LIFE OF AKENSIDE.

MARK AKENSIDE was born at Newcastle-upon-Tyne on the 9th of November 1721. His family were Presbyterian Dissenters, and on the 30th of that month he was baptized in the meeting, then held in Hanover Square, by a Mr Benjamin Bennet. His father, Mark, was a butcher in respectable circumstances—his mother's name was Mary Lumsden. There may seem something grotesque in finding the author of the "Pleasures of Imagination" born in a place usually thought so anti-poetical as a butcher's shop. And yet similar anomalies abound in the histories of men of genius. Henry Kirke White, too, was a butcher's son, and for some time carried his father's basket. The late Thomas Atkinson, a very clever littérateur of the West of Scotland, was also what the Scotch call a "flesher's" son. The case of Cardinal Wolsey is well known. Indeed, we do not understand why any decent calling should be inimical to the existence—however it may be to the adequate development—of genius. That is a spark of supernal inspiration, lighting where it pleases, often conforming, and always striving to conform, circumstances to itself, and sometimes even strengthened and purified by the contradictions it meets in life. Nay, genius has sprung up in stranger quarters than in butcher's shops or tailor's attics—it has lived and flourished in the dens of robbers, and in the gross and fetid atmosphere of taverns. There was an Allen-a-Dale in Robin Hood's gang; it was in the Bell Inn, at Gloucester, that George Whitefield, the most gifted of popular orators, was reared; and Bunyan's Muse found him at the disrespectable trade of a tinker, and amidst the clatter of pots, and pans, and vulgar curses, made her whisper audible in his ear, "Come up hither to the Mount of Vision—to the summit of Mount Clear!"

It is said that Akenside was ashamed of his origin—and if so, he deserved the perpetual recollection of it, produced by a life-long lameness, originating in a cut from his father's cleaver. It is fitting that men, and especially great men, should suffer through their smallnesses of character. The boy was first sent to the Free School of Newcastle, and thence to a private academy kept by Mr Wilson, a Dissenting minister of the place. He began rather early to display a taste for poetry and verse-writing; and, in April 1737, we find in the Gentleman's Magazine a set of stanzas, entitled, "The Virtuoso, in imitation of Spenser's style and stanza," prefaced by a letter signed Marcus, in which the author, while requesting the insertion of his piece, pleads the apology of his extreme youth. One may see something of the future political zeal of the man in the boy's selection of one of the names of Brutus. The Gentleman's Magazine was then rising toward that character of a readable medley and agreeable olla podrida, which it long bore, although its principal contributor—Johnson—did not join its staff till the next year. Its old numbers will even still repay perusal—at least we seldom enjoyed a greater treat than when in our boyhood we lighted on and read some twenty of its brown-hued, stout-backed, strong-bound volumes, filled with the debates in the Senate of Lilliput—with Johnson's early Lives and Essays—with mediocre poetry—interesting scraps of meteorological and scientific information—ghost stories and fairy tales—alternating with timid politics, and with sarcasms at the great, veiled under initials, asterisks, and innuendoes; and even now many, we believe, feel it quite a luxury to recur from the personalities and floridities of modern periodicals to its quiet, cool, sober, and sensible pages. To it Akenside contributed afterwards a fable, called "Ambition and Content," a "Hymn to Science," and a few more poetical pieces (written not, as commonly said, in Edinburgh, but in Newcastle, in 1739). It has been asserted that he composed his "Pleasures of Imagination" while visiting some relations at Morpeth, when only seventeen years of age; but although he himself assures us that he spent many happy and inspired hours in that region,

"Leda

In silence by some powerful hand unseen,"

there is no direct evidence that he then fixed his vague, tumultuous, youthful impressions in verse. Indeed, the texture and style of the "Pleasures" forbid the thought that it was a hasty improvisation. When nearly eighteen years old, Akenside was sent to Edinburgh, to commence his studies for the pulpit, and received some pecuniary assistance from the Dissenters' Society. One winter, however, served to disgust him with the prospects of the profession—which he resigned for the pursuit of medicine, repaying the contribution he had received from the society. We know a similar case in the present day of a well-known, able littérateur—once the editor of the Westminster Review—who had been educated at the expense of the Congregational body in Scotland, but who, after a change of religious view and of profession, honourably refunded the whole sum. What were the special reasons why Akenside turned aside from the Church we are not informed. Perhaps he had fallen into youthful indiscretions or early scepticism; or perhaps he felt that the business of a Dissenting pastor was not then, any more than it is now, a very lucrative one. Presbyterian Dissent at that time, besides, did not stand very high in England. The leading Dissenting divines were Independents—and the Presbyterian body was fast sinking into Unitarian or Arian heresy. On the other hand, the Church of England was in the last state of lukewarmness; the Church of Scotland was groaning under the load of patronage; and the Secession body was newly formed, and as yet insignificant. In such circumstances we cannot wonder that an ardent, ambitious mind like that of Akenside should revolt from divinity as a study, and the pulpit as a goal, although some may think it strange how the pursuit of medicine should commend itself instead to a genial and poetic mind. Yet let us remember that some eminent poets have been students or practisers of the art of medicine. Such—to name only a few—were Armstrong, Smollett, Crabbe, Darwin, Delta, Keats, and the two Thomas Browns, the Knight of the “Religio Medici,” and the Philosopher of the “Lectures,” both genuine poets, although their best poetry is in prose. There are, besides, connected with medicine, some departments of thought and study peculiarly exciting to the imagination. Such is anatomy, with its sad yet instructive revelations of the structure of the human frame—so “fearfully and wonderfully made”—wielding in its hand a scalpel which at first seems ruthless and disenchanting as the scythe of death, but which afterwards becomes a key to unlock some of the deepest mysteries, and leads us down whole galleries of wonder. There is botany, culling from every nook and corner of the earth weeds which are flowers, and flowers of all hues, and every plant, from the “cedar of Lebanon to the hyssop which springs out of the wall,” and finding a terrible and imaginative pleasure in handling the fell family of poisons, and in deriving the means of protracting life and healing sickness from the very blossoms of death. And there is chemistry, most poetical save astronomy of all the sciences, seeking to spiritualise the material—to hunt the atom to the point where it trembles over the gulf of nonentity—to weigh gases in scales, and the elements in a balance, and, in its more transcendental and daring shape, trying to interchange one kind of metal with another, and all kinds of forms with all, as in a music-led and mystic dance. Hence we find that such men as Beddoes, the author of the “Bride’s Tragedy,” have turned away from poetry to physiology, and found in it a grander if also ghastlier stimulus to their imaginative faculty. Hence Crabbe delighted to load himself with grasses and duckweed, and Goëthe to fill his carriage with every variety of plant and mountain flower. Hence Davy, and the late lamented Samuel Brown, analysed, in the spirit of poets as well as of philosophers, and gave to the crucible what it had long lost, something of the air of a weird cauldron, bubbling over with magical foam, and shining, not so much in the severe light of science as in the “Light that never was on sea or shore,

The consecration and the poet’s dream.”

And hence, in the then state of Church matters, and of his own effervescent soul, Akenside felt probably in medicine a deeper charm than in theology, and imagined that it opened up a more congenial field for his powers both of reason and of imagination.

In December 1740, Akenside was elected a member of the Edinburgh Medical Society. This society held meetings for discussion, and in them our poet set himself to shine as a speaker. His ambition, it is said, at this time, was to be a member of Parliament; and Dr Robertson, then a student in the University, used to attend the meetings of the society chiefly to hear the speeches of the young and fiery Southron. Indeed, the rhetoric of the “Pleasures of Imagination” is finer than its poetry; and none but an orator could have painted Brutus rising “refulgent from the stroke” which slew Cæsar, when he “Call’d on Tully’s name,

And bade the father of his country hail!”

Englishmen are naturally more eloquent than the Scotch; and once and again has the Mark Akenside, the Joseph Gerald, or the George Thompson overpowered and captivated even the sober and critical children of the Modern Athens. While electrifying the Medical Society, Akenside did not neglect, if he did not eminently excel in his professional studies; and he continued to write sonorous verse, some specimens of which, including an “Ode on the Winter Solstice,” and “Love, an Elegy,” he is said to have printed for private distribution.

In Edinburgh he became acquainted with Jeremiah Dyson, a young law-student of fortune, who was afterwards our poet’s principal patron. He seems to have returned to Newcastle in 1741; and we find him dating a letter to Dyson thence on the 18th of August 1742, and directing his correspondent to address his reply to him as “Surgeon, in Newcastle-upon-

Tyne." It is doubtful, however, if he had yet begun to practise; and there is reason to believe that he was busily occupied with his great poem. This he completed in the close of 1743. He offered the manuscript to Dodsley for £150. The bookseller, although a liberal and generous man, was disposed at first to boggle a little at such a price for a didactic poem by an unknown man. He carried the "Pleasures of Imagination" to Pope, who glanced at it, saw its merit, and advised Dodsley not to make a niggardly offer—for "this was no everyday writer." It appeared in January 1744, and, in spite of its faults, nay, perhaps, partly in consequence of them, was received with loud applause; and the author—only twenty-three years of age—"awoke one morning, and found himself famous;" for although his name was not attached to the poem, it soon transpired. One Rolt, an obscure scribbler, then in Ireland, claimed the authorship, transcribed the poem with his own hand; nay, according to Dr Johnson, published an edition with his own name, and was invited to the best tables as the ingenious Mr Rolt. His conversation did not indeed sparkle with poetic fire, nor was his appearance that of a poet, but people remembered that both Dryden and Addison were dull or silent in company till warmed with wine, and that it was not uncommon for authors to have sold all their thoughts to their booksellers. Akenside, hearing of this, was obliged to vindicate his claims by printing the next edition with his name, and then the bubble of the ingenious Mr Rolt burst.

All fame, and especially all sudden fame, has its drawbacks. Gray read the poem, and wrote of it to his friends, in a style thought at the time depreciatory, although it comes pretty near the truth. He says, "It seems to me above the middling, and now and then for a little while rises even to the best, particularly in description. It is often obscure and even unintelligible. In short, its great fault is, that it was published at least nine years too early." Gray, however, had not as yet himself emerged as a poet, and his word had chiefly weight with his friends. Warburton was a more formidable opponent. This divine acted then a good deal in the style of a gigantic Church-bully, and seemed disposed to knock down all and sundry who differed from him either on great or small theological matters; and Humes, Churchills, Jortins, Middletons, Lowths, Shaftesburys, Wesleys, Whitefields, and Aken-sides all felt the fury of his onset, and the force of the "punishment" inflicted by his strong fists. Akenside, in his poem, and in one of his notes, had defended Shaftesbury's ridiculous notion that ridicule is the test of truth, and for this Warburton assailed him in the preface to "Remarks in Answer to Dr Middleton." In this, while indirectly disparaging the poem, he accuses the poet of infidelity, atheism, and insulting the clergy. The preface appeared in March 1744, and in the following May (Akenside being then in Holland) came forth a reply, in "An Epistle to the Rev. Mr Warburton, occasioned by his Treatment of the Author of the Pleasures of Imagination," which had been concocted between Dyson and our poet. This pamphlet was written with considerable spirit; and although it left the question where it found it, it augured no little courage on the part of the young physician and the young lawyer mating themselves against the matured author of the "Divine Legation of Moses." As to the question in dispute, Johnson disposes of it satisfactorily in a single sentence. "If ridicule be applied to any position as the test of truth, it will then become a question whether such ridicule be just, and this can only be decided by the application of truth as the test of ridicule." How easy to make any subject or any person ridiculous! To hold that ridicule is paramount to the discovery or attestation of truth, is to exalt the ape-element in man above the human and the angelic principles, which also belong to his nature, and to enthrone a Voltaire over a Newton or a Milton. Those who laugh proverbially do not always win, nor do they always deserve to win. Do we think less of "Paradise Lost," and Shakspeare, because Cobbett has derided both, or of the Old and New Testaments, because Paine has subjected parts of them to his clumsy satire? When we find, indeed, a system such as Jesuitism blasted by the ridicule of Pascal, we conclude that it was not true,—but why? not merely because ridicule assailed it, for ridicule has assailed ten thousand systems which never even shook in the storm, but because, in the view of all candid and liberal thinkers, the ridicule prevailed. Should it be said that the question still recurs, How are we to be certain of the candour and liberality of the men who think that Pascal's satire damaged Jesuitism? we simply say, that it is not ridicule, but some stricter and more satisfactory method that can determine this inquiry. It is remarkable that Akenside modified his statements on this subject in his after revision of his poem.

In April 1744 we find our bard in Leyden, and Mr Dyce has published some interesting letters dated thence to Mr Dyson. He does not seem to have admired Holland much, whether in its scenery, manners, taste, or genius. On the 16th of May, he took his degree of Doctor of Physic at Leyden, the subject of his Dissertation (which, according to the usual custom, he published) being the "Origin and Growth of the Human Foetus," in which he is reported to have opposed the views then prevalent, and to have maintained the theory which is now generally held. As soon as he received his diploma he returned to England, signalling his departure by an "Ode to Holland," as dull as any ditch in that country itself. In June he settled as a physician in Northampton, where the eminent Doddridge was at the time labouring. With him he is said to have held a friendly contest about the opinions of the old heathens in reference to a future state, Akenside, in keeping with the whole tenor of his intellectual history, supporting the side of the ancients. Indeed, he never appears to have had much religion, except that of the Pagan philosophy, Plato being his Paul, and Socrates his Christ; and most cordially would he have joined in Thorwaldsen's famous toast (announced at an evening party in Rome, while the planet Jupiter was shining in great glory), "Here's in honour of the ancient gods." In Northampton, partly owing to the overbearing influence of Dr Stonehouse, a long-established practitioner, and partly to his violent political zeal, he did not prosper. While residing there he produced his manly and spirited "Epistle to Curio." Curio was Pulteney, who had been a flaming patriot, but who, like the majority of such characters, had, for the sake of a title—the earldom of Bath—subsided into a courtier. Him Akenside lashes with unsparing energy. He committed afterwards an egregious blunder in reference to this production. He frittered it down into a stupid ode. Indeed, he had always an injudicious trick—whether springing from fastidiousness or undue ambition—of tinkering and tampering with his very best poems.

In March 1745 he collected his odes into a quarto tract. It appeared at a time when lyrical poetry was all but extinct. Dryden was gone; Collins and Gray had not yet published their odes; and hence, and partly too from the prestige of his former poem, Akenside's odes, poor as they now seem, met with considerable acceptance, although they did not reach a new edition till 1760. In 1747 his friend Dyson, having been elected clerk to the House of Commons, took Akenside with him to his house at Northend, Hampstead. Here, however, he felt himself out of place, and in fine, in 1748, he settled down in Bloomsbury Square, London, where Dyson very generously allowed him £300 a-year, which, being equal to the value of twice that sum now, enabled him to keep a chariot, and live like a gentleman. During the years 1746, 1747, 1748, he composed a number of pieces, both in prose and verse—his "Hymn to the Naiads," his "Ode to the Evening Star," and several essays in Dodsley's Museum; such as these, "On Correctness;" "The Table of Modern Fame, a Vision;" "Letter from a Swiss Gentleman on English Liberty;" and "The Balance of Poets;" besides an ode to Caleb Hardinge, M.D., and another to the Earl of Huntingdon, which has been esteemed one of his best lyric poems. In London he did not attain rapidly a good practice, nor was it ever extensive. But for Mr Dyson's aid he might have written a chapter on "Early Struggles," nearly as rich and interesting as that famous one in Warren's "Diary of a late Physician." Even his poetical name was adverse to his prospects. His manners, too, were unconciliating and haughty. At Tom's Coffee-house, in Devereux Court, night after night, appeared the author of the "Pleasures of Imagination," full of knowledge, dogmatism, and a love of self-display; eager for talk, fond of arguing—especially on politics and literature—and sometimes narrowly escaping duels and other misadventures springing from his hot and imperious temper. In sick chambers he was stiff, formal, and reserved, carrying a frown about with him, which itself damped the spirits and accelerated the pulse of his patients. It was only among intimate friends that he descended to familiarity, and even then it was with

One of these intimates for a while was Charles Townshend, a man whose name now lives chiefly in the glowing encomium of Burke, a part of which we may quote:—“Before this splendid orb (Lord Chatham) was entirely set, and while the western horizon was in a blaze with his descending glory, on the opposite quarter of the heavens arose another luminary, and for his hour became lord of the ascendant. Townshend was the delight and ornament of this House, and the charm of every private society which he honoured with his presence. Perhaps there never arose in this country, nor in any country, a man of more pointed and finished wit, and of a more refined, exquisite, and penetrating judgment. He stated his matter skilfully and powerfully. He particularly excelled in a most luminous explanation and display of the subject. His style of argument was neither trite and vulgar, nor subtle and abstruse. He hit the House between wind and water. He had no failings which were not owing to a noble cause, to an ardent, generous, perhaps an immoderate passion for fame; a passion which is the instinct of all great souls. He worshipped that goddess wheresoever she appeared: but he paid his particular devotions to her in her favourite habitation, in her chosen temple, the House of Commons.” With this distinguished man Akenside was for some time on friendly terms, but for causes not well known, their friendship came to an abrupt termination; it might have been owing to Townshend’s rapid rise, or to Akenside’s presumptuous and overbearing disposition. Two odes, addressed by the latter to the former, immortalise this incomplete and abortive amity.

The years 1750 and 1751 were only signalised in Akenside's history by one or two dull odes from his pen. But if not witty at that time himself, he gave occasion to wit in others. Smollett, provoked, it is said, by some aspersions Akenside had in conversation cast on Scotland, and at all times prone to bitter and sarcastic views of men and manners, fell foul of him in "Peregrine Pickle." If our readers care for wading through that filthy novel—the most disagreeable, although not the dullest of Smollett's fictions—they will find a caricature of our poet in the character of the "Doctor," who talks nonsense about liberty, quotes and praises his own poetry, and invites his friends to an entertainment in the manner of the ancients—a feast hideously accurate in its imitation of antique cookery, and forming, if not an "entertainment" to the guests, a very rich one to the readers of the tale. How Akenside bore this we are not particularly informed. Probably he writhed in secret, but was too proud to acknowledge his feelings. In 1753 he was consoled by receiving a doctor's degree from Cambridge, and by being elected Fellow of the Royal Society. The next year he became Fellow of the College of Physicians.

In June 1755 he read the Galstonian lectures in anatomy before the College of Physicians, and in the next year the Croonian lectures before the same institution. The subject of the latter course was the "History of the Revival of Letters," which some of the learned Thebans thought not germane to the matter; and, consequently, after he had delivered three lectures, he desisted in disgust. This fact seems somewhat to contradict Dr Johnson's assertion, that "Akenside appears not to have been wanting to his own success, and placed himself in view by all the common methods." Had he been a thoroughly self-seeking man, he never would have committed the blunder of choosing literature as a subject of prelection to men who were probably most of them materialists, or at least destitute of literary taste. The Doctor says also, "He very eagerly forced himself into notice, by an ambitious ostentation of elegance and literature." But surely the author of such a popular poem as the "Pleasures of Imagination" had no need to claim notice by an ostentatious display of his parts, and had too much good sense to imagine that such a vain display would conciliate any acute and sensible person. Johnson, in fact, throughout his cursory and careless "Life of Akenside," is manifestly labouring under deep prejudice against the poet—prejudice founded chiefly on Akenside's political sentiments.

In 1759 our poet was appointed physician to St Thomas's Hospital, and afterwards to Christ's Hospital. Here he ruled the patients and the under officials with a rod of iron. Dr Lettsom became a surgeon's dresser in St Thomas's Hospital. He was an admirer of poetry, especially of the "Pleasures of Imagination," and anticipated much delight from intercourse with the author. He was disappointed first of all with his personal appearance. He found him a stiff-limbed, starched personage, with a lame foot, a pale strumous face, a long sword, and a large white wig. Worse than this, he was cruel, almost barbarous, to the patients, particularly to females. Owing to an early love-disappointment, he had contracted a disgust and aversion to the sex, and chose to express it in a callous and cowardly harshness to those under his charge. It is possible, however, that Lettsom might be influenced by some private pique. Nothing is more common than for the hero-worshipper, disenchanted of his early idolatry, to rush to the opposite extreme, and to become the hero-hater; and the fault is as frequently his own as that of his idol. And it must be granted that an hospital—especially of that age—was no congenial atmosphere for a poet so Platonic and ideal as Akenside.

In October 1759 he delivered the Harveian oration before the College of Physicians, and by their order it was published the next year. In 1761 Mr T. Hollis presented him with a bed which had once belonged to Milton, on the condition that he would write an ode to the memory of that great poet. Akenside joyfully accepted the bed, had it set up in his house, and, we suppose, slept in it; but the muse forgot to visit his "slumbers nightly," and no ode was ever produced. We think that Akenside had sympathy enough with Milton's politics and poetry to have written a fine blank-verse tribute to his memory, resembling that of Thomson to Sir Isaac Newton; but odes of much merit he could not produce, and yet at odes he was always sweltering

In 1760, George the Third mounted the throne, and the author of the “ Epistle to Curio ” began to follow the precise path of Pulteney. In this he was preceded by Dyson, who became suddenly a supporter of Lord Bute, and drew his friend in his train. By Dyson’s influence Akenside was appointed, in 1761, physician to the Queen. His secession from the Whig ranks cost him a great deal of obloquy. Dr Hardinge had told the two turncoats long before “ that, like a couple of idiots, they did not leave themselves a loophole—they could not sidle away into the opposite creed.” He never, however, became a violent Tory partisan. It is singular how Johnson, with all his aversion to Akenside, has no allusion to his apostasy, in which we might have à priori expected him to glory, as a proof of the poet’s inconsistency, if not corruption.

In one point Akenside differed from the majority of his tuneful brethren, before, then, or since. He was a warm and wide-hearted commender of the works of other poets. Most of our sweet singers rather resemble birds of prey than nightingales or doves, and are at least as strong in their talons as they are musical in their tongues. And hence the groves of Parnassus have in all ages rung with the screams of wrath and contest, frightfully mingling with the melodies of song. Akenside, by a felicitous conjunction of elements, which you could not have expected from other parts of his character, was entirely exempted from this defect, and not only warmly admired Pope, Young, Thomson, and Dyer, whose “ Fleece ” he corrected, but had kind words to spare for even such “ small deer ” as Welsted and Fenton.

In 1763, he read a paper before the Royal Society, on the “ Effects of a Blow on the Heart,” which was published in the Philosophical Transactions of the year. And, in 1764, he established his character as a medical writer by an elegant and elaborate treatise on "The Dysentery," still, we believe, consulted for its information, and studied for the purity and precision of its Latin style. About this time, too, he commenced a recasting of his "Pleasures of Imagination," which he did not live to finish; and in which, on the whole, there is more of laborious alteration than of felicitous improvement. In 1766, Warburton, his old foe, who had now been made a bishop, reprinted, in a new edition of his "Divine Legation of Moses," his attack on Akenside's notions about ridicule, without deigning to take any notice of the explanations he had given in his reply. This renewal of hostilities, coming, especially as it did, from the vantage ground of the Episcopal bench, enraged our poet, and, by way of rejoinder, he issued a lyrical satire which he had had lying past him in pickle for fifteen years, and which nothing but a fresh provocation would have induced him to publish. It was entitled "An Ode to the late Thomas Edwards, Esq." Edwards had opposed Warburton ably in a book entitled "Canons of Criticism," and was himself a poet. The real sting of this attack lay in Akenside's production of a letter from Warburton to Concanen, dated 2d January 1726, which had fallen accidentally into the hands of our poet; and in which Warburton had accused Addison of plagiarism, and said that when "Pope borrows it is from want of genius." Concanen was one of the "Dunces," and it was, of course, Akenside's purpose to shew Warburton's inconsistency in the different opinions he had expressed at different times of them and of their great adversary. We know not if the sturdy bishop took any notice of this ode. Even his Briarean arms were sometimes too full of the controversial work which his overbearing temper and fierce passions were constantly giving him.

In 1766, Akenside received the thanks of the College of Physicians for an edition of Harvey's works, which he prepared for the press, and to which he had prefixed a preface. In June 1767 he read before the College two papers, one on "Cancers and Asthmas," and the other on "White Swelling of the Joints," both of which were published the next year in the first volume of the Medical Transactions. In the same year, one Archibald Campbell, a Scotchman, a purser in the navy, and called, from his ungainly countenance, "horrible Campbell," produced a small jeu d'esprit, entitled "Lexiphanes, imitated from Lucian, and suited to the present times," in which he tries to ridicule Johnson's prose and Akenside's poetry. His object was probably to attract their notice, but both passed over this grin of the "Grim Feature" in silent contempt. Akenside was still busy with the revisal of his poem, had finished two books, "made considerable progress with the third, and written a fragment of the fourth;" but death stepped in and blighted his prospects, both as a physician, with increasing practice and reputation, and as a poet, whose favourite work was approaching what he deemed perfection. He was seized with putrid fever; and, after a short illness, died on the 23d June 1770 at an age when many men are in their very prime, both of body and mind—that of 49. He died in his house in Burlington Street, and was buried on the 28th in St James's Church.

Akenside had been, notwithstanding his many acquaintances and friends, on the whole, a lonely man; without domestic connexions, and having, so far as we are informed, either no surviving relations or no intercourse with those who might be still alive. He was not especially loved in society; he wanted humour and good-humour both, and had little of that frank cordiality which, according to Sidney Smith, "warms and cheers more than meat or wine." He had far less geniality than genius. Yet, in certain select circles, his mind, which was richly stored with all knowledge, opened delightfully, and men felt that he was the author of his splendid poem. One of his biographers gives him the palm for learning, next to Ben Jonson, Milton, and Gray (he might perhaps have also excepted Landor and Coleridge), over all our English poets.

In 1772, Mr Dyson published an edition of his friend's poems, containing the original form of the "Pleasures of Imagination," as well as its half-finished second shape; his "Odes," "Inscriptions," "Hymn to the Naiads," &c., omitting, however, his poem to Curio in its first and best version, and some of his smaller pieces. This edition, too, contained an account of Akenside's life by his friend, so short and so cold as either to say little for Dyson's heart, or a great deal for his modesty and reticence. His uniform and munificent kindness to the poet during his lifetime, however, determines us in favour of the latter side of the alternative.

Of Akenside, as a man, our previous remarks have perhaps indicated our opinion. He was rather a scholar somewhat out of his element, and unreconciled to the world, than a thorough gentleman; irritable, vehement, and proud—his finer traits were only known to his intimates, who probably felt that in Wordsworth's words,

“ You must love him ere to you
He doth seem worthy of your love.”

In religion his opinions seem to have been rather unsettled; but, of whatever doubts he had, he gave the benefit latterly to the Christian side—at least he was ever ready to rebuke noisy and dogmatic infidelity. It is said that he intended to have included the doctrine of immortality in his later version of the “Pleasures of Imagination”—and even as the poem is, it contains some transient allusions to that great object of human hope, although none, it must be admitted, to its special Christian grounds.

We have now a very few sentences to enounce about his poetry, or, more properly speaking, about his two or three good poems, for we must dismiss the most of his odes, in their deep-sounding dulness, as nearly unworthy of their author's genius. Up to the days of Keats' “Endymion” and “Hyperion,” Akenside's “Hymn to the Naiads” was thought one of the best attempts to reproduce the classical spirit and ideas. It now takes a secondary place; and at no time could be compared to an actual hymn of Callimachus or Pindar, any more than Smollett's “Supper after the Manner of the Ancients” was equal to a real Roman Cœna, the ideal of which Croly has so superbly described in “Salathiel.” His “Epistle to Curio” is a masterpiece of vigorous composition, terse sentiment, and glowing invective. It gathers around Pulteney as a ring of fire round the scorpion, and leaves him writhing and shrivelled. Out of Dryden and Pope, it is perhaps the best satiric piece in our poetry.

Of the "Pleasures of Imagination," it is not necessary to say a great deal. A poem that has been so widely circulated, so warmly praised, so frequently quoted and imitated—the whole of which (nearly) man like Thomas Brown has quoted in the course of his lectures—must possess no ordinary merit. Its great beauty is its richness of description and language—its great fault is its obscurity; a beauty and a fault closely connected together, even as the luxuriance of a tropical forest implies intricacy, and its lavish loveliness creates a gloom. His attempt to express Plato's philosophy in blank verse is not always successful. Perhaps prose might better have answered his purpose in expressing the awfully sublime thought of the "archetypes of all things existing in God." We know that in certain objects of nature—in certain rocks, for instance (such as Coleridge describes in his "Wanderings of Cain")—there lie silent prefigurations and aboriginal types of artificial objects, such as ships, temples, and other orders of architecture; and it is so also in certain shells, woods, and even in clouds. How interesting and beautiful those painted prophecies of nature, those quiet hieroglyphics of God, those mystic letters, which, unlike those on the Babylonian wall, do not

"Careering shake,
And blaze IMPATIENT to be read,"

but bide calmly the time when their artificial archetypes shall appear, and the "wisdom" in them shall be "justified" in these its children! So, according to Plato, comparing great to small things, there lay in the Divine mind the archetypes of all that was to be created, with this important difference, that they lay in God spiritually and consciously. How poetical and how solemn to approach, under the guidance of this thought, and gaze on the mind of God as on an ancient awful mirror; and even as in a clear lake we behold the forms of the surrounding scenery reflected from the white strip of pebbled shore up to the gray scalp of the mountain summit, and tremble as we look down on the "skies of a far nether world," on an inverted sun, and on snow unmelted amidst the water; so to see the entire history of man, from the first glance of life in the eye of Adam, down to the last sparkle of the last ember of the general conflagration, lying silently and inverted there—how sublime, but at the same time how bewildering and how appalling! Our readers will find, in the "Pleasures of Imagination," an expansion—perhaps they may think it a dilution—of this Platonic idea.

They will find there, too, the germ of the famous theory of Alison and Jeffrey about Beauty. These theorists held "that beauty resides not so much in the object as in the mind; that we receive but what we give; that our own soul is the urn whence beauty is showered over the universe; that flower and star are lovely because the mind has breathed on them; that the imagination and the heart of man are the twin beautifiers of creation; that the dwelling of beauty is not in the light of setting suns, nor in the beams of morning stars, nor in the waves of summer seas, but in the human spirit; that sublimity tabernacles not in the palaces of the thunder, walks not on the wings of the wind, rides not on the forked lightning, but that it is the soul which is lifted up there; that it is the soul which, in its high aspirings, and scatters grandeur around it on its way." All this seems anticipated, and, as it were, coiled up in the words of our poet:—

‘Yokes with whirlwinds and the northern blast,’

“Mind, mind alone (bear witness earth and heaven!)
The living fountains in itself contains
Of beauteous and sublime.”

That Akenside was a real poet many expressions in his "Pleasures of Imagination" prove, such as that just quoted—

“Yoked with whirlwinds and the northern blast Sweeps the long tract of day;”

but, taking his poem as a whole, it is rather a tissue of eloquence and philosophical declamation than of imagination.

He deals rather in sheet lightning than in forked flashes. As a didactic poem it has a high, but not the highest place. It must not be named beside the "De Rerum Natura" of Lucretius, or the "Georgics" of Virgil, or the "Night Thoughts" of Young; and in poetry, yields even to the "Queen Mab" of Shelley. It ranks high, however, amongst that fine class of works which have called themselves, by no misnomer, "Pleasures;" and to recount all the names of which were to give an "enumeration of sweets" as delightful as that in "Don Juan." How cheering to think of that beautiful bead-roll—of which the "Pleasures of Memory," "Pleasures of Hope," "Pleasures of Melancholy," "Pleasures of Imagination," are only a few! We may class, too, with them, Addison's essays on the "Pleasures of Imagination" in The Spectator, which, although in prose, glow throughout with the mildest and truest spirit of poetry; and if inferior to Akenside in richness and swelling pomp of words, and in dashing rhetorical force, far excel him in clearness, in chastened beauty, and in those inimitable touches and unconscious felicities of thought and expression which drop down, like ripe apples falling suddenly across your path from a laden bough, and which could only have proceeded from Addison's exquisite genius.

THE PLEASURES OF IMAGINATION.

A POEM, IN THREE BOOKS.

Ἄσεβους μὲν ἔστιν ἀνθρώπου τὰς παρὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ χάριτας ἀτιμάζειν.
EPICT. apud Arrian. II. 23.

THE DESIGN.

THERE are certain powers in human nature which seem to hold a middle place between the organs of bodily sense and the faculties of moral perception: they have been called by a very general name, the Powers of Imagination. Like the external senses, they relate to matter and motion; and, at the same time, give the mind ideas analogous to those of moral approbation and dislike. As they are the inlets of some of the most exquisite pleasures with which we are acquainted, it has naturally happened that men of warm and sensible tempers have sought means to recall the delightful perceptions which they afford, independent of the objects which originally produced them. This gave rise to the imitative or designing arts; some of which, as painting and sculpture, directly copy the external appearances which were admired in nature; others, as music and poetry, bring them back to remembrance by signs universally established and understood.

But these arts, as they grew more correct and deliberate, were, of course, led to extend their imitation beyond the peculiar objects of the imaginative powers; especially poetry, which, making use of language as the instrument by which it imitates, is consequently become an unlimited representative of every species and mode of being. Yet as their intention was only to express the objects of imagination, and as they still abound chiefly in ideas of that class, they, of course, retain their original character; and all the different pleasures which they excite, are termed, in general, Pleasures of Imagination.

The design of the following poem is to give a view of these in the largest acceptance of the term; so that whatever our imagination feels from the agreeable appearances of nature, and all the various entertainment we meet with, either in poetry, painting, music, or any of the elegant arts, might be deducible from one or other of those principles in the constitution of the human mind which are here established and explained.

In executing this general plan, it was necessary first of all to distinguish the imagination from our other faculties; and in the next place to characterise those original forms or properties of being, about which it is conversant, and which are by nature adapted to it, as light is to the eyes, or truth to the understanding. These properties Mr Addison had reduced to the three general classes of greatness, novelty, and beauty; and into these we may analyse every object, however complex, which, properly speaking, is delightful to the imagination. But such an object may also include many other sources of pleasure; and its beauty, or novelty, or grandeur, will make a stronger impression by reason of this concurrence. Besides which, the imitative arts, especially poetry, owe much of their effect to a similar exhibition of properties quite foreign to the imagination, insomuch that in every line of the most applauded poems, we meet with either ideas drawn from the external senses, or truths discovered to the understanding, or illustrations of contrivance and final causes, or, above all the rest, with circumstances proper to awaken and engage the passions. It was, therefore, necessary to enumerate and exemplify these different species of pleasure; especially that from the passions, which, as it is supreme in the noblest work of human genius, so being in some particulars not a little surprising, gave an opportunity to enliven the didactic turn of the poem, by introducing an allegory to account for the appearance.

After these parts of the subject which hold chiefly of admiration, or naturally warm and interest the mind, a pleasure of a very different nature, that which arises from ridicule, came next to be considered. As this is the foundation of the comic manner in all the arts, and has been but very imperfectly treated by moral writers, it was thought proper to give it a particular illustration, and to distinguish the general sources from which the ridicule of characters is derived. Here, too, a change of style became necessary; such a one as might yet be consistent, if possible, with the general taste of composition in the serious parts of the subject: nor is it an easy task to give any tolerable force to images of this kind, without running either into the gigantic expressions of the mock heroic, or the familiar and poetical raillery of professed satire; neither of which would have been proper here.

The materials of all imitation being thus laid open, nothing now remained but to illustrate some particular pleasures which arise either from the relations of different objects one to another, or from the nature of imitation itself. Of the first kind is that various and complicated resemblance existing between several parts of the material and immaterial worlds, which is the foundation of metaphor and wit. As it seems in a great measure to depend on the early association of our ideas, and as this habit of associating is the source of many pleasures and pains in life, and on that account bears a great share in the influence of poetry and the other arts, it is therefore mentioned here, and its effects described. Then follows a general account of the production of these elegant arts, and of the secondary pleasure, as it is called, arising from the resemblance of their imitations to the original appearances of nature. After which, the work concludes with some reflections on the general conduct of the powers of imagination, and on their natural and moral usefulness in life.

Concerning the manner or turn of composition which prevails in this piece, little can be said with propriety by the author. He had two models; that ancient and simple one of the first Grecian poets, as it is refined by Virgil in the Georgics, and the familiar epistolary way of Horace. This latter has several advantages. It admits of a greater variety of style; it more readily engages the generality of readers, as partaking more of the air of conversation; and, especially with the assistance of rhyme, leads to a closer and more concise expression. Add to this the example of the most perfect of modern poets, who has so happily applied this manner to the noblest parts of philosophy, that the public taste is in a great measure formed to it alone. Yet, after all, the subject before us, tending almost constantly to admiration and enthusiasm, seemed rather to demand a more open, pathetic, and figured style. This, too, appeared more natural, as the author's aim was not so much to give formal precepts, or enter into the way of direct argumentation, as, by exhibiting the most engaging prospects of nature, to enlarge and harmonise the imagination, and by that means insensibly dispose the minds of men to a similar taste and habit of thinking in religion, morals, and civil life. 'Tis on this account that he is so careful to point out the benevolent intention of the Author of Nature in every principle of the human constitution here insisted on; and also to unite the moral excellencies of life in the same point of view with the mere external objects of good taste; thus recommending them in common to our natural propensity for admiring what is beautiful and lovely. The same views have also led him to introduce some sentiments which may perhaps be looked upon as not quite direct to the subject; but since they bear an obvious relation to it, the authority of Virgil, the faultless model of didactic poetry, will best support him in this particular. For the sentiments themselves he makes no apology.

BOOK I.

ARGUMENT.

THE subject proposed. Difficulty of treating it poetically. The ideas of the Divine Mind the origin of every quality pleasing to the imagination. The natural variety of constitution in the minds of men; with its final cause. The idea of a fine imagination, and the state of the mind in the enjoyment of those pleasures which it affords. All the primary pleasures of the imagination result from the perception of greatness, or wonderfulness, or beauty in objects. The pleasure from greatness, with its final cause. Pleasure from novelty or wonderfulness, with its final cause. Pleasure from beauty, with its final cause. The connexion of beauty with truth and good, applied to the conduct of life. Invitation to the study of moral philosophy. The different degrees of beauty in different species of objects; colour, shape, natural concretes, vegetables, animals, the mind. The sublime, the fair, the wonderful of the mind. The connexion of the imagination and the moral faculty. Conclusion.

WITH what attractive charms this goodly frame
 Of Nature touches the consenting hearts
 Of mortal men; and what the pleasing stores
 Which beauteous Imitation thence derives

To deck the poet's or the painter's toil, 5
 My verse unfolds. Attend, ye gentle Powers
 Of musical delight! and while I sing
 Your gifts, your honours, dance around my strain.
 Thou, smiling queen of every tuneful breast,
 Indulgent Fancy! from the fruitful banks 10
 Of Avon, whence thy rosy fingers cull
 Fresh flowers and dews to sprinkle on the turf
 Where Shakspeare lies, be present: and with thee
 Let Fiction come, upon her vagrant wings
 Wafting ten thousand colours through the air,
 Which, by the glances of her magic eye,
 She blends and shifts at will, through countless forms,
 Her wild creation. Goddess of the lyre,
 Which rules the accents of the moving sphere,
 Wilt thou, eternal Harmony, descend 20
 And join this festive train? for with thee comes
 The guide, the guardian of their lovely sports,
 Majestic Truth; and where Truth deigns to come,
 Her sister Liberty will not be far.
 Be present all ye Genii, who conduct
 The wandering footsteps of the youthful bard,
 New to your springs and shades: who touch his ear
 With finer sounds: who heighten to his eye
 The bloom of Nature, and before him turn
 The gayest, happiest attitude of things. 30
 Oft have the laws of each poetic strain
 The critic-verse employ'd; yet still unsung
 Lay this prime subject, though importing most
 A poet's name: for fruitless is the attempt,
 By dull obedience and by creeping toil
 Obscure to conquer the severe ascent
 Of high Parnassus. Nature's kindling breath
 Must fire the chosen genius; Nature's hand

Must string his nerves, and imp his eagle-wings, 39
 Impatient of the painful steep, to soar
 High as the summit; there to breathe at large
 Æthereal air, with bards and sages old,
 Immortal sons of praise. These flattering scenes,
 To this neglected labour court my song;
 Yet not unconscious what a doubtful task
 To paint the finest features of the mind,
 And to most subtile and mysterious things
 Give colour, strength, and motion. But the love
 Of Nature and the Muses bids explore,
 Through secret paths erewhile untrod by man, 50
 The fair poetic region, to detect
 Untasted springs, to drink inspiring draughts,
 And shade my temples with unfading flowers
 Cull'd from the laureate vale's profound recess,
 Where never poet gain'd a wreath before.

From Heaven my strains begin: from Heaven descends
 The flame of genius to the human breast,
 And love and beauty, and poetic joy
 And inspiration. Ere the radiant sun
 Sprang from the east, or 'mid the vault of night 60
 The moon suspended her serener lamp;
 Ere mountains, woods, or streams adorn'd the globe,
 Or Wisdom taught the sons of men her lore;
 Then lived the Almighty One: then, deep retired
 In his unfathom'd essence, view'd the forms,
 The forms eternal of created things;
 The radiant sun, the moon's nocturnal lamp,
 The mountains, woods, and streams, the rolling globe,
 And Wisdom's mien celestial. From the first
 Of days, on them his love divine he fix'd, 70
 His admiration: till in time complete
 What he admired and loved, his vital smile

Unfolded into being. Hence the breath 73
 Of life informing each organic frame ;
 Hence the green earth, and wild resounding waves ;
 Hence light and shade alternate, warmth and cold,
 And clear autumnal skies and vernal showers,
 And all the fair variety of things.

But not alike to every mortal eye
 Is this great scene unveil'd. For, since the claims 80
 Of social life to different labours urge
 The active powers of man, with wise intent
 The hand of Nature on peculiar minds
 Imprints a different bias, and to each
 Decrees its province in the common toil.

To some she taught the fabric of the sphere,
 The changeful moon, the circuit of the stars,
 The golden zones of heaven ; to some she gave
 To weigh the moment of eternal things,
 Of time, and space, and fate's unbroken chain, 90
 And will's quick impulse ; others by the hand
 She led o'er vales and mountains, to explore
 What healing virtue swells the tender veins
 Of herbs and flowers ; or what the beams of morn
 Draw forth, distilling from the clefted rind
 In balmy tears. But some, to higher hopes
 Were destined ; some within a finer mould
 She wrought and temper'd with a purer flame.

To these the Sire Omnipotent unfolds
 The world's harmonious volume, there to read 100
 The transcript of Himself. On every part
 They trace the bright impressions of his hand :
 In earth or air, the meadow's purple stores,
 The moon's mild radiance, or the virgin's form
 Blooming with rosy smiles, they see portray'd
 That uncreated beauty, which delights

The Mind Supreme. They also feel her charms, 107
Enamour'd; they partake the eternal joy.

For as old Memnon's image, long renown'd
By fabling Nilus, to the quivering touch 110

Of Titan's ray, with each repulsive string
Consenting, sounded through the warbling air

Unbidden strains, even so did Nature's hand
To certain species of external things,

Attune the finer organs of the mind;
So the glad impulse of congenial powers,

Or of sweet sound, or fair proportion'd form,
The grace of motion, or the bloom of light,

Thrills through Imagination's tender frame,
From nerve to nerve; all naked and alive 120

They catch the spreading rays; till now the soul
At length discloses every tuneful spring,

To that harmonious movement from without Responsive. Then the inexpressive strain

Diffuses its enchantment: Fancy dreams
Of sacred fountains and Elysian groves,

And vales of bliss: the intellectual power
Bends from his awful throne a wondering ear,

And smiles: the passions, gently soothed away,
Sink to divine repose, and love and joy 130

Alone are waking; love and joy, serene
As airs that fan the summer. Oh! attend,

Whoe'er thou art, whom these delights can touch,
Whose candid bosom the refining love

Of Nature warms, oh! listen to my song;
And I will guide thee to her favourite walks,

And teach thy solitude her voice to hear,
And point her loveliest features to thy view.

Know then, whate'er of Nature's pregnant stores,
Whate'er of mimic Art's reflected forms 140

With love and admiration thus inflame 141
 The powers of Fancy, her delighted sons
 To three illustrious orders have referr'd;
 Three sister graces, whom the painter's hand,
 The poet's tongue confesses—the Sublime,
 The Wonderful, the Fair. I see them dawn!
 I see the radiant visions, where they rise,
 More lovely than when Lucifer displays
 His beaming forehead through the gates of morn,
 To lead the train of Phœbus and the spring. 150
 Say, why was man ^A so eminently raised
 Amid the vast Creation; why ordain'd
 Through life and death to dart his piercing eye,
 With thoughts beyond the limit of his frame;
 But that the Omnipotent might send him forth
 In sight of mortal and immortal powers,
 As on a boundless theatre, to run
 The great career of justice; to exalt
 His generous aim to all diviner deeds;
 To chase each partial purpose from his breast; 160
 And through the mists of passion and of sense,
 And through the tossing tide of chance and pain,
 To hold his course unfaltering, while the voice
 Of truth and virtue, up the steep ascent
 Of nature, calls him to his high reward,
 The applauding smile of Heaven? Else wherefore burns
 In mortal bosoms this unquenched hope,
 That breathes from day to day sublimer things,
 And mocks possession? Wherefore darts the mind,
 With such resistless ardour to embrace 170
 Majestic forms; impatient to be free,
 Spurning the gross control of wilful might;
 Proud of the strong contention of her toils;
 Proud to be daring? Who but rather turns

To heaven's broad fire his unconstrained view, 175
Than to the glimmering of a waxen flame?
Who that, from Alpine heights, his labouring eye
Shoots round the wide horizon, to survey
Nilus or Ganges rolling his bright wave Through mountains, plains, through empires black with shade, 180
And continents of sand, will turn his gaze
To mark the windings of a scanty rill
That murmurs at his feet? The high-born soul
Disdains to rest her heaven-aspiring wing
Beneath its native quarry. Tired of earth
And this diurnal scene, she springs aloft
Through fields of air; pursues the flying storm;
Rides on the vollied lightning through the heavens;
Or, yoked with whirlwinds and the northern blast,
Sweeps the long tract of day. Then high she soars 190
The blue profound, and hovering round the sun
Beholds him pouring the redundant stream
Of light; beholds his unrelenting sway
Bend the reluctant planets to absolve
The fated rounds of Time. Thence far effused
She darts her swiftness up the long career
Of devious comets; through its burning signs
Exulting measures the perennial wheel
Of Nature, and looks back on all the stars,
Whose blended light, as with a milky zone, 200
Invests the orient. Now amazed she views
The empyreal waste,^B where happy spirits hold,
Beyond this concave heaven, their calm abode;
And fields of radiance, whose unfading light^C
Has travell'd the profound six thousand years,
Nor yet arrives in sight of mortal things.
Even on the barriers of the world untired

She meditates the eternal depth below ; 208
 Till, half recoiling, down the headlong steep
 She plunges; soon o'erwhelm'd and swallow'd up
 In that immense of being. There her hopes
 Rest at the fated goal. For from the birth
 Of mortal man, the Sovereign Maker said,
 That not in humble nor in brief delight,
 Not in the fading echoes of renown,
 Power's purple robes, nor pleasure's flowery lap,
 The soul should find enjoyment: but from these Turning disdainful to an equal good,
 Through all the ascent of things enlarge her view,
 Till every bound at length should disappear, 220
 And infinite perfection close the scene.

Call now to mind what high capacious powers
 Lie folded up in man; how far beyond
 The praise of mortals, may the eternal growth
 Of Nature to perfection half divine,
 Expand the blooming soul! What pity then
 Should sloth's unkindly fogs depress to earth
 Her tender blossom; choke the streams of life,
 And blast her spring! Far otherwise design'd
 Almighty Wisdom; Nature's happy cares 230
 The obedient heart far otherwise incline.
 Witness the sprightly joy when aught unknown
 Strikes the quick sense, and wakes each active power
 To brisker measures: witness the neglect
 Of all familiar prospects,^D though beheld
 With transport once; the fond attentive gaze
 Of young astonishment; the sober zeal
 Of age, commenting on prodigious things.
 For such the bounteous providence of Heaven,
 In every breast implanting this desire 240
 Of objects new and strange,^E to urge us on

With unremitted labour to pursue 242
 Those sacred stores that wait the ripening soul,
 In Truth's exhaustless bosom. What need words
 To paint its power? For this the daring youth
 Breaks from his weeping mother's anxious arms,
 In foreign climes to rove; the pensive sage,
 Heedless of sleep, or midnight's harmful damp,
 Hangs o'er the sickly taper; and untired
 The virgin follows, with enchanted step, 250
 The mazes of some wild and wondrous tale,
 From morn to eve; unmindful of her form,
 Unmindful of the happy dress that stole
 The wishes of the youth, when every maid
 With envy pined. Hence, finally, by night
 The village matron, round the blazing hearth,
 Suspends the infant audience with her tales,
 Breathing astonishment! of witching rhymes,
 And evil spirits; of the death-bed call
 Of him who robb'd the widow, and devour'd 260
 The orphan's portion; of unquiet souls
 Risen from the grave to ease the heavy guilt
 Of deeds in life conceal'd; of shapes that walk
 At dead of night, and clank their chains, and wave
 The torch of hell around the murderer's bed.
 At every solemn pause the crowd recoil,
 Gazing each other speechless, and congeal'd
 With shivering sighs: till eager for the event,
 Around the beldame all erect they hang,
 Each trembling heart with grateful terrors quell'd. 270
 But lo! disclosed in all her smiling pomp,
 Where Beauty onward moving claims the verse
 Her charms inspire: the freely-flowing verse
 In thy immortal praise, O form divine,
 Smooths her mellifluent stream. Thee, Beauty, thee

The regal dome, and thy enlivening ray 276
 The mossy roofs adore : thou, better sun !
 For ever beamest on the enchanted heart
 Love, and harmonious wonder, and delight
 Poetic. Brightest progeny of Heaven ! 280
 How shall I trace thy features ? where select
 The roseate hues to emulate thy bloom ?
 Haste then, my song, through Nature's wide expanse,
 Haste then, and gather all her comeliest wealth,
 Whate'er bright spoils the florid earth contains,
 Whate'er the waters, or the liquid air,
 To deck thy lovely labour. Wilt thou fly
 With laughing Autumn to the Atlantic isles,
 And range with him the Hesperian field, and see
 Where'er his fingers touch the fruitful grove, 290
 The branches shoot with gold ; where'er his step
 Marks the glad soil, the tender clusters grow
 With purple ripeness, and invest each hill
 As with the blushes of an evening sky ?
 Or wilt thou rather stoop thy vagrant plume,
 Where gliding through his daughter's honour'd shades,
 The smooth Penéus from his glassy flood
 Reflects purpureal Tempe's pleasant scene ?
 Fair Tempe ! haunt beloved of sylvan Powers,
 Of Nymphs and Fauns ; where in the golden age 300
 They play'd in secret on the shady brink
 With ancient Pan : while round their choral steps
 Young Hours and genial Gales with constant hand
 Shower'd blossoms, odours, shower'd ambrosial dews,
 And spring's Elysian bloom. Her flowery store
 To thee nor Tempe shall refuse ; nor watch
 Of winged Hydra guard Hesperian fruits
 From thy free spoil. Oh, bear then, unproved,
 Thy smiling treasures to the green recess

Where young Dione stays. With sweetest airs 310
Entice her forth to lend her angel form
For Beauty's honour'd image. Hither turn
Thy graceful footsteps; hither, gentle maid,
Incline thy polish'd forehead: let thy eyes
Effuse the mildness of their azure dawn;
And may the fanning breezes waft aside
Thy radiant locks: disclosing, as it bends
With airy softness from the marble neck,
The cheek fair-blooming, and the rosy lip,
Where winning smiles and pleasures sweet as love, 320
With sanctity and wisdom, tempering blend
Their soft allurements. Then the pleasing force
Of Nature, and her kind parental care
Worthier I'd sing: then all the enamour'd youth,
With each admiring virgin, to my lyre
Should throng attentive, while I point on high
Where Beauty's living image, like the Morn
That wakes in Zephyr's arms the blushing May,
Moves onward; or as Venus, when she stood
Effulgent on the pearly car, and smiled, 330
Fresh from the deep, and conscious of her form,
To see the Tritons tune their vocal shells,
And each cerulean sister of the flood
With loud acclaim attend her o'er the waves,
To seek the Idalian bower. Ye smiling band
Of youths and virgins, who through all the maze
Of young desire with rival steps pursue
This charm of Beauty, if the pleasing toil
Can yield a moment's respite, hither turn
Your favourable ear, and trust my words. 340
I do not mean to wake the gloomy form
Of Superstition dress'd in Wisdom's garb,
To damp your tender hopes; I do not mean

To bid the jealous thunderer fire the heavens, 344
 Or shapes infernal rend the groaning earth
 To fright you from your joys : my cheerful song
 With better omens calls you to the field,
 Pleased with your generous ardour in the chase,
 And warm like you. Then tell me, for ye know,
 Does Beauty ever deign to dwell where health 350
 And active use are strangers ? Is her charm
 Confess'd in aught, whose most peculiar ends
 Are lame and fruitless ? Or did Nature mean
 This pleasing call the herald of a lie,
 To hide the shame of discord and disease,
 And catch with fair hypocrisy the heart
 Of idle faith ? Oh, no ! with better cares
 The indulgent mother, conscious how infirm
 Her offspring tread the paths of good and ill,
 By this illustrious image, in each kind 360
 Still most illustrious where the object holds
 Its native powers most perfect, she by this Illumes the headstrong impulse of desire,
 And sanctifies his choice. The generous glebe
 Whose bosom smiles with verdure, the clear tract
 Of streams delicious to the thirsty soul,
 The bloom of nectar'd fruitage ripe to sense,
 And every charm of animated things,
 Are only pledges of a state sincere,
 The integrity and order of their frame, 370
 When all is well within, and every end
 Accomplish'd. Thus was Beauty sent from heaven,
 The lovely mistress of Truth and Good
 In this dark world : for Truth and Good are one,
 And Beauty dwells in them,^F and they in her,
 With like participation. Wherefore then,
 O sons of earth ! would ye dissolve the tie ?

Oh! wherefore, with a rash impetuous aim, 378
Seek ye those flowery joys with which the hand
Of lavish Fancy paints each flattering scene
Where Beauty seems to dwell, nor once inquire
Where is the sanction of eternal Truth,
Or where the seal of undeceitful Good,
To save your search from folly! Wanting these,
Lo! Beauty withers in your void embrace,
And with the glittering of an idiot's toy
Did Fancy mock your vows. Nor let the gleam
Of youthful hope that shines upon your hearts,
Be chill'd or clouded at this awful task,
To learn the lore of undeceitful Good, 390
And Truth eternal. Though the poisonous charms
Of baleful Superstition guide the feet
Of servile numbers, through a dreary way
To their abode, through deserts, thorns, and mire;
And leave the wretched pilgrim all forlorn
To muse at last, amid the ghostly gloom
Of graves, and hoary vaults, and cloister'd cells;
To walk with spectres through the midnight shade,
And to the screaming owl's accursed song
Attune the dreadful workings of his heart; 400
Yet be not ye dismay'd. A gentler star
Your lovely search illumines. From the grove
Where Wisdom talk'd with her Athenian sons,
Could my ambitious hand entwine a wreath
Of Plato's olive with the Mantuan bay,
Then should my powerful verse at once dispel
Those monkish horrors: then in light divine
Disclose the Elysian prospect, where the steps
Of those whom Nature charms, through blooming walks,
Through fragrant mountains and poetic streams, 410
Amid the train of sages, heroes, bards,

Led by their winged Genius, and the choir 412
 Of laurell'd science and harmonious art,
 Proceed exulting to the eternal shrine,
 Where Truth conspicuous with her sister-twins,
 The undivided partners of her sway,
 With Good and Beauty reigns. Oh, let not us,
 Lull'd by luxurious Pleasure's languid strain,
 Or crouching to the frowns of bigot rage,
 Oh, let us not a moment pause to join 420
 That godlike band. And if the gracious Power
 Who first awaken'd my untutor'd song,
 Will to my invocation breathe anew
 The tuneful spirit; then through all our paths,
 Ne'er shall the sound of this devoted lyre
 Be wanting; whether on the rosy mead,
 When summer smiles, to warn the melting heart
 Of luxury's allurements; whether firm
 Against the torrent and the stubborn hill
 To urge bold Virtue's unremitted nerve, 430
 And wake the strong divinity of soul
 That conquers chance and fate; or whether struck
 For sounds of triumph, to proclaim her toils
 Upon the lofty summit, round her brow
 To twine the wreath of incorruptive praise;
 To trace her hallow'd light through future worlds,
 And bless Heaven's image in the heart of man.
 Thus with a faithful aim have we presumed,
 Adventurous, to delineate Nature's form;
 Whether in vast, majestic pomp array'd, 440
 Or dress'd for pleasing wonder, or serene
 In Beauty's rosy smile. It now remains,
 Through various being's fair proportion'd scale,
 To trace the rising lustre of her charms,
 From their first twilight, shining forth at length

To full meridian splendour. Of degree 446
 The least and lowliest, in the effusive warmth
 Of colours mingling with a random blaze,
 Doth Beauty dwell. Then higher in the line
 And variation of determined shape, 450
 Where Truth's eternal measures mark the bound
 Of circle, cube, or sphere. The third ascent
 Unites this varied symmetry of parts
 With colour's bland allurements; as the pearl
 Shines in the concave of its azure bed,
 And painted shells indent their speckled wreath.
 Then more attractive rise the blooming forms
 Through which the breath of Nature has infused
 Her genial power to draw with pregnant veins
 Nutritious moisture from the bounteous earth, 460
 In fruit and seed prolific: thus the flowers
 Their purple honours with the Spring resume;
 And such the stately tree which Autumn bends
 With blushing treasures. But more lovely still Is Nature's charm, where to the full consent
 Of complicated members, to the bloom
 Of colour, and the vital change of growth,
 Life's holy flame and piercing sense are given,
 And active motion speaks the temper'd soul:
 So moves the bird of Juno; so the steed 470
 With rival ardour beats the dusty plain,
 And faithful dogs with eager airs of joy
 Salute their fellows. Thus doth Beauty dwell
 There most conspicuous, even in outward shape,
 Where dawns the high expression of a mind:
 By steps conducting our enraptured search
 To that eternal origin, whose power,
 Through all the unbounded symmetry of things,
 Like rays effulging from the parent sun,

This endless mixture of her charms diffused. 480
 Mind, mind alone, (bear witness, earth and heaven!)
 The living fountains in itself contains
 Of beauteous and sublime: here hand in hand,
 Sit paramount the Graces; here enthroned,
 Celestial Venus, with divinest airs,
 Invites the soul to never-fading joy.
 Look then abroad through nature, to the range
 Of planets, suns, and adamantine spheres
 Wheeling unshaken through the void immense;
 And speak, O man! does this capacious scene 490
 With half that kindling majesty dilate
 Thy strong conception, as when Brutus rose ^G
 Refulgent from the stroke of Cæsar's fate,
 Amid the crowd of patriots; and his arm
 Aloft extending, like eternal Jove
 When guilt brings down the thunder, call'd aloud
 On Tully's name, and shook his crimson steel,
 And bade the father of his country, hail!
 For lo! the tyrant prostrate on the dust,
 And Rome again is free! Is aught so fair 500
 In all the dewy landscapes of the Spring,
 In the bright eye of Hesper, or the morn,
 In Nature's fairest forms, is aught so fair
 As virtuous friendship? as the candid blush
 Of him who strives with fortune to be just?
 The graceful tear that streams for others' woes?
 Or the mild majesty of private life,
 Where Peace with ever blooming olive crowns
 The gate; where Honour's liberal hands effuse
 Unenvied treasures, and the snowy wings 510
 Of Innocence and Love protect the scene?
 Once more search, undismay'd, the dark profound
 Where Nature works in secret; view the beds

Of mineral treasure, and the eternal vault 514
That bounds the hoary ocean; trace the forms
Of atoms moving with incessant change
Their elemental round; behold the seeds
Of being, and the energy of life
Kindling the mass with ever-active flame;
Then to the secrets of the working mind 520
Attentive turn; from dim oblivion call
Her fleet, ideal band; and bid them, go!
Break through time's barrier, and o'ertake the hour
That saw the heavens created: then declare
If aught were found in those external scenes
To move thy wonder now. For what are all
The forms which brute, unconscious matter wears,
Greatness of bulk, or symmetry of parts?
Not reaching to the heart, soon feeble grows
The superficial impulse; dull their charms, 530
And satiate soon, and pall the languid eye.
Not so the moral species, nor the powers
Of genius and design; the ambitious mind
There sees herself: by these congenial forms
Touch'd and awaken'd, with intenser act
She bends each nerve, and meditates well pleased
Her features in the mirror. For, of all
The inhabitants of earth, to man alone
Creative Wisdom gave to lift his eye
To Truth's eternal measures; thence to frame 540
The sacred laws of action and of will,
Discerning justice from unequal deeds,
And temperance from folly. But beyond
This energy of Truth, whose dictates bind
Assenting reason, the benignant Sire,
To deck the honour'd paths of just and good,
Has added bright Imagination's rays:

Where Virtue, rising from the awful depth
 Of Truth's mysterious bosom,^H doth forsake 548
 The unadorn'd condition of her birth;
 And dress'd by Fancy in ten thousand hues,
 Assumes a various feature, to attract,
 With charms responsive to each gazer's eye,
 The hearts of men. Amid his rural walk,
 The ingenuous youth, whom solitude inspires
 With purest wishes, from the pensive shade
 Beholds her moving, like a virgin muse
 That wakes her lyre to some indulgent theme
 Of harmony and wonder: while among
 The herd of servile minds, her strenuous form 560
 Indignant flashes on the patriot's eye,
 And through the rolls of memory appeals
 To ancient honour; or in act serene,
 Yet watchful, raises the majestic sword
 Of public Power, from dark Ambition's reach
 To guard the sacred volume of the laws.
 Genius of ancient Greece! whose faithful steps
 Well pleased I follow through the sacred paths
 Of Nature and of Science; nurse divine
 Of all heroic deeds and fair desires! 570
 Oh! let the breath of thy extended praise
 Inspire my kindling bosom to the height
 Of this untempted theme. Nor be my thoughts
 Presumptuous counted, if, amid the calm
 That soothes this vernal evening into smiles,
 I steal impatient from the sordid haunts
 Of strife and low ambition, to attend
 Thy sacred presence in the sylvan shade,
 By their malignant footsteps ne'er profaned.
 Descend, propitious, to my favour'd eye! 580
 Such in thy mien, thy warm, exalted air,

As when the Persian tyrant, foil'd and stung 582
With shame and desperation, gnash'd his teeth
To see thee rend the pageants of his throne ;
And at the lightning of thy lifted spear
Crouch'd like a slave. Bring all thy martial spoils,
Thy palms, thy laurels, thy triumphal songs,
Thy smiling band of art, thy godlike sires
Of civil wisdom, thy heroic youth
Warm from the schools of glory. Guide my way 590
Through fair Lycéum's^I walk, the green retreats
Of Academus,^K and the thymy vale,
Where oft enchanted with Socratic sounds,
Ilissus^L pure devolved his tuneful stream
In gentler murmurs. From the blooming store
Of these auspicious fields, may I unblamed
Transplant some living blossoms to adorn
My native clime : while far above the flight
Of Fancy's plume aspiring, I unlock
The springs of ancient wisdom! while I join 600
Thy name, thrice honour'd! with the immortal praise
Of Nature; while to my compatriot youth
I point the high example of thy sons,
And tune to Attic themes the British lyre.

B O O K II.

ARGUMENT.

THE separation of the works of Imagination from Philosophy, the cause of their abuse among the moderns. Prospect of their reunion under the influence of public Liberty. Enumeration of accidental pleasures, which increase the effect of objects delightful to the Imagination. The pleasures of sense. Particular circumstances of the mind. Discovery of truth. Perception of contrivance and design. Emotion of the passions. All the natural passions partake of a pleasing sensation; with the final cause of this constitution illustrated by an allegorical vision, and exemplified in sorrow, pity, terror, and indignation.

WHEN shall the laurel and the vocal string
 Resume their honours? When shall we behold
 The tuneful tongue, the Promethéan hand
 Aspire to ancient praise? Alas! how faint,
 How slow the dawn of Beauty and of Truth
 Breaks the reluctant shades of Gothic night
 Which yet involves the nations! Long they groan'd
 Beneath the furies of rapacious force;
 Oft as the gloomy north, with iron swarms
 Tempestuous pouring from her frozen caves, 10
 Blasted the Italian shore, and swept the works
 Of Liberty and Wisdom down the gulf
 Of all-devouring night. As long immured
 In noontide darkness, by the glimmering lamp,
 Each Muse and each fair Science pined away
 The sordid hours: while foul, barbarian hands
 Their mysteries profaned, unstrung the lyre,
 And chain'd the soaring pinion down to earth.
 At last the Muses rose,^A and spurn'd their bonds,
 And, wildly warbling, scatter'd as they flew, 20
 Their blooming wreaths from fair Valclusa's^B bowers
 To Arno's^C myrtle border and the shore

Of soft Parthenopé.^D But still the rage 23
 Of dire ambition^E and gigantic power,
 From public aims and from the busy walk
 Of civil commerce, drove the bolder train
 Of penetrating Science to the cells,
 Where studious Ease consumes the silent hour
 In shadowy searches and unfruitful care.
 Thus from their guardians torn, the tender arts^F 30
 Of mimic fancy and harmonious joy,
 To priestly domination and the lust
 Of lawless courts, their amiable toil
 For three inglorious ages have resign'd,
 In vain reluctant: and Torquato's tongue
 Was tuned for slavish pæans at the throne
 Of tinsel pomp: and Raphael's magic hand
 Effused its fair creation to enchant
 The fond adoring herd in Latian fanes
 To blind belief; while on their prostrate necks 40
 The sable tyrant plants his heel secure.
 But now, behold! the radiant era dawns,
 When freedom's ample fabric, fix'd at length
 For endless years on Albion's happy shore
 In full proportion, once more shall extend
 To all the kindred powers of social bliss
 A common mansion, a parental roof.
 There shall the Virtues, there shall Wisdom's train,
 Their long-lost friends rejoining, as of old,
 Embrace the smiling family of Arts, 50
 The Muses and the Graces. Then no more
 Shall Vice, distracting their delicious gifts
 To aims abhorr'd, with high distaste and scorn
 Turn from their charms the philosophic eye,
 The patriot bosom; then no more the paths
 Of public care or intellectual toil,

Alone by footsteps haughty and severe 57
 In gloomy state be trod: the harmonious Muse
 And her persuasive sisters then shall plant
 Their sheltering laurels o'er the bleak ascent,
 And scatter flowers along the rugged way.
 Arm'd with the lyre, already have we dared
 To pierce divine Philosophy's retreats,
 And teach the Muse her lore; already strove
 Their long-divided honours to unite,
 While tempering this deep argument we sang
 Of Truth and Beauty. Now the same glad task
 Impends; now urging our ambitious toil,
 We hasten to recount the various springs
 Of adventitious pleasure, which adjoin 70
 Their grateful influence to the prime effect
 Of objects grand or beauteous, and enlarge
 The complicated joy. The sweets of sense,
 Do they not oft with kind accession flow,
 To raise harmonious Fancy's native charm?
 So while we taste the fragrance of the rose,
 Glows not her blush the fairer? While we view
 Amid the noontide walk a limpid rill
 Gush through the trickling herbage, to the thirst
 Of summer yielding the delicious draught 80
 Of cool refreshment, o'er the mossy brink
 Shines not the surface clearer, and the waves
 With sweeter music murmur as they flow?
 Nor this alone; the various lot of life
 Oft from external circumstance assumes
 A moment's disposition to rejoice
 In those delights which, at a different hour,
 Would pass unheeded. Fair the face of Spring,
 When rural songs and odours wake the morn,
 To every eye; but how much more to his 90

Round whom the bed of sickness long diffused 91
 Its melancholy gloom! how doubly fair,
 When first with fresh-born vigour he inhales
 The balmy breeze, and feels the blessed sun
 Warm at his bosom, from the springs of life
 Chasing oppressive damps and languid pain!
 Or shall I mention, where celestial Truth
 Her awful light discloses, to bestow
 A more majestic pomp on Beauty's frame?
 For man loves knowledge, and the beams of Truth 100
 More welcome touch his understanding's eye,
 Than all the blandishments of sound his ear,
 Than all of taste his tongue. Nor ever yet
 The melting rainbow's vernal-tinctured hues
 To me have shown so pleasing, as when first
 The hand of Science pointed out the path
 In which the sunbeams, gleaming from the west,
 Fall on the watery cloud, whose darksome veil
 Involves the orient; and that trickling shower
 Piercing through every crystalline convex 110
 Of clustering dewdrops to their flight opposed,
 Recoil at length where concave all behind
 The internal surface of each glassy orb
 Repels their forward passage into air;
 That thence direct they seek the radiant goal
 From which their course began; and, as they strike
 In different lines the gazer's obvious eye,
 Assume a different lustre, through the brede
 Of colours changing from the splendid rose
 To the pale violet's dejected hue. 120
 Or shall we touch that kind access of joy,
 That springs to each fair object, while we trace,
 Through all its fabric, Wisdom's artful aim,
 Disposing every part, and gaining still,

By means proportion'd, her benignant end ? 125
 Speak ye, the pure delight, whose favour'd steps
 The lamp of Science through the jealous maze
 Of Nature guides, when haply you reveal
 Her secret honours : whether in the sky,
 The beauteous laws of light, the central powers 130
 That wheel the pensile planets round the year ;
 Whether in wonders of the rolling deep,
 Or the rich fruits of all-sustaining earth,
 Or fine-adjusted springs of life and sense,
 Ye scan the counsels of their Author's hand.

What, when to raise the meditated scene,
 The flame of passion, through the struggling soul
 Deep-kindled, shows across that sudden blaze
 The object of its rapture, vast of size,
 With fiercer colours and a night of shade ? 140
 What, like a storm from their capacious bed
 The sounding seas o'erwhelming, when the might
 Of these eruptions, working from the depth
 Of man's strong apprehension, shakes his frame
 Even to the base ; from every naked sense
 Of pain or pleasure, dissipating all
 Opinion's feeble coverings, and the veil
 Spun from the cobweb fashion of the times
 To hide the feeling heart ? Then Nature speaks
 Her genuine language, and the words of men, 150
 Big with the very motion of their souls,
 Declare with what accumulated force
 The impetuous nerve of passion urges on
 The native weight and energy of things.

Yet more : her honours where nor Beauty claims,
 Nor shows of good the thirsty sense allure,
 From passion's power alone ^G our nature holds
 Essential pleasure. Passion's fierce illapse

Rouses the mind's whole fabric; with supplies 159
 Of daily impulse keeps the elastic powers
 Intensely poised, and polishes anew
 By that collision all the fine machine:
 Else rust would rise, and foulness, by degrees
 Encumbering, choke at last what heaven design'd
 For ceaseless motion and a round of toil.—
 But say, does every passion thus to man
 Administer delight? That name indeed Becomes the rosy breath of love; becomes
 The radiant smiles of joy, the applauding hand
 Of admiration: but the bitter shower 170
 That sorrow sheds upon a brother's grave;
 But the dumb palsy of nocturnal fear,
 Or those consuming fires that gnaw the heart
 Of panting indignation, find we there
 To move delight?—Then listen while my tongue
 The unalter'd will of Heaven with faithful awe Reveals; what old Harmodius wont to teach
 My early age; Harmodius, who had weigh'd
 Within his learned mind whate'er the schools
 Of Wisdom, or thy lonely-whispering voice, 180
 O faithful Nature! dictate of the laws
 Which govern and support this mighty frame
 Of universal being. Oft the hours
 From morn to eve have stolen unmark'd away,
 While mute attention hung upon his lips,
 As thus the sage his awful tale began:—
 'Twas in the windings of an ancient wood,
 When spotless youth with solitude resigns
 To sweet philosophy the studious day,
 What time pale Autumn shades the silent eve, 190
 Musing I roved. Of good and evil much,
 And much of mortal man my thought revolved;

When starting full on fancy's gushing eye 193
 The mournful image of Parthenia's fate,
 That hour, O long beloved and long deplored!
 When blooming youth, nor gentlest wisdom's arts,
 Nor Hymen's honours gather'd for thy brow,
 Nor all thy lover's, all thy father's tears
 Avail'd to snatch thee from the cruel grave;
 Thy agonising looks, thy last farewell 200
 Struck to the inmost feeling of my soul
 As with the hand of Death. At once the shade
 More horrid nodded o'er me, and the winds
 With hoarser murmuring shook the branches. Dark
 As midnight storms, the scene of human things
 Appear'd before me; deserts, burning sands,
 Where the parch'd adder dies; the frozen south,
 And desolation blasting all the west
 With rapine and with murder: tyrant power
 Here sits enthroned with blood; the baleful charms 210
 Of superstition there infect the skies,
 And turn the sun to horror. Gracious Heaven!
 What is the life of man? Or cannot these,
 Not these portents thy awful will suffice,
 That, propagated thus beyond their scope,
 They rise to act their cruelties anew
 In my afflicted bosom, thus decreed
 The universal sensitive of pain,
 The wretched heir of evils not its own?'
 Thus I impatient: when, at once effused, 220
 A flashing torrent of celestial day
 Burst through the shadowy void. With slow descent
 A purple cloud came floating through the sky,
 And, poised at length within the circling trees,
 Hung obvious to my view; till opening wide
 Its lucid orb, a more than human form

Emerging lean'd majestic o'er my head, 227
 And instant thunder shook the conscious grove.
 Then melted into air the liquid cloud,
 And all the shining vision stood reveal'd.
 A wreath of palm his ample forehead bound,
 And o'er his shoulder, mantling to his knee,
 Flow'd the transparent robe, around his waist
 Collected with a radiant zone of gold
 Æthereal: there in mystic signs engraved,
 I read his office high and sacred name,
 Genius of human kind! Appall'd I gazed
 The godlike presence; for athwart his brow
 Displeasure, temper'd with a mild concern,
 Look'd down reluctant on me, and his words 240
 Like distant thunders broke the murmuring air:
 ' Vain are thy thoughts, O child of mortal birth!
 And impotent thy tongue. Is thy short span
 Capacious of this universal frame?—
 Thy wisdom all-sufficient? Thou, alas!
 Dost thou aspire to judge between the Lord
 Of Nature and his works—to lift thy voice
 Against the sovereign order he decreed,
 All good and lovely—to blaspheme the bands 250
 Of tenderness innate and social love,
 Holiest of things! by which the general orb
 Of being, as by adamantine links,
 Was drawn to perfect union, and sustain'd
 From everlasting? Hast thou felt the pangs
 Of softening sorrow, of indignant zeal,
 So grievous to the soul, as thence to wish
 The ties of Nature broken from thy frame,
 That so thy selfish, unrelenting heart
 Might cease to mourn its lot, no longer then
 The wretched heir of evils not its own? 260

O fair benevolence of generous minds ! 261
 O man by Nature form'd for all mankind !'
 He spoke ; abash'd and silent I remain'd,
 As conscious of my tongue's offence, and awed
 Before his presence, though my secret soul
 Disdain'd the imputation. On the ground
 I fix'd my eyes, till from his airy couch
 He stoop'd sublime, and touching with his hand
 My dazzling forehead, ' Raise thy sight,' he cried,
 ' And let thy sense convince thy erring tongue.' 270
 I look'd, and lo ! the former scene was changed ;
 For verdant alleys and surrounding trees,
 A solitary prospect, wide and wild,
 Rush'd on my senses. 'Twas a horrid pile
 Of hills with many a shaggy forest mix'd,
 With many a sable cliff and glittering stream.
 Aloft, recumbent o'er the hanging ridge,
 The brown woods waved ; while ever-trickling springs
 Wash'd from the naked roots of oak and pine
 The crumbling soil ; and still at every fall 280
 Down the steep windings of the channel'd rock,
 Remurmuring rush'd the congregated floods
 With hoarser inundation ; till at last
 They reach'd a grassy plain, which from the skirts
 Of that high desert spread her verdant lap,
 And drank the gushing moisture, where confined
 In one smooth current, o'er the liliated vale
 Clearer than glass it flow'd. Autumnal spoils
 Luxuriant spreading to the rays of morn,
 Blush'd o'er the cliffs, whose half-encircling mound 290
 As in a sylvan theatre enclosed
 That flowery level. On the river's brink
 I spied a fair pavilion, which diffused
 Its floating umbrage 'mid the silver shade

Of osiers. Now the western sun reveal'd 295
Between two parting cliffs his golden orb,
And pour'd across the shadow of the hills,
On rocks and floods, a yellow stream of light
That cheer'd the solemn scene. My listening powers
Were awed, and every thought in silence hung, 300
And wondering expectation. Then the voice
Of that celestial power, the mystic show
Declaring, thus my deep attention call'd:—
‘ Inhabitant of earth,^H to whom is given
The gracious ways of Providence to learn,
Receive my sayings with a steadfast ear—
Know then, the Sovereign Spirit of the world,
Though, self-collected from eternal time,
Within his own deep essence he beheld
The bounds of true felicity complete, 310
Yet by immense benignity inclined
To spread around him that primeval joy
Which fill'd himself, he raised his plastic arm,
And sounded through the hollow depths of space
The strong, creative mandate. Straight arose
These heavenly orbs, the glad abodes of life,
Effusive kindled by his breath divine
Through endless forms of being. Each inhaled
From him its portion of the vital flame,
In measure such, that, from the wide complex 320
Of coexistent orders, one might rise,
One order,^I all-involving and entire.
He too, beholding in the sacred light
Of his essential reason, all the shapes
Of swift contingence, all successive ties
Of action propagated through the sum
Of possible existence, he at once,

Down the long series of eventful time, 328
 So fix'd the dates of being, so disposed,
 To every living soul of every kind
 The field of motion and the hour of rest,
 That all conspired to his supreme design,
 To universal good: with full accord
 Answering the mighty model he had chose,
 The best and fairest^K of unnumber'd worlds
 That lay from everlasting in the store
 Of his divine conceptions. Nor content,
 By one exertion of creative power
 His goodness to reveal; through every age,
 Through every moment up the tract of time, 340
 His parent hand with ever new increase
 Of happiness and virtue has adorn'd
 The vast harmonious frame: his parent hand,
 From the mute shell-fish gasping on the shore,
 To men, to angels, to celestial minds,
 For ever leads the generations on
 To higher scenes of being; while, supplied
 From day to day with his enlivening breath,
 Inferior orders in succession rise
 To fill the void below. As flame ascends,^L 350
 As bodies to their proper centre move,
 As the poised ocean to the attracting moon
 Obedient swells, and every headlong stream
 Devolves its winding waters to the main;
 So all things which have life aspire to God,
 The sun of being, boundless, unimpair'd,
 Centre of souls! Nor does the faithful voice
 Of Nature cease to prompt their eager steps
 Aright; nor is the care of Heaven withheld
 From granting to the task proportion'd aid; 360
 That in their stations all may persevere

To climb the ascent of being, and approach 362
For ever nearer to the life divine.—

‘That rocky pile thou seest, that verdant lawn
Fresh-water’d from the mountains. Let the scene
Paint in thy fancy the primeval seat
Of man, and where the Will Supreme ordain’d
His mansion, that pavilion fair-diffused
Along the shady brink; in this recess
To wear the appointed season of his youth, 370

Till riper hours should open to his toil
The high communion of superior minds,
Of consecrated heroes and of gods.
Nor did the Sire Omnipotent forget
His tender bloom to cherish; nor withheld
Celestial footsteps from his green abode.
Oft from the radiant honours of his throne,
He sent whom most he loved, the sovereign fair,
The effluence of his glory, whom he placed
Before his eyes for ever to behold; 380

The goddess from whose inspiration flows
The toil of patriots, the delight of friends;
Without whose work divine, in heaven or earth,
Nought lovely, nought propitious, comes to pass,
Nor hope, nor praise, nor honour. Her the Sire
Gave it in charge to rear the blooming mind,
The folded powers to open, to direct
The growth luxuriant of his young desires,
And from the laws of this majestic world
To teach him what was good. As thus the nymph 390
Her daily care attended, by her side
With constant steps her gay companion stay’d,
The fair Euphrosyné, the gentle queen
Of smiles, and graceful gladness, and delights
That cheer alike the hearts of mortal men

And powers immortal. See the shining pair ! 396
 Behold, where from his dwelling now disclosed
 They quit their youthful charge and seek the skies.'
 I look'd, and on the flowery turf there stood
 Between two radiant forms a smiling youth 400
 Whose tender cheeks display'd the vernal flower
 Of beauty: sweetest innocence illumed
 His bashful eyes, and on his polish'd brow
 Sate young simplicity. With fond regard
 He view'd the associates, as their steps they moved;
 The younger chief his ardent eyes detain'd,
 With mild regret invoking her return.
 Bright as the star of evening she appear'd
 Amid the dusky scene. Eternal youth
 O'er all her form its glowing honours breathed; 410
 And smiles eternal from her candid eyes
 Flow'd, like the dewy lustre of the morn
 Effusive trembling on the placid waves.
 The spring of heaven had shed its blushing spoils
 To bind her sable tresses: full diffused
 Her yellow mantle floated in the breeze;
 And in her hand she waved a living branch
 Rich with immortal fruits, of power to calm
 The wrathful heart, and from the brightening eyes
 To chase the cloud of sadness. More sublime 420
 The heavenly partner moved. The prime of age
 Composed her steps. The presence of a god,
 High on the circle of her brow enthroned,
 From each majestic motion darted awe,
 Devoted awe! till, cherish'd by her looks
 Benevolent and meek, confiding love
 To filial rapture soften'd all the soul.
 Free in her graceful hand she poised the sword
 Of chaste dominion. An heroic crown

Display'd the old simplicity of pomp 430
 Around her honour'd head. A matron's robe,
 White as the sunshine streams through vernal clouds,
 Her stately form invested. Hand in hand
 The immortal pair forsook the enamel'd green,
 Ascending slowly. Rays of limpid light
 Gleam'd round their path; celestial sounds were heard,
 And through the fragrant air ethereal dews
 Distill'd around them; till at once the clouds, Disparting wide in midway sky, withdrew
 Their airy veil, and left a bright expanse 440
 Of empyrean flame, where, spent and drown'd,
 Afflicted vision plunged in vain to scan
 What object it involved. My feeble eyes
 Endured not. Bending down to earth I stood,
 With dumb attention. Soon a female voice,
 As watery murmurs sweet, or warbling shades,
 With sacred invocation thus began:
 'Father of gods and mortals! whose right arm
 With reins eternal guides the moving heavens,
 Bend thy propitious ear. Behold well pleased 450
 I seek to finish thy divine decree.
 With frequent steps I visit yonder seat
 Of man, thy offspring; from the tender seeds
 Of justice and of wisdom, to evolve
 The latent honours of his generous frame;
 Till thy conducting hand shall raise his lot
 From earth's dim scene to these ethereal walks,
 The temple of thy glory. But not me,
 Not my directing voice he oft requires,
 Or hears delighted: this enchanting maid, 460
 The associate thou hast given me, her alone
 He loves, O Father! absent, her he craves;
 And but for her glad presence ever join'd,

Rejoices not in mine: that all my hopes 464
 This thy benignant purpose to fulfil,
 I deem uncertain: and my daily cares
 Unfruitful all and vain, unless by thee
 Still further aided in the work divine.'

She ceased; a voice more awful thus replied:—

'O thou, in whom for ever I delight, 470
 Fairer than all the inhabitants of Heaven,
 Best image of thy Author! far from thee
 Be disappointment, or distaste, or blame;
 Who soon or late shalt every work fulfil,
 And no resistance find. If man refuse
 To hearken to thy dictates; or, allured
 By meaner joys, to any other power
 Transfer the honours due to thee alone;
 That joy which he pursues he ne'er shall taste,
 That power in whom delighteth ne'er behold. 480
 Go then, once more, and happy be thy toil;
 Go then! but let not this thy smiling friend
 Partake thy footsteps. In her stead, behold!
 With thee the son of Nemesis I send;
 The fiend abhorr'd! whose vengeance takes account
 Of sacred order's violated laws.
 See where he calls thee, burning to be gone,
 Fierce to exhaust the tempest of his wrath
 On yon devoted head. But thou, my child,
 Control his cruel frenzy, and protect 490
 Thy tender charge; that when despair shall grasp
 His agonising bosom, he may learn,
 Then he may learn to love the gracious hand
 Alone sufficient in the hour of ill,
 To save his feeble spirit; then confess
 Thy genuine honours, O excelling fair!
 When all the plagues that wait the deadly will

Of this avenging demon, all the storms 498
 Of night infernal, serve but to display
 The energy of thy superior charms
 With mildest awe triumphant o'er his rage,
 And shining clearer in the horrid gloom.'

Here ceased that awful voice, and soon I felt
 The cloudy curtain of refreshing eve
 Was closed once more, from that immortal fire
 Sheltering my eyelids. Looking up, I view'd
 A vast gigantic spectre striding on Through murmuring thunders and a waste of clouds,
 With dreadful action. Black as night his brow
 Relentless frowns involved. His savage limbs 510
 With sharp impatience violent he writhed,
 As through convulsive anguish; and his hand,
 Arm'd with a scorpion lash, full oft he raised
 In madness to his bosom; while his eyes
 Rain'd bitter tears, and bellowing loud he shook
 The void with horror. Silent by his side
 The virgin came. No discomposure stirr'd
 Her features. From the glooms which hung around,
 No stain of darkness mingled with the beam
 Of her divine effulgence. Now they stoop 520
 Upon the river bank; and now to hail
 His wonted guests, with eager steps advanced
 The unsuspecting inmate of the shade.

As when a famish'd wolf, that all night long
 Had ranged the Alpine snows, by chance at morn
 Sees from a cliff, incumbent o'er the smoke
 Of some lone village, a neglected kid
 That strays along the wild for herb or spring;
 Down from the winding ridge he sweeps amain,
 And thinks he tears him: so with tenfold rage, 530
 The monster sprung remorseless on his prey.

Amazed the stripling stood: with panting breast 532
 Feebly he pour'd the lamentable wail
 Of helpless consternation, struck at once,
 And rooted to the ground. The Queen beheld
 His terror, and with looks of tenderest care
 Advanced to save him. Soon the tyrant felt
 Her awful power. His keen tempestuous arm
 Hung nerveless, nor descended where his rage
 Had aim'd the deadly blow: then dumb retired 540
 With sullen rancour. Lo! the sovereign maid
 Folds with a mother's arms the fainting boy,
 Till life rekindles in his rosy cheek;
 Then grasps his hands, and cheers him with her tongue:—
 'Oh, wake thee, rouse thy spirit! Shall the spite
 Of yon tormentor thus appal thy heart,
 While I, thy friend and guardian, am at hand
 To rescue and to heal? Oh, let thy soul
 Remember, what the will of heaven ordains
 Is ever good for all; and if for all, 550
 Then good for thee. Nor only by the warmth
 And soothing sunshine of delightful things,
 Do minds grow up and flourish. Oft misled
 By that bland light, the young unpractised views
 Of reason wander through a fatal road,
 Far from their native aim; as if to lie
 Inglorious in the fragrant shade, and wait
 The soft access of ever circling joys,
 Were all the end of being. Ask thyself,
 This pleasing error did it never lull 560
 Thy wishes? Has thy constant heart refused
 The silken fetters of delicious ease?
 Or when divine Euphrosyné appear'd
 Within this dwelling, did not thy desires
 Hang far below the measure of thy fate,

Which I reveal'd before thee, and thy eyes, 566
Impatient of my counsels, turn away
To drink the soft effusion of her smiles?
Know then, for this the everlasting Sire
Deprives thee of her presence, and instead, 570
O wise and still benevolent! ordains
This horrid visage hither to pursue
My steps; that so thy nature may discern
Its real good, and what alone can save
Thy feeble spirit in this hour of ill
From folly and despair. O yet beloved!
Let not this headlong terror quite o'erwhelm
Thy scatter'd powers; nor fatal deem the rage
Of this tormentor, nor his proud assault,
While I am here to vindicate thy toil, 580
Above the generous question of thy arm.
Brave by thy fears and in thy weakness strong,
This hour he triumphs: but confront his might,
And dare him to the combat, then with ease
Disarm'd and quell'd, his fierceness he resigns
To bondage and to scorn: while thus inured
By watchful danger, by unceasing toil,
The immortal mind, superior to his fate,
Amid the outrage of external things,
Firm as the solid base of this great world, 590
Rests on his own foundations. Blow, ye winds!
Ye waves! ye thunders! roll your tempest on;
Shake, ye old pillars of the marble sky!
Till all its orbs and all its worlds of fire
Be loosen'd from their seats; yet still serene,
The unconquer'd mind looks down upon the wreck;
And ever stronger as the storms advance,
Firm through the closing ruin holds his way,
Where Nature calls him to the destined goal.'

So spake the goddess; while through all her frame 600
 Celestial raptures flow'd, in every word,
 In every motion kindling warmth divine
 To seize who listen'd. Vehement and swift
 As lightning fires the aromatic shade
 In Æthiopian fields, the stripling felt
 Her inspiration catch his fervid soul,
 And starting from his languor thus exclaim'd:—
 'Then let the trial come! and witness thou,
 If terror be upon me; if I shrink
 To meet the storm, or falter in my strength 610
 When hardest it besets me. Do not think
 That I am fearful and infirm of soul,
 As late thy eyes beheld: for thou hast changed
 My nature; thy commanding voice has waked
 My languid powers to bear me boldly on,
 Where'er the will divine my path ordains
 Through toil or peril: only do not thou
 Forsake me; Oh, be thou for ever near,
 That I may listen to thy sacred voice,
 And guide by thy decrees my constant feet. 620
 But say, for ever are my eyes bereft?
 Say, shall the fair Euphrosyné not once
 Appear again to charm me? Thou, in heaven!
 O thou eternal arbiter of things!
 Be thy great bidding done: for who am I,
 To question thy appointment? Let the frowns
 Of this avenger every morn o'ercast
 The cheerful dawn, and every evening damp
 With double night my dwelling; I will learn
 To hail them both, and unrepining bear 630
 His hateful presence: but permit my tongue
 One glad request, and if my deeds may find
 Thy awful eye propitious, oh! restore

The rosy-featured maid; again to cheer
This lonely seat, and bless me with her smiles.' 634

He spoke; when instant through the sable glooms
With which that furious presence had involved
The ambient air, a flood of radiance came Swift as the lightning flash; the melting clouds
Flew diverse, and amid the blue serene 640
Euphrosyné appear'd. With sprightly step
The nymph alighted on the irriguous lawn,
And to her wondering audience thus began:—

'Lo! I am here to answer to your vows,
And be the meeting fortunate! I come
With joyful tidings; we shall part no more—
Hark! how the gentle echo from her cell
Talks through the cliffs, and murmuring o'er the stream

Repeats the accents; we shall part no more.—
O my delightful friends! well pleased on high 650
The Father has beheld you, while the might
Of that stern foe with bitter trial proved
Your equal doings: then for ever spake
The high decree, that thou, celestial maid!
Howe'er that grisly phantom on thy steps
May sometimes dare intrude, yet never more
Shalt thou, descending to the abode of man,
Alone endure the rancour of his arm,
Or leave thy loved Euphrosyné behind.'

She ended, and the whole romantic scene 660
Immediate vanish'd; rocks, and woods, and rills,
The mantling tent, and each mysterious form
Flew like the pictures of a morning dream,
When sunshine fills the bed. Awhile I stood
Perplex'd and giddy; till the radiant power
Who bade the visionary landscape rise,

As up to him I turn'd, with gentlest looks 667
 Preventing my inquiry, thus began :—
 'There let thy soul acknowledge its complaint
 How blind, how impious! There behold the ways
 Of Heaven's eternal destiny to man,
 For ever just, benevolent, and wise:
 That Virtue's awful steps, howe'er pursued
 By vexing fortune and intrusive pain,
 Should never be divided from her chaste,
 Her fair attendant, Pleasure. Need I urge Thy tardy thought through all the various round
 Of this existence, that thy softening soul
 At length may learn what energy the hand
 Of virtue mingles in the bitter tide 680
 Of passion swelling with distress and pain,
 To mitigate the sharp with gracious drops
 Of cordial pleasure? Ask the faithful youth,
 Why the cold urn of her whom long he loved
 So often fills his arms; so often draws
 His lonely footsteps at the silent hour,
 To pay the mournful tribute of his tears?
 Oh! he will tell thee, that the wealth of worlds
 Should ne'er seduce his bosom to forego
 That sacred hour, when, stealing from the noise 690
 Of care and envy, sweet remembrance soothes
 With virtue's kindest looks his aching breast,
 And turns his tears to rapture.—Ask the crowd
 Which flies impatient from the village walk
 To climb the neighbouring cliffs, when far below
 The cruel winds have hurl'd upon the coast
 Some helpless bark; while sacred Pity melts
 The general eye, or Terror's icy hand
 Smites their distorted limbs and horrent hair;
 While every mother closer to her breast 700

Catches her child, and pointing where the waves 701
Foam through the shatter'd vessel, shrieks aloud
As one poor wretch that spreads his piteous arms
For succour, swallow'd by the roaring surge,
As now another, dash'd against the rock,
Drops lifeless down: Oh! deemest thou indeed
No kind endearment here by Nature given
To mutual terror and compassion's tears?
No sweetly melting softness which attracts,
O'er all that edge of pain, the social powers 710
To this their proper action and their end?—
Ask thy own heart, when, at the midnight hour,
Slow through that studious gloom thy pausing eye,
Led by the glimmering taper, moves around
The sacred volumes of the dead, the songs
Of Grecian bards, and records writ by Fame
For Grecian heroes, where the present power
Of heaven and earth surveys the immortal page,
Even as a father blessing, while he reads
The praises of his son. If then thy soul, 720
Spurning the yoke of these inglorious days,
Mix in their deeds, and kindle with their flame,
Say, when the prospect blackens on thy view,
When, rooted from the base, heroic states
Mourn in the dust, and tremble at the frown
Of cursed ambition; when the pious band
Of youths who fought for freedom and their sires,
Lie side by side in gore; when ruffian pride
Usurps the throne of Justice, turns the pomp
Of public power, the majesty of rule, 730
The sword, the laurel, and the purple robe,
To slavish empty pageants, to adorn
A tyrant's walk, and glitter in the eyes
Of such as bow the knee; when honour'd urns

Of patriots and of chiefs, the awful bust 735
 And storied arch, to glut the coward rage
 Of regal envy, strew the public way
 With hallow'd ruins; when the Muse's haunt,
 The marble porch where Wisdom wont to talk
 With Socrates or Tully, hears no more, 740
 Save the hoarse jargon of contentious monks,
 Or female Superstition's midnight prayer;
 When ruthless Rapine from the hand of Time
 Tears the destroying scythe, with surer blow
 To sweep the works of glory from their base;
 Till Desolation o'er the grass-grown street
 Expands his raven wings, and up the wall,
 Where senates once the price of monarchs doom'd,
 Hisses the gliding snake through hoary weeds
 That clasp the mouldering column; thus defaced, 750
 Thus widely mournful when the prospect thrills
 Thy beating bosom, when the patriot's tear
 Starts from thine eye, and thy extended arm
 In fancy hurls the thunderbolt of Jove
 To fire the impious wreath on Philip's^M brow,
 Or dash Octavius from the trophied car;
 Say, does thy secret soul repine to taste
 The big distress? Or wouldst thou then exchange
 Those heart-ennobling sorrows for the lot
 Of him who sits amid the gaudy herd 760
 Of mute barbarians bending to his nod,
 And bears aloft his gold-invested front,
 And says within himself, I am a king,
 And wherefore should the clamorous voice of woe
 Intrude upon mine ear?—The baleful dregs
 Of these late ages, this inglorious draught
 Of servitude and folly, have not yet,
 Bless'd be the eternal Ruler of the world!

Defiled to such a depth of sordid shame
 The native honours of the human soul,
 Nor so effaced the image of its Sire.' 769

BOOK III.

ARGUMENT.

PLEASURE in observing the tempers and manners of men, even where vicious or absurd. The origin of Vice, from false representations of the fancy, producing false opinions concerning good and evil. Inquiry into ridicule. The general sources of ridicule in the minds and characters of men, enumerated. Final cause of the sense of ridicule. The resemblance of certain aspects of inanimate things to the sensations and properties of the mind. The operations of the mind in the production of the works of Imagination, described. The secondary pleasure from Imitation. The benevolent order of the world illustrated in the arbitrary connexion of these pleasures with the objects which excite them. The nature and conduct of taste. Concluding with an account of the natural and moral advantages resulting from a sensible and well formed imagination.

WHAT wonder therefore, since the endearing ties
 Of passion link the universal kind
 Of man so close, what wonder if to search
 This common nature through the various change
 Of sex, and age, and fortune, and the frame
 Of each peculiar, draw the busy mind
 With unresisted charms? The spacious west,
 And all the teeming regions of the south,
 Hold not a quarry, to the curious flight
 Of Knowledge, half so tempting or so fair, 10
 As man to man. Nor only where the smiles
 Of Love invite; nor only where the applause
 Of cordial Honour turns the attentive eye
 On Virtue's graceful deeds. For, since the course
 Of things external acts in different ways

On human apprehensions, as the hand 16
 Of Nature temper'd to a different frame
 Peculiar minds; so haply where the powers
 Of Fancy ^A neither lessen nor enlarge
 The images of things, but paint in all 20
 Their genuine hues, the features which they wore
 In Nature; there Opinion will be true,
 And Action right. For Action treads the path
 In which Opinion says he follows good,
 Or flies from evil; and Opinion gives
 Report of good or evil, as the scene
 Was drawn by Fancy, lovely or deform'd:
 Thus her report can never there be true
 Where Fancy cheats the intellectual eye,
 With glaring colours and distorted lines. 30
 Is there a man, who, at the sound of death,
 Sees ghastly shapes of terror conjured up,
 And black before him; nought but death-bed groans
 And fearful prayers, and plunging from the brink
 Of light and being, down the gloomy air,
 An unknown depth? Alas! in such a mind,
 If no bright forms of excellence attend
 The image of his country; nor the pomp
 Of sacred senates, nor the guardian voice
 Of Justice on her throne, nor aught that wakes 40
 The conscious bosom with a patriot's flame;
 Will not Opinion tell him, that to die,
 Or stand the hazard, is a greater ill
 Than to betray his country? And in act
 Will he not choose to be a wretch and live?
 Here vice begins then. From the enchanting cup
 Which Fancy holds to all, the unwary thirst
 Of youth oft swallows a Circean draught,
 That sheds a baleful tincture o'er the eye

Of Reason, till no longer he discerns, 50
 And only guides to err. Then revel forth
 A furious band that spurn him from the throne,
 And all is uproar. Thus Ambition grasps
 The empire of the soul; thus pale Revenge
 Unsheaths her murderous dagger; and the hands
 Of Lust and Rapine, with unholy arts,
 Watch to o'erturn the barrier of the laws
 That keeps them from their prey; thus all the plagues
 The wicked bear, or o'er the trembling scene
 The tragic Muse discloses, under shapes 60
 Of honour, safety, pleasure, ease, or pomp,
 Stole first into the mind. Yet not by all
 Those lying forms, which Fancy in the brain
 Engenders, are the kindling passions driven
 To guilty deeds; nor Reason bound in chains,
 That Vice alone may lord it: oft adorn'd
 With solemn pageants, Folly mounts the throne,
 And plays her idiot antics, like a queen.
 A thousand garbs she wears; a thousand ways
 She wheels her giddy empire.—Lo! thus far 70
 With bold adventure, to the Mantuan lyre
 I sing of Nature's charms, and touch well pleased
 A stricter note: now haply must my song
 Unbend her serious measure, and reveal
 In lighter strains, how Folly's awkward arts^B
 Excite impetuous Laughter's gay rebuke;
 The sportive province of the comic Muse.
 See! in what crowds the uncouth forms advance:
 Each would outstrip the other, each prevent
 Our careful search, and offer to your gaze, 80
 Unask'd, his motley features. Wait awhile,
 My curious friends! and let us first arrange
 In proper order your promiscuous throng.

Behold the foremost band ;^c of slender thought, 84
 And easy faith ; whom flattering Fancy soothes
 With lying spectres, in themselves to view
 Illustrious forms of excellence and good,
 That scorn the mansion. With exulting hearts
 They spread their spurious treasures to the sun,
 And bid the world admire ! But chief the glance 90
 Of wishful Envy draws their joy-bright eyes,
 And lifts with self-applause each lordly brow.
 In number boundless as the blooms of Spring,
 Behold their glaring idols, empty shades
 By Fancy gilded o'er, and then set up
 For adoration. Some in Learning's garb,
 With formal band, and sable-cinctured gown,
 And rags of mouldy volumes. Some elate
 With martial splendour, steely pikes and swords
 Of costly frame, and gay Phœnician robes 100
 Inwrought with flowery gold, assume the port
 Of stately Valour : listening by his side
 There stands a female form ; to her, with looks
 Of earnest import, pregnant with amaze,
 He talks of deadly deeds, of breaches, storms,
 And sulphurous mines, and ambush : then at once
 Breaks off, and smiles to see her look so pale,
 And asks some wondering question of her fears.
 Others of graver mien ; behold, adorn'd
 With holy ensigns, how sublime they move, 110
 And bending oft their sanctimonious eyes
 Take homage of the simple-minded throng ;
 Ambassadors of Heaven ! Nor much unlike
 Is he, whose visage in the lazy mist
 That mantles every feature, hides a brood
 Of politic conceits, of whispers, nods,
 And hints deep omen'd with unwieldy schemes,

And dark portents of state. Ten thousand more, 118
 Prodigious habits and tumultuous tongues,
 Pour dauntless in and swell the boastful band. 120

Then comes the second order; ^D all who seek
 The debt of praise, where watchful Unbelief
 Darts through the thin pretence her squinting eye
 On some retired appearance which belies
 The boasted virtue, or annuls the applause
 That Justice else would pay. Here side by side
 I see two leaders of the solemn train
 Approaching: one a female old and gray,
 With eyes demure, and wrinkle-furrow'd brow,
 Pale as the cheeks of death; yet still she stuns 130
 The sickening audience with a nauseous tale,
 How many youths her myrtle chains have worn,
 How many virgins at her triumphs pined!
 Yet how resolved she guards her cautious heart;
 Such is her terror at the risks of love,
 And man's seducing tongue! The other seems
 A bearded sage, ungentle in his mien,
 And sordid all his habit; peevish Want
 Grins at his heels, while down the gazing throng
 He stalks, resounding in magnificent praise 140
 The vanity of riches, the contempt
 Of pomp and power. Be prudent in your zeal,
 Ye grave associates! let the silent grace
 Of her who blushes at the fond regard
 Her charms inspire, more eloquent unfold
 The praise of spotless honour: let the man,
 Whose eye regards not his illustrious pomp
 And ample store, but as indulgent streams
 To cheer the barren soil and spread the fruits
 Of joy, let him by juster measures fix 150
 The price of riches and the end of power.

Another tribe succeeds; ^E deluded long 152
 By Fancy's dazzling optics, these behold
 The images of some peculiar things
 With brighter hues resplendent, and portray'd
 With features nobler far than e'er adorn'd
 Their genuine objects. Hence the fever'd heart
 Pants with delirious hope for tinsel charms;
 Hence oft obtrusive on the eye of scorn,
 Untimely zeal her witless pride betrays! 160
 And serious manhood from the towering aim
 Of wisdom, stoops to emulate the boast
 Of childish toil. Behold yon mystic form
 Bedeck'd with feathers, insects, weeds, and shells!
 Not with intenser view the Samian sage
 Bent his fix'd eye on heaven's intenser fires,
 When first the order of that radiant scene
 Swell'd his exulting thought, than this surveys
 A muckworm's entrails, or a spider's fang.
 Next him a youth, with flowers and myrtles crown'd, 170
 Attends that virgin form, and blushing kneels,
 With fondest gesture and a suppliant's tongue,
 To win her coy regard: adieu, for him,
 The dull engagements of the bustling world!
 Adieu the sick impertinence of praise!
 And hope, and action! for with her alone,
 By streams and shades, to steal these sighing hours,
 Is all he asks, and all that fate can give!
 Thee too, facetious Momion, wandering here,
 Thee, dreaded censor, oft have I beheld 180
 Bewilder'd unawares: alas! too long
 Flush'd with thy comic triumphs and the spoils
 Of sly derision! till on every side
 Hurling thy random bolts, offended Truth
 Assign'd thee here thy station with the slaves

Of Folly. Thy once formidable name 186
 Shall grace her humble records, and be heard
 In scoffs and mockery bandied from the lips
 Of all the vengeful brotherhood around,
 So oft the patient victims of thy scorn. 190

But now, ye gay!^F to whom indulgent fate,
 Of all the Muse's empire hath assign'd
 The fields of folly, hither each advance
 Your sickles; here the teeming soil affords
 Its richest growth. A favourite brood appears,
 In whom the demon, with a mother's joy,
 Views all her charms reflected, all her cares
 At full repaid. Ye most illustrious band!
 Who, scorning Reason's tame, pedantic rules,
 And Order's vulgar bondage, never meant 200
 For souls sublime as yours, with generous zeal
 Pay Vice the reverence Virtue long usurp'd,
 And yield Deformity the fond applause
 Which Beauty wont to claim, forgive my song,
 That for the blushing diffidence of youth,
 It shuns the unequal province of your praise.

Thus far triumphant^G in the pleasing guile
 Of bland Imagination, Folly's train
 Have dared our search: but now a dastard kind
 Advance reluctant, and with faltering feet 210
 Shrink from the gazer's eye: enfeebled hearts
 Whom Fancy chills with visionary fears,
 Or bends to servile tameness with conceits
 Of shame, of evil, or of base defect,
 Fantastic and delusive. Here the slave
 Who droops abash'd when sullen Pomp surveys
 His humbler habit; here the trembling wretch
 Unnerved and struck with Terror's icy bolts,
 Spent in weak wailings, drown'd in shameful tears,

At every dream of danger : here, subdued 220
 By frontless laughter and the hardy scorn
 Of old, unfeeling vice, the abject soul,
 Who, blushing, half resigns the candid praise
 Of Temperance and Honour ; half disowns
 A freeman's hatred of tyrannic pride ;
 And hears with sickly smiles the venal mouth
 With foulest licence mock the patriot's name.

Last of the motley bands ^H on whom the power
 Of gay Derision bends her hostile aim,
 Is that where shameful Ignorance presides. 230
 Beneath her sordid banners, lo! they march
 Like blind and lame. Whate'er their doubtful hands
 Attempt, Confusion straight appears behind,
 And troubles all the work. Through many a maze,
 Perplex'd they struggle, changing every path,
 O'erturning every purpose ; then at last
 Sit down dismay'd, and leave the entangled scene
 For Scorn to sport with. Such then is the abode
 Of Folly in the mind ; and such the shapes
 In which she governs her obsequious train. 240

Through every scene of ridicule in things
 To lead the tenor of my devious lay ;
 Through every swift occasion, which the hand
 Of Laughter points at, when the mirthful sting
 Distends her sallying nerves and chokes her tongue ;
 What were it but to count each crystal drop
 Which Morning's dewy fingers on the blooms
 Of May distil ? Suffice it to have said,^I
 Where'er the power of Ridicule displays
 Her quaint-eyed visage, some incongruous form, 250
 Some stubborn dissonance of things combined,
 Strikes on the quick observer : whether Pomp,
 Or Praise, or Beauty, mix their partial claim

Where sordid fashions, where ignoble deeds, 254
 Where foul Deformity are wont to dwell;
 Or whether these with violation loathed,
 Invade resplendent Pomp's imperious mien,
 The charms of Beauty, or the boast of Praise.

Ask we for what fair end,^k the Almighty Sire
 In mortal bosoms wakes this gay contempt, 260
 These grateful stings of laughter, from disgust
 Educing pleasure? Wherefore, but to aid
 The tardy steps of Reason, and at once
 By this prompt impulse urge us to depress
 The giddy aims of Folly? Though the light
 Of Truth slow dawning on the inquiring mind,
 At length unfolds, through many a subtile tie,
 How these uncouth disorders end at last
 In public evil! yet benignant Heaven,
 Conscious how dim the dawn of truth appears 270
 To thousands; conscious what a scanty pause
 From labours and from care, the wider lot
 Of humble life affords for studious thought
 To scan the maze of Nature; therefore stamp'd
 The glaring scenes with characters of scorn,
 As broad, as obvious, to the passing clown,
 As to the letter'd sage's curious eye.

Such are the various aspects of the mind—
 Some heavenly genius, whose unclouded thoughts
 Attain that secret harmony which blends 280
 The ethereal spirit with its mould of clay,
 Oh! teach me to reveal the grateful charm
 That searchless Nature o'er the sense of man
 Diffuses, to behold, in lifeless things,
 The inexpressive semblance^l of himself,
 Of thought and passion. Mark the sable woods
 That shade sublime yon mountain's nodding brow:

With what religious awe the solemn scene 288
 Commands your steps! as if the reverend form
 Of Minos or of Numa should forsake
 The Elysian seats, and down the embowering glade
 Move to your pausing eye! Behold the expanse
 Of yon gay landscape, where the silver clouds
 Flit o'er the heavens before the sprightly breeze:
 Now their gray cincture skirts the doubtful sun;
 Now streams of splendour, through their opening veil
 Effulgent, sweep from off the gilded lawn
 The aërial shadows, on the curling brook,
 And on the shady margin's quivering leaves
 With quickest lustre glancing; while you view 300
 The prospect, say, within your cheerful breast
 Plays not the lively sense of winning mirth
 With clouds and sunshine chequer'd, while the round
 Of social converse, to the inspiring tongue
 Of some gay nymph amid her subject train,
 Moves all obsequious? Whence is this effect,
 This kindred power of such discordant things?
 Or flows their semblance from that mystic tone
 To which the new-born mind's harmonious powers
 At first were strung? Or rather from the links 310
 Which artful custom twines around her frame?
 For when the different images of things,
 By chance combined, have struck the attentive soul
 With deeper impulse, or, connected long,
 Have drawn her frequent eye; how'er distinct
 The external scenes, yet oft the ideas gain
 From that conjunction an eternal tie,
 And sympathy unbroken. Let the mind
 Recall one partner of the various league,
 Immediate, lo! the firm confederates rise, 320
 And each his former station straight resumes:

One movement governs the consenting throng, 322
 And all at once with rosy pleasure shine,
 Or all are sadden'd with the glooms of care.
 'Twas thus, if ancient fame the truth unfold,
 Two faithful needles,^M from the informing touch
 Of the same parent stone, together drew
 Its mystic virtue, and at first conspired
 With fatal impulse quivering to the pole:
 Then, though disjoin'd by kingdoms, though the main 320
 Roll'd its broad surge betwixt, and different stars
 Beheld their wakeful motions, yet preserved
 The former friendship, and remember'd still
 The alliance of their birth: whate'er the line
 Which one possess'd, nor pause, nor quiet knew
 The sure associate, ere with trembling speed
 He found its path and fix'd unerring there.
 Such is the secret union, when we feel
 A song, a flower, a name, at once restore
 Those long-connected scenes where first they moved 340
 The attention, backward through her mazy walks
 Guiding the wanton fancy to her scope,
 To temples, courts, or fields, with all the band
 Of painted forms, of passions and designs
 Attendant; whence, if pleasing in itself,
 The prospect from that sweet accession gains
 Redoubled influence o'er the listening mind.
 By these mysterious ties,^N the busy power
 Of Memory her ideal train preserves
 Entire; or when they would elude her watch, 350
 Reclaims their fleeting footsteps from the waste
 Of dark oblivion; thus collecting all
 The various forms of being to present,
 Before the curious aim of mimic art,

Their largest choice; like Spring's unfolded blooms 355
 Exhaling sweetness, that the skilful bee
 May taste at will, from their selected spoils
 To work her dulcet food. For not the expanse
 Of living lakes in Summer's noontide calm,
 Reflects the bordering shade, and sun-bright heavens,
 With fairer semblance; not the sculptured gold 361
 More faithful keeps the graver's lively trace,
 Than he whose birth the sister powers of Art
 Propitious view'd, and from his genial star
 Shed influence to the seeds of fancy kind,
 Than his attemper'd bosom must preserve
 The seal of Nature. There alone unchanged,
 Her form remains. The balmy walks of May
 There breathe perennial sweets; the trembling chord
 Resounds for ever in the abstracted ear, 370
 Melodious; and the virgin's radiant eye,
 Superior to disease, to grief, and time,
 Shines with unbating lustre. Thus at length
 Endow'd with all that nature can bestow,
 The child of Fancy oft in silence bends
 O'er these mix'd treasures of his pregnant breast
 With conscious pride. From them he oft resolves
 To frame he knows not what excelling things,
 And win he knows not what sublime reward
 Of praise and wonder. By degrees, the mind 380
 Feels her young nerves dilate: the plastic powers
 Labour for action: blind emotions heave
 His bosom; and with loveliest frenzy caught,
 From earth to heaven he rolls his daring eye,
 From heaven to earth. Anon ten thousand shapes,
 Like spectres trooping to the wizard's call,
 Flit swift before him. From the womb of earth,
 From ocean's bed they come: the eternal heavens

Disclose their splendours, and the dark abyss 389
 Pours out her births unknown. With fixed gaze
 He marks the rising phantoms. Now compares
 Their different forms; now blends them, now divides,
 Enlarges and extenuates by turns;
 Opposes, ranges in fantastic bands,
 And infinitely varies. Hither now,
 Now thither fluctuates his inconstant aim,
 With endless choice perplex'd. At length his plan
 Begins to open. Lucid order dawns;
 And as from Chaos old the jarring seeds
 Of Nature at the voice divine repair'd 400
 Each to its place, till rosy earth unveil'd
 Her fragrant bosom, and the joyful sun
 Sprung up the blue serene; by swift degrees
 Thus disentangled, his entire design
 Emerges. Colours mingle, features join,
 And lines converge: the fainter parts retire;
 The fairer eminent in light advance;
 And every image on its neighbour smiles.
 Awhile he stands, and with a father's joy
 Contemplates. Then with Promethéan art, 410
 Into its proper vehicle^o he breathes
 The fair conception; which, embodied thus,
 And permanent, becomes to eyes or ears
 An object ascertain'd: while thus inform'd,
 The various organs of his mimic skill,
 The consonance of sounds, the featured rock,
 The shadowy picture and impassion'd verse,
 Beyond their proper powers attract the soul
 By that expressive semblance, while in sight
 Of Nature's great original we scan 420
 The lively child of Art; while line by line,
 And feature after feature we refer

To that sublime exemplar whence it stole 423
 Those animating charms. Thus Beauty's palm
 Betwixt them wavering hangs: applauding Love
 Doubts where to choose; and mortal man aspires
 To tempt creative praise. As when a cloud
 Of gathering hail, with limpid crusts of ice
 Enclosed and obvious to the beaming sun,
 Collects his large effulgence; straight the heavens 430
 With equal flames present on either hand
 The radiant visage; Persia stands at gaze,
 Appall'd; and on the brink of Ganges doubts
 The snowy-vested seer, in Mithra's name,
 To which the fragrance of the south shall burn,
 To which his warbled orisons ascend.

Such various bliss the well-tuned heart enjoys,
 Favour'd of Heaven! while, plunged in sordid cares,
 The unfeeling vulgar mocks the boon divine;
 And harsh Austerity, from whose rebuke 440
 Young Love and smiling Wonder shrink away
 Abash'd and chill of heart, with sager frowns
 Condemns the fair enchantment. On my strain,
 Perhaps even now, some cold, fastidious judge
 Casts a disdainful eye; and calls my toil,
 And calls the love and beauty which I sing,
 The dream of folly. Thou, grave censor! say,
 Is Beauty then a dream, because the glooms
 Of dulness hang too heavy on thy sense,
 To let her shine upon thee? So the man 450
 Whose eye ne'er open'd on the light of heaven,
 Might smile with scorn while raptur'd vision tells
 Of the gay-colour'd radiance flushing bright
 O'er all creation. From the wise be far
 Such gross unhallow'd pride; nor needs my song
 Descend so low; but rather now unfold,

If human thought could reach, or words unfold, 457
 By what mysterious fabric of the mind,
 The deep-felt joys and harmony of sound
 Result from airy motion; and from shape 460
 The lovely phantoms of sublime and fair.
 By what fine ties hath God connected things
 When present in the mind, which in themselves
 Have no connexion? Sure the rising sun
 O'er the cerulean convex of the sea,
 With equal brightness and with equal warmth
 Might roll his fiery orb, nor yet the soul
 Thus feel her frame expanded, and her powers
 Exulting in the splendour she beholds,
 Like a young conqueror moving through the pomp 470
 Of some triumphal day. When join'd at eve,
 Soft murmuring streams and gales of gentlest breath
 Melodious Philomela's wakeful strain
 Attemper, could not man's discerning ear
 Through all its tones the sympathy pursue,
 Nor yet this breath divine of nameless joy
 Steal through his veins and fan the awaken'd heart,
 Mild as the breeze, yet rapturous as the song?
 But were not Nature still endow'd at large
 With all that life requires, though unadorn'd 480
 With such enchantment? Wherefore then her form
 So exquisitely fair? her breath perfumed
 With such ethereal sweetness? whence her voice
 Inform'd at will to raise or to depress
 The impassion'd soul? and whence the robes of light
 Which thus invest her with more lovely pomp
 Than Fancy can describe? Whence but from Thee,
 O source divine of ever-flowing love!
 And Thy unmeasured goodness? Not content
 With every food of life to nourish man, 490

By kind illusions of the wondering sense 491
 Thou mak'st all Nature beauty to his eye,
 Or music to his ear; well pleased he scans
 The goodly prospect, and with inward smiles
 Treads the gay verdure of the painted plain,
 Beholds the azure canopy of heaven,
 And living lamps that over-arch his head
 With more than regal splendour; bends his ears
 To the full choir of water, air, and earth;
 Nor heeds the pleasing error of his thought, 500
 Nor doubts the painted green or azure arch,
 Nor questions more the music's mingling sounds,
 Than space, or motion, or eternal time;
 So sweet he feels their influence to attract
 The fixed soul, to brighten the dull glooms
 Of care, and make the destined road of life
 Delightful to his feet. So fables tell,
 The adventurous hero, bound on hard exploits,
 Beholds with glad surprise, by secret spells
 Of some kind sage, the patron of his toils, 510
 A visionary paradise disclosed
 Amid the dubious wild; with streams, and shades,
 And airy songs, the enchanted landscape smiles,
 Cheers his long labours and renews his frame.
 What then is taste, but these internal powers
 Active, and strong, and feelingly alive
 To each fine impulse,—a discerning sense
 Of decent and sublime, with quick disgust
 From things deform'd, or disarranged, or gross
 In species? This, nor gems, nor stores of gold, 520
 Nor purple state, nor culture can bestow;
 But God alone, when first His active hand
 Imprints the secret bias of the soul.
 He, mighty Parent! wise and just in all,

Free as the vital breeze or light of heaven, 525
 Reveals the charms of Nature. Ask the swain
 Who journeys homeward from a summer day's Long labour, why, forgetful of his toils
 And due repose, he loiters to behold
 The sunshine gleaming as through amber clouds, 530
 O'er all the western sky; full soon, I ween,
 His rude expression and untutor'd airs,
 Beyond the power of language, will unfold
 The form of beauty, smiling at his heart,
 How lovely! how commanding! But though Heaven
 In every breast hath sown these early seeds
 Of love and admiration, yet in vain,
 Without fair culture's kind parental aid,
 Without enlivening suns, and genial showers,
 And shelter from the blast, in vain we hope 540
 The tender plant should rear its blooming head,
 Or yield the harvest promised in its spring.
 Nor yet will every soul with equal stores
 Repay the tiller's labour, or attend
 His will, obsequious, whether to produce
 The olive or the laurel. Different minds
 Incline to different objects; one pursues
 The vast alone,^P the wonderful, the wild;
 Another sighs for harmony, and grace,
 And gentlest beauty. Hence, when lightning fires 550
 The arch of heaven, and thunders rock the ground,
 When furious whirlwinds rend the howling air,
 And ocean, groaning from his lowest bed,
 Heaves his tempestuous billows to the sky;
 Amid the mighty uproar, while below
 The nations tremble, Shakspeare looks abroad
 From some high cliff, superior, and enjoys
 The elemental war. But Waller longs,^Q

All on the margin of some flowery stream 559
 To spread his careless limbs amid the cool
 Of plantane shades, and to the listening deer
 The tale of slighted vows and love's disdain
 Resound soft-warbling all the livelong day;
 Consenting Zephyr sighs; the weeping rill
 Joins in his plaint, melodious; mute the groves;
 And hill and dale with all their echoes mourn.
 Such and so various are the tastes of men.

Oh! bless'd of Heaven, whom not the languid songs
 Of Luxury, the siren! not the bribes
 Of sordid Wealth, nor all the gaudy spoils 570
 Of pageant Honour, can seduce to leave
 Those ever-blooming sweets, which from the store
 Of Nature fair Imagination culls
 To charm the enliven'd soul! What though not all
 Of mortal offspring can attain the heights
 Of envied life; though only few possess
 Patrician treasures or imperial state;
 Yet Nature's care, to all her children just,
 With richer treasures and an ampler state,
 Endows at large whatever happy man 580
 Will deign to use them. His the city's pomp,
 The rural honours his. Whate'er adorns
 The princely dome, the column, and the arch,
 The breathing marbles and the sculptured gold,
 Beyond the proud possessor's narrow claim,
 His tuneful breast enjoys. For him, the Spring
 Distils her dews, and from the silken gem
 Its lucid leaves unfolds; for him, the hand
 Of Autumn tinges every fertile branch
 With blooming gold and blushes like the morn. 590
 Each passing Hour sheds tribute from her wings;
 And still new beauties meet his lonely walk,

And loves unfelt attract him. Not a breeze^R 593
 Flies o'er the meadow, not a cloud imbibes
 The setting sun's effulgence, not a strain
 From all the tenants of the warbling shade
 Ascends, but whence his bosom can partake
 Fresh pleasure, unproved. Nor thence partakes
 Fresh pleasure only; for the attentive mind,
 By this harmonious action on her powers 600
 Becomes herself harmonious; wont so oft
 In outward things to meditate the charm
 Of sacred order, soon she seeks at home
 To find a kindred order, to exert
 Within herself this elegance of love,
 This fair-inspired delight; her temper'd powers
 Refine at length, and every passion wears
 A chaster, milder, more attractive mien.
 But if to ampler prospects, if to gaze
 On Nature's form, where, negligent of all 610
 These lesser graces, she assumes the port
 Of that Eternal Majesty that weigh'd
 The world's foundations, if to these the mind
 Exalts her daring eye, then mightier far
 Will be the change, and nobler. Would the forms
 Of servile custom cramp her generous powers?
 Would sordid policies, the barbarous growth
 Of ignorance and rapine, bow her down
 To tame pursuits, to indolence and fear?
 Lo! she appeals to Nature, to the winds 620
 And rolling waves, the sun's unwearied course,
 The elements and seasons; all declare
 For what the Eternal Maker has ordain'd
 The powers of man; we feel within ourselves
 His energy divine; he tells the heart,
 He meant, he made us to behold and love

What he beholds and loves, the general orb 627
Of life and being; to be great like him,
Beneficent and active. Thus the men
Whom Nature's works can charm, with God himself
Hold converse; grow familiar, day by day,
With his conceptions, act upon his plan;
And form to his, the relish of their souls.

NOTES.

BOOK FIRST.

NOTE A.

'Say why was man,' &c.—P. 8.

IN apologising for the frequent negligences of the sublimest authors of Greece, 'Those godlike geniuses,' says Longinus, 'were well assured, that Nature had not intended man for a low-spirited or ignoble being: but bringing us into life and the midst of this wide universe, as before a multitude assembled at some heroic solemnity, that we might be spectators of all her magnificence, and candidates high in emulation for the prize of glory; she has therefore implanted in our souls an inextinguishable love of everything great and exalted, of everything which appears divine beyond our comprehension. Whence it comes to pass, that even the whole world is not an object sufficient for the depth and rapidity of human imagination, which often sallies forth beyond the limits of all that surrounds us. Let any man cast his eye through the whole circle of our existence, and consider how especially it abounds in excellent and grand objects, he will soon acknowledge for what enjoyments and pursuits we were destined. Thus by the very propensity of nature we are led to admire, not little springs or shallow rivulets, however clear and delicious, but the Nile, the Rhine, the Danube, and, much more than all, the Ocean,' &c.—Dionys. Longin. de Sublim. § xxiv.

NOTE B.

'The empyreal waste.'—P. 9.

'Ne se peut-il point qu'il y a un grand espace au-delà de la région des étoiles? Que ce soit le ciel empyrée, ou non, toujours cet espace immense qui environne toute cette région, pourra être rempli de bonheur et de gloire. Il pourra être conçu comme l'océan, où se rendent les fleuves de toutes les créatures bienheureuses, quand elles seront venues à leur perfection dans le système des étoiles.'—Leibnitz dans la Theodicée, part i. § 19.

NOTE C.

'Whose unfading light,' &c.—P. 9.

It was a notion of the great Mr Huygens, that there may be fixed stars at such a distance from our solar system, as that their light should not have had time to reach us, even from the creation of the world to this day.

NOTE D.

*'The neglect
Of all familiar prospects,' &c.—P. 10.*

It is here said, that in consequence of the love of novelty, objects which at first were highly delightful to the mind, lose that effect by repeated attention to them. But the instance of habit is opposed to this observation; for there, objects at first distasteful are in time rendered entirely agreeable by repeated attention.

The difficulty in this case will be removed if we consider, that, when objects at first agreeable, lose that influence by frequently recurring, the mind is wholly passive, and the perception involuntary; but habit, on the other hand, generally supposes choice and activity accompanying it: so that the pleasure arises here not from the object, but from the mind's conscious determination of its own activity; and consequently increases in proportion to the frequency of that determination.

It will still be urged perhaps, that a familiarity with disagreeable objects renders them at length acceptable, even when there is no room for the mind to resolve or act at all. In this case, the appearance must be accounted for one of these ways.

The pleasure from habit may be merely negative. The object at first gave uneasiness: this uneasiness gradually wears off as the object grows familiar: and the mind, finding it at last entirely removed, reckons its situation really pleasurable, compared with what it had experienced before.

The dislike conceived of the object at first, might be owing to prejudice or want of attention. Consequently the mind being necessitated to review it often, may at length perceive its own mistake, and be reconciled to what it had looked on with aversion. In which case, a sort of instinctive justice naturally leads it to make amends for the injury, by running toward the other extreme of fondness and attachment.

Or lastly, though the object itself should always continue disagreeable, yet circumstances of pleasure or good fortune may occur along with it. Thus an association may arise in the mind, and the object never be remembered without those pleasing circumstances attending it; by which means the disagreeable impression which it at first occasioned will in time be quite obliterated.

NOTE E.

*'This desire
Of objects new and strange.'—P. 10.*

These two ideas are oft confounded; though it is evident the mere novelty of an object makes it agreeable, even where the mind is not affected with the least degree of wonder: whereas wonder indeed always implies novelty, being never excited by common or well-known appearances. But the pleasure in both cases is explicable from the same final cause, the acquisition of knowledge and enlargement of our views of nature: on this account it is natural to treat of them together.

NOTE F.

‘*Truth and Good are one,
And Beauty dwells in them,*’ &c.—P. 14.

‘Do you imagine,’ says Socrates to Aristippus, ‘that what is good is not beautiful? Have you not observed that these appearances always coincide? Virtue, for instance, in the same respect as to which we call it good, is ever acknowledged to be beautiful also. In the characters of men we always * join the two denominations together. The beauty of human bodies corresponds, in like manner, with that economy of parts which constitutes them good; and in every circumstance of life, the same object is constantly accounted both beautiful and good, inasmuch as it answers the purposes for which it was designed.’—Xenophont. Memorab. Socrat. l. iii. c. 8.

This excellent observation has been illustrated and extended by the noble restorer of ancient philosophy. (See the Characteristics, vol. ii., pp. 339 and 422, and vol. iii., p. 181.) And another ingenious author has particularly shewn, that it holds in the general laws of nature, in the works of art, and the conduct of the sciences (Inquiry into the Original of our Ideas of Beauty and Virtue, treat. i. § 8). As to the connexion between beauty and truth, there are two opinions concerning it. Some philosophers assert an independent and invariable law in nature, in consequence of which all rational beings must alike perceive beauty in some certain proportions, and deformity in the contrary. And this necessity being supposed the same with that which commands the assent or dissent of the understanding, it follows, of course, that beauty is founded on the universal and unchangeable law of truth.

But others there are who believe beauty to be merely a relative and arbitrary thing; that, indeed, it was a benevolent provision in nature to annex so delightful a sensation to those objects which are best and most perfect in themselves, that so we might be engaged to the choice of them at once, and without staying to infer their usefulness from their structure and effects; but that it is not impossible, in a physical sense, that two beings, of equal capacities for truth, should perceive, one of them beauty, and the other deformity, in the same proportions. And upon this supposition, by that truth which is always connected with beauty, nothing more can be meant than the conformity of any object to those proportions upon which, after careful examination, the beauty of that species is found to depend. Polycletus, for instance, a famous ancient sculptor, from an accurate mensuration of the several parts of the most perfect human bodies, deduced a canon or system of proportions, which was the rule of all succeeding artists. Suppose a statue modelled according to this: a man of mere natural taste, upon looking at it, without entering into its proportions, confesses and admires its beauty; whereas a professor of the art applies his measures to the head, the neck, or the hand, and, without attending to its beauty, pronounces the workmanship to be just and true.

* This the Athenians did in a peculiar manner, by the words καλοκάγαθός and καλοκάγαθία.

NOTE G.

'As when Brutus rose,' &c.—P. 18.

Cicero himself describes this fact—'Cæsare interfecto—statim cruentum alte extollens M. Brutus pugionem, Ciceronem nominatim exclamavit, atque ei recuperatam libertatem est gratulatus.'—Cic. Philipp. ii. 12.

NOTE H.

'*Where Virtue rising from the awful depth
Of Truth's mysterious bosom,*' &c.—P. 20.

According to the opinion of those who assert moral obligation to be founded on an immutable and universal law; and that which is usually called the moral sense, to be determined by the peculiar temper of the imagination and the earliest associations of ideas.

BOOK SECOND.

NOTE A.

'At last the Muses rose,' &c.—P. 22.

ABOUT the age of Hugh Capet, founder of the third race of French kings, the poets of Provence were in high reputation; a sort of strolling bards or rhapsodists, who went about the courts of princes and noblemen, entertaining them at festivals with music and poetry. They attempted both the epic, ode, and satire; and abounded in a wild and fantastic vein of fable, partly allegorical, and partly founded on traditionary legends of the Saracen wars. These were the rudiments of Italian poetry. But their taste and composition must have been extremely barbarous, as we may judge by those who followed the turn of their fable in much politer times; such as Boiardo, Bernardo, Tasso, Ariosto, &c.

NOTE D.

'Parthenope.'—P. 23.

Or Naples, the birth-place of Sannazaro. The great Torquato Tasso was born at Sorrento in the kingdom of Naples.

NOTE E.

Of dire ambition,' &c.—P. 23.

This relates to the cruel wars among the republics of Italy, and abominable politics of its little princes, about the fifteenth century. These, at last, in conjunction with the papal power, entirely extinguished the spirit of liberty in that country, and established that abuse of the fine arts which has been since propagated over all Europe.

NOTE F.

'Thus from their guardians torn, the tender arts,' &c.—P. 23.

Nor were they only losers by the separation. For philosophy itself, to use the words of a noble philosopher, 'being thus severed from the sprightly arts and sciences, must consequently grow dronish, insipid, pedantic, useless, and directly opposite to the real knowledge and practice of the world.' Insomuch that 'a gentleman,' says another excellent writer, 'cannot easily bring himself to like so austere and ungainly a form: so greatly is it changed from what was once the delight of the finest gentlemen of antiquity, and their recreation after the hurry of public affairs! From this condition it cannot be recovered but by uniting it once more with the works of imagination; and we have had the pleasure of observing a very great progress made towards their union in England within these few years. It is hardly possible to conceive them at a greater distance from each other than at the Revolution, when Locke stood at the head of one party, and Dryden of the other. But the general spirit of liberty, which has ever since been growing, naturally invited our men of wit and genius to improve that influence which the arts of persuasion gave them with the people, by applying them to subjects of importance to society. Thus poetry and eloquence became considerable; and philosophy is now, of course, obliged to borrow of their embellishments, in order even to gain audience with the public.

NOTE G.

'From passion's power alone,' &c.—P. 26.

This very mysterious kind of pleasure, which is often found in the exercise of passions generally counted painful, has been taken notice of by several authors. Lucretius resolves it into self-love:—

'Suave mari magno,' &c. lib. ii. 1.

As if a man was never pleased in being moved at the distress of a tragedy, without a cool reflection that though these fictitious personages were so unhappy, yet he himself was perfectly at ease and in safety. The ingenious author of the Reflections Critiques sur la Poésie et sur la Peinture accounts for it by the general delight which the mind takes in its own activity, and the abhorrence it feels of an indolent and inattentive state: and this, joined with the moral approbation of its own temper, which attends these emotions when natural and just, is certainly the true foundation of the pleasure, which, as it is the origin and basis of tragedy and epic, deserved a very particular consideration in this poem.

NOTE H.

'Inhabitant of earth,' &c.—P. 31.

The account of the economy of Providence here introduced, as the most proper to calm and satisfy the mind when under the compunction of private evils, seems to have come originally from the Pythagorean school: but of the ancient philosophers, Plato has most largely insisted upon it, has established it with all the strength of his capacious understanding, and ennobled it with all the magnificence of his divine imagination. He has one passage so full and clear on this head, that I am persuaded the reader will be pleased to see it here, though somewhat long. Addressing himself to such as are not satisfied concerning divine Providence: 'The Being who presides over the whole,' says he, 'has disposed and complicated all things for the happiness and virtue of the whole, every part of which, according to the extent of its influence, does and suffers what is fit and proper. One of these parts is yours, O unhappy man, which though in itself most inconsiderable and minute, yet being connected with the universe, ever seeks to co-operate with that supreme order. You in the meantime are ignorant of the very end for which all particular natures are brought into existence, that the all-comprehending nature of the whole may be perfect and happy; existing, as it does, not for your sake, but the cause and reason of your existence, which, as in the symmetry of every artificial work, must of necessity concur with the general design of the artist, and be subservient to the whole of which it is a part. Your complaint therefore is ignorant and groundless; since, according to the various energy of creation, and the common laws of nature, there is a constant provision of that which is best at the same time for you and for the whole.—For the governing intelligence clearly beholding all the actions of animated and self-moving creatures, and that mixture of good and evil which diversifies them, considered first of all by what disposition of things, and by what situation of each individual in the general system, vice might be depressed and subdued, and virtue made secure of victory and happiness with the greatest facility and in the highest degree possible. In this manner he ordered through the entire circle of being, the internal constitution of every mind, where should be its station in the universal fabric, and through what variety of circumstances it should proceed in the whole tenor of its existence.' He goes on in his sublime manner to assert a future state of retribution, 'as well for those who, by the exercise of good dispositions being harmonised and assimilated into the divine virtue, are consequently removed to a place of unblemished sanctity and happiness; as of those who by the most flagitious arts have risen from contemptible beginnings to the greatest affluence and power, and whom you therefore look upon as unanswerable instances of negligence in the gods, because you are ignorant of the purposes to which they are subservient, and in what manner they contribute to that supreme intention of good to the whole.'

—Plato de Leg. x. 16.

This theory has been delivered of late, especially abroad, in a manner which subverts the freedom of human actions; whereas Plato appears very careful to preserve it, and has been in that respect imitated by the best of his followers.

'The best and fairest,' &c.—P. 32.

This opinion is so old, that Timæus Locrus calls the Supreme Being δημιουργός του βελτίονος, the artificer of that which is best; and represents him as resolving in the beginning to produce the most excellent work, and as copying the world most exactly from his own intelligible and essential idea; 'so that it yet remains, as it was at first, perfect in beauty, and will never stand in need of any correction or improvement.' There can be no room for a caution here, to understand the expressions, not of any particular circumstances of human life separately considered, but of the sum or universal system of life and being. NOTE A.

'Where the powers
Of Fancy,' &c.—P. 46.

THE influence of the imagination on the conduct of life is one of the most important points in moral philosophy. It were easy, by an induction of facts, to prove that the imagination directs almost all the passions, and mixes with almost every circumstance of action or pleasure. Let any man, even of the coldest head and soberest industry, analyse the idea of what he calls his interest; he will find that it consists chiefly of certain degrees of decency, beauty, and order, variously combined into one system, the idol which he seeks to enjoy by labour, hazard, and self-denial. It is, on this account, of the last consequence to regulate these images by the standard of nature and the general good; otherwise the imagination, by heightening some objects beyond their real excellence and beauty, or by representing others in a more odious or terrible shape than they deserve, may, of course, engage us in pursuits utterly inconsistent with the moral order of things.

If it be objected that this account of things supposes the passions to be merely accidental, whereas there appears in some a natural and hereditary disposition to certain passions prior to all circumstances of education or fortune, it may be answered, that though no man is born ambitious or a miser, yet he may inherit from his parents a peculiar temper or complexion of mind, which shall render his imagination more liable to be struck with some particular objects, consequently dispose him to form opinions of good and ill, and entertain passions of a particular turn. Some men, for instance, by the original frame of their minds, are more delighted with the vast and magnificent, others, on the contrary, with the elegant and gentle aspects of nature. And it is very remarkable, that the disposition of the moral powers is always similar to this of the imagination; that those who are most inclined to admire prodigious and sublime objects in the physical world, are also most inclined to applaud examples of fortitude and heroic virtue in the moral. While those who are charmed rather with the delicacy and sweetness of colours, and forms, and sounds, never fail in like manner to yield the preference to the softer scenes of virtue and the sympathies of a domestic life. And this is sufficient to account for the objection.

Among the ancient philosophers, though we have several hints concerning this influence of the imagination upon morals among the remains of the Socratic school, yet the Stoics were the first who paid it a due attention. Zeno, their founder, thought it impossible to preserve any tolerable regularity in life, without frequently inspecting those pictures or appearances of things, which the imagination offers to the mind (Diog. Laërt. l. vii.) The meditations of M. Aurelius, and the discourses of Epictetus, are full of the same sentiment; insomuch that the latter makes the Χρησις οἷα δεῖ, φαντασιῶν, or right management of the fancies, the only thing for which we are accountable to Providence, and without which a man is no other than stupid or frantic (Arrian. l. i. c. 12. and l. ii. c. 22). See also the Characteristics, vol. i. from p. 313 to 321, where this Stoical doctrine is embellished with all the elegance and graces of Plato.

NOTE B.

'How Folly's awkward arts,' &c.—P. 47.

Notwithstanding the general influence of ridicule on private and civil life, as well as on learning and the sciences, it has been almost constantly neglected or misrepresented, by divines especially. The manner of treating these subjects in the science of human nature, should be precisely the same as in natural philosophy; from particular facts to investigate the stated order in which they appear, and then apply the general law, thus discovered, to the explication of other appearances and the improvement of useful arts.

NOTE C.

'Behold the foremost band,' &c.—P. 48.

The first and most general source of ridicule in the characters of men, is vanity or self-applause for some desirable quality or possession which evidently does not belong to those who assume it.

NOTE D.

'Then comes the second order,' &c.—P. 49.

Ridicule from the same vanity, where, though the possession be real, yet no merit can arise from it, because of some particular circumstances, which, though obvious to the spectator, are yet overlooked by the ridiculous character.

NOTE E.

'Another tribe succeeds,' &c.—P. 50.

Ridicule from a notion of excellence in particular objects disproportioned to their intrinsic value, and inconsistent with the order of nature.

NOTE F.

'But now, ye gay,' &c.—P. 51.

Ridicule from a notion of excellence, when the object is absolutely odious or contemptible. This is the highest degree of the ridiculous; as in the affectation of diseases or vices.

NOTE G.

'Thus far triumphant,' &c.—P. 51

Ridicule from false shame or groundless fear.

NOTE H.

'Last of the motley bands,' &c.—P. 52.

Ridicule from the ignorance of such things as our circumstances require us to know.

NOTE I.

'Suffice it to have said,' &c.—P. 52.

By comparing these general sources of ridicule with each other, and examining the ridiculous in other objects, we may obtain a general definition of it, equally applicable to every species. The most important circumstance of this definition is laid down in the lines referred to; but others more minute we shall subjoin here. Aristotle's account of the matter seems both imperfect and false. Τὸ γὰρ γελοῖον, says he, ἐστὶν ἀμάρτημά τι καὶ αἰσχρὸς, ἀνόδυνον καὶ οὐ φθαρτικόν: 'The ridiculous is some certain fault or turpitude without pain, and not destructive to its subject' (Poet. c. 5). For allowing it to be true, as it is not, that the ridiculous is never accompanied with pain, yet we might produce many instances of such a fault or turpitude which cannot with any tolerable propriety be called ridiculous. So that the definition does not distinguish the thing designed. Nay, further, even when we perceive the turpitude tending to the destruction of its subject, we may still be sensible of a ridiculous appearance, till the ruin become imminent, and the keener sensations of pity or terror banish the ludicrous apprehension from our minds; for the sensation of ridicule is not a bare perception of the agreement or disagreement of ideas, but a passion or emotion of the mind consequential to that perception; so that the mind may perceive the agreement or disagreement, and yet not feel the ridiculous, because it is engrossed by a more violent emotion. Thus it happens that some men think those objects ridiculous, to which others cannot endure to apply the name, because in them they excite a much intenser and more important feeling. And this difference, among other causes, has brought a good deal of confusion into this question.

'That which makes objects ridiculous is some ground of admiration or esteem connected with other more general circumstances comparatively worthless or deformed; or it is some circumstance of turpitude or deformity connected with what is in general excellent or beautiful: the inconsistent properties existing either in the objects themselves, or in the apprehension of the person to whom they relate, belonging always to the same order or class of being, implying sentiment or design, and exciting no acute or vehement emotion of the heart.'

To prove the several parts of this definition: 'The appearance of excellence or beauty connected with a general condition comparatively sordid or deformed' is ridiculous; for instance, pompous pretensions of wisdom joined with ignorance or folly in the Socrates of Aristophanes, and the ostentations of military glory with cowardice and stupidity in the Thraso of Terence.

'The appearance of deformity or turpitude in conjunction with what is in general excellent or venerable,' is also ridiculous: for instance, the personal weaknesses of a magistrate appearing in the solemn and public functions of his station.

'The incongruous properties may either exist in the objects themselves, or in the apprehension of the person to whom they relate:' in the last-mentioned instance, they both exist in the objects; in the instances from Aristophanes and Terence, one of them is objective and real, the other only founded in the apprehension of the ridiculous character.

'The inconsistent properties must belong to the same order or class of being.' A coxcomb in fine clothes, bedaubed by accident in foul weather, is a ridiculous object, because his general apprehension of excellence and esteem is referred to the splendour and expense of his dress. A man of sense and merit, in the same circumstances, is not counted ridiculous, because the general ground of excellence and esteem in him is, both in fact and in his own apprehension, of a very different species.

'Every ridiculous object implies sentiment or design.' A column placed by an architect without a capital or base is laughed at: the same column in a ruin causes a very different sensation.

And lastly, 'the occurrence must excite no acute or vehement emotion of the heart,' such as terror, pity, or indignation; for in that case, as was observed above, the mind is not at leisure to contemplate the ridiculous.

Whether any appearance not ridiculous be involved in this description, and whether it comprehend every species and form of the ridiculous, must be determined by repeated applications of it to particular instances.

NOTE K.

'Ask we for what fair end,' &c.—P. 53.

Since it is beyond all contradiction evident that we have a natural sense or feeling of the ridiculous, and since so good a reason may be assigned to justify the supreme Being for bestowing it, one cannot, without astonishment, reflect on the conduct of those men who imagine it is for the service of true religion to vilify and blacken it without distinction, and endeavour to persuade us that it is never applied but in a bad cause. Ridicule is not concerned with mere speculative truth or falsehood. It is not in abstract propositions or theorems, but in actions and passions, good and evil, beauty and deformity, that we find materials for it; and all these terms are relative, implying approbation or blame. To ask them whether ridicule be a test of truth, is, in other words, to ask whether that which is ridiculous can be morally true, can be just and becoming; or whether that which is just and becoming can be ridiculous?—a question that does not deserve a serious answer. For it is most evident, that, as in a metaphysical proposition offered to the understanding for its assent, the faculty of reason examines the terms of the proposition, and finding one idea, which was supposed equal to another, to be in fact unequal, of consequence rejects the proposition as a falsehood; so, in objects offered to the mind for its esteem or applause, the faculty of ridicule, finding an incongruity in the claim, urges the mind to reject it with laughter and contempt. When, therefore, we observe such a claim obtruded upon mankind, and the inconsistent circumstances carefully concealed from the eye of the public, it is our business, if the matter be of importance to society, to drag out those latent circumstances, and, by setting them in full view, to convince the world how ridiculous the claim is: and thus a double advantage is gained; for we both detect the moral falsehood sooner than in the way of speculative inquiry, and impress the minds of men with a stronger sense of the vanity and error of its authors. And this, and no more, is meant by the application of ridicule.

But it is said, the practice is dangerous, and may be inconsistent with the regard we owe to objects of real dignity and excellence. I answer, the practice fairly managed can never be dangerous; men may be dishonest in obtruding circumstances foreign to the object, and we may be inadvertent in allowing those circumstances to impose upon us: but the sense of ridicule always judges right. The Socrates of Aristophanes is as truly ridiculous a character as ever was drawn:—true; but it is not the character of Socrates, the divine moralist and father of ancient wisdom. What then? did the ridicule of the poet hinder the philosopher from detecting and disclaiming those foreign circumstances which he had falsely introduced into his character, and thus rendered the satirist doubly ridiculous in his turn? No; but it nevertheless had an ill influence on the minds of the people. And so has the reasoning of Spinoza made many atheists: he has founded it, indeed, on suppositions utterly false; but allow him these, and his conclusions are unavoidably true. And if we must reject the use of ridicule, because, by the imposition of false circumstances, things may be made to seem ridiculous, which are not so in themselves; why we ought not in the same manner to reject the use of reason, because, by proceeding on false principles, conclusions will appear true which are impossible in nature, let the vehement and obstinate declaimers against ridicule determine.

NOTE R.

'Not a breeze,' &c.—P. 63.

That this account may not appear rather poetically extravagant than just in philosophy, it may be proper to produce the sentiment of one of the greatest, wisest, and best of men on this head; one so little to be suspected of partiality in the case, that he reckons it among those favours for which he was especially thankful to the gods, that they had not suffered him to make any great proficiency in the arts of eloquence and poetry, lest by that means he should have been diverted from pursuits of more importance to his high station. Speaking of the beauty of universal nature, he observes, that there 'is a pleasing and graceful aspect in every object we perceive,' when once we consider its connexion with that general order. He instances in many things which at first sight would be thought rather deformities; and then adds, 'that a man who enjoys a sensibility of temper with a just comprehension of the universal order—will discern many amiable things, not credible to every mind, but to those alone who have entered into an honourable familiarity with nature and her works.'—M. Antonin. iii. 2.

A POEM.

GENERAL ARGUMENT.

THE pleasures of the imagination proceed either from natural objects, as from a flourishing grove, a clear and murmuring fountain, a calm sea by moonlight; or from works of art, such as a noble edifice, a musical tune, a statue, a picture, a poem. In treating of these pleasures, we must begin with the former class; they being original to the other; and nothing more being necessary, in order to explain them, than a view of our natural inclination toward greatness and beauty, and of those appearances, in the world around us, to which that inclination is adapted. This is the subject of the first book of the following poem.

But the pleasures which we receive from the elegant arts, from music, sculpture, painting, and poetry, are much more various and complicated. In them (besides greatness and beauty, or forms proper to the imagination) we find interwoven frequent representations of truth, of virtue and vice, of circumstances proper to move us with laughter, or to excite in us pity, fear, and the other passions. These moral and intellectual objects are described in the second book; to which the third properly belongs as an episode, though too large to have been included in it.

With the above-mentioned causes of pleasure, which are universal in the course of human life, and appertain to our higher faculties, many others do generally occur, more limited in their operation, or of an inferior origin: such are the novelty of objects, the association of ideas, affections of the bodily senses, influences of education, national habits, and the like. To illustrate these, and from the whole to determine the character of a perfect taste, is the argument of the fourth book.

Hitherto the pleasures of the imagination belong to the human species in general. But there are certain particular men whose imagination is endowed with powers, and susceptible of pleasures, which the generality of mankind never participate. These are the men of genius, destined by nature to excel in one or other of the arts already mentioned. It is proposed, therefore, in the last place, to delineate that genius which in some degree appears common to them all; yet with a more peculiar consideration of poetry: inasmuch as poetry is the most extensive of those arts, the most philosophical, and the most useful.

ARGUMENT.

THE subject proposed. Dedication. The ideas of the Supreme Being, the exemplars of all things. The variety of constitution in the minds of men; with its final cause. The general character of a fine imagination. All the immediate pleasures of the human imagination proceed either from Greatness or Beauty in external objects. The pleasure from Greatness; with its final cause. The natural connexion of Beauty with truth¹ and good. The different orders of Beauty in different objects. The infinite and all-comprehending form of Beauty, which belongs to the Divine Mind. The partial and artificial forms of Beauty, which belong to inferior intellectual beings. The origin and general conduct of beauty in man. The subordination of local beauties to the beauty of the Universe. Conclusion.

WITH what enchantment Nature's goodly scene
 Attracts the sense of mortals; how the mind
 For its own eye doth objects nobler still Prepare; how men by various lessons learn
 To judge of Beauty's praise; what raptures fill
 The breast with fancy's native arts endow'd,
 And what true culture guides it to renown,
 My verse unfolds. Ye gods, or godlike powers,
 Ye guardians of the sacred task, attend
 Propitious. Hand in hand around your bard 10
 Move in majestic measures, leading on
 His doubtful step through many a solemn path,
 Conscious of secrets which to human sight
 Ye only can reveal. Be great in him:
 And let your favour make him wise to speak
 Of all your wondrous empire; with a voice

 Thou chief, O daughter of eternal Love,
 Whate'er thy name; or Muse, or Grace, adored
 By Grecian prophets; to the sons of Heaven
 Known, while with deep amazement thou dost there
 The perfect counsels read, the ideas old,
 Of thine omniscient Father; known on earth
 By the still horror and the blissful tear
 With which thou seizest on the soul of man;
 Thou chief, Poetic Spirit, from the banks
 Of Avon, whence thy holy fingers cull
 Fresh flowers and dews to sprinkle on the turf
 Where Shakspeare lies, be present. And with thee 30
 Let Fiction come, on her aërial wings
 Wafting ten thousand colours, which in sport,
 By the light glances of her magic eye,
 She blends and shifts at will through countless forms,
 Her wild creation. Goddess of the lyre,
 Whose awful tones control the moving sphere,
 Wilt thou, eternal Harmony, descend,
 And join this happy train? for with thee comes
 The guide, the guardian of their mystic rites,
 Wise Order: and, where Order deigns to come, 40
 Her sister, Liberty, will not be far.
 Be present all ye Genii, who conduct
 Of youthful bards the lonely wandering step
 New to your springs and shades; who touch their ear
 With finer sounds, and heighten to their eye
 The pomp of nature, and before them place
 The fairest, loftiest countenance of things.
 Nor thou, my Dyson,¹ to the lay refuse
 Thy wonted partial audience. What though first,

In years unseason'd, haply ere the sports 50
 Of childhood yet were o'er, the adventurous lay
 With many splendid prospects, many charms,
 Allured my heart, nor conscious whence they sprung,
 Nor heedful of their end? yet serious Truth
 Her empire o'er the calm, sequester'd theme
 Asserted soon; while Falsehood's evil brood,
 Vice and deceitful Pleasure, she at once
 Excluded, and my fancy's careless toil
 Drew to the better cause. Maturer aid
 Thy friendship added, in the paths of life, 60
 The busy paths, my unaccustom'd feet
 Preserving: nor to Truth's recess divine,
 Through this wide argument's unbeaten space,
 Withholding surer guidance; while by turns
 We traced the sages old, or while the queen
 Of sciences (whom manners and the mind Acknowledge) to my true companion's voice
 Not unattentive, o'er the wintry lamp
 Inclined her sceptre, favouring. Now the fates
 Have other tasks imposed;—to thee, my friend, 70
 The ministry of freedom and the faith
 Of popular decrees, in early youth,
 Not vainly they committed; me they sent
 To wait on pain, and silent arts to urge,
 Inglorious; not ignoble, if my cares,
 To such as languish on a grievous bed,
 Ease and the sweet forgetfulness of ill
 Conciliate; nor delightless, if the Muse,
 Her shades to visit and to taste her springs,
 If some distinguish'd hours the bounteous Muse 80 Impart, and grant (what she, and she alone,
 Can grant to mortals) that my hand those wreaths
 Of fame and honest favour, which the bless'd

Wear in Elysium, and which never felt 84
 The breath of envy or malignant tongues,
 That these my hand for thee and for myself
 May gather. Meanwhile, O my faithful friend,
 O early chosen, ever found the same,
 And trusted and beloved, once more the verse
 Long destined, always obvious to thine ear, 90
 Attend, indulgent: so in latest years,
 When time thy head with honours shall have clothed
 Sacred to even virtue, may thy mind,
 Amid the calm review of seasons past,
 Fair offices of friendship, or kind peace,
 Or public zeal, may then thy mind well pleased
 Recall these happy studies of our prime.

From Heaven my strains begin: from Heaven descends

The flame of genius to the chosen breast,
 And beauty with poetic wonder join'd, 100
 And inspiration. Ere the rising sun
 Shone o'er the deep, or 'mid the vault of night
 The moon her silver lamp suspended; ere
 The vales with springs were water'd, or with groves
 Of oak or pine the ancient hills were crown'd;
 Then the Great Spirit, whom his works adore,
 Within his own deep essence view'd the forms,
 The forms eternal of created things:
 The radiant sun; the moon's nocturnal lamp;
 The mountains and the streams; the ample stores 110
 Of earth, of heaven, of nature. From the first,
 On that full scene his love divine he fix'd,
 His admiration: till, in time complete,
 What he admired and loved his vital power
 Unfolded into being. Hence the breath
 Of life informing each organic frame:

Hence the green earth, and wild-resounding waves: 117

Hence light and shade, alternate; warmth and cold;

And bright autumnal skies, and vernal showers,

And all the fair variety of things. 120

But not alike to every mortal eye
Is this great scene unveil'd. For while the claims
Of social life to different labours urge
The active powers of man, with wisest care
Hath Nature on the multitude of minds
Impress'd a various bias, and to each
Decreed its province in the common toil.

To some she taught the fabric of the sphere,
The changeful moon, the circuit of the stars,
The golden zones of heaven; to some she gave 130

To search the story of eternal thought;
Of space, and time; of fate's unbroken chain,
And will's quick movement; others by the hand
She led o'er vales and mountains, to explore
What healing virtue dwells in every vein
Of herbs or trees. But some to nobler hopes
Were destined; some within a finer mould
She wrought, and temper'd with a purer flame.

To these the Sire Omnipotent unfolds,
In fuller aspects and with fairer lights, 140

This picture of the world. Through every part
They trace the lofty sketches of his hand;
In earth, or air, the meadow's flowery store,
The moon's mild radiance, or the virgin's mien
Dress'd in attractive smiles, they see portray'd (As far as mortal eyes the portrait scan)
Those lineaments of beauty which delight
The Mind Supreme. They also feel their force,
Enamour'd; they partake the eternal joy.

For as old Memnon's image, long renown'd 150
 Through fabling Egypt, at the genial touch
 Of morning, from its inmost frame sent forth
 Spontaneous music, so doth Nature's hand,
 To certain attributes which matter claims,
 Adapt the finer organs of the mind;
 So the glad impulse of those kindred powers
 (Of form, of colour's cheerful pomp, of sound Melodious, or of motion aptly sped),
 Detains the enliven'd sense; till soon the soul
 Feels the deep concord, and assents through all 160
 Her functions. Then the charm by fate prepared
 Diffuseth its enchantment Fancy dreams,
 Rapt into high discourse with prophets old,
 And wandering through Elysium, Fancy dreams
 Of sacred fountains, of o'ershadowing groves,
 Whose walks with godlike harmony resound:
 Fountains, which Homer visits; happy groves,
 Where Milton dwells; the intellectual power,
 On the mind's throne, suspends his graver cares,
 And smiles; the passions, to divine repose 170
 Persuaded yield, and love and joy alone
 Are waking: love and joy, such as await
 An angel's meditation. Oh! attend,
 Whoe'er thou art whom these delights can touch;
 Whom Nature's aspect, Nature's simple garb
 Can thus command; oh! listen to my song;
 And I will guide thee to her blissful walks,
 And teach thy solitude her voice to hear,
 And point her gracious features to thy view.

Know then, whate'er of the world's ancient store, 180
 Whate'er of mimic Art's reflected scenes,
 With love and admiration thus inspire
 Attentive Fancy, her delighted sons

In two illustrious orders comprehend, 184
 Self-taught: from him whose rustic toil the lark
 Cheers warbling, to the bard whose daring thoughts
 Range the full orb of being, still the form,
 Which Fancy worships, or sublime or fair,
 Her votaries proclaim. I see them dawn:
 I see the radiant visions where they rise, 190
 More lovely than when Lucifer displays
 His glittering forehead through the gates of morn,
 To lead the train of Phœbus and the Spring.

Say, why was man so eminently raised
 Amid the vast creation; why empower'd
 Through life and death to dart his watchful eye,
 With thoughts beyond the limit of his frame;
 But that the Omnipotent might send him forth,
 In sight of angels and immortal minds,
 As on an ample theatre to join 200
 In contest with his equals, who shall best
 The task achieve, the course of noble toils,
 By wisdom and by mercy preordain'd?
 Might send him forth the sovereign good to learn;
 To chase each meaner purpose from his breast;
 And through the mists of passion and of sense,
 And through the pelting storms of chance and pain,
 To hold straight on, with constant heart and eye
 Still fix'd upon his everlasting palm,
 The approving smile of Heaven? Else wherefore burns 210

In mortal bosoms this unquenchèd hope,
 That seeks from day to day sublimer ends,
 Happy, though restless? Why departs the soul
 Wide from the track and journey of her times,
 To grasp the good she knows not? In the field
 Of things which may be, in the spacious field

Of science, potent arts, or dreadful arms, 217
 To raise up scenes in which her own desires Contented may repose; when things, which are,
 Pall on her temper, like a twice-told tale:
 Her temper, still demanding to be free;
 Spurning the rude control of wilful might;
 Proud of her dangers braved, her griefs endured,
 Her strength severely proved? To these high aims,
 Which reason and affection prompt in man,
 Not adverse nor unapt hath Nature framed
 His bold imagination. For, amid
 The various forms which this full world presents
 Like rivals to his choice, what human breast
 E'er doubts, before the transient and minute, 230
 To prize the vast, the stable, the sublime?
 Who, that from heights aërial sends his eye
 Around a wild horizon, and surveys
 Indus or Ganges rolling his broad wave
 Through mountains, plains, through spacious cities old,
 And regions dark with woods, will turn away
 To mark the path of some penurious rill
 Which murmureth at his feet? Where does the soul
 Consent her soaring fancy to restrain,
 Which bears her up, as on an eagle's wings, 240
 Destined for highest heaven; or which of fate's
 Tremendous barriers shall confine her flight
 To any humbler quarry? The rich earth
 Cannot detain her; nor the ambient air
 With all its changes. For a while with joy
 She hovers o'er the sun, and views the small
 Attendant orbs, beneath his sacred beam,
 Emerging from the deep, like cluster'd isles
 Whose rocky shores to the glad sailor's eye
 Reflect the gleams of morning; for a while 250

With pride she sees his firm, paternal sway 251
 Bend the reluctant planets to move each
 Round its perpetual year. But soon she quits
 That prospect; meditating loftier views,
 She darts adventurous up the long career
 Of comets; through the constellations holds
 Her course, and now looks back on all the stars
 Whose blended flames as with a milky stream
 Part the blue region. Empyréan tracts,
 Where happy souls beyond this concave heaven 260
 Abide, she then explores, whence purer light
 For countless ages travels through the abyss,
 Nor hath in sight of mortals yet arrived.
 Upon the wide creation's utmost shore
 At length she stands, and the dread space beyond
 Contemplates, half-recoiling: nathless, down
 The gloomy void, astonish'd, yet unquell'd,
 She plungeth; down the unfathomable gulf
 Where God alone hath being. There her hopes
 Rest at the fated goal. For, from the birth 270
 Of human kind, the Sovereign Maker said
 That not in humble, nor in brief delight,
 Not in the fleeting echoes of renown,
 Power's purple robes, nor Pleasure's flowery lap,
 The soul should find contentment; but, from these Turning disdainful to an equal good,
 Through Nature's opening walks enlarge her aim,
 Till every bound at length should disappear,
 And infinite perfection fill the scene.
 But lo, where Beauty, dress'd in gentler pomp, 280
 With comely steps advancing, claims the verse
 Her charms inspire. O Beauty, source of praise,
 Of honour, even to mute and lifeless things;
 O thou that kindest in each human heart .

Love, and the wish of poets, when their tongue 285
 Would teach to other bosoms what so charms
 Their own; O child of Nature and the soul,
 In happiest hour brought forth; the doubtful garb
 Of words, of earthly language, all too mean,
 Too lowly I account, in which to clothe 290
 Thy form divine; for thee the mind alone
 Beholds, nor half thy brightness can reveal
 Through those dim organs, whose corporeal touch
 O'ershadoweth thy pure essence. Yet, my Muse,
 If Fortune call thee to the task, wait thou
 Thy favourable seasons; then, while fear
 And doubt are absent, through wide nature's bounds
 Expatiate with glad step, and choose at will
 Whate'er bright spoils the florid earth contains,
 Whate'er the waters, or the liquid air, 300
 To manifest unblemish'd Beauty's praise,
 And o'er the breasts of mortals to extend
 Her gracious empire. Wilt thou to the isles
 Atlantic, to the rich Hesperian clime,
 Fly in the train of Autumn, and look on,
 And learn from him; while, as he roves around,
 Where'er his fingers touch the fruitful grove,
 The branches bloom with gold; where'er his foot
 Imprints the soil, the ripening clusters swell,
 Turning aside their foliage, and come forth 310
 In purple lights, till every hillock glows
 As with the blushes of an evening sky?
 Or wilt thou that Thessalian landscape trace,
 Where slow Penéus his clear glassy tide
 Draws smooth along, between the winding cliffs
 Of Ossa and the pathless woods unshorn
 That wave o'er huge Olympus? Down the stream,
 Look how the mountains with their double range

Embrace the vale of Tempé : from each side 319
 Ascending steep to heaven, a rocky mound
 Cover'd with ivy and the laurel boughs
 That crown'd young Phœbus for the Python slain.
 Fair Tempé ! on whose primrose banks the morn
 Awoke most fragrant, and the noon reposed
 In pomp of lights and shadows most sublime :
 Whose lawns, whose glades, ere human footsteps yet
 Had traced an entrance, were the hallow'd haunt
 Of sylvan powers immortal : where they sate
 Oft in the golden age, the Nymphs and Fauns,
 Beneath some arbour branching o'er the flood, 330
 And leaning round hung on the instructive lips
 Of hoary Pan, or o'er some open dale
 Danced in light measures to his sevenfold pipe,
 While Zephyr's wanton hand along their path
 Flung showers of painted blossoms, fertile dews,
 And one perpetual spring. But if our task
 More lofty rites demand, with all good vows
 Then let us hasten to the rural haunt
 Where young Melissa dwells. Nor thou refuse
 The voice which calls thee from thy loved retreat, 340
 But hither, gentle maid, thy footsteps turn :
 Here, to thy own unquestionable theme,
 O fair, O graceful, bend thy polish'd brow,
 Assenting ; and the gladness of thy eyes
 Impart to me, like morning's wish'd light
 Seen through the vernal air. By yonder stream,
 Where beech and elm along the bordering mead
 Send forth wild melody from every bough,
 Together let us wander ; where the hills
 Cover'd with fleeces to the lowing vale 350
 Reply ; where tidings of content and peace
 Each echo brings. Lo, how the western sun

O'er fields and floods, o'er every living soul, 353
 Diffuseth glad repose! There, while I speak
 Of Beauty's honours, thou, Melissa, thou
 Shalt hearken, not unconscious, while I tell
 How first from Heaven she came: how, after all
 The works of life, the elemental scenes,
 The hours, the seasons, she had oft explored,
 At length her favourite mansion and her throne 360
 She fix'd in woman's form; what pleasing ties
 To virtue bind her; what effectual aid
 They lend each other's power; and how divine
 Their union, should some unambitious maid,
 To all the enchantment of the Idalian queen,
 Add sanctity and wisdom; while my tongue
 Prolongs the tale, Melissa, thou may'st feign
 To wonder whence my rapture is inspired;
 But soon the smile which dawns upon thy lip
 Shall tell it, and the tenderer bloom o'er all 370
 That soft cheek springing to the marble neck,
 Which bends aside in vain, revealing more
 What it would thus keep silent, and in vain
 The sense of praise dissembling. Then my song
 Great Nature's winning arts, which thus inform
 With joy and love the rugged breast of man,
 Should sound in numbers worthy such a theme:
 While all whose souls have ever felt the force
 Of those enchanting passions, to my lyre
 Should throng attentive, and receive once more 380
 Their influence, unobscured by any cloud
 Of vulgar care, and purer than the hand
 Of Fortune can bestow; nor, to confirm
 Their sway, should awful Contemplation scorn
 To join his dictates to the genuine strain
 Of Pleasure's tongue; nor yet should Pleasure's ear

Be much averse. Ye chiefly, gentle band 387
 Of youths and virgins, who through many a wish
 And many a fond pursuit, as in some scene
 Of magic bright and fleeting, are allured
 By various Beauty, if the pleasing toil
 Can yield a moment's respite, hither turn
 Your favourable ear, and trust my words.
 I do not mean on bless'd Religion's seat,
 Presenting Superstition's gloomy form,
 To dash your soothing hopes; I do not mean
 To bid the jealous thunderer fire the heavens,
 Or shapes infernal rend the groaning earth,
 And scare you from your joys. My cheerful song
 With happier omens calls you to the field, 400
 Pleased with your generous ardour in the chase,
 And warm like you. Then tell me (for ye know),
 Doth Beauty ever deign to dwell where use
 And aptitude are strangers? is her praise
 Confess'd in aught whose most peculiar ends
 Are lame and fruitless? or did Nature mean
 This pleasing call the herald of a lie,
 To hide the shame of discord and disease,
 And win each fond admirer into snares,
 Foil'd, baffled? No; with better providence 410
 The general mother, conscious how infirm
 Her offspring tread the paths of good and ill,
 Thus, to the choice of credulous desire,
 Doth objects the completest of their tribe
 Distinguish and commend. Yon flowery bank
 Clothed in the soft magnificence of Spring,
 Will not the flocks approve it? will they ask
 The reedy fen for pasture? That clear rill
 Which trickleth murmuring from the mossy rock,
 Yields it less wholesome beverage to the worn 420

And thirsty traveller, than the standing pool 421
 With muddy weeds o'ergrown? Yon ragged vine
 Whose lean and sullen clusters mourn the rage
 Of Eurus, will the wine-press or the bowl
 Report of her, as of the swelling grape
 Which glitters through the tendrils, like a gem
 When first it meets the sun? Or what are all
 The various charms to life and sense adjoin'd?
 Are they not pledges of a state entire,
 Where native order reigns, with every part 430
 In health, and every function well perform'd?
 Thus, then, at first was Beauty sent from Heaven,
 The lovely mistress of Truth and Good
 In this dark world: for Truth and Good are one;
 And Beauty dwells in them, and they in her,
 With like participation. Wherefore then,
 O sons of earth, would ye dissolve the tie?
 Oh! wherefore with a rash and greedy aim
 Seek ye to rove through every flattering scene
 Which Beauty seems to deck, nor once inquire 440
 Where is the suffrage of eternal Truth,
 Or where the seal of undeceitful Good,
 To save your search from folly? Wanting these,
 Lo, Beauty withers in your void embrace;
 And with the glittering of an idiot's toy
 Did Fancy mock your vows. Nor yet let hope,
 That kindest inmate of the youthful breast,
 Be hence appall'd, be turn'd to coward sloth
 Sitting in silence, with dejected eyes
 Incurious and with folded hands; far less 450
 Let scorn of wild fantastic folly's dreams,
 Or hatred of the bigot's savage pride
 Persuade you e'er that Beauty, or the love
 Which waits on Beauty, may not brook to hear

The sacred lore of undeceitful Good 455
 And Truth eternal. From the vulgar crowd
 Though Superstition, tyranness abhorr'd,
 The reverence due to this majestic pair
 With threats and execration still demands;
 Though the tame wretch, who asks of her the way 460
 To their celestial dwelling, she constrains
 To quench or set at nought the lamp of God
 Within his frame; through many a cheerless wild
 Though forth she leads him credulous and dark
 And awed with dubious notion; though at length
 Haply she plunge him into cloister'd cells
 And mansions unrelenting as the grave,
 But void of quiet, there to watch the hours
 Of midnight; there, amid the screaming owl's
 Dire song, with spectres or with guilty shades 470
 To talk of pangs and everlasting woe;
 Yet be not ye dismay'd. A gentler star
 Presides o'er your adventure. From the bower
 Where Wisdom sat with her Athenian sons,
 Could but my happy hand entwine a wreath
 Of Plato's olive with the Mantuan bay,
 Then (for what need of cruel fear to you,
 To you whom godlike love can well command?),
 Then should my powerful voice at once dispel
 Those monkish horrors; should in words divine 480
 Relate how favour'd minds like you inspired,
 And taught their inspiration to conduct
 By ruling Heaven's decree, through various walks
 And prospects various, but delightful all,
 Move onward; while now myrtle groves appear,
 Now arms and radiant trophies, now the rods
 Of empire with the curule throne, or now
 The domes of contemplation and the Muse.

Led by that hope sublime, whose cloudless eye 489
 Through the fair toils and ornaments of earth
 Discerns the nobler life reserved for heaven,
 Favour'd alike they worship round the shrine
 Where Truth conspicuous with her sister-twins,
 The undivided partners of her sway,
 With Good and Beauty reigns. Oh! let not us
 By Pleasure's lying blandishments detain'd,
 Or crouching to the frowns of bigot rage,
 Oh! let not us one moment pause to join
 That chosen band. And if the gracious Power,
 Who first awaken'd my untutor'd song, 500
 Will to my invocation grant anew
 The tuneful spirit, then through all our paths
 Ne'er shall the sound of this devoted lyre
 Be wanting; whether on the rosy mead
 When Summer smiles, to warn the melting heart
 Of Luxury's allurements; whether firm
 Against the torrent and the stubborn hill
 To urge free Virtue's steps, and to her side
 Summon that strong divinity of soul
 Which conquers Chance and Fate: or on the height,
 The goal assign'd her, haply to proclaim 511
 Her triumph; on her brow to place the crown
 Of uncorrupted praise; through future worlds
 To follow her interminated way,
 And bless Heaven's image in the heart of man.
 Such is the worth of Beauty; such her power,
 So blameless, so revered. It now remains,
 In just gradation through the various ranks
 Of being, to contemplate how her gifts
 Rise in due measure, watchful to attend 520
 The steps of rising Nature. Last and least,
 In colours mingling with a random blaze,

Doth Beauty dwell. Then higher in the forms 523
 Of simplest, easiest measure; in the bounds
 Of circle, cube, or sphere. The third ascent
 To symmetry adds colour: thus the pearl
 Shines in the concave of its purple bed,
 And painted shells along some winding shore
 Catch with indented folds the glancing sun.
 Next, as we rise, appear the blooming tribes 530
 Which clothe the fragrant earth; which draw from her
 Their own nutrition; which are born and die,
 Yet, in their seed, immortal; such the flowers
 With which young Maia pays the village maids
 That hail her natal morn; and such the groves
 Which blithe Pomona rears on Vaga's bank,
 To feed the bowl of Ariconian swains
 Who quaff beneath her branches. Nobler still Is Beauty's name where, to the full consent
 Of members and of features, to the pride 540
 Of colour, and the vital change of growth,
 Life's holy flame with piercing sense is given,
 While active motion speaks the temper'd soul:
 So moves the bird of Juno: so the steed
 With rival swiftness beats the dusty plain,
 And faithful dogs with eager airs of joy
 Salute their fellows. What sublimer pomp
 Adorns the seat where Virtue dwells on earth,
 And Truth's eternal day-light shines around,
 What palm belongs to man's imperial front, 550
 And woman powerful with becoming smiles,
 Chief of terrestrial natures, need we now
 Strive to inculcate? Thus hath Beauty there
 Her most conspicuous praise to matter lent,
 Where most conspicuous through that shadowy veil
 Breaks forth the bright expression of a mind,

By steps directing our enraptured search 557
 To Him, the first of minds; the chief; the sole;
 From whom, through this wide, complicated world,
 Did all her various lineaments begin;
 To whom alone, consenting and entire,
 At once their mutual influence all display.
 He, God most high (bear witness, Earth and Heaven),
 The living fountains in himself contains
 Of beauteous and sublime; with him enthroned
 Ere days or years trod their ethereal way,
 In his supreme intelligence enthroned,
 The queen of love holds her unclouded state,
 Urania. Thee, O Father! this extent
 Of matter; thee the sluggish earth and tract 570
 Of seas, the heavens and heavenly splendours feel Pervading, quickening, moving. From the depth
 Of thy great essence, forth didst thou conduct
 Eternal Form: and there, where Chaos reign'd,
 Gav'st her dominion to erect her seat,
 And sanctify the mansion. All her works
 Well pleased thou didst behold: the gloomy fires
 Of storm or earthquake, and the purest light
 Of summer; soft Campania's new-born rose,
 And the slow weed which pines on Russian hills 580
 Comely alike to thy full vision stand:
 To thy surrounding vision, which unites
 All essences and powers of the great world
 In one sole order, fair alike they stand,
 As features well consenting, and alike
 Required by Nature ere she could attain
 Her just resemblance to the perfect shape
 Of universal Beauty, which with thee
 Dwelt from the first. Thou also, ancient Mind,
 Whom love and free beneficence await 590

In all thy doings; to inferior minds, 591
 Thy offspring, and to man, thy youngest son,
 Refusing no convenient gift nor good;
 Their eyes didst open, in this earth, yon heaven,
 Those starry worlds, the countenance divine
 Of Beauty to behold. But not to them
 Didst thou her awful magnitude reveal
 Such as before thine own unbounded sight
 She stands (for never shall created soul Conceive that object), nor, to all their kinds, 600
 The same in shape or features didst thou frame
 Her image. Measuring well their different spheres
 Of sense and action, thy paternal hand
 Hath for each race prepared a different test
 Of Beauty, own'd and revered as their guide
 Most apt, most faithful. Thence inform'd, they scan
 The objects that surround them; and select,
 Since the great whole disclaims their scanty view,
 Each for himself selects peculiar parts
 Of Nature; what the standard fix'd by Heaven 610
 Within his breast approves, acquiring thus
 A partial Beauty, which becomes his lot;
 A Beauty which his eye may comprehend,
 His hand may copy, leaving, O Supreme,
 O thou whom none hath utter'd, leaving all
 To thee that infinite, consummate form,
 Which the great powers, the gods around thy throne
 And nearest to thy counsels, know with thee
 For ever to have been; but who she is,
 Or what her likeness, know not. Man surveys 620
 A narrower scene, where, by the mix'd effect
 Of things corporeal on his passive mind,
 He judgeth what is fair. Corporeal things
 The mind of man impel with various powers,

And various features to his eye disclose. 625

The powers which move his sense with instant joy,
 The features which attract his heart to love,
 He marks, combines, reposit. Other powers
 And features of the self-same thing (unless
 The beauteous form, the creature of his mind, 630

Request their close alliance) he o'erlooks
 Forgotten; or with self-beguiling zeal,
 Whene'er his passions mingle in the work,
 Half alters, half disowns. The tribes of men
 Thus from their different functions and the shapes Familiar to their eye, with art obtain,
 Unconscious of their purpose, yet with art
 Obtain the Beauty fitting man to love;
 Whose proud desires from Nature's homely toil
 Oft turn away, fastidious, asking still 640

His mind's high aid, to purify the form
 From matter's gross communion; to secure
 For ever, from the meddling hand of Change
 Or rude Decay, her features; and to add
 Whatever ornaments may suit her mien,
 Where'er he finds them scatter'd through the paths
 Of Nature or of Fortune. Then he seats
 The accomplish'd image deep within his breast,
 Reviews it, and accounts it good and fair.

Thus the one Beauty of the world entire, 650
 The universal Venus, far beyond
 The keenest effort of created eyes,
 And their most wide horizon, dwells enthroned
 In ancient silence. At her footstool stands
 An altar burning with eternal fire
 Unsullied, unconsumed. Here every hour,
 Here every moment, in their turns arrive
 Her offspring; an innumerable band

Of sisters, comely all! but differing far 659
 In age, in stature, and expressive mien,
 More than bright Helen from her new-born babe.
 To this maternal shrine in turns they come,
 Each with her sacred lamp; that from the source
 Of living flame, which here immortal flows,
 Their portions of its lustre they may draw
 For days, or months, or years; for ages, some;
 As their great parent's discipline requires.
 Then to their several mansions they depart,
 In stars, in planets, through the unknown shores
 Of yon ethereal ocean. Who can tell, 670
 Even on the surface of this rolling earth,
 How many make abode? The fields, the groves,
 The winding rivers and the azure main,
 Are render'd solemn by their frequent feet,
 Their rites sublime. There each her destined home
 Informs with that pure radiance from the skies
 Brought down, and shines throughout her little sphere, Exulting. Straight, as travellers by night
 Turn toward a distant flame, so some fit eye,
 Among the various tenants of the scene, 680
 Discerns the heaven-born phantom seated there,
 And owns her charms. Hence the wide universe,
 Through all the seasons of revolving worlds,
 Bears witness with its people, gods and men,
 To Beauty's blissful power, and with the voice
 Of grateful admiration still resounds:
 That voice, to which is Beauty's frame divine
 As is the cunning of the master's hand
 To the sweet accent of the well-tuned lyre.
 Genius of ancient Greece, whose faithful steps 690
 Have led us to these awful solitudes
 Of Nature and of Science; nurse revered

Of generous counsels and heroic deeds; 693
 Oh! let some portion of thy matchless praise
 Dwell in my breast, and teach me to adorn
 This unattempted theme. Nor be my thoughts
 Presumptuous counted, if, amid the calm
 Which Hesper sheds along the vernal heaven,
 If I, from vulgar Superstition's walk,
 Impatient steal, and from the unseemly rites 700
 Of splendid Adulation, to attend
 With hymns thy presence in the sylvan shade,
 By their malignant footsteps unprofaned.
 Come, O renownèd power; thy glowing mien
 Such, and so elevated all thy form,
 As when the great barbaric lord, again
 And yet again diminish'd, hid his face
 Among the herd of satraps and of kings;
 And, at the lightning of thy lifted spear,
 Crouch'd like a slave. Bring all thy martial spoils, 710
 Thy palms, thy laurels, thy triumphal songs,
 Thy smiling band of Arts, thy godlike sires
 Of civil wisdom, thy unconquer'd youth,
 After some glorious day rejoicing round
 Their new-erected trophy. Guide my feet
 Through fair Lycéum's walk, the olive shades
 Of Academus, and the sacred vale
 Haunted by steps divine, where once, beneath
 That ever living platane's ample boughs,
 Ilissus, by Socratic sounds detain'd, 720
 On his neglected urn attentive lay;
 While Boreas, lingering on the neighbouring steep
 With beauteous Orithyía, his love tale
 In silent awe suspended. There let me
 With blameless hand, from thy unenvious fields,
 Transplant some living blossoms, to adorn

My native clime; while, far beyond the meed 727
 Of Fancy's toil aspiring, I unlock
 The springs of ancient wisdom; while I add
 (What cannot be disjoin'd from Beauty's praise)
 Thy name and native dress, thy works beloved
 And honour'd; while to my compatriot youth
 I point the great example of thy sons,
 And tune to Attic themes the British lyre.

B O O K II. 1765.

ARGUMENT.

INTRODUCTION to this more difficult part of the subject. Of Truth and its three classes, matter of fact, experimental or scientific truth (contradistinguished from opinion), and universal truth; which last is either metaphysical or geometrical, either purely intellectual or perfectly abstracted. On the power of discerning truth depends that of acting with the view of an end; a circumstance essential to virtue. Of Virtue, considered in the divine mind as a perpetual and universal beneficence. Of human virtue, considered as a system of particular sentiments and actions, suitable to the design of Providence and the condition of man; to whom it constitutes the chief good and the first beauty. Of Vice, and its origin. Of Ridicule: its general nature and final cause. Of the Passions: particularly of those which relate to evil natural or moral, and which are generally accounted painful, though not always unattended with pleasure.

THUS far of Beauty and the pleasing forms
 Which man's untutor'd fancy, from the scenes
 Imperfect of this ever changing world,
 Creates; and views, enamour'd. Now my song
 Severer themes demand: mysterious Truth;
 And Virtue, sovereign good: the spells, the trains,
 The progeny of Error; the dread sway
 Of Passion; and whatever hidden stores
 From her own lofty deeds and from herself
 The mind acquires. Severer argument: 10

Not less attractive; nor deserving less 11
 A constant ear. For what are all the forms
 Educ'd by fancy from corporeal things,
 Greatness, or pomp, or symmetry of parts?
 Not tending to the heart, soon feeble grows,
 As the blunt arrow 'gainst the knotty trunk,
 Their impulse on the sense: while the pall'd eye
 Expects in vain its tribute; asks in vain,
 Where are the ornaments it once admired?
 Not so the moral species, nor the powers 20
 Of Passion and of Thought. The ambitious mind
 With objects boundless as her own desires
 Can there converse: by these unfading forms
 Touch'd and awaken'd still, with eager act
 She bends each nerve, and meditates well pleased
 Her gifts, her godlike fortune. Such the scenes
 Now opening round us. May the destined verse
 Maintain its equal tenor, though in tracts
 Obscure and arduous! May the source of light,
 All-present, all-sufficient, guide our steps 30
 Through every maze! and whom, in childish years,
 From the loud throng, the beaten paths of wealth
 And power, thou didst apart send forth to speak
 In tuneful words concerning highest things,
 Him still do thou, O Father, at those hours
 Of pensive freedom, when the human soul
 Shuts out the rumour of the world, him still Touch thou with secret lessons; call thou back
 Each erring thought; and let the yielding strains
 From his full bosom, like a welcome rill 40
 Spontaneous from its healthy fountain, flow!
 But from what name, what favourable sign,
 What heavenly auspice, rather shall I date
 My perilous excursion, than from Truth,

That nearest inmate of the human soul; 45
 Estranged from whom, the countenance divine
 Of man, disfigured and dishonour'd, sinks
 Among inferior things? For to the brutes
 Perception and the transient boons of sense
 Hath Fate imparted; but to man alone 50
 Of sublunary beings was it given
 Each fleeting impulse on the sensual powers
 At leisure to review; with equal eye
 To scan the passion of the stricken nerve,
 Or the vague object striking; to conduct
 From sense, the portal turbulent and loud,
 Into the mind's wide palace one by one
 The frequent, pressing, fluctuating forms,
 And question and compare them. Thus he learns
 Their birth and fortunes; how allied they haunt 60
 The avenues of sense; what laws direct
 Their union; and what various discords rise,
 Or fixed, or casual; which when his clear thought
 Retains and when his faithful words express,
 That living image of the external scene,
 As in a polish'd mirror held to view,
 Is Truth; where'er it varies from the shape
 And hue of its exemplar, in that part Dim Error lurks. Moreover, from without
 When oft the same society of forms 70
 In the same order have approach'd his mind,
 He deigns no more their steps with curious heed
 To trace; no more their features or their garb
 He now examines; but of them and their Condition, as with some diviner's tongue,
 Affirms what Heaven in every distant place,
 Through every future season, will decree.
 This too is Truth; where'er his prudent lips

Wait till experience diligent and slow 79
 Has authorised their sentence, this is Truth;
 A second, higher kind: the parent this
 Of Science; or the lofty power herself,
 Science herself, on whom the wants and cares
 Of social life depend; the substitute
 Of God's own wisdom in this toilsome world;
 The providence of man. Yet oft in vain,
 To earn her aid, with fix'd and anxious eye
 He looks on Nature's and on Fortune's course:
 Too much in vain. His duller visual ray
 The stillness and the persevering acts 90
 Of Nature oft elude; and Fortune oft
 With step fantastic from her wonted walk
 Turns into mazes dim; his sight is foil'd;
 And the crude sentence of his faltering tongue
 Is but opinion's verdict, half believed,
 And prone to change. Here thou, who feel'st thine ear
 Congenial to my lyre's profounder tone,
 Pause, and be watchful. Hitherto the stores,
 Which feed thy mind and exercise her powers,
 Partake the relish of their native soil, 100
 Their parent earth. But know, a nobler dower
 Her Sire at birth decreed her; purer gifts
 From his own treasure; forms which never deign'd
 In eyes or ears to dwell, within the sense
 Of earthly organs; but sublime were placed
 In his essential reason, leading there
 That vast ideal host which all his works
 Through endless ages never will reveal.
 Thus then endow'd, the feeble creature man,
 The slave of hunger and the prey of death, 110
 Even now, even here, in earth's dim prison bound,
 The language of intelligence divine

Attains; repeating oft concerning one 118
 And many, past and present, parts and whole,
 Those sovereign dictates which in furthest heaven,
 Where no orb rolls, Eternity's fix'd ear
 Hears from coëval Truth, when Chance nor Change,
 Nature's loud progeny, nor Nature's self
 Dares intermeddle or approach her throne.
 Ere long, o'er this corporeal world he learns 120
 To extend her sway; while calling from the deep,
 From earth and air, their multitudes untold
 Of figures and of motions round his walk,
 For each wide family some single birth
 He sets in view, the impartial type of all
 Its brethren; suffering it to claim, beyond
 Their common heritage, no private gift,
 No proper fortune. Then whate'er his eye
 In this discerns, his bold unerring tongue
 Pronounceth of the kindred, without bound, 130
 Without condition. Such the rise of forms
 Sequester'd far from sense and every spot
 Peculiar in the realms of space or time;
 Such is the throne which man for Truth amid
 The paths of mutability hath built
 Secure, unshaken, still; and whence he views,
 In matter's mouldering structures, the pure forms
 Of triangle or circle, cube or cone,
 Impassive all; whose attributes nor force
 Nor fate can alter. There he first conceives 140
 True being, and an intellectual world
 The same this hour and ever. Thence he deems
 Of his own lot; above the painted shapes
 That fleeting move o'er this terrestrial scene
 Looks up; beyond the adamantine gates
 Of death expatiates; as his birthright claims

Inheritance in all the works of God; 147
 Prepares for endless time his plan of life,
 And counts the universe itself his home.

Whence also but from Truth, the light of minds,
 Is human fortune gladden'd with the rays
 Of Virtue? with the moral colours thrown
 On every walk of this our social scene,
 Adorning for the eye of gods and men
 The passions, actions, habitudes of life,
 And rendering earth like heaven, a sacred place
 Where Love and Praise may take delight to dwell?
 Let none with heedless tongue from Truth disjoin
 The reign of Virtue. Ere the dayspring flow'd,

Like sisters link'd in Concord's golden chain, 160
 They stood before the great Eternal Mind,
 Their common parent, and by him were both
 Sent forth among his creatures, hand in hand,
 Inseparably join'd; nor e'er did Truth
 Find an apt ear to listen to her lore,

Which knew not Virtue's voice; nor, save where Truth's
 Majestic words are heard and understood,
 Doth Virtue deign to inhabit. Go, inquire
 Of Nature; not among Tartarian rocks,

Whither the hungry vulture with its prey 170
 Returns; not where the lion's sullen roar
 At noon resounds along the lonely banks
 Of ancient Tigris; but her gentler scenes,
 The dovecote and the shepherd's fold at morn,

Consult; or by the meadow's fragrant hedge,
 In spring-time when the woodlands first are green,
 Attend the linnnet singing to his mate
 Couch'd o'er their tender young. To this fond care
 Thou dost not Virtue's honourable name

Attribute; wherefore, save that not one gleam 180

Of Truth did e'er discover to themselves 181
 Their little hearts, or teach them, by the effects
 Of that parental love, the love itself
 To judge, and measure its officious deeds ?
 But man, whose eyelids Truth has fill'd with day,
 Discerns how skilfully to bounteous ends
 His wise affections move; with free accord
 Adopts their guidance; yields himself secure
 To Nature's prudent impulse; and converts
 Instinct to duty and to sacred law. 190
 Hence Right and Fit on earth; while thus to man
 The Almighty Legislator hath explain'd
 The springs of action fix'd within his breast;
 Hath given him power to slacken or restrain
 Their effort; and hath shewn him how they join
 Their partial movements with the master-wheel
 Of the great world, and serve that sacred end
 Which he, the unerring reason, keeps in view.
 For (if a mortal tongue may speak of him
 And his dread ways) even as his boundless eye, 200
 Connecting every form and every change,
 Beholds the perfect Beauty; so his will,
 Through every hour producing good to all
 The family of creatures, is itself
 The perfect Virtue. Let the grateful swain
 Remember this, as oft with joy and praise
 He looks upon the falling dews which clothe
 His lawns with verdure, and the tender seed
 Nourish within his furrows; when between Dead seas and burning skies, where long unmoved 210
 The bark had languish'd, now a rustling gale
 Lifts o'er the fickle waves her dancing prow,
 Let the glad pilot, bursting out in thanks,
 Remember this; lest blind o'erweening pride

Pollute their offerings; lest their selfish heart 215
 Say to the heavenly ruler, ' At our call
 Relents thy power; by us thy arm is moved.'
 Fools! who of God as of each other deem;
 Who his invariable acts deduce
 From sudden counsels transient as their own; 220
 Nor further of his bounty, than the event
 Which haply meets their loud and eager prayer,
 Acknowledge; nor, beyond the drop minute
 Which haply they have tasted, heed the source
 That flows for all; the fountain of his love
 Which, from the summit where he sits enthroned, Pours health and joy, unfailing streams, throughout
 The spacious region flourishing in view,
 The goodly work of his eternal day,
 His own fair universe; on which alone 230
 His counsels fix, and whence alone his will Assumes her strong direction. Such is now
 His sovereign purpose; such it was before
 All multitude of years. For his right arm
 Was never idle; his bestowing love
 Knew no beginning; was not as a change
 Of mood that woke at last and started up
 After a deep and solitary sloth
 Of boundless ages. No; he now is good,
 He ever was. The feet of hoary Time 240
 Through their eternal course have travell'd o'er
 No speechless, lifeless desert; but through scenes
 Cheerful with bounty still; among a pomp
 Of worlds, for gladness round the Maker's throne
 Loud-shouting, or, in many dialects
 Of hope and filial trust, imploring thence
 The fortunes of their people: where so fix'd
 Were all the dates of being, so disposed

To every living soul of every kind 249
 The field of motion and the hour of rest,
 That each the general happiness might serve ;
 And, by the discipline of laws divine
 Convinced of folly or chastised from guilt,
 Each might at length be happy. What remains Shall be like what is past ; but fairer still,
 And still increasing in the godlike gifts
 Of Life and Truth. The same paternal hand,
 From the mute shell-fish gasping on the shore,
 To men, to angels, to celestial minds,
 Will ever lead the generations on . 260
 Through higher scenes of being ; while, supplied
 From day to day by his enlivening breath,
 Inferior orders in succession rise
 To fill the void below. As flame ascends,
 As vapours to the earth in showers return,
 As the poised ocean towards the attracting moon
 Swells, and the ever-listening planets, charm'd
 By the sun's call, their onward pace incline,
 So all things which have life aspire to God,
 Exhaustless fount of intellectual day ! 270
 Centre of souls ! Nor doth the mastering voice
 Of Nature cease within to prompt aright
 Their steps ; nor is the care of Heaven withheld
 From sending to the toil external aid ;
 That in their stations all may persevere
 To climb the ascent of being, and approach
 For ever nearer to the life divine.
 But this eternal fabric was not raised
 For man's inspection. Though to some be given
 To catch a transient visionary glimpse 280
 Of that majestic scene which boundless power
 Prepares for perfect goodness, yet in vain

Would human life her faculties expand 283
 To embosom such an object. Nor could e'er
 Virtue or praise have touch'd the hearts of men,
 Had not the Sovereign Guide, through every stage
 Of this their various journey, pointed out
 New hopes, new toils, which, to their humble sphere
 Of sight and strength, might such importance hold
 As doth the wide creation to his own. 290
 Hence all the little charities of life,
 With all their duties; hence that favourite palm
 Of human will, when duty is sufficed,
 And still the liberal soul in ampler deeds
 Would manifest herself; that sacred sign
 Of her revered affinity to Him
 Whose bounties are his own; to whom none said,
 'Create the wisest, fullest, fairest world,
 And make its offspring happy;' who, intent
 Some likeness of Himself among his works 300
 To view, hath pour'd into the human breast
 A ray of knowledge and of love, which guides
 Earth's feeble race to act their Maker's part,
 Self-judging, self-obliged; while, from before
 That godlike function, the gigantic power
 Necessity, though wont to curb the force
 Of Chaos and the savage elements,
 Retires abash'd, as from a scene too high
 For her brute tyranny, and with her bears
 Her scornèd followers, Terror, and base Awe 310
 Who blinds herself, and that ill-suited pair,
 Obedience link'd with Hatred. Then the soul
 Arises in her strength; and, looking round
 Her busy sphere, whatever work she views,
 Whatever counsel bearing any trace
 Of her Creator's likeness, whether apt

To aid her fellows or preserve herself 317
 In her superior functions unimpair'd,
 Thither she turns exulting: that she claims
 As her peculiar good: on that, through all
 The fickle seasons of the day, she looks
 With reverence still: to that, as to a fence
 Against affliction and the darts of pain,
 Her drooping hopes repair; and, once opposed
 To that, all other pleasure, other wealth,
 Vile, as the dross upon the molten gold,
 Appears, and loathsome as the briny sea
 To him who languishes with thirst, and sighs
 For some known fountain pure. For what can strive
 With Virtue? Which of Nature's regions vast 330
 Can in so many forms produce to sight
 Such powerful Beauty? Beauty, which the eye
 Of Hatred cannot look upon secure:
 Which Envy's self contemplates, and is turn'd
 Ere long to tenderness, to infant smiles,
 Or tears of humblest love. Is aught so fair
 In all the dewy landscapes of the Spring,
 The Summer's noontide groves, the purple eve
 At harvest-home, or in the frosty moon
 Glittering on some smooth sea; is aught so fair 340
 As virtuous friendship? as the honour'd roof
 Whither, from highest heaven, immortal Love
 His torch ethereal and his golden bow
 Propitious brings, and there a temple holds
 To whose unspotted service gladly vow'd
 The social band of parent, brother, child,
 With smiles and sweet discourse and gentle deeds
 Adore his power? What gift of richest clime
 E'er drew such eager eyes, or prompted such Deep wishes, as the zeal that snatcheth back 350

From Slander's poisonous tooth a foe's renown ; 351
 Or crosseth Danger in his lion walk,
 A rival's life to rescue? as the young
 Athenian warrior sitting down in bonds,
 That his great father's body might not want
 A peaceful, humble tomb? the Roman wife
 Teaching her lord how harmless was the wound
 Of death, how impotent the tyrant's rage,
 Who nothing more could threaten to afflict
 Their faithful love? Or is there in the abyss, 360
 Is there, among the adamantine spheres
 Wheeling unshaken through the boundless void,
 Aught that with half such majesty can fill
 The human bosom, as when Brutus rose
 Refulgent from the stroke of Cæsar's fate
 Amid the crowd of patriots; and his arm
 Aloft extending like eternal Jove
 When guilt brings down the thunder, call'd aloud
 On Tully's name, and shook the crimson sword
 Of justice in his rapt astonish'd eye, 370
 And bade the father of his country hail,
 For lo, the tyrant prostrate on the dust,
 And Rome again is free? Thus, through the paths
 Of human life, in various pomp array'd
 Walks the wise daughter of the judge of heaven,
 Fair Virtue; from her father's throne supreme Sent down to utter laws, such as on earth
 Most apt he knew, most powerful to promote
 The weal of all his works, the gracious end
 Of his dread empire. And, though haply man's 380
 Obscurer sight, so far beyond himself
 And the brief labours of his little home,
 Extends not; yet, by the bright presence won
 Of this divine instructress, to her sway

Pleased he assents, nor heeds the distant goal 385
 To which her voice conducts him. Thus hath God,
 Still looking toward his own high purpose, fix'd
 The virtues of his creatures; thus he rules
 The parent's fondness and the patriot's zeal;
 Thus the warm sense of honour and of shame; 390
 The vows of gratitude, the faith of love;
 And all the comely intercourse of praise,
 The joy of human life, the earthly heaven!
 How far unlike them must the lot of guilt
 Be found! Or what terrestrial woe can match
 The self-convicted bosom, which hath wrought
 The bane of others, or enslaved itself
 With shackles vile? Not poison, nor sharp fire,
 Nor the worst pangs that ever monkish hate
 Suggested, or despotic rage imposed, 400
 Were at that season an unwish'd exchange,
 When the soul loathes herself; when, flying thence
 To crowds, on every brow she sees portray'd
 Fell demons, Hate or Scorn, which drive her back
 To solitude, her judge's voice divine
 To hear in secret, haply sounding through
 The troubled dreams of midnight, and still, still Demanding for his violated laws
 Fit recompense, or charging her own tongue
 To speak the award of justice on herself. 410
 For well she knows what faithful hints within
 Were whisper'd, to beware the lying forms
 Which turn'd her footsteps from the safer way,
 What cautions to suspect their painted dress,
 And look with steady eyelid on their smiles,
 Their frowns, their tears. In vain; the dazzling hues
 Of Fancy, and Opinion's eager voice,
 Too much prevail'd. For mortals tread the path

In which Opinion says they follow good 419
 Or fly from evil; and Opinion gives
 Report of good or evil, as the scene
 Was drawn by Fancy, pleasing or deform'd;
 Thus her report can never there be true
 Where Fancy cheats the intellectual eye
 With glaring colours and distorted lines.
 Is there a man to whom the name of death
 Brings terror's ghastly pageants conjured up
 Before him, death-bed groans, and dismal vows,
 And the frail soul plunged headlong from the brink
 Of life and daylight down the gloomy air, 430
 An unknown depth, to gulfs of torturing fire
 Unvisited by mercy? Then what hand
 Can snatch this dreamer from the fatal toils
 Which Fancy and Opinion thus conspire
 To twine around his heart? Or who shall hush
 Their clamour, when they tell him that to die,
 To risk those horrors, is a direr curse
 Than basest life can bring? Though Love with prayers
 Most tender, with affliction's sacred tears,
 Beseech his aid; though Gratitude and Faith 440
 Condemn each step which loiters; yet let none
 Make answer for him that if any frown
 Of Danger thwart his path, he will not stay
 Content, and be a wretch to be secure.
 Here Vice begins then: at the gate of life,
 Ere the young multitude to diverse roads
 Part, like fond pilgrims on a journey unknown,
 Sits Fancy, deep enchantress; and to each
 With kind maternal looks presents her bowl,
 A potent beverage. Heedless they comply, 450
 Till the whole soul from that mysterious draught
 Is tinged, and every transient thought imbibes

Of gladness or disgust, desire or fear, 453
 One homebred colour, which not all the lights
 Of Science e'er shall change; not all the storms
 Of adverse Fortune wash away, nor yet
 The robe of purest Virtue quite conceal.
 Thence on they pass, where, meeting frequent shapes
 Of good and evil, cunning phantoms apt
 To fire or freeze the breast, with them they join 460
 In dangerous parley; listening oft, and oft
 Gazing with reckless passion, while its garb
 The spectre heightens, and its pompous tale
 Repeats, with some new circumstance to suit
 That early tincture of the hearer's soul.
 And should the guardian, Reason, but for one
 Short moment yield to this illusive scene
 His ear and eye, the intoxicating charm
 Involves him, till no longer he discerns,
 Or only guides to err. Then revel forth 470
 A furious band that spurn him from the throne,
 And all is uproar. Hence Ambition climbs
 With sliding feet and hands impure, to grasp
 Those solemn toys which glitter in his view
 On Fortune's rugged steep; hence pale Revenge
 Unsheaths her murderous dagger; Rapine hence
 And envious Lust, by venal fraud upborne,
 Surmount the reverend barrier of the laws
 Which kept them from their prey; hence all the crimes
 That e'er defiled the earth, and all the plagues 480
 That follow them for vengeance, in the guise
 Of Honour, Safety, Pleasure, Ease, or Pomp,
 Stole first into the fond believing mind.

Yet not by Fancy's witchcraft on the brain
 Are always the tumultuous passions driven
 To guilty deeds, nor Reason bound in chains

That Vice alone may lord it. Oft, adorn'd 487
 With motley pageants, Folly mounts his throne,
 And plays her idiot antics, like a queen.
 A thousand garbs she wears: a thousand ways
 She whirls her giddy empire. Lo, thus far
 With bold adventure to the Mantuan lyre
 I sing for contemplation link'd with love,
 A pensive theme. Now haply should my song
 Unbend that serious countenance, and learn
 Thalia's tripping gait, her shrill-toned voice,
 Her wiles familiar: whether scorn she darts
 In wanton ambush from her lip or eye,
 Or whether, with a sad disguise of care
 O'ermantling her gay brow, she acts in sport 500
 The deeds of Folly, and from all sides round
 Calls forth impetuous Laughter's gay rebuke;
 Her province. But through every comic scene
 To lead my Muse with her light pencil arm'd;
 Through every swift occasion which the hand
 Of Laughter points at, when the mirthful sting
 Distends her labouring sides and chokes her tongue,
 Were endless as to sound each grating note
 With which the rooks, and chattering daws, and grave
 Unwieldy inmates of the village pond, 510
 The changing seasons of the sky proclaim;
 Sun, cloud, or shower. Suffice it to have said,
 Where'er the power of Ridicule displays
 Her quaint-eyed visage, some incongruous form,
 Some stubborn dissonance of things combined,
 Strikes on her quick perception: whether Pomp,
 Or Praise, or Beauty be dragg'd in and shewn
 Where sordid fashions, where ignoble deeds,
 Where foul Deformity is wont to dwell;
 Or whether these with shrewd and wayward spite 520

Invade resplendent Pomp's imperious mien, 521
 The charms of Beauty, or the boast of Praise.

Ask we for what fair end the Almighty Sire
 In mortal bosoms stirs this gay contempt,
 These grateful pangs of laughter; from disgust
 Educing pleasure? Wherefore, but to aid
 The tardy steps of Reason, and at once
 By this prompt impulse urge us to depress
 Wild Folly's aims? For, though the sober light
 Of Truth slow dawning on the watchful mind 530
 At length unfolds, through many a subtile tie,
 How these uncouth disorders end at last
 In public evil; yet benignant Heaven,
 Conscious how dim the dawn of Truth appears
 To thousands, conscious what a scanty pause
 From labour and from care the wider lot
 Of humble life affords for studious thought
 To scan the maze of Nature, therefore stamp'd
 These glaring scenes with characters of scorn,
 As broad, as obvious to the passing clown 540
 As to the letter'd sage's curious eye.

But other evils o'er the steps of man
 Through all his walks impend; against whose might
 The slender darts of Laughter nought avail:
 A trivial warfare. Some, like cruel guards,
 On Nature's ever-moving throne attend;
 With mischief arm'd for him whoe'er shall thwart
 The path of her inexorable wheels,
 While she pursues the work that must be done
 Through ocean, earth, and air. Hence, frequent forms
 Of woe; the merchant, with his wealthy bark, 551
 Buried by dashing waves; the traveller,
 Pierced by the pointed lightning in his haste;
 And the poor husbandman, with folded arms,

Surveying his lost labours, and a heap 555
 Of blasted chaff the product of the field
 Whence he expected bread. But worse than these,
 I deem far worse, that other race of ills
 Which human kind rear up among themselves;
 That horrid offspring which misgovern'd Will 560
 Bears to fantastic Error; vices, crimes,
 Furies that curse the earth, and make the blows,
 The heaviest blows, of Nature's innocent hand
 Seem sport: which are indeed but as the care
 Of a wise parent, who solicits good
 To all her house, though haply at the price
 Of tears and froward wailing and reproach
 From some unthinking child, whom not the less
 Its mother destines to be happy still.

These sources then of pain, this double lot 570
 Of evil in the inheritance of man,
 Required for his protection no slight force,
 No careless watch; and therefore was his breast
 Fenced round with passions quick to be alarm'd,
 Or stubborn to oppose; with Fear, more swift
 Than beacons catching flame from hill to hill,
 Where armies land: with Anger, uncontroll'd
 As the young lion bounding on his prey;
 With Sorrow, that locks up the struggling heart;
 And Shame, that overcasts the drooping eye 580
 As with a cloud of lightning. These the part Perform of eager monitors, and goad
 The soul more sharply than with points of steel,
 Her enemies to shun or to resist.
 And as those passions, that converse with good,
 Are good themselves; as Hope and Love and Joy,
 Among the fairest and the sweetest boons
 Of life, we rightly count: so these, which guard

Against invading evil, still excite 589
 Some pain, some tumult; these, within the mind
 Too oft admitted or too long retain'd,
 Shock their frail seat, and by their uncurb'd rage
 To savages more fell than Libya breeds
 Transform themselves, till human thought becomes A gloomy ruin, haunt of shapes unblest'd,
 Of self-tormenting fiends; Horror, Despair,
 Hatred, and wicked Envy: foes to all
 The works of Nature and the gifts of Heaven.

But when through blameless paths to righteous ends
 Those keener passions urge the awaken'd soul, 600
 I would not, as ungracious violence,
 Their sway describe, nor from their free career
 The fellowship of Pleasure quite exclude.
 For what can render, to the self-approved,
 Their temper void of comfort, though in pain?
 Who knows not with what majesty divine
 The forms of Truth and Justice to the mind
 Appear, ennobling oft the sharpest woe
 With triumph and rejoicing? Who, that bears
 A human bosom, hath not often felt 610
 How dear are all those ties which bind our race
 In gentleness together, and how sweet
 Their force, let Fortune's wayward hand the while Be kind or cruel? Ask the faithful youth,
 Why the cold urn of her whom long he loved
 So often fills his arms; so often draws
 His lonely footsteps, silent and unseen,
 To pay the mournful tribute of his tears?
 Oh! he will tell thee that the wealth of worlds
 Should ne'er seduce his bosom to forego 620
 Those sacred hours when, stealing from the noise
 Of care and envy, sweet remembrance sooths

With Virtue's kindest looks his aching breast, 623
 And turns his tears to rapture. Ask the crowd,
 Which flies impatient from the village walk
 To climb the neighbouring cliffs, when far below
 The savage winds have hurl'd upon the coast
 Some helpless bark; while holy Pity melts
 The general eye, or Terror's icy hand
 Smites their distorted limbs and horrent hair; 630
 While every mother closer to her breast
 Catcheth her child, and, pointing where the waves
 Foam through the shatter'd vessel, shrieks aloud
 As one poor wretch, who spreads his piteous arms
 For succour, swallow'd by the roaring surge,
 As now another, dash'd against the rock,
 Drops lifeless down. Oh! deemest thou indeed
 No pleasing influence here by Nature given
 To mutual terror and compassion's tears?
 No tender charm mysterious, which attracts 640
 O'er all that edge of pain the social powers
 To this their proper action and their end?
 Ask thy own heart; when at the midnight hour,
 Slow through that pensive gloom thy pausing eye,
 Led by the glimmering taper, moves around
 The reverend volumes of the dead, the songs
 Of Grecian bards, and records writ by fame
 For Grecian heroes, where the sovereign Power
 Of heaven and earth surveys the immortal page,
 Even as a father meditating all 650
 The praises of his son, and bids the rest
 Of mankind there the fairest model learn
 Of their own nature, and the noblest deeds
 Which yet the world hath seen. If then thy soul
 Join in the lot of those diviner men;
 Say, when the prospect darkens on thy view;

When, sunk by many a wound, heroic states 657
 Mourn in the dust and tremble at the frown
 Of hard Ambition; when the generous band
 Of youths who fought for freedom and their sires
 Lie side by side in death; when brutal Force
 Usurps the throne of Justice, turns the pomp
 Of guardian power, the majesty of rule,
 The sword, the laurel, and the purple robe,
 To poor dishonest pageants, to adorn
 A robber's walk, and glitter in the eyes
 Of such as bow the knee; when beauteous works,
 Rewards of virtue, sculptured forms which deck'd
 With more than human grace the warrior's arch,
 Or patriot's tomb, now victims to appease 670
 Tyrannic envy, strew the common path
 With awful ruins; when the Muse's haunt,
 The marble porch where Wisdom wont to talk
 With Socrates or Tully, hears no more
 Save the hoarse jargon of contentious monks,
 Or female Superstition's midnight prayer;
 When ruthless Havoc from the hand of Time
 Tears the destroying scythe, with surer stroke
 To mow the monuments of Glory down;
 Till Desolation o'er the grass-grown street 680
 Expands her raven wings, and, from the gate
 Where senates once the weal of nations plann'd,
 Hisseth the gliding snake through hoary weeds
 That clasp the mouldering column: thus when all
 The widely-mournful scene is fix'd within Thy throbbing bosom; when the patriot's tear
 Starts from thine eye, and thy extended arm
 In fancy hurls the thunderbolt of Jove
 To fire the impious wreath on Philip's brow,
 Or dash Octavius from the trophied car; 690

Say, doth thy secret soul repine to taste 691
 The big distress? Or wouldst thou then exchange
 Those heart-ennobling sorrows for the lot
 Of him who sits amid the gaudy herd
 Of silent flatterers bending to his nod;
 And o'er them, like a giant, casts his eye,
 And says within himself, 'I am a King,
 And wherefore should the clamorous voice of woe
 Intrude upon mine ear?' The dregs corrupt
 Of barbarous ages, that Circean draught 700
 Of servitude and folly, have not yet,
 Bless'd be the Eternal Ruler of the world!
 Yet have not so dishonour'd, so deform'd
 The native judgment of the human soul,
 Nor so effaced the image of her Sire.

 B O O K III. 1770.

WHAT tongue then may explain the various fate
 Which reigns o'er earth? or who to mortal eyes
 Illustrate this perplexing labyrinth
 Of joy and woe, through which the feet of man
 Are doom'd to wander? That Eternal Mind
 From passions, wants, and envy far estranged,
 Who built the spacious universe, and deck'd
 Each part so richly with whate'er pertains
 To life, to health, to pleasure, why bade he
 The viper Evil, creeping in, pollute 10
 The goodly scene, and with insidious rage,
 While the poor inmate looks around and smiles
 Dart her fell sting with poison to his soul?
 Hard is the question, and from ancient days

Hath still oppress'd with care the sage's thought; 15
 Hath drawn forth accents from the poet's lyre
 Too sad, too deeply plaintive; nor did e'er
 Those chiefs of human kind, from whom the light
 Of heavenly truth first gleam'd on barbarous lands,
 Forget this dreadful secret when they told 20
 What wondrous things had to their favour'd eyes
 And ears on cloudy mountain been reveal'd,
 Or in deep cave by nymph or power divine,
 Portentous oft, and wild. Yet one I know,
 Could I the speech of lawgivers assume,
 One old and splendid tale I would record,
 With which the Muse of Solon in sweet strains
 Adorn'd this theme profound, and render'd all
 Its darkness, all its terrors, bright as noon,
 Or gentle as the golden star of eve. 30
 Who knows not Solon,—last, and wisest far,
 Of those whom Greece, triumphant in the height
 Of glory, styled her fathers,—him whose voice
 Through Athens hush'd the storm of civil wrath;
 Taught envious Want and cruel Wealth to join
 In friendship; and, with sweet compulsion, tamed
 Minerva's eager people to his laws,
 Which their own goddess in his breast inspired?
 'Twas now the time when his heroic task
 Seem'd but perform'd in vain; when, soothed by years
 Of flattering service, the fond multitude 41
 Hung with their sudden counsels on the breath
 Of great Pisistratus, that chief renown'd,
 Whom Hermes and the Idalian queen had train'd,
 Even from his birth, to every powerful art
 Of pleasing and persuading; from whose lips
 Flow'd eloquence which, like the vows of love,
 Could steal away suspicion from the hearts
 Of all who listen'd. Thus from day to day

He won the general suffrage, and beheld 50
Each rival overshadow'd and depress'd
Beneath his ampler state; yet oft complain'd,
As one less kindly treated, who had hoped
To merit favour, but submits perforce
To find another's services preferr'd,
Nor yet relaxeth aught of faith or zeal.
Then tales were scatter'd of his envious foes,
Of snares that watch'd his fame, of daggers aim'd
Against his life. At last, with trembling limbs,
His hair diffused and wild, his garments loose, 60
And stain'd with blood from self-inflicted wounds,
He burst into the public place, as there,
There only, were his refuge; and declared
In broken words, with sighs of deep regret,
The mortal danger he had scarce repell'd.
Fired with his tragic tale, the indignant crowd,
To guard his steps, forthwith a menial band,
Array'd beneath his eye for deeds of war,
Decree. Oh! still too liberal of their trust,
And oft betray'd by over-grateful love, 70
The generous people! Now behold him fenced
By mercenary weapons, like a king,
Forth issuing from the city-gate at eve
To seek his rural mansion, and with pomp
Crowding the public road. The swain stops short,
And sighs; the officious townsmen stand at gaze,
And shrinking give the sullen pageant room.
Yet not the less obsequious was his brow;
Nor less profuse of courteous words his tongue,
Of gracious gifts his hand; the while by stealth, 80
Like a small torrent fed with evening showers,
His train increased; till, at that fatal time
Just as the public eye, with doubt and shame
Startled, began to question what it saw,

Swift as the sound of earthquakes rush'd a voice 85
 Through Athens, that Pisistratus had fill'd
 The rocky citadel with hostile arms,
 Had barr'd the steep ascent, and sate within Amid his hirelings, meditating death
 To all whose stubborn necks his yoke refused. 90
 Where then was Solon? After ten long years
 Of absence, full of haste from foreign shores,
 The sage, the lawgiver had now arrived:
 Arrived, alas! to see that Athens, that Fair temple raised by him and sacred call'd
 To Liberty and Concord, now profaned
 By savage hate, or sunk into a den
 Of slaves who crouch beneath the master's scourge,
 And deprecate his wrath, and court his chains.
 Yet did not the wise patriot's grief impede 100
 His virtuous will, nor was his heart inclined
 One moment with such woman-like distress
 To view the transient storms of civil war,
 As thence to yield his country and her hopes
 To all-devouring bondage. His bright helm,
 Even while the traitor's impious act is told,
 He buckles on his hoary head; he girds
 With mail his stooping breast; the shield, the spear
 He snatcheth; and with swift indignant strides
 The assembled people seeks; proclaims aloud 110
 It was no time for counsel; in their spears
 Lay all their prudence now; the tyrant yet
 Was not so firmly seated on his throne,
 But that one shock of their united force
 Would dash him from the summit of his pride,
 Headlong and grovelling in the dust. 'What else
 Can reassert the lost Athenian name,
 So cheaply to the laughter of the world

Betray'd; by guile beneath an infant's faith 119
So mock'd and scorn'd? Away, then: Freedom now
And Safety dwell not but with Fame in arms;
Myself will shew you where their mansion lies,
And through the walks of Danger or of Death
Conduct you to them.'—While he spake, through all
Their crowded ranks his quick sagacious eye
He darted; where no cheerful voice was heard
Of social daring; no stretch'd arm was seen
Hastening their common task: but pale mistrust
Wrinkled each brow; they shook their head, and down
Their slack hands hung; cold sighs and whisper'd doubts
From breath to breath stole round. The sage meantime Look'd speechless on, while his big bosom heaved, 132
Struggling with shame and sorrow, till at last
A tear broke forth; and, 'O immortal shades,
O Theseus,' he exclaim'd, 'O Codrus, where,
Where are ye now? behold for what ye toil'd
Through life! behold for whom ye chose to die!'
No more he added; but with lonely steps
Weary and slow, his silver beard depress'd,
And his stern eyes bent heedless on the ground, 140
Back to his silent dwelling he repair'd.
There o'er the gate, his armour, as a man
Whom from the service of the war his chief
Dismisseth after no inglorious toil,
He fix'd in general view. One wishful look
He sent, unconscious, toward the public place
At parting; then beneath his quiet roof
Without a word, without a sigh, retired.
Scarce had the morrow's sun his golden rays
From sweet Hymettus darted o'er the fanes 150
Of Cecrops to the Salaminian shores,
When, lo, on Solon's threshold met the feet

Of four Athenians, by the same sad care 153
 Conducted all, than whom the state beheld
 None nobler. First came Megacles, the son
 Of great Alcmaeon, whom the Lydian king,
 The mild, unhappy Cræsus, in his days
 Of glory had with costly gifts adorn'd,
 Fair vessels, splendid garments, tinctured webs
 And heaps of treasured gold, beyond the lot 160
 Of many sovereigns; thus requiting well
 That hospitable favour which erewhile
 Alcmaeon to his messengers had shown,
 Whom he, with offerings worthy of the god,
 Sent from his throne in Sardis, to revere
 Apollo's Delphic shrine. With Megacles
 Approach'd his son, whom Agarista bore,
 The virtuous child of Clisthenes, whose hand
 Of Grecian sceptres the most ancient far
 In Sicyon sway'd: but greater fame he drew 170
 From arms controll'd by justice, from the love
 Of the wise Muses, and the unenvied wreath
 Which glad Olympia gave. For thither once
 His warlike steeds the hero led, and there
 Contended through the tumult of the course
 With skilful wheels. Then victor at the goal,
 Amid the applauses of assembled Greece,
 High on his car he stood and waved his arm.
 Silence ensued: when straight the herald's voice
 Was heard, inviting every Grecian youth, 180
 Whom Clisthenes content might call his son,
 To visit, ere twice thirty days were pass'd,
 The towers of Sicyon. There the chief decreed,
 Within the circuit of the following year,
 To join at Hymen's altar, hand in hand
 With his fair daughter, him among the guests

Whom worthiest he should deem. Forthwith from all 187
 The bounds of Greece the ambitious wooers came :
 From rich Hesperia ; from the Illyrian shore,
 Where Epidamnus over Adria's surge
 Looks on the setting sun ; from those brave tribes
 Chaonian or Molossian, whom the race
 Of great Achilles governs, glorying still
 In Troy o'erthrown ; from rough Ætolia, nurse
 Of men who first among the Greeks threw off
 The yoke of kings, to commerce and to arms
 Devoted ; from Thessalia's fertile meads,
 Where flows Penéus near the lofty walls
 Of Cranon old ; from strong Eretria, queen
 Of all Eubœan cities, who, sublime 200
 On the steep margin of Euripus, views
 Across the tide the Marathonian plain,
 Not yet the haunt of glory. Athens too,
 Minerva's care, among her graceful sons
 Found equal lovers for the princely maid :
 Nor was proud Argos wanting ; nor the domes
 Of sacred Elis ; nor the Arcadian groves
 That overshadow Alphéus, echoing oft
 Some shepherd's song. But through the illustrious band
 Was none who might with Megacles compare 210
 In all the honours of unblemish'd youth.
 His was the beauteous bride ; and now their son,
 Young Clisthenes, betimes, at Solon's gate
 Stood anxious ; leaning forward on the arm
 Of his great sire, with earnest eyes that ask'd
 When the slow hinge would turn, with restless feet,
 And cheeks now pale, now glowing ; for his heart
 Throbb'd full of bursting passions, anger, grief
 With scorn imbitter'd, by the generous boy
 Scarce understood, but which, like noble seeds, 220

Are destined for his country and himself 221
 In riper years to bring forth fruits divine
 Of liberty and glory. Next appear'd
 Two brave companions, whom one mother bore
 To different lords; but whom the better ties
 Of firm esteem and friendship render'd more
 Than brothers: first Miltiades, who drew
 From godlike Æacus his ancient line;
 That Æacus whose unimpeach'd renown
 For sanctity and justice won the lyre 230
 Of elder bards to celebrate him throned
 In Hades o'er the dead, where his decrees
 The guilty soul within the burning gates
 Of Tartarus compel, or send the good
 To inhabit with eternal health and peace
 The valleys of Elysium. From a stem
 So sacred, ne'er could worthier scion spring
 Than this Miltiades; whose aid ere long
 The chiefs of Thrace, already on their ways,
 Sent by the inspired foreknowing maid who sits 240
 Upon the Delphic tripod, shall implore
 To wield their sceptre, and the rural wealth
 Of fruitful Chersonesus to protect
 With arms and laws. But, nothing careful now
 Save for his injured country, here he stands
 In deep solicitude with Cimon join'd:
 Unconscious both what widely different lots
 Await them, taught by nature as they are
 To know one common good, one common ill.
 For Cimon, not his valour, not his birth 250
 Derived from Codrus, not a thousand gifts
 Dealt round him with a wise, benignant hand;
 No, not the Olympic olive, by himself
 From his own brow transferr'd to soothe the mind

Of this Pisistratus, can long preserve 255
 From the fell envy of the tyrant's sons,
 And their assassin dagger. But if death
 Obscure upon his gentle steps attend,
 Yet fate an ample recompense prepares
 In his victorious son, that other great 260
 Miltiades, who o'er the very throne
 Of Glory shall with Time's assiduous hand
 In adamantine characters engrave
 The name of Athens; and, by Freedom arm'd
 'Gainst the gigantic pride of Asia's king,
 Shall all the achievements of the heroes old
 Surmount, of Hercules, of all who sail'd
 From Thessaly with Jason, all who fought
 For empire or for fame at Thebes or Troy.
 Such were the patriots who within the porch 270
 Of Solon had assembled. But the gate
 Now opens, and across the ample floor
 Straight they proceed into an open space
 Bright with the beams of morn: a verdant spot,
 Where stands a rural altar, piled with sods
 Cut from the grassy turf and girt with wreaths,
 Of branching palm. Here Solon's self they found Clad in a robe of purple pure, and deck'd
 With leaves of olive on his reverend brow.
 He bow'd before the altar, and o'er cakes 280
 Of barley from two earthen vessels pour'd
 Of honey and of milk a plenteous stream;
 Calling meantime the Muses to accept
 His simple offering, by no victim tinged
 With blood, nor sullied by destroying fire,
 But such as for himself Apollo claims
 In his own Delos, where his favourite haunt
 Is thence the Altar of the Pious named.

Unseen the guests drew near, and silent view'd 289
 That worship; till the hero-priest his eye
 Turn'd toward a seat on which prepared there lay
 A branch of laurel. Then his friends confess'd Before him stood. Backward his step he drew,
 As loath that care or tumult should approach
 Those early rites divine; but soon their looks,
 So anxious, and their hands, held forth with such Desponding gesture, bring him on perforce
 To speak to their affliction. 'Are ye come,'
 He cried, 'to mourn with me this common shame?
 Or ask ye some new effort which may break 300
 Our fetters? Know then, of the public cause
 Not for yon traitor's cunning or his might Do I despair; nor could I wish from Jove
 Aught dearer, than at this late hour of life,
 As once by laws, so now by strenuous arms,
 From impious violation to assert
 The rights our fathers left us. But, alas!
 What arms? or who shall wield them? Ye beheld
 The Athenian people. Many bitter days
 Must pass, and many wounds from cruel pride 310
 Be felt, ere yet their partial hearts find room
 For just resentment, or their hands indure
 To smite this tyrant brood, so near to all
 Their hopes, so oft admired, so long beloved.
 That time will come, however. Be it yours
 To watch its fair approach, and urge it on
 With honest prudence; me it ill beseems
 Again to supplicate the unwilling crowd
 To rescue from a vile deceiver's hold
 That envied power, which once with eager zeal 320
 They offer'd to myself; nor can I plunge
 In counsels deep and various, nor prepare

For distant wars, thus faltering as I tread 323
On life's last verge, ere long to join the shades
Of Minos and Lycurgus. But behold
What care employs me now. My vows I pay
To the sweet Muses, teachers of my youth
And solace of my age. If right I deem
Of the still voice that whispers at my heart,
The immortal sisters have not quite withdrawn 330
Their old harmonious influence. Let your tongues
With sacred silence favour what I speak,
And haply shall my faithful lips be taught
To unfold celestial counsels, which may arm,
As with impenetrable steel your breasts,
For the long strife before you, and repel
The darts of adverse fate.'—He said, and snatch'd
The laurel bough, and sate in silence down,
Fix'd, wrapp'd in solemn musing, full before
The sun, who now from all his radiant orb 340
Drove the gray clouds, and pour'd his genial light
Upon the breast of Solon. Solon raised Aloft the leafy rod, and thus began:—
 'Ye beauteous offspring of Olympian Jove
And Memory divine, Pierian maids,
Hear me, propitious. In the morn of life,
When hope shone bright and all the prospect smiled,
To your sequester'd mansion oft my steps
Were turn'd, O Muses, and within your gate
My offerings paid. Ye taught me then with strains 350
Of flowing harmony to soften war's
Dire voice, or in fair colours, that might charm
The public eye, to clothe the form austere
Of civil counsel. Now my feeble age,
Neglected, and supplanted of the hope
On which it lean'd, yet sinks not, but to you,

To your mild wisdom flies, refuge beloved 357
 Of solitude and silence. Ye can teach
 The visions of my bed whate'er the gods
 In the rude ages of the world inspired,
 Or the first heroes acted; ye can make
 The morning light more gladsome to my sense
 Than ever it appear'd to active youth
 Pursuing careless pleasure; ye can give
 To this long leisure, these unheeded hours,
 A labour as sublime, as when the sons
 Of Athens throng'd and speechless round me stood,
 To hear pronounced for all their future deeds
 The bounds of right and wrong. Celestial powers!
 I feel that ye are near me: and behold, 370
 To meet your energy divine, I bring A high and sacred theme; not less than those Which to the eternal custody of Fame
 Your lips intrusted, when of old ye deign'd
 With Orpheus or with Homer to frequent
 The groves of Hæmus or the Chian shore.
 'Ye know, harmonious maids, (for what of all My various life was e'er from you estranged?)
 Oft hath my solitary song to you
 Reveal'd that duteous pride which turn'd my steps 380
 To willing exile; earnest to withdraw
 From envy and the disappointed thirst
 Of lucre, lest the bold familiar strife,
 Which in the eye of Athens they upheld
 Against her legislator, should impair
 With trivial doubt the reverence of his laws.
 To Egypt therefore through the Ægean isles
 My course I steer'd, and by the banks of Nile
 Dwelt in Canopus. Thence the hallow'd domes
 Of Saïs, and the rites to Isis paid, 390

I sought, and in her temple's silent courts, 391
 Through many changing moons, attentive heard
 The venerable Sonchis, while his tongue
 At morn or midnight the deep story told
 Of her who represents whate'er has been,
 Or is, or shall be; whose mysterious veil
 No mortal hand hath ever yet removed.
 By him exhorted, southward to the walls
 Of On I pass'd, the city of the sun,
 The ever-youthful god. 'Twas there, amid 400
 His priests and sages, who the livelong night
 Watch the dread movements of the starry sphere,
 Or who in wondrous fables half disclose
 The secrets of the elements, 'twas there
 That great Psenophis taught my raptured ears
 The fame of old Atlantis, of her chiefs,
 And her pure laws, the first which earth obey'd.
 Deep in my bosom sunk the noble tale;
 And often, while I listen'd, did my mind
 Foretell with what delight her own free lyre 410
 Should sometime for an Attic audience raise Anew that lofty scene, and from their tombs
 Call forth those ancient demigods, to speak
 Of Justice and the hidden Providence
 That walks among mankind. But yet meantime
 The mystic pomp of Ammon's gloomy sons Became less pleasing. With contempt I gazed
 On that tame garb and those unvarying paths,
 To which the double yoke of king and priest
 Had cramp'd the sullen race. At last, with hymns 420
 Invoking our own Pallas and the gods
 Of cheerful Greece, a glad farewell I gave
 To Egypt, and before the southern wind
 Spread my full sails. What climes I then survey'd,

What fortunes I encounter'd in the realm 425
 Of Crœsus or upon the Cyprian shore,
 The Muse, who prompts my bosom, doth not now
 Consent that I reveal. But when at length
 Ten times the sun returning from the south
 Had strow'd with flowers the verdant earth, and fill'd 430
 The groves with music, pleased I then beheld
 The term of those long errors drawing nigh.
 Nor yet, I said, will I sit down within
 The walls of Athens, till my feet have trod
 The Cretan soil, have pierced those reverend haunts
 Whence Law and Civil Concord issued forth
 As from their ancient home, and still to Greece
 Their wisest, loftiest discipline proclaim.
 Straight where Amnisus, mart of wealthy ships,
 Appears beneath famed Cnossus and her towers, 440
 Like the fair handmaid of a stately queen,
 I check'd my prow, and thence with eager steps
 The city of Minos enter'd. O ye gods,
 Who taught the leaders of the simpler time
 By written words to curb the untoward will
 Of mortals, how within that generous isle
 Have ye the triumphs of your power display'd
 Munificent! Those splendid merchants, lords
 Of traffic and the sea, with what delight
 I saw them, at their public meal, like sons 450
 Of the same household, join the plainer sort
 Whose wealth was only freedom! whence to these Vile envy, and to those fantastic pride,
 Alike was strange; but noble concord still Cherish'd the strength untamed, the rustic faith,
 Of their first fathers. Then the growing race,
 How pleasing to behold them in their schools,
 Their sports, their labours, ever placed within,

O shade of Minos! thy controlling eye. 459
 Here was a docile band in tuneful tones
 Thy laws pronouncing, or with lofty hymns
 Praising the bounteous gods, or, to preserve
 Their country's heroes from oblivious night,
 Resounding what the Muse inspired of old;
 There, on the verge of manhood, others met,
 In heavy armour through the heats of noon
 To march, the rugged mountain's height to climb
 With measured swiftness, from the hard-bent bow
 To send resistless arrows to their mark,
 Or for the fame of prowess to contend, 470
 Now wrestling, now with fists and staves opposed,
 Now with the biting falchion, and the fence
 Of brazen shields; while still the warbling flute
 Presided o'er the combat, breathing strains
 Grave, solemn, soft; and changing headlong spite
 To thoughtful resolution cool and clear.
 Such I beheld those islanders renown'd,
 So tutor'd from their birth to meet in war
 Each bold invader, and in peace to guard
 That living flame of reverence for their laws, 480
 Which nor the storms of fortune, nor the flood
 Of foreign wealth diffused o'er all the land,
 Could quench or slacken. First of human names
 In every Cretan's heart was Minos still;
 And holiest far, of what the sun surveys
 Through his whole course, were those primeval seats
 Which with religious footsteps he had taught
 Their sires to approach; the wild Dictæan cave
 Where Jove was born: the ever verdant meads
 Of Ida, and the spacious grotto, where 490
 His active youth he pass'd, and where his throne
 Yet stands mysterious; whither Minos came

Each ninth returning year, the king of gods 493
 And mortals there in secret to consult
 On justice, and the tables of his law
 To inscribe anew. Oft also with like zeal
 Great Rhea's mansion from the Cnossian gates
 Men visit; nor less oft the antique fane
 Built on that sacred spot, along the banks
 Of shady Theron, where benignant Jove 500
 And his majestic consort join'd their hands
 And spoke their nuptial vows. Alas, 'twas there
 That the dire fame of Athens sunk in bonds
 I first received; what time an annual feast
 Had summon'd all the genial country round,
 By sacrifice and pomp to bring to mind
 That first great spousal; while the enamour'd youths
 And virgins, with the priest before the shrine,
 Observe the same pure ritual, and invoke
 The same glad omens. There, among the crowd 510
 Of strangers from those naval cities drawn
 Which deck, like gems, the island's northern shore,
 A merchant of Ægina I descried,
 My ancient host; but, forward as I sprung
 To meet him, he, with dark dejected brow,
 Stopp'd half averse; and, "O Athenian guest,"
 He said, "art thou in Crete, these joyful rites
 Partaking? Know thy laws are blotted out:
 Thy country kneels before a tyrant's throne."
 He added names of men, with hostile deeds 520
 Disastrous; which obscure and indistinct
 I heard: for, while he spake, my heart grew cold
 And my eyes dim; the altars and their train
 No more were present to me; how I fared,
 Or whither turn'd, I know not; nor recall
 Aught of those moments, other than the sense

Of one who struggles in oppressive sleep, 527
 And, from the toils of some distressful dream
 To break away, with palpitating heart,
 Weak limbs, and temples bathed in death-like dew,
 Makes many a painful effort. When at last
 The sun and nature's face again appear'd,
 Not far I found me, where the public path,
 Winding through cypress groves and swelling meads,
 From Cnossus to the cave of Jove ascends.
 Heedless I follow'd on; till soon the skirts
 Of Ida rose before me, and the vault
 Wide opening pierced the mountain's rocky side.
 Entering within the threshold, on the ground
 I flung me, sad, faint, overworn with toil.' 540

THE BEGINNING OF THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE PLEASURES OF
 THE IMAGINATION. 1770.

ONE effort more, one cheerful sally more,
 Our destined course will finish; and in peace
 Then, for an offering sacred to the powers
 Who lent us gracious guidance, we will then
 Inscribe a monument of deathless praise,
 O my adventurous song! With steady speed
 Long hast thou, on an untried voyage bound,
 Sail'd between earth and heaven: hast now survey'd,
 Stretch'd out beneath thee, all the mazy tracts
 Of Passion and Opinion; like a waste 10
 Of sands and flowery lawns and tangling woods,

Where mortals roam bewilder'd: and hast now 12
 Exulting soar'd among the worlds above,
 Or hover'd near the eternal gates of heaven,
 If haply the discourses of the gods,
 A curious, but an unpresuming guest,
 Thou mightst partake, and carry back some strain
 Of divine wisdom, lawful to repeat,
 And apt to be conceived of man below.
 A different task remains; the secret paths 20
 Of early genius to explore: to trace
 Those haunts where Fancy her predestined sons,
 Like to the demigods of old, doth nurse
 Remote from eyes profane. Ye happy souls
 Who now her tender discipline obey,
 Where dwell ye? What wild river's brink at eve
 Imprint your steps? What solemn groves at noon
 Use ye to visit, often breaking forth
 In rapture 'mid your dilatory walk,
 Or musing, as in slumber, on the green?— 30
 Would I again were with you!—O ye dales
 Of Tyne, and ye most ancient woodlands; where,
 Oft as the giant flood obliquely strides,
 And his banks open, and his lawns extend,
 Stops short the pleasèd traveller to view
 Presiding o'er the scene some rustic tower
 Founded by Norman or by Saxon hands:
 O ye Northumbrian shades, which overlook
 The rocky pavement and the mossy falls
 Of solitary Wensbeck's limpid stream; 40
 How gladly I recall your well-known seats
 Beloved of old, and that delightful time
 When all alone, for many a summer's day,
 I wander'd through your calm recesses, led
 In silence by some powerful hand unseen.

Nor will I e'er forget you; nor shall e'er 46
The graver tasks of manhood, or the advice
Of vulgar wisdom, move me to disclaim
Those studies which possess'd me in the dawn
Of life, and fix'd the colour of my mind 50
For every future year: whence even now
From sleep I rescue the clear hours of morn,
And, while the world around lies overwhelm'd
In idle darkness, am alive to thoughts
Of honourable fame, of truth divine
Or moral, and of minds to virtue won
By the sweet magic of harmonious verse;
The themes which now expect us. For thus far
On general habits, and on arts which grow
Spontaneous in the minds of all mankind, 60
Hath dwelt our argument; and how, self-taught,
Though seldom conscious of their own employ,
In Nature's or in Fortune's changeful scene
Men learn to judge of Beauty, and acquire Those forms set up, as idols in the soul
For love and zealous praise. Yet indistinct,
In vulgar bosoms, and unnoticed lie
These pleasing stores, unless the casual force
Of things external prompt the heedless mind
To recognise her wealth. But some there are 70
Conscious of Nature, and the rule which man
O'er Nature holds; some who, within themselves
Retiring from the trivial scenes of chance
And momentary passion, can at will Call up these fair exemplars of the mind;
Review their features; scan the secret laws
Which bind them to each other: and display
By forms, or sounds, or colours, to the sense
Of all the world their latent charms display;

Even as in Nature's frame (if such a word, 80
 If such a word, so bold, may from the lips
 Of man proceed) as in this outward frame
 Of things, the great Artificer portrays
 His own immense idea. Various names
 These among mortals bear, as various signs
 They use, and by peculiar organs speak
 To human sense. There are who, by the flight
 Of air through tubes with moving stops distinct,
 Or by extended chords in measure taught
 To vibrate, can assemble powerful sounds 90
 Expressing every temper of the mind
 From every cause, and charming all the soul
 With passion void of care. Others mean time
 The rugged mass of metal, wood, or stone,
 Patiently taming; or with easier hand
 Describing lines, and with more ample scope
 Uniting colours; can to general sight
 Produce those permanent and perfect forms,
 Those characters of heroes and of gods,
 Which from the crude materials of the world, 100
 Their own high minds created. But the chief
 Are poets; eloquent men, who dwell on earth
 To clothe whate'er the soul admires or loves
 With language and with numbers. Hence to these
 A field is open'd wide as Nature's sphere;
 Nay, wider: various as the sudden acts
 Of human wit, and vast as the demands
 Of human will. The bard nor length, nor depth,
 Nor place, nor form controls. To eyes, to ears,
 To every organ of the copious mind, 110
 He offereth all its treasures. Him the hours,
 The seasons him obey, and changeful Time
 Sees him at will keep measure with his flight,

IV.] THE PLEASURES OF THE IMAGINATION. 141

At will outstrip it. To enhance his toil, 114
He summoneth, from the uttermost extent
Of things which God hath taught him, every form
Auxiliar, every power; and all beside Excludes imperious. His prevailing hand
Gives, to corporeal essence, life and sense
And every stately function of the soul. 120
The soul itself to him obsequious lies,
Like matter's passive heap; and as he wills,
To reason and affection he assigns
Their just alliances, their just degrees:
Whence his peculiar honours; whence the race
Of men who people his delightful world,
Men genuine and according to themselves,
Transcend as far the uncertain sons of earth,
As earth itself to his delightful world,
The palm of spotless Beauty doth resign. 130

ODES ON SEVERAL SUBJECTS.

IN TWO BOOKS. BOOK I.

ODE I.

PREFACE.

- 1 ON yonder verdant hillock laid,
Where oaks and elms, a friendly shade,
O'erlook the falling stream,
O master of the Latin lyre,
A while with thee will I retire
From summer's noontide beam.

- 2 And, lo, within my lonely bower,
The industrious bee from many a flower
Collects her balmy dews:
'For me,' she sings, 'the gems are born,
For me their silken robe adorn,
Their fragrant breath diffuse.'

- 3 Sweet murmurer! may no rude storm
This hospitable scene deform,
Nor check thy gladsome toils;
Still may the buds unsullied spring,
Still showers and sunshine court thy wing
To these ambrosial spoils.

- 4 Nor shall my Muse hereafter fail
Her fellow labourer thee to hail;
 And lucky be the strains!
For long ago did Nature frame
Your seasons and your arts the same,
 Your pleasures and your pains.
- 5 Like thee, in lowly, sylvan scenes,
On river banks and flowery greens,
 My Muse delighted plays;
Nor through the desert of the air,
Though swans or eagles triumph there,
 With fond ambition strays.
- 6 Nor where the boding raven chaunts,
Nor near the owl's unhallow'd haunts
 Will she her cares employ;
But flies from ruins and from tombs,
From Superstition's horrid glooms,
 To day-light and to joy.
- 7 Nor will she tempt the barren waste;
Nor deigns the lurking strength to taste
 Of any noxious thing;
But leaves with scorn to Envy's use
The insipid nightshade's baneful juice,
 The nettle's sordid sting.
- 8 From all which Nature fairest knows,
The vernal blooms, the summer rose,
 She draws her blameless wealth;
And, when the generous task is done,
She consecrates a double boon,
 To Pleasure and to Health.

ODE II.

ON THE WINTER-SOLSTICE. 1740.

- 1 THE radiant ruler of the year
At length his wintry goal attains;
Soon to reverse the long career,
And northward bend his steady reins.
Now, piercing half Potosi's height,
Prone rush the fiery floods of light
Ripening the mountain's silver stores:
While, in some cavern's horrid shade,
The panting Indian hides his head,
And oft the approach of eve implores.

- 2 But lo, on this deserted coast,
How pale the sun! how thick the air!
Mustering his storms, a sordid host,
Lo, Winter desolates the year.
The fields resign their latest bloom;
No more the breezes waft perfume,
No more the streams in music roll:
But snows fall dark, or rains resound;
And, while great Nature mourns around,
Her griefs infect the human soul.

- 3 Hence the loud city's busy throngs
Urge the warm bowl and splendid fire:
Harmonious dances, festive songs,
Against the spiteful heaven conspire.
Meantime, perhaps, with tender fears
Some village dame the curfew hears,

While round the hearth her children play :
At morn their father went abroad ;
The moon is sunk, and deep the road ;
She sighs, and wonders at his stay.

4 But thou, my lyre, awake, arise,
And hail the sun's returning force :
Even now he climbs the northern skies,
And health and hope attend his course.
Then louder howl the aërial waste,
Be earth with keener cold embraced,
Yet gentle hours advance their wing ;
And Fancy, mocking Winter's might,
With flowers and dews and streaming light
Already decks the new-born Spring.

5 O fountain of the golden day,
Could mortal vows promote thy speed,
How soon before thy vernal ray
Should each unkindly damp recede !
How soon each hovering tempest fly,
Whose stores for mischief arm the sky,
Prompt on our heads to burst amain,
To rend the forest from the steep,
Or, thundering o'er the Baltic deep,
To whelm the merchant's hopes of gain !

6 But let not man's unequal views
Presume o'er Nature and her laws :
'Tis his with grateful joy to use
The indulgence of the Sovereign Cause ;
Secure that health and beauty springs
Through this majestic frame of things,

Beyond what he can reach to know ;
And that Heaven's all-subduing will,
With good, the progeny of ill,
Attempereth every state below.

- 7 How pleasing wears the wintry night,
Spent with the old illustrious dead!
While, by the taper's trembling light,
I seem those awful scenes to tread
Where chiefs or legislators lie,
Whose triumphs move before my eye,
In arms and antique pomp array'd ;
While now I taste the Ionian song,
Now bend to Plato's godlike tongue
Resounding through the olive shade.
- 8 But should some cheerful, equal friend
Bid leave the studious page a while,
Let mirth on wisdom then attend,
And social ease on learned toil.
Then while, at love's uncareful shrine,
Each dictates to the god of wine
Her name whom all his hopes obey,
What flattering dreams each bosom warm,
While absence, heightening every charm,
Invokes the slow-returning May!
- 9 May, thou delight of heaven and earth,
When will thy genial star arise?
The auspicious morn, which gives thee birth,
Shall bring Eudora to my eyes.
Within her sylvan haunt, behold,
As in the happy garden old,

She moves like that primeval fair :
 Thither, ye silver-sounding lyres,
 Ye tender smiles, ye chaste desires,
 Fond hope and mutual faith, repair.

- 10 And if believing love can read
 His better omens in her eye,
 Then shall my fears, O charming maid,
 And every pain of absence die :
 Then shall my jocund harp, attuned
 To thy true ear, with sweeter sound
 Pursue the free Horatian song :
 Old Tyne shall listen to my tale,
 And Echo, down the bordering vale,
 The liquid melody prolong.

FOR THE WINTER SOLSTICE, DECEMBER 11, 1740.
 AS ORIGINALLY WRITTEN.

- 1 Now to the utmost southern goal
 The sun has traced his annual way,
 And backward now prepares to roll,
 And bless the north with earlier day.
 Prone on Potosi's lofty brow
 Floods of sublimer splendour flow,
 Ripening the latent seeds of gold,
 Whilst, panting in the lonely shade,
 Th' afflicted Indian hides his head,
 Nor dares the blaze of noon behold.
- 2 But lo! on this deserted coast
 How faint the light, how chill the air!
 Lo! arm'd with whirlwind, hail, and frost,
 Fierce Winter desolates the year.

The fields resign their cheerful bloom,
No more the breezes breathe perfume,
No more the warbling waters roll;
Deserts of snow fatigue the eye,
Successive tempests bloat the sky,
And gloomy damps oppress the soul.

3 But let my drooping genius rise,
And hail the sun's remotest ray:
Now, now he climbs the northern skies,
To-morrow nearer than to-day.
Then louder howl the stormy waste,
Be land and ocean worse defaced,
Yet brighter hours are on the wing,
And Fancy, through the wintry gloom,
Radiant with dews and flowers in bloom,
Already hails th' emerging spring.

4 O fountain of the golden day!
Could mortal vows but urge thy speed,
How soon before thy vernal ray
Should each unkindly damp recede!
How soon each tempest hovering fly,
That now fermenting loads the sky,
Prompt on our heads to burst amain,
To rend the forest from the steep,
And thundering o'er the Baltic deep,
To whelm the merchant's hopes of gain!

5 But let not man's imperfect views
Presume to tax wise Nature's laws;
'Tis his with silent joy to use
Th' indulgence of the Sovereign Cause;

Secure that from the whole of things
Beauty and good consummate springs,
Beyond what he can reach to know;
And that the providence of Heaven
Has some peculiar blessing given
To each allotted state below.

- 6 Even now how sweet the wintry night
Spent with the old illustrious dead!
While, by the taper's trembling light,
I seem those awful courts to tread,
Where chiefs and legislators lie,
Whose triumphs move before my eye,
With every laurel fresh display'd;
While charm'd I rove in classic song,
Or bend to freedom's fearless tongue,
Or walk the academic shade.

ODE III.

TO A FRIEND, UNSUCCESSFUL IN LOVE.

- 1 INDEED, my Phædria, if to find
That wealth can female wishes gain,
Had e'er disturb'd your thoughtful mind,
Or caused one serious moment's pain,
I should have said that all the rules
You learn'd of moralists and schools
Were very useless, very vain.
- 2 Yet I perhaps mistake the case—
Say, though with this heroic air,

Like one that holds a nobler chase,
You try the tender loss to bear,
Does not your heart renounce your tongue?
Seems not my censure strangely wrong
To count it such a slight affair?

3 When Hesper gilds the shaded sky,
Oft as you seek the well-known grove,
Methinks I see you cast your eye
Back to the morning scenes of love:
Each pleasing word you heard her say,
Her gentle look, her graceful way,
Again your struggling fancy move.

4 Then tell me, is your soul entire?
Does Wisdom calmly hold her throne?
Then can you question each desire,
Bid this remain, and that be gone?
No tear half-starting from your eye?
No kindling blush, you know not why?
No stealing sigh, nor stifled groan?

5 Away with this unmanly mood!
See where the hoary churl appears,
Whose hand hath seized the favourite good
Which you reserved for happier years:
While, side by side, the blushing maid
Shrinks from his visage, half afraid,
Spite of the sickly joy she wears.

6 Ye guardian powers of love and fame,
This chaste, harmonious pair behold;
And thus reward the generous flame
Of all who barter vows for gold.

O bloom of youth, O tender charms
Well-buried in a dotard's arms!
O equal price of beauty sold!

7 Cease then to gaze with looks of love:
Bid her adieu, the venal fair:
Unworthy she your bliss to prove;
Then wherefore should she prove your care?
No: lay your myrtle garland down;
And let a while the willow's crown
With luckier omens bind your hair.

8 O just escaped the faithless main,
Though driven unwilling on the land;
To guide your favour'd steps again,
Behold your better Genius stand:
Where Truth revolves her page divine,
Where Virtue leads to Honour's shrine,
Behold, he lifts his awful hand.

9 Fix but on these your ruling aim,
And Time, the sire of manly care,
Will fancy's dazzling colours tame;
A soberer dress will beauty wear:
Then shall esteem, by knowledge led,
Enthroned within your heart and head
Some happier love, some truer fair.

ODE IV.

AFFECTED INDIFFERENCE. TO THE SAME.

- 1 YES: you contemn the perjured maid
 Who all your favourite hopes betray'd:
 Nor, though her heart should home return,
 Her tuneful tongue its falsehood mourn,
 Her winning eyes your faith implore,
 Would you her hand receive again,
 Or once dissemble your disdain,
 Or listen to the syren's theme,
 Or stoop to love: since now esteem
 And confidence, and friendship, is no more.
- 2 Yet tell me, Phædria, tell me why,
 When, summoning your pride, you try
 To meet her looks with cool neglect,
 Or cross her walk with slight respect
 (For so is falsehood best repaid),
 Whence do your cheeks indignant glow?
 Why is your struggling tongue so slow?
 What means that darkness on your brow,
 As if with all her broken vow
 You meant the fair apostate to upbraid?

ODE V.

AGAINST SUSPICION.

- 1 OH, fly! 'tis dire Suspicion's mien;
 And, meditating plagues unseen,

The sorceress hither bends:
Behold her touch in gall imbrued:
Behold—her garment drops with blood
Of lovers and of friends.

- 2 Fly far! Already in your eyes
I see a pale suffusion rise;
And soon through every vein,
Soon will her secret venom spread,
And all your heart and all your head
Imbibe the potent stain.
- 3 Then many a demon will she raise
To vex your sleep, to haunt your ways;
While gleams of lost delight
Raise the dark tempest of the brain,
As lightning shines across the main
Through whirlwinds and through night.
- 4 No more can faith or candour move;
But each ingenuous deed of love,
Which reason would applaud,
Now, smiling o'er her dark distress,
Fancy malignant strives to dress
Like injury and fraud.
- 5 Farewell to virtue's peaceful times:
Soon will you stoop to act the crimes
Which thus you stoop to fear:
Guilt follows guilt; and where the train
Begins with wrongs of such a stain,
What horrors form the rear!
- 6 'Tis thus to work her baleful power,
Suspicion waits the sullen hour

Of fretfulness and strife,
When care the infirmer bosom wrings,
Or Eurus waves his murky wings
To damp the seats of life.

7 But come, forsake the scene unblest'd,
Which first beheld your faithful breast
To groundless fears a prey :
Come where, with my prevailing lyre,
The skies, the streams, the groves conspire
To charm your doubts away.

8 Throned in the sun's descending car,
What power unseen diffuseth far
This tenderness of mind ?
What Genius smiles on yonder flood ?
What God, in whispers from the wood,
Bids every thought be kind ?

9 O Thou, whate'er thy awful name,
Whose wisdom our untoward frame
With social love restrains ;
Thou, who by fair affection's ties
Giv'st us to double all our joys,
And half disarm our pains ;

10 If far from Dyson and from me
Suspicion took, by thy decree,
Her everlasting flight ;
If firm on virtue's ample base
Thy parent hand has deign'd to raise
Our friendship's honour'd height ;

11 Let universal candour still,
Clear as yon heaven-reflecting rill,

Preserve my open mind;
 Nor this nor that man's crooked ways
 One sordid doubt within me raise
 To injure human kind.

ODE VI.

HYMN TO CHEERFULNESS.

How thick the shades of evening close!
 How pale the sky with weight of snows!
 Haste, light the tapers, urge the fire,
 And bid the joyless day retire.—
 Alas, in vain I try within
 To brighten the dejected scene,
 While, roused by grief, these fiery pains
 Tear the frail texture of my veins;
 While Winter's voice, that storms around,
 And yon deep death-bell's groaning sound 10
 Renew my mind's oppressive gloom,
 Till starting Horror shakes the room.
 Is there in nature no kind power
 To soothe affliction's lonely hour?
 To blunt the edge of dire disease,
 And teach these wintry shades to please?
 Come, Cheerfulness, triumphant fair,
 Shine through the hovering cloud of care:
 O sweet of language, mild of mien,
 O Virtue's friend and Pleasure's queen, 20
 Assuage the flames that burn my breast,
 Compose my jarring thoughts to rest;
 And while thy gracious gifts I feel,
 My song shall all thy praise reveal.

As once ('twas in Astræa's reign) 25
 The vernal powers renew'd their train,
 It happen'd that immortal Love
 Was ranging through the spheres above,
 And downward hither cast his eye
 The year's returning pomp to spy. 30
 He saw the radiant god of day
 Waft in his car the rosy May;
 The fragrant Airs and genial Hours
 Were shedding round him dews and flowers;
 Before his wheels Aurora pass'd,
 And Hesper's golden lamp was last.
 But, fairest of the blooming throng,
 When Health majestic moved along,
 Delighted to survey below
 The joys which from her presence flow, 40
 While earth enliven'd hears her voice,
 And swains, and flocks, and fields rejoice;
 Then mighty Love her charms confess'd,
 And soon his vows inclined her breast,
 And, known from that auspicious morn,
 The pleasing Cheerfulness was born.
 Thou, Cheerfulness, by heaven design'd
 To sway the movements of the mind,
 Whatever fretful passion springs,
 Whatever wayward fortune brings 50
 To disarrange the power within,
 And strain the musical machine;
 Thou Goddess, thy attempering hand
 Doth each discordant string command,
 Refines the soft, and swells the strong;
 And, joining Nature's general song,
 Through many a varying tone unfolds
 The harmony of human souls.

Fair guardian of domestic life, 59
 Kind banisher of homebred strife,
 Nor sullen lip, nor taunting eye
 Deforms the scene where thou art by:
 No sickening husband damns the hour
 Which bound his joys to female power;
 No pining mother weeps the cares
 Which parents waste on thankless heirs:
 The officious daughters pleased attend;
 The brother adds the name of friend:
 By thee with flowers their board is crown'd,
 With songs from thee their walks resound; 70
 And morn with welcome lustre shines,
 And evening unperceived declines.

Is there a youth whose anxious heart
 Labours with love's unpitied smart?
 Though now he stray by rills and bowers,
 And weeping waste the lonely hours,
 Or if the nymph her audience deign,
 Debase the story of his pain
 With slavish looks, discolour'd eyes,
 And accents faltering into sighs; 80
 Yet thou, auspicious power, with ease
 Canst yield him happier arts to please,
 Inform his mien with manlier charms,
 Instruct his tongue with nobler arms,
 With more commanding passion move,
 And teach the dignity of love.

Friend to the Muse and all her train,
 For thee I court the Muse again:
 The Muse for thee may well exert
 Her pomp, her charms, her fondest art, 90
 Who owes to thee that pleasing sway
 Which earth and peopled heaven obey.

Let Melancholy's plaintive tongue 93
 Repeat what later bards have sung;
 But thine was Homer's ancient might,
 And thine victorious Pindar's flight:
 Thy hand each Lesbian wreath attired:
 Thy lip Sicilian reeds inspired:
 Thy spirit lent the glad perfume
 Whence yet the flowers of Teos bloom; 100
 Whence yet from Tibur's Sabine vale
 Delicious blows the enlivening gale,
 While Horace calls thy sportive choir,
 Heroes and nymphs, around his lyre.
 But see, where yonder pensive sage
 (A prey perhaps to fortune's rage,
 Perhaps by tender griefs oppress'd,
 Or glooms congenial to his breast)
 Retires in desert scenes to dwell,
 And bids the joyless world farewell. 110
 Alone he treads the autumnal shade,
 Alone beneath the mountain laid
 He sees the nightly damps ascend,
 And gathering storms aloft impend;
 He hears the neighbouring surges roll,
 And raging thunders shake the pole;
 Then, struck by every object round,
 And stunn'd by every horrid sound,
 He asks a clue for Nature's ways;
 But evil haunts him through the maze: 120
 He sees ten thousand demons rise
 To wield the empire of the skies,
 And Chance and Fate assume the rod,
 And Malice blot the throne of God.—
 O thou, whose pleasing power I sing,
 Thy lenient influence hither bring;

Compose the storm, dispel the gloom, 127
 Till Nature wear her wonted bloom,
 Till fields and shades their sweets exhale,
 And music swell each opening gale:
 Then o'er his breast thy softness pour,
 And let him learn the timely hour
 To trace the world's benignant laws,
 And judge of that presiding cause
 Who founts on discord beauty's reign,
 Converts to pleasure every pain,
 Subdues each hostile form to rest,
 And bids the universe be bless'd.

O thou, whose pleasing power I sing,
 If right I touch the votive string, 140
 If equal praise I yield thy name,
 Still govern thou thy poet's flame;
 Still with the Muse my bosom share,
 And soothe to peace intruding care.
 But most exert thy pleasing power
 On friendship's consecrated hour;
 And while my Sophron points the road
 To godlike wisdom's calm abode,
 Or warm in freedom's ancient cause
 Traceth the source of Albion's laws, 150
 Add thou o'er all the generous toil
 The light of thy unclouded smile.

But if, by fortune's stubborn sway
 From him and friendship torn away,
 I court the Muse's healing spell
 For griefs that still with absence dwell,
 Do thou conduct my fancy's dreams
 To such indulgent placid themes,
 As just the struggling breast may cheer,
 And just suspend the starting tear, 160

Yet leave that sacred sense of woe
Which none but friends and lovers know.

ODE VII.

ON THE USE OF POETRY.

- 1 Not for themselves did human kind
Contrive the parts by heaven assign'd
On life's wide scene to play:
Not Scipio's force nor Cæsar's skill
Can conquer Glory's arduous hill,
If Fortune close the way.
- 2 Yet still the self-depending soul,
Though last and least in Fortune's roll,
His proper sphere commands;
And knows what Nature's seal bestow'd,
And sees, before the throne of God,
The rank in which he stands.
- 3 Who train'd by laws the future age,
Who rescued nations from the rage
Of partial, factious power,
My heart with distant homage views;
Content, if thou, celestial Muse,
Didst rule my natal hour.
- 4 Not far beneath the hero's feet,
Nor from the legislator's seat
Stands far remote the bard.
'Though not with public terrors crown'd,
Yet wider shall his rule be found,
More lasting his award.

- 5 Lycurgus fashion'd Sparta's fame,
 And Pompey to the Roman name
 Gave universal sway:
 Where are they?—Homer's reverend page
 Holds empire to the thirtieth age,
 And tongues and climes obey.
- 6 And thus when William's acts divine
 No longer shall from Bourbon's line
 Draw one vindictive vow;
 When Sydney shall with Cato rest,
 And Russel move the patriot's breast
 No more than Brutus now;
- 7 Yet then shall Shakspeare's powerful art
 O'er every passion, every heart,
 Confirm his awful throne:
 Tyrants shall bow before his laws;
 And Freedom's, Glory's, Virtue's cause,
 Their dread assertor own.

ODE VIII.

ON LEAVING HOLLAND.

I.—1.

FAREWELL to Leyden's lonely bound,
 The Belgian Muse's sober seat;
 Where, dealing frugal gifts around
 To all the favourites at her feet,
 She trains the body's bulky frame
 For passive persevering toils;

L

And lest, from any prouder aim,
 The daring mind should scorn her homely spoils,
 She breathes maternal fogs to damp its restless flame.

I.—2.

Farewell the grave, pacific air,
 Where never mountain zephyr blew:
 The marshy levels lank and bare,
 Which Pan, which Ceres never knew:
 The Naiads, with obscene attire,
 Urging in vain their urns to flow;
 While round them chant the croaking choir,
 And haply soothe some lover's prudent woe,
 Or prompt some restive bard and modulate his lyre.

I.—3.

Farewell, ye nymphs, whom sober care of gain
 Snatch'd in your cradles from the god of Love:
 She render'd all his boasted arrows vain;
 And all his gifts did he in spite remove.
 Ye too, the slow-eyed fathers of the land,
 With whom dominion steals from hand to hand,
 Unown'd, undignified by public choice,
 I go where Liberty to all is known,
 And tells a monarch on his throne,
 He reigns not but by her preserving voice.

II.—1.

O my loved England, when with thee
 Shall I sit down, to part no more?
 Far from this pale, discolour'd sea,
 That sleeps upon the reedy shore:
 When shall I plough thy azure tide?
 When on thy hills the flocks admire,

Like mountain snows; till down their side
I trace the village and the sacred spire,
While bowers and copses green the golden slope divide?

II.—2.

Ye nymphs who guard the pathless grove,
Ye blue-eyed sisters of the streams,
With whom I wont at morn to rove,
With whom at noon I talk'd in dreams;
Oh! take me to your haunts again,
The rocky spring, the greenwood glade;
To guide my lonely footsteps deign,
To prompt my slumbers in the murmuring shade,
And soothe my vacant ear with many an airy strain.

II.—3.

And thou, my faithful harp, no longer mourn
Thy drooping master's inauspicious hand:
Now brighter skies and fresher gales return,
Now fairer maids thy melody demand.
Daughters of Albion, listen to my lyre!
O Phœbus, guardian of the Aonian choir,
Why sounds not mine harmonious as thy own,
When all the virgin deities above
With Venus and with Juno move
In concert round the Olympian father's throne?

III.—1.

Thee too, protectress of my lays,
Elate with whose majestic call
Above degenerate Latium's praise,
Above the slavish boast of Gaul,

I dare from impious thrones reclaim,
 And wanton sloth's ignoble charms,
 The honours of a poet's name
 To Somers' counsels, or to Hampden's arms,
 Thee, Freedom, I rejoin, and bless thy genuine flame.

III.—2.

Great citizen of Albion! Thee
 Heroic Valour still attends,
 And useful Science, pleased to see
 How Art her studious toil extends:
 While Truth, diffusing from on high
 A lustre unconfined as day,
 Fills and commands the public eye;
 Till, pierced and sinking by her powerful ray,
 Tame Faith and monkish Awe, like nightly demons, fly.

III.—3.

Hence the whole land the patriot's ardour shares:
 Hence dread Religion dwells with social Joy;
 And holy passions and unsullied cares,
 In youth, in age, domestic life employ.
 O fair Britannia, hail!—With partial love
 The tribes of men their native seats approve,
 Unjust and hostile to each foreign fame:
 But when for generous minds and manly laws
 A nation holds her prime applause,
 There public zeal shall all reproof disclaim.

ODE IX.

TO CURIO.¹ 1744.

- 1 THRICE hath the spring beheld thy faded fame
 Since I exulting grasp'd the tuneful shell:
 Eager through endless years to sound thy name,
 Proud that my memory with thine should dwell.
 How hast thou stain'd the splendour of my choice!
 Those godlike forms which hover'd round thy voice,
 Laws, freedom, glory, whither are they flown?
 What can I now of thee to Time report,
 Save thy fond country made thy impious sport,
 Her fortune and her hope the victims of thy own?
- 2 There are, with eyes unmoved and reckless heart
 Who saw thee from thy summit fall thus low,
 Who deem'd thy arm extended but to dart
 The public vengeance on thy private foe.
 But, spite of every gloss of envious minds,
 The owl-eyed race whom virtue's lustre blinds,
 Who sagely prove that each man hath his price,
 I still believed thy aim from blemish free,
 I yet, even yet, believe it, spite of thee,
 And all thy painted pleas to greatness and to vice.
- 3 'Thou didst not dream of liberty decay'd,
 Nor wish to make her guardian laws more strong:
 But the rash many, first by thee misled,
 Bore thee at length unwillingly along.'
 Rise from your sad abodes, ye cursed of old
 For faith deserted or for cities sold,

Own here one untried, unexampled, deed;
One mystery of shame from Curio learn,
To beg the infamy he did not earn,
And scape in Guilt's disguise from Virtue's offer'd need.

4 For saw we not that dangerous power avow'd
Whom Freedom oft hath found her mortal bane,
Whom public Wisdom ever strove to exclude,
And but with blushes suffereth in her train?
Corruption vaunted her bewitching spoils,
O'er court, o'er senate, spread in pomp her toils,
And call'd herself the state's directing soul:
Till Curio, like a good magician, tried
With Eloquence and Reason at his side,
By strength of holier spells the enchantress to control.

5 Soon with thy country's hope thy fame extends:
The rescued merchant oft thy words resounds:
Thee and thy cause the rural hearth defends:
His bowl to thee the grateful sailor crowns:
The learn'd recluse, with awful zeal who read
Of Grecian heroes, Roman patriots dead,
Now with like awe doth living merit scan:
While he, whom virtue in his bless'd retreat
Bade social ease and public passions meet,
Ascends the civil scene, and knows to be a man.

6 At length in view the glorious end appear'd:
We saw thy spirit through the senate reign;
And Freedom's friends thy instant omen heard
Of laws for which their fathers bled in vain.
Waked in the strife the public Genius rose
More keen, more ardent from his long repose;

Deep through her bounds the city felt his call;
Each crowded haunt was stirr'd beneath his power,
And murmuring challenged the deciding hour
Of that too vast event, the hope and dread of all.

7 O ye good powers who look on human kind,
Instruct the mighty moments as they roll;
And watch the fleeting shapes in Curio's mind,
And steer his passions steady to the goal.
O Alfred, father of the English name,
O valiant Edward, first in civil fame,
O William, height of public virtue pure,
Bend from your radiant seats a joyful eye,
Behold the sum of all your labours nigh,
Your plans of law complete, your ends of rule secure.

8 'Twas then—O shame! O soul from faith estranged!
O Albion, oft to flattering vows a prey!
'Twas then—Thy thought what sudden frenzy changed?
What rushing palsy took thy strength away?
Is this the man in Freedom's cause approved—
The man so great, so honour'd, so beloved—
Whom the dead envied and the living bless'd—
This patient slave by tinsel bonds allured—
This wretched suitor for a boon abjured—
Whom those that fear'd him scorn; that trusted him, detest?

9 O lost alike to action and repose!
With all that habit of familiar fame,
Sold to the mockery of relentless foes,
And doom'd to exhaust the dregs of life in shame,

To act with burning brow and throbbing heart
 A poor deserter's dull exploded part,
 To slight the favour thou canst hope no more,
 Renounce the giddy crowd, the vulgar wind,
 Charge thy own lightness on thy country's mind,
 And from her voice appeal to each tame foreign shore.

10 But England's sons, to purchase thence applause,
 Shall ne'er the loyalty of slaves pretend,
 By courtly passions try the public cause;
 Nor to the forms of rule betray the end.
 O race erect! by manliest passions moved,
 The labours which to Virtue stand approved,
 Prompt with a lover's fondness to survey;
 Yet, where Injustice works her wilful claim,
 Fierce as the flight of Jove's destroying flame,
 Impatient to confront, and dreadful to repay.

11 These thy heart owns no longer. In their room
 See the grave queen of pageants, Honour, dwell
 Couch'd in thy bosom's deep tempestuous gloom,
 Like some grim idol in a sorcerer's cell.
 Before her rites thy sickening reason flew,
 Divine Persuasion from thy tongue withdrew,
 While Laughter mock'd, or Pity stole a sigh:
 Can Wit her tender movements rightly frame
 Where the prime function of the soul is lame?
 Can Fancy's feeble springs the force of Truth supply?

12 But come: 'tis time: strong Destiny impends
 To shut thee from the joys thou hast betray'd:
 With princes fill'd, the solemn fane ascends,
 By Infamy, the mindful demon sway'd.

There vengeful vows for guardian laws effaced,
From nations fetter'd, and from towns laid waste,
For ever through the spacious courts resound :
There long posterity's united groan,
And the sad charge of horrors not their own,
Assail the giant chiefs, and press them to the ground.

13 In sight, old Time, imperious judge, awaits :
Above revenge, or fear, or pity, just,
He urgeth onward to those guilty gates
The great, the sage, the happy, and august.
And still he asks them of the hidden plan
Whence every treaty, every war began,
Evolves their secrets and their guilt proclaims :
And still his hands despoil them on the road
Of each vain wreath by lying bards bestow'd,
And crush their trophies huge, and raze their sculptured names.

14 Ye mighty shades, arise, give place, attend :
Here his eternal mansion Curio seeks.
Low doth proud Wentworth to the stranger bend,
And his dire welcome hardy Clifford speaks :—
' He comes, whom fate with surer arts prepared
To accomplish all which we but vainly dared ;
Whom o'er the stubborn herd she taught to reign :
Who soothed with gaudy dreams their raging power
Even to its last irrevocable hour ;
Then baffled their rude strength, and broke them to the chain.'

15 But ye, whom yet wise Liberty inspires,
Whom for her champions o'er the world she claims

(That household godhead whom of old your sires Sought in the woods of Elbe and bore to Thames), Drive ye this hostile omen far away;
 Their own fell efforts on her foes repay;
 Your wealth, your arts, your fame, be hers alone:
 Still gird your swords to combat on her side;
 Still frame your laws her generous test to abide;
 And win to her defence the altar and the throne.

- 16 Protect her from yourselves, ere yet the flood
 Of golden Luxury, which Commerce pours, Hath spread that selfish fierceness through your blood,
 Which not her lightest discipline endures:
 Snatch from fantastic demagogues her cause:
 Dream not of Numa's manners, Plato's laws:
 A wiser founder, and a nobler plan,
 O sons of Alfred, were for you assign'd:
 Bring to that birthright but an equal mind,
 And no sublimer lot will fate reserve for man.

ODE X.

TO THE MUSE.

- 1 QUEEN of my songs, harmonious maid,
 Ah! why hast thou withdrawn thy aid?
 Ah! why forsaken thus my breast
 With inauspicious damps oppress'd?
 Where is the dread prophetic heat
 With which my bosom wont to beat?
 Where all the bright mysterious dreams
 Of haunted groves and tuneful streams,
 That woo'd my genius to divinest themes?

2 Say, goddess, can the festal board,
Or young Olympia's form adored;
Say, can the pomp of promised fame
Relume thy faint, thy dying flame?
Or have melodious airs the power
To give one free, poetic hour?
Or, from amid the Elysian train,
The soul of Milton shall I gain,
To win thee back with some celestial strain?

3 O powerful strain! O sacred soul!
His numbers every sense control:
And now again my bosom burns;
The Muse, the Muse herself returns.
Such on the banks of Tyne, confess'd,
I hail'd the fair immortal guest,
When first she seal'd me for her own,
Made all her blissful treasures known,
And bade me swear to follow Her alone.

ODE XI.

ON LOVE. TO A FRIEND.

1 No, foolish youth—to virtuous fame
If now thy early hopes be vow'd,
If true ambition's nobler flame
Command thy footsteps from the crowd,
Lean not to Love's enchanting snare;
His songs, his words, his looks beware,
Nor join his votaries, the young and fair.

2 By thought, by dangers, and by toils,
The wreath of just renown is worn;
Nor will ambition's awful spoils
The flowery pomp of ease adorn;
But Love unbends the force of thought;
By Love unmanly fears are taught;
And Love's reward with gaudy sloth is bought.

3 Yet thou hast read in tuneful lays,
And heard from many a zealous breast,
The pleasing tale of beauty's praise
In wisdom's lofty language dress'd;
Of beauty powerful to impart
Each finer sense, each comelier art,
And soothe and polish man's ungentle heart.

4 If then, from Love's deceit secure,
Thus far alone thy wishes tend,
Go; see the white-wing'd evening hour
On Delia's vernal walk descend:
Go, while the golden light serene,
The grove, the lawn, the soften'd scene
Becomes the presence of the rural queen.

5 Attend, while that harmonious tongue
Each bosom, each desire commands:
Apollo's lute by Hermes strung,
And touch'd by chaste Minerva's hands,
Attend. I feel a force divine,
O Delia, win my thoughts to thine;
That half the colour of thy life is mine.

6 Yet conscious of the dangerous charm,
Soon would I turn my steps away;

Nor oft provoke the lovely harm,
Nor lull my reason's watchful sway.
But thou, my friend—I hear thy sighs:
Alas, I read thy downcast eyes;
And thy tongue falters, and thy colour flies.

7 So soon again to meet the fair?
So pensive all this absent hour?—
O yet, unlucky youth, beware,
While yet to think is in thy power.
In vain with friendship's flattering name
Thy passion veils its inward shame;
Friendship, the treacherous fuel of thy flame!

8 Once, I remember, new to Love,
And dreading his tyrannic chain,
I sought a gentle maid to prove
What peaceful joys in friendship reign:
Whence we forsooth might safely stand,
And pitying view the love-sick band,
And mock the wingèd boy's malicious hand.

9 Thus frequent pass'd the cloudless day,
To smiles and sweet discourse resign'd;
While I exulted to survey
One generous woman's real mind:
Till friendship soon my languid breast
Each night with unknown cares possess'd,
Dash'd my coy slumbers, or my dreams distress'd.

10 Fool that I was—And now, even now
While thus I preach the Stoic strain,
Unless I shun Olympia's view,
An hour unsays it all again.

O friend!—when Love directs her eyes
To pierce where every passion lies,
Where is the firm, the cautious, or the wise?

ODE XII.

TO SIR FRANCIS HENRY DRAKE, BARONET.

- 1 BEHOLD, the Balance in the sky
Swift on the wintry scale inclines:
To earthy caves the Dryads fly,
And the bare pastures Pan resigns.
Late did the farmer's fork o'erspread
With recent soil the twice-mown mead,
Tainting the bloom which Autumn knows:
He whets the rusty coulter now,
He binds his oxen to the plough,
And wide his future harvest throws.

- 2 Now, London's busy confines round,
By Kensington's imperial towers,
From Highgate's rough descent profound,
Essexian heaths, or Kentish bowers,
Where'er I pass, I see approach
Some rural statesman's eager coach,
Hurried by senatorial cares:
While rural nymphs (alike, within, Aspiring courtly praise to win)
Debate their dress, reform their airs.

- 3 Say, what can now the country boast,
O Drake, thy footsteps to detain,

When peevish winds and gloomy frost
The sunshine of the temper stain?
Say, are the priests of Devon grown
Friends to this tolerating throne,
Champions for George's legal right?
Have general freedom, equal law,
Won to the glory of Nassau
Each bold Wessexian squire and knight?

- 4 I doubt it much; and guess at least
That when the day, which made us
 free,
Shall next return, that sacred feast
Thou better may'st observe with me.
With me the sulphurous treason old
A far inferior part shall hold
In that glad day's triumphal strain;
And generous William be revered,
Nor one untimely accent heard
Of James, or his ignoble reign.
- 5 Then, while the Gascon's fragrant wine
With modest cups our joy supplies,
We'll truly thank the power divine
Who bade the chief, the patriot rise;
Rise from heroic ease (the spoil
Due, for his youth's Herculean toil,
From Belgium to her saviour son),
Rise with the same unconquer'd zeal
For our Britannia's injured weal,
Her laws defaced, her shrines o'erthrown.
- 6 He came. The tyrant from our shore,
Like a forbidden demon, fled;

And to eternal exile bore
 Pontific rage and vassal dread.
 There sunk the mouldering Gothic reign:
 New years came forth, a liberal train,
 Call'd by the people's great decree.
 That day, my friend, let blessings crown;—
 Fill, to the demigod's renown
 From whom thou hast that thou art free.

- 7 Then, Drake, (for wherefore should we part
 The public and the private weal?)
 In vows to her who sways thy heart,
 Fair health, glad fortune, will we deal.
 Whether Aglaia's blooming cheek,
 Or the soft ornaments that speak
 So eloquent in Daphne's smile,
 Whether the piercing lights that fly
 From the dark heaven of Myrto's eye,
 Haply thy fancy then beguile.
- 8 For so it is:—thy stubborn breast,
 Though touch'd by many a slighter wound,
 Hath no full conquest yet confess'd,
 Nor the one fatal charmer found;
 While I, a true and loyal swain,
 My fair Olympia's gentle reign
 Through all the varying seasons own.
 Her genius still my bosom warms:
 No other maid for me hath charms,
 Or I have eyes for her alone.

ODE XIII.

ON LYRIC POETRY.

I.—1.

ONCE more I join the Thespian choir,
 And taste the inspiring fount again :
 O parent of the Grecian lyre,
 Admit me to thy powerful strain—
 And lo, with ease my step invades
 The pathless vale and opening shades,
 Till now I spy her verdant seat ;
 And now at large I drink the sound,
 While these her offspring, listening round,
 By turns her melody repeat.

I.—2.

I see Anacreon smile and sing,
 His silver tresses breathe perfume :
 His cheek displays a second spring
 Of roses, taught by wine to bloom.
 Away, deceitful cares, away,
 And let me listen to his lay ;
 Let me the wanton pomp enjoy,
 While in smooth dance the light-wing'd Hours
 Lead round his lyre its patron powers,
 Kind Laughter and Convivial Joy.

I.—3.

Broke from the fetters of his native land,
 Devoting shame and vengeance to her lords,
 With louder impulse and a threatening hand
 The Lesbian patriot¹ smites the sounding chords :

Ye wretches, ye perfidious train,
 Ye cursed of gods and free-born men,
 Ye murderers of the laws,
 Though now ye glory in your lust,
 Though now ye tread the feeble neck in dust,
 Yet Time and righteous Jove will judge your dreadful cause.

II.—1.

But lo, to Sappho's melting airs
 Descends the radiant queen of love:
 She smiles, and asks what fonder cares
 Her suppliant's plaintive measures move:
 Why is my faithful maid distress'd?
 Who, Sappho, wounds thy tender breast?
 Say, flies he?—Soon he shall pursue:
 Shuns he thy gifts?—He soon shall give:
 Slights he thy sorrows?—He shall grieve,
 And soon to all thy wishes bow.

II.—2.

But, O Melpomene, for whom
 Awakes thy golden shell again?
 What mortal breath shall e'er presume
 To echo that unbounded strain?
 Majestic in the frown of years,
 Behold, the man of Thebes¹ appears:
 For some there are, whose mighty frame
 The hand of Jove at birth endow'd
 With hopes that mock the gazing crowd;
 As eagles drink the noontide flame;

II.—3.

While the dim raven beats her weary wings,
And clamours far below.—Propitious Muse,
While I so late unlock thy purer springs,
And breathe whate'er thy ancient airs infuse,
 Wilt thou for Albion's sons around
 (Ne'er hadst thou audience more renown'd)
 Thy charming arts employ,
 As when the winds from shore to shore
Through Greece thy lyre's persuasive language bore,
Till towns, and isles, and seas return'd the vocal joy?

III.—1.

Yet then did Pleasure's lawless throng,
Oft rushing forth in loose attire,
Thy virgin dance, thy graceful song
Pollute with impious revels dire.
O fair, O chaste, thy echoing shade
May no foul discord here invade:
Nor let thy strings one accent move,
Except what earth's untroubled ear
'Mid all her social tribes may hear,
And heaven's unerring throne approve.

III.—2.

Queen of the lyre, in thy retreat
The fairest flowers of Pindus glow;
The vine aspires to crown thy seat,
And myrtles round thy laurel grow.
Thy strings adapt their varied strain
To every pleasure, every pain,

Which mortal tribes were born to prove ;
 And straight our passions rise or fall,
 As at the wind's imperious call
 The ocean swells, the billows move.

III.—3.

When midnight listens o'er the slumbering earth,
 Let me, O Muse, thy solemn whispers hear :
 When morning sends her fragrant breezes forth,
 With airy murmurs touch my opening ear.
 And ever watchful at thy side,
 Let Wisdom's awful suffrage guide
 The tenor of thy lay :
 To her of old by Jove was given
 To judge the various deeds of earth and heaven ;
 'Twas thine by gentle arts to win us to her sway.

IV.—1.

Oft as, to well-earn'd ease resign'd,
 I quit the maze where Science toils,
 Do thou refresh my yielding mind
 With all thy gay, delusive spoils.
 But, O indulgent, come not nigh
 The busy steps, the jealous eye
 Of wealthy care or gainful age ;
 Whose barren souls thy joys disdain,
 And hold as foes to reason's reign
 Whome'er thy lovely works engage.

IV.—2.

When friendship and when letter'd mirth
 Haply partake my simple board,
 Then let thy blameless hand call forth
 The music of the Teian chord.

Or if invoked at softer hours,
 Oh! seek with me the happy bowers
 That hear Olympia's gentle tongue;
 To beauty link'd with virtue's train,
 To love devoid of jealous pain,
 There let the Sapphic lute be strung.

IV.—3.

But when from envy and from death to claim
 A hero bleeding for his native land;
 When to throw incense on the vestal flame
 Of Liberty my genius gives command,
 Nor Theban voice nor Lesbian lyre
 From thee, O Muse, do I require;
 While my presaging mind,
 Conscious of powers she never knew,
 Astonish'd, grasps at things beyond her view,
 Nor by another's fate submits to be confined.

 ODE XIV.

TO THE HONOURABLE CHARLES TOWNSHEND; FROM THE COUNTRY.

1 SAY, Townshend, what can London boast
 To pay thee for the pleasures lost,
 The health to-day resign'd,
 When Spring from this her favourite seat
 Bade Winter hasten his retreat,
 And met the western wind.

- 2 Oh, knew'st thou how the balmy air,
The sun, the azure heavens prepare
To heal thy languid frame,
No more would noisy courts engage;
In vain would lying Faction's rage
Thy sacred leisure claim.
- 3 Oft I look'd forth, and oft admired;
Till with the studious volume tired
I sought the open day;
And sure, I cried, the rural gods
Expect me in their green abodes,
And chide my tardy lay.
- 4 But ah, in vain my restless feet
Traced every silent shady seat
Which knew their forms of old:
Nor Naiad by her fountain laid,
Nor Wood-nymph tripping through her glade,
Did now their rites unfold:
- 5 Whether to nurse some infant oak
They turn the slowly tinkling brook,
And catch the pearly showers,
Or brush the mildew from the woods,
Or paint with noontide beams the buds,
Or breathe on opening flowers.
- 6 Such rites, which they with Spring renew,
The eyes of care can never view;
And care hath long been mine:
And hence offended with their guest,
Since grief of love my soul oppress'd,
They hide their toils divine.

- 7 But soon shall thy enlivening tongue
This heart, by dear affliction wrung,
With noble hope inspire:
Then will the sylvan powers again
Receive me in their genial train,
And listen to my lyre.
- 8 Beneath yon Dryad's lonely shade
A rustic altar shall be paid,
Of turf with laurel framed;
And thou the inscription wilt approve:
'This for the peace which, lost by love,
By friendship was reclaim'd.'

ODE XV.

TO THE EVENING STAR.

- 1 TO-NIGHT retired, the queen of heaven
With young Endymion stays:
And now to Hesper it is given
A while to rule the vacant sky,
Till she shall to her lamp supply
A stream of brighter rays.
- 2 O Hesper, while the starry throng
With awe thy path surrounds,
Oh, listen to my suppliant song,
If haply now the vocal sphere
Can suffer thy delighted ear
To stoop to mortal sounds.

- 3 So may the bridegroom's genial strain
Thee still invoke to shine :
So may the bride's unmarried train
To Hymen chant their flattering vow,
Still that his lucky torch may glow
With lustre pure as thine.
- 4 Far other vows must I prefer
To thy indulgent power.
Alas, but now I paid my tear
On fair Olympia's virgin tomb:
And lo, from thence, in quest I roam
Of Philomela's bower.
- 5 Propitious send thy golden ray,
Thou purest light above:
Let no false flame seduce to stray
Where gulf or steep lie hid for harm :
But lead where music's healing charm
May soothe afflicted love.
- 6 To them, by many a grateful song
In happier seasons vow'd,
These lawns, Olympia's haunt, belong:
Oft by yon silver stream we walk'd,
Or fix'd, while Philomela talk'd,
Beneath yon copses stood.
- 7 Nor seldom, where the beechen boughs
That roofless tower invade,
We came while her enchanting Muse
The radiant moon above us held:
Till by a clamorous owl compell'd
She fled the solemn shade.

- 8 But hark ; I hear her liquid tone.
Now, Hesper, guide my feet
Down the red marl with moss o'ergrown,
Through yon wild thicket next the plain,
Whose hawthorns choke the winding lane,
Which leads to her retreat.
- 9 See the green space ; on either hand
Enlarged it spreads around :
See, in the midst she takes her stand,
Where one old oak his awful shade
Extends o'er half the level mead
Enclosed in woods profound.
- 10 Hark, through many a melting note
She now prolongs her lays :
How sweetly down the void they float !
The breeze their magic path attends,
The stars shine out, the forest bends,
The wakeful heifers gaze.
- 11 Whoe'er thou art whom chance may bring
To this sequester'd spot,
If then the plaintive Syren sing,
Oh! softly tread beneath her bower,
And think of heaven's disposing power,
Of man's uncertain lot.
- 12 Oh! think, o'er all this mortal stage,
What mournful scenes arise :
What ruin waits on kingly rage,
How often virtue dwells with woe,
How many griefs from knowledge flow,
How swiftly pleasure flies.

- 13 O sacred bird, let me at eve,
 Thus wandering all alone,
 Thy tender counsel oft receive,
 Bear witness to thy pensive airs,
 And pity Nature's common cares,
 Till I forget my own.

ODE XVI.

TO CALEB HARDINGE, M.D.

- 1 WITH sordid floods the wintry Urn¹
 Hath stain'd fair Richmond's level green;
 Her naked hill the Dryads mourn,
 No longer a poetic scene.
 No longer there the raptured eye
 The beauteous forms of earth or sky
 Surveys as in their Author's mind;
 And London shelters from the year
 Those whom thy social hours to share
 The Attic Muse design'd.
- 2 From Hampstead's airy summit me
 Her guest the city shall behold,
 What day the people's stern decree
 To unbelieving kings is told,
 When common men (the dread of fame)
 Adjudged as one of evil name,
 Before the sun, the anointed head.
 Then seek thou too the pious town,
 With no unworthy cares to crown
 That evening's awful shade.

- 3 Deem not I call thee to deplore
The sacred martyr of the day,
By fast, and penitential lore
To purge our ancient guilt away.
For this, on humble faith I rest
That still our advocate, the priest,
From heavenly wrath will save the land;
Nor ask what rites our pardon gain,
Nor how his potent sounds restrain
The thunderer's lifted hand.
- 4 No, Hardinge; peace to church and state!
That evening, let the Muse give law;
While I anew the theme relate
Which my first youth enamour'd saw.
Then will I oft explore thy thought,
What to reject which Locke hath taught,
What to pursue in Virgil's lay;
Till hope ascends to loftiest things,
Nor envies demagogues or kings
Their frail and vulgar sway.
- 5 O versed in all the human frame,
Lead thou where'er my labour lies,
And English fancy's eager flame
To Grecian purity chastise;
While hand in hand, at Wisdom's shrine,
Beauty with truth I strive to join,
And grave assent with glad applause;
To paint the story of the soul,
And Plato's visions to control
By Verulamian laws.

ODE XVII.

ON A SERMON AGAINST GLORY. 1747.

1 COME then, tell me, sage divine,
 Is it an offence to own
 That our bosoms e'er incline
 Toward immortal Glory's throne?
 For with me, nor pomp, nor pleasure,
 Bourbon's might, Braganza's treasure,
 So can Fancy's dream rejoice,
 So conciliate Reason's choice,
 As one approving word of her impartial voice.

2 If to spurn at noble praise
 Be the passport to thy heaven,
 Follow thou those gloomy ways;
 No such law to me was given,
 Nor, I trust, shall I deplore me,
 Faring like my friends before me;
 Nor an holier place desire
 Than Timoleon's arms acquire,
 And Tully's curule chair, and Milton's golden lyre.

ODE XVIII.

TO THE RIGHT HONOURABLE FRANCIS, EARL
 OF HUNTINGDON. 1747.

I.—1.

THE wise and great of every clime,
 Through all the spacious walks of time,

Where'er the Muse her power display'd,
 With joy have listen'd and obey'd.
 For, taught of heaven, the sacred Nine
 Persuasive numbers, forms divine,
 To mortal sense impart:
 They best the soul with glory fire;
 They noblest counsels, boldest deeds inspire;
 And high o'er Fortune's rage enthrone the fixed heart.

I.—2.

Nor less prevailing is their charm
 The vengeful bosom to disarm;
 To melt the proud with human woe,
 And prompt unwilling tears to flow.
 Can wealth a power like this afford?
 Can Cromwell's arts or Marlborough's sword,
 An equal empire claim?
 No, Hastings. Thou my words wilt own:
 Thy breast the gifts of every Muse hath known;
 Nor shall the giver's love disgrace thy noble name.

I.—3.

The Muse's awful art,
 And the blest function of the poet's tongue,
 Ne'er shalt thou blush to honour; to assert
 From all that scorned vice or slavish fear hath sung.
 Nor shall the blandishment of Tuscan strings
 Warbling at will in Pleasure's myrtle bower;
 Nor shall the servile notes to Celtic kings
 By flattering minstrels paid in evil hour,
 Move thee to spurn the heavenly Muse's reign.
 A different strain,
 And other themes
 From her prophetic shades and hallow'd streams

(Thou well canst witness), meet the purgèd ear:

Such, as when Greece to her immortal shell
Rejoicing listen'd, godlike sounds to hear;
To hear the sweet instructress tell (While men and heroes throng'd around)
How life its noblest use may find,
How well for freedom be resign'd;
And how, by glory, virtue shall be crown'd.

II.—1.

Such was the Chian father's strain
To many a kind domestic train,
Whose pious hearth and genial bowl
Had cheer'd the reverend pilgrim's soul:
When, every hospitable rite
With equal bounty to requite,
He struck his magic strings,
And pour'd spontaneous numbers forth,
And seized their ears with tales of ancient worth,
And fill'd their musing hearts with vast heroic things.

II.—2.

Now oft, where happy spirits dwell,
Where yet he tunes his charming shell,
Oft near him, with applauding hands,
The Genius of his country stands.
To listening gods he makes him known,
That man divine, by whom were sown
The seeds of Grecian fame:
Who first the race with freedom fired;
From whom Lycurgus Sparta's sons inspired;
From whom Platæan palms and Cyprian trophies came.

II.—3.

O noblest, happiest age!
 When Aristides ruled, and Cimon fought;
 When all the generous fruits of Homer's page
 Exulting Pindar saw to full perfection brought.
 O Pindar, oft shalt thou be hail'd of me:
 Not that Apollo fed thee from his shrine;
 Not that thy lips drank sweetness from the bee;
 Nor yet that, studious of thy notes divine,
 Pan danced their measure with the sylvan throng:
 But that thy song
 Was proud to unfold
 What thy base rulers trembled to behold;
 Amid corrupted Thebes was proud to tell
 The deeds of Athens and the Persian shame:
 Hence on thy head their impious vengeance fell.
 But thou, O faithful to thy fame,
 The Muse's law didst rightly know;
 That who would animate his lays,
 And other minds to virtue raise,
 Must feel his own with all her spirit glow.

III.—1.

Are there, approved of later times,
 Whose verse adorn'd a tyrant's¹ crimes?
 Who saw majestic Rome betray'd,
 And lent the imperial ruffian aid?
 Alas! not one polluted bard,
 No, not the strains that Mincius heard,
 Or Tibur's hills replied,
 Dare to the Muse's ear aspire;
 Save that, instructed by the Grecian lyre,
 With Freedom's ancient notes their shameful task they hide.

III.—2.

Mark, how the dread Pantheon stands,
 Amid the domes of modern hands :
 Amid the toys of idle state,
 How simply, how severely great!
 Then turn, and, while each western clime
 Presents her tuneful sons to Time,
 So mark thou Milton's name ;
 And add, ' Thus differs from the throng
 The spirit which inform'd thy awful song,
 Which bade thy potent voice protect thy country's fame.'

III.—3.

Yet hence barbaric zeal
 His memory with unholy rage pursues ;
 While from these arduous cares of public weal
 She bids each bard begone, and rest him with his Muse.
 O fool! to think the man, whose ample mind
 Must grasp at all that yonder stars survey ;
 Must join the noblest forms of every kind,
 The world's most perfect image to display,
 Can e'er his country's majesty behold,
 Unmoved or cold !
 O fool! to deem
 That he, whose thought must visit every theme,
 Whose heart must every strong emotion know
 Inspired by Nature, or by Fortune taught ;
 That he, if haply some presumptuous foe,
 With false ignoble science fraught,
 Shall spurn at Freedom's faithful band :
 That he their dear defence will shun,
 Or hide their glories from the sun,
 Or deal their vengeance with a woman's hand!

IV.—1.

I care not that in Arno's plain,
 Or on the sportive banks of Seine,
 From public themes the Muse's choir
 Content with polish'd ease retire.
 Where priests the studious head command,
 Where tyrants bow the warlike hand
 To vile ambition's aim,
 Say, what can public themes afford,
 Save venal honours to a hateful lord,
 Reserved for angry heaven and scorn'd of honest fame?

IV.—2.

But here, where Freedom's equal throne
 To all her valiant sons is known;
 Where all are conscious of her cares,
 And each the power, that rules him, shares;
 Here let the bard, whose dastard tongue
 Leaves public arguments unsung,
 Bid public praise farewell:
 Let him to fitter climes remove,
 Far from the hero's and the patriot's love,
 And lull mysterious monks to slumber in their cell.

IV.—3.

O Hastings, not to all
 Can ruling Heaven the same endowments lend:
 Yet still doth Nature to her offspring call,
 That to one general weal their different powers they bend,
 Unenvious. Thus alone, though strains divine
 Inform the bosom of the Muse's son;
 Though with new honours the patrician's line
 Advance from age to age; yet thus alone
 They win the suffrage of impartial fame.

The poet's name
 He best shall prove,
 Whose lays the soul with noblest passions move.
 But thee, O progeny of heroes old,
 Thee to severer toils thy fate requires:
 The fate which form'd thee in a chosen mould,
 The grateful country of thy sires,
 Thee to sublimer paths demand;
 Sublimer than thy sires could trace,
 Or thy own Edward teach his race,
 Though Gaul's proud genius sank beneath his hand.

V.—1.

From rich domains, and subject farms,
 They led the rustic youth to arms;
 And kings their stern achievements fear'd,
 While private strife their banners rear'd.
 But loftier scenes to thee are shown,
 Where empire's wide establish'd throne
 No private master fills:
 Where, long foretold, the People reigns;
 Where each a vassal's humble heart disdains;
 And judgeth what he sees; and, as he judgeth, wills.

V.—2.

Here be it thine to calm and guide
 The swelling democratic tide;
 To watch the state's uncertain frame,
 And baffle Faction's partial aim:
 But chiefly, with determined zeal,
 To quell that servile band, who kneel
 To Freedom's banish'd foes;
 That monster, which is daily found
 Expert and bold thy country's peace to wound;
 Yet dreads to handle arms, nor manly counsel knows.

V.—3.

'Tis highest Heaven's command,
 That guilty aims should sordid paths pursue ;
 That what ensnares the heart should maim the hand,
 And Virtue's worthless foes be false to glory too.
 But look on Freedom ;—see, through every age,
 What labours, perils, griefs, hath she disdain'd !
 What arms, what regal pride, what priestly rage,
 Have her dread offspring conquer'd or sustain'd !
 For Albion well have conquer'd. Let the strains
 Of happy swains,
 Which now resound
 Where Scarsdale's cliffs the swelling pastures bound,
 Bear witness ;—there, oft let the farmer hail
 The sacred orchard which embowers his gate,
 And show to strangers passing down the vale,
 Where Ca'ndish, Booth, and Osborne sate ;
 When, bursting from their country's chain,
 Even in the midst of deadly harms,
 Of papal snares and lawless arms,
 They plann'd for Freedom this her noblest reign.

VI.—1.

This reign, these laws, this public care,
 Which Nassau gave us all to share,
 Had ne'er adorn'd the English name,
 Could Fear have silenced Freedom's claim.
 But Fear in vain attempts to bind
 Those lofty efforts of the mind
 Which social good inspires ;
 Where men, for this, assault a throne,
 Each adds the common welfare to his own ;
 And each unconquer'd heart the strength of all acquires.

VI.—2.

Say, was it thus, when late we view'd
 Our fields in civil blood imbrued?
 When fortune crown'd the barbarous host,
 And half the astonish'd isle was lost?
 Did one of all that vaunting train,
 Who dare affront a peaceful reign,
 Durst one in arms appear?
 Durst one in counsels pledge his life?
 Stake his luxurious fortunes in the strife?
 Or lend his boasted name his vagrant friends to cheer?

VI.—3.

Yet, Hastings, these are they
 Who challenge to themselves thy country's love;
 The true; the constant: who alone can weigh,
 What glory should demand, or liberty approve!
 But let their works declare them. Thy free powers,
 The generous powers of thy prevailing mind,
 Not for the tasks of their confederate hours,
 Lewd brawls and lurking slander, were design'd.
 Be thou thy own approver. Honest praise
 Oft nobly sways
 Ingenuous youth;
 But, sought from cowards and the lying mouth,
 Praise is reproach. Eternal God alone
 For mortals fixeth that sublime award.
 He, from the faithful records of his throne,
 Bids the historian and the bard
 Dispose of honour and of scorn;
 Discern the patriot from the slave;
 And write the good, the wise, the brave,
 For lessons to the multitude unborn.

O D E I.

THE REMONSTRANCE OF SHAKSPEARE :

SUPPOSED TO HAVE BEEN SPOKEN AT THE THEATRE-ROYAL, WHILE THE FRENCH COMEDIANS WERE ACTING BY SUBSCRIPTION. 1749.

IF, yet regardful of your native land,
Old Shakspeare's tongue you deign to understand,
Lo, from the blissful bowers where heaven rewards
Instructive sages and unblemish'd bards,
I come, the ancient founder of the stage,
Intent to learn, in this discerning age,
What form of wit your fancies have embraced,
And whither tends your elegance of taste,
That thus at length our homely toils you spurn,
That thus to foreign scenes you proudly turn, 10
That from my brow the laurel wreath you claim
To crown the rivals of your country's fame.

What though the footsteps of my devious Muse
The measured walks of Grecian art refuse?
Or though the frankness of my hardy style
Mock the nice touches of the critic's file?
Yet, what my age and climate held to view,
Impartial I survey'd and fearless drew.
And say, ye skilful in the human heart,
Who know to prize a poet's noblest part, 20
What age, what clime, could e'er an ampler field
For lofty thought, for daring fancy, yield?
I saw this England break the shameful bands
Forged for the souls of men by sacred hands:

I saw each groaning realm her aid implore ; 25
 Her sons the heroes of each warlike shore :
 Her naval standard (the dire Spaniard's bane)
 Obey'd through all the circuit of the main.
 Then, too, great Commerce, for a late found world,
 Around your coast her eager sails unfurl'd! 30
 New hopes, new passions, thence the bosom fired ;
 New plans, new arts, the genius thence inspired ;
 Thence every scene, which private fortune knows,
 In stronger life, with bolder spirit, rose.

Disgraced I this full prospect which I drew,
 My colours languid, or my strokes untrue?
 Have not your sages, warriors, swains, and kings,
 Confess'd the living draught of men and things?
 What other bard in any clime appears
 Alike the master of your smiles and tears? 40
 Yet have I deign'd your audience to entice
 With wretched bribes to luxury and vice?
 Or have my various scenes a purpose known
 Which freedom, virtue, glory, might not own?

Such from the first was my dramatic plan ;
 It should be yours to crown what I began :
 And now that England spurns her Gothic chain,
 And equal laws and social science reign,
 I thought, Now surely shall my zealous eyes
 View nobler bards and juster critics rise, 50
 Intent with learned labour to refine
 The copious ore of Albion's native mine,
 Our stately Muse more graceful airs to teach,
 And form her tongue to more attractive speech,
 Till rival nations listen at her feet,
 And own her polish'd as they own her great.

But do you thus my favourite hopes fulfil?
 Is France at last the standard of your skill?

Alas for you! that so betray a mind 59
 Of art unconscious and to beauty blind.
 Say, does her language your ambition raise,
 Her barren, trivial, unharmonious phrase,
 Which fetters eloquence to scantiest bounds,
 And maims the cadence of poetic sounds?
 Say, does your humble admiration choose
 The gentle prattle of her Comic Muse,
 While wits, plain-dealers, fops, and fools appear,
 Charged to say nought but what the king may hear?
 Or rather melt your sympathising hearts
 Won by her tragic scene's romantic arts, 70
 Where old and young declaim on soft desire,
 And heroes never, but for love, expire?
 No. Though the charms of novelty, a while,
 Perhaps too fondly win your thoughtless smile,
 Yet not for you design'd indulgent fate
 The modes or manners of the Bourbon state.
 And ill your minds my partial judgment reads,
 And many an augury my hope misleads,
 If the fair maids of yonder blooming train
 To their light courtship would an audience deign, 80
 Or those chaste matrons a Parisian wife
 Choose for the model of domestic life;
 Or if one youth of all that generous band,
 The strength and splendour of their native land,
 Would yield his portion of his country's fame,
 And quit old freedom's patrimonial claim,
 With lying smiles oppression's pomp to see,
 And judge of glory by a king's decree.
 O bless'd at home with justly-envied laws,
 O long the chiefs of Europe's general cause, 90
 Whom heaven hath chosen at each dangerous hour
 To check the inroads of barbaric power,

The rights of trampled nations to reclaim, 93
 And guard the social world from bonds and shame;
 Oh! let not luxury's fantastic charms
 Thus give the lie to your heroic arms:
 Nor for the ornaments of life embrace
 Dishonest lessons from that vaunting race,
 Whom fate's dread laws (for, in eternal fate Despotie rule was heir to freedom's hate), 100 Whom in each warlike, each commercial part,
 In civil council, and in pleasing art,
 The judge of earth predestined for your foes,
 And made it fame and virtue to oppose.

ODE II.

TO SLEEP.

1 THOU silent power, whose welcome sway
 Charms every anxious thought away;
 In whose divine oblivion drown'd,
 Sore pain and weary toil grow mild,
 Love is with kinder looks beguiled,
 And grief forgets her fondly cherish'd wound;
 Oh, whither hast thou flown, indulgent god?
 God of kind shadows and of healing dews,
 Whom dost thou touch with thy Lethæan rod?
 Around whose temples now thy opiate airs diffuse?

2 Lo, Midnight from her starry reign
 Looks awful down on earth and main.
 The tuneful birds lie hush'd in sleep,
 With all that crop the verdant food,
 With all that skim the crystal flood,
 Or haunt the caverns of the rocky steep.

No rushing winds disturb the tufted bowers ;
No wakeful sound the moonlight valley knows,
Save where the brook its liquid murmur pours,
And lulls the waving scene to more profound repose.

3 Oh, let not me alone complain,
Alone invoke thy power in vain!
Descend, propitious, on my eyes ;
Not from the couch that bears a crown,
Not from the courtly statesman's down,
Nor where the miser and his treasure lies :
Bring not the shapes that break the murderer's rest,
Nor those the hireling soldier loves to see,
Nor those which haunt the bigot's gloomy breast :
Far be their guilty nights, and far their dreams from me!

4 Nor yet those awful forms present,
For chiefs and heroes only meant :
The figured brass, the choral song,
The rescued people's glad applause,
The listening senate, and the laws
Fix'd by the counsels of Timoleon's¹ tongue,
Are scenes too grand for fortune's private ways ;
And though they shine in youth's ingenuous view,
The sober gainful arts of modern days
To such romantic thoughts have bid a long adieu.

5 I ask not, god of dreams, thy care
To banish Love's presentments fair :

¹ After Timoleon had delivered Syracuse from the tyranny of Dionysius, the people on every important deliberation sent for him into the public assembly, asked his advice, and voted according to it.—Plutarch.

Nor rosy cheek nor radiant eye
 Can arm him with such strong command
 That the young sorcerer's fatal hand
 Should round my soul his pleasing fetters tie.
 Nor yet the courtier's hope, the giving smile
 (A lighter phantom, and a baser chain)
 Did e'er in slumber my proud lyre beguile
 To lend the pomp of thrones her ill-according strain.

6 But, Morpheus, on thy balmy wing
 Such honourable visions bring,
 As soothed great Milton's injured age,
 When in prophetic dreams he saw
 The race unborn with pious awe
 Imbibe each virtue from his heavenly page:
 Or such as Mead's benignant fancy knows
 When health's deep treasures, by his art explored,
 Have saved the infant from an orphan's woes,
 Or to the trembling sire his age's hope restored.

ODE III.

TO THE CUCKOO.

1 O RUSTIC herald of the spring,
 At length in yonder woody vale
 Fast by the brook I hear thee sing;
 And, studious of thy homely tale,
 Amid the vespers of the grove,
 Amid the chanting choir of love,
 Thy sage responses hail.

- 2 The time has been when I have frown'd
To hear thy voice the woods invade;
And while thy solemn accent drown'd
Some sweeter poet of the shade,
Thus, thought I, thus the sons of care
Some constant youth or generous fair
With dull advice upbraid.
- 3 I said, ' While Philomela's song
Proclaims the passion of the grove,
It ill beseems a cuckoo's tongue
Her charming language to reprove'—
Alas, how much a lover's ear
Hates all the sober truth to hear,
The sober truth of love!
- 4 When hearts are in each other bless'd,
When nought but lofty faith can rule
The nymph's and swain's consenting breast,
How cuckoo-like in Cupid's school,
With store of grave prudential saws
On fortune's power and custom's laws,
Appears each friendly fool!
- 5 Yet think betimes, ye gentle train
Whom love, and hope, and fancy sway,
Who every harsher care disdain,
Who by the morning judge the day,
Think that, in April's fairest hours,
To warbling shades and painted flowers
The cuckoo joins his lay.

ODE IV.

TO THE HONOURABLE CHARLES TOWNSEND;
IN THE COUNTRY. 1750.

I.—1.

How oft shall I survey
This humble roof, the lawn, the greenwood shade,
The vale with sheaves o'erspread,
The glassy brook, the flocks which round thee stray?
When will thy cheerful mind
Of these have utter'd all her dear esteem?
Or, tell me, dost thou deem
No more to join in glory's toilsome race,
But here content embrace
That happy leisure which thou hadst resign'd?

I.—2.

Alas, ye happy hours,
When books and youthful sport the soul could share,
Ere one ambitious care
Of civil life had awed her simpler powers;
Oft as your winged train
Revisit here my friend in white array,
Oh, fail not to display
Each fairer scene where I perchance had part,
That so his generous heart
The abode of even friendship may remain.

I.—3.

For not imprudent of my loss to come,
I saw from Contemplation's quiet cell
His feet ascending to another home,
Where public praise and envied greatness dwell.

But shall we therefore, O my lyre,
 Reprove ambition's best desire,— Extinguish glory's flame?
 Far other was the task enjoin'd
 When to my hand thy strings were first assign'd:
 Far other faith belongs to friendship's honour'd name.

II.—1.

Thee, Townshend, not the arms
 Of slumbering Ease, nor Pleasure's rosy chain,
 Were destined to detain;
 No, nor bright Science, nor the Muse's charms.
 For them high heaven prepares
 Their proper votaries, an humbler band:
 And ne'er would Spenser's hand
 Have deign'd to strike the warbling Tuscan shell,
 Nor Harrington to tell
 What habit an immortal city wears;

II.—2.

Had this been born to shield
 The cause which Cromwell's impious hand betray'd,
 Or that, like Vere, display'd
 His redcross banner o'er the Belgian field;
 Yet where the will divine
 Hath shut those loftiest paths, it next remains,
 With reason clad in strains
 Of harmony, selected minds to inspire,
 And virtue's living fire
 To feed and eternise in hearts like thine.

II.—3.

For never shall the herd, whom envy sways,
 So quell my purpose or my tongue control,

That I should fear illustrious worth to praise,
 Because its master's friendship moved my soul.
 Yet, if this undissembling strain
 Should now perhaps thine ear detain
 With any pleasing sound,
 Remember thou that righteous Fame
 From hoary age a strict account will claim
 Of each auspicious palm with which thy youth was crown'd.

III.—1.

Nor obvious is the way
 Where heaven expects thee nor the traveller leads;
 Through flowers or fragrant meads,
 Or groves that hark to Philomela's lay.
 The impartial laws of fate
 To nobler virtues wed severer cares.
 Is there a man who shares
 The summit next where heavenly natures dwell?
 Ask him (for he can tell)
 What storms beat round that rough laborious height.

III.—2.

Ye heroes, who of old
 Did generous England Freedom's throne ordain;
 From Alfred's parent reign
 To Nassau, great deliverer, wise and bold;
 I know your perils hard,
 Your wounds, your painful marches, wintry seas,
 The night estranged from ease,
 The day by cowardice and falsehood vex'd,
 The head with doubt perplex'd,
 The indignant heart disdaining the reward,

III.—3.

Which envy hardly grants. But, O renown,
O praise from judging heaven and virtuous men,
If thus they purchased thy divinest crown,
Say, who shall hesitate, or who complain?
And now they sit on thrones above:
And when among the gods they move
Before the Sovereign Mind,
'Lo, these,' he saith, 'lo, these are they
Who to the laws of mine eternal sway
From violence and fear asserted human kind.'

IV.—1.

Thus honour'd while the train
Of legislators in his presence dwell;
If I may aught foretell,
The statesman shall the second palm obtain.
For dreadful deeds of arms
Let vulgar bards, with undiscerning praise,
More glittering trophies raise:
But wisest Heaven what deeds may chiefly move
To favour and to love?
What, save wide blessings, or averted harms?

IV.—2.

Nor to the embattled field
Shall these achievements of the peaceful gowr:
The green immortal crown
Of valour, or the songs of conquest, yield.
Not Fairfax wildly bold,
While bare of crest he hew'd his fatal way
Through Naseby's firm array,
To heavier dangers did his breast oppose
Than Pym's free virtue chose,
When the proud force of Strafford he controll'd.

IV.—3.

But what is man at enmity with truth?
 What were the fruits of Wentworth's copious mind,
 When (blighted all the promise of his youth)
 The patriot in a tyrant's league had join'd?
 Let Ireland's loud-lamenting plains,
 Let Tyne's and Humber's trampled swains,
 Let menaced London tell
 How impious guile made wisdom base;
 How generous zeal to cruel rage gave place;
 And how unblest'd he lived and how dishonour'd fell.

V.—1.

Thence never hath the Muse
 Around his tomb Pierian roses flung:
 Nor shall one poet's tongue
 His name for music's pleasing labour choose.
 And sure, when Nature kind
 Hath deck'd some favour'd breast above the throng.
 That man with grievous wrong
 Affronts and wounds his genius, if he bends
 To guilt's ignoble ends
 The functions of his ill-submitting mind.

V.—2.

For worthy of the wise
 Nothing can seem but virtue; nor earth yield
 Their fame an equal field,
 Save where impartial freedom gives the prize.
 There Somers fix'd his name,
 Enroll'd the next to William. There shall Time
 To every wondering clime
 Point out that Somers, who from faction's crowd,
 The slanderous and the loud,
 Could fair assent and modest reverence claim.

V.—3.

Nor aught did laws or social arts acquire,
 Nor this majestic weal of Albion's land
 Did aught accomplish, or to aught aspire,
 Without his guidance, his superior hand.
 And rightly shall the Muse's care
 Wreaths like her own for him prepare,
 Whose mind's enamour'd aim
 Could forms of civil beauty draw
 Sublime as ever sage or poet saw,
 Yet still to life's rude scene the proud ideas tame.

VI.—1.

Let none profane be near!
 The Muse was never foreign to his breast:
 On power's grave seat confess'd,
 Still to her voice he bent a lover's ear.
 And if the blessed know
 Their ancient cares, even now the unfading groves,
 Where haply Milton roves
 With Spenser, hear the enchanted echoes round
 Through farthest heaven resound
 Wise Somers, guardian of their fame below.

VI.—2.

He knew, the patriot knew,
 That letters and the Muse's powerful art
 Exalt the ingenuous heart,
 And brighten every form of just and true.
 They lend a nobler sway
 To civil wisdom, than corruption's lure
 Could ever yet procure:
 They, too, from envy's pale malignant light
 Conduct her forth to sight,
 Clothed in the fairest colours of the day.

VI.—3.

O Townshend, thus may Time, the judge severe,
 Instruct my happy tongue of thee to tell:
 And when I speak of one to Freedom dear
 For planning wisely and for acting well,
 Of one whom Glory loves to own,
 Who still by liberal means alone
 Hath liberal ends pursued;
 Then, for the guerdon of my lay,
 'This man with faithful friendship,' will I say,
 'From youth to honour'd age my arts and me hath view'd.'

ODE V.

ON LOVE OF PRAISE.

- 1 OF all the springs within the mind
 Which prompt her steps in fortune's maze,
 From none more pleasing aid we find
 Than from the genuine love of praise.
- 2 Nor any partial, private end
 Such reverence to the public bears;
 Nor any passion, virtue's friend,
 So like to virtue's self appears.
- 3 For who in glory can delight
 Without delight in glorious deeds?
 What man a charming voice can slight,
 Who courts the echo that succeeds?

- 4 But not the echo on the voice
More than on virtue praise depends;
To which, of course, its real price
The judgment of the praiser lends.
- 5 If praise, then, with religious awe
From the sole perfect judge be sought,
A nobler aim, a purer law,
Nor priest, nor bard, nor sage hath taught.
- 6 With which in character the same,
Though in an humbler sphere it lies,
I count that soul of human fame,
The suffrage of the good and wise.

ODE VI.

TO WILLIAM HALL, ESQUIRE; WITH THE WORKS OF CHAULIEU.

- 1 ATTEND to Chaulieu's wanton lyre;
While, fluent as the skylark sings
When first the morn allures its wings,
The epicure his theme pursues:
And tell me if, among the choir
Whose music charms the banks of Seine,
So full, so free, so rich a strain
E'er dictated the warbling Muse.
- 2 Yet, Hall, while thy judicious ear
Admires the well-dissembled art
That can such harmony impart
To the lame pace of Gallic rhymes;

While wit from affectation clear,
Bright images, and passions true,
Recall to thy assenting view
The envied bards of nobler times;

3 Say, is not oft his doctrine wrong?
This priest of Pleasure, who aspires
To lead us to her sacred fires,
Knows he the ritual of her shrine?
Say (her sweet influence to thy song
So may the goddess still afford),
Doth she consent to be adored
With shameless love and frantic wine?

4 Nor Cato, nor Chrysippus here
Need we in high indignant phrase
From their Elysian quiet raise:
But Pleasure's oracle alone
Consult; attentive, not severe.
O Pleasure, we blaspheme not thee;
Nor emulate the rigid knee
Which bends but at the Stoic throne.

5 We own, had fate to man assign'd
Nor sense, nor wish but what obey,
Or Venus soft, or Bacchus gay,
Then might our bard's voluptuous creed
Most aptly govern human kind:
Unless perchance what he hath sung
Of tortured joints and nerves unstrung,
Some wrangling heretic should plead.

6 But now, with all these proud desires
For dauntless truth and honest fame;

With that strong master of our frame,
 The inexorable judge within,
 What can be done? Alas, ye fires
 Of love; alas, ye rosy smiles,
 Ye nectar'd cups from happier soils,—
 Ye have no bribe his grace to win.

ODE VII.

TO THE RIGHT REVEREND BENJAMIN, LORD BISHOP
 OF WINCHESTER. 1754.

I.—1.

FOR toils which patriots have endured,
 For treason quell'd and laws secured,
 In every nation Time displays
 The palm of honourable praise.
 Envy may rail, and Faction fierce
 May strive; but what, alas, can those (Though bold, yet blind and sordid foes)
 To Gratitude and Love oppose,
 To faithful story and persuasive verse?

I.—2.

O nurse of freedom, Albion, say,
 Thou tamer of despotic sway,
 What man, among thy sons around,
 Thus heir to glory hast thou found?
 What page, in all thy annals bright,
 Hast thou with purer joy survey'd
 Than that where truth, by Hoadly's aid,
 Shines through imposture's solemn shade,
 Through kingly and through sacerdotal night?

I.—3.

To him the Teacher bless'd,
 Who sent religion, from the palmy field
 By Jordan, like the morn to cheer the west,
 And lifted up the veil which heaven from earth conceal'd,
 To Hoadly thus his mandate he address'd:—
 'Go thou, and rescue my dishonour'd law
 From hands rapacious, and from tongues impure:
 Let not my peaceful name be made a lure,
 Fell persecution's mortal snares to aid:
 Let not my words be impious chains to draw
 The freeborn soul in more than brutal awe,
 To faith without assent, allegiance unrepaid.'

II.—1.

No cold or unperforming hand
 Was arm'd by Heaven with this command.
 The world soon felt it; and, on high,
 To William's ear with welcome joy
 Did Locke among the blest unfold
 The rising hope of Hoadly's name;
 Godolphin then confirm'd the fame;
 And Somers, when from earth he came,
 And generous Stanhope the fair sequel told.

II.—2.

Then drew the lawgivers around
 (Sires of the Grecian name renown'd),
 And listening ask'd, and wondering knew,
 What private force could thus subdue
 The vulgar and the great combined;
 Could war with sacred folly wage;
 Could a whole nation disengage
 From the dread bonds of many an age,
 And to new habits mould the public mind.

II.—3.

For not a conqueror's sword,
 Nor the strong powers to civil founders known,
 Were his; but truth by faithful search explored,
 And social sense, like seed, in genial plenty sown.
 Wherever it took root, the soul (restored
 To freedom) freedom too for others sought.
 Not monkish craft, the tyrant's claim divine,
 Not regal zeal, the bigot's cruel shrine,
 Could longer guard from reason's warfare sage;
 Nor the wild rabble to sedition wrought,
 Nor synods by the papal Genius taught,
 Nor St John's spirit loose, nor Atterbury's rage.

III.—1.

But where shall recompense be found?
 Or how such arduous merit crown'd?
 For look on life's laborious scene:
 What rugged spaces lie between Adventurous Virtue's early toils
 And her triumphal throne! The shade
 Of death, meantime, does oft invade
 Her progress; nor, to us display'd,
 Wears the bright heroine her expected spoils.

III.—2.

Yet born to conquer is her power;—
 O Hoadly, if that favourite hour
 On earth arrive, with thankful awe
 We own just Heaven's indulgent law,
 And proudly thy success behold;
 We attend thy reverend length of days
 With benediction and with praise,
 And hail thee in our public ways
 Like some great spirit famed in ages old.

III.—3.

While thus our vows prolong
 Thy steps on earth, and when by us resign'd
 Thou join'st thy seniors, that heroic throng
 Who rescued or preserved the rights of human kind,
 Oh! not unworthy may thy Albion's tongue
 Thee still, her friend and benefactor, name:
 Oh! never, Hoadly, in thy country's eyes,
 May impious gold, or pleasure's gaudy prize,
 Make public virtue, public freedom, vile;
 Nor our own manners tempt us to disclaim
 That heritage, our noblest wealth and fame,
 Which thou hast kept entire from force and factious guile.

 ODE VIII.

- 1 IF rightly tuneful bards decide,
 If it be fix'd in Love's decrees,
 That Beauty ought not to be tried
 But by its native power to please,
 Then tell me, youths and lovers, tell,
 What fair can Amoret excel?

- 2 Behold that bright unsullied smile,
 And wisdom speaking in her mien:
 Yet (she so artless all the while,
 So little studious to be seen)
 We nought but instant gladness know,
 Nor think to whom the gift we owe.

- 3 But neither music, nor the powers
 Of youth and mirth and frolic cheer,

Add half that sunshine to the hours,
Or make life's prospect half so clear,
As memory brings it to the eye
From scenes where Amoret was by.

- 4 Yet not a satirist could there
Or fault or indiscretion find;
Nor any prouder sage declare
One virtue, pictured in his mind,
Whose form with lovelier colours glows
Than Amoret's demeanour shows.
- 5 This sure is Beauty's happiest part:
This gives the most unbounded sway:
This shall enchant the subject heart
When rose and lily fade away;
And she be still, in spite of time,
Sweet Amoret in all her prime.

ODE IX.

AT STUDY.

- 1 WHITHER did my fancy stray?
By what magic drawn away
Have I left my studious theme,
From this philosophic page,
From the problems of the sage,
Wandering through a pleasing dream?
- 2 'Tis in vain, alas! I find,
Much in vain, my zealous mind

Would to learned Wisdom's throne
 Dedicate each thoughtful hour:
 Nature bids a softer power
 Claim some minutes for his own.

- 3 Let the busy or the wise
 View him with contemptuous eyes;
 Love is native to the heart:
 Guide its wishes as you will;
 Without Love you'll find it still Void in one essential part.
- 4 Me though no peculiar fair
 Touches with a lover's care;
 Though the pride of my desire
 Asks immortal friendship's name,
 Asks the palm of honest fame,
 And the old heroic lyre;
- 5 Though the day have smoothly gone,
 Or to letter'd leisure known,
 Or in social duty spent;
 Yet at eve my lonely breast
 Seeks in vain for perfect rest;
 Languishes for true content.

ODE X.

TO THOMAS EDWARDS, ESQ.; ON THE LATE EDITION OF MR POPE'S WORKS. 1751.

- 1 BELIEVE me, Edwards, to restrain
 The licence of a railer's tongue

Is what but seldom men obtain
By sense or wit, by prose or song:
A task for more Herculean powers,
Nor suited to the sacred hours
Of leisure in the Muse's bowers.

2 In bowers where laurel weds with palm,
The Muse, the blameless queen, resides:
Fair Fame attends, and Wisdom calm
Her eloquence harmonious guides:
While, shut for ever from her gate,
Oft trying, still repining, wait
Fierce Envy and calumnious Hate.

3 Who, then, from her delightful bounds
Would step one moment forth to heed
What impotent and savage sounds
From their unhappy mouths proceed?
No: rather Spenser's lyre again
Prepare, and let thy pious strain
For Pope's dishonour'd shade complain.

4 Tell how displeas'd was every bard,
When lately in the Elysian grove
They of his Muse's guardian heard,
His delegate to fame above;
And what with one accord they said
Of wit in drooping age misled,
And Warburton's officious aid:

5 How Virgil mourn'd the sordid fate
To that melodious lyre assign'd,
Beneath a tutor who so late
With Midas and his rout combined

By spiteful clamour to confound
That very lyre's enchanting sound,
Though listening realms admired around:

- 6 How Horace own'd he thought the fire
Of his friend Pope's satiric line
Did further fuel scarce require
From such a militant divine:
How Milton scorn'd the sophist vain,
Who durst approach his hallow'd strain
With unwash'd hands and lips profane.
- 7 Then Shakspeare debonair and mild
Brought that strange comment forth to view;
Conceits more deep, he said and smiled,
Than his own fools or madmen knew:
But thank'd a generous friend above,
Who did with free adventurous love
Such pageants from his tomb remove.
- 8 And if to Pope, in equal need,
The same kind office thou wouldst pay,
Then, Edwards, all the band decreed
That future bards with frequent lay
Should call on thy auspicious name,
From each absurd intruder's claim
To keep inviolate their fame.

ODE XI.

TO THE COUNTRY GENTLEMEN OF ENGLAND. 1758.

- 1 WHITHER is Europe's ancient spirit fled?
Where are those valiant tenants of her shore,

Who from the warrior bow the strong dart sped,
Or with firm hand the rapid pole-axe bore?
Freeman and soldier was their common name,
Who late with reapers to the furrow came,
Now in the front of battle charged the foe:
Who taught the steer the wintry plough to endure,
Now in full councils check'd encroaching power,
And gave the guardian laws their majesty to know.

2 But who are ye? from Ebro's loitering sons
To Tiber's pageants, to the sports of Seine;
From Rhine's frail palaces to Danube's thrones
And cities looking on the Cimbric main,
Ye lost, ye self-deserted? whose proud lords
Have baffled your tame hands, and given your swords
To slavish ruffians, hired for their command:
These, at some greedy monk's or harlot's nod,
See rifled nations crouch beneath their rod:
These are the Public Will, the Reason of the land.

3 Thou, heedless Albion, what, alas, the while Dost thou presume? O inexpert in arms,
Yet vain of Freedom, how dost thou beguile,
With dreams of hope, these near and loud alarms?
Thy splendid home, thy plan of laws renown'd,
The praise and envy of the nations round,
What care hast thou to guard from Fortune's sway?
Amid the storms of war, how soon may all
The lofty pile from its foundations fall,
Of ages the proud toil, the ruin of a day!

- 4 No: thou art rich, thy streams and fertile vales
Add Industry's wise gifts to Nature's store,
And every port is crowded with thy sails,
And every wave throws treasure on thy shore.
What boots it? If luxurious Plenty charm
Thy selfish heart from Glory, if thy arm
Shrink at the frowns of Danger and of Pain,
Those gifts, that treasure is no longer thine.
Oh, rather far be poor! Thy gold will shine Tempting the eye of Force, and deck thee to thy bane.
- 5 But what hath Force or War to do with thee?
Girt by the azure tide, and throned sublime
Amid thy floating bulwarks, thou canst see,
With scorn, the fury of each hostile clime
Dash'd ere it reach thee. Sacred from the foe
Are thy fair fields: athwart thy guardian prow
No bold invader's foot shall tempt the strand—
Yet say, my country, will the waves and wind
Obey thee? Hast thou all thy hopes resign'd
To the sky's fickle faith, the pilot's wavering hand?
- 6 For, oh! may neither Fear nor stronger Love (Love, by thy virtuous princes nobly won)
Thee, last of many wretched nations, move,
With mighty armies station'd round the throne
To trust thy safety. Then, farewell the claims
Of Freedom! Her proud records to the flames
Then bear, an offering at Ambition's shrine;
Whate'er thy ancient patriots dared demand
From furious John's, or faithless Charles' hand,
Or what great William seal'd for his adopted line.

7 But if thy sons be worthy of their name,
If liberal laws with liberal arts they prize,
Let them from conquest, and from servile shame,
In War's glad school their own protectors rise.
Ye chiefly, heirs of Albion's cultured plains,
Ye leaders of her bold and faithful swains,
Now not unequal to your birth be found;
The public voice bids arm your rural state,
Paternal hamlets for your ensigns wait,
And grange and fold prepare to pour their youth around.

8 Why are ye tardy? what inglorious care
Detains you from their head, your native post?
Who most their country's fame and fortune share,
'Tis theirs to share her toils, her perils most.
Each man his task in social life sustains.
With partial labours, with domestic gains,
Let others dwell: to you indulgent Heaven
By counsel and by arms the public cause
To serve for public love and love's applause,
The first employment far, the noblest hire, hath given.

9 Have ye not heard of Lacedemon's fame?
Of Attic chiefs in Freedom's war divine?
Of Rome's dread generals? the Valerian name?
The Fabian sons? the Scipios, matchless line?
Your lot was theirs: the farmer and the swain
Met his loved patron's summons from the plain;
The legions gather'd; the bright eagles flew:
Barbarian monarchs in the triumph mourn'd;
The conquerors to their household gods return'd,
And fed Calabrian flocks, and steer'd the Sabine plough.

- 10 Shall, then, this glory of the antique age,
This pride of men, be lost among mankind?
Shall war's heroic arts no more engage
The unbought hand, the unsubjected mind?
Doth valour to the race no more belong?
No more with scorn of violence and wrong
Doth forming Nature now her sons inspire,
That, like some mystery to few reveal'd,
The skill of arms abash'd and awed they yield,
And from their own defence with hopeless hearts retire?
- 11 O shame to human life, to human laws!
The loose adventurer, hireling of a day,
Who his fell sword without affection draws,
Whose God, whose country, is a tyrant's pay,
This man the lessons of the field can learn;
Can every palm, which decks a warrior, earn,
And every pledge of conquest: while in vain,
To guard your altars, your paternal lands,
Are social arms held out to your free hands:
Too arduous is the lore: too irksome were the pain.
- 12 Meantime by Pleasure's lying tales allured,
From the bright sun and living breeze ye stray;
And deep in London's gloomy haunts immured,
Brood o'er your fortune's, freedom's, health's decay.
O blind of choice and to yourselves untrue!
The young grove shoots, their bloom the fields renew,
The mansion asks its lord, the swains their friend;
While he doth riot's orgies haply share,
Or tempt the gamester's dark, destroying snare,
Or at some courtly shrine with slavish incense bend.

13 And yet full oft your anxious tongues complain
That lawless tumult prompts the rustic throng ;
That the rude village inmates now disdain
Those homely ties which ruled their fathers long.
Alas, your fathers did by other arts
Draw those kind ties around their simple hearts,
And led in other paths their ductile will ;
By succour, faithful counsel, courteous cheer,
Won them the ancient manners to revere,
To prize their country's peace and heaven's due rites fulfil.

14 But mark the judgment of experienced Time,
Tutor of nations. Doth light discord tear
A state, and impotent sedition's crime ?
The powers of warlike prudence dwell not there ;
The powers who to command and to obey,
Instruct the valiant. There would civil sway
The rising race to manly concord tame ?
Oft let the marshall'd field their steps unite,
And in glad splendour bring before their sight
One common cause and one hereditary fame.

15 Nor yet be awed, nor yet your task disown,
Though war's proud votaries look on severe ;
Though secrets, taught erewhile to them alone,
They deem profaned by your intruding ear.
Let them in vain, your martial hope to quell,
Of new refinements, fiercer weapons tell,
And mock the old simplicity, in vain :
To the time's warfare, simple or refined,
The time itself adapts the warrior's mind ;
And equal prowess still shall equal palms obtain.

- 16 Say then, if England's youth, in earlier days,
 On glory's field with well-train'd armies vied,
 Why shall they now renounce that generous praise?
 Why dread the foreign mercenary's pride?
 Though Valois braved young Edward's gentle hand,
 And Albert rush'd on Henry's way-worn band,
 With Europe's chosen sons in arms renown'd,
 Yet not on Vere's bold archers long they look'd, Nor Audley's squires, nor Mowbray's yeomen brook'd:
 They saw their standard fall, and left their monarch bound.
- 17 Such were the laurels which your fathers won:
 Such glory's dictates in their dauntless breast;—
 Is there no voice that speaks to every son?
 No nobler, holier call to you address'd?
 Oh! by majestic Freedom, righteous Laws,
 By heavenly Truth's, by manly Reason's cause,
 Awake; attend; be indolent no more:
 By friendship, social peace, domestic love,
 Rise; arm; your country's living safety prove;
 And train her valiant youth, and watch around her shore.

ODE XII.

ON RECOVERING FROM A FIT OF SICKNESS;
 IN THE COUNTRY. 1758.

- 1 THY verdant scenes, O Goulder's Hill,
 Once more I seek, a languid guest:

With throbbing temples and with burden'd breast
Once more I climb thy steep aërial way.
O faithful cure of oft-returning ill,
Now call thy sprightly breezes round,
Dissolve this rigid cough profound,
And bid the springs of life with gentler movement play.

2 How gladly, 'mid the dews of dawn,
My weary lungs thy healing gale,
The balmy west or the fresh north, inhale!
How gladly, while my musing footsteps rove
Round the cool orchard or the sunny lawn,
Awaked I stop, and look to find
What shrub perfumes the pleasant wind,
Or what wild songster charms the Dryads of the grove!

3 Now, ere the morning walk is done,
The distant voice of Health I hear,
Welcome as beauty's to the lover's ear.
'Droop not, nor doubt of my return,' she cries;
'Here will I, 'mid the radiant calm of noon,
Meet thee beneath yon chestnut bower,
And lenient on thy bosom pour
That indolence divine which lulls the earth and skies.'

4 The goddess promised not in vain.
I found her at my favourite time.
Nor wish'd to breathe in any softer clime,
While (half-reclined, half-slumbering as I lay)
She hover'd o'er me. Then, among her train
Of Nymphs and Zephyrs, to my view
Thy gracious form appear'd anew,
Then first, O heavenly Muse, unseen for many a day.

- 5 In that soft pomp the tuneful maid
Shone like the golden star of love.
I saw her hand in careless measures move;
I heard sweet preludes dancing on her lyre,
While my whole frame the sacred sound obey'd.
New sunshine o'er my fancy springs,
New colours clothe external things,
And the last glooms of pain and sickly plaint
retire.
- 6 O Goulder's Hill, by thee restored
Once more to this enliven'd hand,
My harp, which late resounded o'er the land
The voice of glory, solemn and severe,
My Dorian harp shall now with mild accord
To thee her joyful tribute pay,
And send a less ambitious lay
Of friendship and of love to greet thy master's ear.
- 7 For when within thy shady seat
First from the sultry town he chose,
And the tired senate's cares, his wish'd repose,
Then wast thou mine; to me a happier home
For social leisure: where my welcome feet,
Estranged from all the entangling ways
In which the restless vulgar strays,
Through Nature's simple paths with ancient Faith might roam.
- 8 And while around his sylvan scene
My Dyson led the white-wing'd hours,
Oft from the Athenian Academic bowers
Their sages came: oft heard our lingering walk
The Mantuan music warbling o'er the green:

And oft did Tully's reverend shade,
 Though much for liberty afraid,
 With us of letter'd ease or virtuous glory talk.

9 But other guests were on their way,
 And reach'd ere long this favour'd grove;
 Even the celestial progeny of Jove,
 Bright Venus, with her all-subduing son,
 Whose golden shaft most willingly obey
 The best and wisest. As they came,
 Glad Hymen waved his genial flame,
 And sang their happy gifts, and praised their spotless throne.

10 I saw when through yon festive gate
 He led along his chosen maid,
 And to my friend with smiles presenting said:—
 'Receive that fairest wealth which Heaven assign'd
 To human fortune. Did thy lonely state
 One wish, one utmost hope, confess?
 Behold, she comes, to adorn and bless:
 Comes, worthy of thy heart, and equal to thy mind.'

ODE XIII.

TO THE AUTHOR OF MEMOIRS OF THE HOUSE OF BRANDENBURG. 1751.

1 THE men renown'd as chiefs of human race,
 And born to lead in counsels or in arms,
 Have seldom turn'd their feet from glory's chase
 To dwell with books, or court the Muse's charms.

Yet, to our eyes if haply time hath brought
Some genuine transcript of their calmer thought,
There still we own the wise, the great, or good;
And Cæsar there and Xenophon are seen,
As clear in spirit and sublime of mien,
As on Pharsalian plains, or by the Assyrian flood.

2 Say thou too, Frederic, was not this thy aim?
Thy vigils could the student's lamp engage,
Except for this, except that future Fame
Might read thy genius in the faithful page?
That if hereafter Envy shall presume
With words irreverent to inscribe thy tomb,
And baser weeds upon thy palms to fling,
That hence posterity may try thy reign,
Assert thy treaties, and thy wars explain,
And view in native lights the hero and the king.

3 O evil foresight and pernicious care!
Wilt thou indeed abide by this appeal?
Shall we the lessons of thy pen compare
With private honour or with public zeal?
Whence, then, at things divine those darts of scorn?
Why are the woes, which virtuous men have borne
For sacred truth, a prey to laughter given?
What fiend, what foe of Nature urged thy arm
The Almighty of his sceptre to disarm,
To push this earth adrift and leave it loose from Heaven?

4 Ye godlike shades of legislators old,
Ye who made Rome victorious, Athens wise,
Ye first of mortals with the bless'd enroll'd,
Say, did not horror in your bosoms rise,

When thus, by impious vanity impell'd,
 A magistrate, a monarch, ye beheld
 Affronting civil order's holiest bands,
 Those bands which ye so labour'd to improve,
 Those hopes and fears of justice from above,
 Which tamed the savage world to your divine commands?

ODE XIV.

THE COMPLAINT.

- 1 AWAY! away!
 Tempt me no more, insidious love:
 Thy soothing sway
 Long did my youthful bosom prove:
 At length thy treason is discern'd,
 At length some dear-bought caution earn'd:
 Away! nor hope my riper age to move.
- 2 I know, I see
 Her merit. Needs it now be shown,
 Alas, to me?
 How often, to myself unknown,
 The graceful, gentle, virtuous maid
 Have I admired! How often said,
 What joy to call a heart like hers one's own!
- 3 But, flattering god,
 O squanderer of content and ease,
 In thy abode
 Will care's rude lesson learn to please?

O say, deceiver, hast thou won
Proud Fortune to attend thy throne,
Or placed thy friends above her stern decrees?

ODE XV.

ON DOMESTIC MANNERS.

(UNFINISHED.)

- 1 MEEK Honour, female shame,
Oh! whither, sweetest offspring of the sky,
From Albion dost thou fly,
Of Albion's daughters once the favourite fame?
O beauty's only friend,
Who giv'st her pleasing reverence to inspire;
Who selfish, bold desire
Dost to esteem and dear affection turn;
Alas, of thee forlorn
What joy, what praise, what hope can life pretend?

- 2 Behold, our youths in vain
Concerning nuptial happiness inquire:
Our maids no more aspire
The arts of bashful Hymen to attain;
But with triumphant eyes
And cheeks impassive, as they move along,
Ask homage of the throng.
The lover swears that in a harlot's arms
Are found the self-same charms,
And worthless and deserted lives and dies.

3 Behold, unblest at home,
The father of the cheerless household mourns :
The night in vain returns,
For Love and glad Content at distance roam ;
While she, in whom his mind
Seeks refuge from the day's dull task of cares,
To meet him she prepares,
Through noise and spleen and all the gamester's art,
A listless, harass'd heart,
Where not one tender thought can welcome find.

4 'Twas thus, along the shore
Of Thames, Britannia's guardian Genius heard,
From many a tongue preferr'd,
Of strife and grief the fond invective lore :
At which the queen divine
Indignant, with her adamant spear
Like thunder sounding near,
Smote the red cross upon her silver shield,
And thus her wrath reveal'd ;
(I watch'd her awful words, and made them mine.)

ODE XVIII. STANZA II.—2.

LYCURGUS the Lacedemonian lawgiver brought into Greece from Asia Minor the first complete copy of Homer's works. At Plataea was fought the decisive battle between the Persian army and the united militia of Greece under Pausanias and Aristides. Cimon the Athenian erected a trophy in Cyprus for two great victories gained on the same day over the Persians by sea and land. Diodorus Siculus has preserved the inscription which the Athenians affixed to the consecrated spoils, after this great success; in which it is very remarkable that the greatness of the occasion has raised the manner of expression above the usual simplicity and modesty of all other ancient inscriptions. It is this:—

ΕΞ. ΟΥ. Γ'. ΕΥΡΩΠΗΝ. ΑΣΙΑΣ. ΔΙΧΑ. ΠΟΝΤΟΣ.

The following translation is almost literal:—

Since first the sea from Asia's hostile coast
Divided Europe, and the god of war
Assail'd imperious cities; never yet,
At once among the waves and on the shore,

Hath such a labour been achieved by men
 Who earth inhabit. They, whose arms the Medes
 In Cyprus felt pernicious, they, the same,
 Have won from skilful Tyre an hundred ships
 Crowded with warriors. Asia groans, in both
 Her hands sore smitten, by the might of war.

STANZA II.—3.

Pindar was contemporary with Aristides and Cimon, in whom the glory of ancient Greece was at its height. When Xerxes invaded Greece, Pindar was true to the common interest of his country; though his fellow-citizens, the Thebans, had sold themselves to the Persian king. In one of his odes he expresses the great distress and anxiety of his mind, occasioned by the vast preparations of Xerxes against Greece (Isthm. 8). In another he celebrates the victories of Salamis, Plataea, and Himera (Pyth. 1). It will be necessary to add two or three other particulars of his life, real or fabulous, in order to explain what follows in the text concerning him. First, then, he was thought to be so great a favourite of Apollo, that the priests of that deity allotted him a constant share of their offerings. It was said of him, as of some other illustrious men, that at his birth a swarm of bees lighted on his lips, and fed him with their honey. It was also a tradition concerning him, that Pan was heard to recite his poetry, and seen dancing to one of his hymns on the mountains near Thebes. But a real historical fact in his life is, that the Thebans imposed a large fine upon him on account of the veneration which he expressed in his poems for that heroic spirit shown by the people of Athens in defence of the common liberty, which his own fellow-citizens had shamefully betrayed. And as the argument of this ode implies, that great poetical talents and high sentiments of liberty do reciprocally produce and assist each other, so Pindar is perhaps the most exemplary proof of this connexion which occurs in history. The Thebans were remarkable, in general, for a slavish disposition through all the fortunes of their commonwealth; at the time of its ruin by Philip; and even in its best state, under the administration of Pelopidas and Epaminondas: and every one knows they were no less remarkable for great dulness and want of all genius. That Pindar should have equally distinguished himself from the rest of his fellow-citizens in both these respects seems somewhat extraordinary, and is scarce to be accounted for but by the preceding observation.

STANZA III.—3.

Alluding to his defence of the people of England against Salmasius. See particularly the manner in which he himself speaks of that undertaking, in the introduction to his reply to Morus.

STANZA IV.—3.

Edward the Third; from whom descended Henry Hastings, third Earl of Huntingdon, by the daughter of the Duke of Clarence, brother to Edward the Fourth.

STANZA V.—3.

At Whittington, a village on the edge of Scarsdale in Derbyshire, the Earls of Devonshire and Danby, with the Lord Delamere, privately concerted the plan of the Revolution. The house in which they met is at present a farmhouse, and the country people distinguish the room where they sat by the name of the plotting parlour.

BOOK SECOND.

ODE VII. STANZA II.—1.

MR LOCKE died in 1704, when Mr Hoadly was beginning to distinguish himself in the cause of civil and religious liberty: Lord Godolphin in 1712, when the doctrines of the Jacobite faction were chiefly favoured by those in power: Lord Somers in 1716, amid the practices of the nonjuring clergy against the Protestant establishment; and Lord Stanhope in 1721, during the controversy with the lower house of convocation.

ODE X. STANZA V.

During Mr Pope's war with Theobald, Concanen, and the rest of their tribe, Mr Warburton, the present Lord Bishop of Gloucester, did with great zeal cultivate their friendship, having been introduced, forsooth, at the meetings of that respectable confederacy—a favour which he afterwards spoke of in very high terms of complacency and thankfulness. At the same time, in his intercourse with them, he treated Mr Pope in a most contemptuous manner, and as a writer without genius. Of the truth of these assertions his lordship can have no doubt, if he recollects his own correspondence with Concanen, a part of which is still in being, and will probably be remembered as long as any of this prelate's writings.

ODE XIII.

In the year 1751 appeared a very splendid edition, in quarto, of 'Mémoires pour servir à l'Histoire de la Maison de Brandebourg, à Berlin et à la Haye,' with a privilege, signed Frederic, the same being engraved in imitation of handwriting. In this edition, among other extraordinary passages, are the two following, to which the third stanza of this ode more particularly refers:—

'Il se fit une migration' (the author is speaking of what happened at the revocation of the Edict of Nantes), 'dont on n'avoit guère vu d'exemples dans l'histoire: un peuple entier sortit du royaume par l'esprit de parti en haine du pape, et pour recevoir sous un autre ciel la communion sous les deux espèces: quatre cens mille âmes s'expatrièrent ainsi et abandonnerent tous leur biens pour détonner dans d'autres temples les vieux pseumes de Clément Marot.'—Page 163.

'La crainte donna le jour à la crédulité, et l'amour propre interessa bientôt le ciel au destin des hommes.'—Page 242.

HYMN TO THE NAIADS. 1746.

ARGUMENT.

The Nymphs, who preside over springs and rivulets, are addressed at day-break, in honour of their several functions, and of the relations which they bear to the natural and to the moral world. Their origin is deduced from the first allegorical deities, or powers of nature, according to the doctrine of the old mythological poets, concerning the generation of the gods and the rise of things. They are then successively considered, as giving motion to the air and exciting summer breezes; as nourishing and beautifying the vegetable creation; as contributing to the fulness of navigable rivers, and consequently to the maintenance of commerce; and by that means to the maritime part of military power. Next is represented their favourable influence upon health when assisted by rural exercise, which introduces their connexion with the art of physic, and the happy effects of mineral medicinal springs. Lastly, they are celebrated for the friendship which the Muses bear them, and for the true inspiration which temperance only can receive, in opposition to the enthusiasm of the more licentious poets.

O'ER yonder eastern hill the twilight pale
Walks forth from darkness; and the God of day,
With bright Astræa seated by his side,
Waits yet to leave the ocean. Tarry, Nymphs,
Ye Nymphs, ye blue-eyed progeny of Thames,
Who now the mazes of this rugged heath
Trace with your fleeting steps; who all night long
Repeat, amid the cool and tranquil air,
Your lonely murmurs, tarry, and receive
My offer'd lay. To pay you homage due,
I leave the gates of sleep; nor shall my lyre

Too far into the splendid hours of morn 12
 Engage your audience; my observant hand
 Shall close the strain ere any sultry beam
 Approach you. To your subterranean haunts
 Ye then may timely steal; to pace with care
 The humid sands; to loosen from the soil
 The bubbling sources; to direct the rills
 To meet in wider channels; or beneath
 Some grotto's dripping arch, at height of noon 20
 To slumber, shelter'd from the burning heaven.

Where shall my song begin, ye Nymphs, or end?
 Wide is your praise and copious—first of things,
 First of the lonely powers, ere Time arose,
 Were Love and Chaos. Love,^A the sire of Fate;^B
 Elder than Chaos.^C Born of Fate was Time,^D
 Who many sons and many comely births
 Devour'd,^E relentless father; till the child
 Of Rhea^F drove him from the upper sky,^G
 And quell'd his deadly might. Then social reign'd 30
 The kindred powers,^H Tethys, and reverend Ops,
 And spotless Vesta; while supreme of sway
 Remain'd the Cloud-Compeller. From the couch
 Of Tethys sprang the sedgy-crowned race,^I
 Who from a thousand urns, o'er every clime,
 Send tribute to their parent; and from them
 Are ye, O Naiads:^K Arethusa fair,
 And tuneful Aganippe; that sweet name,
 Bandusia; that soft family which dwelt
 With Syrian Daphne;^L and the honour'd tribes 40
 Beloved of Pæon.^M Listen to my strain,
 Daughters of Tethys: listen to your praise.

You, Nymphs, the winged offspring,^N which of old
 Aurora to divine Astræus bore, Owns, and your aid beseecheth. When the might

Of Hyperíon,^o from his noontide throne, 46
 Unbends their languid pinions, aid from you
 They ask; Favonius and the mild South-west
 From you relief implore. Your sallying streams^p
 Fresh vigour to their weary wings impart. 50
 Again they fly, disporting; from the mead
 Half-ripen'd and the tender blades of corn,
 To sweep the noxious mildew; or dispel
 Contagious steams, which oft the parched earth
 Breathes on her fainting sons. From noon to eve,
 Along the river and the pavèd brook,
 Ascend the cheerful breezes: hail'd of bards
 Who, fast by learned Cam, the Æolian lyre
 Solicit; nor unwelcome to the youth
 Who on the heights of Tibur, all inclined 60
 O'er rushing Anio, with a pious hand
 The reverend scene delineates, broken fanes,
 Or tombs, or pillar'd aqueducts, the pomp
 Of ancient Time; and haply, while he scans
 The ruins, with a silent tear revolves
 The fame and fortune of imperious Rome.

You too, O Nymphs, and your unenvious aid
 The rural powers confess, and still prepare
 For you their choicest treasures. Pan commands,
 Oft as the Delian king^q with Sirius holds 70
 The central heavens, the father of the grove
 Commands his Dryads over your abodes
 To spread their deepest umbrage. Well the god
 Remembereth how indulgent ye supplied
 Your genial dew to nurse them in their prime.

Pales, the pasture's queen, where'er ye stray,
 Pursues your steps, delighted; and the path
 With living verdure clothes. Around your haunts
 The laughing Chloris,^r with profusest hand,

Throws wide her blooms, her odours. Still with you 80
 Pomona seeks to dwell; and o'er the lawns,
 And o'er the vale of Richmond, where with Thames
 Ye love to wander, Amalthea^s pours,
 Well-pleas'd, the wealth of that Ammonian horn,
 Her dower; unmindful of the fragrant isles
 Nysæan or Atlantic. Nor canst thou (Albeit oft, ungrateful, thou dost mock
 The beverage of the sober Naiad's urn,
 O Bromius, O Lenæan), nor canst thou
 Disown the powers whose bounty, ill repaid, 90
 With nectar feeds thy tendrils. Yet from me,
 Yet, blameless Nymphs, from my delighted lyre,
 Accept the rites your bounty well may claim,
 Nor heed the scoffings of the Edonian band.^t

For better praise awaits you. Thames, your sire,
 As down the verdant slope your duteous rills
 Descend, the tribute stately Thames receives,
 Delighted; and your piety applauds;
 And bids his copious tide roll on secure,
 For faithful are his daughters; and with words 100
 Auspicious gratulates the bark which, now
 His banks forsaking, her adventurous wings
 Yields to the breeze, with Albion's happy gifts
 Extremest isles to bless. And oft at morn,
 When Hermes,^u from Olympus bent o'er earth
 To bear the words of Jove, on yonder hill
 Stoops lightly sailing; oft intent your springs
 He views: and waving o'er some new-born stream
 His bless'd pacific wand, 'And yet,' he cries,
 'Yet,' cries the son of Maia, 'though recluse 110
 And silent be your stores, from you, fair Nymphs,
 Flows wealth and kind society to men.
 By you my function and my honour'd name

Do I possess; while o'er the Bœtic vale, 114
 Or through the towers of Memphis, or the palms
 By sacred Ganges water'd, I conduct
 The English merchant; with the buxom fleece
 Of fertile Ariconium while I clothe
 Sarmatian kings; or to the household gods
 Of Syria, from the bleak Cornubian shore, 120
 Dispense the mineral treasure^x which of old
 Sidonian pilots sought, when this fair land
 Was yet unconscious of those generous arts,
 Which wise Phœnicia from their native clime
 Transplanted to a more indulgent heaven.'

Such are the words of Hermes: such the praise,
 O Naiads, which from tongues celestial waits
 Your bounteous deeds. From bounty issueth power:
 And those who, sedulous in prudent works,
 Relieve the wants of nature, Jove repays 130
 With noble wealth, and his own seat on earth,
 Fit judgments to pronounce, and curb the might
 Of wicked men. Your kind unfailing urns
 Not vainly to the hospitable arts
 Of Hermes yield their store. For, O ye Nymphs,
 Hath he not won^y the unconquerable queen
 Of arms to court your friendship? You she owns
 The fair associates who extend her sway
 Wide o'er the mighty deep; and grateful things
 Of you she uttereth, oft as from the shore 140
 Of Thames, or Medway's vale, or the green banks
 Of Vecta, she her thundering navy leads
 To Calpe's^z foaming channel, or the rough
 Cantabrian surge; her auspices divine
 Imparting to the senate and the prince
 Of Albion, to dismay barbaric kings,
 The Iberian, or the Celt. The pride of kings

Was ever scorn'd by Pallas; and of old 148
 Rejoiced the virgin, from the brazen prow
 Of Athens o'er Ægina's gloomy surge,^{AA}
 To drive her clouds and storms; o'erwhelming all
 The Persian's promised glory, when the realms
 Of Indus and the soft Ionian clime,
 When Libya's torrid champaign and the rocks
 Of cold Imaüs join'd their servile bands,
 To sweep the sons of Liberty from earth.

In vain; Minerva on the bounding prow
 Of Athens stood, and with the thunder's voice
 Denounced her terrors on their impious heads,
 And shook her burning ægis. Xerxes saw;^{BB} 160
 From Heracléum, on the mountain's height
 Throned in his golden car, he knew the sign
 Celestial; felt unrighteous hope forsake
 His faltering heart, and turn'd his face with shame.

Hail, ye who share the stern Minerva's power;
 Who arm the hand of Liberty for war,
 And give to the renown'd Britannic name
 To awe contending monarchs: yet benign,
 Yet mild of nature, to the works of peace
 More prone, and lenient of the many ills 170
 Which wait on human life. Your gentle aid
 Hygeia well can witness; she who saves,
 From poisonous cates and cups of pleasing bane,
 The wretch devoted to the entangling snares
 Of Bacchus and of Comus. Him she leads
 To Cynthia's lonely haunts. To spread the toils,
 To beat the coverts, with the jovial horn
 At dawn of day to summon the loud hounds,
 She calls the lingering sluggard from his dreams,
 And where his breast may drink the mountain breeze, 180
 And where the fervour of the sunny vale

May beat upon his brow, through devious paths 182
 Beckons his rapid courser. Nor when ease,
 Cool ease and welcome slumbers have becalm'd
 His eager bosom, does the queen of health
 Her pleasing care withhold. His decent board
 She guards, presiding, and the frugal powers
 With joy sedate leads in; and while the brown
 Ennæan dame with Pan presents her stores,
 While changing still, and comely in the change, 190
 Vertumnus and the Hours before him spread
 The garden's banquet, you to crown his feast,
 To crown his feast, O Naiads, you the fair
 Hygeia calls; and from your shelving seats,
 And groves of poplar, plenteous cups ye bring,
 To slake his veins, till soon a purer tide
 Flows down those loaded channels, washeth off
 The dregs of luxury, the lurking seeds
 Of crude disease, and through the abodes of life
 Sends vigour, sends repose. Hail, Naiads, hail! 200
 Who give to labour, health; to stooping age,
 The joys which youth had squander'd. Oft your urns
 Will I invoke; and frequent in your praise,
 Abash the frantic thyrsus^{cc} with my song.

For not estranged from your benignant arts
 Is he, the god, to whose mysterious shrine
 My youth was sacred, and my votive cares
 Belong, the learned Pæon. Oft when all
 His cordial treasures he hath search'd in vain;
 When herbs, and potent trees, and drops of balm 210
 Rich with the genial influence of the sun
 (To rouse dark fancy from her plaintive dreams,
 To brace the nerveless arm, with food to win
 Sick appetite, or hush the unquiet breast
 Which pines with silent passion), he in vain

Hath proved; to your deep mansions he descends. 216
 Your gates of humid rock, your dim arcades,
 He entereth; where empurpled veins of ore
 Gleam on the roof; where through the rigid mine
 Your trickling rills insinuate. There the god 220
 From your indulgent hands the streaming bowl
 Wafts to his pale-eyed suppliants; wafts the seeds
 Metallic and the elemental salts
 Wash'd from the pregnant glebe. They drink, and soon
 Flies pain; flies inauspicious care; and soon
 The social haunt or unfrequented shade
 Hears Io, Io Pæan,^{DD} as of old,
 When Python fell. And, O propitious Nymphs,
 Oft as for hapless mortals I implore
 Your sultry springs, through every urn, 230
 Oh, shed your healing treasures! With the first
 And finest breath, which from the genial strife
 Of mineral fermentation springs, like light
 O'er the fresh morning's vapours, lustrate then
 The fountain, and inform the rising wave.
 My lyre shall pay your bounty. Scorn not ye
 That humble tribute. Though a mortal hand
 Excite the strings to utterance, yet for themes
 Not unregarded of celestial powers,
 I frame their language; and the Muses deign 240
 To guide the pious tenor of my lay.
 The Muses (sacred by their gifts divine)
 In early days did to my wondering sense
 Their secrets oft reveal; oft my raised ear
 In slumber felt their music; oft at noon,
 Or hour of sunset, by some lonely stream,
 In field or shady grove, they taught me words
 Of power from death and envy to preserve
 The good man's name. Whence yet with grateful mind,

And offerings unprofaned by ruder eye, 250
My vows I send, my homage, to the seats
Of rocky Cirrha,^{EE} where with you they dwell,
Where you their chaste companions they admit,
Through all the hallow'd scene; where oft intent,
And leaning o'er Castalia's mossy verge,
They mark the cadence of your confluent urns,
How tuneful, yielding gratefullest repose
To their consorted measure, till again,
With emulation all the sounding choir,
And bright Apollo, leader of the song, 260
Their voices through the liquid air exalt,
And sweep their lofty strings; those powerful strings
That charm the mind of gods,^{FF} that fill the courts
Of wide Olympus with oblivion sweet
Of evils, with immortal rest from cares,
Assuage the terrors of the throne of Jove,
And quench the formidable thunderbolt
Of unrelenting fire. With slacken'd wings,
While now the solemn concert breathes around,
Incumbent o'er the sceptre of his lord 270
Sleeps the stern eagle, by the number'd notes,
Possess'd, and satiate with the melting tone,
Sovereign of birds. The furious god of war,
His darts forgetting, and the winged wheels
That bear him vengeful o'er the embattled plain,
Relents, and soothes his own fierce heart to ease,
Most welcome ease. The sire of gods and men
In that great moment of divine delight,
Looks down on all that live; and whatsoe'er
He loves not, o'er the peopled earth and o'er 280
The interminated ocean, he beholds
Cursed with abhorrence by his doom severe,
And troubled at the sound. Ye, Naiads, ye

With ravish'd ears the melody attend 284
 Worthy of sacred silence. But the slaves
 Of Bacchus with tempestuous clamours strive
 To drown the heavenly strains, of highest Jove
 Irreverent, and by mad presumption fired
 Their own discordant raptures to advance
 With hostile emulation. Down they rush 290
 From Nysa's vine-empurpled cliff, the dames
 Of Thrace, the Satyrs, and the unruly Fauns,
 With old Silenus, reeling through the crowd
 Which gambols round him, in convulsions wild
 Tossing their limbs, and brandishing in air
 The ivy-mantled thyrsus, or the torch
 Through black smoke flaming, to the Phrygian pipe's ^{GG}
 Shrill voice, and to the clashing cymbals, mix'd
 With shrieks and frantic uproar. May the gods
 From every unpolluted ear avert 300
 Their orgies! If within the seats of men,
 Within the walls, the gates, where Pallas holds ^{HH}
 The guardian key, if haply there be found
 Who loves to mingle with the revel-band
 And hearken to their accents, who aspires
 From such instructors to inform his breast
 With verse, let him, fit votarist, implore
 Their inspiration. He perchance the gifts
 Of young Lyæus, and the dread exploits, 310
 May sing in aptest numbers; he the fate
 Of sober Pentheus,^{II} he the Paphian rites,
 And naked Mars with Cytherea chain'd,
 And strong Alcides in the spinster's robes,
 May celebrate, applauded. But with you,
 O Naiads, far from that unhallow'd rout,
 Must dwell the man whoe'er to praisèd themes
 Invokes the immortal Muse. The immortal Muse

To your calm habitations, to the cave 318
Corycian^{KK} or the Delphic mount,^{LL} will guide
His footsteps, and with your unsullied streams
His lips will bathe; whether the eternal lore
Of Themis, or the majesty of Jove,
To mortals he reveal; or teach his lyre
The unenvied guerdon of the patriot's toils,
In those unfading islands of the bless'd,
Where sacred bards abide. Hail, honour'd Nymphs;
Thrice hail! For you the Cyrenaïc shell,^{MM}
Behold, I touch, revering. To my songs
Be present ye with favourable feet,
And all profaner audience far remove. 330

NOTES.

NOTE A.

*'Love,
Elder than Chaos.'*—L. 25.

HESIOD in his Theogony gives a different account, and makes Chaos the eldest of beings, though he assigns to Love neither father nor superior; which circumstance is particularly mentioned by Phædrus, in Plato's Banquet, as being observable not only in Hesiod, but in all other writers both of verse and prose; and on the same occasion he cites a line from Parmenides, in which Love is expressly styled the eldest of all the gods. Yet Aristophanes, in 'The Birds,' affirms, that 'Chaos, and Night, and Erebus, and Tartarus were first; and that Love was produced from an egg, which the sable-winged Night deposited in the immense bosom of Erebus.' But it must be observed, that the Love designed by this comic poet was always distinguished from the other, from that original and self-existent being the TO ON or ΑΓΑΘΟΝ of Plato, and meant only the ΔΗΜΙΟΥΡΓΟΣ or second person of the old Grecian Trinity; to whom is inscribed a hymn among those which pass under the name of Orpheus, where he is called Protogonos, or the first-begotten, is said to have been born of an egg, and is represented as the principal or origin of all these external appearances of nature. In the fragments of Orpheus, collected by Henry Stephens, he is named Phanes, the discoverer or discloser, who unfolded the ideas of the supreme intelligence, and exposed them to the perception of inferior beings in this visible frame of the world; as Macrobius, and Proclus, and Athenagoras, all agree to interpret the several passages of Orpheus which they have preserved.

But the Love designed in our text is the one self-existent and infinite mind; whom if the generality of ancient mythologists have not introduced or truly described in accounting for the production of the world and its appearances, yet, to a modern poet, it can be no objection that he hath ventured to differ from them in this particular, though in other respects he professeth to imitate their manner and conform to their opinions; for, in these great points of natural theology, they differ no less remarkably among themselves, and are perpetually confounding the philosophical relations of things with the traditional circumstances of mythic history; upon which very account Callimachus, in his hymn to Jupiter, declareth his dissent from them concerning even an article of the national creed, adding, that the ancient bards were by no means to be depended on. And yet in the exordium of the old Argonautic poem, ascribed to Orpheus, it is said, that 'Love, whom mortals in later times call Phanes, was the father of the eternally-begotten Night;' who is generally represented by these mythological poets as being herself the parent of all things; and who, in the 'Indigitamenta,' or Orphic Hymns, is said to be the same with Cypris, or Love itself. Moreover, in the body of this Argonautic poem, where the personated Orpheus introduceth himself singing to his lyre in reply to Chiron, he celebrateth 'the obscure memory of Chaos, and the natures which it contained within itself in a state of perpetual vicissitude; how the heaven had its boundary determined, the generation of the earth, the depth of the ocean, and also the sapient Love, the most ancient, the self-sufficient, with all the beings which he produced when he separated one thing from another.' Which noble passage is more directly to Aristotle's purpose in the first book of his metaphysics than any of those which he has there quoted, to show that the ancient poets and mythologists agreed with Empedocles, Anaxagoras, and the other more sober philosophers, in that natural anticipation and common notion of mankind concerning the necessity of mind and reason to account for the connexion, motion, and good order of the world. For though neither this poem, nor the hymns which pass under the same name, are, it should seem, the work of the real Orpheus, yet beyond all question they are very ancient. The hymns, more particularly, are allowed to be older than the invasion of Greece by Xerxes, and were probably a set of public and solemn forms of devotion, as appears by a passage in one of them which Demosthenes hath almost literally cited in his first oration against Aristogiton, as the saying of Orpheus, the founder of their most holy mysteries. On this account, they are of higher authority than any other mythological work now extant, the Theogony of Hesiod himself not excepted. The poetry of them is often extremely noble; and the mysterious air which prevails in them, together with its delightful impression upon the mind, cannot be better expressed than in that remarkable description with which they inspired the German editor, Eschenbach, when he accidentally met with them at Leipsic:—'Thesaurum me reperisse credidi,' says he, 'et profecto thesaurum reperi. Incredibile dictu quo me sacro horrore afflaverint indigitamenta ista deorum: nam et tempus ad illorum lectionem eligere cogebat, quod vel solum horrorem incutere animo potest, nocturnum; cum enim totam diem consumserim in contemplando urbis splendore, et in adeundis, quibus scatet urbs illa, viris doctis; sola nox restabat, quam Orpheo consecrare potui. In abyssum quandam mysteriorum venerandæ antiquitatis descendere videbar, quotiescunque silente mundo, solis vigilantibus astris et luna, μελανηφάτους istos hymnos ad manus sumsi.'

NOTE B.

'Love, the sire of Fate.'—L. 25.

Fate is the universal system of natural causes; the work of the Omnipotent Mind, or of Love: so Minucius Felix:—'Quid enim aliud est fatum, quam quod de unoquoque nostrum deus fatus est.' So also Cicero, in the First Book on Divination:—'Fatum autem id appello, quod Græci ΕΙΜΑΡΜΕΝΗΝ: id est, ordinem seriemque causarum, cum causa causæ nexa rem ex se gignat—ex quo intelligitur, ut fatum sit non id quod superstitiose, sed id quod physice dicitur causa æterna rerum.' To the same purpose is the doctrine of Hierocles, in that excellent fragment concerning Providence and Destiny. As to the three Fates, or Destinies of the poets, they represented that part of the general system of natural causes which relates to man, and to other mortal beings: for so we are told in the hymn addressed to them among the Orphic Indigitamenta, where they are called the daughters of Night (or Love), and, contrary to the vulgar notion, are distinguished by the epithets of gentle and tender-hearted. According to Hesiod, Theog. ver. 904, they were the daughters of Jupiter and Themis: but in the Orphic hymn to Venus, or Love, that goddess is directly styled the mother of Necessity, and is represented, immediately after, as governing the three Destinies, and conducting the whole system of natural causes.

NOTE C.

'Chaos.'—L. 26.

The unformed, undigested mass of Moses and Plato; which Milton calls
'The womb of nature.'

NOTE D.

'Born of Fate was Time.'—L. 26.

Chronos, Saturn, or Time, was, according to Apollodorus, the son of Cælum and Tellus. But the author of the hymns gives it quite undisguised by mythological language, and calls him plainly the offspring of the earth and the starry heaven; that is, of Fate, as explained in the preceding note.

NOTE E.

'Who many sons . . . devour'd.'—L. 27.

The known fable of Saturn devouring his children was certainly meant to imply the dissolution of natural bodies, which are produced and destroyed by Time.

NOTE F.

'The Child of Rhea.'—L. 29.

Jupiter, so called by Pindar.

NOTE G.

'Drove him from the upper sky.'—L. 29.

That Jupiter dethroned his father Saturn is recorded by all the mythologists. Phurnutus, or Cornutus, the author of a little Greek treatise on the nature of the gods, informs us that by Jupiter was meant the vegetable soul of the world, which restrained and prevented those uncertain alterations which Saturn, or Time, used formerly to cause in the mundane system.

NOTE H.

'*Then social reign'd
The kindred powers.*'—L. 31.

Our mythology here supposeth, that before the establishment of the vital, vegetative, plastic nature (represented by Jupiter), the four elements were in a variable and unsettled condition, but afterwards well-disposed, and at peace among themselves. Tethys was the wife of the Ocean; Ops, or Rhea, the Earth; Vesta, the eldest daughter of Saturn, Fire; and the Cloud-Compeller, or Ζεύς νεφεληγερέτης, the Air, though he also represented the plastic principle of nature, as may be seen in the Orphic hymn inscribed to him.

NOTE I.

‘The sedgy crowned race.’—L. 34.

The river-gods, who, according to Hesiod’s Theogony, were the sons of Oceanus and Tethys.

NOTE K.

‘From them are ye, O Naiads.’—L. 37.

The descent of the Naiads is less certain than most points of the Greek mythology. Homer, Odyss. xiii. κόυραι Διός. Virgil, in the eighth book of the Æneid, speaks as if the Nymphs, or Naiads, were the parents of the rivers: but in this he contradicts the testimony of Hesiod, and evidently departs from the orthodox system, which representeth several nymphs as retaining to every single river. On the other hand, Callimachus, who was very learned in all the school-divinity of those times, in his hymn to Delos, maketh Peneus, the great Thessalian river-god, the father of his nymphs: and Ovid, in the fourteenth book of his Metamorphoses, mentions the Naiads of Latium as the immediate daughters of the neighbouring river-gods. Accordingly, the Naiads of particular rivers are occasionally, both by Ovid and Statius, called by patronymic, from the name of the river to which they belong.

NOTE L.

‘Syrian Daphne.’—L. 40.

The grove of Daphne in Syria, near Antioch, was famous for its delightful fountains.

NOTE M.

‘The tribes beloved by Pæon.’—L. 40.

Mineral and medicinal springs. Pæon was the physician of the gods.

NOTE N.

‘The winged offspring.’—L. 43.

The winds; who, according to Hesiod and Apollodorus, were the sons of Astræus and Aurora.

NOTE O.

‘Hyperion.’—L. 46.

A son of Cælum and Tellus, and father of the Sun, who is thence called, by Pindar, Hyperionides. But Hyperion is put by Homer in the same manner as here, for the Sun himself.

NOTE P.

‘Your sallying streams.’—L. 49.

The state of the atmosphere with respect to rest and motion is, in several ways, affected by rivers and running streams; and that more especially in hot seasons: first, they destroy its equilibrium, by cooling those parts of it with which they are in contact ; and secondly, they communicate their own motion : and the air which is thus moved by them, being left heated, is of consequence more elastic than other parts of the atmosphere, and therefore fitter to preserve and to propagate that motion.

NOTE Q.

'Delian king.'—L. 70.

One of the epithets of Apollo, or the Sun, in the Orphic hymn inscribed to him.

NOTE R.

'Chloris.'—L. 79.

The ancient Greek name for Flora.

NOTE S.

'Amalthea.'—L. 83.

The mother of the first Bacchus, whose birth and education was written, as Diodorus Siculus informs us, in the old Pelasgic character, by Thymœetes, grandson to Laomedon, and contemporary with Orpheus. Thymœetes had travelled over Libya to the country which borders on the western ocean ; there he saw the island of Nysa, and learned from the inhabitants, that ' Ammon, King of Libya, was married in former ages to Rhea, sister of Saturn and the Titans : that he afterwards fell in love with a beautiful virgin whose name was Amalthea ; had by her a son, and gave her possession of a neighbouring tract of land, wonderfully fertile ; which in shape nearly resembling the horn of an ox, was thence called the Hesperian horn, and afterwards the horn of Amalthea : that fearing the jealousy of Rhea, he concealed the young Bacchus in the island of Nysa ;' the beauty of which, Diodorus describes with great dignity and pomp of style. This fable is one of the noblest in all the ancient mythology, and seems to have made a particular impression on the imagination of Milton ; the only modern poet (unless perhaps it be necessary to except Spenser) who, in these mysterious traditions of the poetic story, had a heart to feel, and words to express, the simple and solitary genius of antiquity. To raise the idea of his Paradise, he prefers it even to—

' That Nysean isle
Girt by the river Triton, where old Cham
(Whom Gentiles Ammon call, and Libyan Jove)
Hid Amalthea and her florid son,
Young Bacchus, from his stepdame Rhea's eye.'

NOTE T.

'Edonian band.'—L. 94.

The priestesses and other ministers of Bacchus : so called from Edonus, a mountain of Thrace, where his rites were celebrated.

NOTE U.

'When Hermes.'—L. 105.

Hermes, or Mercury, was the patron of commerce ; in which benevolent character he is addressed by the author of the Indigitamenta in these beautiful lines:—

Ερμηνεῦ πάντων, κερδέμπορε, λυσιμέριμνε,
*Ὅς χειρέσθιν ἔχεις εἰρήνης ὄπλον ἀμέμφες.

NOTE X.

‘Dispense the mineral treasure.’—L. 121.

The merchants of Sidon and Tyre made frequent voyages to the coast of Cornwall, from whence they carried home great quantities of tin.

NOTE Y.

‘Hath he not won.’—L. 136.

Mercury, the patron of commerce, being so greatly dependent on the good offices of the Naiads, in return obtains for them the friendship of Minerva, the goddess of war: for military power, at least the naval part of it, hath constantly followed the establishment of trade; which exemplifies the preceding observation, that ‘from bounty issueth power.’

NOTE Z.

‘Calpe . . . Cantabrian surge.’—L. 143.

Gibraltar and the Bay of Biscay.

NOTE AA.

‘Ægina’s gloomy surge.’—L. 150.

Near this island, the Athenians obtained the victory of Salamis, over the Persian navy.

NOTE BB.

‘Xerxes saw.’—L. 160.

This circumstance is recorded in that passage, perhaps the most splendid among all the remains of ancient history, where Plutarch, in his Life of Themistocles, describes the sea-fights of Artemisium and Salamis.

NOTE CC.

‘Thyrsus.’—L. 204.

A staff, or spear, wreathed round with ivy: of constant use in the bacchanalian mysteries.

NOTE DD.

‘Io Pæan.’—L. 227.

An exclamation of victory and triumph, derived from Apollo’s encounter with Python.

NOTE EE.

‘Rocky Cirrha.’—L. 252.

One of the summits of Parnassus, and sacred to Apollo. Near it were several fountains, said to be frequented by the Muses. Nysa, the other eminence of the same mountain, was dedicated to Bacchus.

NOTE FF.

‘Charm the mind of gods.’—L. 263.

This whole passage, concerning the effects of sacred music among the gods, is taken from Pindar’s first Pythian ode.

NOTE GG.

'Phrygian pipe.'—L. 297.

The Phrygian music was fantastic and turbulent, and fit to excite disorderly passions.

NOTE HH.

'The gates where Pallas holds
The guardian key.'—L. 302.

It was the office of Minerva to be the guardian of walled cities; whence she was named ΠΟΛΙΑΣ and ΠΟΛΙΟΥΧΟΣ, and had her statues placed in their gates, being supposed to keep the keys; and on that account styled ΚΛΗΔΟΥΧΟΣ.

NOTE II.

'Fate of sober Pentheus.'—L. 311.

Pentheus was torn in pieces by the bacchanalian priests and women, for despising their mysteries.

NOTE KK.

'The cave Corycian.'—L. 318.

Of this cave Pausanias, in his tenth book, gives the following description:—
'Between Delphi and the eminences of Parnassus is a road to the grotto of Corycium, which has its name from the nymph Corycia, and is by far the most remarkable which I have seen. One may walk a great way into it without a torch. 'Tis of a considerable height, and hath several springs within it; and yet a much greater quantity of water distils from the shell and roof, so as to be continually dropping on the ground. The people round Parnassus hold it sacred to the Corycian nymphs and to Pan.'

NOTE LL.

'Delphic mount.'—L. 319.

Delphi, the seat and oracle of Apollo, had a mountainous and rocky situation, on the skirts of Parnassus.

NOTE MM.

'Cyrenaic shell.'—L. 327.

Cyrene was the native country of Callimachus, whose hymns are the most remarkable example of that mythological passion which is assumed in the preceding poem, and have always afforded particular pleasure to the author of it, by reason of the mysterious solemnity with which they affect the mind. On this account he was induced to attempt somewhat in the same manner; solely by way of exercise: the manner itself being now almost entirely abandoned in poetry. And as the mere genealogy, or the personal adventures of heathen gods, could have been but little interesting to a modern reader, it was therefore thought proper to select some convenient part of the history of nature, and to employ these ancient divinities as it is probable they were first employed; to wit, in personifying natural causes, and in representing the mutual agreement or opposition of the corporeal and moral powers of the world: which hath been accounted the very highest office of poetry.

INSCRIPTIONS.

I.

FOR A GROTTTO.

To me, whom in their lays the shepherds call
Actæa, daughter of the neighbouring stream,
This cave belongs. The fig-tree and the vine,
Which o'er the rocky entrance downward shoot,
Were placed by Glycon. He with cowslips pale,
Primrose, and purple lychnis, deck'd the green
Before my threshold, and my shelving walls
With honeysuckle cover'd. Here at noon,
Lull'd by the murmur of my rising fount,
I slumber; here my clustering fruits I tend;
Or from the humid flowers, at break of day,
Fresh garlands weave, and chase from all my bounds
Each thing impure or noxious. Enter in,
O stranger, undismay'd. Nor bat, nor toad
Here lurks; and if thy breast of blameless thoughts
Approve thee, not unwelcome shalt thou tread
My quiet mansion; chiefly, if thy name
Wise Pallas and the immortal Muses own.

II.

FOR A STATUE OF CHAUCER AT WOODSTOCK.

SUCH was old Chaucer; such the placid mien
Of him who first with harmony inform'd
The language of our fathers. Here he dwelt
For many a cheerful day. These ancient walls
Have often heard him, while his legends blithe
He sang; of love, or knighthood, or the wiles
Of homely life; through each estate and age,
The fashions and the follies of the world
With cunning hand portraying. Though perchance
From Blenheim's towers, O stranger, thou art come Glowing with Churchill's trophies; yet in vain
Dost thou applaud them if thy breast be cold
To him, this other hero; who, in times
Dark and untaught, began with charming verse
To tame the rudeness of his native land.

III.

WHOE'ER thou art whose path in summer lies
Through yonder village, turn thee where the grove
Of branching oaks a rural palace old
Embosoms. There dwells Albert, generous lord
Of all the harvest round. And onward thence
A low plain chapel fronts the morning light
Fast by a silent rivulet. Humbly walk,
O stranger, o'er the consecrated ground;
And on that verdant hillock, which thou seest
Beset with osiers, let thy pious hand

Sprinkle fresh water from the brook, and strew
 Sweet-smelling flowers. For there doth Edmund rest,
 The learned shepherd; for each rural art
 Famed, and for songs harmonious, and the woes
 Of ill-requited love. The faithless pride
 Of fair Matilda sank him to the grave
 In manhood's prime. But soon did righteous Heaven,
 With tears, with sharp remorse, and pining care,
 Avenge her falsehood. Nor could all the gold
 And nuptial pomp, which lured her plighted faith
 From Edmund to a loftier husband's home,
 Relieve her breaking heart, or turn aside
 The strokes of death. Go, traveller; relate
 The mournful story. Haply some fair maid
 May hold it in remembrance, and be taught
 That riches cannot pay for truth or love.

IV.

O YOUTHS and virgins: O declining eld:
 O pale misfortune's slaves: O ye who dwell
 Unknown with humble quiet; ye who wait
 In courts, or fill the golden seat of kings:
 O sons of sport and pleasure: O thou wretch
 That weep'st for jealous love, or the sore wounds
 Of conscious guilt, or death's rapacious hand
 Which left thee void of hope: O ye who roam
 In exile; ye who through the embattled field
 Seek bright renown; or who for nobler palms
 Contend, the leaders of a public cause;
 Approach: behold this marble. Know ye not
 The features? Hath not oft his faithful tongue
 Told you the fashion of your own estate,

The secrets of your bosom? Here then, round
 His monument with reverence while ye stand,
 Say to each other:—' This was Shakspeare's form;
 Who walk'd in every path of human life,
 Felt every passion; and to all mankind
 Doth now, will ever, that experience yield
 Which his own genius only could acquire.'

FOR A COLUMN AT RUNNYMEDE.

THOU, who the verdant plain dost traverse here,
 While Thames among his willows from thy view
 Retires; O stranger, stay thee, and the scene
 Around contemplate well. This is the place
 Where England's ancient barons, clad in arms
 And stern with conquest, from their tyrant king (Then render'd tame) did challenge and secure
 The charter of thy freedom. Pass not on Till thou hast bless'd their memory, and paid

Those thanks which God appointed the reward
Of public virtue. And if chance thy home
Salute thee with a father's honour'd name,
Go, call thy sons; instruct them what a debt
They owe their ancestors; and make them swear
To pay it, by transmitting down entire Those sacred rights to which themselves were born.

VII.

THE WOOD NYMPH.

APPROACH in silence. 'Tis no vulgar tale
Which I, the Dryad of this hoary oak,
Pronounce to mortal ears. The second age
Now hasteneth to its period, since I rose
On this fair lawn. The groves of yonder vale
Are all my offspring: and each Nymph who guards
The copses and the furrow'd fields beyond,
Obeys me. Many changes have I seen
In human things, and many awful deeds
Of justice, when the ruling hand of Jove
Against the tyrants of the land, against
The unhallow'd sons of luxury and guile,
Was arm'd for retribution. Thus at length
Expert in laws divine, I know the paths
Of wisdom, and erroneous folly's end
Have oft presaged; and now well-pleased I wait
Each evening till a noble youth, who loves
My shade, a while released from public cares,
Yon peaceful gate shall enter, and sit down
Beneath my branches. Then his musing mind
I prompt, unseen; and place before his view

Sincerest forms of good ; and move his heart
 With the dread bounties of the Sire Supreme
 Of gods and men, with freedom's generous deeds,
 The lofty voice of glory and the faith
 Of sacred friendship. Stranger, I have told
 My function. If within thy bosom dwell
 Aught which may challenge praise, thou wilt not leave
 Unhonour'd my abode, nor shall I hear
 A sparing benediction from thy tongue.

VIII.

YE powers unseen, to whom, the bards of Greece
 Erected altars; ye who to the mind
 More lofty views unfold, and prompt the heart
 With more divine emotions; if erewhile
 Not quite unpleasing have my votive rites
 Of you been deem'd, when oft this lonely seat
 To you I consecrated; then vouchsafe
 Here with your instant energy to crown
 My happy solitude. It is the hour
 When most I love to invoke you, and have felt
 Most frequent your glad ministry divine.
 The air is calm: the sun's unveiled orb
 Shines in the middle heaven. The harvest round
 Stands quiet, and among the golden sheaves
 The reapers lie reclined. The neighbouring groves
 Are mute, nor even a linnet's random strain
 Echoeth amid the silence. Let me feel
 Your influence, ye kind powers. Aloft in heaven,
 Abide ye? or on those transparent clouds
 Pass ye from hill to hill? or on the shades
 Which yonder elms cast o'er the lake below

Do you converse retired? From what loved haunt Shall I expect you? Let me once more feel
 Your influence, O ye kind inspiring powers:
 And I will guard it well; nor shall a thought
 Rise in my mind, nor shall a passion move
 Across my bosom unobserved, unstored
 By faithful memory. And then at some More active moment, will I call them forth
 Anew; and join them in majestic forms,
 And give them utterance in harmonious strains;
 That all mankind shall wonder at your sway.

IX.

ME though in life's sequester'd vale
 The Almighty Sire ordain'd to dwell,
 Remote from glory's toilsome ways,
 And the great scenes of public praise;
 Yet let me still with grateful pride
 Remember how my infant frame
 He temper'd with prophetic flame,
 And early music to my tongue supplied.

'Twas then my future fate he weigh'd,
 And, this be thy concern, he said,
 At once with Passion's keen alarms,
 And Beauty's pleasurable charms,
 And sacred Truth's eternal light,
 To move the various mind of Man;
 Till, under one unblemish'd plan,
 His Reason, Fancy, and his Heart unite.

AN EPISTLE TO CURIO.¹

THRICE has the spring beheld thy faded fame,
 And the fourth winter rises on thy shame,
 Since I exulting grasp'd the votive shell,
 In sounds of triumph all thy praise to tell;
 Bless'd could my skill through ages make thee shine,
 And proud to mix my memory with thine.
 But now the cause that waked my song before,
 With praise, with triumph, crowns the toil no more.
 If to the glorious man whose faithful cares,
 Nor quell'd by malice, nor relax'd by years, 10
 Had awed Ambition's wild audacious hate,
 And dragg'd at length Corruption to her fate;
 If every tongue its large applauses owed,
 And well-earn'd laurels every Muse bestow'd;
 If public Justice urged the high reward,
 And Freedom smiled on the devoted bard;
 Say then, to him whose levity or lust
 Laid all a people's generous hopes in dust;
 Who taught Ambition firmer heights of power,
 And saved Corruption at her hopeless hour; 20
 Does not each tongue its execrations owe?
 Shall not each Muse a wreath of shame bestow,

¹ Curio was a young Roman senator, of distinguished birth and parts, who, upon his first entrance into the forum, had been committed to the care of Cicero. Being profuse and extravagant, he soon dissipated a large and splendid fortune; to supply the want of which, he was driven to the necessity of abetting the designs of Cæsar against the liberties of his country, although he had before been a professed enemy to him. Cicero exerted himself with great energy to prevent his ruin, but without effect, and he became one of the first victims in the civil war. This epistle was first published in the year 1744, when a celebrated patriot, after a long and at last successful opposition to an unpopular minister, had deserted the cause of his country, and became the foremost in support and defence of the same measures he had so steadily and for such a length of time contended against.

And public Justice sanctify th' award, 23
 And Freedom's hand protect the impartial bard?

Yet long reluctant I forbore thy name,
 Long watch'd thy virtue like a dying flame,
 Hung o'er each glimmering spark with anxious eyes,
 And wish'd and hoped the light again would rise.
 But since thy guilt still more entire appears,
 Since no art hides, no supposition clears; 30
 Since vengeful Slander now too sinks her blast,
 And the first rage of party-hate is past;
 Calm as the judge of truth, at length I come
 To weigh thy merits, and pronounce thy doom:
 So may my trust from all reproach be free;
 And Earth and Time confirm the fair decree.

There are who say they view'd without amaze
 The sad reverse of all thy former praise:
 That through the pageants of a patriot's name,
 They pierced the foulness of thy secret aim; 40
 Or deem'd thy arm exalted but to throw
 The public thunder on a private foe.
 But I, whose soul consented to thy cause,
 Who felt thy genius stamp its own applause,
 Who saw the spirits of each glorious age
 Move in thy bosom, and direct thy rage;
 I scorn'd the ungenerous gloss of slavish minds,
 The owl-eyed race, whom Virtue's lustre blinds.
 Spite of the learned in the ways of vice,
 And all who prove that each man has his price, 50
 I still believed thy end was just and free;
 And yet, even yet, believe it—spite of thee.
 Even though thy mouth impure has dared disclaim,
 Urged by the wretched impotence of shame,
 Whatever filial cares thy zeal had paid
 To laws infirm, and liberty decay'd;

Has begg'd Ambition to forgive the show; 57
 Has told Corruption thou wert ne'er her foe;
 Has boasted in thy country's awful ear,
 Her gross delusion when she held thee dear;
 How tame she follow'd thy tempestuous call,
 And heard thy pompous tales, and trusted all—
 Rise from your sad abodes, ye cursed of old
 For laws subverted, and for cities sold!
 Paint all the noblest trophies of your guilt,
 The oaths you perjured, and the blood you spilt;
 Yet must you one untempted vileness own,
 One dreadful palm reserved for him alone;
 With studied arts his country's praise to spurn,
 To beg the infamy he did not earn, 70
 To challenge hate when honour was his due,
 And plead his crimes where all his virtue knew.
 Do robes of state the guarded heart enclose
 From each fair feeling human nature knows?
 Can pompous titles stun the enchanted ear
 To all that reason, all that sense would hear?
 Else couldst thou e'er desert thy sacred post,
 In such unthankful baseness to be lost?
 Else couldst thou wed the emptiness of vice,
 And yield thy glories at an idiot's price? 80

When they who, loud for liberty and laws,
 In doubtful times had fought their country's cause,
 When now of conquest and dominion sure,
 They sought alone to hold their fruits secure;
 When taught by these, Oppression hid the face,
 To leave Corruption stronger in her place,
 By silent spells to work the public fate,
 And taint the vitals of the passive state,
 Till healing Wisdom should avail no more,
 And Freedom loathe to tread the poison'd shore: 90

Then, like some guardian god that flies to save 91
 The weary pilgrim from an instant grave,
 Whom, sleeping and secure, the guileful snake
 Steals near and nearer through the peaceful brake;
 Then Curio rose to ward the public woe,
 To wake the heedless, and incite the slow,
 Against Corruption Liberty to arm,
 And quell the enchantress by a mightier charm.

Swift o'er the land the fair contagion flew,
 And with thy country's hopes thy honours grew. 100
 Thee, patriot, the patrician roof confess'd;
 Thy powerful voice the rescued merchant bless'd;
 Of thee with awe the rural hearth resounds;
 The bowl to thee the grateful sailor crowns;
 Touch'd in the sighing shade with manlier fires,
 To trace thy steps the love-sick youth aspires;
 The learn'd recluse, who oft amazed had read
 Of Grecian heroes, Roman patriots dead,
 With new amazement hears a living name
 Pretend to share in such forgotten fame; 110
 And he who, scorning courts and courtly ways,
 Left the tame track of these dejected days,
 The life of nobler ages to renew
 In virtues sacred from a monarch's view,
 Roused by thy labours from the bless'd retreat,
 Where social ease and public passions meet,
 Again ascending treads the civil scene,
 To act and be a man, as thou hadst been.

Thus by degrees thy cause superior grew,
 And the great end appear'd at last in view: 120
 We heard the people in thy hopes rejoice,
 We saw the senate bending to thy voice;
 The friends of freedom hail'd the approaching reign
 Of laws for which our fathers bled in vain;

While venal Faction, struck with new dismay, 125
 Shrunk at their frown, and self-abandon'd lay.
 Waked in the shock the public Genius rose,
 Abash'd and keener from his long repose;
 Sublime in ancient pride, he raised the spear
 Which slaves and tyrants long were wont to fear; 130
 The city felt his call: from man to man,
 From street to street, the glorious horror ran;
 Each crowded haunt was stirr'd beneath his power,
 And, murmuring, challenged the deciding hour.
 Lo! the deciding hour at last appears;
 The hour of every freeman's hopes and fears!
 Thou, Genius! guardian of the Roman name,
 O ever prompt tyrannic rage to tame!
 Instruct the mighty moments as they roll,
 And guide each movement steady to the goal. 140
 Ye spirits by whose providential art
 Succeeding motives turn the changeful heart,
 Keep, keep the best in view to Curio's mind,
 And watch his fancy, and his passions bind!
 Ye shades immortal, who by Freedom led,
 Or in the field or on the scaffold bled,
 Bend from your radiant seats a joyful eye,
 And view the crown of all your labours nigh.
 See Freedom mounting her eternal throne!
 The sword submitted, and the laws her own: 150
 See! public Power chastised beneath her stands,
 With eyes intent, and uncorrupted hands!
 See private Life by wisest arts reclaim'd!
 See ardent youth to noblest manners framed!
 See us acquire whate'er was sought by you,
 If Curio, only Curio will be true.
 'Twas then—O shame! O trust how ill repaid!
 O Latium, oft by faithless sons betray'd!—

'Twas then—What frenzy on thy reason stole? 159
 What spells unsinewed thy determined soul?—
 Is this the man in Freedom's cause approved,
 The man so great, so honour'd, so beloved,
 This patient slave by tinsel chains allured,
 This wretched suitor for a boon abjured,
 This Curio, hated and despised by all,
 Who fell himself to work his country's fall?
 O lost, alike to action and repose!
 Unknown, unpitied in the worst of woes!
 With all that conscious, undissembled pride,
 Sold to the insults of a foe defied! 170
 With all that habit of familiar fame,
 Doom'd to exhaust the dregs of life in shame!
 The sole sad refuge of thy baffled art
 To act a statesman's dull, exploded part,
 Renounce the praise no longer in thy power,
 Display thy virtue, though without a dower,
 Contemn the giddy crowd, the vulgar wind,
 And shut thy eyes that others may be blind.—
 Forgive me, Romans, that I bear to smile,
 When shameless mouths your majesty defile, 180
 Paint you a thoughtless, frantic, headlong crew,
 And cast their own impieties on you.
 For witness, Freedom, to whose sacred power
 My soul was vow'd from reason's earliest hour,
 How have I stood exulting, to survey
 My country's virtues, opening in thy ray!
 How with the sons of every foreign shore
 The more I match'd them, honour'd hers the more!
 O race erect! whose native strength of soul,
 Which kings, nor priests, nor sordid laws control, 190
 Bursts the tame round of animal affairs,
 And seeks a nobler centre for its cares;

Intent the laws of life to comprehend, 193
 And fix dominion's limits by its end.
 Who, bold and equal in their love or hate,
 By conscious reason judging every state,
 The man forget not, though in rags he lies,
 And know the mortal through a crown's disguise:
 Thence prompt alike with witty scorn to view
 Fastidious Grandeur lift his solemn brow, 200
 Or, all awake at pity's soft command,
 Bend the mild ear, and stretch the gracious hand:
 Thence large of heart, from envy far removed,
 When public toils to virtue stand approved,
 Not the young lover fonder to admire,
 Not more indulgent the delighted sire;
 Yet high and jealous of their free-born name,
 Fierce as the flight of Jove's destroying flame,
 Where'er Oppression works her wanton sway,
 Proud to confront, and dreadful to repay. 210
 But if to purchase Curio's sage applause,
 My country must with him renounce her cause,
 Quit with a slave the path a patriot trod,
 Bow the meek knee, and kiss the regal rod;
 Then still, ye powers, instruct his tongue to rail,
 Nor let his zeal, nor let his subject fail:
 Else, ere he change the style, bear me away
 To where the Gracchi,¹ where the Bruti stay!
 O long revered, and late resign'd to shame!
 If this uncourtly page thy notice claim 220
 When the loud cares of business are withdrawn,
 Nor well-dress'd beggars round thy footsteps fawn;

¹ The two brothers, Tiberius and Caius Gracchus, lost their lives in attempting to introduce the only regulation that could give stability and good order to the Roman republic. L. Junius Brutus founded the commonwealth, and died in its defence.

In that still, thoughtful, solitary hour, 223
When Truth exerts her unresisted power,
Breaks the false optics tinged with fortune's glare,
Unlocks the breast, and lays the passions bare ;
Then turn thy eyes on that important scene,
And ask thyself—if all be well within.
Where is the heart-felt worth and weight of soul,
Which labour could not stop, nor fear control? 230
Where the known dignity, the stamp of awe,
Which, half-abash'd, the proud and venal saw?
Where the calm triumphs of an honest cause?
Where the delightful taste of just applause?
Where the strong reason, the commanding tongue,
On which the senate fired or trembling hung?
All vanish'd, all are sold—and in their room,
Couch'd in thy bosom's deep, distracted gloom,
See the pale form of barbarous Grandeur dwell,
Like some grim idol in a sorcerer's cell! 240
To her in chains thy dignity was led ;
At her polluted shrine thy honour bled ;
With blasted weeds thy awful brow she crown'd,
Thy powerful tongue with poison'd philters bound,
That baffled Reason straight indignant flew,
And fair Persuasion from her seat withdrew :
For now no longer Truth supports thy cause ;
No longer Glory prompts thee to applause ;
No longer Virtue breathing in thy breast,
With all her conscious majesty confess'd, 250
Still bright and brighter wakes the almighty flame,
To rouse the feeble, and the wilful tame,
And where she sees the catching glimpses roll,
Spreads the strong blaze, and all involves the soul ;
But cold restraints thy conscious fancy chill,
And formal passions mock thy struggling will ;

Or, if thy Genius e'er forget his chain, 257
 And reach impatient at a nobler strain,
 Soon the sad bodings of contemptuous mirth
 Shoot through thy breast, and stab the generous birth,
 Till, blind with smart, from truth to frenzy toss'd,
 And all the tenor of thy reason lost,
 Perhaps thy anguish drains a real tear;
 While some with pity, some with laughter hear.—
 Can art, alas! or genius, guide the head,
 Where truth and freedom from the heart are fled?
 Can lesser wheels repeat their native stroke,
 When the prime function of the soul is broke?
 But come, unhappy man! thy fates impend;
 Come, quit thy friends, if yet thou hast a friend; 270
 Turn from the poor rewards of guilt like thine,
 Renounce thy titles, and thy robes resign;
 For see the hand of Destiny display'd
 To shut thee from the joys thou hast betray'd!
 See the dire fane of Infamy arise!
 Dark as the grave, and spacious as the skies;
 Where, from the first of time, thy kindred train,
 The chiefs and princes of the unjust remain.
 Eternal barriers guard the pathless road
 To warn the wanderer of the cursed abode; 280
 But prone as whirlwinds scour the passive sky,
 The heights surmounted, down the steep they fly.
 There, black with frowns, relentless Time awaits,
 And goads their footsteps to the guilty gates;
 And still he asks them of their unknown aims,
 Evolves their secrets, and their guilt proclaims;
 And still his hands despoil them on the road
 Of each vain wreath, by lying bards bestow'd,
 Break their proud marbles, crush their festal cars,
 And rend the lawless trophies of their wars. 290

At last the gates his potent voice obey; 291
 Fierce to their dark abode he drives his prey;
 Where, ever arm'd with adamant chains,
 The watchful demon o'er her vassals reigns,
 O'er mighty names and giant-powers of lust,
 The great, the sage, the happy, and august.¹
 No gleam of hope their baleful mansion cheers,
 No sound of honour hails their unblest ears;
 But dire reproaches from the friend betray'd,
 The childless sire and violated maid; 300
 But vengeful vows for guardian laws effaced,
 From towns enslaved, and continents laid waste;
 But long posterity's united groan,
 And the sad charge of horrors not their own,
 For ever through the trembling space resound,
 And sink each impious forehead to the ground.
 Ye mighty foes of liberty and rest,
 Give way, do homage to a mightier guest!
 Ye daring spirits of the Roman race,
 See Curio's toil your proudest claims efface!— 310
 Awed at the name, fierce Appius² rising bends,
 And hardy Cinna from his throne attends:
 'He comes,' they cry, 'to whom the fates assign'd
 With surer arts to work what we design'd,
 From year to year the stubborn herd to sway,
 Mouth all their wrongs, and all their rage obey;
 Till own'd their guide, and trusted with their power,
 He mock'd their hopes in one decisive hour;
 Then, tired and yielding, led them to the chain,
 And quench'd the spirit we provoked in vain.' 320

¹ Titles which have been generally ascribed to the most pernicious of men.

² Appius Claudius the Decemvir, and L. Cornelius Cinna both attempted to establish a tyrannical dominion in Rome, and both perished by the treason.

But thou, Supreme, by whose eternal hands 321
 Fair Liberty's heroic empire stands ;
 Whose thunders the rebellious deep control,
 And quell the triumphs of the traitor's soul,
 Oh! turn this dreadful omen far away :
 On Freedom's foes their own attempts repay :
 Relume her sacred fire so near suppress'd,
 And fix her shrine in every Roman breast :
 Though bold Corruption boast around the land,
 ' Let virtue, if she can, my baits withstand!' 330
 Though bolder now she urge the accursed claim,
 Gay with her trophies raised on Curio's shame ;
 Yet some there are who scorn her impious mirth,
 Who know what conscience and a heart are worth.—
 O friend and father of the human mind,
 Whose art for noblest ends our frame design'd!
 If I, though fated to the studious shade
 Which party-strife, nor anxious power invade,
 If I aspire in public virtue's cause,
 To guide the Muses by sublimer laws, 340
 Do thou her own authority impart,
 And give my numbers entrance to the heart.
 Perhaps the verse might rouse her smother'd flame,
 And snatch the fainting patriot back to fame ;
 Perhaps by worthy thoughts of human kind,
 To worthy deeds exalt the conscious mind ;
 Or dash Corruption in her proud career,
 And teach her slaves that Vice was born to fear.

THE VIRTUOSO.

IN IMITATION OF SPENSER'S STYLE AND STANZA.

'Videmus
Nugari solitos.'—PERSIUS.

- 1 WHILOM by silver Thames's gentle stream,
 In London town there dwelt a subtile wight;
 A wight of mickle wealth, and mickle fame,
 Book-learn'd and quaint; a Virtuoso hight.
 Uncommon things, and rare, were his delight;
 From musings deep his brain ne'er gotten ease,
 Nor ceasen he from study, day or night;
 Until (advancing onward by degrees)
 He knew whatever breeds on earth, or air, or seas.

- 2 He many a creature did anatomise,
 Almost unpeopling water, air, and land;
 Beasts, fishes, birds, snails, caterpillars, flies,
 Were laid full low by his relentless hand,
 That oft with gory crimson was distain'd:
 He many a dog destroy'd, and many a cat;
 Of fleas his bed, of frogs the marshes drain'd,
 Could tellen if a mite were lean or fat,
 And read a lecture o'er the entrails of a gnat.

- 3 He knew the various modes of ancient times,
 Their arts and fashions of each different guise,
 Their weddings, funerals, punishments for crimes,
 Their strength, their learning eke, and rarities;
 Of old habiliments, each sort and size,
 Male, female, high and low, to him were known;
 Each gladiator-dress, and stage disguise;

With learned, clerkly phrase he could have shown
How the Greek tunic differ'd from the Roman gown.

4 A curious medalist, I wot, he was,
And boasted many a course of ancient coin;
Well as his wife's he knewen every face,
From Julius Cæsar down to Constantine:
For some rare sculptor he would oft ypine
(As green-sick damosels for husbands do);
And when obtained, with enraptured eyne,
He'd run it o'er and o'er with greedy view,
And look, and look again, as he would look it through.

5 His rich museum, of dimensions fair,
With goods that spoke the owner's mind was fraught:
Things ancient, curious, value-worth, and rare,
From sea and land, from Greece and Rome were brought,
Which he with mighty sums of gold had bought:
On these all tides with joyous eyes he pored;
And, sooth to say, himself he greater thought,
When he beheld his cabinets thus stored,
Than if he'd been of Albion's wealthy cities lord.

6 Here in a corner stood a rich scrutoire,
With many a curiosity replete;
In seemly order furnish'd every drawer,
Products of art or nature as was meet;
Air-pumps and prisms were placed beneath his feet,
A Memphian mummy-king hung o'er his head;
Here phials with live insects small and great,
There stood a tripod of the Pythian maid;
Above, a crocodile diffused a grateful shade.

- 7 Fast by the window did a table stand,
Where hodiern and antique rarities,
From Egypt, Greece, and Rome, from sea and land,
Were thick-besprent, of every sort and size:
Here a Bahaman-spider's carcass lies,
There a dire serpent's golden skin doth shine;
Here Indian feathers, fruits, and glittering flies;
There gums and amber found beneath the line,
The beak of Ibis here, and there an Antonine.
- 8 Close at his back, or whispering in his ear,
There stood a sprite ycleped Phantasy;
Which, wheresoe'er he went, was always near:
Her look was wild, and roving was her eye;
Her hair was clad with flowers of every dye;
Her glistening robes were of more various hue
Than the fair bow that paints the cloudy sky,
Or all the spangled drops of morning dew;
Their colour changing still at every different view.
- 9 Yet in this shape all tides she did not stay,
Various as the chameleon that she bore;
Now a grand monarch with a crown of hay,
Now mendicant in silks and golden ore:
A statesman, now equipp'd to chase the boar,
Or cowed monk, lean, feeble, and unfed;
A clown-like lord, or swain of courtly lore;
Now scribbling dunce, in sacred laurel clad,
Or papal father now, in homely weeds array'd.
- 10 The wight whose brain this phantom's power doth fill,
On whom she doth with constant care attend,
Will for a dreadful giant take a mill,
Or a grand palace in a hog-sty find:

(From her dire influence me may heaven defend!)
 All things with vitiated sight he spies;
 Neglects his family, forgets his friend,
 Seeks painted trifles and fantastic toys,
 And eagerly pursues imaginary joys.

AMBITION AND CONTENT.

A FABLE.

'Optat quietem.'—HOR.

WHILE yet the world was young, and men were few,
 Nor lurking fraud, nor tyrant rapine knew,
 In virtue rude, the gaudy arts they scorn'd,
 Which, virtue lost, degenerate times adorn'd:
 No sumptuous fabrics yet were seen to rise,
 Nor gushing fountains taught to invade the skies;
 With nature, art had not begun the strife,
 Nor swelling marble rose to mimic life;
 No pencil yet had learn'd to express the fair;
 The bounteous earth was all their homely care. 10

Then did Content exert her genial sway,
 And taught the peaceful world her power to obey—
 Content, a female of celestial race,
 Bright and complete in each celestial grace.
 Serenely fair she was, as rising day,
 And brighter than the sun's meridian ray;
 Joy of all hearts, delight of every eye,
 Nor grief nor pain appear'd when she was by;
 Her presence from the wretched banish'd care,
 Dispersed the swelling sigh, and stopp'd the falling tear.

Long did the nymph her regal state maintain, 21
 As long mankind were bless'd beneath her reign;
 Till dire Ambition, hellish fiend, arose
 To plague the world, and banish man's repose,
 A monster sprung from that rebellious crew
 Which mighty Jove's Phlegræan thunder slew.
 Resolved to dispossess the royal fair,
 On all her friends he threaten'd open war;
 Fond of the novelty, vain, fickle man
 In crowds to his infernal standard ran; 30
 And the weak maid, defenceless left alone,
 To avoid his rage, was forced to quit the throne.

It chanced, as wandering through the fields she stray'd,
 Forsook of all, and destitute of aid,
 Upon a rising mountain's flowery side,
 A pleasant cottage, roof'd with turf, she spied:
 Fast by a gloomy, venerable wood
 Of shady planes and ancient oaks it stood.
 Around, a various prospect charm'd the sight;
 Here waving harvests clad the field with white, 40
 Here a rough shaggy rock the clouds did pierce,
 From which a torrent rush'd with rapid force;
 Here mountain-woods diffused a dusky shade;
 Here flocks and herds in flowery valleys play'd,
 While o'er the matted grass the liquid crystal stray'd.
 In this sweet place there dwelt a cheerful pair,
 Though bent beneath the weight of many a year;
 Who, wisely flying public noise and strife,
 In this obscure retreat had pass'd their life;
 The husband Industry was call'd, Frugality the wife. 50
 With tenderest friendship mutually bless'd,
 No household jars had e'er disturbed their rest.
 A numerous offspring graced their homely board,
 That still with nature's simple gifts was stored.

The father rural business only knew; 55
 The sons the same delightful art pursue.
 An only daughter, as a goddess fair,
 Above the rest was the fond mother's care,
 Plenty; the brightest nymph of all the plain,
 Each heart's delight, adored by every swain. 60
 Soon as Content this charming scene espied,
 Joyful within herself the goddess cried:—
 'This happy sight my drooping heart doth raise;
 The gods, I hope, will grant me gentler days.
 When with prosperity my life was bless'd,
 In yonder house I've been a welcome guest:
 There now, perhaps, I may protection find;
 For royalty is banish'd from my mind;
 I'll thither haste: how happy should I be,
 If such a refuge were reserved for me!' 70

Thus spoke the fair; and straight she bent her way
 To the tall mountain, where the cottage lay:
 Arrived, she makes her changed condition known;
 Tells how the rebels drove her from the throne;
 What painful, dreary wilds she'd wander'd o'er;
 And shelter from the tyrant doth implore.

The faithful, aged pair at once were seized
 With joy and grief, at once were pain'd and pleased;
 Grief for their banish'd queen their hearts possess'd,
 And joy succeeded for their future guest: 80
 'And if you'll deign, bright goddess, here to dwell,
 And with your presence grace our humble cell,
 Whate'er the gods have given with bounteous hand,
 Our harvest, fields, and flocks, our all command.'

Meantime, Ambition, on his rival's flight,
 Sole lord of man, attain'd his wish's height;
 Of all dependence on his subjects eased,
 He raged without a curb, and did whate'er he pleased;

As some wild flame, driven on by furious winds, 89
 Wide spreads destruction, nor resistance finds ;
 So rush'd the fiend destructive o'er the plain,
 Defaced the labours of th' industrious swain ;
 Polluted every stream with human gore,
 And scatter'd plagues and death from shore to shore.

Great Jove beheld it from the Olympian towers,
 Where sate assembled all the heavenly powers ;
 Then with a nod that shook the empyrean throne,
 Thus the Saturnian thunderer begun :—
 ' You see, immortal inmates of the skies,
 How this vile wretch almighty power defies ; 100
 His daring crimes, the blood which he has spilt,
 Demand a torment equal to his guilt.
 Then, Cyprian goddess, let thy mighty boy
 Swift to the tyrant's guilty palace fly ;
 There let him choose his sharpest, hottest dart,
 And with his former rival wound his heart.
 And thou, my son (the god to Hermes said),
 Snatch up thy wand, and plume thy heels and head ;
 Dart through the yielding air with all thy force,
 And down to Pluto's realms direct thy course ; 110
 There rouse Oblivion from her sable cave,
 Where dull she sits by Lethe's sluggish wave ;
 Command her to secure the sacred bound,
 Where lives Content retired, and all around
 Diffuse the deepest glooms of Stygian night,
 And screen the virgin from the tyrant's sight ;
 That the vain purpose of his life may try
 Still to explore, what still eludes his eye.'
 He spoke ; loud praises shake the bright abode,
 And all applaud the justice of the god. 120

THE POET. A RHAPSODY.

OF all the various lots around the ball,
 Which fate to man distributes, absolute,
 Avert, ye gods! that of the Muse's son,
 Cursed with dire poverty! poor hungry wretch!
 What shall he do for life? He cannot work
 With manual labour; shall those sacred hands,
 That brought the counsels of the gods to light;
 Shall that inspirèd tongue, which every Muse
 Has touch'd divine, to charm the sons of men;
 These hallow'd organs! these! be prostitute 10
 To the vile service of some fool in power,
 All his behests submissive to perform,
 Howe'er to him ingrateful? Oh! he scorns
 The ignoble thought; with generous disdain,
 More eligible deeming it to starve,
 Like his famed ancestors renown'd in verse,
 Than poorly bend to be another's slave,—
 Than feed and fatten in obscurity.—
 These are his firm resolves, which fate, nor time,
 Nor poverty can shake. Exalted high 20
 In garret vile he lives; with remnants hung
 Of tapestry. But oh! precarious state
 Of this vain transient world! all-powerful Time,
 What dost thou not subdue? See what a chasm
 Gapes wide, tremendous! see where Saul, enraged,
 High on his throne, encompass'd by his guards,
 With levell'd spear, and arm extended, sits,
 Ready to pierce old Jesse's valiant son,
 Spoil'd of his nose!—around in tottering ranks,
 On shelves pulverulent, majestic stands 30
 His library; in ragged plight, and old;

Replete with many a load of criticism, 32
 Elaborate products of the midnight toil
 Of Belgian brains; snatch'd from the deadly hands
 Of murderous grocer, or the careful wight,
 Who vends the plant, that clads the happy shore
 Of Indian Patomac; which citizens
 In balmy fumes exhale, when, o'er a pot
 Of sage-inspiring coffee, they dispose
 Of kings and crowns, and settle Europe's fate. 40

Elsewhere the dome is fill'd with various heaps
 Of old domestic lumber; that huge chair
 Has seen six monarchs fill the British throne:
 Here a broad massy table stands, o'erspread
 With ink and pens, and scrolls replete with rhyme:
 Chests, stools, old razors, fractured jars, half-full
 Of muddy Zythum, sour and spiritless:
 Fragments of verse, hose, sandals, utensils
 Of various fashion, and of various use,
 With friendly influence hide the sable floor. 50

This is the bard's museum, this the fane
 To Phœbus sacred, and the Aonian maids:
 But, oh! it stabs his heart, that niggard fate
 To him in such small measure should dispense
 Her better gifts: to him! whose generous soul
 Could relish, with as fine an elegance,
 The golden joys of grandeur, and of wealth;
 He who could tyrannise o'er menial slaves,
 Or swell beneath a coronet of state,
 Or grace a gilded chariot with a mien, 60
 Grand as the haughtiest Timon of them all.

But 'tis in vain to rave at destiny:
 Here he must rest and brook the best he can,
 To live remote from grandeur, learning, wit;
 Immured amongst th' ignoble, vulgar herd,

Of lowest intellect; whose stupid souls 66
 But half inform their bodies; brains of lead
 And tongues of thunder; whose insensate breasts
 Ne'er felt the rapturous, soul-entrancing fire
 Of the celestial Muse; whose savage ears
 Ne'er heard the sacred rules, nor even the names
 Of the Venusian bard, or critic sage
 Full-famed of Stagyra: whose clamorous tongues
 Stun the tormented ear with colloquy,
 Vociferate, trivial, or impertinent;
 Replete with boorish scandal; yet, alas!
 This, this! he must endure, or muse alone,
 Pensive and moping o'er the stubborn rhyme,
 Or line imperfect—No! the door is free,
 And calls him to evade their deafening clang, 80
 By private ambulation;—'tis resolved:
 Off from his waist he throws the tatter'd gown,
 Beheld with indignation; and unloads
 His pericranium of the weighty cap,
 With sweat and grease discolour'd: then explores
 The spacious chest, and from its hollow womb
 Draws his best robe, yet not from tincture free
 Of age's reverend russet, scant and bare;
 Then down his meagre visage waving flows
 The shadowy peruke; crown'd with gummy hat 90
 Clean brush'd; a cane supports him. Thus equipp'd
 He sallies forth; swift traverses the streets,
 And seeks the lonely walk.—'Hail, sylvan scenes,
 Ye groves, ye valleys, ye meandering brooks,
 Admit me to your joys!' in rapturous phrase,
 Loud he exclaims; while with the inspiring Muse
 His bosom labours; and all other thoughts,
 Pleasure and wealth, and poverty itself,
 Before her influence vanish. Rapt in thought,

Fancy presents before his ravish'd eyes 100
 Distant posterity, upon his page
 With transport dwelling; while bright learning's sons
 That ages hence must tread this earthly ball,
 Indignant, seem to curse the thankless age,
 That starved such merit. Meantime swallow'd up,
 In meditation deep, he wanders on,
 Unweeting of his way.—But, ah! he starts
 With sudden fright! his glaring eyeballs roll,
 Pale turn his cheeks, and shake his loosen'd joints;
 His cogitations vanish into air, 110
 Like painted bubbles, or a morning dream.
 Behold the cause! see! through the opening glade,
 With rosy visage, and abdomen grand,
 A cit, a dun!—As in Apulia's wilds,
 Or where the Thracian Hebrus rolls his wave,
 A heedless kid, disportive, roves around,
 Unheeding, till upon the hideous cave
 Of the dire wolf she treads; half-dead she views
 His bloodshot eyeballs, and his dreadful fangs,
 And swift as Eurus from the monster flies. 120
 So fares the trembling bard; amazed he turns,
 Scarce by his legs upborne; yet fear supplies
 The place of strength; straight home he bends his course,
 Nor looks behind him till he safe regain
 His faithful citadel; there, spent, fatigued,
 He lays him down to ease his heaving lungs,
 Quaking, and of his safety scarce convinced.
 Soon as the panic leaves his panting breast,
 Down to the Muse's sacred rites he sits,
 Volumes piled round him; see! upon his brow 130
 Perplex'd anxiety, and struggling thought,
 Painful as female throes: whether the bard
 Display the deeds of heroes; or the fall

Of vice, in lay dramatic; or expand 134
 The lyric wing; or in elegiac strains
 Lament the fair; or lash the stubborn age,
 With laughing satire; or in rural scenes
 With shepherds sport; or rack his hard-bound brains
 For the unexpected turn. Arachne so,
 In dusty kitchen corner, from her bowels 140
 Spins the fine web, but spins with better fate,
 Than the poor bard: she! caitiff! spreads her snares,
 And with their aid enjoys luxurious life,
 Bloated with fat of insects, flesh'd in blood:
 He! hard, hard lot! for all his toil and care,
 And painful watchings, scarce protracts a while
 His meagre, hungry days! ungrateful world!
 If with his drama he adorn the stage,
 No worth-discerning concourse pays the charge,
 Or of the orchestra, or the enlightening torch. 150
 He who supports the luxury and pride
 Of craving Lais; he! whose carnage fills
 Dogs, eagles, lions; has not yet enough,
 Wherewith to satisfy the greedier maw
 Of that most ravenous, that devouring beast,
 Ycleped a poet. What new Halifax,
 What Somers, or what Dorset canst thou find,
 Thou hungry mortal? Break, wretch, break thy quill,
 Blot out the studied image; to the flames
 Commit the Stagyrite; leave this thankless trade; 160
 Erect some pedling stall, with trinkets stock'd,
 There earn thy daily halfpence, nor again
 Trust the false Muse; so shall the cleanly meal
 Repel intruding hunger.—Oh! 'tis vain,
 The friendly admonition's all in vain;
 The scribbling itch has seized him, he is lost
 To all advice, and starves for starving's sake.

Thus sung the sportful Muse, in mirthful mood, 168
 Indulging gay the frolic vein of youth;
 But, oh! ye gods, avert th' impending stroke
 This luckless omen threatens! Hark! methinks
 I hear my better angel cry, 'Retreat,
 Rash youth! in time retreat; let those poor bards,
 Who slighted all, all! for the flattering Muse,
 Yet cursed with pining want, as landmarks stand,
 To warn thee from the service of the ingrate.'

 A BRITISH PHILIPPIC.

OCCASIONED BY THE INSULTS OF THE SPANIARDS, AND THE PRESENT PREPARATIONS
 FOR WAR. 1738.

WHENCE this unwonted transport in my breast?
 Why glow my thoughts, and whither would the Muse
 Aspire with rapid wing? Her country's cause Demands her efforts: at that sacred call
 She summons all her ardour, throws aside
 The trembling lyre, and with the warrior's trump
 She means to thunder in each British ear;
 And if one spark of honour or of fame,
 Disdain of insult, dread of infamy,
 One thought of public virtue yet survive, 10
 She means to wake it, rouse the generous flame,
 With patriot zeal inspirit every breast,
 And fire each British heart with British wrongs.

Alas, the vain attempt! what influence now
 Can the Muse boast! or what attention now
 Is paid to fame or virtue? Where is now
 The British spirit, generous, warm, and brave,

So frequent wont from tyranny and woe 18
 To free the suppliant nations? Where, indeed!
 If that protection, once to strangers given,
 Be now withheld from sons? Each nobler thought,
 That warm'd our sires, is lost and buried now
 In luxury and avarice. Baneful vice!
 How it unmans a nation! yet I'll try,
 I'll aim to shake this vile degenerate sloth;
 I'll dare to rouse Britannia's dreaming sons
 To fame, to virtue, and impart around
 A generous feeling of compatriot woes.
 Come, then, the various powers of forceful speech,
 All that can move, awaken, fire, transport! 30
 Come the bold ardour of the Theban bard!
 The arousing thunder of the patriot Greek!
 The soft persuasion of the Roman sage!
 Come all! and raise me to an equal height,
 A rapture worthy of my glorious cause!
 Lest my best efforts, failing, should debase
 The sacred theme; for with no common wing
 The Muse attempts to soar. Yet what need these?
 My country's fame, my free-born British heart,
 Shall be my best inspirers, raise my flight 40
 High as the Theban's pinion, and with more Than Greek or Roman flame exalt my soul.
 Oh! could I give the vast ideas birth
 Expressive of the thoughts that flame within,
 No more should lazy Luxury detain
 Our ardent youth; no more should Britain's sons
 Sit tamely passive by, and careless hear
 The prayers, sighs, groans, (immortal infamy!)
 Of fellow Britons, with oppression sunk,
 In bitterness of soul demanding aid, 50
 Calling on Britain, their dear native land,

The land of Liberty; so greatly famed 52
 For just redress; the land so often dyed
 With her best blood, for that arousing cause,
 The freedom of her sons; those sons that now
 Far from the manly blessings of her sway,
 Drag the vile fetters of a Spanish lord.
 And dare they, dare the vanquish'd sons of Spain
 Enslave a Briton? Have they then forgot,
 So soon forgot, the great, the immortal day, 60
 When rescued Sicily with joy beheld
 The swift-wing'd thunder of the British arm
 Disperse their navies? when their coward bands
 Fled, like the raven from the bird of Jove,
 From swift impending vengeance fled in vain?
 Are these our lords? And can Britannia see
 Her foes oft vanquish'd, thus defy her power,
 Insult her standard, and enslave her sons,
 And not arise to justice? Did our sires,
 Unawed by chains, by exile, or by death, 70
 Preserve inviolate her guardian rights,
 To Britons ever sacred, that her sons
 Might give them up to Spaniards?—Turn your eyes,
 Turn, ye degenerate, who with haughty boast
 Call yourselves Britons, to that dismal gloom,
 That dungeon dark and deep, where never thought
 Of joy or peace can enter; see the gates
 Harsh-creaking open; what a hideous void,
 Dark as the yawning grave, while still as death
 A frightful silence reigns! There on the ground 80
 Behold your brethren chain'd like beasts of prey:
 There mark your numerous glories, there behold
 The look that speaks unutterable woe;
 The mangled limb, the faint, the deathful eye,
 With famine sunk, the deep heart-bursting groan,

Suppress'd in silence; view the loathsome food, 86
 Refused by dogs, and oh! the stinging thought!
 View the dark Spaniard glorying in their wrongs,
 The deadly priest triumphant in their woes,
 And thundering worse damnation on their souls:
 While that pale form, in all the pangs of death,
 Too faint to speak, yet eloquent of all,
 His native British spirit yet untamed,
 Raises his head; and with indignant frown
 Of great defiance, and superior scorn,
 Looks up and dies.—Oh! I am all on fire!
 But let me spare the theme, lest future times
 Should blush to hear that either conquer'd Spain
 Durst offer Britain such outrageous wrong,
 Or Britain tamely bore it— 100
 Descend, ye guardian heroes of the land!
 Scourges of Spain, descend! Behold your sons;
 See! how they run the same heroic race,
 How prompt, how ardent in their country's cause,
 How greatly proud to assert their British blood,
 And in their deeds reflect their fathers' fame!
 Ah! would to heaven ye did not rather see
 How dead to virtue in the public cause,
 How cold, how careless, how to glory deaf,
 They shame your laurels, and belie their birth! 110
 Come, ye great spirits, Ca'ndish, Raleigh, Blake!
 And ye of latter name, your country's pride,
 Oh! come, disperse these lazy fumes of sloth,
 Teach British hearts with British fires to glow!
 In wakening whispers rouse our ardent youth,
 Blazon the triumphs of your better days,
 Paint all the glorious scenes of rightful war
 In all its splendours; to their swelling souls
 Say how ye bow'd th' insulting Spaniards' pride,

Say how ye thunder'd o'er their prostrate heads, 120
 Say how ye broke their lines and fired their ports,
 Say how not death, in all its frightful shapes,
 Could damp your souls, or shake the great resolve
 For right and Britain: then display the joys
 The patriot's soul exalting, while he views
 Transported millions hail with loud acclaim
 The guardian of their civil, sacred rights.
 How greatly welcome to the virtuous man
 Is death for others' good! the radiant thoughts
 That beam celestial on his passing soul, 130
 The unfading crowns awaiting him above,
 The exalting plaudit of the Great Supreme,
 Who in his actions with complacence views
 His own reflected splendour; then descend,
 Though to a lower, yet a nobler scene;
 Paint the just honours to his relics paid,
 Show grateful millions weeping o'er his grave;
 While his fair fame in each progressive age
 For ever brightens; and the wise and good
 Of every land in universal choir 140
 With richest incense of undying praise
 His urn encircle, to the wondering world
 His numerous triumphs blazon; while with awe,
 With filial reverence, in his steps they tread,
 And, copying every virtue, every fame,
 Transplant his glories into second life,
 And, with unsparing hand, make nations bless'd
 By his example. Vast, immense rewards!
 For all the turmoils which the virtuous mind
 Encounters here. Yet, Britons, are ye cold? 150
 Yet deaf to glory, virtue, and the call
 Of your poor injured countrymen? Ah! no:
 I see ye are not; every bosom glows

With native greatness, and in all its state 154
 The British spirit rises: glorious change!
 Fame, virtue, freedom, welcome! Oh, forgive
 The Muse, that, ardent in her sacred cause,
 Your glory question'd; she beholds with joy,
 She owns, she triumphs in her wish'd mistake.
 See! from her sea-beat throne in awful march 160
 Britannia towers: upon her laurel crest
 The plumes majestic nod; behold, she heaves
 Her guardian shield, and terrible in arms
 For battle shakes her adamantine spear:
 Loud at her foot the British lion roars,
 Frighting the nations; haughty Spain full soon
 Shall hear and tremble. Go then, Britons, forth,
 Your country's daring champions: tell your foes,
 Tell them in thunders o'er their prostrate land,
 You were not born for slaves: let all your deeds 170
 Show that the sons of those immortal men,
 The stars of shining story, are not slow
 In virtue's path to emulate their sires,
 To assert their country's rights, avenge her sons,
 And hurl the bolts of justice on her foes.

HYMN TO SCIENCE.

' O vitæ Philosophia dux! O virtutis indagatrix, expultrixque vitiorum.
 Tu urbes peperisti; tu inventrix legum, tu magistra morum et disciplinæ fuisti:
 ad te confugimus, a te opem petimus.'—Cic. Tusc. Quæst.

1 SCIENCE! thou fair effusive ray
 From the great source of mental day,

Free, generous, and refined!
Descend with all thy treasures fraught,
Illumine each bewilder'd thought,
And bless my labouring mind.

2 But first with thy resistless light,
Disperse those phantoms from my sight,
Those mimic shades of thee:
The scholiast's learning, sophist's cant,
The visionary bigot's rant,
The monk's philosophy.

3 Oh! let thy powerful charms impart
The patient head, the candid heart,
Devoted to thy sway;
Which no weak passions e'er mislead,
Which still with dauntless steps proceed
Where reason points the way.

4 Give me to learn each secret cause;
Let Number's, Figure's, Motion's laws
Reveal'd before me stand;
These to great Nature's scenes apply,
And round the globe, and through the sky,
Disclose her working hand.

5 Next, to thy nobler search resign'd,
The busy, restless, Human Mind
Through every maze pursue;
Detect Perception where it lies,
Catch the Ideas as they rise,
And all their changes view.

6 Say from what simple springs began
The vast ambitious thoughts of man,

Which range beyond control,
Which seek eternity to trace,
Dive through the infinity of space,
And strain to grasp the whole.

7 Her secret stores let Memory tell,
Bid Fancy quit her fairy cell,
In all her colours dress'd;
While prompt her sallies to control,
Reason, the judge, recalls the soul
To Truth's severest test.

8 Then launch through Being's wide extent;
Let the fair scale with just ascent
And cautious steps be trod;
And from the dead, corporeal mass,
Through each progressive order pass
To Instinct, Reason, God.

9 There, Science! veil thy daring eye;
Nor dive too deep, nor soar too high,
In that divine abyss;
To Faith content thy beams to lend,
Her hopes to assure, her steps befriend
And light her way to bliss.

10 Then downwards take thy flight again,
Mix with the policies of men,
And social Nature's ties;
The plan, the genius of each state,
Its interest and its powers relate,
Its fortunes and its rise.

11 Through private life pursue thy course,
Trace every action to its source,

And means and motives weigh:
Put tempers, passions, in the scale;
Mark what degrees in each prevail,
And fix the doubtful sway.

- 12 That last best effort of thy skill,
To form the life, and rule the will,
Propitious power! impart:
Teach me to cool my passion's fires,
Make me the judge of my desires,
The master of my heart.
- 13 Raise me above the vulgar's breath,
Pursuit of fortune, fear of death,
And all in life that's mean:
Still true to reason be my plan,
Still let my actions speak the man,
Through every various scene.
- 14 Hail! queen of manners, light of truth;
Hail! charm of age, and guide of youth;
Sweet refuge of distress:
In business, thou! exact, polite;
Thou giv'st retirement its delight,
Prosperity its grace.
- 15 Of wealth, power, freedom, thou the cause;
Foundress of order, cities, laws,
Of arts inventress thou!
Without thee, what were human-kind?
How vast their wants, their thoughts how blind!
Their joys how mean, how few!
- 16 Sun of the soul! thy beams unveil:
Let others spread the daring sail

On Fortune's faithless sea:
 While, undeluded, happier I
 From the vain tumult timely fly,
 And sit in peace with thee.

LOVE. AN ELEGY.

Too much my heart of Beauty's power hath known,
 Too long to Love hath reason left her throne;
 Too long my genius mourn'd his myrtle chain,
 And three rich years of youth consumed in vain.
 My wishes, lull'd with soft inglorious dreams,
 Forgot the patriot's and the sage's themes:
 Through each Elysian vale and fairy grove,
 Through all the enchanted paradise of love,
 Misled by sickly Hope's deceitful flame,
 Averse to action, and renouncing fame. 10

At last the visionary scenes decay,
 My eyes, exulting, bless the new-born day,
 Whose faithful beams detect the dangerous road
 In which my heedless feet securely trod,
 And strip the phantoms of their lying charms
 That lured my soul from Wisdom's peaceful arms.

For silver streams and banks bespread with flowers,
 For mossy couches and harmonious bowers,
 Lo! barren heaths appear, and pathless woods,
 And rocks hung dreadful o'er unfathom'd floods: 20
 For openness of heart, for tender smiles,
 Looks fraught with love, and wrath-disarming wiles;
 Lo! sullen Spite, and perjured Lust of Gain,
 And cruel Pride, and crueller Disdain;

Lo! cordial Faith to idiot airs refined, 25
 Now coolly civil, now transporting kind.
 For graceful Ease, lo! Affectation walks;
 And dull Half-sense, for Wit and Wisdom talks.
 New to each hour what low delight succeeds,
 What precious furniture of hearts and heads! 30
 By nought their prudence, but by getting, known,
 And all their courage in deceiving shown.

See next what plagues attend the lover's state,
 What frightful forms of Terror, Scorn, and Hate!
 See burning Fury heaven and earth defy!
 See dumb Despair in icy fetters lie!
 See black Suspicion bend his gloomy brow,
 The hideous image of himself to view!
 And fond Belief, with all a lover's flame,
 Sink in those arms that point his head with shame! 40
 There wan Dejection, faltering as he goes,
 In shades and silence vainly seeks repose;
 Musing through pathless wilds, consumes the day,
 Then lost in darkness weeps the hours away.
 Here the gay crowd of Luxury advance,
 Some touch the lyre, and others urge the dance;
 On every head the rosy garland glows,
 In every hand the golden goblet flows.
 The Syren views them with exulting eyes,
 And laughs at bashful Virtue as she flies. 50
 But see behind, where Scorn and Want appear,
 The grave remonstrance and the witty sneer;
 See fell Remorse in action, prompt to dart
 Her snaky poison through the conscious heart;
 And Sloth to cancel, with oblivious shame,
 The fair memorial of recording Fame.

Are these delights that one would wish to gain?
 Is this the Elysium of a sober brain?

To wait for happiness in female smiles, 59
 Bear all her scorn, be caught with all her wiles,
 With prayers, with bribes, with lies, her pity crave,
 Bless her hard bonds, and boast to be her slave;
 To feel, for trifles, a distracting train
 Of hopes and terrors equally in vain;
 This hour to tremble, and the next to glow;
 Can Pride, can Sense, can Reason, stoop so low:
 When Virtue, at an easier price, displays
 The sacred wreaths of honourable praise;
 When Wisdom utters her divine decree,
 To laugh at pompous Folly, and be free? 70
 I bid adieu, then, to these woful scenes;
 I bid adieu to all the sex of queens;
 Adieu to every suffering, simple soul;
 That lets a woman's will his ease control.
 There laugh, ye witty; and rebuke, ye grave!
 For me, I scorn to boast that I'm a slave.
 I bid the whining brotherhood be gone;
 Joy to my heart! my wishes are my own!
 Farewell the female heaven, the female hell;
 To the great God of Love a glad farewell. 80
 Is this the triumph of thy awful name?
 Are these the splendid hopes that urged thy aim,
 When first my bosom own'd thy haughty sway?
 When thus Minerva heard thee, boasting, say—
 'Go, martial maid, elsewhere thy arts employ,
 Nor hope to shelter that devoted boy.
 Go teach the solemn sons of Care and Age,
 The pensive statesman, and the midnight sage;
 The young with me must other lessons prove,
 Youth calls for Pleasure, Pleasure calls for Love. 90
 Behold, his heart thy grave advice disdains;
 Behold, I bind him in eternal chains.'—

Alas! great Love, how idle was the boast! 93
 Thy chains are broken, and thy lessons lost;
 Thy wilful rage has tired my suffering heart,
 And passion, reason, forced thee to depart.
 But wherefore dost thou linger on thy way?
 Why vainly search for some pretence to stay,
 When crowds of vassals court thy pleasing yoke,
 And countless victims bow them to the stroke? 100
 Lo! round thy shrine a thousand youths advance,
 Warm with the gentle ardours of romance;
 Each longs to assert thy cause with feats of arms,
 And make the world confess Dulcinea's charms.
 Ten thousand girls with flowery chaplets crown'd,
 To groves and streams thy tender triumph sound:
 Each bids the stream in murmurs speak her flame,
 Each calls the grove to sigh her shepherd's name.
 But, if thy pride such easy honour scorn,
 If nobler trophies must thy toil adorn, 110
 Behold yon flowery antiquated maid
 Bright in the bloom of threescore years display'd;
 Her shalt thou bind in thy delightful chains,
 And thrill with gentle pangs her wither'd veins,
 Her frosty cheek with crimson blushes dye,
 With dreams of rapture melt her maudlin eye.
 Turn then thy labours to the servile crowd,
 Entice the wary, and control the proud;
 Make the sad miser his best gains forego,
 The solemn statesman sigh to be a beau, 120
 The bold coquette with fondest passion burn,
 The Bacchanalian o'er his bottle mourn;
 And that chief glory of thy power maintain,
 'To poise ambition in a female brain.'
 Be these thy triumphs; but no more presume
 That my rebellious heart will yield thee room:

I know thy puny force, thy simple wiles;
 I break triumphant through thy flimsy toils;
 I see thy dying lamp's last languid glow,
 Thy arrows blunted and unbraced thy bow.
 I feel diviner fires my breast inflame,
 To active science, and ingenuous fame;
 Resume the paths my earliest choice began,
 And lose, with pride, the lover in the man.

TO CORDELIA.

JULY 1740.

- 1 FROM pompous life's dull masquerade,
 From Pride's pursuits, and Passion's war,
 Far, my Cordelia, very far,
 To thee and me may Heaven assign
 The silent pleasures of the shade,
 The joys of peace, unenvied, though divine!
 - 2 Safe in the calm embowering grove,
 As thy own lovely brow serene;
 Behold the world's fantastic scene!
 What low pursuits employ the great,
 What tinsel things their wishes move,
 The forms of Fashion, and the toys of State.
 - 3 In vain are all Contentment's charms,
 Her placid mien, her cheerful eye,
 For look, Cordelia, how they fly!
 Allured by Power, Applause, or Gain,
 They fly her kind protecting arms;
 Ah, blind to pleasure, and in love with pain!

4 Turn, and indulge a fairer view,
Smile on the joys which here conspire;
O joys harmonious as my lyre!
O prospect of enchanting things,
As ever slumbering poet knew,
When Love and Fancy wrapt him in their wings!

5 Here, no rude storm of Passion blows,
But Sports, and Smiles, and Virtues play,
Cheer'd by Affection's purest ray;
The air still breathes Contentment's balm,
And the clear stream of Pleasure flows
For ever active, yet for ever calm.

SONG.

- 1 THE shape alone let others prize,
The features of the fair;
I look for spirit in her eyes,
And meaning in her air;
- 2 A damask cheek, an ivory arm,
Shall ne'er my wishes win:
Give me an animated form,
That speaks a mind within;
- 3 A face where awful honour shines,
Where sense and sweetness move,
And angel innocence refines
The tenderness of love.

- 4 These are the soul of Beauty's frame ;
Without whose vital aid,
Unfinish'd all her features seem,
And all her roses dead.
- 5 But, ah! where both their charms unite,
How perfect is the view,
With every image of delight,
With graces ever new :
- 6 Of power to charm the greatest woe,
The wildest rage control,
Diffusing mildness o'er the brow,
And rapture through the soul.
- 7 Their power but faintly to express,
All language must despair ;
But go, behold Arpasia's face,
And read it perfect there.

END OF AKENSIDE'S POETICAL WORKS.
