, a diffuseness. The frame of a thought (otherwise well-invented, well-turned, and well-placed) is often weakened by it. Do I talk nonsense? or do you understand me? I am persuaded what I say is true in my head, whatever it may be in prose; for I do not pretend to write prose." Nothing can be more just than this remark: yet, as I say above, it is a mode of writing which is only calculated for smaller compositions: but Mr. Gray, though he applied it here to an Ode, was apt to think it a general rule. Now if an epic or dramatic poet was to resolve to finish every part of his work as highly as we have seen Mr. Gray laboured his first scene of Agrippina, I am apt to think he would tire of it as soon as our Author did; for in the course of so multifarious a work, he would find himself obliged to expunge some of the best written parts, in order to preserve the unity of the whole. I know only one way to prevent this, and that was the method which Racine followed, who, (as his son tells us, in that amusing life, though much zested with bigotry, which he has given us of his father,) when he began a drama, disposed every part of it accurately in prose; and when he had connected all the scenes together, used to say, "Ma tragedie est faite." (See La vie de Jean Racine, p. 117. See also his son's other works, tom. 2d. for a specimen in the first act of the Iphigenia in Tauris.) M. Racine, it seems, was an easy versifier in a language in which, they say, it is more difficult than in ours to versify. It certainly is so, with regard to dramatic compositions. I am on this account persuaded, that if the great poet had written in English, he would have drawn out his first sketches, not in prose, but in careless blank verse; yet this I give as mere matter of opinion.—M.

alluded to in the preceding letter, was unquestionably the fragment entitled an Ode on Vicissitude.]—ED.

* * * * *

[A third of these ideas I find in his common-place book, on the same page with his argument for the BARD². I do not believe that he ever even began to compose the Ode itself, but the thought is as follows :

“ All that men of power can do for men of genius, is to leave them at their liberty, compared to birds that, when confined to a cage, do but regret the loss of their freedom in melancholy strains, and lose the luscious wildness and happy luxuriance of their notes, which used to make the woods resound.”

Those who are conversant in the arrangement of a lyrical composition, will easily perceive, from this short argument, that the Ode would have opened with a simile ; which, when adorned with those “ thoughts that breathe and words that burn,” that Mr. Gray’s muse could so richly supply, would have been at once a fine exordium, and at the same time a natural introduction to the truth he meant to impress. This, however, could hardly have been done without some little aid borrowed from satire : for however true his proposition may be, that “ all that men of power can do for men of genius is to leave them at their liberty ;” or, as I should put it, “ that their best patronage signifies nothing if it abridges them of that liberty ;” yet the fact is, that neither of the parties are convinced of this ^y Mr. Gray had already transmitted this Ode in an unfinished state to his friend Dr. Wharton, and Mitford has published some additional letters containing remarks upon it.—ED.

² I shall insert this, with some remarks upon it, in my additional notes to his Poems.—M.

truth till they have tried the experiment, and find some reason or other (no matter whether good or bad) to think they had better never have tried it. Mons. d'Alembert, who has written an excellent essay on this subject, which Mr. Gray greatly admired, and which perhaps gave him the first idea of this intended Ode, puts one of the more common of these reasons in so lively a manner, that it may not be amiss here to insert it.

“ Parmi les grands seigneurs les plus affables il en est peu qui se depouillent avec des gens de lettres de leur grandeur, vraie ou pretendue, jusqu'au point de l'oublier tout-a-fait. C'est ce qu'on apperçoit sur tout dans les conversations, où l'on n'est pas de leur avis. Il semble qu'à mesure que l'homme d'esprit s'eclipse, l'homme de qualité se montre; et paroisse exiger la deference dont l'homme d'esprit avoit commencé par dispenser. Aussi le commerce intime des grands avec les gens de lettres ne finit que trop souvent par quelque rupture eclatante; rupture qui vient presque toujours de l'oubli des regards reciproques auxquelles on a manqué de part ou d'autre, peut etre même des deux côtés^a.” However, I think a man of letters ought to have other reasons besides this for breaking such a connexion after it has been once formed.

I have now given the reader the best account in my power of what our Author's unfinished lyrical ideas consisted: I believe they are all that he in any sort committed to paper, and probably those which he immediately alluded to in the preceding letter.]—M.

^a Essai sur la Société des Grands, avec les Gens de Lettres; “ Melanges de Litterature et Philosophie,” tom. 2d. p. 134.

LETTER XXXI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. STONHEWER^b.August 21, 1755.

I THANK you for your intelligence about Herculaneum, which was the first news I received of it.
I have since turned over Monsignor Baiardi's book^c, where I have learned how many grains of modern wheat the Roman Congius, in the capitol, holds, and how many thousandth parts of an inch the Greek foot consisted of more (or less, for I forget which) than our own. He proves also by many affecting examples, that an antiquary may be mistaken: that, for any thing any body knows, this place under ground might be some other place, and not Herculaneum; but nevertheless, that he can shew for certain, that it was this place and no other place; that it is hard to say which of the several Hercules's was the founder; therefore (in the third volume) he promises to give us the Memoirs of them all; and after that, if we do not know what to think of the matter, he will tell us. There is a great deal of wit too, and satire and verses, in the book, which is intended chiefly for the information of the French king, who will be greatly edified without doubt.

I am much obliged to you also for Voltaire's perform-

^b Auditor of Excise. His friendship with Mr. Gray commenced at college, and continued till the death of the latter.—M.

^c I believe the book here ridiculed was published by the authority of the King of Naples. But afterwards, on finding how ill qualified the author was to execute the task, the business of describing the antiquities found at Herculaneum was put into other hands; who have certainly, as far as they have gone, performed it much better.—M.

ance; it is very unequal, as he is apt to be in all but his dramas, and looks like the work of a man that will admire his retreat and his Leman-Lake no longer than till he finds an opportunity to leave it^d: however, though there be many parts which I do not like, yet it is in several places excellent, and every where above mediocrity. As you have the politeness to pretend impatience, and desire I would communicate, and all that, I annex a piece of the prophecy^e; which must be true at least, as it was wrote so many hundred years after the events.

LETTER XXXII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Pembroke-hall, March 25, 1756.

THOUGH I had no reasonable excuse for myself before I received your last letter, yet since that time I have had a pretty good one; having been taken up in quarrelling with Peter-house^f, and in removing myself

^d I do not recollect the title of this Poem, but it was a small one which M. de Voltaire wrote when he first settled at Ferney. By the long residence he has since made there, it appears either that our Author was mistaken in his conjecture, or that an opportunity of leaving it had not yet happened.

^e The second antistrophe and epode, with a few lines of the third strophe of his Ode, entitled the Bard, were here inserted.

^f The reason of Mr. Gray's changing his college, which is here only glanced at, was in few words this: two or three young men of fortune, who lived in the same stair-case, had for some time intentionally disturbed him with their riots, and carried their ill behaviour so far as frequently to awaken him at midnight. After having borne with their insults longer than might reasonably have been from thence to Pembroke. This may be looked upon as a sort of æra in a life so barren of events as mine; yet I shall treat it in Voltaire's manner, and only tell you that I left my lodgings because the rooms were noisy, and the people of the house uncivil. This is all I would choose to have said about it; but if you in private should be curious enough to enter into a particular detail of facts and minute circumstances, the bearer, who was witness to them, will probably satisfy you. All I shall say more is, that I am for the present extremely well lodged here, and as quiet as in the Grand Chartreuse; and that every body (even Dr. Long himself) are as civil as they could be to Mary of Valens^g in person.

With regard to any advice I can give you about your being physician to the hospital, I frankly own it ought to give way to a much better judge, especially so disinterested a one as Dr. Heberden. I love refusals no more than you do. But as to your fears of effluvia, I maintain that one sick rich patient has more of pestilence and putrefaction about him, than a whole ward of sick poor.

The similitude between the Italian republics and those of ancient Greece has often struck me, as it does you. I do not wonder that Sully's Memoirs have highly entertained you; but cannot agree with you in thinking him or his master two of the best men in the world.

expected even from a man of less warmth of temper, Mr. Gray complained to the governing part of the society; and not thinking that his remonstrance was sufficiently attended to, quitted the college. The slight manner in which he mentions this affair, when writing to one of his most intimate friends, certainly does honour to the placability of his disposition.—M.

^g Foundress of the college.

The King was indeed one of the best-natured men that ever lived ; but it is owing only to chance that his intended marriage with Madame d'Estreés, or with the Marquise de Verneuil, did not involve him and the kingdom in the most inextricable confusion ; and his design upon the Princess of Condé (in his old age) was worse still. As to the minister, his base application to Concini, after the murder of Henry, has quite ruined him in my esteem, and destroyed all the merit of that honest surly pride for which I honoured him before ; yet I own that as kings and ministers go, they were both extraordinary men. Pray look at the end of Birch's State Papers of Sir J. Edmonds, for the character of the French court at that time ; it is written by Sir George Carew.

You should have received Mason's present^h last Saturday. I desire you to tell me your critical opinion of the new Odes, and also whether you have found out two lines which he has inserted in his third to a friend, which are superlativeⁱ. We do not expect the world, which is just going to be invaded, will bestow much attention on them ; if you hear any thing, you will tell us.

^h The four Odes which I had just published separately.

ⁱ I should leave the reader to guess (if he thought it worth his while) what this couplet was, which is here commended so much beyond its merit, did not the Ode conclude with a compliment to Mr. Gray, in which part he might probably look for it, as those lines were written with the greater care. To secure, therefore, my friend from any imputation of vanity, whatever becomes of myself, I shall here insert the passage.

“ While through the west, where sinks the crimson day,
 “ Meek twilight slowly sails, and waves her banners gray.”—M.

LETTER XXXIII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

June 14, 1756.

THOUGH I allow abundance for your kindness and partiality to me, I am yet much pleased with the good opinion you seem to have of the Bard: I have not, however, done a word more than the little you have seen, having been in a very listless, unpleasant, and inutile state of mind for this long time, for which I shall beg you to prescribe me somewhat strengthening and agglutinant, lest it turn to a confirmed pthisis.

I recommend two little French books to you, one called Memoires de M. de la Porte; it has all the air of simplicity and truth, and contains some few very extraordinary facts relating to Anne of Austria and Cardinal Mazarine. The other is in two small volumes, Memoires de Madame Staal. The facts are no great matter, but the manner and vivacity make them interesting. She was a sort of confidante to the late Duchess of Maine, and imprisoned a long time on her account during the regency.

I ought before now to have thanked you for your kind offer, which I mean soon to accept, for a reason which to be sure can be none to you and Mrs. Wharton; and therefore I think it my duty to give you notice of it. I have told you already of my mental ailments; and it is a very possible thing also that I may be bodily ill again in town, which I would not choose to be in a dirty inconvenient lodging, where, perhaps, my nurse might stifle me with a pillow; and therefore it is no wonder if I prefer your house: but I tell you of this in time, that if either of you are frightened at the thoughts of a sick body, you may make a handsome excuse and save yourselves this trouble. You are not however to imagine my illness is in esse ; no, it is only in posse ; otherwise I should be scrupulous of bringing it home to you. I think I shall be with you in about a fortnight^k.

LETTER XXXIV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

Stoke, July 25, 1756.

I FEEL a contrition for my long silence ; and yet perhaps it is the last thing you trouble your head about. Nevertheless I will be as sorry as if you took it ill. I am sorry too to see you so punctilious as to stand upon answers, and never to come near me till I have regularly left my name at your door, like a mercer's wife, that imitates people who go a visiting. I would forgive you this, if you could possibly suspect I were doing any thing that I liked better ; for then your formality might look like being piqued at my negligence, which has somewhat in it like kindness : but you know I am at Stoke, hearing, seeing, doing absolutely nothing. Not such a nothing as you do at Tunbridge, chequered and diversified with a succession of fleeting colours ; but heavy, lifeless, without form and void ; sometimes almost as black as the moral of Voltaire's Lisbon^l which angers you so. I have had no more muscular inflations, ^k Mr. Mitford has shown that the order of the paragraphs, in this letter, is very much altered from the original ; some passages being taken from letters of a different date, and others being transposed, and this without any apparent object.—ED.

^l His Poem sur la Destruction de Lisbon, published about that time.

and am only troubled with this depression of mind. You will not expect therefore I should give you any account of my verve, which is at best (you know) of so delicate a constitution, and has such weak nerves, as not to stir out of its chamber above three days in a year. But I shall inquire after yours, and why it is off again? It has certainly worse nerves than mine, if your reviewers have frightened it. Sure I (not to mention a score of your other critics) am something a better judge than all the man-midwives and presbyterian parsons^m that ever were born. Pray give me leave to ask you, do you find yourself tickled with the commendations of such people? (for you have your share of these too) I dare say not; your vanity has a better taste. And can then the censure of such critics move you? I own it is an impertinence in these gentry to talk of one at all either in good or in bad; but this we must also swallow: I mean not only we that write, but all the we's that ever did any thing to be talked of.

While I am writing I receive yours, and rejoice to find that the genial influences of this fine season, which produce nothing in me, have hatched high and unimaginable fantasies in youⁿ. I see, methinks, as I sit on Snowdon, some glimpse of Mona and her haunted shades, and hope we shall be very good neighbours. Any druidical anecdotes that I can meet with, I will be sure to send you when I return to Cambridge; but I cannot pretend to be learned without books, or to know the Druids from modern Bishops at this distance. I can

^m The reviewers, at the time, were supposed to be of these professions.—M.

ⁿ I had sent him my first idea of Caractacus, drawn out in a short argument.—M.

only tell you not to go and take Mona for the Isle of Man: it is Anglesey, a tract of plain country, very fertile, but picturesque only from the view it has of Caernarvonshire, from which it is separated by the Menai, a narrow arm of the sea. Forgive me for supposing in you such a want of erudition.

I congratulate you on our glorious successes in the Mediterranean. Shall we go in time, and hire a house together in Switzerland? It is a fine poetical country to look at, and nobody there will understand a word we say or write.

LETTER XXXV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

Cambridge, May, 1757.

You are so forgetful of me that I should not forgive it, but that I suppose Caractacus may be the better for it. Yet I hear nothing from him neither, in spite of his promises: there is no faith in man, no not in a Welchman; and yet Mr. Parryⁿ has been here, and scratched out such ravishing blind harmony, such tunes of a thousand years old, with names enough to choak you, as have set all this learned body a dancing, and inspired them with due reverence for my old Bard, his countryman, whenever he shall appear. Mr. Parry, you must know, has put my Ode in motion again, and has brought it at last to a conclusion. 'Tis to him, therefore, that you owe the treat which I send you inclosed; namely, the breast and merry-thought, and rump too ⁿ A capital performer on the Welsh harp, and who was either born blind, or had been so from his infancy.—M.

of the chicken which I have been chewing so long, that I would give the world for neck-beef or cow-heel.

You will observe, in the beginning of this thing, some alterations of a few words, partly for improvement, and partly to avoid repetitions of like words and rhymes ; yet I have not got rid of them all ; the six last lines of the fifth stanza are new, tell me whether they will do. I am well aware of many weakly things towards the conclusion, but I hope the end itself will do ; give me your full and true opinion, and that not upon deliberation, but forthwith. Mr. Hurd himself allows that Lyon port is not too bold for Queen Elizabeth.

I have got the old Scotch Ballad on which Douglas^o was founded ; it is divine, and as long as from hence to Aston. Have you never seen it ? Aristotle's best rules are observed in it, in a manner that shews the author had never read Aristotle. It begins in the fifth act of the play : you may read it two-thirds through without guessing what it is about ; and yet, when you come to the end, it is impossible not to understand the whole story. I send you the two first stanzas.

* * * *

^o He had a high opinion of this first drama of Mr. Home. In a letter to another friend, dated August 10, this year, he says, " I am greatly struck with the tragedy of Douglas, though it has infinite faults : the author seems to me to have retrieved the true language of the stage, which had been lost for these hundred years ; and there is one scene (between Matilda and the old peasant) so masterly, that it strikes me blind to all the defects in the world." The Ballad, which he here applauds, is to be found in Mr. Percy's Reliques of Ancient Poetry, vol. III. p. 89, a work published after the date of this letter.—M.

LETTER XXXVI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Stoke, July 11, 1757.

I WILL not give you the trouble of sending your chaise for me. I intend to be with you on Wednesday in the evening. If the press stands still all this time for me, to be sure it is dead in child-bed.

I do not love notes, though you see I had resolved to put two or three^p. They are signs of weakness and obscurity. If a thing cannot be understood without them, it had better be not understood at all. If you will be vulgar and pronounce it Lunnun, instead of London^q, I can't help it. Caradoc I have private reasons against; and besides it is in reality Carādoc, and will not stand in the verse^r.

I rejoice you can fill all your vuides; the Maintenon could not, and that was her great misfortune. Seriously though, I congratulate you on your happiness, and seem to understand it. The receipt is obvious; it is only, have something to do; but how few can apply it. Adieu!

LETTER. XXXVII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

I AM so charmed with the two specimens of Erse poetry, that I cannot help giving you the trouble

^p To the Bard.

^q "Ye Towers of Julius! London's lasting shame." Bard, v. 87.

^r Verse 102 of the Bard originally stood thus;

"Leave your despairing Caradoc to mourn."

to inquire a little farther about them, and should wish to see a few lines of the original, that I may form some slight idea of the language, the measures, and the rhythm.

Is there any thing known of the author or authors, and of what antiquity are they supposed to be?

Is there any more to be had of equal beauty, or at all approaching to it?

I have been often told that the Poem called Hardicanute (which I always admired, and still admire) was the work of somebody that lived a few years ago. This I do not at all believe, though it has evidently been retouched in places by some modern hand: but, however, I am authorised by this report to ask, whether the two poems in question are certainly antique and genuine. I make this inquiry in quality of an antiquary, and am not otherwise concerned about it: for if I were sure that any one now living in Scotland had written them to divert himself, and laugh at the credulity of the world, I would undertake a journey into the Highlands only for the pleasure of seeing him.

LETTER XXXVIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

I HAVE been very ill this week with a great cold and a fever, and though now in a way to be well, am like to be confined some days longer: whatever you will send me that is new, or old, and long, will be received as a charity. Rousseau's people do not interest me; there is but one character and one style in them all, I do not know their faces asunder. I have no esteem for their persons or conduct, am not touched with their passions; and, as to their story, I do not believe a word of it—not because it is improbable, but because it is absurd. If I had any little propensity, it was to Julie; but now she has gone and (so hand over head) married that Monsieur de Wolmar, I take her for a vraie Suisse, and do not doubt but she had taken a cup too much like her lover^s. All this does not imply that I will not read it out, when you can spare the rest of it.

LETTER XXXIX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. HURD^t.

Stoke, Aug. 25, 1757.

I DO not know why you should thank me for what you had a right and title to^u; but attribute it to the excess of your politeness; and the more so because almost no one has made me the same compliment. As your acquaintance in the University (you say) do me the honour to admire, it would be ungenerous in me not to give them notice, that they are doing a very unfashionable thing; for all people of condition are agreed not to admire, nor even to understand. One very great man, writing to an acquaintance of his and mine, says

^s Were we not in possession of Mr. Gray's opinion of the Nouvelle Heloise, (see Letter p. 54.) how would such a criticism, from such a critic, astonish all those more happily constituted readers, who, capable of appreciating varied excellence, have perhaps read with equal delight the exquisite Odes of the one author, and the extraordinary and (with all its faults) inimitable Romance of the other!—M.

^t Afterwards Bishop of Litchfield and Coventry.

^u Mr. Gray had just sent him his Ode on the Progress of Poetry and the Bard.

that he had read them seven or eight times ; and that now, when he next sees him, he shall not have above thirty questions to ask. Another (a peer) believes that the last stanza of the second Ode relates to King Charles the First and Oliver Cromwell. Even my friends tell me they do not succeed, and write me moving topics of consolation on that head. In short, I have heard of nobody but an actor and a doctor of divinity that profess their esteem for them^x. Oh yes, a lady of quality, (a friend of Mason's,) who is a great reader. She knew there was a compliment to Dryden, but never suspected there was any thing said about Shakespear or Milton, till it was explained to her ; and wishes that there had been titles prefixed to tell what they were about.

From this mention of Mason's name you may think, perhaps, we are great correspondents. No such thing ; I have not heard from him these two months. I will be sure to scold in my own name, as well as in yours. I rejoice to hear you are so ripe for the press, and so ^x This was written August 25, 1757. An extract from a letter of Mr. Gray to Dr. Wharton, dated October 7, 1757, mentions another admirer, whom he knew how to value. " Dr. Warburton is come to town, and I am told likes them extremely : he says the world never passed so just an opinion upon any thing as upon them ; for that in other things they have affected to like or dislike : whereas here they own they do not understand, which he looks upon to be very true ; but yet thinks they understand them as well as Milton or Shakespear, whom they are obliged, by fashion, to admire. Mr. Garrick's complimentary verses to me you have seen ; I am told they were printed in the Chronicle of last Saturday. The Critical Review is in raptures ; but mistakes the Æolian lyre for the harp of Æolus, and on this pleasant error founds both a compliment and a criticism. This is all I have heard that signifies any thing."—M.

voluminous; not for my own sake only, whom you flatter with the hopes of seeing your labours, both public and private, but for yours too; for to be employed is to be happy. This principle of mine (and I am convinced of its truth) has, as usual, no influence on my practice. I am alone, and ennuyé to the last degree, yet do nothing. Indeed I have one excuse; my health (which you have so kindly inquired after) is not extraordinary, ever since I came hither. It is no great malady, but several little ones, that seem brewing no good to me. It will be a particular pleasure to me to hear whether Content dwells in Leicestershire, and how she entertains herself there. Only do not be too happy, nor forget entirely the quiet ugliness of Cambridge.

LETTER XL.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

Stoke, Sept. 28, 1757.

I HAVE (as I desired Mr. Stonhewer to tell you) read over Caractacus twice, not with pleasure only, but with emotion. You may say what you will; but the contrivance, the manners, the interests, the passions, and the expression, go beyond the dramatic part^v of

^v In the manuscript now before him, Mr. Gray had only the first Ode, the others were not then written; and, although the dramatic part was brought to a conclusion, yet it was afterwards in many places altered. He was mistaken with regard to the opinion the world would have about it. That world, which usually loves to be led in such matters, rather than form an opinion for itself, was taught a different sentiment; and one of its leaders went so far as to declare, that he never knew a second work fall so much below a first from the your Elfrida, many leagues. I even say (though you will think me a bad judge of this) that the world will like it better. I am struck with the chorus, who are not there merely to sing and dance, but bear throughout a principal part in the action; and have (beside the costume, which is excellent) as much a character of their own, as any other person. I am charmed with their priestly pride and obstinacy, when, after all is lost, they resolve to confront the Roman general, and spit in his face. But now I am going to tell you what touches me most from the beginning. The first opening is greatly improved: the curiosity of Didius is now a very natural reason for dwelling on each particular of the scene before him; nor is the description at all too long. I am glad to find the two young men are Cartismandua's sons. They interest me far more. I love people of condition. They were men before that nobody knew: one could not make them a bow if one had met them at a public place.

I always admired that interruption of the Druids to Evelina, "Peace, virgin, peace," &c. and chiefly the abstract idea personified (to use the words of a critic) at the end of it. That of Caractacus, "Would save my queen," &c. and still more that, "I know it, reverend fathers, 'tis Heav'n's high will," &c. to "I've done, begin the rites!" This latter is exemplary for the expression; (always the great point with me;) I do not mean by expression the mere choice of words, same hand. To oppose Mr. Gray's judgment to his, I must own gives me some satisfaction; and to enjoy it I am willing to risk that imputation of vanity, which may probably fall to my share for having published this letter. I must add, however, that some of my friends advised it for the sake of the more general criticisms which they thought too valuable to be suppressed.—M.

but the whole dress, fashion, and arrangement of a thought. Here, in particular, it is the brokenness, the ungrammatical position, the total subversion of the period that charms me. All that ushers in the incantation from "Try we yet, what holiness can do," I am delighted with in quite another way; for this is pure poetry, as it ought to be, forming the proper transition, and leading on the mind to that still purer poetry that follows it.

In the beginning of the succeeding act I admire the chorus again, "Is it not now the hour, the holy hour," &c. and their evasion of a lie, "Say'st thou, proud boy," &c. and "sleep with the unsunn'd silver," which is an example of a dramatic simile. The sudden appearance of Caractacus, the pretended respect and admiration of Vellinus, and the probability of his story, the distrust of the Druids, and their reasoning with Caractacus, and particularly that "'Tis meet thou should'st, thou art a king," &c. and "Mark me, prince, the time will come, when destiny," &c. are well, and happily imagined. A-propos, of the last striking passage I have mentioned, I am going to make a digression.

When we treat a subject, where the manners are almost lost in antiquity, our stock of ideas must needs be small; and nothing betrays our poverty more, than the returning to, and harping frequently on, one image. It was therefore I thought you should omit some lines before, though good in themselves, about the scythed car, that the passage now before us might appear with greater lustre when it came; and in this I see you have complied with me. But there are other ideas here and there still, that occur too often, particularly about the oaks, some of which I would discard to make way for the rest.

But the subjects I speak of to compensate (and more than compensate) that unavoidable poverty, have one great advantage when they fall into good hands. They leave an unbounded liberty to pure imagination and fiction, (our favourite provinces,) where no critic can molest, or antiquary gainsay us; and yet (to please me) these fictions must have some affinity, some seeming connexion, with that little we really know of the character and customs of the people. For example, I never heard in my days that midnight and the moon were sisters; that they carried rods of ebony and gold, or met to whisper on the top of a mountain: but now I could lay my life it is all true; and do not doubt it will be found so in some pantheon of the Druids, that is to be discovered in the Library at Herculaneum. The "car of Destiny and Death," is a very noble invention of the same class, and as far as that goes, is so fine, that it makes me more delicate than perhaps I should be, about the close of it. "Andraste sailing on the wings of Fame," that snatches the wreaths from oblivion, to hang them on her loftiest amaranth, though a clear and beautiful piece of unknown mythology, has too Greek an air to give me perfect satisfaction.

Now I proceed. The preparation to the chorus, though so much akin to that in the former act, is excellent. The remarks of Evelina and her suspicions of the brothers, mixed with a secret inclination to the younger of them, (though, I think, her part throughout wants retouching,) yet please me much, and the contrivance of the following scene much more. "Masters of wisdom, no," &c. I always admired; as I do the rocking stone, and the distress of Elidurus. Evelina's examination of him is a well-invented scene, and will be, with a little pains, a very touching one; but the introduction of Arviragus is superlative. I am not sure whether those few lines of his short narrative, "My strength repair'd, it boots not, that I tell," &c. do not please me as much as any thing in the whole drama. The sullen bravery of Elidurus, the menaces of the chorus, that "Think not, religion," &c. the trumpet of the Druids, that "I'll follow him, though in my chains," &c. "Hast thou a brother? no," &c. the placability of the chorus, when they see the motives of Elidurus's obstinacy, give me great contentment: so do the reflections of the Druid on the necessity of lustration, and the reasons for Vellinus's easy escape; but I would not have him "seize on a spear," nor "issue hasty through the cavern's mouth." Why should he not steal away, unasked and unmissed, till the hurry of passions in those, that should have guarded him, was a little abated? But I chiefly admire the two speeches of Elidurus; "Ah, Vellinus, is this then," &c. and, "Ye do gaze on me, fathers," &c. the manner in which the chorus reply to him is very fine; but the image at the end wants a little mending. The next scene is highly moving! it is so very good, that I must have it made yet better.

Now for the last act. I do not know what you would have, but to me the design and contrivance of it is at least equal to any part of the whole. The short-lived triumph of the Britons, the address of Caractacus to the Roman victims, Evelina's discovery of the ambush, the mistake of the Roman fires for the rising sun, the death of Arviragus, the interview between Didius and Caractacus, his mourning over his dead son, his parting speech, (in which you have made all the use of Tacitus that your plan would admit,) every thing, in short, but that little dispute between Didius and him; "'Tis well; and therefore to increase that reverence," &c. down to, "Give me a moment," (which must be omitted, or put in the mouth of the Druids,) I approve in the highest degree. If I should find any fault with the last act, it could only be with trifles and little expressions. If you make any alterations, I fear it will never improve it; I mean as to the plan. I send you back the two last sheets, because you bid me. I reserve my nibblings and minutiae for another day.

LETTER XLI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

Cambridge, Dec. 19, 1775.

A LIFE spent out of the world has its hours of despondence, its inconveniences, its sufferings, as numerous and as real, though not quite of the same sort, as a life spent in the midst of it. The power we have, when we will exert it over our own minds, joined to a little strength and consolation, nay, a little pride we catch from those that seem to love us, is our only support in either of these conditions. I am sensible I cannot return you more of this assistance that I have received from you; and can only tell you, that one who has far more reason than you, I hope, ever will have to look on life with something worse than indifference, is yet no enemy to it; but can look backward on many bitter moments, partly with satisfaction, and partly with patience; and forward too, on a scene not very promising, with some hope, and some expectations of a better day. The cause, however, which occasioned your reflection, (though I can judge but very imperfectly of it,) does not seem, at present, to be weighty enough to make you take any such resolution as you meditate. Use it in its season as a relief from what is tiresome to you, but not as if it was in consequence of any thing you take ill; on the contrary, if such a thing had happened at the time of your transmigration, I would defer it merely to avoid that appearance.

As to myself, I cannot boast, at present, either of my spirits, my situation, my employments, or fertility. The days and nights pass, and I am never the nearer to any thing, but that one to which we are all tending; yet I love people that leave some traces of their journey behind them, and have strength enough to advise you to do so while you can. I expect to see Caractacus completed, and therefore I send you the books you wanted. I do not know whether they will furnish you with any new matter; but they are well enough written, and easily read. I told you before that (in a time of dearth) I would borrow from the Edda, without entering too minutely on particulars: but, if I did so, I would make each image so clear, that it might be fully understood by itself; for in this obscure mythology we must not hint at things, as we do with the Greek fables, that every body is supposed to know at school. However, on second thoughts, I think it would be still better to graft any wild picturesque fable, absolutely of one's own invention, on the Druid-stock; I mean on those half dozen of old fancies that are known to be a part of their system. This will give you more freedom and latitude, and will leave no hold for the critics to fasten on.

I send you back the *Elegy*² as you desired me to do.

² Elegy in the Garden of a Friend.

My advices are always at your service to take or to refuse, therefore you should not call them severe. You know I do not love, much less pique myself on criticism; and think even a bad verse as good a thing or better than the best observation that ever was made upon it. I like greatly the spirit and sentiment of it; (much of which you perhaps owe to your present train of thinking;) the disposition of the whole too is natural and elegiac; as to the expression, I would venture to say, (did not you forbid me,) that it is sometimes too easy. The last line I protest against; (this, you will say, is worse than blotting out rhymes;) the descriptive part is excellent.

Pray, when did I pretend to finish, or even insert passages into other people's works, as if it were equally easy to pick holes and to mend them? All I can say is, that your Elegy must not end with the worst line in it^a. It is flat; it is prose; whereas, that above all, ought to sparkle, or at least to shine. If the sentiment must stand, twirl it a little into an apophthegm; stick a flower in it; gild it with a costly expression; let it strike the fancy, the ear, or the heart, and I am satisfied.

The other particular expressions which I object to, I mark on the manuscript. Now, I desire you would neither think me severe, nor at all regard what I say further than as it coincides with your own judgment; for the child deserves your partiality: it is a healthy well-made boy, with an ingenuous countenance, and promises to live long. I would only wash its face, dress it a little, make it walk upright and strong, and keep it from learning paw words.

^a An attempt was accordingly made to improve it; how it stood when this criticism upon it was written, I cannot now recollect.—M.

I hope you couched my refusal^b to Lord John Cavendish in as respectful terms as possible, and with all due acknowledgments to the Duke. If you hear who it is to be given to, pray let me know; for I interest myself a little in the history of it, and rather wish somebody may accept it that will retrieve the credit of the thing, if it be retrievable, or ever had any credit. Rowe was, I think, the last man of character that had it; Eusden was a person of great hopes in his youth, though at last he turned out a drunken parson; Dryden was as disgraceful to the office, from his character, as the poorest scribbler could have been from his verses.

LETTER XLII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

February 21, 1758.

WOULD you know what I am doing? I doubt you have been told already, and hold my employments cheap enough: but every one must judge of his own capability, and cut his amusements according to his disposition. The drift of my present studies is to know, wherever I am, what lies within reach that may be worth seeing, whether it be building, ruin, park, garden, prospect, picture, or monument; to whom it does or has belonged, and what has been the characteristic and taste of different ages. You will say this is the object of all antiquaries ; but pray what antiquary ever saw these objects in the same light, or desired to know them for a like reason ? In short, say what you please, I am persuaded whenever my list^c is finished you will approve it, and think it of no small use. My spirits are very near the freezing point ; and for some hours of the day this exercise, by its warmth and gentle motion, serves to raise them a few degrees higher.

^b Of being Poet Laureat on the death of Cibber, which place the late Duke of Devonshire (then Lord Chamberlain) desired his brother to offer to Mr. Gray; and his Lordship had commissioned me (then in town) to write to him concerning it.—M.

I hope the misfortune that has befallen Mrs. Cibber's canary bird will not be the ruin of Agis : it is probable you will have curiosity enough to see it, as it is by the author of Douglas.

LETTER XLIII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Cambridge, March 8, 1758.

It is indeed for want of spirits, as you suspect, that my studies lie among the cathedrals, and the tombs, and the ruins. To think, though to little purpose, has been the chief amusement of my days ; and when I would not, or cannot think, I dream. At present I feel myself able to write a catalogue, or to read the Peerage

^c He wrote it, under its several divisions, on the blank pages of a pocket Atlas. I printed lately a few copies of this catalogue for the use of some friends curious in such matters ; and, when I am sufficiently furnished with their observations and improvements upon it, shall perhaps reprint it and give it to the public, as a shorter and more useful pocket companion to the English traveller than has hitherto appeared.—M.

The second edition was printed for sale in 1787.—ED.

book, or Miller's Gardening Dictionary, and am thankful that there are such employments and such authors in the world. Some people, who hold me cheap for this, are doing perhaps what is not half so well worth while. As to posterity, I may ask (with somebody whom I have forgot) what has it ever done to oblige me?

To make a transition from myself to as poor a subject, the tragedy of Agis; I cry to think that it should be by the author of Douglas: why, it is all modern Greek; the story is an antique statue painted white and red, frized, and dressed in a negligée made by a Yorkshire mantua-maker. Then here is the Miscellany, (Mr. Dodsley has sent me the whole set gilt and lettered, I thank him.) Why, the two last volumes are worse than the four first; particularly Dr. Akenside is in a deplorable way^d. What signifies learning and the ancients, (Mason will say triumphantly,) why should people read Greek to lose their imagination, their ear, and their mother tongue? But then there is Mr. Shenstone, who trusts to nature and simple sentiment, why does he do no better? he goes hopping along his own gravel-walks, and never deviates from the beaten paths for fear of being lost.

^d I have been told that this writer, unquestionably a man of great learning and genius, entertained, some years before his death, a notion, that poetry was only true eloquence in metre; and, according to this idea, wrote his Ode to the Country Gentlemen of England, and afterwards made considerable alterations in that Collection of Odes which he had published in the earlier part of his life. We have seen in the second letter of this Section, that Mr. Gray thought highly of his descriptive talents at that time. We are not therefore to impute what he here says to any prejudice in the critic, but to that change of taste in the poet, which (if the above anecdote be true) would unavoidably flatten his descriptions, and divest them of all

I have read Dr. Swift, and am disappointed^e. There is nothing of the negotiations that I have not seen better in M. de Torcy before. The manner is careless, and has little to distinguish it from common writers. I meet with nothing to please me but the spiteful characters of the opposite party and its leaders. I expected much more secret history.

LETTER XLIV.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Sunday, April 9, 1758.

I AM equally sensible of your affliction^f, and of your kindness, that made you think of me at such a moment; would to God I could lessen the one, or requite the other, with that consolation which I often have received from you when I most wanted it! but your grief is too just, and the cause of it too fresh, to admit of any such endeavour: what, indeed, is all human consolation? Can it efface every little amiable word or action of an object we loved, from our memory? Can it convince us, that all the hopes we had entertained, the plans of future satisfaction we had formed, were ill-grounded and vain, only because we have lost them? The only comfort (I am afraid) that belongs to our condition, is to reflect (when time has given us leisure for reflection) that others have suffered worse; or that we picturesque imagery; nay, would sometimes convert his verse into mere prose; or, what is worse, hard inflated prose.—M.

^e His History of the Four Last Years of Queen Anne.—M.

^f Occasioned by the death of his eldest (and at the time his only) son.—M.

ourselves might have suffered the same misfortune at times and in circumstances that would probably have aggravated our sorrow. You might have seen this poor child arrived at an age to fulfil all your hopes, to attach you more strongly to him by long habit, by esteem, as well as natural affection, and that towards the decline of your life, when we most stand in need of support, and when he might chance to have been your only support ; and then by some unforeseen and deplorable accident, or some painful lingering distemper, you might have lost him. Such has been the fate of many an unhappy father ! I know there is a sort of tenderness which infancy and innocence alone produce ; but I think you must own the other to be a stronger and a more overwhelming sorrow. Let me then beseech you to try, by every method of avocation and amusement, whether you cannot, by degrees, get the better of that dejection of spirits, which inclines you to see every thing in the worst light possible, and throws a sort of voluntary gloom, not only over your present, but future days ; as if even your situation now were not preferable to that of thousands round you ; and as if your prospect hereafter might not open as much of happiness to you as to any person you know : the condition of our life perpetually instructs us to be rather slow to hope, as well as to despair ; and (I know you will forgive me, if I tell you) you are often a little too hasty in both, perhaps from constitution ; it is sure we have great power over our own minds, when we choose to exert it ; and though it be difficult to resist the mechanic impulse and bias of our own temper, it is yet possible, and still more so, to delay those resolutions it inclines us to take, which we almost always have cause to repent.

You tell me nothing of Mrs. Wharton's or your own state of health : I will not talk to you more upon this subject till I hear you are both well ; for that is the grand point, and without it we may as well not think at all. You flatter me in thinking that any thing I can do^g, could at all alleviate the just concern your loss has given you ; but I cannot flatter myself so far, and know how little qualified I am at present to give any satisfaction to myself on this head, and in this way, much less to you. I by no means pretend to inspiration ; but yet I affirm, that the faculty, in question, is by no means voluntary ; it is the result (I suppose) of a certain disposition of mind, which does not depend on one's self, and which I have not felt this long time. You that are a witness how seldom this spirit has moved me in my life, may easily give credit to what I say.

LETTER XLV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. STONHEWER.

Cambridge, August 18, 1758.

I AM as sorry as you seem to be, that our acquaintance harped so much on the subject of materialism, when I saw him with you in town, because it was plain to which side of the long-debated question he inclined. That we are indeed mechanical and dependent beings, I need no other proof than my own feelings ; and from the same feelings I learn, with equal conviction, that we are not merely such : that there is a power within that struggles against the force and bias of that mechanism, commands its motion, and, by frequent practice, reduces it to that ready obedience which we call habit; and all this in conformity to a preconceived opinion, (no matter whether right or wrong,) to that least material of all agents, a thought. I have known many in his case who, while they thought they were conquering an old prejudice, did not perceive they were under the influence of one far more dangerous; one that furnishes us with a ready apology for all our worst actions, and opens to us a full licence for doing whatever we please; and yet these very people were not at all the more indulgent to other men, (as they naturally should have been,) their indignation to such as offended them, their desire of revenge on any body that hurt them was nothing mitigated: in short, the truth is, they wished to be persuaded of that opinion for the sake of its convenience, but were not so in their heart; and they would have been glad (as they ought in common prudence) that nobody else should think the same, for fear of the mischief that might ensue to themselves. His French author I never saw, but have read fifty in the same strain, and shall read no more. I can be wretched enough without them. They put me in mind of the Greek sophist that got immortal honour by discoursing so feelingly on the miseries of our condition, that fifty of his audience went home and hanged themselves; yet he lived himself (I suppose) many years after in very good plight.

* His friend had requested him to write an Epitaph on the child.—M.

You say you cannot conceive how Lord Shaftesbury came to be a philosopher in vogue; I will tell you: 1st, he was a lord; 2dly, he was as vain as any of his readers; 3dly, men are very prone to believe what they do not understand; 4thly, they will believe any thing at all, provided they are under no obligation to believe it; 5thly, they love to take a new road, even when that road leads no where; 6thly, he was reckoned a fine writer, and seemed always to mean more than he said. Would you have any more reasons? An interval of above forty years has pretty well destroyed the charm. A dead lord ranks but with commoners: vanity is no longer interested in the matter, for the new road is become an old one. The mode of free-thinking is like that of ruffs and farthingales, and has given place to the mode of not thinking at all; once it was reckoned graceful, half to discover and half conceal the mind, but now we have been long accustomed to see it quite naked: primness and affectation of style, like the good breeding of Queen Anne's court, has turned to hoydening and rude familiarity.

[It will, I think, be no improper supplement to the foregoing letter to insert a paper of Mr. Gray's, which contains some very pertinent strictures on the writings of a later lord, who was pleased to attack the moral attributes of the Deity, or, what amounted to the same thing, endeavoured to prove, "that we have no adequate ideas of his goodness and justice, as we have of his natural ones, his wisdom and power." This position the excellent author of the View of Lord Bolingbroke's Philosophy, calls the MAIN PILLAR of his system; and adds, in another place, that the FATE OF ALL RELIGION is included in this question. On this important point, therefore, that able writer has dwelt largely, and confuted his Lordship effectually. Some sort of readers, however, who probably would slight that confutation, may regard the arguments of a layman, and even a poet, more than those which are drawn up by the pen of a divine and a bishop: it is for the use of these that the paper is published ; who, if they learn nothing else from it, will find that Mr. Gray was not of their party, nor so great a wit as to disbelieve the existence of a Deity.]—M.

“ I will allow Lord Bolingbroke, that the moral, as well as physical, attributes of God must be known to us only à posteriori, and that this is the only real knowledge we can have either of the one or the other ; I will allow too, that perhaps it may be an idle distinction which we make between them : his moral attributes being as much in his nature and essence as those we call his physical ; but the occasion of our making some distinction is plainly this : his eternity, infinity, omniscience, and almighty power, are not what connect him, if I may so speak, with us his creatures. We adore him, not because he always did in every place, and always will, exist ; but because he gave, and still preserves to us, our own existence, by an exertion of his goodness. We adore him, not because he knows and can do all things, but because he made us capable of knowing and of doing what may conduct us to happiness : it is therefore his benevolence which we adore, not his greatness or power ; and if we are made only to bear our part in a system, without any regard to our own particular happiness, we can no longer worship him as our all-bounteous Parent : there is no meaning in the term. The idea of his malevolence (an impiety I tremble to write) must succeed. We have nothing left but our fears, and those too vain ; for whither can they lead but to despair, and the sad desire of annihilation ? ‘ If then, justice and goodness be not the same in God as in our ideas, we mean nothing when we say that God is necessarily just and good ; and for the same reason it may as well be said, that we know not what we mean when, according to Dr. Clarke, (Evid. 26th,) we affirm that he is necessarily a wise and intelligent Being.' What then can Lord Bolingbroke mean, when he says every thing shews the wisdom of God; and yet adds, every thing does not shew in like manner the goodness of God conformably to our ideas of this attribute in either? By wisdom he must only mean, that God knows and employs the fittest means to a certain end, no matter what that end may be: this indeed is a proof of knowledge and intelligence; but these alone do not constitute wisdom; the word implies the application of these fittest means to the best and kindest end: or, who will call it true wisdom? even amongst ourselves it is not held as such. All the attributes then that he seems to think apparent in the constitution of things, are his unity, infinity, eternity, and intelligence; from no one of which, I boldly affirm, can result any duty of gratitude or adoration incumbent on mankind, more than if He and all things round him were produced, as some have dared to think, by the necessary working of eternal matter in an infinite vacuum: for what does it avail to add intelligence to those other physical attributes, unless that intelligence be directed, not only to the good of the whole, but also to the good of every individual of which that whole is composed?

“ It is therefore no impiety, but the direct contrary, to say that human justice and the other virtues, which are indeed only various applications of human benevolence, bear some resemblance to the moral attributes of the Supreme Being: it is only by means of that resemblance, we conceive them in him, or their effects in his works: it is by the same means only, that we comprehend those physical attributes which his lordship allows to be demonstrable: how can we form any notion of his

unity, but from that unity of which we ourselves are conscious? How of his existence, but from our own consciousness of existing? How of his power, but of that power which we experience in ourselves? Yet neither Lord Bolingbroke, nor any other man, that thought on these subjects, ever believed that these our ideas were real and full representations of these attributes in the Divinity. They say he knows; they do not mean that he compares ideas which he acquired from sensation, and draws conclusions from them. They say he acts; they do not mean by impulse, nor as the soul acts on an organized body. They say he is omnipotent and eternal; yet on what are their ideas founded, but on our own narrow conceptions of space and duration, prolonged beyond the bounds of place and time? Either, therefore, there is a resemblance and analogy (however imperfect and distant) between the attributes of the Divinity and our conceptions of them, or we cannot have any conceptions of them at all: he allows we ought to reason from earth, that we do know, to heaven which we do not know; how can we do so but by that affinity which appears between one and the other?

“ In vain then does my lord attempt to ridicule the warm but melancholy imagination of Mr. Wollaston in that fine soliloquy—‘ Must I then bid my last farewell to these walks when I close these lids, and yonder blue regions and all this scene darken upon me and go out? Must I then only serve to furnish dust to be mingled with the ashes of these herds and plants, or with this dirt under my feet? Have I been set so far above them in life, only to be levelled with them in death^h?’—No thinking head, no heart, that has the least sensibility, ^h Religion of Nature Delineated, Sect. ix. p. 209, quarto.

but must have made the same reflection; or at least must feel, not the beauty alone, but the truth of it, when he hears it from the mouth of another. Now what reply will Lord Bolingbroke make to these questions, which are put to him, not only by Wollaston, but by all mankind? He will tell you, that we, that is, the animals, vegetables, stones, and other clods of earth, are all connected in one immense design, that we are all dramatis personæ, in different characters, and that we were not made for ourselves, but for the action; that it is foolish, presumptuous, impious, and profane, to murmur against the Almighty Author of this drama, when we feel ourselves unavoidably unhappy. On the contrary, we ought to rest our head on the soft pillow of resignation, on the immoveable rock of tranquillity; secure, that, if our pains and afflictions grow violent indeed, an immediate end will be put to our miserable being, and we shall be mingled with the dirt under our feet, a thing common to all the animal kind; and of which, he who complains, does not seem to have been set by his reason so far above them in life, as to deserve not to be mingled with them in death. Such is the consolation his philosophy gives us, and such the hope on which his tranquillity was founded¹."

¹ The reader, who would choose to see the argument, as Lord Bolingbroke puts it, will find it in the fourth volume of his Philosophical Works, Sect. xl, xli. His ridicule on Wollaston is in the fiftieth Section of the same volume.

LETTER XLVI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. PALGRAVE^k.Stoke, Sept. 6, 1758.

I DO not know how to make you amends, having neither rock, ruin, nor precipice near to send you ; they do not grow in the south : but only say the word, if you would have a compact neat box of red brick with sash windows, or a grotto made of flints and shell-work, or a walnut-tree with three mole-hills under it, stuck with honey-suckles round a basin of gold-fishes, and you shall be satisfied ; they shall come by the Edinburgh coach.

In the mean time I congratulate you on your new acquaintance with the savage, the rude, and the tremendous. Pray, tell me, is it any thing like what you had read in your book, or seen in two-shilling prints ? Do not you think a man may be the wiser (I had almost said the better) for going a hundred or two of miles ; and that the mind has more room in it than most people seem to think, if you will but furnish the apartments ? I almost envy your last month, being in a very insipid situation myself ; and desire you would not fail to send me some furniture for my gothic apartment, which is very cold at present. It will be the easier task, as you have nothing to do but transcribe your little red books, if they are not rubbed out ; for I conclude you have not trusted every thing to memory, which is ten times worse than a lead-pencil : half a word fixed upon or near the spot, is worth a cart-load of recollection.

^k Rector of Palgrave and Thrandeston in Suffolk. He was making a tour in Scotland when this letter was written to him.—M.

When we trust to the picture that objects draw of themselves on our mind, we deceive ourselves; without accurate and particular observation, it is but ill-drawn at first, the outlines are soon blurred, the colours every day grow fainter; and at last, when we would produce it to any body, we are forced to supply its defects with a few strokes of our own imagination¹. God forgive me, I suppose I have done so myself before now, and misled many a good body that put their trust in me. Pray, tell me, (but with permission, and without any breach of hospitality,) is it so much warmer on the other side of the Swale (as some people of honour say) than it is here? Has the singing of birds, the bleating of sheep, the lowing of herds, deafened you at Rainton? Did the vast old oaks and thick groves in Northumberland keep off the sun too much from you? I am too civil to extend my inquiries beyond Berwick. Every thing, doubtless, must improve upon you as you advanced northward. You must tell me, though, about Melross, Rosslin Chapel, and Arbroath. In short, your Port-feuille must be so full, that I only desire a loose chapter or two, and will wait for the rest till it comes out.

LETTER XLVII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

Stoke, Nov. 9, 1758.

I SHOULD have told you that Caradoc came safe to hand^m; but my critical faculties have been so taken up

¹ Had this letter nothing else to recommend it, the advice here given to the curious traveller of making all his memoranda on the spot, and the reasons for it, are so well expressed, and withal so important, that they certainly deserve our notice.—M.

^m A second manuscript of Caractacus with the Odes inserted.—M.

in dividing nothing with an old womanⁿ, that they are not yet composed enough for a better and more tranquil employment : shortly, however, I will make them obey me. But am I to send this copy to Mr. Hurd, or return it to you? Methinks I do not love this travelling to and again of manuscripts by the post. While I am writing, your second packet is just arrived. I can only tell you in gross, that there seem to me certain passages altered which might as well have been let alone : and that I shall not be easily reconciled to Mador's own song^o. I must not have my fancy raised to that agreeable pitch of heathenism and wild magical enthusiasm, and then have you let me drop into moral philosophy and cold good sense. I remember you insulted me when I saw you last, and affected to call that which delighted my imagination, nonsense : now I insist that sense is nothing in poetry, but according to the dress she wears, and the scene she appears in. If you should lead me into a superb gothic building with a thousand clustered pillars, each of them half a mile high, the walls all covered with fretwork, and the windows full of red and blue saints that had neither head nor tail ; and I should find the Venus of Medici, in person, perked up in a long niche over the high altar, do you think it would raise or damp my devotions? I say that Mador must be entirely a Briton ; and that his pre-eminence among his companions must be shewn by superior wildness, more barbaric fancy, and a more striking and deeper harmony both of words and numbers : if British anti-ⁿ Mrs. Rogers died about this time, and left Mr Gray and Mrs. Olliffe, another of his aunts, her joint executors.—M.

^o He means here the second Ode, which was afterwards greatly altered.—M.

quity be too narrow, this is the place for invention; and if it be pure invention, so much the clearer must the expression be, and so much the stronger and richer the imagery. There's for you now!

LETTER XLVIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. PALGRAVE.

London, July 24, 1759.

I AM now settled in my new territories commanding Bedford Gardens, and all the fields as far as Highgate and Hampstead, with such a concourse of moving pictures as would astonish you; so rus-in-urbe-ish, that I believe I shall stay here, except little excursions and vagaries, for a year to come. What though I am separated from the fashionable world by broad St. Giles's, and many a dirty court and alley; yet here is air, and sunshine, and quiet, however, to comfort you: I shall confess that I am basking with heat all the summer, and, I suppose, shall be blown down all the winter, besides being robbed every night; I trust, however, that the Musæum, with all its manuscripts and rarities by the cart-load, will make ample amends for all the aforesaid inconveniences.

I this day passed through the jaws of a great leviathan into the den of Dr. Templeman, superintendent of the reading-room, who congratulated himself on the sight of so much good company. We were, 1st, a man that writes for Lord Royston; 2dly, a man that writes for Dr. Burton, of York; 3dly, a man that writes for the Emperor of Germany, or Dr. Pocock, for he speaks the worst English I ever heard; 4thly, Dr. Stukely, who writes for himself, the very worst person he could write for; and lastly, I, who only read to know if there be any thing worth writing, and that not without some difficulty. I find that they printed one thousand copies of the Harleian Catalogue, and have sold only fourscore; that they have 900*l.* a year income, and spend 1300, and are building apartments for the under-keepers; so I expect in winter to see the collection advertised and set to auction.

Have you read Lord Clarendon's Continuation of his History? Do you remember Mr. * * 's account of it before it came out? How well he recollected all the faults, and how utterly he forgot all the beauties: surely the grossest taste is better than such a sort of delicacy.

LETTER XLIX.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

London, June 22, 1760.

I AM not sorry to hear you are exceeding busy, except as it has deprived me of the pleasure I should have in hearing often from you; and as it has been occasioned by a little vexation and disappointment. To find one's self business, I am persuaded, is the great art of life; I am never so angry, as when I hear my acquaintance wishing they had been bred to some poking profession, or employed in some office of drudgery, as if it were pleasanter to be at the command of other people than at one's own; and as if they could not go unless they were wound up: yet I know and feel what they mean by this complaint; it proves that some spirit, something of genius (more than common) is required to teach a man how to employ himself; I say a man; for women, commonly speaking, never feel this distemper; they have always something to do; time hangs not on their hands; (unless they be fine ladies;) a variety of small inventions and occupations fill up the void, and their eyes are never open in vain.

As to myself, I have again found rest for the sole of my gouty foot in your old dining-room^p, and hope that you will find at least an equal satisfaction at Old Park; if your bog prove as comfortable as my oven, I shall see no occasion to pity you, and only wish you may brew no worse than I bake.

You totally mistake my talents, when you impute to me any magical skill in planting roses: I know I am no conjurer in these things; when they are done I can find fault, and that is all. Now this is the very reverse of genius, and I feel my own littleness. Reasonable people know themselves better than is commonly imagined; and therefore (though I never saw any instance of it) I believe Mason when he tells me that he understands these things. The prophetic eye of taste (as Mr. Pitt called it) sees all the beauties that a place is susceptible of long before they are born; and when it plants a seedling, already sits under the shadow of it, and enjoys the effect it will have from every point of view that lies in prospect. You must therefore invoke Caractacus, and he will send his spirits from the top of Snowdon to Cross-fell or Warden-law.

^p The house in Southampton-row, where Mr. Gray lodged, had been tenanted by Dr. Wharton; who, on account of his ill health, left London the year before, and was removed to his paternal estate at Old Park, near Durham.—M.

I am much obliged to you for your antique news. Froissard is a favourite book of mine ; (though I have not attentively read him, but only dipped here and there ;) and it is strange to me that people, who would give thousands for a dozen portraits (originals of that time) to furnish a gallery, should never cast an eye on so many moving pictures of the life, actions, manners, and thoughts of their ancestors, done on the spot, and in strong, though simple colours. In the succeeding century Froissard, I find, was read with great satisfaction by every body that could read ; and on the same footing with King Arthur, Sir Tristram, and Archbishop Turpin : not because they thought him a fabulous writer, but because they took them all for true and authentic historians ; to so little purpose was it in that age for a man to be at the pains of writing truth. Pray, are you come to the four Irish kings that went to school to King Richard the Second's Master of the Ceremonies, and the man who informed Froissard of all he had seen in St. Patrick's purgatory ?

The town are reading the King of Prussia's poetry, (Le Philosophie sans Souci,) and I have done like the town ; they do not seem so sick of it as I am : it is all the scum of Voltaire and Lord Bolingbroke, the Crambe-recocta of our worst free-thinkers, tossed up in German-French rhyme. Tristram Shandy is still a greater object of admiration, the man as well as the book ; one is invited to dinner, where he dines, a fortnight before ; as to the volumes yet published, there is much good fun in them, and humour sometimes hit and sometimes missed. Have you read his sermons, with his own comic figure, from a painting by Reynolds, at the head of them ? They are in the style I think most proper for the pulpit^q, and shew a strong imagination and a sensible heart; but you see him often tottering on the verge of laughter, and ready to throw his periwig in the face of the audience^r.

^q Our Author was of opinion, that it was the business of the preacher rather to persuade by the power of eloquence to the practice of known duties, than to reason with the art of logic on points of controverted doctrine: hence, therefore, he thought that sometimes imagination might not be out of its place in a sermon. But let him speak for himself in an extract from one of his letters to me in the following year: "Your quotation from Jeremy Taylor is a fine one; I have long thought of reading him; for I am persuaded that chopping logic in the pulpit, as our divines have done ever since the Revolution, is not the thing; but that imagination and warmth of expression, are in their place there, as much as on the stage; moderated, however, and chastised a little by the purity and severity of religion."—M.

^r The whole of this letter is much altered from its form in manuscript. The three middle paragraphs are taken out of letters bearing different dates, and the original conclusion is altogether omitted. The reasons for the first-mentioned arrangement are not so obvious as those which induced Mr. Mason to suppress the closing passage. Mr. Gray was, on some occasions, apt to affect a certain heartless gaiety, altogether foreign to his temper, and this too quite in the wrong place. The passage in question is one of these; and contained a flippant and unfeeling reference to the fate of an unfortunate peer. It is surely matter of regret that any part of these letters should be made public, which can only leave an unfair impression of the Author's character, and perpetuate the opprobrium of a noble name.—ED.

LETTER L.

MR. GRAY TO MR. STONHEWER.

London, June 29, 1760.

THOUGH you have had but a melancholy employment, it is worthy of envy, and (I hope) will have all the success it deserves^s. It was the best and most natural method of cure, and such as could not have been administered by any but your gentle hand. I thank you for communicating to me what must give you so much satisfaction.

I too was reading M. D'Alembert^t, and (like you) am totally disappointed in his Elements. I could only taste a little of the first course: it was dry as a stick, hard as a stone, and cold as a cucumber. But then the Letter to Rousseau is like himself; and the Discourses on Elocution, and on the Liberty of Music, are divine. He has added to his translations from Tacitus; and, what is remarkable, though that author's manner more nearly resembles the best French writers of the present age than any thing, he totally fails in the attempt. Is it his fault, or that of the language?

I have received another Scotch packet^u, with a third

^s Mr. Stonhewer was now at Houghton-le-Spring, in the bishopric of Durham, attending on his sick father, rector of that parish.—M.

^t Two subsequent volumes of his "Melanges de Litterature et Philosophie."—M.

^u Of the fragments of Erse poetry, many of which Mr. Gray saw in manuscript before they were published. In a letter to Dr. Wharton, written in the following month, he thus expresses himself on the same subject: "If you have seen Mr. Stonhewer, he has probably told you of my old Scotch (or rather Irish) poetry; I am gone mad about them; they are said to be translations (literal and specimen, inferior in kind, (because it is merely description,) but yet full of nature and noble wild imagination. Five bards pass the night at the castle of a chief; (himself a principal bard;) each goes out in his turn to observe the face of things, and returns with an extempore picture of the changes he has seen, (it is an October night, the harvest-month of the Highlands.) This is the whole plan; yet there is a contrivance, and a preparation of ideas, that you would not expect. The oddest thing is, that every one of them sees ghosts, (more or less.) The idea that struck and surprised me most, is the following. One of them (describing a storm of wind and rain) says,

Ghosts ride on the tempest to-night:
Sweet is their voice between the gusts of wind;
Their songs are of other worlds!

in prose) from the Erse tongue, done by one Macpherson, a young clergyman in the Highlands: he means to publish a collection he has of these specimens of antiquity, if it be antiquity; but what perplexes me is, I cannot come to any certainty on that head. I was so struck with their beauty, that I writ into Scotland to make a thousand inquiries; the letters I have in return are ill-wrote, ill-reasoned, unsatisfactory, calculated (one would imagine) to deceive, and yet not cunning enough to do it cleverly. In short, the whole external evidence would make one believe these fragments counterfeit; but the internal is so strong on the other side, that I am resolved to believe them genuine, spite of the devil and the kirk: it is impossible to conceive that they were written by the same man that writes me these letters; on the other hand, it is almost as hard to suppose (if they are original) that he should be able to translate them so admirably. In short, this man is the very dæmon of poetry, or he has lighted on a treasure hid for ages. The Welch poets are also coming to light; I have seen a discourse in manuscript about them, by one Mr. Evans, a clergyman, with specimens of their writing; this is in Latin; and though it does not approach the other, there are fine scraps among it."—M.

Did you never observe (while rocking winds are piping loud) that pause, as the gust is re-collecting itself, and rising upon the ear in a shrill and plaintive note, like the swell of an Æolian harp? I do assure you there is nothing in the world so like the voice of a spirit. Thomson had an ear sometimes: he was not deaf to this; and has described it gloriously, but given it another different turn, and of more horror. I cannot repeat the lines: it is in his Winter. There is another very fine picture in one of them. It describes the breaking of the clouds after the storm, before it is settled into a calm, and when the moon is seen by short intervals:—

The waves are tumbling on the lake,
 And lash the rocky sides.
 The boat is brim-full in the cove,
 The oars on the rocking tide.
 Sad sits a maid beneath a cliff,
 And eyes the rolling stream:
 Her lover promised to come,
 She saw his boat (when it was evening) on the lake;
Are these his groans in the gale?
Is this his broken boat on the shore^x?

^x The whole of this descriptive piece has been since published in a note to a Poem, entitled СРОМА, (see Ossian's Poems, vol. I. p. 350, 8vo.) It is somewhat remarkable that the manuscript, in the translator's own hand, which I have in my possession, varies considerably from the printed copy. Some images are omitted, and others added. I will mention one which is not in the manuscript, "The spirit of the mountain shrieks." In the tragedy of Douglas, published at least three years before, I always admired this fine line, "The angry spirit of the water shriek'd." Quere, Did Mr. Home take this sublime image from Ossian, or has the translator of Ossian since borrowed it from Mr. Home?—M.

LETTER LI.

MR. GRAY TO DR. CLARKE^y.Pembroke-hall, Aug. 12, 1760.

NOT knowing whether you are yet returned from your sea-water, I write at random to you. For me, I am come to my resting-place, and find it very necessary, after living for a month in a house with three women that laughed from morning to night, and would allow nothing to the sulkiness of my disposition. Company and cards at home, parties by land and water abroad, and (what they call) doing something, that is, racketting about from morning to night, are occupations, I find, that wear out my spirits; especially in a situation where one might sit still, and be alone with pleasure; for the place was a hill^z like Clifden, opening to a very extensive and diversified landscape, with the Thames, which is navigable, running at its foot.

I would wish to continue here (in a very different scene, it must be confessed) till Michaelmas; but I fear I must come to town much sooner. Cambridge is a delight of a place, now there is nobody in it. I do believe you would like it, if you knew what it was without inhabitants. It is they, I assure you, that get it an ill name and spoil all. Our friend Dr. * *^a (one of its nuisances) is not expected here again in a hurry. He is gone to his grave with five fine mackarel (large and full of roe) in his belly. He eat them all at one dinner; but his fate was a turbot on Trinity Sunday, ^y Physician at Epsom. With this gentleman Mr. Gray commenced an early acquaintance at college.—M.

^z Near Henley.

^a Vide Letter XIII. of this Section.

of which he left little for the company besides bones. He had not been hearty all the week ; but after this sixth fish he never held up his head more, and a violent looseness carried him off. They said he made a very good end.

Have you seen the Erse fragments since they were printed? I am more puzzled than ever about their antiquity, though I still incline (against every body's opinion) to believe them old. Those you have already seen are the best ; though there are some others that are excellent too.

LETTER LII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

Cambridge, Aug. 20, 1760.

I HAVE sent Musæus^b back as you desired me, scratched here and there. And with it also a bloody Satire^c, written against no less persons than You and I by name. I concluded at first it was Mr. * * *, because he is your friend and my humble servant ; but then I thought he knew the world too well to call us the favourite minions of taste and of fashion, especially as to Odes. For to them his ridicule is confined ; so it is not he, but Mr. Colman, nephew to Lady Bath, author of the Connoisseur, a member of one of the inns of court, and a particular acquaintance of Mr. Gar-

^b I had desired Mr. Gray to revise my Monody on Mr. Pope's Death, in order that I might correct it for the edition I was then preparing of my Poems.—M.

^c The parodies in question, entitled Odes to Obscurity and Oblivion, were written by Messrs. Lloyd and Colman, and have been reprinted since in Mr. Lloyd's Poems.—M.

rick. What have you done to him? for I never heard his name before; he makes very tolerable fun with me where I understand him, (which is not every where,) but seems more angry with you. Lest people should not understand the humour of the thing, (which indeed to do they must have our lyricisms at their finger ends,) letters come out in Lloyd's Evening Post to tell them who and what it was that he meant, and says it is like to produce a great combustion in the literary world. So if you have any mind to combustle about it well and good; for me, I am neither so literary nor so combustible^d. The Monthly Review, I see, just now has much stuff about us on this occasion. It says one of us at least has always borne his faculties meekly. I leave you to guess which of us that is; I think I know. You simpleton you! you must be meek, must you? and see what you get by it.

I do not like your improvements at Aston, it looks so like settling: if I come I will set fire to it. I will never believe the B * * 's and the C * * 's are dead, though I smelt them; that sort of people always live to a good old age. I dare swear they are only gone to Ireland, and we shall soon hear they are bishops.

The Erse fragments have been published five weeks ago in Scotland, though I had them not (by a mistake) till the other day. As you tell me new things do not reach you soon at Aston, I inclose what I can; the rest shall follow, when you tell me whether you have not got the pamphlet already. I send the two to Mr. Wood which I had before, because he has not the affectation of not admiring^e. I have another from Mr. Macpherson, which he has not printed; it is mere description, but excellent too in its kind. If you are good and will learn to admire, I will transcribe and send it.

^d Had Mr. Pope sat as easy to the sarcasms of the many writers that endeavoured to eclipse his poetical fame, as Mr. Gray here appears to have done, the world would not have been possessed of a Dunciad; but it would have been impressed with a more amiable idea of its author's temper. It is for the sake of shewing how Mr. Gray felt on such occasions, that I publish this letter.—M.

As to their authenticity, I have made many inquiries, and have lately procured a letter from Mr. David Hume, (the historian,) which is more satisfactory than any thing I have yet met with on that subject. He says,

“ Certain it is that these poems are in every body’s mouth in the Highlands, have been handed down from father to son, and are of an age beyond all memory and tradition. Adam Smith, the celebrated professor in Glasgow, told me, that the piper of the Argyleshire militia repeated to him all those which Mr. Macpherson had translated, and many more of equal beauty. Major Mackay (Lord Rae’s brother) told me that he remembers them perfectly well; as likewise did the Laird of Macfarline, (the greatest antiquarian we have in this country,) and who insists strongly on the historical truth, as well as the poetical beauty, of these productions. I could add the Laird and Lady Macleod, with many more, that live in different parts of the Highlands, very remote from each other, and could only be acquainted with what had become (in a manner) national works^f. There is a country surgeon in Lochaber, who has by ^e It was rather a want of credulity than admiration that Mr. Gray should have laid to my charge. I suspected that, whether the fragments were genuine or not, they were by no means literally translated. I suspect so still; and a former note gives a sufficient cause for that suspicion.—M.

^f All this external evidence and much more has since been collected and published by Dr. Blair, (see his Appendix to his Critical heart the entire Epic Poem mentioned by Mr. Macpherson in his preface ; and, as he is old, is perhaps the only person living that knows it all, and has never committed it to writing, we are in the more haste to recover a monument, which will certainly be regarded as a curiosity in the republic of letters: we have therefore set about a subscription of a guinea or two guineas apiece, in order to enable Mr. Macpherson to undertake a mission into the Highlands to recover this poem, and other fragments of antiquity." He adds, too, that the names of Fingal, Ossian, Oscar, &c. are still given in the Highlands to large mastiffs, as we give to ours the names of Cæsar, Pompey, Hector, &c.

LETTER LIII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

London, 1761.

I REJOICE to find that you not only grow reconciled to your northern scene, but discover beauties round you that once were deformities: I am persuaded Dissertation on the Works of Ossian;) and yet notwithstanding a later Irish writer has been hardy enough to assert, that the Poems in question abound with the strangest anachronisms: for instance, that Cucullin lived in the first, and Fingal in the third century; two princes who are said to have made war with the Danes, a nation never heard of in Europe till the ninth; which war could not possibly have happened till five hundred years after the death of the supposed Poet who sings it. (See O'Halloran's Introduction to the Study of the History and Antiquities of Ireland, quarto, 1772.) To whatever side of the question truth may lean, it is of little moment to me; my doubts arising (as I have said in the former note) from internal evidence only, and a want of proof of the fidelity of the translation.—M.

the whole matter is to have always something going forward. Happy they that can create a rose-tree or erect a honey-suckle; that can watch the brood of a hen, or see a fleet of their own ducklings launch into the water: it is with a sentiment of envy I speak it, who never shall have even a thatched roof of my own, nor gather a strawberry but in Covent-garden. I will not, however, believe in the vocality of Old Park till next summer, when perhaps I may trust to my own ears.

The Nouvelle Heloise cruelly disappointed me, but it has its partisans, amongst which are Mason and Mr. Hurd; for me, I admire nothing but Fingal^g; (I conclude you have seen it, if not Stonhewer can lend it you;) yet I remain still in doubt about the authenticity of these poems, though inclining rather to believe them genuine in spite of the world; whether they are the inventions of antiquity, or of a modern Scotchman, either case is to me alike unaccountable; je m'y perd.

I send you a Swedish and English Calendar^h; the first column is by Berger, a disciple of Linnæus; the second by Mr. Stillingfleet; the third (very imperfect indeed) by me. You are to observe, as you tend your plantations, and take your walks, how the spring ad-

^g In a letter to another friend, informing him that he had sent Fingal down to him, he says, "For my part I will stick to my credulity, and if I am cheated, think it is worse for him (the translator) than for me. The Epic Poem is foolishly so called, yet there is a sort of plan and unity in it very strange for a barbarous age; yet what I more admire are some of the detached pieces—the rest I leave to the discussion of antiquarians and historians; yet my curiosity is much interested in their decision." No man surely ever took more pains with himself to believe any thing than Mr. Gray seems to have done on this occasion.—M.

^h See Stillingfleet's Tracts, p. 261.

vances in the north, and whether Old Park most resembles Upsal or Stratton. The latter has on one side a barren black heath, on the other a light sandy loam, all the country about it is a dead flat; you see it is necessary you should know the situation; (I do not mean any reflection upon any body's place;) and this is the description Mr. Stillingfleet gives of his friend Mr. Marsham's seat, to which he retires in the summer and botanizes. I have lately made an acquaintance with this philosopher, who lives in a garret here in the winter, that he may support some near relations who depend upon him; he is always employed, consequently (according to my old maxim) always happy, always cheerful, and seems to me a very worthy honest man: his present scheme is to send some persons properly qualified to reside a year or two in Attica, to make themselves acquainted with the climate, productions, and natural history of the country, that we may understand Aristotle, Theophrastus, &c. who have been heathen Greek to us for so many ages; and this he has got proposed to Lord Bute, no unlikely person to put it into execution, as he is himself a botanist.

LETTER LIV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

London, Jan. 22, 1761.

I CANNOT pity you; au contraire, I wish I had been at Aston, when I was foolish enough to go through the six volumes of the Nouvelle Heloise. All I can say for myself is, that I was confined for three weeks at home by a severe cold, and had nothing better to do:

there is no one event in it that might not happen any day of the week (separately taken) in any private family; yet these events are so put together, that the series of them is more absurd and more improbable than Amadis de Gaul. The dramatis personæ (as the author says) are all of them good characters; I am sorry to hear it: for had they been all hanged at the end of the third volume, nobody (I believe) would have cared. In short, I went on and on, in hopes of finding some wonderful denouement that would set all right, and bring something like nature and interest out of absurdity and insipidity: no such thing, it grows worse and worse, and (if it be Rousseau's, which is not doubted) is the strongest instance I ever saw, that a very extraordinary man may entirely mistake his own talents. By the motto and preface, it appears to be his own story, or something similar to it¹.

The Opera House is crowded this year like any ordinary theatre. Elisi is finer than any thing that has been here in your memory: yet, as I suspect, has been finer than he is; he appears to be near forty, a little pot-bellied and thick-shouldered, otherwise no bad figure; his action proper, and not ungraceful. We have heard nothing, since I remember operas, but eternal passages, divisions, and flights of execution: of these he has absolutely none; whether merely from judgment, or a little from age, I will not affirm; his point is expression, and to that all the graces and ornaments

¹ If it be considered that Mr. Gray always preferred expression and sentiment to the arrangement of a story, it may seem somewhat extraordinary that the many striking beauties of these kinds, with which this singular work abounds were not excepted from so general a censure; for my own part (to use a phrase of his own) "they strike me blind" to all the defects which he has here enumerated.—M.

he inserts (which are few and short) are evidently directed: he goes higher (they say) than Farinelli; but then this celestial note you do not hear above once in a whole opera; and he falls from this altitude at once to the mellowest, softest, strongest tones (about the middle of his compass) that can be heard. The Mattei, I assure you, is much improved by his example, and by her great success this winter; but then the burlettas, and the Paganina, I have not been so pleased with any thing these many years: she too is fat, and above forty, yet handsome withal, and has a face that speaks the language of all nations: she has not the invention, the fire, and the variety of action that the Spiletta had; yet she is light, agile, ever in motion, and above all graceful; but then her voice, her ear, her taste in singing: good God—as Mr. Richardson the painter says. Pray ask Lord ; for I think I have seen him there once or twice, as much pleased as I was.

LETTER LV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

August, 1761.

BE assured your York canon never will die; so the better the thing is in value, the worse for you^k. The true way to immortality is to get you nominated one's successor: age and diseases vanish at your name; fevers turn to radical heat, and fistulas to issues: it is a judgment that waits on your insatiable avarice. You could not let the poor old man die at his ease, when he was about it ; and all his family (I suppose) are cursing you for it.

^k This was written at a time, when, by the favour of Dr. Fountainne, Dean of York, I expected to be made a residentiary in his cathedral.—M.

I wrote to Lord * * * * on his recovery ; and he answers me very cheerfully, as if his illness had been but slight, and the pleurisy were no more than a hole in one's stocking. He got it (he says) not by scampering, racketing, and riding post, as I had supposed ; but by going with ladies to Vauxhall. He is the picture (and pray so tell him, if you see him) of an old alderman that I knew, who, after living forty years on the fat of the land, (not milk and honey, but arrack-punch, and venison,) and losing his great toe with a mortification, said to the last, that he owed it to two grapes, which he eat one day after dinner. He felt them lie cold at his stomach the minute they were down.

Mr. Montagu (as I guess, at your instigation) has earnestly desired me to write some lines to be put on a monument, which he means to erect at Bellisle. It is a task I do not love, knowing Sir William Williams so slightly as I did ; but he is so friendly a person, and his affliction seemed to me so real, that I could not refuse him. I have sent him the following verses¹ which I neither like myself, nor will he, I doubt : however, I have shewed him that I wished to oblige him. Tell me your real opinion.

¹ See Epitaph II. in the Collection of Poems.

LETTER LVI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Sunday, Feb. 28, 1762.

I RETURN you my best thanks for the copy of your book^m, which you sent me, and have not at all lessened my opinion of it since I read it in print, though the press has in general a bad effect on the complexion of one's works. The engravings look, as you say, better than I had expected, yet not altogether so well as I could wish. I rejoice in the good dispositions of our court, and in the propriety of their application to you: the work is a thing so much to be wished; has so near a connexion with the turn of your studies and of your curiosity; and might find such ample materials among your hoards and in your head; that it will be a sin if you let it drop and come to nothing, or worse than nothing, for want of your assistanceⁿ. The historical part should be in the manner of Henault, a mere abridgment^o, a series of facts selected with judgment, that ^m The Anecdotes of Painting.

ⁿ See a note from Lord Bute, in the Letters to and from Ministers, inviting Mr. Walpole to turn his thoughts to a work of this kind; and Mr. Walpole's answer, offering to point out and collect materials, and take any trouble in aiding, supervising, and directing the whole plan.—M.

^o This method Mr. Walpole had already adopted before he received his friend's letter; for a large memorandum-book of his is extant, with this title-page:—

may serve as a clue to lead the mind along in the midst of those ruins and scattered monuments of art, that

COLLECTIONS FOR A HISTORY
OF THE
Manners, Customs, Habits, Fashions, Ceremonies, &c. &c.
OF England,
BEGUN FEBRUARY 21, 1762.
BY
MR. HORACE WALPOLE.

Co'l tempo, Tutto.

The heads of the subjects he meant to treat are there arranged alphabetically, and several pages of blank paper left between each, intended to have been filled up with matter relative to the objects in question, as it occurred to him.—We have only to regret, that though a number of curious scattered notes remain among Lord Orford's papers, evidently intended for this work, its farther arrangement was never pursued; as in the hands of an eminent antiquary, diligent, accurate, and lively, as Mr. Walpole, it must have proved a most entertaining as well as a curious work.

The notes, or heads of chapters, in his memorandum-book, are as follows:

Coats of Arms. When first used.
Arms and Armour. Battle Axes. Coats of Mail. Habergeons. Hauberks. Shields, their forms.
Armies. How raised and paid, and fleets. Admiral of western coast. My seal of R. Clitherol.

time has spared. This would be sufficient, and better than Montfaucon's more diffuse narrative. Such a

- Books*.....What books were in libraries before printing. Pay of copyists. Vide catalogue of books at Canterbury at end of Dart.
- Buildings*.....Brick only for chimneys. No glass. Sudley Castle glazed with beryl. Old London of chesnut. Licenses for embattling.
- Burials*.....Soul-shot. Paid at interments. Vide Spelman's Posthuma.
- Coaches*.....When first used. Saddles. Anne of Bohemia. First side-saddles. Chairs. Litter. Chariot. Vide Life of De Critz.
- Coins*.....Easterlings. Copper tokens.
- Crusadoes*.....
- Customs*.....What, Saxons, Normans, Poitevins, &c. introduced. Curfeu.
- Deer*.....When brought into England.
- Domain*.....To inquire what the domain of the crown at different periods.
- Embassadors*.....What their pay and privileges.
- Exchequer*.....Vide Madox.
- Fashions*.....See Account of Harrison prefixed to Hollingshed's Chronicle. Wimples. Crisping-pins. Love-locks. Colours of their mistress. Picked horns.
- Fools*.....Vide Anecdotes of Painting, in Holbein. Henry VIIIth's fool, a print of him.
- Forests*.....Statutes of. New Forest. Inquiry how many in the crown. Manner of hunting. Picture at Wroxton of Prince Henry and Lord Harrington in hunting-habits. Chevy Chace, how founded.

work (I have heard) Mr. Burke is now employed about, which though not intended for this purpose might be

- Games.* May games. At cards. Tables. Dice. Numbers of small dice found under floor of Inner Temple-hall.
- Haivering in the Bower.*.....When built. Jointure-house of what queens. When destroyed.
- Habits.*See Peck's account of them. Figures in Speed's Maps. When first wigs. Tom Derry. Lord Holland. Account of Fashions in Harrison's Treatise before Hollingshed's Chronicle. Hollar's habits. Coats and waistcoats. Vide MS. of Lord Sandwich.
- Heralds.*.....
- Holidays.*Keeping Christmas. Grands jours.
- Hops.*When first planted. See Fuller.
- Hours.*See my Green Book.
- Kings.*Often crowned.
- Knights.*.....How made. Ceremonies at creation of knights of Bath. See the plate in Dugdale's Warwickshire. Knight's service. Knight's fees.
- The Marches.*.....Account of them in Lord Monmouth's Memoirs.
- Masks and Masking.*When brought in.
- Mumming.*.....
- Mathematics.*.....Roger Bacon.
- Marriage.*What the ceremonies attending it.
- Meals.*See bills of fare of Henry IV. in Bishop Lyttelton's book, and in Dugdale.
- New Year's Gifts.*
- Night Caps.*Embroidered with black. My head of Henry, Duke of Richmond. Oliver Cromwell's in Mrs. Kennon's sale.
- Ordeal.*Trials.
- Pleshy.*When Built. Thomas, Duke of Gloucester, apprehended there. When demolished.

applied perhaps to this use. Then at the end of each reign should come a dissertation explanatory of the Parks.....

Poets Laureate.....

Provisions.....King's proveditors. Forestalling of markets.

Portraits.....Busts of Henry I. and Queen, at the west end of the Cathedral of Rochester. Catherine of Valois, Queen of Henry V. in the long gallery at Lambeth, and Archbishop Chichele. Among Harleian MSS. No. 1498-2. Henry VII. receiving a book from Islip. Item, No. 1499-3. 1766-3. Lydgate. 1892-26. 2278-3. Henry VI. when a child. Ib. 4, 5, 6, No. 2358-14-15. No. 4826. Lydgate. No. 1319. No. 1349-3. Edward III. and all his children. Mr. Onslow, Black Prince, and another of sons of Edward III. My miniature of Henry, Duke of Richmond, son of Henry VIII. Portrait of Richard de Gainsborough, Mason, in second volume of Letheuillier's Hist. Henry VI. and House of Parliament, engraven by Pyne. Edward IV. &c. before Catalogue of Royal and Noble Authors. Jane Shore, at Eton.

Ruffs.....When first used. Succeeded by falling band.

Seals.....Often cut on reverses of cameos and intaglios. Often good at the same period that our coins bad.

Stage.....Mysteries. Farces. Pantomimes. Morrice-dancers. Interludes. Pageants.

Tenures.....Vide Blount's Jocular Tenures. Peerages annexed to castles and lands. Arundel and Berkeley Castles.

plates, and pointing out the turn of thought, the customs, ceremonials, arms, dresses, luxury, and private life, with the improvement or decline of the arts during that period. This you must do yourself, beside taking upon you the superintendence, direction and choice of materials. As to the expense, that must be the King's own entirely, and he must give the book to foreign mi-

Tombs. Their fashions in different ages. When statues on them first. When brasses. Roman columns about time of Queen Elizabeth. Knights Templars, cross-legged.

Tournaments.

Tapestries. At Bayeux. In a room near the House of Commons, with a crusade of Richard I.

Vineyards. Several houses anciently called the Vineyard and the Vine. Mr. Chute's in Hampshire. Mr. Talbot's near Dorking. The Vineyard in St. James's Park; qu. how old? Vide Barnaby's Journal.

Wards. Court of wards and liveries.

Wills. Legacies. How many witnesses. When they could not write, made the sign of the cross. Bequeathing their clothes, beds, &c. Cups and covers, their plate.

Then follows the subsequent list of authors to be consulted.

Madox's History of the Exchequer.	Fuller's Worthies. Hollingshed. Hall.	Fynes Moryson. Blount's Jocular Te- nures.
Dugdale.	Cambden.	Speed and Stowe.
Spelman.	Froissart.	Search rolls for patents of manufactories and monopolies.
Hearne.	Fleetwood's Chroni- cum Pretiosum.
Skinner.	Statutes at large.
Peck's Desiderata Curiosa.

nisters and people of note ; for it is obvious no private man can undertake such a thing without a subscription, and no gentleman will care for such an expedient ; and a gentleman it should be, because he must have easy access to archives, cabinets, and collections, of all sorts. I protest I do not think it impossible but they may give in to such a scheme : they approve the design, they wish to encourage the arts and to be magnificent, and they have no Versailles or Herculaneum.

I hope to see you toward the end of March. If you bestow a line on me, pray tell me whether the Baronne de la Peyriere is gone to her castle of Viry ; and whether Fingal be discovered or shrewdly suspected to be a forgery. Adieu !

I am yours ever.

LETTER LVII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Cambridge, Dec. 4, 1762.

I FEEL very ungrateful every day that I continue silent ; and yet now that I take my pen in hand I have only time to tell you, that of all the places which I saw on my return from you, Hardwicke pleased me the most^P. One would think that Mary, queen of Scots, was but just walked down into the park with her guard for half an hour ; her gallery, her room of audience, her anti-chamber, with the very canopies, chair of state, footstool, lit de repos, oratory, carpets, and hangings, just as she left them : a little tattered indeed, but the more venerable : and all preserved with religious care, and papered up in winter.

^P A seat of the Duke of Devonshire, in Derbyshire.

When I arrived in London I found Professor Turner^q had been dead above a fortnight; and being cockered and spirited up by some friends (though it was rather the latest) I got my name suggested to Lord Bute. You may easily imagine who undertook it, and indeed he did it with zeal^r. I received my answer very soon, which was what you may easily imagine, but joined with great professions of his desire to serve me on future occasions, and many more fine words that I pass over, not out of modesty, but for another reason: so you see I have made my fortune like Sir Francis Wronghead. This nothing is a profound secret, and no one here suspects it even now. To-day I hear Mr. E. Delaval^s has got it, but we are not yet certain; next to myself I wished for him.

You see we have made a peace. I shall be silent about it, because if I say any thing anti-ministerial, you will tell me you know the reason; and if I approve it, you will think I have my expectations still. All I know is, that the Duke of Newcastle and Lord Hardwicke both say it is an excellent peace, and only Mr. Pitt calls it inglorious and insidious.

^q Professor of modern languages in the University of Cambridge.

^r This person was the late Sir Henry Erskine. As this was the only application Mr. Gray ever made to ministry, I thought it necessary to insert his own account of it. The place in question was given to the tutor of Sir James Lowther.—M.

^s Fellow of Pembroke-hall and of the Royal Society.

LETTER LVIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

February 8, 1763.

DOCTISSIME Domine, anne tibi arrident complimenta^t? If so, I hope your vanity is tickled with the verghe d'oro of Count Algarotti, and the intended translation of Sig^r. Agostino Paradisi: for my part, I am ravished, (for I too have my share.) Are you upon the road to see all these wonders, and snuff up the incense of Pisa; or has Mr. Brown abated your ardour by sending you the originals? I am waiting with impatience for your coming.

I am obliged to you for your drawing and very learned dissertation annexed^u. You have made out your point with a great degree of probability, (for though the nimis

^t William Taylor Howe, Esq. of Stondon-place, near Chipping-Ongar, in Essex, an honorary fellow of Pembroke-hall, was now on his travels in Italy, where he had made an acquaintance with the celebrated Count Algarotti, and had recommended to him Mr. Gray's Poems and my Dramas. After the perusal he received a letter from the Count, written in that style of superlative panegyric peculiar to Italians. A copy of this letter Mr. Howe had just now sent to our common friend Mr. Brown, then president of the college; and also another of the Count's, addressed to Sig^r. Paradisi, a Tuscan Poet; in which, after explaining the arguments of my two dramatic poems, he advises him to translate them; but principally Caractacus.—This anecdote not only explains the above paragraph, but the subsequent letter. The Latin, at the beginning of the letter, alludes to a similar expression which a fellow of a college had made use of to a foreigner who dined in the College-hall. Having occasion to ask him if he would eat any cabbage to his boiled beef, he said, "Anne tibi arrident herbæ."—M.

^u This relates to the ruin of a small Gothic chapel near the north-west end of the cathedral at York, not noticed by Drake in his Eboracum. When Mr. Gray made me a visit at that place the adhæsit might startle one, yet the sale of the tithes and chapel to Webster seems to set all right again,) and I do believe the building in question was the chapel of St. Sepulchre. But then, that the ruin now standing, was the individual chapel as erected by Archbishop Roger, I can by no means think: I found myself merely on the style and taste of architecture. The vaults under the choir are still in being, and were undoubtedly built by this very Archbishop: they are truly Saxon; only that the arches are pointed, though very obtusely. It is the south transept (not the north) that is the oldest part of the minister now above ground: it is said to have been begun by Geoffrey Plantagenet, who died about thirty years after Roger, and left it unfinished. His successor, Walter Grey, completed it; so we do not exactly know to which of these two prelates we are to ascribe any certain part of it. Grey lived a long time, and was Archbishop from 1216 to 1255; (thirty-nine Henry III.) and in this reign it was, that the beauty of the Gothic architecture began to appear. The chapter-house is in all probability his work, and (I should suppose) built in his latter days; whereas what he did of the south transept might be performed soon after his accession. It is in the second order of this building, that the round arches appear including a row of pointed ones, (which you mention, and which I also observed,) similar to those in St. Sepulchre's chapel, though far summer before, he was much struck with the beautiful proportion of the windows in it, which induced me to get Mr. Paul Sandby to make a drawing of it; and also to endeavour, in a letter to Mr. Gray, to explain to what foundation it belonged. As his answer contains some excellent general remarks on Gothic building, I thought proper to publish it, though the particular matter which occasioned them was not of any great consequence.—M.

inferior in the proportions and neatness of workmanship. The same thing is repeated in the north transept ; but this is only an imitation of the other, done for the sake of regularity ; for this part of the building is no older than Archbishop Romaine, who came to the See in 1285, and died 1295.

All the buildings of Henry the Second's time (under whom Roger lived and died, 1185) are of a clumsy and heavy proportion, with a few rude and awkward ornaments ; and this style continues to the beginning of Henry the Third's reign, though with a little improvement, as in the nave of Fountain's Abbey, &c. then all at once come in the tall peaked arches, the light clustered columns, the capitals of curling foliage, the fretted tabernacles and vaultings, and a profusion of statues, &c. that constitute the good Gothic style ; together with decreasing and flying buttresses, and pinnacles, on the outside. Nor must you conclude any thing from Roger's own tomb, which has (I remember) a wide surbased arch with scalloped ornaments, &c. for this can be no older than the nave itself, which was built by Archbishop Melton after the year 1315, one hundred and thirty years after Roger's death.

I have compared Helvetius and Elfrida, as you desired me^x, and find thirteen parallel passages ; five of ^x As the plagiarism, to which Mr Gray here alludes, is but little known, and, I think, for its singularity, is somewhat curious, I shall beg the reader's patience while I dilate upon it ; though I am aware it will stretch this note to an unconscionable length. M. Helvetius, in the third chapter of his third Essay de l'Esprit, which treats of the extent of memory, means to prove that this faculty, in the extreme, is not necessary to constitute a great genius. For this purpose he examines whether the greatness of the very different talents of Locke and of Milton ought to be considered as the effect which, at least, are so direct and close as to leave no shadow of a doubt, and therefore confirm all the rest.

of their possessing this talent in an extraordinary degree. He then proceeds as follows: "As the last example of the small extent of memory necessary to a fine imagination, I shall give in a note the translation of a piece of English poetry; which, with the preceding, will, I believe, prove to those who would decompose the works of illustrious men, that a great genius does not necessarily suppose a great memory." I now set down that note with reference to Elfrida underneath it, and I choose to give it in the English translation printed in 1759, that the parallel passages may be the more obvious at first sight. "A young virgin, awaked and guided by Love, goes before the appearance of Aurora to a valley, where she waits for the coming of her lover, who, at the rising of the sun, is to offer a sacrifice to the gods. Her soul, in the soft situation in which she is placed by the hopes of approaching happiness, indulges, while waiting for him, the pleasure of contemplating the beauties of nature, and the rising of that luminary that was to bring the object of her tenderness." She expresses herself thus:

"Already the sun gilds the tops of those antique oaks, and the waves of those falling torrents that roar among the rocks shine with his beams; already I perceive the summit of those shaggy mountains whence arise the vaults which, half-concealed in the air, offer a formidable retreat to the solitary who there retires^a. Night folds up her veil. Ye wanton fires, that mislead the wandering traveller, retire^b to the quagmires and marshy fens; and thou sun, lord of the heavens, who fillest the air with reviving heat, who sowest with dewy pearls the

^a How nobly does this venerable wood,
Gilt with the glories of the orient sun,
Embosom yon fair mansion!
—————On the shaggy mound,
Where tumbling torrents roar around;
Where pendant mountains o'er your head
Stretch a formidable shade—
Where lull'd in pious peace the hermit lies.

^b Away, ye goblins all,
Wont the bewilder'd traveller to daunt.

It is a phenomenon that you will be in the right to inform yourself about, and which I long to understand.

flowers of these meadows, and givest colours to the varied beauties of nature, receive my first homage^c, and hasten thy course. Thy appearance proclaims that of my lover. Freed from the pious cares that detain him still at the foot of the altars, love will soon bring him to mine^d. Let all around me partake of my joy. Let all bless the rising luminary by which we are enlightened. Ye flowers that in-close in your bosoms the odours that cool night condenses there, open your buds, and exhale in the air your balmy vapours. I know not whether the delightful intoxication that possesses my soul, does not embellish whatever I behold; but the rivulet, that in pleasing meanders winds along this valley, enchants me with his murmurs. Zephyrus caresses me with his breath; the fragrant plants, pressed under my feet, waft to my senses their perfume. Oh! if Felicity sometimes condescends to visit the abode of mortals, to these places, doubtless, she retires^e. But with what secret trouble am I agitated? Already impatience mingles its poison with the sweetness of my expectation. This valley has already lost all its beauties. Is joy then so fleeting? It is as easy to snatch it from us, as for the light down

^c Hail to thy living light

Ambrosial morn—

That bids each dewy-spangled flow'ret rise,

And dart around its vermil dies—

Unfolds the scene of glory to our eye,

Where thron'd in artless majesty,

The cherub Beauty sits on Nature's rustic shrine.

^d 'Twill not be long, ere his unbending mind

Shall lose in sweet oblivion every care

Among th' embowering shades that veil Elfrida.

^e —————The soft air

Salutes me with most cool and temperate breath,

And, as I tread, the flow'r-besprinkled lawn

Sends up a gale of fragrance. I should guess,

If e'er Content deign'd visit mortal clime,

This was her place of dearest residence.

Another phenomenon is, that I read it without finding it out: all I remember is, that I thought it not at all of these plants to be blown away by the breath of the zephyrs^f. In vain have I recourse to flattering Hope. Each moment increases my disturbance. He will come no more. Who keeps him at a distance from me? What duty more sacred than that of calming the inquietudes of love? But what do I say? Fly jealous suspicions, injurious to his fidelity^g, and formed to extinguish my tenderness. If jealousy grows by the side of love, it will stifle it, if not pulled up by the roots; it is the ivy which, by a verdant chain, embraces, but dries up the trunk which serves for its support^h. I know my lover too well to doubt of his tenderness. He, like me, has, far from the pomp of courts, sought the tranquil asylum of the fields. Touched by the simplicity of my heart, and by my beauty, my sensual rivals call him in vain to their arms. Shall he be seduced by the advances of coquetry, which, on the cheek of the young maid, tarnishes the snow of innocence and the carnation of modesty, and daubs it with a whiteness of art and the paint of effronteryⁱ? What do I say? his contempt for her is perhaps only a snare for me. Can I be ignorant of the partiality of men, and the arts they employ to seduce us? Nourished in a contempt for our sex, it is not us, it is their pleasures that they love. Cruel as they are, they have placed in the rank of the virtues the barbarous fury of revenge, and the mad love of their country;

^f For Safety now sits wav'ring on your love,
Like the light down upon the thistle's beard,
Which ev'ry breeze may part.

^g Avaunt! ye vain delusive fears.

^h ————— See, Elfrida;

Ah see! how round yon branching elm the ivy
Clasps its green chain, and poisons what supports it.
Nor less injurious to the shoots of love
Is sickly jealousy.

ⁱ —————To guard

Your beauties from the blast of courtly gales.
The crimson blush of virgin Modesty,
The delicate soft tints of Innocence,
There all fly off, and leave no boast behind
But well-rang'd, faded features.

English, and did not much like it; and the reason is plain, for the lyric flights and choral flowers suited not but never have they reckoned fidelity among the virtues. Without remorse they abuse innocence, and often their vanity contemplates our griefs with delight. But no; fly far from me, ye odious thoughts, my lover will come! A thousand times have I experienced it: as soon as I perceive him my agitated mind is calm, and I often forget the too just cause I have for complaint; for near him I can only know happiness^k. Yet if he is treacherous to me; if, in the very moment when my love excuses him, he consummates the crime of infidelity in another bosom, may all nature take up arms in revenge! may he perish! What do I say? *Ye elements, be deaf to my cries! Thou earth, open not thy profound abyss! let the monster walk the time prescribed him on thy splendid surface, let him still commit new crimes, and still cause the tears of the too credulous maids to flow; and if Heaven avenges them and punishes him, may it at least be at the prayer of some other unfortunate woman*¹."

^k —————My truant heart

Forgets each lesson that Resentment taught,
And in thy sight knows only to be happy.

In the French it is more literal, "Pres de lui je ne sçais qu'être heureuse."

¹ Till then, ye elements, rest; and thou, firm earth,
Ope not thy yawning jaws; but let this monster
Stalk his due time on thine affrighted surface:
Yes, let him still go on, still execute
His savage purposes, and daily make
More widows weep, as I do.

Here ends this odd instance of plagiarism. When M. Helvetius was in England, a year or two after I had made the discovery of it, I took my measures (as Mr. Gray advised me) to learn how he came by it; and accordingly requested two noblemen, to whom he was introduced, to ask him some questions concerning it; but I could gain no satisfactory answer. I do not, however, by any means, suppose that the person who cooked up the disjointed parts of my drama into this strange fricasee, was M. Helvetius himself; I rather imagine (as I did from the first) that he was imposed upon by some young English traveller, who contrived this expedient in order in the least with the circumstances or character of the speaker, as he had contrived it.

LETTER LIX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BROWN^y.

February 17, 1763.

You will make my best acknowledgments to Mr. Howe; who, not content to rank me in the number of his friends, is so polite as to make excuses for having done me that honour.

I was not born so far from the sun, as to be ignorant of Count Algarotti's name and reputation; nor am I so far advanced in years, or in philosophy, as not to feel the warmth of his approbation. The Odes in question, as their motto shews, were meant to be vocal to the intelligent alone. How few they were in my own country, Mr. Howe can testify; and yet my ambition was terminated by that small circle. I have good reason to be proud, if my voice has reached the ear and apprehension of a stranger, distinguished as one of the best judges in Europe.

I am equally pleased with the just applause he bestows on Mr. Mason; and particularly on his Caractacus, which is the work of a man: whereas Elfrida is only that of a boy, a promising boy indeed, and of no to pass with him for a poet. The great philosopher, it is true, has in this note been proved to be the receiver of stolen goods; but out of respect to his numerous fashionable disciples, both abroad and at home, whose credit might suffer with that of their master, I acquit him of what would only be held criminal at the Old Bailey, that he received these goods knowing them to be stolen.—M.

^y Now Master of Pembroke-hall.—M.

common genius: yet this is the popular performance, and the other little known in comparison.

Neither Count Algarotti nor Mr. Howe (I believe) have heard of Ossian, the son of Fingal. If Mr. Howe were not upon the wing, and on his way homewards, I would send it to him in Italy. He would there see that Imagination dwelt many hundred years ago, in all her pomp, on the cold and barren mountains of Scotland. The truth (I believe) is, that, without any respect of climates, she reigns in all nascent societies of men, where the necessities of life force every one to think and act much for himself².

LETTER LX.

COUNT ALGAROTTI TO MR. GRAY.

Pisa, 24 Aprile, 1763.

Sono stato lungo tempo in dubbio se un diletante quale io sono, dovea mandare alcune sue coserelle a un professore quale è V. S. illustrissimo, a un arbitro di ogni poetica eleganza. Nè ci volea meno che l'autorità del valorissimo Signor Howe per persuadermi a ciò fare.

² One is led to think from this paragraph, that the scepticism, which Mr. Gray had expressed before, concerning these works of Ossian, was now entirely removed. (See pp. 229. 248.) I know no way of accounting for this, (as he had certainly received no stronger evidence of their authenticity,) but from the turn of his studies at the time. He had of late much busied himself in antiquities, and consequently had imbibed too much of the spirit of a professed antiquarian: now we know, from a thousand instances, that no set of men are more willingly duped than these, especially by any thing that comes to them under the fascinating form of a new discovery.—M.

V. S. illustrissimo accolga queste mie coserelle con quella medesima bontà con cui ha voluto accogliere quella lettera che dice pur poco delle tante cose, che fanno sentire alle anime armoniche di ammirabili suoi versi. Io sarò per quanto io porrò, Præco laudum tuarum, e quella mia lettera si stamperà in un nuovo Giornale, che si fa in Venezia, intitolato la Minerva, perchè sappia la Italia che la Inghilterra, ricca di un Omero^a, di uno Archimede^b, di un Demostene^c, non manca del suo Pindaro. Al Signor Howe le non saprei dire quanti obblighi io abbia, ma si maggiore è certamente quello di avermi presentato alla sua Musa, e di avermi procurato la occasione di poterla assicurare della perfetta ed altissima stima, con cui io ho l'onore di sottoscrivermi,

De V. S. illustrissimo

Devotis. &c.

ALGAROTTI.

LETTER LXI.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Pembroke-hall, Aug. 5, 1763.

You may well wonder at my long taciturnity. I wonder too, and know not what cause to assign; for it is certain I think of you daily. I believe it is owing to the nothingness of my history; for except six weeks that I passed in town towards the end of the spring, and a little jaunt to Epsom and Box-hill, I have been here time out of mind, in a place where no events grow,

^a Milton.

^b Newton.

^c Mr. Pitt.

though we preserve those of former days, by way of Hortus siccus in our libraries.

I doubt you have not read Rousseau's Emile. Every body that has children should read it more than once; for though it abounds with his usual glorious absurdity, though his general scheme of education be an impracticable chimera, yet there are a thousand lights struck out, a thousand important truths better expressed than they were before, that may be of service to the wisest men. Particularly I think he has observed children with more attention, and knows their meaning and the working of their little passions better than any other writer. As to his religious discussions, which have alarmed the world, and engaged their thoughts more than any other part of the book, I set them all at nought, and wish they had been omitted ^d.

^d That I may put together the rest of Mr. Gray's sentiments concerning this singular writer, I insert here an extract from a letter of later date, written to myself. "I have not read the Philosophic Dictionary. I can now stay with great patience for any thing that comes from Voltaire. They tell me it is frippery, and blasphemy, and wit. I could have forgiven myself if I had not read Rousseau's Lettres de la Montagne. Always excepting the Contract Social, it is the dullest performance he ever published. It is a weak attempt to separate the miracles from the morality of the Gospel. The latter (he would have you think) he believes was sent from God; and the former he very explicitly takes for an imposture: this is in order to prove the cruelty and injustice of the state of Geneva in burning his Emile. The latter part of his book is to shew the abuses that have crept into the constitution of his country, which point (if you are concerned about it) he makes out very well; and his intention in this is plainly to raise a tumult in the city, and to be revenged on the Petit Conseil, who condemned his writings to the flames."—M.

LETTER LXII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. HOWE.

Cambridge, Sept. 10, 1763.

I OUGHT long since to have made you my acknowledgments for the obliging testimonies of your esteem that you have conferred upon me; but Count Algarotti's books^e did not come to my hands till the end of July, and since that time I have been prevented by illness from doing any of my duties. I have read them more than once, with increasing satisfaction; and should wish mankind had eyes to descry the genuine sources of their own pleasures, and judgment to know the extent that nature has prescribed to them: if this were the case, it would be to their interest to appoint Count Algarotti their "Arbiter Elegantiarum." He is highly civil to our nation; but there is one point in which he does not do us justice; I am the more solicitous about it, because it relates to the only taste we can call our own; the only proof of our original talent in matter of pleasure, I mean our skill in gardening, or rather laying out grounds: and this is no small honour to us, since neither Italy nor France have ever had the least notion of it, nor yet do at all comprehend it when they see it. That the Chinese have this beautiful art in high perfection, seems very probable from the Jesuits' Letters, and more from Chambers's little discourse, published some years ago^f; but it is very certain ^e Three small treatises on Painting, the Opera, and the French Academy for Painters in Italy; they have been since collected in the Leghorn edition of his works.—M.

^f The author has since enlarged and published it under the title of a Dissertation on Oriental Gardening; in which he has put it out of all doubt, that the Chinese and English tastes are totally dissimilar.—M.

we copied nothing from them, nor had any thing but Nature for our model. It is not forty years since the art was born among us^g; and it is sure that there was nothing in Europe like it; and as sure, we then had no information on this head from China at all^h.

I shall rejoice to see you in England, and talk over these and many other matters with you at leisure. Do not despair of your health, because you have not found all the effects you had promised yourself from a finer climate. I have known people who have experienced the same thing, and yet, at their return, have lost all their complaints as by miracle.

P. S. I have answered Count Algarotti's letter, and his to Mr. Mason I conveyed to him; but whether he has received his books, I have not yet heard.

Mr. Howe, on receiving the foregoing letter, communicated the objection which it contained to the Count; who, admitting the justness of it altered the passage, as appears from the following extract of the answer which he sent to that gentleman.

“ Mi spiace solamente che quella critica concernente i Giardini Inglesi non la abbia fatta à me medesimo; quasi egli dovesse credermi piu amico della mia opinione

^g See Mr. Walpole's history of this art at the end of the last volume of his Anecdotes of Painters, when he favours the world with its publication.—M.

^h I question whether this be not saying too much. Sir William Temple's account of the Chinese gardens was published some years before this period; and it is probable that might have promoted our endeavours, not indeed of imitating them, but of imitating (what he said was their archetype) Nature.—M.

che della verità. Ecco, come ho cangiato qual luogo. Dopo le parole nel tesser la favola di un poema. ‘ Simili ai Giardini della Cina sono quelli che piantano gl’Inglese dietro al medesimo modello della Natura.’ Quanto ella ha di vago, è di vario, boschetti, collinette, acque vive, praterie con dei tempietti, degli obelischi, ed anche di belle rovine che spuntano quà e là, si trova quivi reunito dal gusto dei Kent, e dei Chambers^h, che hanno di tanto sorpassato il le Nature, tenuto già il maestro dell’ Architettura, diro così, dè Giardini. Dalle Ville d’Inghilterra è sbandita la simmetria Francese, i più bei siti pajono naturali, il culto è misto col negletto, è il disordine che vi regna è l’effetto dell’ arte la meglio ordinata.”

It is seldom that an author of a reputation so established, (as Mr. Howe truly remarked, when he sent this extract to Mr. Gray,) so easily, readily, and explicitly gives up his own opinion to that of another, or even to conviction itself; nor perhaps would Count Algarotti have done so, had he not been thoroughly apprized to whose correction he submitted.

LETTER LXIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. NICHOLLSⁱ.

I RECEIVED your letter at Southampton; and as I would wish to treat every body according to their ^h As he had written on the subject, this mistake was natural enough in Count Algarotti.

ⁱ Rector of Lounde and Bradwell in Suffolk. His acquaintance with Mr. Gray commenced a few years before the date of this, when he was a student of Trinity Hall, Cambridge.]—M.

own rule and measure of good breeding, have, against my inclination, waited till now before I answered it, purely out of fear and respect, and an ingenious diffidence of my own abilities. If you will not take this as an excuse, accept it at least as a well-turned period, which is always my principal concern.

So I proceed to tell you that my health is much improved by the sea, not that I drank it, or bathed in it, as the common people do : no ! I only walked by it, and looked upon it. The climate is remarkably mild, even in October and November ; no snow has been seen to lie there for these thirty years past ; the myrtles grow in the ground against the houses, and Guernsey lilies bloom in every window ; the town, clean and well-built, surrounded by its old stone-walls, with their towers and gateways, stands at the point of a peninsula, and opens full south to an arm of the sea, which, having formed two beautiful bays on each hand of it, stretches away in direct view, till it joins the British Channel ; it is skirted on either side with gently-rising grounds, clothed with thick wood, and directly cross its mouth rise the high lands of the Isle of Wight at distance, but distinctly seen. In the bosom of the woods (concealed from profane eyes) lie hid the ruins of Netley Abbey ; there may be richer and greater houses of religion, but the Abbot is content with his situation. See there, at the top of that hanging meadow, under the shade of those old trees that bend into a half circle about it, he is walking slowly (good man !) and bidding his beads for the souls of his benefactors, interred in that venerable pile that lies beneath him. Beyond it (the meadow still descending) nods a thicket of oaks that mask the building, and have excluded a view too garish and luxuriant for a holy eye ; only on either hand they leave an opening to the blue glittering sea. Did you not observe how, as that white sail shot by and was lost, he turned and crossed himself to drive the tempter from him that had thrown that distraction in his way? I should tell you that the ferryman who rowed me, a lusty young fellow, told me that he would not for all the world pass a night at the Abbey, (there were such things near it,) though there was a power of money hid there. From thence I went to Salisbury, Wilton, and Stonehenge; but of these I say no more, they will be published at the University press.

P. S. I must not close my letter without giving you one principal event of my history; which was, that (in the course of my late tour) I set out one morning before five o'clock, the moon shining through a dark and misty autumnal air, and got to the sea-coast time enough to be at the sun's levee. I saw the clouds and dark vapours open gradually to right and left, rolling over one another in great smoky wreaths, and the tide (as it flowed gently in upon the sands) first whitening, then slightly tinged with gold and blue; and all at once a little line of insufferable brightness that (before I can write these five words) was grown to half an orb, and now to a whole one, too glorious to be distinctly seen^k.

^k This puts me in mind of a similar description written by Dr. Jeremy Taylor, which I shall here beg leave to present to the reader, who will find by it that the old Divine had occasionally as much power of description as even our modern Poet. "As when the sun approaches towards the gates of the morning, he first opens a little eye of heaven, and sends away the spirits of darkness; gives light to the cock, and calls up the lark to mattins; and by and by gilds the fringes of a cloud, and peeps over the eastern hills, thrusting out his golden horns * * * ; and still (while a man tells the story) the sun gets up higher till he shews a fair face and a full light."—Taylor's Holy Dying, p. 17.—M.

It is very odd it makes no figure on paper ; yet I shall remember it as long as the sun, or at least as long as I endure. I wonder whether any body ever saw it before? I hardly believe it.

LETTER LXIV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Sunday, December 30, 1764.

I HAVE received the Castle of Otranto, and return you my thanks for it. It engages our attention here¹, makes some of us cry a little, and all in general afraid to go to-beds o'nights. We take it for a translation, and should believe it to be a true story, if it were not for St. Nicholas.

When your pen was in your hand you might have been a little more communicative: for, though disposed enough to believe the opposition rather consumptive, I am entirely ignorant of all the symptoms. Your canonical book I have been reading with great satisfaction. He speaketh as one having authority. If Englishmen have any feeling left, methinks they must feel now; and if the ministry have any feeling (whom nobody will suspect of insensibility) they must cut off the author's ears, for it is in all the forms a most wicked libel. Is the old man and the lawyer put on, or is it real? or has some real lawyer furnished a good part of the materials, and another person employed them? This I guess; for there is an uncouthness of diction in the beginning, which is not supported throughout—though it now and then occurs again, as if the writer was weary of supporting the character he had assumed, when the subject had warmed him beyond dissimulation^m.

¹ At Cambridge.

Rousseau's Lettersⁿ I am reading heavily, heavily! He justifies himself, till he convinces me that he deserved to be burnt, at least that his book did. I am not got through him, and you never will. Voltaire I detest, and have not seen his book: I shall in good time. You surprise me, when you talk of going in February. Pray, does all the minority go too? I hope you have a reason. Désespérer de republica is a deadly sin in politics.

Adieu! I will not take my leave of you; for (you perceive) this letter means to beg another, when you can spare a little.

LETTER LXV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. PALGRAVE^o.

March, 1765.

MY instructions, of which you are so desirous, are two-fold: the first part relates to what is past, and that will be rather diffuse: the second, to what is to come; and that we shall treat more succinctly, and with all due brevity.

^m Mr. Gray may probably allude to a pamphlet, called "A Letter concerning Libels, Warrants, Seizure of Papers, and Security for the Peace or Behaviour, with a View to some late Proceedings, and the Defence of them by the Majority."—Supposed to have been written by William Greaves, Esq. a master in Chancery, under the inspection of the late Lord Camden.—M.

ⁿ The Lettres de la Montagne.

^o Mr. Gray's correspondent was now making the tour of France and Italy.—M.

First, when you come to Paris you will not fail to visit the cloister of the Chartreuse, where Le Sueur (in the history of St. Bruno) has almost equalled Raphael^P. Then your Gothic inclinations will naturally lead you to the Sainte Chapelle built by St. Louis: in the treasury is preserved one of the noblest gems of the Augustan age. When you take a trip into the country, there is a fine old chapel at Vincennes with admirable painted windows; and at Fontainebleau, the remains of Francis the First's magnificence might give you some pleasure. In your way to Lyons you will take notice of the view over the Saone, from about Tournus and Macon. Fail not to walk a few miles along the banks of the Rhone, down the river. I would certainly make a little journey to the Grande Chartreuse, up the mountains: at your return out of Italy this will have little effect. At Turin you will visit the Capuchin's convent just without the city, and the Superga at no great distance for the sake of the views. At Genoa observe the Terreno of the palace Brignoli, as a model of an apartment elegantly disposed in a hot climate. At Parma you will adore the great Madonna and St. Jerom, once at St. Antonio Abbate, but now (I am told) in the ducal palace. In the Madonna della Steccata observe the Moses breaking the tables, a chiaroscuro figure of the ^P Of these pictures of Le Sueur, (which now have a prominent place in the Gallery of the Louvre,) Mr. Walpole thus speaks, in a letter to Mr. West: "I don't know what Raphael may be at Rome, but these pictures excel all I have seen in Paris and England. The figure of the dead man, who spoke at his burial, contains all the strongest and horridest ideas of ghastliness, hypocrisy discovered, and the height of damnation, pain, and cursing." This opinion was not altered after Mr. Walpole had visited the Vatican and the Gallery of Florence.—ED.

Parmeggiano at too great a height, and ill lighted, but immense. At the Capuchins, the great Pietà of Annib. Caracci; in the Villa Ducale, the room painted by Carlo Cignani; and the last works of Agostino Caracci at Modena. I know not what remains now, the flower of the collection is gone to Dresden. Bologna is too vast a subject for me to treat: the palaces and churches are open; you have nothing to do but to see them all. In coming down the Apennine you will see (if the sun shines) all Tuscany before you. And so I have brought you to Florence, where to be sure there is nothing worth seeing. Secondly—

1. Vide, quodcunque videndum est.
2. Quodcunque ego non vidi, id tu vide.
3. Quodcunque videris, scribe et describe; memoriae ne fide.
4. Scribendo nil admirare; et cum pictor non sis, verbis omnia depinge.
5. Tritam viatorum compitam calca, et cum poteris, desere.
6. Eme, quodcunque emendum est; I do not mean pictures, medals, gems, drawings, &c. only; but clothes, stockings, shoes, handkerchiefs, little moveables; every thing you may want all your life long: but have a care of the custom-house.

Pray present my most respectful compliments to Mr. Weddell^q. I conclude when the winter is over, and you have seen Rome and Naples, you will strike out of the beaten path of English travellers, and see a little of the country, throw yourselves into the bosom of the Apennine, survey the horrid lake of Amsanctus, (look in Cluver's Italy,) catch the breezes on the coast of Ta-ranto and Salerno, expatiate to the very toe of the Continent, perhaps strike over the Faro of Messina, and having measured the gigantic columns of Girgenti, and the tremendous caverns of Syracuse, refresh yourselves amidst the fragrant vale of Enna. Oh! che bel riposo! Addio.

^q William Weddell, Esq. of Newby in Yorkshire.

LETTER LXVI.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Glames Castle, Sept. 14, 1765.

I DEFERRED writing to you till I had seen a little more of this country than you yourself had seen; and now being just returned from an excursion, which I and Major Lyon have been making, into the Highlands, I sit down to give you an account of it. But first I must return to my journey hither, on which I shall be very short; partly because you know the way as far as Edinburgh, and partly that there was not a great deal worth remarking. The first night we passed as Tweedmouth; (seventy-seven miles;) the next at Edinburgh; (fifty-three miles;) where Lord Strathmore left the Major and me, to go to Lenox-Love, (Lord Blantyre's,) where his aunt lives: so that afternoon and all next day I had leisure to visit the Castle, Holyrood-house, Heriot's Hospital, Arthur's Seat, &c. and am not sorry to have seen that most picturesque (at a distance) and nastiest (when near) of all capital cities. I supped with Dr. Robertson and other literati, and the next morning Lord Strathmore came for us. We crossed at the Queen's Ferry in a four-oared yawl without a sail, and were tossed about rather more than I should wish to hazard again; lay at Perth, a large Scotch town with much wood about it, on the banks of the Tay, a very noble river. Next morning ferried over it, and came by dinner-time to Glames; being (from Edinburgh) sixty-seven miles, which makes in all (from Hetton) one hundred and ninety-seven miles. The Castle^r stands in Strathmore, (i. e. the Great Valley,) which winds about from Stonehaven on the east coast of Kincardineshire, obliquely, as far as Stirling, near one hundred miles in length, and from seven to ten miles in breadth, cultivated every where to the foot of the hills, on either hand, with oats or bere, a species of barley, except where the soil is mere peat-earth, (black as a coal,) or barren sand covered only with broom and heath, or a short grass fit for sheep. Here and there appear, just above ground, the huts of the inhabitants, which they call towns, built of, and covered with turf; and among them, at great distances, the gentlemen's houses, with enclosures and a few trees round them.

Amidst these the Castle of Glames distinguishes itself, the middle part of it rising proudly out of what seems a great and thick wood of tall trees, with a cluster of hanging towers on the top. You descend to it gradually from the south, through a double and triple avenue of Scotch firs, sixty or seventy feet high, under three gateways. This approach is a full mile long; and when you have passed the second gate, the firs change to limes, and another oblique avenue goes off on either hand towards the offices. These, as well as all the enclosures that surround the house, are bordered with three or four ranks of sycamores, ashes, and white

^r This is said to be the very Castle in which Duncan was murdered by Macbeth.—M.

poplars of the noblest height, and from seventy to one hundred years old. Other alleys there are, that go off at right angles with the long one; small groves, and walled gardens, of Earl Patrick's planting, full of broad-leaved elms, oaks, birch, black cherry-trees, laburnums, &c. all of great stature and size, which have not till this week begun to shew the least sense of morning frosts. The third gate delivers you into a court with a broad pavement, and grass-plats adorned with statues of the four Stuart kings, bordered with old silver firs and yew-trees, alternately, and opening with an iron palisade on either side to two square old-fashioned parterres surrounded by stone fruit-walls. The house, from the height of it, the greatness of its mass, the many towers a-top, and the spread of its wings, has really a very singular and striking appearance, like nothing I ever saw. You will comprehend something of its shape from the plan of the second floor, which I enclose. The wings are about fifty feet high; the body (which is the old castle, with walls ten feet thick) is near one hundred. From the leads I see to the south of me (just at the end of the avenue) the little town of Glames, the houses built of stone, and slated, with a neat kirk and small square tower, (a rarity in this region.) Just beyond it rises a beautiful round hill, and another ridge of a longer form adjacent to it, both covered with woods of tall fir. Beyond them, peep over the black hills of Sid-law, over which winds the road to Dundee. To the north, within about seven miles of me, begin to rise the Grampians, hill above hill, on whose tops three weeks ago I could plainly see some traces of the snow that fell in May last. To the east, winds a way to the Strath, such as I have before described it, among the hills, which sink lower and lower as they approach the sea. To the west, the same valley (not plain, but broken, unequal ground) runs on for above twenty miles in view: there I see the crags above Dunkeld; there Beni-Gloe and Beni-More rise above the clouds; and there is that She-Khallian, that spires into a cone above them all, and lies at least forty-five miles (in a direct line) from this place.

Lord Strathmore, who is the greatest farmer in this neighbourhood, is from break of day to dark night among his husbandmen and labourers: he has near two thousand acres of land in his own hands, and is at present employed in building a low wall of four miles long, and in widening the bed of the little river Deane, which runs to south and south-east of the house, from about twenty to fifty feet wide, both to prevent inundations, and to drain the lake of Forfar. This work will be two years more in completing, and must be three miles in length. All the Highlanders that can be got are employed in it; many of them know no English, and I hear them singing Erse songs all day long. The price of labour is eightpence a day; but to such as will join together, and engage to perform a certain portion in a limited time, two shillings.

I must say that all his labours seem to prosper; and my lord has casually found in digging such quantities of shell-marl, as not only fertilize his own grounds, but are disposed of at a good price to all his neighbours. In his nurseries are thousands of oaks, beech, larches, horse-chesnuts, spruce-firs, &c. thick as they can stand, and whose only fault is that they are grown tall and vigorous before he has determined where to plant them out; the most advantageous spot we have for beauty lies west of the house, where (when the stone walls of the meadows are taken away) the grounds, naturally unequal, will have a very park-like appearance: they are already full of trees, which need only thinning here and there to break the regularity of their trout-stream, which joins the river Deane hard by. Pursuing the course of this brook upwards, you come to a narrow sequestered valley sheltered from all winds, through which it runs murmuring among great stones; on one hand the ground gently rises into a hill, on the other are the rocky banks of the rivulet almost perpendicular, yet covered with sycamore, ash, and fir, that (though it seems to have no place or soil to grow in) yet has risen to a good height, and forms a thick shade: you may continue along this gill, and passing by one end of the village and its church for half a mile, it leads to an opening between the two hills covered with fir-woods, that I mentioned above, through which the stream makes its way, and forms a cascade of ten or twelve feet over broken rocks. A very little art is necessary to make all this a beautiful scene. The weather, till the last week, has been in general very fine and warm; we have had no fires till now, and often have sat with the windows open an hour after sun-set: now and then a shower has come, and sometimes sudden gusts of wind descend from the mountains, that finish as suddenly as they arose; but to-day it blows a hurricane. Upon the whole, I have been exceeding lucky in my weather, and particularly in my Highland expedition of five days.

We set out then the eleventh of September, and continuing along the Strath to the west, passed through Megill, (where is the tomb of "Queen Wanders, that was riven to dethe by staned horses for nae gude that she did;" so the women there told me, I assure you,) through Cowper of Angus ; over the river Ila ; then over a wide and dismal heath, fit for an assembly of witches, till we came to a string of four small lakes in a valley, whose deep blue waters and green margin, with a gentleman's house or two seated on them in little groves, contrasted with the black desert in which they were inclosed. The ground now grew unequal ; the hills, more rocky, seemed to close in upon us, till the road came to the brow of a steep descent, and (the sun then sitting) between two woods of oak we saw far below us the river Tay come sweeping along at the bottom of a precipice, at least one hundred and fifty feet deep, clear as glass, full to the brim, and very rapid in its course : it seemed to issue out of woods thick and tall, that rose on either hand, and were overhung by broken rocky crags of vast height ; above them, to the west, the tops of higher mountains appeared on which the evening clouds reposed. Down by the side of the river, under the thickest shades, is seated the town of Dunkeld ; in the midst of it stands a ruined cathedral, the towers and shell of the building still entire : a little beyond it, a large house of the Duke of Athol, with its offices and gardens, extends a mile beyond the town : and as his grounds were interrupted by the streets and roads, he has flung arches of communication across them, that add to the scenery of the place, which of itself is built of good white stone, and handsomely slated ; so that no one would take it for a Scotch town till they come into it. Here we passed the night ; if I told you how, you would bless yourself.

Next day we set forward to Taymouth, twenty-seven miles farther west ; the road winding through beautiful woods, with the Tay almost always in full view to the right, being here from three to four hundred feet over.

The Strath-Tay, from a mile to three miles or more wide, covered with corn, and spotted with groups of people, then in the midst of their harvest; on either hand a vast chain of rocky mountains, that changed their face and opened something new every hundred yards, as the way turned, or the clouds passed: in short, altogether it was one of the most pleasing days I have passed these many years, and at every step I wished for you. At the close of day we came to Balloch^s, so the place was called; but now Taymouth, improperly enough; for here it is that the river issues out of Loch-Tay, a glorious lake fifteen miles long and one mile and a half broad, surrounded with prodigious mountains; there on its north-eastern brink, impending over it, is the vast hill of Lawers; to the east is that enormous creature, She-Khallian (i. e. the maiden's pap) spiring above the clouds: directly west, beyond the end of the lake, Beni-More, the great mountain rises to a most awful height, and looks down on the tomb of Fingal. Lord Bredalbane's policy (so they call here all such ground as is laid out for pleasure) takes in about two thousand acres, of which his house, offices, and a deer-park, about three miles round, occupy the plain or bottom, which is a little above a mile in breadth; through it winds the Tay, which, by means of a bridge, I found here to be one hundred and fifty-six feet over: his plantations and woods rise with the ground, on either side the vale, to the very summit of the enormous crags that over-hang it: along them, on the mountain's side, runs a terrace a mile and a half long, that overlooks the course of the river. From several seats and temples perched on particular rocky eminences, you command the lake for many miles in length, which turns like some huge river, and loses itself among the mountains that surround it ; at its eastern extremity, where the river issues out of it, on a peninsula, my Lord has built a neat little town and church with a high square tower ; and just before it lies a small round island in the lake, covered with trees, amongst which are the ruins of some little religious house.

^s Mr. Pennant, in his tour in Scotland, explains this word "the Mouth of the Loch."

Trees, by the way, grow here to great size and beauty. I saw four old chesnuts in the road, as you enter the park, of vast bulk and height ; one beech tree I measured that was sixteen feet seven inches in the girth, and, I guess, near eighty feet in height. The gardener presented us with peaches, nectarines, and plumbs from the stone walls of the kitchen-garden ; (for there are no brick nor hot walls ;) the peaches were good, the rest well tasted, but scarce ripe ; we had also golden pippins from an espalier, not ripe, and a melon very well flavoured and fit to cut : of the house I have little to say ; it is a very good nobleman's house, handsomely furnished and well kept, very comfortable to inhabit, but not worth going far to see. Of the earl's taste I have not much more to say ; it is one of those noble situations that man cannot spoil : it is however certain, that he has built an inn and a town just where his principal walks should have been, and in the most wonderful spot of ground that perhaps belongs to him. In this inn however we lay ; and next day returning down the river four miles, we passed it over a fine bridge, built at the expense of the government, and continued our way to Logie-Rait, just below which, in a most charming scene, the Tummel, which is here the larger river of the two, falls into the Tay. We ferried over the Tummel in order to get into Marshal Wade's road, which leads from Dunkeld to Inverness, and continued our way along it toward the north: the road is excellent, but dangerous enough in conscience; the river often running directly under us at the bottom of a precipice two hundred feet deep, sometimes masked indeed by wood that finds means to grow where I could not stand, but very often quite naked and without any defence; in such places we walked for miles together, partly for fear, and partly to admire the beauty of the country, which the beauty of the weather set off to the greatest advantage: as evening came on, we approached the pass of Gillikrankie, where, in the year 1745, the Hessians, with their prince at their head, stopped short and refused to march a foot farther.

"Vestibulum ante ipsum, primisque in faucibus Orci," stands the solitary mansion of Mr. Robertson, of Faselley; close by it rises a hill covered with oak, with grotesque masses of rock staring from among their trunks, like the sullen countenances of Fingal and all his family, frowning on the little mortals of modern days: from between this hill and the adjacent mountains, pent in a narrow channel, comes roaring out the river Tummel, and falls headlong down involved in white foam, which rises into a mist all round it: but my paper is deficient, and I must say nothing of the pass itself, the black river Garry, the Blair of Athol, Mount Beni-Gloe, my return by another road to Dunkeld, the Hermitage, the Stra-Bram, and the Rumbling Brig: in short, since I saw the Alps, I have seen nothing sublime till now. In about a week I shall set forward, by the Stirling road, on my return all alone.

Pray for me till I see you, for I dread Edinburgh and the itch, and expect to find very little in my way worth the perils I am to endure.

LETTER LXVII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BEATTIE^z.

Glames-castle, Sept. 8, 1765.

A LITTLE journey I have been making to Arbroath, has been the cause that I did not answer your very obliging letter so soon as I ought to have done. A man of merit, that honours me with his esteem, and has the frankness to tell me so, doubtless can need no excuses: his apology is made, and we are already acquainted, however distant from each other.

I fear I cannot (as I would wish) do myself the pleasure of waiting on you at Aberdeen, being under an engagement to go to-morrow to Taymouth, and, if the weather will allow it, to the Blair of Athol: this will take up four or five days, and at my return the approach of winter will scarce permit me to think of any farther expeditions northwards. My stay here will, however, be a fortnight or three weeks longer, and if in that time any business or invitation should call you this way, Lord Strathmore gives me commission to say, he shall be extremely glad to see you at Glames; and doubt not it will be a particular satisfaction to me to receive and thank you in person for the favourable sentiments you have entertained of me, and the civilities with which you have honoured me.

^z Professor of Moral Philosophy and Logic in the Marischal College, Aberdeen.

LETTER LXVIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BEATTIE.

Glames-castle, Oct. 2, 1765.

I MUST beg you would present my most grateful acknowledgments to your society for the public mark of their esteem, which you say they are disposed to confer on me^t. I embrace, with so deep and just a sense of their goodness, the substance of that honour they do me, that I hope it may plead my pardon with them if I do not accept the form. I have been, Sir, for several years a member of the University of Cambridge, and formerly (when I had some thoughts of the profession) took a bachelor of laws' degree there; since that time, though long qualified by my standing, I have always neglected to finish my course, and claim my doctor's degree: judge, therefore, whether it will not look like a slight, and some sort of contempt, if I receive the same degree from a sister University. I certainly would avoid giving any offence to a set of men, among whom I have passed so many easy, and I may say, happy hours of my life; yet shall ever retain in my memory the obligations you have laid me under, and be proud of my connection with the University of Aberdeen.

It is a pleasure to me to find that you are not offended with the liberties I took when you were at Glames; you took me too literally, if you thought I meant in the least to discourage you in your pursuit of poetry : all I intended to say was, that if either vanity, (that is, a general and undistinguishing desire of applause,) or interest, or ambition, has any place in the breast of a poet, he stands a great chance in these our days of being severely disappointed ; and yet, after all these passions are suppressed, there may remain in the mind of one, "ingenti percussus amore," (and such I take you to be,) incitements of a better sort, strong enough to make him write verse all his life, both for his own pleasure and that of all posterity.

^t The Marischal College of Aberdeen had desired to know whether it would be agreeable to Mr. Gray to receive from them the degree of doctor of laws. Mr. Beattie wrote to him on the subject, and this is the answer.—M.

I am sorry for the trouble you have had to gratify my curiosity and love of superstition^u ; yet I heartily thank you. On Monday, Sir, I set forward on my way to England ; where, if I can be of any little use to you, or should ever have the good fortune to see you, it will be a particular satisfaction to me. Lord Strathmore and the family here desire me to make their compliments to you.

P. S. Remember Dryden, and be blind to all his faults^x.

^u Mr. Gray, when in Scotland, had been very inquisitive after the popular superstitions of the country ; his correspondent sent him two books on this subject, foolish ones indeed, as might be expected, but the best that could be had ; a History of Second Sight, and a History of Witches.—M.

^x Mr. Beattie, it seems, in their late interview, had expressed himself with less admiration of Dryden than Mr. Gray thought his due. He told him in reply, " that if there was any excellence in his own numbers, he had learned it wholly from that great poet ; and pressed him with great earnestness to study him, as his choice of words and versification were singularly happy and harmonious."—M.

LETTER LXIX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Cambridge, December 13, 1765.

I AM very much obliged to you for the detail you enter into on the subject of your own health: in this you cannot be too circumstantial for me, who had received no account of you, but at second hand: such as, that you were dangerously ill, and therefore went to France; that you meant to try a better climate, and therefore staid at Paris; that you had relapsed, and were confined to your bed, and extremely in vogue, and supped in the best company, and were at public diversions. I rejoiced to find (improbable as it seemed) that all the wonderful part of this is strictly true, and that the serious part has been a little exaggerated. This latter I conclude not so much from your own account of yourself, as from the spirits in which I see you write; and long may they continue to support you! I mean in a reasonable degree of elevation: but if (take notice) they are so volatile, so flippant, as to suggest any of those doctrines of health, which you preach with all the zeal of a French atheist; at least, if they really do influence your practice; I utterly renounce them and all their works. They are evil spirits, and will lead you to destruction.—You have long built your hopes on temperance, you say, and hardiness. On the first point we are agreed. The second has totally disappointed you, and therefore you will persist in it; by all means. But then be sure to persist too in being young, in stopping the course of time, and making the shadow return back upon your sun-dial. If you find this not so easy, acquiesce with a good grace in my anilities, put on your under-stockings of yarn or woollen, even in the night-time. Don't provoke me! or I shall order you two night-caps, (which by the way would do your eyesgood,) and put a little of any French liqueur into your water: they are nothing but brandy and sugar, and among their various flavours some of them may surely be palatable enough. The pain in your feet I can bear; but I shudder at the sickness in your stomach, and the weakness, that still continues. I conjure you, as you love yourself; I conjure you by Strawberry, not to trifle with these edge-tools. There is no cure for the gout, when in the stomach, but to throw it into the limbs. There is no relief for the gout in the limbs, but in gentle warmth and gradual perspiration.

I was much entertained with your account of our neighbours. As an Englishman and an Antigallican, I rejoice at their dulness and their nastiness; though I fear we shall come to imitate them in both. Their atheism is a little too much, too shocking to rejoice at. I have been long sick at it in their authors, and hated them for it: but I pity their poor innocent people of fashion. They were bad enough, when they believed every thing!

I have searched where you directed me; which I could not do sooner, as I was at London when I received your letter, and could not easily find her Grace's works. Here they abound in every library. The print^y you ask after is the frontispiece to "Nature's Pictures drawn by Fancy's Pencil." But lest there should be any mistake, I must tell you, the family are not at dinner, but sitting round a rousing fire and telling stories. The room is just such a one as we lived in at Rheims; I mean as to the glazing and ceiling. The chimney is supported by cariatides; over the mantelpiece the arms of the family. The Duke and Duchess are crowned with laurel. A servant stands behind him, holding a hat and feather: another is shutting a window. Diepenbecke delin. et (I think) S. Clouwe sculps. It is a very pretty and curious print, and I thank you for the sight of it. If it ever was a picture, what a picture to have!

^y Mr. Walpole had observed that he had been shewn a print of the Duke and Duchess of Newcastle at dinner with their family; in consequence, he requested Mr. Gray to examine their graces' folios, and ascertain if it was not a frontispiece to some one of them.—M.

I must tell you, that upon cleaning an old picture here at St. John's Lodge, which I always took for a Holbein; on a ring, which the figure wears, they have found H. H. It has been always called B. V. Fisher; but is plainly a layman, and probably Sir Anthony Denny, who was a benefactor to the college.

What is come of your Sevigne-curiosity? I should be glad of a line now and then, when you have leisure. I wish you well, and am ever

Yours.

LETTER LXX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BENTHAM^z.

About the year 1765.

TO THE REV. MR. BENTHAM.

MR. GRAY returns the papers and prints to Mr. Bentham, with many thanks for the sight of them.

Concludes he has laid aside his intention of publish-

^z This letter is extracted from the Gentleman's Magazine, for the year 1784, in which it was inserted by Mr. Bentham himself. His object was to contradict a prevailing report, that the treatise on Gothic ing the first four sections of his Introduction, that contain the settlement and progress of Christianity among the Saxons; as (however curious and instructive of themselves) they certainly have too slight a connection with the subject in hand to make a part of the present work.

Has received much entertainment and information from his remarks on the state of architecture among the Saxons, and thinks he has proved his point against the authority of Stow and Somner. The words of Eddius, Richard of Hexham, &c. must be every where cited in the original tongue, as the most accurate translation is in these cases not to be trusted; this Mr. B. has indeed commonly done in the MSS. but not every where.

P. 31. He says, the instances Sir C. Wren brings, were, some of them at least, undoubtedly erected after the Conquest. Sure they were all so without exception.

There is much probability in what he asserts with respect to the New Norman Mode of building; though this is not, nor perhaps can be, made out with so much precision as the former point.

P. 35. Here, where the author is giving a compendious view of the peculiarities that distinguish the Saxon style, it might be mentioned, that they had no tabernacles, (or niches and canopies,) nor any statues to adorn their buildings on the outside, which are the principal grace of what is called the Gothic; the only exception that I can recollect, is a little figure of Bishop Herebert Losing over the north transept door at Norwich, which architecture introduced into his History of the Church of Ely, was the work of Mr. Gray. His obligation to our author extended only to hints such as this letter contains; and Mr. Bentham regretted, at the time, that his work was too far advanced to allow him the full benefit even of these.—ED.

appears to be of that time: but this is rather a mezzorelievo than a statue, and it is well known that they used reliefs sometimes with profusion, as in the Saxon gateway of the Abbey at Bury, the gate of the Temple church at London, and the two gates at Ely, &c.

The want of pinnacles and of tracery in the vaults, are afterwards mentioned, but may as well be placed here too (in short) among the other characteristics.

Escutcheons of arms are hardly (if ever) seen in these fabrics, which are the most frequent of all decorations in after-times.

P. 34. Besides the chevron-work (or zig-zag moulding) so common, which is here mentioned, there is also,

The Billeted-moulding, as if a cylinder should be cut into small pieces of equal length, and these stuck on alternately round the face of the arches, as in the choir at Peterborough, and at St. Cross, &c.

The Nail-head, resembling the heads of great nails driven in at regular distances, as in the nave of old St. Paul's, and the great tower of Hereford, &c.

The Nebule, a projection terminated by an undulating line as under the upper range of windows, on the outside of Peterborough.

Then to adorn their vast massive columns there was the spiral-groove winding round the shafts, and the net, lozenge-work, overspreading them, both of which appear at Durham, and the first in the undercroft at Canterbury.

These few things are mentioned only, because Mr. Bentham's work is so nearly complete in this part, that one would wish it were quite so. His own observation may doubtless suggest to him many more peculiarities, which, however minute in appearance, are not contemptible, because they directly belong to his subject.

and contribute to ascertain the age of an edifice at first sight. The great deficiency is from Henry VIth's time to the Reformation, when the art was indeed at its height.

P. 36. At York, under the choir, remains much of the old work, built by Archbishop Roger, of Bishop's-bridge, in Henry II's reign; the arches are but just pointed, and rise on short round pillars, whose capitals are adorned with animals and foliage.

P. 37. Possibly the pointed arch might take its rise from those arcades we see in the early Norman (or Saxon) buildings on walls, where the wide semicircular arches cross and intersect each other, and form thereby at their intersection exactly a narrow and sharp pointed arch. In the wall south of the choir at St. Cross, is a facing of such wide, round, interlaced arches by way of ornament to a flat vacant space; only so much of it as lies between the legs of the two neighbouring arches, where they cross each other, is pierced through the fabric, and forms a little range of long pointed windows. It is of King Stephen's time.

P. 43. As Mr. B. has thought it proper to make a compliment to the present set of governors in their respective churches, it were to be wished he would insert a little reflection on the rage of repairing, beautifying, whitewashing, painting, and gilding, and above all, the mixture of Greek (or Roman) ornaments in Gothic edifices. This well-meant fury has been and will be little less fatal to our ancient magnificent edifices, than the Reformation and the Civil wars.

Mr. G. would wish to be told (at Mr. Bentham's leisure) whether over the great pointed arches, on which the western tower at Ely rises, any thing like a semi-circular curve appears in the stone work? and whether the screen (or rood-loft) with some part of the south-cross, may not possibly be a part of the more ancient church built by Abbot Simeon and Fitz-Gilbert.

LETTER LXXI.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Pembroke-hall, March 5, 1766.

I AM amazed at myself when I think I have never wrote to you ; to be sure it is the sin of witchcraft, or something worse. Had I been married, like Mason, some excuse might be made for it ; who (for the first time since that great event) has just thought fit to tell me that he never passed so happy a winter as the last, and this in spite of his anxieties, which he says might even make a part of his happiness ; for his wife is by no means in health, she has a constant cough : yet he is assured her lungs are not affected, and that it is nothing of the consumptive kind. As to me, I have been neither happy nor miserable ; but in a gentle stupefaction of mind, and very tolerable health of body hitherto. If they last, I shall not much complain. The accounts one has lately had from all parts, make me suppose you buried in the snow like the old Queen of Denmark. As soon as you are dug out, I should rejoice to hear your voice from the battlements of Old Park.

Every thing is politics. There are no literary productions worth your notice, at least of our country. The French have finished their great Encyclopedia in seventeen volumes ; but there are many flimsy articles very hastily treated, and great incorrectness of the press. There are now thirteen volumes of Buffon's

Natural History ; and he is not come to the monkeys yet, who are a numerous people. The life of Petrarch has entertained me ; it is not well written, but very curious, and laid together from his own letters, and the original writings of the fourteenth century : so that he takes in much of the history of those obscure times, and the characters of many remarkable persons. There are two volumes quarto ; and another, unpublished yet, will complete it.

Mr. Walpole writes me now and then a long and lively letter from Paris ; to which place he went last year with the gout upon him, sometimes in his limbs, often in his stomach and head. He has got somehow well, (not by means of the climate, one would think,) goes to all public places, sees all the best company, and is very much in fashion. He says he sunk like Queen Eleanor at Charing-cross, and has risen again at Paris. He returns in April. I saw the lady you inquire after, when I was last in London, and a prodigious fine one she is. She had a strong suspicion of rouge on her cheeks, a cage of foreign birds and a piping bulfinch at her elbow ; two little dogs on a cushion in her lap, and a cockatoo on her shoulder ; they were all exceeding glad to see me, and I them.

LETTER LXXII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON

Pembroke-hall, Aug. 26, 1776.

WHATEVER my pen may do, I am sure my thoughts expatiate no where oftener, or with more pleasure, than to Old Park. I hope you have made my peace with the angry little lady. It is certain, whether her name were in my letter or not, she was as present to my memory as the rest of the whole family ; and I desire you would present her with two kisses in my name, and one a-piece to all the others ; for I shall take the liberty to kiss them all, (great and small,) as you are to be my proxy ^a.

In spite of the rain, which I think continued, with very short intervals, till the beginning of this month, and quite effaced the summer from the year, I made a shift to pass May and June not disagreeably in Kent. I was surprised at the beauty of the road to Canterbury, which (I know not why) had not struck me before. The whole country is a rich and well-cultivated garden ; orchards, cherry-grounds, hop-gardens, intermixed with corn and frequent villages ; gentle risings covered with wood, and every where the Thames and Medway breaking in upon the landscape with all their navigation. It was indeed owing to the bad weather that the whole scene was dressed in that tender emerald green, which one usually sees only for a fortnight in the opening of the spring ; and this continued till I left the country. My residence was eight miles east of Canterbury, in a little quiet valley on the skirts of Barham Down^b. In these parts the whole soil is chalk, and whenever it holds up, in half an hour it is dry enough to walk out. I took the opportunity of three or four days fine weather to go into the Isle of Thanet ; saw Margate, (which is Bartholomew fair by the sea-side,) Ramsgate, and other places there ; and so came by Sandwich, Deal, Dover, Folkstone, and Hithe, back again. The coast is not like Hartlepool ; there are no rocks, but only chalky cliffs of no great height till you come to Dover ; there indeed they are noble and picturesque, and the opposite coasts of France begin to bound your view, which was left before to range unlimited by any thing but the horizon ; yet it is by no means a shipless sea, but every where peopled with white sails, and vessels of all sizes in motion : and take notice, (except in the Isle, which is all corn-fields, and has very little inclosure,) there are in all places hedge-rows, and tall trees even within a few yards of the beach. Particularly, Hithe stands on an eminence covered with wood. I shall confess we had fires at night (aye, and at day too) several times in June ; but do not go and take advantage in the north at this, for it was the most untoward year that ever I remember.

^a Some readers will think this paragraph very trifling ; yet many, I hope, will take it, as I give it, for a pleasing example of the aimableness of his domestic character.—M.

^b At Denton, where his friend the Rev. William Robinson, brother to Matthew Robinson, Esq. late member for Canterbury, then resided.—M.

Have you read the New Bath Guide ? It is the only thing in fashion, and is a new and original kind of humour. Miss Prue's conversion, I doubt, you will paste down, as a certain Yorkshire baronet did before he carried it to his daughters : yet I remember you all read Crazy Tales without pasting. Buffon's first collection of monkeys is come out, (it makes the fourteenth volume,) something, but not much to my edification ; for he is pretty well acquainted with their persons, but not with their manners.

My compliments to Mrs. Wharton and all your family ; I will not name them, lest I should affront any body.

LETTER LXXIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. NICHOLLS.

It is long since that I heard you were gone in haste into Yorkshire on account of your mother's illness, and the same letter informed me that she was recovered, otherwise I had then wrote to you only to beg you would take care of her, and to inform you that I had discovered a thing very little known, which is, that in one's whole life one can never have any more than a single mother. You may think this is obvious, and (what you call) a trite observation. You are a green gosling! I was at the same age (very near) as wise as you, and yet I never discovered this (with full evidence and conviction I mean) till it was too late. It is thirteen years ago, and seems but as yesterday, and every day I live it sinks deeper into my heart^c. Many a corollary could I draw from this axiom for your use, (not for my own,) but I will leave you the merit of doing it for yourself. Pray tell me how your health is: I conclude it perfect, as I hear you offered yourself as a guide to Mr. Palgrave into the Sierra-Morena of Yorkshire. For me, I passed the end of May and all June in Kent, not disagreeably. In the west part of it, from every eminence, the eye catches some long reach of the Thames or Medway, with all their shipping: in the east the sea breaks in upon you, and mixes its white transient sails and glittering

^c He seldom mentioned his mother without a sigh. After his death her gowns and wearing apparel were found in a trunk in his apartments just at she had left them; it seemed as if he could never take the resolution to open it, in order to distribute them to his female relations, to whom, by his will, he bequeathed them.—M.

blue expanse with the deeper and brighter greens of the woods and corn. This sentence is so fine I am quite ashamed ; but no matter ! You must translate it into prose. Palgrave, if he heard it, would cover his face with his pudding sleeve. I do not tell you of the great and small beasts, and creeping things innumerable, that I met with, because you do not suspect that this world is inhabited by any thing but men, and women, and clergy, and such two-legged cattle. Now I am here again very disconsolate, and all alone, for Mr. Brown is gone, and the cares of this world are coming thick upon me : you, I hope, are better off, riding and walking in the woods of Studley, &c. &c. I must not wish for you here ; besides I am going to town at Michaelmas, by no means for amusement.

LETTER LXXIV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. MASON.

March 28, 1767.

I BREAK in upon you at a moment, when we least of all are permitted to disturb our friends, only to say, that you are daily and hourly present to my thoughts. If the worst^d be not yet past, you will neglect and pardon me : but if the last struggle be over ; if the poor object of your long anxieties be no longer sensible to your kindness, or to her own sufferings, ^d As this little billet (which I received at the Hot Wells at Bristol) then breathed, and still seems to breathe, the very voice of friendship in its tenderest and most pathetic note, I cannot refrain from publishing it in this place. I opened it almost at the precise moment when it would necessarily be the most affecting.—M.

allow me (at least an idea, for what could I do, were I present more than this?) to sit by you in silence, and pity from my heart not her, who is at rest, but you, who lose her. May He, who made us, the Master of our pleasures and of our pains, preserve and support you! Adieu!

I have long understood how little you had to hope.

LETTER LXXV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BEATTIE.

*Old Park, near Darlington, Durham,
Aug. 12, 1767.*

I RECEIVED from Mr. Williamson, that very obliging mark you were pleased to give me of your remembrance: had I not entertained some slight hopes of revisiting Scotland this summer, and consequently of seeing you at Aberdeen, I had sooner acknowledged, by letter, the favour you have done me. Those hopes are now at an end; but I do not therefore despair of seeing again a country that has given me so much pleasure; nor of telling you, in person, how much I esteem you and (as you choose to call them) your amusements: the specimen of them, which you were so good to send me, I think excellent; the sentiments are such as a melancholy imagination naturally suggests in solitude and silence, and that (though light and business may suspend or banish them at times) return with but so much the greater force upon a feeling heart: the diction is elegant and unconstrained; not loaded with epithets and figures, nor flagging into prose ; the versification is easy and harmonious. My only objection is * * * * *

You see, Sir, I take the liberty you indulged me in, when I first saw you ; and therefore I make no excuses for it, but desire you would take your revenge on me in kind.

I have read over (but too hastily) Mr. Ferguson's book. There are uncommon strains of eloquence in it : and I was surprised to find not one single idiom of his country (I think) in the whole work. He has not the fault you mention ^f : his application to the heart is frequent, and often successful. His love of Montesquieu and Tacitus has led him into a manner of writing too shortwinded and sententious ; which those great men, had they lived in better times and under a better government, would have avoided.

I know no pretence that I have to the honour Lord Gray is pleased to do me ^g : but if his Lordship chooses

^e A paragraph is here omitted, as it contained merely a few particular criticisms ; a liberty of the same kind I have before taken in some of the preceding letters. The poem in question contained many touching reflections on mortality : it is to be hoped Dr. Beattie will one day give it to the public.—M.

^f To explain this, I must take the liberty to transcribe a paragraph from Mr. Beattie's letter, dated March 30, to which the above is an answer : " A professor at Edinburgh has published an Essay on the History of Civil Society, but I have not seen it. It is a fault common to almost all our Scotch authors, that they are too metaphysical : I wish they would learn to speak more to the heart, and less to the understanding ; but, alas ! this is a talent which Heaven only can bestow : whereas the philosophic spirit (as we call it) is merely artificial and level to the capacity of every man, who has much patience, a little learning, and no taste." He has since dilated on this just sentiment in his admirable Essay on the Immutability of Truth.—M.

^g Lord Gray had said that our Author was related to his family.

to own me, it certainly is not my business to deny it. I say not this merely on account of his quality, but because he is a very worthy and accomplished person. I am truly sorry for the great loss he has had since I left Scotland. If you should chance to see him, I will beg you to present my respectful humble service to his Lordship.

I gave Mr. Williamson all the information I was able in the short time he staid with me. He seemed to answer well the character you gave me of him: but what I chiefly envied in him, was his ability of walking all the way from Aberdeen to Cambridge, and back again; which if I possessed, you would soon see your obliged, &c.

LETTER LXXVI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BEATTIE.

Pembroke-hall, Dec. 24, 1767.

SINCE I had the pleasure of receiving your last letter, which did not reach me till I had left the north, and was come to London, I have been confined to my room with a fit of the gout: now I am recovered and in quiet at Cambridge, I take up my pen to thank you for your very friendly offers, which have so much the air of frankness and real good meaning, that were my body as tractable and easy of conveyance as my mind, you would see me to-morrow in the chamber you have so hospitably laid out for me at Aberdeen. But, alas! I am a summer-bird, and can only sit drooping till the sun returns: even then too my wings may chance to be clipped, and little in plight for so distant an excursion.

The proposal you make me, about printing at Glasgow what little I ever have written, does me honour. I leave my reputation in that part of the kingdom to your care; and only desire you would not let your partiality to me and mine mislead you. If you persist in your design, Mr. Foulis certainly ought to be acquainted with what I am now going to tell you. When I was in London the last spring, Dodsley, the bookseller, asked my leave to reprint, in a smaller form, all I ever published; to which I consented: and added, that I would send him a few explanatory notes; and if he would omit entirely the Long Story, (which was never meant for the public, and only suffered to appear in that pompous edition because of Mr. Bentley's designs, which were not intelligible without it,) I promised to send him something else to print instead of it, lest the bulk of so small a volume should be reduced to nothing at all. Now it is very certain that I had rather see them printed at Glasgow (especially as you will condescend to revise the press) than at London; but I know not how to retract my promise to Dodsley. By the way, you perhaps may imagine that I have some kind of interest in this publication; but the truth is, I have none whatever. The expense is his, and so is the profit, if there be any. I therefore told him the other day, in general terms, that I heard there would be an edition put out in Scotland by a friend of mine, whom I could not refuse; and that, if so, I would send thither a copy of the same notes and additions that I had promised to send to him. This did not seem at all to cool his courage; Mr. Foulis must therefore judge for himself, whether he thinks it worth while to print what is going to be printed also at London. If he does, I will send him (in a packet to you) the same things I shall send to Dodsley. They are imitations of two pieces of old Norwegian poetry, in which there was a wild spirit that struck me: but for my paraphrases I cannot say much; you will judge. The rest are nothing but a few parallel passages, and small notes just to explain what people said at the time was wrapped in total darkness. You will please to tell me, as soon as you can conveniently, what Mr. Foulis says on this head: that (if he drops the design) I may save myself and you the trouble of this packet. I ask your pardon for talking so long about it; a little more and my letter would be as big as all my works.

I have read, with much pleasure, an Ode of yours (in which you have done me the honour to adopt a measure that I have used) on Lord Hay's birth-day. Though I do not love panegyric, I cannot but applaud this, for there is nothing mean in it. The diction is easy and noble, the texture of the thoughts lyric, and the versification harmonious. The few expressions I object to are * * * *^h. These, indeed, are minutiae; but they weigh for something, as half a grain makes a difference in the value of a diamond.

LETTER LXXVII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. HOWE.

Pembroke-hall, Jan. 12, 1768.

I WAS willing to go through the eight volumes of Count Algarotti's works, which you lately presented to the library of this college, before I returned you an answer: this must be my excuse to you for my silence. First, I condole with you, that so neat an edition should swarm in almost every page with errors of the press, not only in notes and citations from Greek, English, and French authors, but in the Italian text itself, greatly to the disreputation of the Leghorn publishers. This is the only reason, I think, that could make an edition in England necessary ; but, I doubt, you would not find the matter much mended here ; our presses, as they improve in beauty, decline daily in accuracy : besides, you would find the expense very considerable, and the sale in no proportion to it, as, in reality, it is but few people in England that read currently and with pleasure the Italian tongue, and the fine old editions of their capital writers are sold at London for a lower price than they bear in Italy. An English translation I can by no means advise ; the justness of thought and good sense might remain, but the graces of elocution (which make a great part of Algarotti's merit) would be entirely lost, and that merely from the very different genius and complexion of the two languages.

^h Another paragraph of particular criticism is here omitted.—M.

Doubtless there can be no impropriety in your making the same present to the University that you have done to your own college. You need not at all to fear for the reputation of your friend ; he has merit enough to recommend him in any country. A tincture of various sorts of knowledge, an acquaintance with all the beautiful arts, an easy command, a precision, warmth, and richness of expression, and a judgment that is rarely mistaken on any subject to which he applies it. I had read the Congresso di Citéra before, and was excessively pleased with it, in spite of prejudice ; for I am naturally no friend to allegory, nor to poetical prose. The "Giudicio d' Amore" is an addition rather inferior to it. What gives me the least pleasure of any of his writings is the Newtonianism ; it is so direct an imitation of Fontenelle, a writer not easy to imitate, and least of all in the Italian tongue, whose character and graces are of a higher style, and never adapt themselves easily to the elegant badinage and legereté of conversation that sit so well on the French. The essays and letters (many of them entirely new to me) on the Arts, are curious and entertaining: those on other subjects, (even where the thoughts are not new, but borrowed from his various reading and conversation,) often better put, and better expressed than in the originals. I rejoice when I see Machiavel defended or illustrated, who to me appears one of the wisest men that any nation in any age has produced. Most of the other discourses, military or political, are well worth reading, though that on Kouli-Khan was a mere jeu d'esprit, a sort of historical exercise. The letters from Russia I had read before with pleasure, particularly the narrative of Munick and Lascy's campaigns. The detached thoughts are often new and just; but there should have been a revisal of them, as they are frequently to be found in his letters repeated in the very same words. Some too of the familiar letters might have been spared. The verses are not equal to the prose, but they are above mediocrity.

LETTER LXXVIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BEATTIE.

Pembroke-hall, Feb. 1, 1768.

I AM almost sorry to have raised any degree of impatience in you, because I can by no means satisfy it. The sole reason I have to publish these few additions now, is to make up (in both) for the omission of that Long Story; and as to the notes, I do it out of spite, because the public did not understand the two Odes, (which I have called Pindaric;) though the first was not very dark, and the second alluded to a few common facts to be found in any sixpenny History of England, by way of question and answer, for the use of children. The parallel passages I insert out of justice to those writers from whom I happened to take the hint of any line, as far as I can recollect.

I rejoice to be in the hands of Mr. Foulis, who has the laudable ambition of surpassing his predecessors, the Etiennes and the Elzevirs, as well in literature, as in the proper art of his profession: he surprises me in mentioning a lady, after whom I have been inquiring these fourteen years in vain. When the two Odes were first published, I sent them to her; but as I was forced to direct them very much at random, probably they never came to her hands. When the present edition comes out, I beg of Mr. Foulis to offer her a copy, in my name, with my respects and grateful remembrances; he will send another to you, Sir, and a third to Lord Gray, if he will do me the honour of accepting it. These are all the presents I pretend to make; (for I would have it considered only as a new edition of an old book;) after this, if he pleases to send me one or two, I shall think myself obliged to him. I cannot advise him to print a great number; especially as Dodsley has it in his power to print as many as he pleases, though I desire him not to do so.

You are very good to me in taking this trouble upon you: all I can say is, that I shall be happy to return it in kind, whenever you will give me the opportunity.

LETTER LXXIX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Pembroke-college, Feb. 14, 1768.

I RECEIVED the book¹ you were so good to send me, and have read it again (indeed I could hardly be said to have read it before) with attention and with pleasure. Your second edition is so rapid in its progress, it will now hardly answer any purpose to tell you either my own objections, or those of other people. Certain it is, that you are universally read here; but what we think, is not so easy to come at. We stay as usual to see the success, to learn the judgment of the town, to be directed in our opinions by those of more competent judges. If they like you, we shall; if any one of name write against you, we give you up: for we are modest and diffident of ourselves, and not without reason. History in particular is not our fort; for (the truth is) we read only modern books and the pamphlets of the day. I have heard it objected, that you raise doubts and difficulties, and do not satisfy them by telling us what was really the case. I have heard you charged with disrespect to the King of Prussia; and above all to King William, and the Revolution. These are seriously the most sensible things I have heard said, and all that I can recollect. If you please to justify yourself, you may.

My own objections are little more essential: they relate chiefly to inaccuracies of style, which either debase the expression or obscure the meaning. I could point out several small particulars of this kind, and will do so, if you think it can serve any purpose after publication. When I hear you read, they often escape me, partly because I am attending to the subject, and partly because from habit I understand you, where a stranger might often be at a loss.

¹ The Historic Doubts.

As to your arguments, most of the principal points are made out with a clearness and evidence that no one would expect where materials are so scarce. Yet I still suspect Richard of the murder of Henry VI. The chronicler of Croyland charges it full on him, though without a name or any mention of circumstances. The interests of Edward were the interests of Richard too, though the throne were not then in view; and that Henry still stood in their way, they might well imagine, because, though deposed and imprisoned once before, he had regained his liberty and his crown; and was still adored by the people. I should think, from the word tyranni, the passage was written after Richard had assumed the crown: but, if it was earlier, does not the bare imputation imply very early suspicions at least of Richard's bloody nature, especially in the mouth of a person that was no enemy to the house of York, nor friend to that of Beaufort?

That the Duchess of Burgundy, to try the temper of the nation, should set up a false pretender to the throne, (when she had the true Duke of York in her hands,) and that the queen-mother (knowing her son was alive) should countenance that design, is a piece of policy utterly incomprehensible; being the most likely means to ruin their own scheme, and throw a just suspicion of fraud and falsehood on the cause of truth, which Henry could not fail to seize, and turn to his own advantage.

Mr. Hume's first query, as far as relates to the queen-mother, will still have some weight. Is it probable, she should give her eldest daughter to Henry, and invite him to claim the crown, unless she had been sure that her sons were then dead? As to her seeming consent to the match between Elizabeth and Richard, she and her daughters were in his power, which appeared now well fixed, his enemies' designs within the kingdom being every where defeated, and Henry unable to raise any considerable force abroad. She was timorous and hopeless; or she might dissemble, in order to cover her secret dealings with Richmond: and if this were the case, she hazarded little, supposing Richard to dissemble too, and never to have thought seriously of marrying his niece.

Another unaccountable thing is, that Richard, a prince of the house of York, undoubtedly brave, clear-sighted, artful, attentive to business; of boundless generosity, as appears from his grants; just and merciful, as his laws and his pardons seem to testify; having subdued the Queen and her hated faction, and been called first to the protectorship and then to the crown by the body of the nobility and by the parliament; with the common people to friend, (as Carte often asserts,) and having nothing against him but the illegitimate family of his brother Edward, and the attainted house of Clarence, (both of them within his power;)—that such a man should see within a few months Buckingham, his best friend, and almost all the southern and western counties on one day in arms against him; that, having seen all these insurrections come to nothing, he should march with a gallant army against a handful of needy adventurers, led by a fugitive, who had not the shadow of a title, nor any virtues to recommend him, nor any foreign strength to depend on; that he should be betrayed by almost all his troops, and fall a sacrifice;

all this is to me utterly improbable, and I do not ever expect to see it accounted for.

I take this opportunity to tell you, that Algarotti (as I see in the new edition of his works, printed at Leghorn) being employed to buy pictures for the King of Poland, purchased among others the famous Holbein, that was at Venice. It don't appear that he knew any thing of your book: yet he calls it the Consul Meyer and his family, as if it were then known to be so in that city.

A young man here, who is a diligent reader of your books, an antiquary, and a painter, informs me, that at the Red Lion Inn, at Newmarket, is a piece of tapestry containing the very design of your marriage of Henry the Sixth, only with several more figures in it, both men and women; that he would have bought it of the people, but they refused to part with it.

Mr. Mason, who is here, desires to present his respects to you. He says, that to efface from our annals the history of any tyrant is to do an essential injury to mankind: but he forgives it, because you have shewn Henry the Seventh to be a greater devil than Richard.

Pray do not be out of humour. When you first commenced an author, you exposed yourself to pit, box, and gallery. Any coxcomb in the world may come in and hiss, if he pleases; aye, and (what is almost as bad) clap too, and you cannot hinder him. I saw a little squib fired at you in a newspaper by some of the house of York, for speaking lightly of chancellors. Adieu!

I am ever yours.

LETTER LXXX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Pembroke-College, Feb. 25, 1768.

To your friendly accusation^k, I am glad I can plead not guilty with a safe conscience. Dodsley told me in the spring that the plates from Mr. Bentley's designs were worn out, and he wanted to have them copied and reduced to a smaller scale for a new edition. I dissuaded him from so silly an expense, and desired he would put in no ornaments at all. The Long Story was to be totally omitted^l, as its only use (that of explaining the prints) was gone; but to supply the place of it in bulk, lest my works should be mistaken for the works of a flea, or a pismire, I promised to send him an equal weight of poetry or prose: so, since my return hither, I put up about two ounces of stuff; viz. The Fatal Sisters, The Descent of Odin, (of both which you have copies,) a bit of something from the Welsh, and certain little notes, partly from justice, (to acknowledge the debt, where I had borrowed any thing,) partly from ill temper, just to tell the gentle reader, that Edward I. was not Oliver Cromwell, nor Queen Elizabeth the witch of Endor. This is literally all; and with all this I shall be but a shrimp of an author. I gave leave also to print the same thing at Glasgow; but I doubt my packet has miscarried, for I hear nothing of its arrival as yet. To what you say to ^k Mr. Walpole had made a good-natured complaint against Mr. Gray for publishing, unknown to him, another edition of his works, containing, as it was said, some new pieces.—ED.

^l See letter LVI. Sect IV.

me so civilly, that I ought to write more, I reply in your own words, (like the Pamphleteer, who is going to confute you out of your own mouth,) What has one to do, when turned of fifty, but really to think of finishing? However, I will be candid, (for you seem to be so with me,) and avow to you, that till fourscore and ten, whenever the humour takes me, I will write, because I like it; and because I like myself better when I do so. If I do not write much, it is because I cannot. As you have not this last plea, I see no reason why you should not continue as long as it is agreeable to yourself, and to all such as have any curiosity or judgment in the subjects you choose to treat. By the way let me tell you (while it is fresh) that Lord Sandwich, who was lately dining at Cambridge, speaking (as I am told) handsomely of your book, said, it was a pity you did not know that his cousin Manchester had a genealogy of the kings, which came down no lower than to Richard III. and at the end of it were two portraits of Richard and his son, in which that king appeared to be a handsome man. I tell you it as I heard it: perhaps you may think it worth inquiring into.

I have looked into Speed and Leslie. It appears very odd, that Speed, in the speech he makes for P. Warbeck, addressed to James IV. of Scotland, should three times cite the manuscript proclamation of Perkin, then in the hands of Sir Robert Cotton; and yet, when he gives us the proclamation afterwards, (on occasion of the insurrection in Cornwall,) he does not cite any such manuscript. In Casley's Catalogue of the Cotton Library you may see whether this manuscript proclamation still exists or not: if it does, it may be found at the Museum. Leslie will give you no satisfaction at all: though no subject of England, he could not write freely on this matter, as the title of Mary, his mistress, to the crown of England was derived from that of Henry VII. Accordingly, he every where treats Perkin as an impostor; yet drops several little expressions inconsistent with that supposition. He has preserved no proclamation: he only puts a short speech into Perkin's mouth, the substance of which is taken by Speed, and translated in the end of his, which is a good deal longer: the whole matter is treated by Leslie very concisely and superficially. I can easily transcribe it, if you please; but I do not see that it could answer any purpose.

Mr. Boswell's book I was going to recommend to you, when I received your letter: it has pleased and moved me strangely, all (I mean) that relates to Paoli. He is a man born two thousand years after his time! The pamphlet proves what I have always maintained, that any fool may write a most valuable book by chance, if he will only tell us what he heard and saw with veracity. Of Mr. Boswell's truth I have not the least suspicion, because I am sure he could invent nothing of this kind. The true title of this part of his work is, A Dialogue between a Green-goose and a Hero.

I had been told of a manuscript in Benet Library: the inscription of it is, Itinerarium Fratris Simeonis et Hugonis Illuminatoris, 1322. Would not one think this should promise something? They were two Franciscan friars that came from Ireland, and passed through Wales to London, to Canterbury, to Dover, and so to France, in their way to Jerusalem. All that relates to our own country has been transcribed for me, and (sorry am I to say) signifies not a halfpenny; only this little bit might be inserted in your next edition of the Painters: Ad aliud caput civitatis (Londoniæ) est monasterium nigrorum monachorum nomine Westmonasterium, in quo constanter et communiter omnes reges Angliæ sepeliuntur—et eidem monasterio quasi immediate conjungitur illud famosissimum palatium regis, in quo est illa vulgata camera, in cujus parietibus sunt omnes historiæ bellicæ totius Bibliæ ineffabiliter depictæ, atque in Gallico completissime et perfectissime conscriptæ, in non modica intuentium admiratione, et maxima regali magnificentia.

I have had certain observations on your Royal and Noble Authors given me to send you perhaps about three years ago: last week I found them in a drawer, and (my conscience being troubled) now inclose them to you. I have even forgot whose they are.

I have been also told of a passage in Ph. de Comines, which (if you know) ought not to have been passed over. The book is not at hand at present, and I must conclude my letter. Adieu!

I am ever yours.

LETTER LXXXI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. WALPOLE.

Pembroke-Hall, March 6, 1768.

HERE is Sir William Cornwallis, entitled Essays of certain Paradoxes. 2d. Edit. 1617. Lond.

King Richard III.	} praised.
The French Pockes
Nothing
Good to be in debt
Sadnesse
Julian the Apostate's vertues

The title-page will probably suffice you; but if you would know any more of him, he has read nothing but the common chronicles, and those without attention ; for example, speaking of Anne, the queen, he says, she was barren, of which Richard had often complained to Rotheram. He extenuates the murder of Henry VI. and his son : the first, he says, might be a malicious accusation, for that many did suppose he died of mere melancholy and grief : the latter cannot be proved to be the action of Richard ; (though executed in his presence ;) and, if it were, he did it out of love to his brother Edward. He justifies the death of the lords at Pomfret, from reasons of state, for his own preservation, the safety of the commonwealth, and the ancient nobility. The execution of Hastings he excuses from necessity, from the dishonesty and sensuality of the man : what was his crime with respect to Richard, he does not say. Dr. Shaw's Sermon was not by the King's command, but to be imputed to the preacher's own ambition : but if it was by order, to charge his mother with adultery, was a matter of no such great moment, since it is no wonder in that sex. Of the murder in the Tower he doubts ; but if it were by his order, the offence was to God, not to his people ; and how could he demonstrate his love more amply, than to venture his soul for their quiet ? Have you enough, pray ? You see it is an idle declamation, the exercise of a school-boy that is to be bred a statesman.

I have looked in Stowe : to be sure there is no proclamation there. Mr. Hume, I suppose, means Speed, where it is given, how truly I know not ; but that he had seen the original is sure, and seems to quote the very words of it in the beginning of that speech which Perkin makes to James IV. and also just afterwards, where he treats of the Cornish rebellion.

Guthrie, you see, has vented himself in the Critical

Review. His History I never saw, nor is it here, nor do I know any one that ever saw it. He is a rascal, but rascals may chance to meet with curious records; and that commission to Sir J. Tyrell (if it be not a lie) is such: so is the order for Henry the Sixth's funeral. I would by no means take notice of him, write what he would. I am glad you have seen the Manchester-roll.

It is not I that talk of Phil. de Comines; it was mentioned to me as a thing that looked like a voluntary omission: but I see you have taken notice of it in the note to page 71, though rather too slightly. You have not observed that the same writer says, c. 55, "Richard tua de sa main, ou fit tuer en sa presence, quelque lieu apart, ce bon homme le roi Henry." Another oversight I think there is at p. 43, where you speak of the roll of parliament, and the contract with Lady Eleanor Boteler, as things newly come to light; whereas Speed has given at large the same roll in his History. Adieu!

I am ever yours.

LETTER LXXXII^m.

MR. GRAY TO THE DUKE OF GRAFTON.

MY LORD,

Cambridge, July, 1768.

YOUR Grace has dealt nobly with me; and the same delicacy of mind that induced you to confer this favour on me, unsolicited and unexpected, may perhaps make you averse to receive my sincerest thanks and ^m The two following letters explain the occasion of this address in a way so honourable to his Grace, and are withal so authentic a testimony of Mr. Gray's gratitude, that they leave me nothing to add on the subject.—M.

grateful acknowledgments. Yet your Grace must excuse me, they will have their way: they are indeed but words; yet I know and feel they come from my heart, and therefore are not wholly unworthy of your Grace's acceptance. I even flatter myself (such is my pride) that you have some little satisfaction in your own work. If I did not deceive myself in this, it would complete the happiness of,

My Lord,

Your Grace's most obliged

And devoted servant.

LETTER LXXXIII.

MR. GRAY TO MR. NICHOLLS.

Jermyn-street, Aug. 3, 1768.

THAT Mr. Brocket has broken his neck, by a fall from his horse, you will have seen in the newspapers; and also that I, your humble servant, have kissed the King's hand for his succession: they are both true, but the manner how you know not; only I can assure you that I had no hand at all in his fall, and almost as little in the second event. He died on the Sunday; on Wednesday following his Grace the Duke of Grafton wrote me a very polite letter to say, that his Majesty had commanded him to offer me the vacant professorship, not only as a reward of, &c. but as a credit to, &c. with much more too high for me to transcribe: so on Thursday the King signed the warrant, and next day, at his levee, I kissed his hand; he made me several gracious speeches, which I shall not repeat, because every body, that goes to court, does so: besides, the day was so hot, and the ceremony so embarrassing to me, that I hardly knew what he said.

Adieu! I am to perish here with heat this fortnight yet, and then to Cambridge; to be sure my dignity is a little the worse for wear, but, mended and washed, it will do for me.

LETTER LXXXIV.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BEATTIE.

Pembroke-Hall, Oct. 31, 1768.

It is some time since I received from Mr. Foulis two copies of my Poems, one by the hands of Mr. T. Pitt, the other by Mr. Merrill, a bookseller of this town: it is indeed a most beautiful edition, and must certainly do credit both to him and to me: but I fear it will be of no other advantage to him, as Dodsley has contrived to glut the town already with two editions beforehand, one of fifteen hundred, and the other of seven hundred and fifty, both indeed far inferior to that of Glasgow, but sold at half the price. I must repeat my thanks, Sir, for the trouble you have been pleased to give yourself on my account; and through you I must desire leave to convey my acknowledgments to Mr. Foulis, for the pains and expense he has been at in this publication.

We live at so great a distance, that, perhaps, you may not yet have learned, what, I flatter myself, you will not be displeas'd to hear: the middle of last summer his Majesty was pleas'd to appoint me Regius Professor of Modern History in this University; it is the best thing the Crown has to bestow, on a layman, here; the salary is four hundred pounds per. ann. but what enhances the value of it to me is, that it was bestowed without being asked. The person, who held it before me, died on the Sunday ; and on Wednesday following the Duke of Grafton wrote me a letter to say, that the King offered me this office, with many additional expressions of kindness on his Grace's part, to whom I am but little known, and whom I have not seen either before or since he did me this favour. Instances of a benefit so nobly conferred, I believe are rare ; and therefore I tell you of it as a thing that does honour, not only to me, but to the Minister.

As I lived here before from choice, I shall now continue to do so from obligation ; if business or curiosity should call you southwards, you will find few friends that will see you with more cordial satisfaction, than, dear Sir, &c.

SECTION V.

LETTER I.

MR. GRAY TO MR. NICHOLLS.

I WAS absent from college, and did not receive your melancholy letter, till my return hither yesterday; so you must not attribute this delay to me, but to accident: to sympathize with you in such a lossⁿ is an easy task for me, but to comfort you not so easy; can I wish to see you unaffected with the sad scene now before your eyes, or with the loss of a person that, through a great part of your life, has proved himself so kind a friend to you? He who best knows our nature, (for He made us what we are,) by such affliction recalls us from our wandering thoughts and idle merriment; from the insolence of youth and prosperity, to serious reflection, to our duty, and to himself; nor need we hasten to get rid of these impressions; time (by appointment of the same Power) will cure the smart, and in some hearts soon blot out all the traces of sorrow: but such as preserve them longest, (for it is partly left in our own power,) do perhaps best acquiesce in the will of the Chastiser.

For the consequences of this sudden loss, I see them well, and I think, in a like situation, could fortify my mind, so as to support them with cheerfulness and good hopes, though not naturally inclined to see things in their best aspect. When you have time to turn yourself round, you must think seriously of your profession; you know I would have wished to see you wear the livery of it long ago: but I will not dwell on this subject at present. To be obliged to those we love and esteem is a pleasure; but to serve and oblige them is a still greater; and this, with independence, (no vulgar blessing,) are what a profession at your age may reasonably promise: without it they are hardly attainable. Remember I speak from experience.

ⁿ The death of his uncle, Governor Floyer.

In the mean time, while your present situation lasts, which I hope will not be long, continue your kindness and confidence in me, by trusting me with the whole of it; and surely you hazard nothing by so doing: that situation does not appear so new to me as it does to you. You well know the tenor of my conversation (urged at times perhaps a little farther than you liked) has been intended to prepare you for this event, and to familiarize your mind with this spectre, which you call by its worst name: but remember that "Honesta res est læta paupertas." I see it with respect, and so will every one, whose poverty is not seated in their mind°. There is but one real evil in it, (take my word who know it well,) and that is, that you have less the power of assisting others, who have not the same resources to support them. You have youth: you have many kind well-intentioned people belonging to you; many acquaintance of your own, or families that will wish to serve you. Consider how many have had the same or greater cause for dejection, with none of these resources before their eyes. Adieu! I sincerely wish your happiness.

° An excellent thought finely expressed.—M.

P.S. I have just heard that a friend of mine is struck with a paralytic disorder, in which state it is likely he may live incapable of assisting himself, in the hands of servants or relations that only gape after his spoils, perhaps for years to come: think how many things may befall a man far worse than poverty or death.

LETTER II.

MR. GRAY TO MR. NICHOLLS.

Pembroke-College, June 24, 1769.

AND so you have a garden of your own^p, and you plant and transplant, and are dirty and amused! Are not you ashamed of yourself? Why, I have no such thing, you monster, nor ever shall be either dirty or amused as long as I live. My gardens are in the windows like those of a lodger up three pair of stairs in Petticoat-lane, or Camomile-street, and they go to bed regularly under the same roof that I do. Dear, how charming it must be to walk out in one's own garding, and sit on a bench in the open air, with a fountain and leaden statue, and a rolling stone, and an arbour: have a care of sore throats though, and the agoe.

However, be it known to you, though I have no

^p Mr. Nicholls, by having pursued the advice of his correspondent, we find was now possessed of that competency which he wished him. Happy, not only in having so sage an adviser, but in his own good sense, which prompted him to follow such advice. The gaiety, whim, and humour of this letter contrast prettily with the gravity and serious reflection of the former.—M.

garden, I have sold my estate and got a thousand guineas^q, and fourscore pounds a year for my old aunt, and a twenty pound prize in the lottery, and Lord knows what arrears in the treasury, and am "a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had losses, and one that hath two gowns, and every thing handsome about him," and in a few days shall have new window-curtains: are you avized of that? Ay, and a new mat-tress to lie upon.

My Ode has been rehearsed again and again^r, and the scholars have got scraps by heart: I expect to see it torn piece-meal in the North-Briton before it is born. If you will come you shall see it, and sing in it amidst a chorus from Salisbury and Gloucester music meeting, great names there, and all well versed in Judas Macca-bæus. I wish it were once over; for then I immediately go for a few days to London, and so with Mr. Brown to Aston, though I fear it will rain the whole summer, and Skiddaw will be invisible and inaccessible to mortals.

I have got De la Lande's Voyage through Italy, in eight volumes; he is a member of the Academy of Sciences, and pretty good to read. I have read too an octavo volume of Shenstone's Letters: poor man! he was always wishing for money, for fame, and other distinctions; and his whole philosophy consisted in living against his will in retirement, and in a place which his taste had adorned; but which he only enjoyed when ^q Consisting of houses on the west side of Hand-alley, London: Mrs. Olliffe was the aunt here mentioned, who had a share in this estate, and for whom he procured this annuity. She died in 1771, a few months before her nephew.—M.

^r Ode for Music on the Duke of Grafton's Installation. See Poems. His reason for writing it is given in the next letter.—M.

people of note came to see and commend it : his correspondence is about nothing else but this place and his own writings, with two or three neighbouring clergymen who wrote verses too.

I have just found the beginning of a letter, which somebody had dropped : I should rather call it first thoughts for the beginning of a letter ; for there are many scratches and corrections. As I cannot use it myself, (having got a beginning already of my own,) I send it for your use on some great occasion.

DEAR SIR,

“ After so long silence, the hopes of pardon, and prospect of forgiveness might seem entirely extinct, or at least very remote, was I not truly sensible of your goodness and candour, which is the only asylum that my negligence can fly to, since every apology would prove insufficient to counterbalance it, or alleviate my fault : how then shall my deficiency presume to make so bold an attempt, or be able to suffer the hardships of so rough a campaign ?” &c.

LETTER III.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BEATTIE.

Cambridge, July 16, 1769.

THE late ceremony of the Duke of Grafton's installation has hindered me from acknowledging sooner the satisfaction your friendly compliment gave me : I thought myself bound in gratitude to his Grace, unasked, to take upon me the task of writing those verses which are usually set to music on this occasion^s. I do not think them worth sending you, because they are by nature doomed to live but a single day ; or, if their existence is prolonged beyond that date, it is only by means of newspaper parodies, and witless criticisms. This sort of abuse I had reason to expect, but did not think it worth while to avoid.

Mr. Foulis is magnificent in his gratitude^t; I cannot figure to myself how it can be worth his while to offer me such a present. You can judge better of it than I; and if he does not hurt himself by it, I would accept his Homer with many thanks. I have not got or even seen it.

I could wish to subscribe to his new edition of Milton, and desire to be set down for two copies of the large paper ; but you must inform me where and when I may pay the money.

You have taught me to long for a second letter, and particularly for what you say will make the contents of it^u. I have nothing to requite it with but plain and

^s In a short note which he wrote to Mr. Stonhewer, June 12, when at his request he sent him the Ode in manuscript for his Grace's perusal, he expresses this motive more fully. "I did not intend the Duke should have heard me till he could not help it. You are desired to make the best excuses you can to his Grace for the liberty I have taken of praising him to his face ; but as somebody was necessarily to do this, I did not see why Gratitude should sit silent and leave it to Expectation to sing, who certainly would have sung, and that à gorge déployée upon such an occasion."—M.

^t When the Glasgow edition of Mr. Gray's Poems was sold off, (which it was in a short time,) Mr. Foulis, finding himself a considerable gainer, mentioned to Mr. Beattie, that he wished to make Mr. Gray a present either of his Homer, in 4 vols. folio, or the Greek Historians, printed likewise at his press, in 29 vols. duodecimo.—M.

^u His correspondent had intimated to him his intention of sending friendly truth, and that you shall have, joined to a zeal for your fame, and a pleasure in your success.

I am now setting forward on a journey towards the north of England; but it will not reach so far as I could wish. I must return hither before Michaelmas, and shall barely have time to visit a few places, and a few friends.

LETTER IV.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

Aston, Oct. 18, 1769.

I HOPE you got safe and well home after that troublesome night^x. I long to hear you say so. For him his first book of the Minstrel. See the seventh letter of this series.—M.

^x Dr. Wharton, who had intended to accompany Mr. Gray to Keswick, was seized at Brough with a violent fit of his asthma, which obliged him to return home. This was the reason that Mr. Gray undertook to write the following Journal of his tour for his friend's amusement. He sent it under different covers. I give it here in continuation. It may not be amiss, however, to hint to the reader, that if he expects to find elaborate and nicely-turned periods in this narration, he will be greatly disappointed. When Mr. Gray described places, he aimed only to be exact, clear, and intelligible; to convey peculiar, not general ideas, and to paint by the eye, not the fancy. There have been many accounts of the Westmoreland and Cumberland lakes, both before and since this was written, and all of them better calculated to please readers, who are fond of what they call fine writing; yet those who can content themselves with an elegant simplicity of narrative, will, I flatter myself, find this to their taste; they will perceive it was written with a view, rather to inform than surprise; and, if they make it their companion me, I have continued well, been so favoured by the weather, that my walks have never once been hindered till yesterday, (that is a fortnight and three or four days, and a journey of more than three hundred miles.) I am now at Aston for two days. To-morrow I go to Cambridge. Mason is not here, but Mr. Alderson receives me. According to my promise, I send you the first sheet of my Journal, to be continued without end.

September 30. A mile and a half from Brough, where we parted, on a hill lay a great army^y encamped: to the left opened a fine valley with green meadows and hedge-rows, a gentleman's house peeping forth from a grove of old trees. On a nearer approach appeared myriads of cattle and horses in the road itself, and in all the fields round me, a brisk stream hurrying cross the way, thousands of clean healthy people in their best party-coloured apparel: farmers and their families, esquires and their daughters, hastening up from the dales and down the fells from every quarter, glittering in the sun and pressing forward to join the throng. While the dark hills, on whose tops the mists were yet hanging, served as a contrast to this gay and moving scene, which continued for near two miles more along the road, and the crowd (coming towards it) reached on as far as Appleby. On the ascent of the hill above Appleby, the thick hanging wood, and the long reaches of the Eden, clear, rapid, and full as ever, winding below, with views of the castle and town, gave much when they take the same tour, it will enhance their opinion of its intrinsic excellence; in this way I tried it myself before I resolved to print it.—M.

^y There is a great fair for cattle, kept on the hill near Brough on this day and the preceding.—M.

employment to the mirror²: but now the sun was wanting, and the sky overcast. Oats and barley cut every where, but not carried in. Passed Kirbythore, Sir William Dalston's house at Acorn Bank, Whinfield Park, Harthorn, Oaks, Countess Pillar, Brougham Castle, Mr. Brown's large new house; crossed the Eden and the Eimot (pronounce Eeman) with its green vale, and dined at three o'clock with Mrs. Buchanan at Penrith, on trout and partridge. In the afternoon walked up Beacon-hill, a mile to the top, and could see Ulswater through an opening in the bosom of that cluster of broken mountains, (which the Doctor well remembers,) Whinfield and Lowther Parks, &c. and the craggy tops of an hundred nameless hills: these lie to west and south. To the north a great extent of black and dreary plains. To the east, Cross-fell, just visible through mists and vapours hovering round it.

Oct. 1. A grey autumnal day, the air perfectly calm and mild, went to see Ulswater, five miles distant; soon left the Keswick road, and turned to the left through shady lanes along the vale of Eeman, which runs rapidly on near the way, rippling over the stones; to the right is Delmaine, a large fabric of pale red stone, with nine windows in front and seven on the side, built by Mr. Hassel, behind it a fine lawn surrounded by woods, and a long rocky eminence rising over them: a clear and brisk rivulet runs by the house to join the Eeman, whose course is in sight and at a small distance. Farther on appears Hatton St. John, a castle-like old

² Mr. Gray carried usually with him on these tours a plano-convex mirror of about four inches diameter on a black foil, and bound up like a pocket-book. A glass of this sort is perhaps the best and most convenient substitute for a camera obscura, of any thing that has hitherto been invented, and may be had of any optician. —M.

mansion of Mr. Huddleston. Approached Dunmallert, a fine-pointed hill covered with wood, planted by old Mr. Hassel, before mentioned, who lives always at home and delights in planting. Walked over a spongy meadow or two, and began to mount the hill through a broad straight green alley among the trees, and with some toil gained the summit. From hence saw the lake opening directly at my feet, majestic in its calmness, clear and smooth as a blue mirror, with winding shores and low points of land covered with green inclosures, white farm-houses looking out among the trees, and cattle feeding. The water is almost every where bordered with cultivated lands, gently sloping upwards from a mile to a quarter of a mile in breadth, till they reach the feet of the mountains, which rise very rude and awful with their broken tops on either hand. Directly in front, at better than three miles distance, Place-fell, one of the bravest among them, pushes its bold broad breast into the midst of the lake, and forces it to alter its course, forming first a large bay to the left, and then bending to the right. I descended Dunmallert again by a side avenue that was only not perpendicular, and came to Barton-bridge over the Eeman, then walking through a path in the wood round the bottom of the hill, came forth where the Eeman issues out of the lake, and continued my way along its western shore close to the water, and generally on a level with it. Saw a cormorant flying over it and fishing. The figure of the lake nothing resembles that laid down in our maps: it is nine miles long; and at widest under a mile in breadth. After extending itself three miles and a half in a line to south-west, it turns at the foot of Place-fell almost due west, and is here not twice the breadth of the Thames at London. It is soon again interrupted by the root of Helvellyn, a lofty and very rugged mountain, and spreading again turns off to south-east, and is lost among the deep recesses of the hills. To this second turning I pursued my way about four miles along its borders beyond a village scattered among trees, and called Water-Mallock, in a pleasant grave day, perfectly calm and warm, but without a gleam of sunshine; then the sky seeming to thicken, and the valley to grow more desolate, and evening drawing on, I returned by the way I came to Penrith.

Oct. 2. I set out at ten for Keswick, by the road we went in 1767; saw Greystock town and castle to the right, which lie about three miles from Uls-water over the fells; passed through Penradox and Threlcot at the foot of Saddleback, whose furrowed sides were gilt by the noon-day sun, whilst its brow appeared of a sad purple from the shadow of the clouds as they sailed slowly by it. The broad and green valley of Gardies and Lowside, with a swift stream glittering among the cottages and meadows, lay to the left, and the much finer but narrower valley of St. John opening into it: Hill-top, the large though low mansion of the Gaskarths, now a farm-house, seated on an eminence among woods, under a steep fell, was what appeared the most conspicuous, and beside it a great rock, like some ancient tower nodding to its fall. Passed by the side of Skiddaw and its cub called Latter-rig; and saw from an eminence, at two miles distance, the vale of Elysium in all its verdure; the sun then playing on the bosom of the lake, and lighting up all the mountains with its lustre. Dined by two o'clock at the Queen's Head, and then straggled out alone to the Parsonage, where I saw the sun set in all its glory.

Oct. 3. A heavenly day; rose at seven and walked out under the conduct of my landlord to Borrow-dale; the grass was covered with a hoar-frost, which soon melted and exhaled in a thin bluish smoke; crossed the meadows, obliquely catching a diversity of views among the hills over the lake and islands, and changing prospect at every ten paces. Left Cockshut (which we formerly mounted) and Castle-hill, a loftier and more rugged hill behind me, and drew near the foot of Wallacrag, whose bare and rocky brow cut perpendicularly down about four hundred feet (as I guess, though the people called it much more) awfully overlooks the way. Our path here tends to the left, and the ground gently rising and covered with a glade of scattering trees and bushes on the very margin of the water, opens both ways the most delicious view that my eyes ever beheld; opposite are the thick woods of Lord Egremont and Newland valley, with green and smiling fields embosomed in the dark cliffs; to the left the jaws of Borrow-dale, with that turbulent chaos of mountain behind mountain, rolled in confusion; beneath you, and stretching far away to the right, the shining purity of the lake reflecting rocks, woods, fields, and inverted tops of hills, just ruffled by the breeze, enough to shew it is alive, with the white buildings of Keswick, Crosthwaite Church, and Skiddaw for a back-ground at a distance. Behind you the magnificent heights of Wallacrag: here the glass played its part divinely, the place is called Carf-close-reeds; and I chose to set down these barbarous names, that any body may inquire on the place, and easily find the particular station that I mean. This scene continues to Barrow-gate; and a little farther, passing a brook called Barrow-beck, we entered Borrow-dale: the crags named Lawdoor-banks begin now to impend terribly over your way, and more terribly when you hear that three years since an immense mass of rock tumbled at once from the brow and barred all access to the dale, (for this is the only road,) till they could work their way through it. Luckily no one was passing at the time of this fall ; but down the side of the mountain, and far into the lake, lie dispersed the huge fragments of this ruin in all shapes and in all directions : something farther we turned aside into a coppice, ascending a little in front of Lawdoor water-fall ; the height appeared to be about two hundred feet, the quantity of water not great, though (these three days excepted) it had rained daily in the hills for near two months before ; but then the stream was nobly broken, leaping from rock to rock, and foaming with fury. On one side a towering crag that spired up to equal, if not overtop the neighbouring cliffs : (this lay all in shade and darkness :) on the other hand a rounder, broader projecting hill, shagged with wood, and illuminated by the sun, which glanced sideways on the upper part of the cataract. The force of the water wearing a deep channel in the ground, hurries away to join the lake. We descended again and passed the stream over a rude bridge. Soon after we came under Gowdar-crag, a hill more formidable to the eye, and to the apprehension, than that of Lawdoor ; the rocks at top, deep-cloven perpendicularly by the rains, hanging loose and nodding forwards, seem just starting from their base in shivers. The whole way down and the road on both sides is strewn with piles of the fragments strangely thrown across each other, and of a dreadful bulk : the place reminds me of those passes in the Alps, where the guides tell you to move on with speed, and say nothing, lest the agitation of air should loosen the snows above, and bring down a mass that would overwhelm a caravan^a,

I took their counsel here and hastened on in silence.

“ Non ragionam di lor, ma guarda, e passa !”

The hills here are clothed all up their steep sides with oak, ash, birch, holly, &c. some of it has been cut forty years ago, some within these eight years ; yet all is sprung again, green, flourishing, and tall, for its age, in a place where no soil appears but the staring rock, and where a man could scarce stand upright : here we met a civil young farmer overseeing his reapers, (for it is now oat harvest,) who conducted us to a neat white house in the village of Grange, which is built on a rising ground in the midst of a valley ; round it the mountains form an awful amphitheatre, and through it obliquely runs the Derwent, clear as glass, and shewing under its bridge every trout that passes. Beside the village rises a round eminence of rock covered entirely with old trees ; and over that more proudly towers Castle-crag, invested also with wood on its sides, and bearing on its naked top some traces of a fort said to be Roman. By the side of this hill, which almost blocks up the way, the valley turns to the left, and contracts its dimensions till there is hardly any road but the rocky bed of the river. The wood of the mountains increases, and their summits grow loftier to the eye, and of more fantastic forms ; among them appear Eagle’s-cliff, Dove’s-nest, Whitedale-pike, &c. celebrated names in the annals of Keswick. The dale opens about four miles higher till you come to Sea-whaite ; (where lies the way, mounting the hills to the right, that leads to the Wadd-mines ;)

^a See Roger’s Poems, p. 163. “ The Alps at Day-break.”

all farther access is here barred to prying mortals, only there is a little path winding over the fells, and for some weeks in the year passable to the dalesmen; but the mountains know well that these innocent people will not reveal the mysteries of their ancient kingdom, "the reign of Chaos and Old Night:" only I learned that this dreadful road, dividing again, leads one branch to Ravenglas, and the other to Hawkshead.

For me, I went no farther than the farmer's (better than four miles from Keswick) at Grange; his mother and he brought us butter, that Siserah would have jumped at, though not in a lordly dish, bowls of milk, thin oaten-cakes, and ale; and we had carried a cold tongue thither with us. Our farmer was himself the man, that last year plundered the eagle's eyrie: all the dale are up in arms on such an occasion, for they lose abundance of lambs yearly, not to mention hares, partridges, grouse, &c. He was let down from the cliff in ropes to the shelf of the rock on which the nest was built, the people above shouting and hollooming to fright the old birds, which flew screaming round, but did not dare to attack him. He brought off the eaglet (for there is rarely more than one) and an addle egg. The nest was roundish, and more than a yard over, made with twigs twisted together. Seldom a year passes but they take the brood or eggs, and sometimes they shoot one, and sometimes the other, parent; but the survivor has always found a mate, (probably in Ireland,) and they breed near the old place. By his description I learn, that this species is the Erne, the vulture Albicilla of Linnæus, in his last edition, but in your's Falco Albicilla; so consult him and Pennant about it.

We returned leisurely home the way we came; but saw a new landscape; the features indeed were the same in part, but many new ones were disclosed by the mid-day sun, and the tints were entirely changed: take notice this was the best, or perhaps the only day for going up Skiddaw, but I thought it better employed; it was perfectly serene, and hot as mid-summer.

In the evening I walked alone down to the lake by the side of Crow park after sun-set, and saw the solemn colouring of night draw on, the last gleam of sun-shine fading away on the hill-tops, the deep serene of the waters, and the long shadows of the mountains thrown across them, till they nearly touched the hithermost shore. At a distance were heard the murmurs of many water-falls, not audible in the day-time; I wished for the moon, but she was dark to me and silent.

“ Hid in her vacant interlunar cave”.

Oct. 4. I walked to Crow park, now a rough pasture, once a glade of ancient oaks, whose large roots still remain in the ground, but nothing has sprung from them. If one single tree had remained, this would have been an unparalleled spot; and Smith judged right, when he took his print of the lake from hence, for it is a gentle eminence, not too high, on the very margin of the water, and commanding it from end to end, looking full into the gorge of Borrow-dale. I prefer it even to Cockshut-hill, which lies beside it, and to which I walked in the afternoon: it is covered with young trees both sown and planted, oak, spruce, Scotch fir, &c. all which thrive wonderfully. There is an easy ascent to the top, and the view far preferable to that on Castle-hill, (which you remember,) because this is lower and nearer to the lake: for I find all points, that are much elevated, spoil the beauty of the valley, and make its parts, which are not large, look poor and diminutive^b. While I was here a little shower fell, red clouds came marching up the hills from the east, and part of a bright rainbow seemed to rise along the side of Castle-hill.

From hence I got to the Parsonage a little before sun-set, and saw in my glass a picture, that, if I could transmit to you, and fix it in all the softness of its living colours, would fairly sell for a thousand pounds. This is the sweetest scene I can yet discover in point of pastoral beauty; the rest are in a sublimer style.

Oct. 5. I walked through the meadows and corn-fields to the Derwent, and crossing it went up How-hill; it looks along Bassingth-water, and sees at the same time the course of the river, and a part of the upper-lake, with a full view of Skiddaw: then I took my way through Portingskall village to the Park, a hill so called, covered entirely with wood; it is all a mass of crumbling slate. Passed round its foot between the trees and the edge of the water, and came to a peninsula that juts out into the lake, and looks along it both ways; in front rises Walla-crag and Castle-hill, the town, the road to Penrith, Skiddaw, and Saddleback. Returning, met

^b The picturesque point is always thus low in all prospects: a truth, which though the landscape painter knows, he cannot always observe; since the patron who employs him to take a view of his place, usually carries him to some elevation for that purpose, in order, I suppose, that he may have more of him for his money. Yet when I say this, I would not be thought to mean that a drawing should be made from the lowest point possible; as for instance, in this very view, from the lake itself, for then a fore-ground would be wanting. On this account, when I sailed on Derwentwater, I did not receive so much pleasure from the superb amphitheatre of mountains around me, as when, like Mr. Gray, I traversed its margin; and I therefore think he did not lose much by not taking boat.—M.

a brisk and cold north-eastern blast that ruffled all the surface of the lake, and made it rise in little waves that broke at the foot of the wood. After dinner walked up the Penrith road two miles, or more, and turning into a corn-field to the right, called Castle-rig, saw a Druid circle of large stones, one hundred and eight feet in diameter, the biggest not eight feet high, but most of them still erect: they are fifty in number^c. The valley of St. John appeared in sight, and the summits of Catchidecam (called by Camden, Casticand) and Helvellyn, said to be as high as Skiddaw, and to rise from a much higher base.

Oct. 6. Went in a chaise eight miles along the east side of Bassingth-water to Ouse-bridge; (pronounced Ews-bridge;) the road in some part made, and very good, the rest slippery and dangerous cart-road, or narrow rugged lanes, but no precipice; it runs directly along the foot of Skiddaw: opposite to Widhope-brows, clothed to the top with wood, a very beautiful view opens down to the lake, which is narrower and longer than that of Keswick, less broken into bays, and without islands^d. At the foot of it, a few paces from the brink, gently sloping upward, stands Armathwaite, in a thick grove of Scotch firs, commanding a noble view directly up the lake: at a small distance behind the house is a large extent of wood, and still behind this a ridge of cultivated hills, on which, according to the ^c See this piece of antiquity more fully described, with a plate annexed, by Mr. Pennant in his Second Tour to Scotland in 1772, p. 38.—M.

^d It is somewhat extraordinary that Mr. Gray omitted to mention the islands on Derwentwater; one of which, I think they call it Vicar's Island, makes a principal object in the scene. See Smith's View of Derwentwater.—M.

Keswick proverb, the sun always shines. The inhabitants here, on the contrary, call the vale of Derwent-water, the Devil's Chamber-pot, and pronounce the name of Skiddaw-fell, which terminates heré, with a sort of terror and aversion. Armathwaite house is a modern fabric, not large, and built of dark red stone, belonging to Mr. Spedding, whose grandfather was steward to old Sir James Lowther, and bought this estate of the Himers. The sky was overcast and the wind cool; so, after dining at a public-house, which stands here near the bridge, (that crosses the Derwent just where it issues from the lake,) and sauntering a little by the water-side, I came home again. The turnpike road is finished from Cockermouth hither, five miles, and is carrying on to Penrith: several little showers to-day. A man came in, who said there was snow on Cross-fell this morning.

Oct. 7. I walked in the morning to Crow-park, and in the evening up Penrith road. The clouds came rolling up the mountains all round very dark, yet the moon shone at intervals. It was too damp to go towards the lake. To-morrow I mean to bid farewell to Keswick.

Botany might be studied here to great advantage at another season, because of the great variety of soils and elevations, all lying within a small compass. I observed nothing but several curious lichens, and plenty of gale or Dutch myrtle perfuming the borders of the lake. This year the Wadd-mine had been opened, which is done once in five years; it is taken out in lumps sometimes as big as a man's fist, and will undergo no preparation by fire, not being fusible; when it is pure, soft, black, and close-grained, it is worth sometimes thirty shillings a pound. There are no charr ever taken in these lakes, but plenty in Buttermere-water, which lies a little way north of Borrow-dale, about Martinmas, which are potted here. They sow chiefly oats and bigg here, which are now cutting and still on the ground; the rains have done much hurt: yet observe, the soil is so thin and light, that no day has passed in which I could not walk out with ease, and you know I am no lover of dirt. Fell mutton is now in season for about six weeks; it grows fat on the mountains, and nearly resembles venison. Excellent pike and perch, here called bass; trout is out of season; partridge in great plenty.

Oct. 8. I left Keswick and took the Ambleside road in a gloomy morning; and about two miles from the town mounted an eminence called Castle-rigg, and the sun breaking out, discovered the most enchanting view I have yet seen of the whole valley behind me, the two lakes, the river, the mountain, all in their glory; so that I had almost a mind to have gone back again. The road in some few parts is not completed, yet good country road, through sound but narrow and stony lanes, very safe in broad day-light. This is the case about Causeway-foot, and among Naddle-fells to Lanco-waite. The vale you go in has little breadth; the mountains are vast and rocky, the fields little and poor, and the inhabitants are now making hay, and see not the sun by two hours in a day so long as at Keswick. Came to the foot of Helvellyn, along which runs an excellent road, looking down from a little height on Lee's-water, (called also Thirl-mere, or Wiborn-water,) and soon descending on its margin. The lake looks black from its depth, and from the gloom of the vast crags that scowl over it, though really clear as glass; it is narrow, and about three miles long, resembling a river in its course ; little shining torrents hurry down the rocks to join it, but not a bush to overshadow them, or cover their march ; all is rock and loose stones up to the very brow, which lies so near your way, that not above half the height of Helvellyn can be seen.

Next I passed by the little chapel of Wiborn, (out of which the Sunday congregation were then issuing,) soon after a beck near Dunmeil-raise, when I entered Westmoreland a second time ; and now began to see Holm-crag, distinguished from its rugged neighbours, not so much by its height as by the strange broken outlines of its top, like some gigantic building demolished, and the stones that composed it flung across each other in wild confusion. Just beyond it opens one of the sweetest landscapes that art ever attempted to imitate. The bosom of the mountains spreading here into a broad basin discovers in the midst Grasmere-water ; its margin is hollowed into small bays, with bold eminences ; some of rock, some of soft turf, that half conceal, and vary the figure of the little lake they command : from the shore a low promontory pushes itself far into the water, and on it stands a white village with the parish church rising in the midst of it : hanging inclosures, corn-fields, and meadows green as an emerald, with their trees and hedges, and cattle, fill up the whole space from the edge of the water : and just opposite to you is a large farm-house at the bottom of a steep smooth lawn, embosomed in old woods, which climb half-way up the mountain's side, and discover above them a broken line of crags that crown the scene. Not a single red tile, no flaring gentleman's house, or garden walls, break in upon the repose of this little unsuspected paradise ; but all is peace, rusticity, and happy poverty in its neatest, most becoming attire.

The road winds here over Grasmere-hill, whose rocks soon conceal the water from your sight ; yet it is continued along behind them, and, contracting itself to a river, communicates with Ridale-water, another small lake, but of inferior size and beauty : it seems shallow too, for large patches of reeds appear pretty far within it. Into this vale the road descends. On the opposite banks large and ancient woods mount up the hills ; and just to the left of our way stands Ridale-Hall, the family seat of Sir Michael Fleming, a large old fashioned fabric, surrounded with wood. Sir Michael is now on his travels, and all this timber, far and wide, belongs to him. Near the house rises a huge crag, called Ridale-head, which is said to command a full view of Wynandermere, and I doubt it not ; for within a mile that great lake is visible, even from the road : as to going up the crag, one might as well go up Skiddaw.

I now reached Ambleside, eighteen miles from Keswick, meaning to lie there ; but, on looking into the best bed-chamber, dark and damp as a cellar, grew delicate, gave up Wynandermere in despair, and resolved I would go on to Kendal directly, fourteen miles farther^e.

^e By not staying a little at Ambleside, Mr. Gray lost the sight of two most magnificent cascades ; the one not above half a mile behind the inn, the other down Ridale-crag, where Sir Michael Fleming is now making a path-way to the top of it. These, when I saw them, were in full torrent, whereas Lawdoor water-fall, which I visited in the evening of the very same day, was almost without a stream. Hence I conclude, that this distinguished feature in the vale of Keswick, is, like most northern rivers, only in high beauty during bad weather. But his greatest loss was in not seeing a small water-fall visible only through the window of a ruined summer-house in Sir Michael's orchard. Here Nature has performed every thing in little that she usually executes on her largest scale ; and, on that account, like the miniature painter, seems to have finished every

The road in general fine turnpike, but some parts (about three miles in all) not made, yet without danger.

For this determination I was unexpectedly well rewarded: for the afternoon was fine, and the road, for the space of full five miles, ran along the side of Wywander-mere, with delicious views across it, and almost from one end to the other. It is ten miles in length, and at most a mile over, resembling the course of some vast and magnificent river; but no flat marshy grounds, no osier-beds, or patches of scrubby plantations on its banks: at the head two valleys open among the mountains; one, that by which we came down, the other Langsledale, in which Wry-nose and Hard-knot, two great mountains, rise above the rest: from thence the fells visibly sink, and soften along its sides; sometimes they run into it (but with a gentle declivity) in their own dark and natural complexion: oftener they are green and cultivated, with farms interspersed, and round eminences, on the border covered with trees: towards the south it seemed to break into larger bays, with several islands and a wider extent of cultivation. The way rises continually, till at a place called Orrest-head it turns south-east, losing sight of the water.

Passed by Ing's chapel and Stavely; but I can say no farther, for the dusk of evening coming on, I entered Kendal almost in the dark, and could distinguish only part of it in a studied manner; not a little fragment of rock thrown into the basin, not a single stem of brushwood that starts from its craggy sides, but has its picturesque meaning; and the little central stream dashing down a cleft of the darkest-coloured stone, produces an effect of light and shadow beautiful beyond description. This little theatrical scene might be painted as large as the original, on a canvass not bigger than those which are usually dropped in the Opera-house.—M.

a shadow of the castle on a hill, and tenter-grounds spread far and wide round the town, which I mistook for houses. My inn promised sadly, having two wooden galleries, like Scotland, in front of it: it was indeed an old ill-contrived house, but kept by civil sensible people; so I stayed two nights with them, and fared and slept very comfortably.

Oct. 9. The air mild as summer, all corn off the ground, and the sky-larks singing aloud, (by the way, I saw not one at Keswick, perhaps, because the place abounds in birds of prey.) I went up the castle-hill; the town consists chiefly of three nearly parallel streets, almost a mile long; except these, all the other houses seem as if they had been dancing a country-dance, and were out: there they stand back to back, corner to corner, some up hill, some down, without intent or meaning. Along by their side runs a fine brisk stream, over which are three stone bridges; the buildings (a few comfortable houses excepted) are mean, of stone, and covered with a bad rough-cast. Near the end of the town stands a handsome house of Col. Wilson's, and adjoining to it the church, a very large gothic fabric, with a square tower: it has no particular ornaments but double isles, and at the east-end four chapels or choirs: one of the Parrs, another of the Stricklands; the third is the proper choir of the church, and the fourth of the Bellinghams, a family now extinct. There is an altar-tomb of one of them dated 1577, with a flat brass, arms and quarterings; and in the window their arms alone, arg. a hunting-horn, sab. strung gules. In the Stricklands' chapel several modern monuments, and another old altar-tomb, not belonging to the family: on the side of it a fess dancetty between ten billets, Deincourt. In the Parrs' chapel is a third altar-tomb in the corner, no figure or inscription, but on the side, cut in stone, an escutcheon of Roos of Kendal, (three water-budgets,) quartering Parr, (two bars in a bordure engrailed;) 2dly, an escutcheon, vaire, a fess for Marmion; 3dly, an escutcheon, three chevronels braced, and a chief, (which I take for Fitzhugh:) at the foot is an escutcheon, surrounded with the garter, bearing Roos and Parr quarterly, quartering the other two before mentioned. I have no books to look in, therefore cannot say whether this is the Lord Parr of Kendal, Queen Catharine's father, or her brother the Marquis of Northampton: perhaps it is a cenotaph for the latter, who was buried at Warwick in 1571. The remains of the castle are seated on a fine hill on the side of the river opposite the town: almost the whole enclosure of the walls remains, with four towers, two square and two round, but their upper part and embattlements are demolished: it is of rough stone and cement, without ornament or arms, round, enclosing a court of like form, and surrounded by a moat; nor ever could it have been larger than it is, for there are no-traces of outworks. There is a good view of the town and river, with a fertile open valley through which it winds.

After dinner I went along the Milthrop turnpike road, four miles, to see the falls, or force, of the river Kent; came to Sizergh, (pronounced Siser,) and turned down a lane to the left. This seat of the Stricklands, an old catholic family, is an ancient hall-house, with a very large tower embattled; the rest of the buildings added to it are of later date, but all is white, and seen to advantage on a back-ground of old trees; there is a small park also well wooded. Opposite to this, turning to the left, I soon came to the river; it works its way in a narrow and deep rocky channel overhung with trees.

The calmness and brightness of the evening, the roar of the waters, and the thumping of huge hammers at an iron forge not far distant, made it a singular walk : but as to the falls (for there are two) they are not four feet high. I went on, down to the forge, and saw the demons at work by the light of their own fires : the iron is brought in pigs to Milthrop by sea from Scotland, &c. and is here beat into bars and plates. Two miles further, at Levens, is the seat of Lord Suffolk, where he sometimes passes the summer : it was a favourite place of his late Countess ; but this I did not see.

Oct. 10. I proceeded by Burton to Lancaster, twenty-two miles ; very good country, well enclosed and wooded, with some common interspersed. Passed at the foot of Farlton-knot, a high fell four miles north of Lancaster ; on a rising ground called Boulton, (pronounced Bouton ;) we had a full view of Cartmell-sands, with here and there a passenger riding over them, (it being low water ;) the points of Furness shooting far into the sea, and lofty mountains, partly covered with clouds, extending north of them. Lancaster also appeared very conspicuous and fine ; for its most distinguished features, the castle and church, mounted on a green eminence, were all that could be seen. Woe is me ! when I got thither, it was the second day of their fair ; the inn, in the principal street, was a great old gloomy house full of people ; but I found tolerable quarters, and even slept two nights in peace.

In a fine afternoon I ascended the castle-hill ; it takes up the higher top of the eminence on which it stands, and is irregularly round, encompassed with a deep moat : in front, towards the town, is a magnificent gothic gateway, lofty and huge ; the overhanging battlements are supported by a triple range of corbels, the intervals pierced through, and shewing the day from above. On its top rise light watch-towers of small height. It opens below with a grand pointed arch; over this is a wrought tabernacle, doubtless once containing its founder's figure; on one side a shield of France semi-quartered with England; on the other the same, with a label, ermine, for John of Gaunt, duke of Lancaster. This opens to a court within, which I did not much care to enter, being the county-goal, and full of prisoners, both criminals and debtors. From this gateway the walls continue and join it to a vast square tower of great height, the lower part at least of remote antiquity; for it has small round-headed lights with plain short pillars on each side of them: there is a third tower, also square and of less dimensions. This is all the castle. Near it, and but little lower, stands the church, a large and plain gothic fabric; the high square tower at the west end has been rebuilt of late years, but nearly in the same style; there are no ornaments of arms, &c. any where to be seen; within, it is lightsome and spacious, but not one monument of antiquity, or piece of painted glass is left. From the church-yard there is an extensive sea-view, (for now the tide had almost covered the sands, and filled the river,) and besides the greatest part of Furness, I could distinguish Peel-castle on the isle of Fowdrey, which lies off its southern extremity. The town is built on the slope, and at the foot of the castle-hill, more than twice the bigness of Aukland, with many neat buildings of white stone, but a little disorderly in their position, and, ad libitum, like Kendal: many also extend below on the quays by the river-side, where a number of ships were moored, some of them three-masted vessels decked out with their colours in honour of the fair. Here is a good bridge of four arches over the Lune, that runs, when the tide is out, in two streams divided by a bed of gravel, which is not covered but in spring-tides; below the town it widens to near the breadth of the Thames at London, and meets the sea at five or six miles distance to south-west.

Oct. 11. I crossed the river and walked over a peninsula, three miles, to the village of Pooton, which stands on the beach. An old fisherman mending his nets (while I inquired about the danger of passing the sands) told me, in his dialect, a moving story; how a brother of the trade, a cockler, as he styled him, driving a little cart with two daughters (women grown) in it, and his wife on horseback following, set out one day to pass the seven-mile sands, as they had frequently been used to do; (for nobody in the village knew them better than the old man did;) when they were about half-way over, a thick fog rose, and as they advanced they found the water much deeper than they expected: the old man was puzzled; he stopped, and said he would go a little way to find some mark he was acquainted with: they staid a while for him, but in vain; they called aloud, but no reply: at last the young women pressed their mother to think where they were, and go on: she would not leave the place; she wandered about forlorn and amazed; she would not quit her horse and get into the cart with them: they determined, after much time wasted, to turn back, and give themselves up to the guidance of their horses. The old woman was soon washed off, and perished; the poor girls clung close to their cart, and the horse, sometimes wading and sometimes swimming, brought them back to land alive, but senseless with terror and distress, and unable for many days to give any account of themselves. The bodies of their parents were found next ebb ; that of the father a very few paces distant from the spot where he had left them.

In the afternoon I wandered about the town, and by the quay, till it grew dark.

Oct. 12. I set out for Settle by a fine turnpike-road, twenty-nine miles, through a rich and beautiful enclosed country, diversified with frequent villages and churches, very unequal ground ; and on the left the river Lune winding in a deep valley, its hanging banks clothed with fine woods, through which you catch long reaches of the water, as the road winds about at a considerable height above it. In the most picturesque part of the way, I passed the park belonging to the Hon. Mr. Clifford, a catholic. The grounds between him and the river are indeed charming^f; the house is ordinary, and the park nothing but a rocky fell scattered over with ancient hawthorns. Next I came to Hornby, a little town on the river Wanning, over which a handsome bridge is now building ; the castle, in a lordly situation, attracted me, so I walked up the hill to it : first presents itself a large white ordinary sashed gentleman's house, and behind it rises the ancient Keep, built by Edward Stanley, Lord Monteagle. He died about 1529, in King Henry the Eighth's time. It is now only a shell, the rafters are laid within it as for flooring. I went up a winding stone staircase in one corner to the leads, and at the angle is a single hexagon watch-tower, rising some feet higher, fitted up in the taste of a modern summer-house, with sash-windows in gilt frames, a stucco cupola, and on the top a vast gilt eagle, built by Mr. Charteris, the present possessor. He is the second son of the Earl of Wemys, brother to the Lord Elcho, and grandson to Colonel Charteris, whose name he bears.

^f This scene opens just three miles from Lancaster, on what is called the Queen's Road. To see the view in perfection, you must go into a field on the left. Here Ingleborough, behind a variety of lesser mountains, makes the back-ground of the prospect : on each hand of the middle distance, rise two sloping hills ; the left clothed with thick woods, the right with variegated rock and herbage : between them, in the richest of valleys, the Lune serpentizes for many a mile, and comes forth ample and clear, through a well-wooded and richly pastured fore-ground. Every feature, which constitutes a perfect landscape of the extensive sort, is here not only boldly marked, but also in its best position.—M.

From the leads of the tower there is a fine view of the country round, and much wood near the castle. Ingleborough, which I had seen before distinctly at Lancaster to north-east, was now completely wrapped in clouds, all but its summit; which might have been easily mistaken for a long black cloud too, fraught with an approaching storm. Now our road begun gradually to mount towards the Apennine, the trees growing less and thinner of leaves, till we came to Ingleton, eighteen miles: it is a pretty village, situated very high, and yet in a valley at the foot of that huge monster of nature, Ingleborough: two torrents cross it, with great stones rolled along their beds instead of water; and over them are flung two handsome arches. The nipping air, though the afternoon was growing very bright, now taught us we were in Craven, the road was all up and down, though no where very steep; to the left were mountain-tops, to the right a wide valley, all enclosed ground, and beyond it high hills again. In approaching Settle, the crags on the left drew nearer to our way, till we descended Brunton-brow into a cheerful valley (though thin of trees) to Giggleswick, a village with a small piece of water by its side, covered over with coots; near it a church, which belongs also to Settle; and half a mile farther, having passed the Ribble over a bridge, I arrived there; it is a small market-town standing directly under a rocky fell; there are not in it above a dozen good-looking houses, the rest are old and low, with little wooden porticos, in front. My inn pleased me much, (though small,) for the neatness and civility of the good woman that kept it; so I lay there two nights, and went,

Oct. 13. To visit Gordale-scar, which lay six miles from Settle; but that way was directly over a fell, and as the weather was not to be depended on, I went round in a chaise, the only way one could get near it in a carriage, which made it full thirteen miles, half of it such a road! but I got safe over it, so there's an end, and came to Malham, (pronounced Maum,) a village in the bosom of the mountains, seated in a wild and dreary valley. From thence I was to walk a mile over very rough ground, a torrent rattling along on the left hand; on the cliffs above hung a few goats; one of them danced and scratched an ear with its hind foot in a place where I would not have stood stock-still for all beneath the moon.

As I advanced, the crags seemed to close in, but discovered a narrow entrance turning to the left between them: I followed my guide a few paces, and the hills opened again into no large space; and then all farther way is barred by a stream that, at the height of about fifty feet, gushes from a hole in the rock, and spreading in large sheets over its broken front, dashes from steep to steep, and then rattles away in a torrent down the valley: the rock on the left rises perpendicular, with stubbed yew-trees and shrubs staring from its side, to the height of at least three hundred feet; but these are not the thing: it is the rock to the right, under which you stand to see the fall, that forms the principal horror of the place. From its very base it begins to slope forwards over you in one block or solid mass without any crevice in its surface, and overshadows half the area below with its dreadful canopy: when I stood at (I believe) four yards distance from its foot, the drops, which perpetually distil from its brow, fell on my head; and in one part of its top, more exposed to the weather, there are loose stones that hang in air, and threaten visibly some idle spectator with instant destruction: it is safer to shelter yourself close to its bottom, and trust to the mercy of that enormous mass, which nothing but an earthquake can stir. The gloomy uncomfortable day well suited the savage aspect of the place, and made it still more formidable: I staid there, not without shuddering, a quarter of an hour, and thought my trouble richly paid; for the impression will last for life. At the ale-house where I dined in Malham, Vivares, the landscape-painter, had lodged for a week or more; Smith and Bellers had also been there, and two prints of Gordale have been engraved by them.

Oct. 14. Leaving my comfortable inn, to which I had returned from Gordale, I set out for Skipton, sixteen miles. From several parts of the road, and in many places about Settle, I saw at once the three famous hills of this country, Ingleborough, Penigent, and Pendle; the first is esteemed the highest, and their features not to be described, but by the pencil^g.

^g Without the pencil nothing indeed is to be described with pre-

Craven, after all, is an unpleasing country when seen from a height ; its valleys are chiefly wide, and either marshy or inclosed pasture, with a few trees. Numbers of black cattle are fattened here, both of the Scotch breed, and a larger sort of oxen with great horns. There is little cultivated ground except a few oats.

Skipton, to which I went through Long-Preston and Gargrave, is a pretty large market-town, in a valley, with one very broad street gently sloping downwards from the castle, which stands at the head of it This is cision ; and even then that pencil ought to be in the very hand of the writer, ready to supply with outlines every thing that his pen cannot express by words. As far as language can describe, Mr. Gray has, I think, pushed its powers : for rejecting, as I before hinted, every general unmeaning and hyperbolical phrase, he has selected (both in this Journal, and on other similar occasions) the plainest, simplest, and most direct terms : yet notwithstanding his judicious care, in the use of these, I must own I feel them defective. They present me, it is true, with a picture of the same species, but not with the identical picture : my imagination receives clear and distinct, but not true and exact images. It may be asked, then, why am I entertained by well-written descriptions ? I answer, because they amuse when they do not inform me ; and because, after I have seen the places described, they serve to recal to my memory the original scene, almost as well as the truest drawing or picture. In the meanwhile, my mind is flattered by thinking it has acquired some conception of the place, and rests contented in an innocent error, which nothing but ocular proof can detect, and which, when detected, does not diminish the pleasure I had before received, but augments it by super-adding the charms of comparison and versification ; and herein I would place the real and only merit of verbal prose description. To speak of poetical, would lead me beyond the limits as well as the purpose of this note. I cannot, however, help adding, that I have seen one piece of verbal description which completely satisfies me, because it is throughout assisted by masterly delineation. It is composed by the Rev. Mr. Gilpin, of Cheam, in Surrey ; and contains, amongst other places, an account of the very one of our good Countess's buildings^h, but on old foundations ; it is not very large, but of a handsome antique appearance, with round towers, a grand gateway, bridge, and moat, surrounded by many old trees. It is in good repair, and kept up as a habitation of the Earl of Thanet, though he rarely comes thither : what with the sleet, and a foolish dispute about chaises, that delayed me, I did not see the inside of it, but went on, fifteen miles, to Otley ; first up Shode-bank, the steepest hill I ever saw a road carried over in England, for it mounts in a straight line (without any other repose for the horses than by placing stones every now and then behind the wheels) for a full mile ; then the road goes on a level along the brow of this high hill over Rumbald-moor, till it gently descends into Wharldale, so they call the vale of the Wharf, and a beautiful vale it is, well wooded, well cultivated, well inhabited, but with high crags at a distance, that border the green country on either hand ; through the midst of it, deep, clear, full to the brink, and of no inconsiderable breadth, runs in long windings the river. How it comes to pass that it should be so fine and copious a stream here, and at Tadcaster (so much lower) should have nothing but a wide stony channel without water, I cannot tell you.

scenes which, in this tour, our Author visited. This gentleman, possessing the conjoined talent of a writer and a designer, has employed them in this manuscript to every purpose of picturesque beau'y, in the description of which a correct eye, a practised pencil, and an eloquent pen could assist him. He has, consequently, produced a work unique in its kind. But I have said it is in manuscript, and, I am afraid, likely to continue so ; for would his modesty permit him to print it, the great expense of plates would make its publication almost impracticable.—M.

^h Anne Countess of Pembroke and Montgomery.

I passed through Long-Addenham, Ilkeley, (pronounced Eecly,) distinguished by a lofty brow of loose rocks to the right; Burley, a neat and pretty village, among trees; on the opposite side of the river lay Middleton Lodge, belonging to a catholic gentleman of that name; Weston, a venerable stone fabric, with large offices, of Mr. Vavasour, the meadows in front gently descending to the water, and behind a great and shady wood; Farnley, (Mr. Fawkes's,) a place like the last, but larger, and rising higher on the side of the hill. Otley is a large airy town, with clean but low rustic buildings, and a bridge over the wharf; I went into its spacious gothic church, which has been new roofed, with a flat stucco ceiling; in a corner of it is the monument of Thomas Lord Fairfax, and Helen Aske, his lady, descended from the Cliffords and Latimers, as her epitaph says; the figures, not ill-cut, (particularly his in armour, but bare-headed,) lie on the tomb. I take them to be the parents of the famous Sir Thomas Fairfax.

LETTER V.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BONSTETTENⁱ.

Cambridge, April 12, 1770.

NEVER did I feel, my dear Bonstetten, to what a tedious length the few short moments of our life may be extended by impatience and expectation, till you

ⁱ Bonstetten, in his youth, resided for some time at Cambridge, during which he enjoyed an almost daily intercourse with Mr. Gray, who attached himself to him with great ardour, and soon became his warmest and most confidential friend.—M.

had left me ; nor ever knew before with so strong a conviction how much this frail body sympathizes with the inquietude of the mind. I am grown old in the compass of less than three weeks, like the sultan in the Turkish Tales, that did but plunge his head into a vessel of water and take it out again, as the standers-by affirmed, at the command of a dervise, and found he had passed many years in captivity, and begot a large family of children. The strength and spirits that now enable me to write to you, are only owing to your last letter—a temporary gleam of sun-shine. Heaven knows when it may shine again ! I did not conceive till now, I own, what it was to lose you, nor felt the solitude and insipidity of my own condition before I possessed the happiness of your friendship. I must cite another Greek writer to you, because it is much to my purpose: he is describing the character of a genius truly inclined to philosophy : “ It includes,” he says, “ qualifications rarely united in one single mind, quickness of apprehension, and a retentive memory, vivacity and application, gentleness and magnanimity :” to these he adds “ an invincible love of truth, and consequently of probity and justice. Such a soul,” continues he, “ will be little inclined to sensual pleasures, and consequently temperate ; a stranger to illiberality and avarice ; being accustomed to the most extensive views of things, and sublimest contemplations, it will contract an habitual greatness, will look down with a kind of disregard on human life, and on death, consequently, will possess the truest fortitude. Such,” says he, “ is the mind born to govern the rest of mankind.” But these very endowments, so necessary to a soul formed for philosophy, are often its ruin, especially when joined to the external advantages of wealth, nobility, strength, and beauty ; that is, if it light on a bad soil, and want its proper nurture, which nothing but an excellent education can bestow. In this case he is depraved by the public example, the assemblies of the people, the courts of justice, the theatres, that inspire it with false opinions, terrify it with false infamy, or elevate it with false applause; and remember, that extraordinary vices and extraordinary virtues are equally the produce of a vigorous mind: little souls are alike incapable of the one and the other.

If you have ever met with the portrait sketched out by Plato, you will know it again: for my part, to my sorrow, I have had that happiness: I see the principal features, and I foresee the dangers with a trembling anxiety. But enough of this; I return to your letter. It proves, at least, that in the midst of your new gaieties, I still hold some place in your memory, and, what pleases me above all, it has an air of undissembled sincerity. Go on, my best and amiable friend, to shew me your heart simply and without the shadow of disguise, and leave me to weep over it, as I now do, no matter whether from joy or sorrow.

LETTER VI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. T. WHARTON.

Pembroke-hall, April 15, 1770.

OUR friend, Dr. Hurd, having long ago desired me, in your name, to communicate any fragments or sketches of a design I once had, to give a history of English poetry, you may well think me rude or negligent, when you see me hesitating for so many months before I comply with your request ; and yet, believe me, few of your friends have been better pleased than I, to find this subject, surely neither unentertaining nor unuseful, had fallen into hands so likely to do it justice ; few have felt a higher esteem for your talents, your taste, and industry. In truth, the only cause of my delay has been a sort of diffidence, that would not let me send you any thing so short, so slight, and so imperfect as the few materials I had begun to collect, or the observations I had made on them. A sketch of the division or arrangement of the subject, however, I venture to transcribe, and would wish to know whether it corresponds in any thing with your own plan ; for I am told your first volume is in the press.

INTRODUCTION.

On the poetry of the Gaelic or Celtic nations, as far back as can be traced.—On that of the Goths, its introduction into these islands by the Saxons and Danes, and its duration.—On the origin of rhyme among the Franks, the Saxons, and Provençaux. Some account of the Latin rhyming poetry, from its early origin, down to the fifteenth century.

PART. I.

On the school of Provence, which rose about the year 1100, and was soon followed by the French and Italians.—Their heroic poesy, or romances in verse, allegories, fabliaux, syrviertes, comedies, farces, canzoni, sonnets, ballads, madrigals, sestines, &c.—Of their imitators, the French : and of the first Italian school, commonly called the Sicilian, about the year 1200 ; brought to perfection by Dante, Petrarch, Boccace, and others.—State of poetry in England, from the Conquest, 1066, or rather, from Henry the Second's time, 1154, to the reign of Edward the Third, 1327.

PART II.

On Chaucer, who first introduced the manner of the Provençaux, improved by the Italians, into our country: his character and merits at large, the different kinds in which he excelled.—Gower, Occleve, Lydgate, Hawes, Gawen Douglas, Lyndesay, Bellenden, Dunbar, &c.

PART III.

Second Italian school, of Ariosto, Tasso, &c. an improvement on the first, occasioned by the revival of letters, the end of the fifteenth century. The lyric poetry of this and the former age introduced from Italy by Lord Surry, Sir T. Wyatt, Bryan, Lord Vaux, &c. in the beginning of the sixteenth century.

PART IV.

Spencer, his character; subject of his poem, allegoric and romantic, of Provençal invention; but his manner of tracing it borrowed from the second Italian school.—Drayton, Fairfax, Phineas Fletcher, Golding, Phaer, &c. this school ends in Milton.—A third Italian school, full of conceit, begun in Queen Elizabeth's reign, continued under James, and Charles the First, by Donne, Crashaw, Cleiveland, carried to its height by Cowley, and ending, perhaps, with Sprat.

PART V.

School of France, introduced after the Restoration—Waller, Dryden, Addison, Prior, and Pope; which has continued to our own times.

You will observe that my idea was in some measure taken from a scribbled paper of Pope, of which, I believe, you have a copy¹. You will also see that I have excluded dramatic poetry entirely, which if you have taken in, it will at least double the bulk and trouble of your work.

¹ The following is a copy of the manuscript which is here alluded to, and which was given by Mr. Warburton to Mr. Mason in 1792.—ED.

ÆRA I.

- Rymer, Part II. p. 65, 66, 67, 74.
 Chaucer. Visions, Romaunt of the Rose, p. 78.
- | | | | |
|------------------------------|-------|--|--|
| 1. School
of
Provence. | Gower | { Pierce Plowman.
Tales from Boccace. | { Petrarch
Catal. of Provençals. |
|------------------------------|-------|--|--|
2. School
of Chaucer.
- | |
|---------------------------|
| { Lydgate.
T. Occleve. |
|---------------------------|
- Walter de Mapes. Skelton.
3. Earl of Surry.
Sir Thos. Wyatt.
Sir Phil. Sydney.
- | |
|-----------------------|
| { School of Petrarch. |
|-----------------------|
- Geo. Gascoigne, translation of Ariosto's Comedies.
4. Mirror of Magistrates.
Induction.
- | |
|--------------------|
| { School of Dante. |
|--------------------|
- Lord Buckhurst. Gorboduck, Original of good Tragedy. Seneca.

ÆRA II.

- V. Spenser, Col. Clouts. Catalogue.
 School of Ariosto and Petrarch. Translated from Tasso.
- | | |
|--------------------------|--|
| School
of
Spenser. | { W. Brown, Pastorals. × Alabaster.
S. Daniel. Ph. Fletcher, Purple Island.
Sir Walter Raleigh. × Piscatory Ec. |
|--------------------------|--|
- Italian
Sonnets.
- | |
|--|
| { 2. Edm. Fairfax. 3. Harrington. 1. Golding.
Dr. Donne. Cowley. (Davenant of his School.) |
|--|

LETTER VII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

April 18, 1770.

I HAVE utterly forgot where my Journal left off, but I think it was after the account of Gordale, near Settle; if so, there was little more worth your notice: the principal things were Wharldale, in the way from Skipton to Otley, and Kirkstall Abbey, three miles from Leeds. * * * *^k Kirkstall is a noble ruin in the semi-Saxon style of building, as old as King Stephen, towards the end of his reign, 1152. The whole church is still standing, the roof excepted, seated in a delicious quiet valley, on the banks of the river Aire, and preserved with religious reverence by the Duke of Mon-

Mich. Drayton.	Sir Thomas Overbury.
Randolph.	Sir John Davis.
Cartwright.	Sir John Beaumont.
Cleveland.
Crashaw.
Bishop Corbett.
2. Sir Will. Davenant.	Lord Falkland.

Carew.	} in matter.	} Models to Waller.
T. Carey.
Geo. Sandys in versification, Fairfax and Job.
Milton's Juvenilia.

School of Spencer and the Italians.

1. Heath.

Habington.

Sir John Mennis.

Thos. Bagnal.

Originals of Hudibras.

^k Here a paragraph, describing Wharldale, in the foregoing Journal, was repeated.—M.

tagu. Adjoining to the church, between that and the river, are variety of chapels and remnants of the abbey, shattered by the encroachments of the ivy, and surrounded by many a sturdy tree, whose twisted roots break through the fret of the vaulting, and hang streaming from the roofs. The gloom of these ancient cells, the shade and verdure of the landscape, the glittering and murmur of the stream, the lofty towers and long perspectives of the church, in the midst of a clear bright day, detained me for many hours ; and were the truest objects for my glass I have met with any where. As I lay at that smoky, ugly, busy town of Leeds, I dropped all further thoughts of my Journal ; and after passing two days at Mason's, (though he was absent,) pursued my way by Nottingham, Leicester, Harborough, Kettering, Thrapston, and Huntingdon, to Cambridge, where I arrived on the 22d of October, having met with no rain to signify till this last day of my journey. There's luck for you !

I do think of seeing Wales this summer, having never found my spirits lower than at present, and feeling that motion and change of the scene is absolutely necessary to me ; I will make Aston in my way to Chester, and shall rejoice to meet you there the last week in May. Mason writes me word that he wishes it ; and though his old house is down, and his new one not up, proposes to receive us like princes in grain.

LETTER VIII

MR. GRAY TO MR. BONSTETTEN.

April 19, 1770.

ALAS! how do I every moment feel the truth of what I have somewhere read, "Ce n'est pas le voir, que de s'en souvenir;" and yet that remembrance is the only satisfaction I have left. My life now is but a perpetual conversation with your shadow—the known sound of your voice still rings in my ears—there, on the corner of the fender, you are standing, or tinkling on the piano-forte, or stretched at length on the sofa. Do you reflect, my dearest friend, that it is a week or eight days before I can receive a letter from you, and as much more before you can have my answer; that all that time I am employed, with more than Herculean toil, in pushing the tedious hours along, and wishing to annihilate them; the more I strive, the heavier they move, and the longer they grow. I cannot bear this place, where I have spent many tedious years within less than a month since you left me. I am going for a few days to see poor Nicholls, invited by a letter, wherein he mentions you, in such terms as add to my regard for him, and express my own sentiments better than I can do myself. "I am concerned," says he, "that I cannot pass half my life with him; I never met with any one who pleased and suited me so well: the miracle to me is, how he comes to be so little spoiled, and the miracle of miracles will be, if he continues so in the midst of every danger and seduction, and without any advantages but from his own excellent nature and understanding. I own I am very anxious for him on this account, and perhaps your inquietude may have proceeded from the same cause. I hope I am to hear when he has passed that cursed sea, or will he forget me thus, in insulam relegatum? If he should, it is out of my power to retaliate." Surely you have written to him, my dear Bonstetten, or surely you will! he has moved me with these gentle and sensible expressions of his kindness for you; are you untouched by them?

You do me the credit, and, false or true, it goes to my heart, of ascribing to me your love for many virtues of the highest rank. Would to heaven it were so! but they are indeed the fruits of your own noble and generous understanding, which has hitherto struggled against the stream of custom, passion, and ill company, even when you were but a child; and will you now give way to that stream when your strength is increased? Shall the jargon of French sophists, the allurements of painted women comme il faut, or the vulgar caresses of prostitute beauty, the property of all who can afford to purchase it, induce you to give up a mind and body by nature distinguished from all others, to folly, idleness, disease, and vain remorse? Have a care, my ever amiable friend, of loving what you do not approve. Know me for your most faithful and most humble despot.

LETTER IX.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BONSTETTEN.

May 9, 1770.

I AM returned, my dear Bonstetten, from the little journey I made into Suffolk, without answering the end proposed. The thought that you might have been with me there has embittered all my hours: your letter has made me happy, as happy as so gloomy, so solitary a being as I am, is capable of being made. I know, and have too often felt, the disadvantages I lay myself under, how much I hurt the little interest I have in you, by this air of sadness, so contrary to your nature and present enjoyments: but sure you will forgive, though you cannot sympathize with me. It is impossible for me to dissemble with you; such as I am I expose my heart to your view, nor wish to conceal a single thought from your penetrating eyes. All that you say to me, especially on the subject of Switzerland, is infinitely acceptable. It feels too pleasing ever to be fulfilled, and as often as I read over your truly kind letter, written long since from London, I stop at these words: "La mort qui peut glacer nos bras avant qu'ils soient entrelacées."

LETTER X.

MR. GRAY TO MR. BEATTIE.

Pembroke-Hall, July 2, 1770.

I REJOICE to hear that you are restored to better state of health, to your books, and to your muse once again. That forced dissipation and exercise we are obliged to fly to as a remedy, when this frail machine goes wrong, is often almost as bad as the distemper we would cure; yet I too have been constrained of late to pursue a like regimen, on account of certain pains in the head, (a sensation unknown to me before,) and of great dejection of spirits. This, Sir, is the only excuse I have to make you for my long silence, and not (as perhaps you may have figured to yourself) any secret reluctance I had to tell you my mind concerning the specimen you so kindly sent me of your new Poem¹: on the contrary, if I had seen any thing of importance to disapprove, I should have hastened to inform you, and never doubted of being forgiven. The truth is, I greatly like all I have seen, and wish to see more. The design is simple, and pregnant with poetical ideas of various kinds, yet seems somehow imperfect at the end. Why may not young Edwin, when necessity has driven him to take up the harp, and assume the profession of a minstrel, do some great and singular service to his country? (what service I must leave to your invention,) such as no general, no statesman, no moralist could do without the aid of music, inspiration, and poetry. This will not appear an improbability in those early times, and in a character then held sacred, and respected by all nations: besides, it will be a full answer to all the hermit has said, when he dissuaded him from cultivating these pleasing arts; it will shew their use, and make the best panegyric of our favourite and celestial science. And, lastly, (what weighs most with me,) it will throw more of action, pathos, and interest into your design, which already abounds in reflection and sentiment. As to description, I have always thought that it made the most graceful ornament of poetry, but never ought to make the subject. Your ideas are new, and borrowed from a mountainous country, the only one that can furnish truly picturesque scenery. Some trifles in the language or versification you will permit me to remark. * * * m

¹ This letter was written in answer to one that inclosed only a part of the first book of the Minstrel in manuscript, and, I believe, a sketch of Mr. Beattie's plan for the whole.—M.

^m A few paragraphs of particular criticism are here omitted.—M.

I will not enter at present into the merits of your "Essay on Truth," because I have not yet given it all the attention it deserves, though I have read it through with pleasure; besides, I am partial; for I have always thought David Hume a pernicious writer, and believe he has done as much mischief here as he has in his own country. A turbid and shallow stream often appears to our apprehensions very deep. A professed sceptic can be guided by nothing but his present passions (if he has any) and interests; and to be masters of his philosophy we need not his books or advice, for every child is capable of the same thing, without any study at all. Is not that naiveté and good humour, which his admirers celebrate in him, owing to this, that he has continued all his days an infant, but one that unhappily has been taught to read and write? That childish nation, the French, have given him vogue and fashion, and we, as usual, have learned from them to admire him at second handⁿ.

ⁿ On a similar subject Mr. Gray expresses himself thus in a letter to Mr. Walpole, dated March 17, 1771: "He must have a very good stomach that can digest the Crambe recocta of Voltaire. Atheism is a vile dish, though all the cooks of France combine to make new sauces to it. As to the soul, perhaps, they may have none on the continent; but I do think we have such things in England. Shakspeare, for example, I believe had several to his own share. As to the Jews, (though they do not eat pork,) I like them because they are better Christians than Voltaire." This was written only three months before his death; and I insert it to shew how constant and uniform he was in his contempt of infidel writers. Dr. Beattie received only one letter more from his correspondent, dated March 8, 1771. It related to the first book of the Minstrel, now sent to him in print, and contained criticisms on particular passages, and commendations on particular stanzas. Those criticisms the author attended to in a future edition, because his good taste found that they deserved

LETTER XI.

MR. GRAY TO MR. NICHOLLS.

Pembroke-Hall, Jan. 26, 1771.

I REJOICE you have met with Froissart, he is the Herodotus of a barbarous age; had he but had the luck of writing in as good a language, he might have been immortal! His locomotive disposition, (for then there was no other way of learning things,) his simple curiosity, his religious credulity, were much like those of the old Grecian^o. When you have tant chevauché, as to get to the end of him, there is Monstrelet waits to take you up, and will set you down at Philip de Comines; but previous to all these, you should have read Villehardouin and Joinville. I do not think myself bound to defend the character of even the best of kings^p: pray slash them all, and spare not.

It would be strange too if I should blame your Greek studies, or find fault with you for reading Isocrates: I did so myself twenty years ago, and in an edition at least as bad as your's. The Panegyric, the de Pace, Areopagitic, and advice to Philip, are by far the noblest his attention; the passages therefore being altered, the strictures die of course. As to the notes of commendation, the Poem itself abounds with so many striking beauties, that they need not even the hand of Mr. Gray to point them out to a reader of any feeling: all therefore that I shall print of that letter, is the concluding paragraph relating to his Essay on the Immutability of Truth. "I am happy to hear of your success in another way, because I think you are serving the cause of human nature, and the true interest of mankind; your book is read here too, and with just applause."—M.

^o See more of his opinion of this author, Sect. IV. Letter XLIX.

^p I suppose his correspondent had made some strictures on the character of Henry IV. of France. See Sect. IV. Letter XXXII.

remains we have of this writer, and equal to most things extant in the Greek tongue; but it depends on your judgment to distinguish between his real and occasional opinion of things, as he directly contradicts in one place what he has advanced in another: for example, in the Panathenaic, and the de Pace, &c. on the naval power of Athens; the latter of the two is undoubtedly his own undisguised sentiment ^q.

I would by all means wish you to comply with your friend's request, and write the letter he desires. I trust to the cause and to the warmth of your own kindness for inspiration. Write eloquently, that is, from your heart, in such expressions as that will furnish^r. Men sometimes catch that feeling from a stranger which should have originally sprung from their own heart.

^q In a note on the beginning of Plato's Treatise de Legibus, our Author says, "Isocrates (in his Oration Panathenaic, p. 256) is constrained to own, that when Athens became a great naval power, she was forced to sacrifice her good order and morals to her ambition, though he justifies her for doing so from necessity: but (in the Orat. de Pace, p. 174) he speaks his mind more freely, and he shews at large that the dominion of the sea was every way the ruin of the Athenians, and afterwards of the Lacedæmonians. See Matthias's Gray, vol. ii. p. 482.—ED.

^r This short sentence contains a complete definition of natural eloquence; when it becomes an art it requires one more prolix, and our Author seems to have begun to sketch it on a detached paper. "Its province (says he) is to reign over minds of slow perception and little imagination, to set things in lights they never saw them in; to engage their attention by details and circumstances gradually unfolded; to adorn and heighten them with images and colours unknown to them; and to raise and engage their rude passions to the point to which the speaker wishes to bring them." * * *—M.

LETTER XII.

MR. GRAY TO DR. WHARTON.

May 24, 1771.

My last summer's tour was through Worcestershire, Gloucestershire, Monmouthshire, Herefordshire, and Shropshire, five of the most beautiful counties in the kingdom. The very principal light and capital feature of my journey was the river Wye, which I descended in a boat for near forty miles from Ross to Chepstow. Its banks are a succession of nameless beauties; one out of many you may see not ill described by Mr. Whately, in his Observations on Gardening, under the name of the New Weir: he has also touched upon two others, Tinterne Abbey and Persfield, both of them famous scenes, and both on the Wye. Monmouth, a town I never heard mentioned, lies on the same river, in a vale that is the delight of my eyes, and the very seat of pleasure. The vale of Abergavenny, Ragland, and Chepstow castles; Ludlow, Malvern-hills, Hampton Court, near Lemster; the Leasows, Hagley, the three cities and their cathedrals; and lastly, Oxford, (where I passed two days on my return with great satisfaction,) were the rest of my acquisitions, and no bad harvest in my opinion; but I made no journal myself, else you should have had it: I have indeed a short one written by the companion of my travels^s, that serves to recal and fix the fleeting images of these things^t.

^s Mr. Nicholls.

^t The whole of the above passage is translated by Mr. Mason, with slight alteration, from a letter bearing date August 24, 1770, and consequently written immediately after the journey referred to in it. A passage, quoted in this place, by Mr. Mitford, from Gil-pin's preface to his Observations on the River Wye, is worth notice. " In the same year, says that writer, in which this little journey was made, Mr. Gray made it likewise ; and hearing that I had put on paper a few remarks on the scenes, which he had so lately visited, he desired a sight of them. They were then only in a rude state ; but the handsome things he said of them to a friend of his, who obligingly repeated them to me, gave them, I own, some little degree of credit in my own opinion ; and made me somewhat less apprehensive in risking them before the public. If this work afforded any amusement to Mr. Gray, it was the amusement of a very late period of his life. He saw it in London, about the beginning of June, 1771 ; and he died, you know, at the end of the July following. Had he lived, it is possible he might have been induced to have assisted me with a few of his own remarks on scenes which he had so accurately examined ; the slightest touches of such a master would have had their effect. No man was a greater admirer of nature than Mr. Gray, nor admired it with better taste."—ED.

I have had a cough upon me these three months, which is incurable. The approaching summer I have sometimes had thoughts of spending on the Continent ; but I have now dropped that intention, and believe my expeditions will terminate in Old Park : but I make no promise, and can answer for nothing ; my own employment so sticks in my stomach, and troubles my conscience : and yet travel I must, or cease to exist. Till this year I hardly knew what (mechanical) low spirits were, but now I even tremble at an east wind.

TALBOYS AND WHEELER.

