

Bodleian Libraries

UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD

This book is part of the collection held by the Bodleian Libraries and scanned by Google, Inc. for the Google Books Library Project.

For more information see:

<http://www.bodleian.ox.ac.uk/dbooks>

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 2.0 UK: England & Wales (CC BY-NC-SA 2.0) licence.

HISTORY OF EYAM

Lough Add Derby
8° 25.

Ancient Cross, Eyam Churchyard.
Derbyshire

THE
History and Antiquities of Eyam;

WITH A MINUTE ACCOUNT OF THE GREAT PLAGUE, WHICH
DESOLATED THAT VILLAGE IN THE YEAR 1666.

BY WILLIAM WOOD.

FOURTH EDITION,
WITH ILLUSTRATIONS FROM PHOTOGRAPHS BY J. A. WARWICK.

LONDON; BELL AND DALDY, FLEET STREET:
DERBY; RICHARD KEENE.

SOLD ALSO BY THE AUTHOR AT EYAM.

“Some writer,—why I know not,—has styled this ancient village the Queen of the Peak. If it be so, alas, she is indeed a widowed one! for there she stands alone among the hills, the solemn monument of ‘A MIGHTY WOE,’ that still tingles appallingly in the ear of history, and embues the whole district with a spirit of pensive gloom.”

DR. S. T. HALL.

TO

George Mompesson Heathcote, Esq.,

NEWBOLD, near CHESTERFIELD.

IN Dedicating this Work to you a third time, it will be some additional evidence of my earnest desire to perpetuate to the utmost of my humble ability, the lofty virtues of your noble-souled ancestor, Mompesson, Rector of Eyam, during the pestilential visitation.

To be a descendant of such an almost incomparable man, must be intensely gratifying; to participate in the undying homage which must ever hallow his name and memory, is a richly privileged inheritance; and, to cast my mite of unfeigned admiration into your highly exalted family treasury is, as I hope will be evident, the sole object of your

Humble Servant,

WILLIAM WOOD.

Eyam, June, 1865.

MOMPESSON'S WELL.

See page 84.

P r e f a c e .

A FOURTH EDITION of the HISTORY OF EYAM, may seem somewhat of a novelty on the shelves of historical literature. The anxious demand for the third edition has, however, been far exceeded by that of the fourth; and to comply with even the modest, but just, requirements of the public, is not a favour but an incumbent duty. As regards myself, I must state that, I have been somewhat desirous of reprinting the work, in order to infuse into its pages much new and more interesting matter; to correct some mistakes relating to its history, and antiquities: altogether giving the work a more original cast than the reprint of a former edition. Indeed, the additional matter, the fresh, novel, local information, and above all, the illustrations, stamp this edition with a kind of new-born identity. Of the interest of local historical works there can be but one opinion; namely, that they have at least a local sway or dominion; often chronicle events of some interest among rural or stationary inhabitants; and fill up a void, which, but for their existence, would always remain a blank on the page of literature.

Four editions of the History of Eyam indicate that this "little mountain city"—"overshadowed by the spirit of old"—hallowed by the ever-present shades of the greatest of moral heroes—encircled with an enduring and dazzling halo of genius,—is a place of more than ordinary interest.

The awful circumstance connected with the local history of this romantic village—its desolation by the plague in 1666,—has, from its occurrence, strongly attracted the attention and notice of the sympathizing and thinking public. This may be inferred from the calamitous event having, at sundry times, called into action the highly classic pens of the following elegant authors:—Dr. Mead, Miss Anna Seward, Allan Cunningham, E. Rhodes, Dr. S. T. Hall, William and Mary Howitt, S. Roberts, J. Holland, Richard Furness, and many others, who have, in verse and prose, laudably endeavoured to perpetuate the story of the sufferings of a number of mortals, who like Codrus and Curtius, offered themselves up a self-sacrifice for the salvation of their country.

Highly commendable as are the brief descriptions of these well-known authors, on this painfully interesting subject, they are, however, respectively deficient in ample detail,—in correct data,—in the enumeration of material circumstances,—and in being compiled from cursory, casual, and erroneous information: defects, which could have been avoided only by a long residence in the locality. To rectify the mistakes of preceding writers,—to introduce many hitherto omitted circumstances,—to snatch almost from oblivion a great number of incidents,—to collect into one body all the available information connected with that direful visitation, has been my humble attempt; and to whatever degree I may have succeeded, it must not be ascribed to paramount intellectual ability, but solely to having all my life resided among the impressive memorials of that awful scourge. Thus circumstanced, I have also had the advantage of hearing, a thousand times repeated, the many traditions on that doleful subject.

This may, perhaps, be the most fitting and proper place to say that, in a former work,—“The Genius of the Peak,”—a small volume, consisting of a variety of short poems, written in comparative childhood, there is much which my now more mature judgment would gladly expunge. Since the first appearance of this work, I have published a volume of tales and sketches, entitled "Tales and Traditions of the Peak."

With pleasure I acknowledge my deep obligation to J. A. Warwick, Esq., so well known for his unparalleled Derbyshire Photographs, to whom I am much indebted for the accuracy, and other particulars in connection with the plates or illustrations, which embellish and form a principal feature in this work. To Mr. Richard Keene, the Printer, I am also under serious obligation, for unwonted kindness and unexpected favours. To Llewellynn Jewitt, Esq., I return my sincere thanks for the loan of two blocks of the illustrations in this edition. To Mr. Samuel Mitchell, Sheffield, and most particularly Mr. William Swift, Sheffield, I acknowledge my great obligation for valuable information.

I have now only to hope that this little book may be of some service to that class who think and feel like the philosopher, Montesquieu, who said "that he never felt a chagrin which an hour's reading did not dissipate."

THE AUTHOR.

NOTICES OF THE PRESS, & c., ON FORMER EDITIONS.

“The author of the History of Eyam has executed his task with enthusiasm and considerable ability. The result is a very interesting book.”—Christian Reformer, October, 1843.

“We have read the History of Eyam with great interest—a melancholy one indeed. The author has done justice to his subject, and is evidently possessed of both talent and industry.”—Englishman's Magazine.

“The description of the antiquities, &c., in Mr. Wood's History of Eyam, is clear and lucid.”—Bateman's Vestiges of Derbyshire.

“This is a very interesting volume, containing much interesting matter in a small compass. The work displays a highly creditable degree of mental culture. The account of the plague is told with deep feeling and graphic power of description.”—Sheffield Independent.

“There is a degree of beautiful simplicity and tenderness about this work, which renders it most interesting to readers. The writer is one who has evidently conversed with nature and his own spirit amid those romantic and historically-interesting scenes of his nativity, which he here so lovingly describes. It is imbued with poetry, and excites a degree of sympathy in the reader, which the most masterly delineations of the mere book-making scenery-hunter would fail to inspire.”—King's Macclesfield Paper.

“We earnestly recommend this pleasing work to our readers. We assure them that it contains eloquent passages of surpassing interest, independent of its charms as a general museum of the facts and traditions of the locality it describes.”—Buxton Herald.

“The author of this work is evidently one of a thoughtful spirit : distinguished (as we know) above his fellows by habits of reading and intellectual conversation.”—Derby Reporter.

“This volume deserves extensive support on its own merits, independent of the noble cause with which it is associated. It is well-written, keeping alive a sustained interest in the mind of the reader.”—North Derbyshire Chronicle, 1st Notice.

“This work abounds with great interest. We wish Mr. Wood great success in his literary career.”—North Derbyshire Chronicle, 2nd Notice.

“William Wood has written a pleasing and interesting work on the Antiquities, &c., of Eyam, connecting its present and past history.”—G. C. Holland's (M.D.) Life of Furness.

“For this and other particulars, see Wood's admirable History of Eyam.”—Furness.

“In speaking of Eyam, I must notice with great pleasure your native historian, William Wood, who has written a work of great interest, and with much graphic power, &c., &c.”—Lord G. H. Cavendish's Inaugural Speech, at the Opening of the Eyam Mechanics' Institution, Jan. 1859.

“It is not minutely that I would trace out this ‘memorable woe.’ W. Wood has done so in his ample and copious History of Eyam.”—Dr. S. T. Hall's Peak and the Plain.

“Mr. Wood is well known as a writer, and as a painstaking collector, and his present volume gives evidence of his industry. We cannot but recommend it cordially to our readers, and we congratulate the village of Eyam—one of our favourite nooks in this beautiful county—on having so worthy, so indefatigable and excellent an historian among the sons of her soil.”—Derby Telegraph.

“Mr. Wood has foregone no labour or research in order to place before his readers everything that may tend to a clear and well ordered knowledge of the early history, antiquities, and other matters of a purely local character connected with Eyam.”—Derbyshire Advertiser.

Contents.

	PAGE
DESCRIPTIVE CHARACTERISTICS	13
GEOLOGY	19
SCENERY OF THE LOCALITY	25
ARCHÆOLOGICAL REMAINS	31
CUSTOMS AND OBSERVANCES	43
MANOR (See Addenda)	50
PLAGUE	56
Its Nature and Origin	61
Its Communication to Eyam	68
Death of the First Victim	71
Mompesson's Children sent away	81
The Cordon Sanitaire	84
Cucklet Church	87
Affecting Death of Mrs. Mompesson	95
Mompesson's Letter to his Children	98
————— Sir George Saville	102
————— J. Beilby	110
Traditions of the Plague	112
Riley Graves	123
THE CHURCH	156
THE CHURCHYARD	166
THE RECTORS	177
THE REGISTER	186

	PAGE
THE LEAD MINES (See Addenda)	190
MINSTRELS OR POETS	199
FAMILIES OF DISTINCTION	210
SINGULAR EVENTS	226
Introduction of Methodism, &c.	228
MISCELLANEOUS SUBJECTS	231
Benefactors of Eyam	231
Mansions and Occupants	232
Eccentric Characters	236
Caverns	237
Mechanics' Institution	238
Garlick and Ludlam, Catholic Priests, Padley Hall ...	239
Addenda	243

Illustrations.

	PAGE.
Ancient Cross	FRONTISPIECE.
Mompesson's Well	iv.
Village of Eyam, looking West	25
Eyam Dale	28
Rock Basin	31
Eyam, looking East, shewing the house where the Plague broke out	68
Riley Graves... ..	123
Eyam Church	156
Catherine Mompesson's Tomb	167
Bradshaw Hall	217

THE
HISTORY AND ANTIQUITIES
OF EYAM.

“Trust me, for th’ Instructed, time will come
When they shall read no record but may teach
Some acceptable lesson to their minds
Of human suffering, or of human joy.”—WORDSWORTH.

“Here Antiquity enjoys,
A deep and mossy sleep.”—R. HOWITT.

Descriptive Characteristics.

THE village of Eyam,—often designated the Athens of the Peak,—has attained a somewhat envious pre-eminence among the villages of the surrounding district. John Nightbroder, Anna Seward, Richard Furness, and other celebrities, mentioned in the scroll of fame, were born in Eyam. Here, also, the Rev. Peter Cunningham spent the vigour of his manhood, during which time he produced poems of considerable merit, which will be hereafter noticed. Distinguished as is this romantic village by giving birth and residence to these celebrated characters, it has, however, another and a stronger claim to general notice—the terrible PLAGUE by which it was so singularly visited, and almost wholly depopulated, in the years 1665 and 1666 : the details of which calamity must necessarily follow other particulars, under several heads, in connection with this highly interesting place.

Eyam is a village and parish in the North, or High Peak of Derbyshire. It is comprised in the Hundred of the High Peak ; in the Honours of Peveril and Tutbury ; in the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the Archdeaconry of Derby, and in the Diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. The village stands in the south-east part of the parish, six miles north of Bakewell, and nearly in the centre of a line drawn from Sheffield to Buxton : being twelve miles distant from each place. It contains within the township about 250 houses, and near 1,500 inhabitants, who are chiefly employed in agriculture, lead mining, but principally in boot and shoe making. The parish is nearly circular, about four miles in diameter, and contains the townships of Foolow and Woodland Eyam, these including the hamlets of Bretton and Hazelford. It abuts on the parishes of Hope, Hathersage, and Bakewell ; and the following places and streams mark its boundary : a rivulet near to Stony Middleton Churchyard, top of Stoke Wood, Goatcliffe brook, the river Derwent, Highlow brook, top of Grindlow, Wardlow Miers, Foundley fence, and the Dale brook, to where it receives the rivulet first mentioned. Small as is this parish, yet it contained an extensive tract of moorland until the year 1801, when an Act was obtained for its inclosure: a circumstance which has, by the bulk of the parishioners, been greatly regretted. The village forms a long street, nearly a mile in length, built apparently, as it is approached from Middleton Dale, on a ledge or table-land of limestone. The village runs from east to west, in a serpentine form; and, as Gilbert White has observed of Selborne, the cartway divides two most incongruous soils. The houses, in most places, on the north side, stand just where the shale and sandstone strata commence; whilst those on the south side are erected invariably on the limestone; and though the village is so very long, the same diversity occurs throughout.

The several parts of the village are thus named: the Townend, which is the eastern part, and from which, branch the Lydgate, the Water-lane, the Dale, and the Cocey or Causeway; the Cross, or middle of the village; and the Townhead, or the extreme western part. Contiguous to the street, and nearly in the centre of the village, stands the Church, a very ancient fabric, which, from its being encircled by large umbrageous linden trees, has often excited the notice and admiration of strangers.

Of the origin, and signification of the name of this old English village—Eyam—there is but little stated that is satisfactory on the subject. In the Norman survey the name is written Aiune; in the fifteenth century and later it was written Eyham, and Eham; now, uniformly Eyam. There is no doubt, that the word means water or water-place; a local peculiarity sufficiently apparent. It is very probable that Aiune or Eyam is Celtic. A little north of Eyam (within the parish) there is a small place called Bretton, which name is very ancient, and means mountainous. The word is pure Celtic, and was the name of England long before the Roman invasion. This little hamlet has retained a name of high antiquity, coeval with the aborigines of the island, and such has, in all probability, been the case with Eyam. Some maintain that the meaning of the word may be irrecoverably lost;* one of the two following conjectures, however, seems most probable.

* Creighton, in his Introduction to his Dictionary of Scripture names, observes that Dr. Johnson and other modern lexicographers have greatly erred in seeking (and pretending to find) the origin of western tongues in Greek and Latin. He further states, that a knowledge of the Celtic is indispensable in tracing the true origin of the names of places, rivers, and mountains in the West of Europe.—That the Peak of Derbyshire would afford shelter to the Britons, during the repeated invasions by the Saxons and Danes, there is no doubt; and that a few of the oppressed aborigines would

In the word Eyam, we have undoubtedly the ham, or am, the common Saxon termination expressive of residence ; but of what the Ey is significant, is not so manifest. One of the conjectures alluded to, states that the Ey is a corruption of the adjective High, and that the original signification of the compound word Eyam, was High-dwelling, High-place, or High-hamlet: this, considering the locality of the village, its proximity to Sir William, one of the highest mountains in the Peak, is far from being improbable.* The other conjecture derives the Ey, from Ea, water, which, with the residential ham, or am, means a residence amidst, or by a superfluity of water.† The great quantity of thereby escape the sword and live to perpetuate their race and language is probable. The dark-haired Celts were driven from the shore into the interior of the island :—

“ O'er the wild gannet's bath came the Norse coursers,”

Saxon and Dane, Swede and Norwade, the fair-haired strength of the North,

“ Left on the beach the long galley and oar.”

* Hean or hen in Anglo Saxon, signifies high. See Hunter's Hallamshire, page 283, and “ Genius of the Peak,” page 116.

† The Saxon word for water is invariably written ea. Ham or am, is not, however, purely Anglo Saxon ; a many etymologists find its root in Homan, to cohabit ; still it bears or carries the sense of residence or habitation. It may be added, that the Aiune of the Norman scribes is undoubtedly Eyam. They were not particular as to orthography ; but were guided partly by sound.

water with which Eyam must always have been supplied, renders this supposition more than probable. In the centre of the village there was, until a few years back, a pool vulgarly called the river, which name was a corruption of Eaver, or Ever-water: an appellation properly descriptive of this pool, which, with the numberless springs and rivulets in and around the village, afford a strong probability that the word—Eyam—may signify the Water-place or The Village of Waters.* In fine, it may be observed of this vague and unsatisfactory subject, that whatever may be the signification of the name of the village; that whether it has changed its name or not, it has now a name which the poet wished that to be, of an old English village which he met with, namely—“no common name:”—

“Thy name I know not nor would know,—
 No common name would I be told;
 Yet often shall I seek thee now,—
 Thou village quaint and old.”—R. HOWITT.

* Vide Furness' Poetical Works, note, page 166.

Geology.

THE geological features of Eyam and its immediate locality are extremely interesting and striking. Eyam, as before stated, is built on a rocky ledge, or table-land of carboniferous limestone; while northward, and contiguous to the village, the superjacent shale formation rises abruptly to a great altitude, where it is capped by the basset of the millstone grit. It is, however, in the limestone formation that the most interest is experienced. Of this the broken and fantastic masses, with their fossil organic remains, might well induce the philosophic Paley to describe them as “the splendid monuments of the felicity of past ages!” Carboniferous or mountain limestone is, in geological classification, a formation of the secondary, or transition series. The prevailing feature is a compact stone consisting principally of carbonate of lime. On the whole, it is a composition of marine exuviae. Great natural caverns occur in this formation: two or three of great extent are said to pass under Eyam, but seldom, however, to be explored to much extent on account of water. In this locality the phenomenon of streams pursuing a subterranean course is of frequent occurrence. Water on the surface is received into what is provincially termed a swallow, and after disappearing, may often be traced again issuing out of the basset of some inferior stratum, at a considerable distance from the swallow. The Pippin, at the east end of the village, is a swallow; the waterfall, at the west end, is another of a larger kind. The water in these two instances fall into a level or adit in Middleton Dale; a distance of two miles from the places of their disappearance.

Another object of interest in connection with the limestone is its numberless fossil organic remains. They are exclusively of marine origin, consisting chiefly of corals, shells, and encrinites; the latter are so abundant in some places as to occasion the name of "encrinal limestone." At the Water Groove quarry, a short distance from Eyam, the stone is wholly composed of this organic fossil-encrinite. The most numerous shells are Terebratula, Producta, and Sperifer. The Ammonite, though almost peculiar to the oolitic formation, is sometimes found in the limestone in the locality of Eyam. One was found at Water Groove quarry, a few years ago; another at Eyam, in Fentem's quarry; and one in the vicinity of Eyam. The two latter are now in the possession of T. Fentem, Esq., Surgeon, Eyam Terrace; they are beautiful specimens, the "whorls," and other particular parts being very distinct and perfect.* A fine specimen of a cast of a Belerophon, found in a mine at Eyam; and a large specimen of the organic vegetable fossil, Calamite, found also at Eyam, were recently in the respective possessions of Charles Gregory, Esq., Eyam View; and Mr. William Fentem, Eyam Terrace.† An hour's ramble in the precincts of Eyam

* The Ammonites have at all times formed a very striking object of human contemplation. In India they constitute, or rather their moulds, an object of veneration to the people, under the name of Salagraman, because it is believed that one of their gods is concealed therein.—Lamarck has separated from the Ammonites the non-articulated, and denominated them, PLANULITES.—Pidgeon.

† CHARLES GREGORY, oldest son of Thomas Gregory, Esq., Solicitor, Eyam View, a young gentleman of great and varied attainments, was a native of Eyam. He was educated for the bar, and made rapid progress in his profession, devoting necessary attention to many sciences of the day, amongst which were Mineralogy and Geology. After some years of declining health he died in London, aged 33 years, and was interred at Eyam, July 6th, 1862, much and deservedly regretted.

WILLIAM FENTEM, who, while this note is being written, lies a corse at his father's house, Eyam Terrace, was the second son of Thomas Fentem, Esq., Surgeon, and, although only a youth of 21 years of age had greatly distinguished himself in the varied branches of the fine arts. From his childhood he had shewn a strong predilection for sketching, drawing, and painting. His death on the evening of Jan. 8th, 1865, was deeply deplored by all who knew him. "Those whom the gods love die young!"

is to the stranger a scientific treat : the fences of every field, and every isolated stone, being composed of the fossil relics of an ancient sea ; a fact now placed by philosophical investigation beyond doubt. They are the unquestioned remains of living animals, and not “a lusus naturæ,” the sport of nature, as some geologists of the old school so dogmatically maintained. The contemplation of these organic fossils—or in other words, of nature—unavoidably develops the thinking faculty ; presents to the mental vision more extended views of the harmony and grandeur of all parts of the creation ; and, consequently, must expand and elevate our conceptions of the attributes of the Great First Cause.

Another peculiarity in connection with the limestone formation, and an object of importance in mining speculations, in the vicinity of Eyam, and the High Peak in general, is the formation, provincially called toadstone, (amygdaloid) which alternates with limestone so very irregularly both as respects places and thickness. Toadstone (or channel as it is often named) is a blackish substance, very hard, something like the scoria of metals or Iceland lava. This stratum is not laminated, but consists of one entire solid mass and breaks alike in all directions. It varies from six feet to six hundred in thickness, and possesses other apparent properties of volcanic lava. The indefatigable Whitehurst* contended that this stratum was of igneous

* WHITEHURST, as is well known, was born in Derby, and as a philosopher was much esteemed in his day. In the very origin ; and he supported his darling supposition with unwearied zeal. St. Fond, a French geologist, came into Derbyshire a little after Whitehurst's time to examine this formation in particular ; he descended Dirtlow mine, near Castleton, and on beholding mineral in composition with the toadstone, he almost shouted with exultation, it being his particular object to disprove Whitehurst's theory. St. Fond sums up his observations by expressing great wonder that Whitehurst should have been so fatally mistaken as to perceive proofs of his igneous theory where evidently every thing is of an aqueous origin. After much conflict of opinion on this subject—the igneous or the aqueous origin of toadstone,—the balance is greatly in favour of the latter theory. Organic fossils have recently been found in this formation, though very rarely. In further support of its aqueous origin it is found to consist by chemical analysis of oxide of iron, carbonate of lime, and alumina house from which this work is issued, the Derby philosopher and mechanic lived. A fine old oak-panelled apartment is shewn by Mr. Richard Keene, where Whitehurst, Dr. Darwin, and sometimes Benjamin Franklin met. In the rear are the workshops where Whitehurst constructed the chimes for All Saints' Church, now used as printing offices. Some relics of Whitehurst still exist on the premises:—a barometer, a curious clock in the wall, the remains of a wind-guage, or register, to show the direction of the air-currents, &c. Not the least interesting is the circumstance that Mr. Foster, the Derby centenarian, was also born in this house.

or clay. A sample from the Water Groove level contained, according to Layton, 25 per cent. ox. iron.

25 per cent. carb. lime.

50 per cent. aluminous matter.*

* In further support of the Author's views on this subject, see Hopkin's "Geology and Magnetism."

1

2

3

4

5

6

7

8

9

10

Village of Eyam, Derbyshire.

Looking West.

Scenery of the Locality.

THE scenery of Eyam has but few parallels ; it is highly varied and picturesque. In the eastern part of the village the cottages are generally mantled with ivy, adorned with fruit trees and shaded by wide-spreading sycamores. In some parts, the cottages are grotesquely clustered together ; in other parts, they stand singly, flanked with beehives. This rural and highly romantic picture is greatly heightened by the grey tower of the Church, which picturesquely overtops this part of the village, rising from the centre of a circle of beautiful linden trees, which encompass the Churchyard like giant sentinels, guarding the sacred precincts of the silent dead. Amidst these homely cottages there are some mansions of excellent structure, which, for elegance and number far excel those of many other villages in Derbyshire.

Northward of the village, a mountain range, nearly six hundred feet high, crowned with plantations of rising trees, runs parallel with the village. This lofty range is to the village an impenetrable screen, to ward off the biting, boreal blasts : the habitations lying, as it were, beneath its sheltering height, in peaceful, calm repose. How beautiful the prospect from this lofty eminence ! Thence the eye may behold—

“—ancient hamlets nestling far below,
And many a wild-wood walk, where childhood's footsteps go.”

J. C. PRINCE.

A little farther north, nearly in the centre of the parish, rises Sir William,—the Parnassus of the Peak ; a mountain of great altitude, and honoured by numberless classical associations. From the summit of this Prince of Derbyshire hills, the eye extends over countless hills and luxuriant dales. Masson, Axe-edge, Mam Tor, Kinderscout, and Stanage lift up their hoary heads and tell, in language stronger than words, of a companionship of ages. How rapturous must be the feelings of the tourist who ascends the peak of this mountain, and beholds on every hand the visible handmarks of Nature ! How joyous his sensations to perceive in such goodly profusion, the original traces of the finger of God !

A little to the east of Eyam is Riley, or the Hill of Graves—a noble and pleasing feature in the romantic character of the village. Rising on high, with its steepy wood-clad slope, it gives to the village a richly picturesque appearance. The varied and indescribable scenery in this direction is bounded on the one hand by the sable rocks of Curbar, and the singularly built village of Stony Middleton ; of which a third part is included in the township and parish of Eyam.

On the south side of the village, two dells branch parallel with each other into Middleton Dale. One, provincially called the Delf, or Delve, (a corruption of dell) is a most secluded and beautiful place. It has all the natural beauty and seclusion of the valley of Rasselas. Hanging tors, pensile cliffs, Cucklet church, shadowy trees, blooming flowers, a winding rill, tuneful birds, are only a few of the rural charms of this incomparable dell :

“By Nature destined from the birth of things
For quietness profound.”

At the western extremity of this lonely retreat is an extensive chasm, or cleft, known by the undignified appellation—Salt Pan ; it extends throughout the whole mass of limestone rock, and the projections on the one side, and indentations on the other, seemingly indicate that this vast mass of rock was rent asunder by some mighty convulsion of nature in some distant age of the world. A small stream issues from the mouth of the chasm, and winds its way amongst beds of moss, fern, and flowers. Who, indeed, could sit musing over the purling stream in this chasm, and not fancy himself in the Egerian Grotto ? Ah !—

“This cave was surely shaped out for the greeting
Of an enamoured Goddess, and the cell
Haunted by holy love—the earliest oracle.”—BYRON.

The other dell, known as Eyam Dale, is rich in rural scenery. On one side it is bounded by grey towering rocks, crested with ivy and other foliage. Some few of these rocks, however, are naked, exhibiting a sort of grimness that forms a pleasing contrast. The other side of the dell is covered with rising wood, amongst which there are numerous winding paths, that lead to a place called the "Rock Garden," where for ages the lovers of Eyam have breathed "the tender tale." A dancing rill winds through the dell, murmuring most musically to the lonely ear. This dell, and, in fact, the whole village, may be said to be another Anathoth: a place of responses or echoes. Such is a portion of the very imperfectly described scenery of this secluded village, which has frequently been noticed to be the best specimen of an old English village once, (not exactly now,) to be met with.

Throughout the whole of this parish are scattered many elegant and substantial dwellings; some for situation and elegance rarely to be equalled at so great a distance from places of commerce. Of this class is Leam Hall, once the residence of M. M. Middleton, Esq., an old English gentleman, who was alike distinguished for urbanity, sound sense, and literary taste.* Leam Hall, with the adjoining estate, is the property of Athorpe Middleton, Esq., Dinnington, Yorkshire, and is now occupied by Thomas Booth, Esquire, Stoke Hall, a little out of the parish, is another of this class of habitations. Still nearer the verge of the parish, in Stony Middleton, is the much admired country seat of the Right Honourable Lord Denman, whose kindness, benevolence, affability, and, above all, his unexampled character as a worthy landlord, and conscientious magistrate, have gained his Lordship well-deserved laurels of commendation. His Lordship is the oldest son of the late Lord Chief Justice Denman, whose deserved fame as a lawyer and judge, and whose poetical taste, as evinced in his translation of the famous song of Harmodious and Aristogiton,* render this place of his once occasional residence, greatly attractive. Many other well-built habitations may be seen scattered throughout the parish; besides solitary farm houses on the hills and in the valleys of this locality, which is justly characterised in the following language of the poet :

* M. M. Middleton, Esq., was the author of a work entitled "Poetical Sketches of a Tour"—written for private circulation.

“ A realm of mountain, forest-haunt, and fell,
And fertile valleys, beautifully lone ;
Where fresh and far romantic waters roam,
Singing a song of peace by many a cottage home.”

The varied and romantic scenery of this place, as may be expected, has distinguished the inhabitants by a character peculiarly antique. Before the present century,

* Vide Bland's Anthology.

the villagers of Eyam exhibited all the characteristics so observable in the inhabitants of mountainous districts. Even now a notion prevails of keeping themselves distinct by inter-marriages. They are exceedingly tenacious of the preservation of their genealogies: a consequence of inhabiting one place or locality for successive generations. Hence their strict observance of very ancient customs; hence their adherence to hereditary prejudices; hence their numerous legends handed down from time immemorial; and hence that unity of interest for which they have been so singularly distinguished in times past.

“Mortals attached to regions mountainous
Like their own steadfast clouds.”

A change in the system of mining operations, fresh employment, and novel avocations, are fast changing the aspect and character of the place. It, however, still retains a few endearing marks of the old English village: a few old pastimes fondly kept, a smattering of happy harvest scenes, and the holy welcome of the Sabbath morn. These still remain to call up a thousand recollections of what are pertinaciously considered by many to have been far happier times.

Archæological Remains.

IN the western part of Eyam Moor, on what is called "Smith's Piece," there is an enormous gritstone rock, containing a rock-basin, bearing evident marks of human agency. It is the only one in the immediate locality, is 30 inches by 29 in diameter, and $15\frac{1}{2}$ deep, varying to 9, from the inclination of the surface of the stone; and is remarkable from having the lower part of its upright sides hollowed out by the action of the water rotating within it, shewing that this change has been effected at a later time in its sides, which were originally made perpendicular to the bottom by the hand of man. Sir

Gardiner Wilkinson after devoting much time and study on the subject of rock-basins, has declared his opinion to be that some are unquestionably natural, some artificial, and some partaking of both characters. Sir Emmerson Tennant supposes them to have been (in some instances at least) enlarged natural hollows, as the one called "the sacred foot print," on Adam's Peak, Ceylon, which when visited in 1325-6 by John Batuta, had nine other hollows or excavations near it in which pilgrims placed gold, rubies, and other jewels as votive offerings.

On another part of Eyam Moor, now, in part, called "Shaw Flat," immediately north of the village, an hippodrome, a kind of race-course, is by a few, still just remembered. All trace of this archæological relic was obliterated on the enclosure of the moor 60 years ago. What the Romans would call hippodromes, would in the language of aboriginal times be called "Rhedagua,"—the racer, "Rhedagwr,"—and the chariot, "Rheda," from the British word "Rhedeg," to run. One of these Hippodromes exists south of Leicester, now called Rawdikes, a corruption of Rhedagua; one near Chester called the Rhoodee; and another of greater interest still to the inhabitants of the Peak called Roosdyche, about half-a-mile from Whaley Bridge, in the parish of Chapel-en-le-frith. It is 85 Druid cubits in width, and 2,228 Druid cubits in length.* It is in a great measure cut out of the side of a hill, and has numberless traces of its original purpose.*

* Druid cubit 21 inches.

On the north-east part of this once interesting moor there still exists what is called an Ortholithic Circle, or stone circle of about 100 feet in diameter; it has from 12 to 16 stones standing, the whole being surrounded by a low mound of earth, making the total diameter about 115 feet. The surrounding stones being rather small (three feet in height,) and other characteristics, render it certain that it is not of a sacred, but of a sepulchral character. A large stone was taken from within this circle some years ago, which is said by some to have been the covering or lid of a cist. Near this circle there is still to be seen an often explored stone cairn, which from the enormous mass of stones still remaining shew it to have been when entire an unusually large tumulus. A large urn was found therein some years since; it contained burnt bones, ashes, a flint arrow-head, a large beak of a bird, and other articles. It is maintained by some authorities that the large stone taken from the circle was what is termed the Maen Gorsedd (or stone of Assembly.) The ceremony used at the opening of the Gorseddau (or meetings) was the sheathing of the sword on the Maen Gorsedd, at which all the Druid-priests assisted. All the places of meeting were, like this, set apart by forming a circle of earth or stones round the Maen Gorsedd. The circle was called Cylch Cyngrair, or circle of Federation; and the priest, or bard, who recited the traditions or poems, was named Dudgeiniad, or the Reciter. The Dudgeiniad, dressed in a uni-coloured robe, always commenced his recitations by one of the following mottos:—"In the eye of the light, and in the face of the sun;" "The truth against the world."

* The most remarkable Rhedagua is that near Stonehenge, 200 Druid cubits wide, 6000 in length. Vide Article by W. Bennett, Esq., Reliquary, vol. 1.

As respects the originally large stone cairn or carn just alluded to, on the immediate eastern verge of the circle, it is by some conjectured to be the burial place of some detested chief; for, according to numerous authors, it was the custom of the Aborigines of this Island to express their abhorrence of a tyrant or other wicked person after death, by casting a stone at the place of his sepulture as often as they passed it; and thus were accumulated the large piles of stones, under which urns, containing ashes and bones, have been found. In the Highlands of Scotland, it is common even now, to say, "I shall cast a stone at thy grave some day." This barrow, however, could not by any possibility have owed its existence to the "casting of stones;" it must have been raised to commemorate the death, and place of sepulture of some warrior chief.

"The sun sets o'er the warrior's grave,
And as he sinks beneath the mound,
The spirits of the ancient brave
Seem dancing in the shades around.

His name his lost—his race unknown,
Yet fame survives with ling'ring breath,
Like twilight, when the sun is gone,
His glory gilds the vale of death."

Southward of this circle and its adjoining stone barrow there are on the same ground to be seen a many small stone and earth-mound-encompassed circles, some about ten paces in diameter, which are very interesting from having the appearance of British houses or hut circles.* A farm house on the western verge of Eyam moor, derives its name—"stanage"—from the circumstance of its being erected near the site of some enormous stone tumuli now destroyed, and the materials used in making stone fences. The site of a large tumulus may still be seen on a piece of enclosed but yet uncultivated land called Hawley's Piece. The diameter at the base was twenty-two yards, and about twelve yards high. When the moor was enclosed, it was taken away to make fences. An urn of great size was found near the centre on the ground, and was carried away to the residence of the person who found it; but was afterwards ignorantly buried.† Another large

* If these circles be remains of British huts or houses, they were in advance of those pit-habitations of the aboriginals of this part of the Island, described by the late T. Bateman, in his excellent work, "Vestiges of the Antiquities of Derbyshire."

† The person who had this precious relic of antiquity, was persuaded by his silly neighbours, that it was unlucky to have cairn partly explored, may be seen in Eyam-Edge, near the Old Twelve-meers' mine. It is about forty yards in diameter at the base, and about eight or ten yards high. In the top there is a dimple or cavity, which, according to Pilkington, is a proof that it is British. Dr. Borlase, however, thinks that such are Roman. This barrow conspicuously crests a cloud aspiring ridge or eminence west of Eyam, and overlooks a vast extent of country. What the erudite author of the "King of the Peak," etc., etc., has so beautifully observed of the cairn on Chinley Hills, may with more daring presumption be said of the tumulus on Eyam Edge. It may contain the ashes of some fearless warrior, whose name has faded away amidst the mist of time; but what was said of another, may be contemporary man of war, may be aptly said of him: "He whose grave is on yonder cliff, his name was the foe of many; it is Tarw Trin (the Bull of Conflict) mercy be to him."*

Numberless urns have been found at various times around Eyam. About fifty years ago, in making the road called the Occupation Road, a beautiful urn, richly such a thing in his house; and on losing a young cow, he immediately buried it.

* The readers of that marvel of periodicals, "The Reliquary," will remember these lines, in a most able article entitled "Archæology of the High Peak," by William Bennett, Esq., a writer of great power, author of many works of an imaginative caste; and withal (or rather above all) a resident of the Peak.

decorated, was found by Mr. S. Furniss, Eyam ; it contained nothing but ashes. Around the place where the urn was found, the earth appeared to have been burnt, which circumstance, according to Wormius, would lead us to believe it was Danish. This author states, in his funeral ceremonies of the Danes, that “the deceased was brought out into the fields, where they made an oblong place with great stones, and there burned the body, and then collected the ashes into an urn, round which they set great stones ; casting up over it a mound of earth and stones.”

About forty-five years since, two men, Joseph Slinn and William Redfearn, were working near the Bole-hill, Eyam, when they discovered an urn surrounded with stones. Slinn, wishing to secure it entire, went a short distance for a spade ; in the meanwhile, Redfearn, thinking it might contain some treasure, dashed it to pieces, when to his utter mortification, he found it contained only some ashes, and two copper coins. One of the coins was lost on the spot, but was found some years after. It bore the inscription, Maximianus, and something else not legible : probably Dioclesian, as Maximianus and Dioclesian were joint Emperors of the Roman Empire.* As those two urns were very similar, and

* Maximianus (M. Arul. Valer. Hercul.) born in Sirmium. He entered early into the Roman army, and exhibited so much valour, that the Emperor Dioclesian, A. D. 286, shared the Empire with him. The cruelty of Maximianus towards the Christians is almost incredible. During his short career buried so near together, it is highly probable that they were Roman; at least containing Roman coins implies as much.* Another urn was found in the Mag-clough, Eyam,—a very large one: this was buried again afterwards. Robert Broomhead, Eyam, broke one to pieces in taking up the foundation of an old wall, at Riley, about thirty-four years ago.†

That Eyam is a very ancient place may be still further ascertained. The word “Tor” is said to be of Phœnician origin; and this word is very common at Eyam: the Tor Tops, the Shining Tor, the Hanging Tor, are all in its immediate vicinity. Bole, a word equally common, signified anciently, the hearth on which the lead was melted:—the boles were made on the 144,000 were put to death, and 700,000 banished. He quitted the Empire with Dioclesian, and hanged himself at Marseilles, A. D. 310.

* These urns might possibly be Saxon, as Roman Coin was in some degree current with the Saxons.

† The enclosure of a great part of that immense tract—Eyam Moor—has swept away innumerable relics of the Druids. Hence we find some enclosed parts still denominated “Druids’ Fields,” “Druids’ Flat,” and the like. Many ancient tumuli have been levelled to the surface, while perhaps a subter exploration would still yield many remains, sepulchral and other kinds. The contents of Derbyshire barrows generally are now pretty well known: The late Thomas Bateman, Esq., of Middleton by Youlgrave, in his “Vestiges of the Antiquities of Derbyshire,” has thrown much light on this interesting subject.

western brows of Tors. Bole is an eastern word, signifying a lump of metal. These, with numerous other words, can be clearly traced to an Asiatic source, which is a demonstrative proof that mines, in and around Eyam, were worked anciently, either by a colony of foreigners, or under their direction. We are certain that the mines of the Peak were worked in very early times : some think before the Roman invasion ; certainly, however, by the Romans, or their enslaved Britons. It is unnecessary to refer to the several pieces of lead found near Matlock, bearing the inscriptions of Roman Emperors. On Eyam Moor, small pieces of lead have been found in every direction : one weighing fourteen pounds was met with beneath the surface very lately ; and about forty years since, in planting some ground near to Leam Hall, belonging to Athorpe Middleton, Esq., a conical piece of lead was found, weighing between thirty and forty pounds : it was a yard in length, and had a hook or handle attached to it, whereby it had been disengaged from the mould in which it had been cast.

That the Romans had, at least, a temporary residence in or around Eyam, we have satisfactory evidence in the finding of Roman coins and other articles. In the year 1814, some persons employed in baring limestone in Eyam Dale, found a great quantity of Roman coins, some silver, and some copper, bearing the inscriptions of Probus, Gallienus, Victorinus,—Roman Emperors. About seventy years ago, a copper coin was found on Eyam Moor, bearing the inscription of Probus; and about thirty years since, a Roman copper coin was found in the Dale, Eyam, with the inscription on one side, Divo Claudius, or God Claudius; on the reverse, Consecratia, or Consecration, with the Eagle. In that part of Stony Middleton which is in Eyam parish, Roman coins have been at various times discovered; and a place, or eminence there, still bears evident traces of these once mighty masters of the world.

That the descendants of the Romans continued to reside in and around Eyam, may be conjectured from the language of the inhabitants. Plaust, from plaustrum, to plaust hay or corn, for the eating of those articles; and sord, from sordes, the rind of bacon, and other things. Many unlettered persons invariably use quantum for quantity, and many other Latin words. Rhodes says that he has somewhere read that the Romans erected elegant mansions among the Peak Hills. And it is believed that the Romans continued to reside among the mountains round Eyam, even when the Saxons and Danes successively possessed the surrounding plains. Roman remains have been found in abundance in many places in the neighbourhood of Eyam, Stony Middleton, Brough, and other villages. Indeed, it has almost been satisfactorily proved that the sixth legion remained in Derbyshire sometime before they marched to the North.

Castle-hill, near Stony Middleton, in the parish of Eyam, is the name of an elevated, oval-shaped eminence, evidently a work of art. Tradition insists of its being the site of a Roman encampment, and Roman coins have been found in its vicinity. Some years ago a battle-axe of antique form, was found in pulling down a barn, near to "Castle-hill."

That the Saxons penetrated among the mountains of the Peak, and resided in and around Eyam numerous proofs might be adduced. Almost every little eminence has a Saxon name, or termination of name :—Hay-cliffe, Shining-cliffe, Goats-cliffe, and very many others, too numerous to mention. Lich is a Saxon word, signifying a dead body. The principal gate into Eyam Church-yard is to this day called Lich-gate or, vulgarly, Light-gate. This is the invariable designation of the gate of the church-yard through which the funerals pass; thus proving, to some degree, the antiquity of the village. The principal gate of Duddlestone church-yard, Shropshire, is called by the inhabitants "the Lich-gate," and Duddlestone has been particularly noticed for its antiquity. Lich-waking sitting with the dead both night and day, is still practised by the old and wealthy families of Eyam.—The cross at Eyam is said to be of Saxon or Danish origin. Another once stood in Eyam edge, and one at Cross-low, Eyam; both the latter have been destroyed.

Certain names of fields or plots of land in Eyam and its vicinity, not only indicate its high antiquity, but imbues the locality with a spirit of exciting interest. The top or level part of the Delve, or Delf, a plot of land, adjoining the street, and opposite Eyam Hall, is known to this day, by the name Toothill, or Teuthill, the place where once stood an altar to Toot, or Teut, the title or name under which the Ancient Britons and Gauls worshipped Mercury, the God of messengers, and travellers. Altars to Toot, or Teut, were uniformly erected on the verge of public roads, on the edge of precipitous places and eminences, all which circumstances peculiarly characterise the Toothill, or Teuthill, of the Delve, or Delf, in the centre of Eyam.

Flax Butts is the name of a field adjoining the Delve, or Delf, and part of Eyam Hall estate; and as its name (Butts) indicates, was set apart and used for the practice of archery. Lavery Butts, and Stirk Butts, fields contiguous to the village, were places for the same practice and amusement. Here, then, the ancient "forefathers of the hamlet" assembled, and in a spirit of harmless emulation, vied with each other in the manly practice of the bow and arrow of bye-gone times."

Customs and Observances.

VERY ancient custom was observed at Eyam, until within a century back. The principal road into Eyam once was the Lyd-gate, now called Ligget. Lyd, or Lid, is a Saxon word, which means to cover or protect. At this entrance into Eyam, there was a strong gate, at which "watch and ward" were kept every night. Every effective man who was a householder in the village, was bound to stand in succession at this gate, from nine o'clock at night to six in the morning, to question any person who might appear at the gate wishing for entrance into the village, and to give alarm if danger were apprehended. The watchman had a large wooden halbert, or "watch-bill," for protection, and when he came off watch in the morning, he took the "watch-bill," and reared it against the door of that person whose turn to watch succeeded his ; and so on in succession. No village in England has retained and practised a custom so ancient to so recent a period. In the Scriptures there are numberless allusions to this very antique custom : “ And it came to pass about the time of shutting of the gate, &c.”—Joshua ii. 5.

One of the incantations practised at the festival of the Druids was to anoint the forehead of a sick person with May-dew, which was carefully gathered at day-break, and the cure of course immediately followed. Now at Eyam and its vicinity it was once a general, and, in some measure, is still a prevailing custom to anoint weak and diseased children with May-dew. Another part of the ceremony of the great festival of the Druids, consisted in carrying long poles of mountain ash festooned with flowers. Hanging out bunches of flowers from cottage windows, so very prevalent at Eyam on May-day, has its origin in this Druidical ceremony ; passing the bottle or glass, (deas soil) according to the course of the sun ; and numerous other observances have an equally ancient origin. Gebelin and Brand have both noticed a peculiar custom practised in Cornwall, and particularly at Penzance, the origin of which they say is lost in antiquity. The same custom is known and practised at Eyam, in the very common play—Loosing-tines or Long duck. In reading an account of the antiquities of Cornwall, one is particularly struck with the identity of the custom. The Golf, or Golfing, is said to be an amusement peculiar to the Highlands of Scotland, where it has been practised from time immemorial. The same diversion is known at Eyam by the uncouth name—Seg. Goose-riding, about half a century ago, was at Eyam a very common, but barbarous amusement. It is lamentable, however, that one custom—clay-daubin,—once so particularly observed at Eyam and its vicinity should have fallen into desuetude. This custom consisted in the neighbours and friends of a newly married couple assembling together, and not separating until they had erected them a cottage. From the number of hands employed, the habitation was generally completed in one day. The clay-daubin, as the practice was termed, concluded in rejoicing and merrymaking. Another pleasing custom, now only traditionally remembered, was once observed throughout the locality of Eyam : it consisted of putting the coffin, with the deceased in it, on the bed ; and of placing the bed-clothes in such a manner over them, as to make it appear as if the deceased were only asleep. The real charm consists in that lovely appearance of death, in a young person of a virtuous and maiden race, which whispers to the bereaved spirit, that though the “vital spark of heavenly flame” be fled, yet the most innocent and beautiful will be awakened, as from sleep, to immortality and light. These and many other customs and observances, Druidical or otherwise, prove, to some degree, the great antiquity of the place where they are, and have been so rigidly kept.

In the north of England, there is a vulgar saying, “no one can say black’s my eye,” meaning no one can justly speak ill of her or him. “No one can say black’s my nail,” is an every-day saying in the locality of Eyam, for miles around. A vulgar belief formerly existed in this neighbourhood, that before a death a light might be seen to move towards the churchyard ; it was called the fetch-light, or dead-man's candle. CRICKETS, throughout the Peak, and other districts and countries, still maintain their dolesome mission as harbingers of death : well and truly is it said, that, "the voice of the cricket has struck more terror than the roaring of a lion." A white cricket's appearance was, however, considered more ominously fatal. The hopperbaulk ; bees knitting on a dead branch ; the death-watch ; the howling of Gabriel hounds ; the shouting of dogs ; the flexibility of a dead body ; and numerous other fanciful appearances, sounds, and circumstances, are still considered by many as certain prognostications of death.

Of the almost numberless, now deemed silly practices of our forefathers in this locality, the origin of many of which is as deep in forgetfulness as the name of the architect of Stonehenge, a comparative few only are remembered and practised. Bulwer, in his Chirologia, p. 62, remarks that midwives maintain that a child born open-handed will be frank-hearted and of a bountiful disposition. Many still living may recollect an old jolly Eyam midwife preaching with impressive voice the same exploded dogma. In and around Eyam, also throughout the north of England, it is accounted an unlucky omen if a person should have no money in his pocket on hearing the cuckoo for the first time in a season. Durand, who flourished in the twelfth century, speaks of a custom rigidly adhered to at Eyam, and the Peak in general, thus: "When any one is dying, or as soon as possible after, a bell must be tolled twice for a woman and thrice for a man; further, a bell is tolled, and sometimes chimes are rung a little before the burial, and while they are conducting the corpse to church." Peshell's History of Oxford thus mentions a circumstance in connection with the ringing of the Curfew Bell, practised at Eyam to the present day, although alluded to as a very antique custom: "After the ringing of this bell, (Curfew) to let the inhabitants know the day of the month by so many tolls." Hutchinson, in his History of Northumberland, thus tells of a custom (of common occurrence at Eyam) which he deems of some antiquity: "On the decease of any person leaving valuable effects, the friends and neighbours of the family are invited to dinner on the day of interment, which is called the Arthel or Arvel dinner.* SINGEN EEN, or singing evening—Christmas Eve and New Year's Eve, on which the vulgar believe that bees may be heard to sing in their hives; the CHILD'S HOOD or CAUL, believed to indicate the health of the owner: firm and crisp if well; if ill, relaxed and flabby. MOBLED, or MUDDLED, is a very old word descriptive of the state of a person seemingly bewildered or led astray by Bill with wisp and Peg or Jack with lantern.† These silly notions have a still lingering existence at Eyam.

* Arthel is Celtic, and would be more correctly written arddelw. In Wales it is written arddel.

† Before the enclosures and consequent drainage in and around Eyam, it was a favourite haunt of the ignis fatuus, Bill with wisp and Peg with lantern.

Of all ancient customs, now faded or fast fading away, none seems to be more regretted, and none more simple, beautiful, and natural, than carrying garlands before the corpses of young, unmarried virgin females. According to Mr. E. Steel, in the minute book of the Society of Antiquaries, 1747, bachelors were sometimes honoured with garlands. Strewing flowers in or on the graves was occasionally adopted; and, at other times, baskets of choice flowers were carried before the corpse, and finally scattered on the coffin in the grave. At Eyam, in May, 1834, the last instance occurred of bearing or carrying a kind of garland of flowers before the corpse of a female,—a young, modest, beautiful, and highly respected virgin, Alice Heathcote. Up to the year 1822, when the church was re-pewed there were several garlands suspended from the arches of the north aisle, when these sweet memorials of eventful mortality were destroyed. In the London Morning Chronicle of September 25th, 1792, there appeared an elegiac ode from the elegant pen of Miss Seward, on her visit to Eyam, while on a journey from Lichfield to Sheffield, in the summer of 1792. In this effusion the following lines occur :—

“Now the low beams with paper garlands hung
 In memory of some village youth or maid,
 Draw the soft tear from thrill'd remembrance sprung,
 How oft my childhood marked that tribute paid!
 The gloves suspended by the garland's side,
 White as its snowy flowers with ribands tied,
 Dear Village! long these wreaths funereal spread—Simple memorials of the early dead.”

To these pathetic lines the following note is subjoined: "The ancient custom of hanging a garland of white roses made of writing paper, and a pair of white gloves over the pew of unmarried villagers who die in the flower of their age, prevails to this day in the village of Eyam, and many other villages in the Peak."*

The writer has a vivid recollection of seeing a funeral from Grindleford-bridge, a township comprised in the parish of Eyam, when before the corpse a richly decorated garland was carried by four young maidens dressed in white; it was suspended from the middle of two white ribbon-wrapped rods placed crosswise, the bearers holding them at their extreme ends.†

* The reader will scarce need informing that the Miss Seward, authoress of the lines and note above was the celebrated poetess, Miss Anna Seward, born at Eyam. This ode entire appears in her published poetical works.

† In the Reliquary, vol. I, there is an excellent article on Funeral Garlands by the Editor, Llewellynn Jewitt, Esq., F.S.A.

Manor of Eyam.

THE Manor of Eyam, (the Aiune of the Norman Survey) was, in the reign of Edward the Confessor, held by Caschin; but at the survey of the Conqueror, it was vested in the Crown.* This, with other Manors in the Peak, was granted by Henry the First, to William Peveril, and Eyam was held under him by the Morteynes, of Risley, in this County, and of Wollaton, in Nottinghamshire; the latter place being now the seat of Willoughby, Lord Middleton, one of whose ancestors married, in the reign of Edward First, the heiress of the

* Caschin, who possessed Eyam in the reign of Edward the Confessor, held no other property or Manors in Derbyshire except Elton (Eltune) jointly with Uctred.—Lysons' Mag. Britt., Derbyshire, xxxv and xxxix.—The Domesday Book contains the following: "In Eyam Caschin, had two caracutes of land, or two plough hides of land for the plough, and two caracutes of other or not plough land. There are twelve villeins and seven Bordarii (a sort of copy-holders) they have five ploughs. Wood and pasture one mile long and broad, now the King's land, worth annually twenty shillings."

Morteynes. About the year 1307, Roger de Morteyne, sold the Manor and estate to Thomas, Lord de Furnival of Sheffield, first Lord de Furnival, and Lord of Hallamshire.* The Manor has continued in the descendants of the Furnivals through heiresses to the present time. Joan de Furnival, only daughter and heiress of William, fourth Lord Furnival, carried this and her other large estates in marriage to her husband, Sir Thomas Nevill, (brother of Ralph, Earl of Westmoreland) summoned to Parliament as Lord Furnival in right of his wife.† Maud the only daughter, and heiress of Sir Thomas Nevell, Lord Furnival, married John, Lord Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, the distinguished hero of the wars between England and France during the reigns of Henry the Fifth and Sixth.*

* Thomas, the son of Gerard and Matilda Furnival mentions at the instance of the Statute Quo Warranto of Edward the First, his being possessed at that time of the Manors of Stony Middleton and Eyam. Elizabeth, the widow of Thomas de Furnival who died in 1332, seized of Eyam and Stony Middleton, had for her dowry, inter alia, Eyam, Stony Middleton, Bamford and Hathersage, Derbyshire; and Treeton, Todwick, Ullay, Brapmton, Catliffe, Orgrave, and Whiston, Yorkshire; she died on Tuesday next ensuing the feast of the Blessed Virgin, 28th, Edward the Third, after enjoying her splendid dowry a great many years. It then reverted to her husband's grandson by his first wife, Thomas, Lord Furnival, called the Hasty.

† Thomas Nevill, Lord Furnival had livery 7th Richard the Second, of the lands of which his wife's father died seized, amongst others Eyam, Com. Derby.

On the death of Gilbert, 7th Earl, in 1616, without male issue, it passed under settlements made by Earl George, his father, to Earl Gilbert's sister, the Countess of Pembroke, and on her death without issue, to her great nephew, Sir George Saville, of Thornhill, Yorkshire, and Rufford, Nottinghamshire, afterwards created Marquis of Halifax, and Grandson of the Countess of Pembroke's sister, Lady Mary Saville. On the death of his son, William, second Marquis, in the year 1700, this Manor was allotted, on partition of his estates, between his three daughters and co-heiresses, to his daughter, the Countess of Burlington, in part of her share, from whom it descended to her only daughter and heiress, married to William, 4th Duke of Devonshire; it is now the property of their great grandson, William, 7th and present Duke of Devonshire, 18th in descent from Thomas Lord de Furnival. This Manor became the property of the Right Honourable Lord George Cavendish in the year 1781, in consequence of a decision in the Court of King's Bench upon the wills of the Countess of Burlington, and William, Duke of Devonshire. In the early part of the present century, William the sixth Duke of Devonshire, became possessed of it by exchange. On the death of William, second Marquis of Halifax, as before stated the Manor was vested in his daughter Dorothy, Countess of Burlington ; but by virtue of partition deeds (one in the 16th George Second) the mineral rights, with the right of presentation to the living or Rectory, was held and possessed in common, or equally, between the co-heiresses, or their issue. The joint share, or portion of all mineral rights, with right of presentation to the Rectory of Anne, the eldest daughter and co-heiress, who married Charles, Lord Bruce, eldest son of Thomas, second Earl of Ailesbury, has descended, through their only daughter, married to Henry, Duke of Chandos, to her great grandson, the present Duke of Buckingham and Chandos ;—that of his second daughter, Dorothy, the Countess of Burlington, to her descendant, the present Duke of Devonshire :—and the share of Mary the youngest of the three daughters and co-heiresses, who married Sackville Tufton, Earl of Thanet, to her grandson, Henry Tufton, 11th and last Earl of Thanet, by whose death that title became extinct, and is now held under his Will by Sir Richard Tufton, Bart., of Hothfield Hall, Kent ;—the Duke of Buckingham and Chandos, the Duke of Devonshire, and Sir Richard Tufton, present to the Rectory in succession.*

* John Lord Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, was summoned to Parliament in right of his wife, as Lord Furnival. He was killed 20th July, 31st Henry the Sixth, seized inter alia, of Eyam, Stony Middleton, Bamford, and Brassington.—Vide, Escheat's Roll, &c.

* Besides the mineral rights, and Rectorial presentation, these noblemen have little or no landed interest at Eyam, Sir George Saville, having sold the land, &c., two centuries back. A large tract of Moorland, however, belongs to the Duke of Devonshire as Lord of the Manor.

The Manor House is said to have stood in the fields a little north-west of the Church and Hall garden, then called the Green Yard, and having been sold to the Wrights was pulled down by them in the latter half of the last century but one. Foundations have been occasionally turned up within the recollection of persons now living. It was, probably, seldom inhabited by the Lords or their families, except on occasions of their visiting their estates in this part of the country, when rooms might have been reserved for their use, and which might have been used also for the holding therein of the Manor Courts. Under the head of families of distinction will be found some further information relating to the Manor.

Among the conservators of the peace in the county of Derby, made in the twelfth year of the reign of Henry the Sixth, (1433,) we find the names of the following persons:—"John Stafford de Eyham, Richard Colyn (or Colin) de Eyham."* In the Peak Scenery, it is stated that a new mansion was erecting for the last of the Staffords who resided at Eyam, at the time of the plague, when the family left the place never to return. This is, however, a great mistake; for Humphrey, the last male of this branch of the Staffords, died at Eyam nearly a century before the plague. Many other particulars of this family, and other matters of singular interest connected with Eyam, will be found under different heads, after the following details of the terrible plague.

* This Commission was appointed to tender an oath to the gentry, for the better observance of the peace, both in themselves and retainers.—Vide Glover's History of Derbyshire, vol. 1.

The Plague.

“THE PLAGUE

O'er hills and vales of gold and green,
Passed on, undreaded and unseen :
Foregoing cities, towns, and crowds ;
Gay mansions glittering to the clouds,
Magnificence and wealth,
To reach a humbler, sweeter spot,
The village and the peaceful cot,
The residence of health.”—HOLLAND.

ET all who tread the green fields of Eyam, remember, with feelings of awe and veneration, that beneath their feet repose the ashes of those moral heroes, who, with a sublime, heroic, and an unparalleled resolution, gave up their lives,—yea ! doomed themselves to pestilential death, to save the surrounding country. The immortal victors of Thermopylæ and Marathon, who fought so bravely in liberty's holy cause, have no greater, no stronger claim to the admiration of succeeding generations, than the humble villagers of Eyam in the year 1666. Their magnanimous self-sacrifice, in confining themselves within a prescribed boundary during the terrible pestilence, is unequalled in the annals of the world. The plague which would undoubtedly have spread from place to place through the neighbouring counties, and which eventually carried off five-sixths of their number, was, in the following forcible language of a celebrated writer, "here hemmed in, and, in a dreadful and desolating struggle, destroyed and buried with its victims." How exalted the sense of duty, how glorious the conduct of these children of nature, who, for the salvation of the country, heroically braved the horrors of certain, immediate, and pestilential death! Tread softly, then, on the fields where their ashes are laid; let the wild flowers bloom on their wide scattered graves. Let the ground round the village be honoured and hallowed; for there,

"The dead are everywhere!

The mountain side; the plain; the woods profound;

All the lone dells—the fertile and the fair,

Is one vast burial ground."—MARY HOWITT.

For some years prior to this calamity, the plague had been known to have existed, in some degree, in several adjoining places, but generally in an eastwardly direction from Eyam; at Almonbury, near Huddersfield, in 1363; at Rotherham in 1570; at Doncaster in 1585; at Chesterfield in 1586-7; and at Brimington, when W. Townsend, Curate of Holmsfield, died, in 1609.

In the year 1625, a whole family, at Bradley, in the parish of Malpas, Cheshire, were carried off by the plague, under circumstances (at least in one or two instances) without any recorded parallel. The following are extracts from the Register of that year, place, and subject :—

“Thomas Jefferie, servant to Thomas Dawson, of Bradley, buried the 10th daye of August, in the night, he died of the plague.”

“Richarde, the sonne of Thomas Dawson of Bradley (that dyed of the plague) buried the 13th daye of August, in the night, 1625, nihil.”

“Raffe Dawson, sonne of the aforesayed Thomas, came from London about 25th July last past, and being sicke of the plague, died at his father’s house, and soe infected the sayd house and was buried, as is reported, neare unto his father’s howse.”

“Thomas Dawson of Bradley, died of the plague, and was buried th’ 16th daye of August, 1625, at 3 of clocke, after midnight, nihil.”

“Elizabeth, the daughter of the aforesayed Thomas Dawson, died of the plague of pestilence, and was buried the 20th daye August.”

“Anne, the wyffe of John Dawson, sonne of the aforesayd Thomas Dawson, died of the plague of pestilence, and was buried the 20th of August.”

“Richarde Dawson (brother to the above-named Thomas Dawson of Bradley) being sicke of the plague and perceyving he must die at yt tyme, arose out of his bed, and made his grave and causing his nefew, John Dawson, to cast some strawe into the grave, wich was not farre from the howse, and went and layed him down in the sayd grave, and caused clothes to be layd uppon, and soe dep’ted out of this world; this he did, because he was a strong man, and heavier than his said nefew, and another wench were able to burye; he died about the 23rd of August, 1625.—Thus much he did I was credibly tould.”

“John Dawson, sonne of the above-named Thomas, came unto his father, when his father sent for him, being sicke, and haveing layd him down in a dich, died in it the 29th daye of August, 1625, in the night.”

“Rose Smyth, servant of the above-named Tho: Dawson, and last of yt household, died of plague, and was buryed by Wm. Cooke, the 5th daye of September near the sayd house.”*

The death and burial of Richard Dawson, as given in the above extracts, is of a character dreadfully interesting: history not furnishing a similar instance of an individual under the agony of an intense malady, digging his own grave, lying down therein and dying, lest his mortal remains should remain uninterred after death.†

The small village of Curbar, about two miles south-east of Eyam, was visited by the plague in 1632, when several families of the names of Cooke, Clarke, and probably a few others, were all but entirely swept away. They were buried partly in what is now known as “Elliott’s Piece,” and other places within the precincts of the hamlet or village.

* From the second of these extracts it is evident that Raffe Dawson brought the infection, which carried off a whole family in so short a time, from London to Bradley a distance of about 170 miles. The distance from London to Eyam is only 150 miles; in this respect, a somewhat striking coincidence.

† The “Bow Stones,” Cheshire, and it is said, somewhere not far distant from Disley, are stated to be memorials of some persons who died of the plague, and were buried there. Of this I can learn nothing satisfactory; the indefatigable Dug-

The desolation of Eyam by the plague in 1666, is marked by two peculiar circumstances : one, that it was the last time the plague, properly so called, visited this island ; the other that this, its last visitation, was attended with a virulence,—with a destructive and desolating effect, never before witnessed and recorded (the population of Eyam considered) in the annals of human desolation. From the latter end of 1664, to December, 1665, about one sixth of the population of London fell victims to this appalling pestilence ; but at Eyam, nearly five-sixths were carried off in a few months of the summer of 1666, excepting a few who died at the close of 1665.

Though the mortality of the metropolis was very great and horrible, yet there, the populace were not restrained as to flight ; there, they could easily obtain medical aid ; there neighbour knew not neighbour ; there, thousands might die without being intimately known to each other. But in Eyam, a little sequestered village, containing about three hundred and fifty stationary inhabitants, the death of every one would be a neighbour, if not a relative. In Eyam, then, the plague was the concentration of all the most dreadful features of that visitation in London without its palliatives. Indeed, it seems exceedingly strange, that Eyam, a little mountain city, an isolated Zoar, secluded dale is silent respecting them, or the circumstance which they are said to commemorate, although he mentions minutely the pestilential death of the Dawson family, Bradley, in the same county.

among the Peak mountains, and one hundred and fifty miles distant from London, should have been visited by a pestilential disease, which had scarcely ever occurred in any very destructive form, only in great and populous cities. It is, however, most positively stated, that this terrible disease was brought from London to Eyam in a box of old clothes, and some tailor's patterns in cloth, or other materials belonging to a tailor. Before giving the details of the commencement, progress, and horrible effects of this pestilence at Eyam, it may be well to notice a few particulars respecting its assumed cause and nature, its symptoms, and whence, as supposed, it originated.

Hecker observes that, at the time of the Black Death, in the fourteenth century, the foundations of the earth were shaken from China to the Atlantic ; and that throughout Europe and Asia, the atmosphere, by its baneful influence, endangered both animal and vegetable life. The German Chroniclers inform us, that at this time a thick stinking mist advanced from the east, and spread itself over Italy ; and, it is stated that previously to an earthquake, at the same time, a pestiferous wind blew in Cyprus of such a deadly nature, that thousands fell down and expired in great agonies. The Black Death of the fourteenth century, so called from the black spots or putrid decomposition of the skin, is stated to have carried off in the East 37,000,000 of human beings, and in Europe in the same proportion to its population. This destructive pestilence is beautifully described by Boccacio, in the introduction to the "Decameron."

One writer states that infection and contagion have their origin in animalculæ; and, therefore, their infancy, maturity, and decline. The bubo of the plague is full of them. And Cooper says, "If this opinion be well founded it is no wonder that a chemical examination of the atmosphere cannot detect miasma, which does not depend on the state of the atmosphere." "Is not contagion," says Dr. Dwight, "such a fermentation of an animal body as generates animalculæ, and hence the danger of contact; and is not exemption after infection, evidence that the germs in that subject have been exhausted."

The plague generally manifested itself by the febrile symptoms of shivering, nausea, headache, and delirium. In some, these affections were so mild as to be taken for slight indisposition. The victim in this case generally attended his avocation until a sudden faintness came on, when the maculæ, or plague-spot, the fatal token, would soon appear on his breast, indicative of immediate death. But in most cases the pain and delirium left no room for doubt: on the second or third day, buboes, or carbuncles, arose about the groin and elsewhere; and if they could be made to suppurate, recovery was probable, but if they resisted the efforts of nature, and the skill of the physician, death was inevitable.

It has been observed, that even in the plague, the greatest enemy of the human race, there is a capriciousness, or rather something mysterious, which baffles even conjecture.

The Rev. T. Dawes, chaplain to the factory at Aleppo, when it was visited by the plague, about 1750, mentions the following singular occurrences :—a woman was delivered of an infected child with the plague sores on its body, though the mother had been and was free from the distemper. Another woman, who had a child of five months old, was seized by the plague and died shortly after; but the child, though it sucked her, and lay in the same bed during her whole disorder, escaped the infection. And another woman, upwards of a hundred years old, was afflicted with the plague, and recovered; but her two grandchildren of ten and sixteen years of age, received the infection from her, and both died.

Fabricus relates that, when the plague raged in Holland, in 1636, a young girl was attacked by it, had three buboes, and was removed to a garden, where her lover, to whom she was betrothed, attended her as nurse, and slept with her as his wife. He remained uninfected, and she (his beautiful Ægle,) recovered, and was married to him—

..... ..“her plighted swain,
Soothes with soft kiss, with tender accents charms,
And clasps the bright infection in his arms.”—DARWIN.

That the plague was, or might be, conveyed to Eyam, from London, through the medium of some tailor's patterns, or other materials in cloth, the following circumstances strongly corroborate :—

Mr. Williams, Chaplain to Sir R. Suffron, formerly Ambassador at Constantinople, relates that the jacket of a janizary, who had died of the plague, caused the death of six more, who wore it in succession. Alexander Benedictus mentions a feather bed, which proved mortal to numbers on account of its being infected. Theodore Mageire, in a paper laid before the King in Council, at Paris, 1651, says, "that some bandages of an infected person having been put between a wainscot and a wall of a house in Paris, gave the plague, many years after, to a person who took them out, and it spread immediately through the city." At Florence, in 1348, two hogs were seized with convulsions, and died in less than an hour, after snuffing on some rags which had been thrown into the street from a poor man who had died of the plague. Forrester states that seven children died by playing on clothes brought from an infected house in Zealand to Alkmull, North Holland. Thus, then, with what wisdom and propriety, as we shall subsequently see, did Mompesson, and the few survivors of the plague at Eyam, burn almost every article of clothing and furniture found in the village.

The celebrated John Howard in his work on "Lazarettos," observes, "That the putrid effluvia of some diseases (especially the plague) are capable of being carried from place to place, upon any substance, where what is called scent can lodge,—on wool, cotton, &c., and in the same manner that the smell of tobacco is conveyed from one place to another."*

Much has been written as to the source or sources of

* At pages 24 and 25 of the work on "Lazarettos," there is the plague. Pliny calls it an African fever, bred in Egypt or Ethiopia. Some maintain that it is common to the South of Europe. The "Black Death" was characterized by copious hemorrhage; it was, however, divested of this awfully fatal symptom, that the plague was brought by some ships from Cyprus or Candia, in the Levant, to Amsterdam and Rotterdam, where it made terrible carnage in the year 1663. Two Frenchmen are said to have brought it in some woollen goods from Holland to London, in December, 1664. These two Frenchmen, who resided in Longacre, London, on opening their goods, were seized with the plague, and, in a day or two, died in great agonies. Thus began, in London, this terrible scourge, which from December, 1664, to the beginning of 1666, carried off 100,000 souls.

the following foot-note, by the great philanthropist, in illustration of his statement on the transmission of putrid effluvia: "I am here reminded of a singular fact which I gladly mention in honour to the memory of a worthy character: when the plague raged in London, 1665, the infection was conveyed by means of a parcel of clothes to the remote village of Eyam, in the Peak of Derbyshire. In this place it broke out in September, 1665, and continued its ravages upwards of a year, when 260 persons died of it. The worthy Rector, Mr. Mompesson, whose name may rank with those of Cardinal Bonow, of Milan, and the good Bishop of Marseilles, at its breaking out, resolved not to quit his parishioners, but used every argument to prevail with his wife to leave the infected place, &c., &c."

During the dreadful ravages of the plague in London, it is very probable that the then inhabitants of Eyam would hear but very little concerning that calamity. Confined to their secluded village, which is surrounded by towering heath-clad hills, they were happily debarred from hearing at every turn that kind of intelligence which casts a gloom over the mind, or shocks the feelings. They were in a great measure unknown; and until the arrival of the fatal box, nothing had occurred to disturb "the even tenor of their way." Ah! up to this awful period they had lived in security and peace: attended by all the blessings of village life—

"The life which those who frēt in guilt,
And guilty cities never know; the life,
Led by primeval ages, uncorrupt,
When angels dwelt, and God himself, with Man!"

THOMSON.

Before the arrival in Eyam of the fatal box, containing the imprisoned seeds of the plague, it may be interesting to know that the Eyam wakes of that year (1665) had only transpired a few days previously to that event: and, it is said, that this wakes was peculiarly marked by an unusual number of visitors, as if, as was imagined by the few survivors, these visitors, who were in a great degree, relatives to the villagers of Eyam, had been involuntarily moved to come and take a last farewell of those who were, so very soon after, destined to be swept away by the plague. It is also said that the amusements on this occasion were more numerous and entertaining; but in what respect is not now known. Most probably, however, they would be of the usual and following character: relations and friends would assemble at the village ale-houses, wishing each other, as they raised the sparkling glasses to their lips, many happy returns of the festive time; the young men and maidens would dance upon the spacious village green; and, numberless other innocent and social amusements would close each gladsome, merry day.* Thus, these fated beings would enjoy themselves on the brink of death: thus they would revel in pleasure and mirth, unconscious of their speedy doom! But let us interrogate these children of nature in their dust:—were you not depressed with sad and gloomy sensations? Were you not moved by sudden and strange emotions? Did not some oppressive and unaccountable weight rest on your minds? Did not your lovely homes seem conscious of some “mighty woe?” Did you not behold over the village, DESOLATION written on the sky? Did you not hear the awful footsteps of approaching death? Did not the clouds weep along the hills on that fatal day, when the pestilential box arrived, in which the invisible pest lay concealed—in which that terrible minister of death only slumbered

* The wakes, or Feast was then held when it ought to be, the first Sunday after the 18th of August, St. Helen's day. The time of holding the annual festival, or wakes, was changed to the last Sunday in August, above a century ago. The cause of this change was the harvest.

awhile, to awake with greater fury? Horrible was your doom! hapless children of the hills! The struggle, however, is past, and in the beautiful language of Ossian, posterity shall “Awake your memories in your tombs?”

Yea! once again your meritorious sufferings shall appeal to the world for sympathy,

.....“Ere Nature’s pleasant robe of green,
Humanity’s appointed shroud, enwraps
Your monuments and your memory.”—WORDSWORTH.

It is singular that nearly all who have hitherto written on this direful calamity, have invariably represented the plague as breaking out in Eyam, in the spring of 1666. This, however, was not the case, though by far the greater part of the number of victims died in July, August, and September, 1666. The box, containing the tailor’s patterns in cloth, and it is said some old clothes, or other materials, was sent, according to traditionary accounts, from London to a tailor who resided in a small house at the east end of the Hall garden, and near the west end of the church-yard, now re-built, and occupied at the present time by Mr. George Marshall. The kitchen of the old house is in its original state, the house-place only has been renewed.* Whether the pat-

* This memorable dwelling was occupied some years ago by a Mr. Adam Holms, who is still living in Eyam. On one occasion Holms was examining a flue or chimney in the old terns and clothes were bought in London for the tailor at Eyam, or sent as a present, cannot now be ascertained. Some, however, have stated that it was a relative of the tailor at Eyam who sent them, he having procured them in London, where he resided, for a small sum, in consequence of the plague, which was then raging there at its maximum.

Before the details of the commencement of the plague, it may be well to notice a few particulars seemingly at variance with what, among the villagers of Eyam is, and always has been, patent tradition; namely that the box, containing the tailor's patters, old clothes, or some other materials, came to a tailor, who resided in the house before described. Dr. Mead, who published his treatise on the plague, about 1721, seems to have been the first to notice, since the plague, any particulars of its occurrence at Eyam; he writes, "the plague was likewise at kitchen, when to his astonishment he drew from a small aperture in the chimney, a pair of old leathern stays of antique fashion. It was immediately conjectured that the stays had been concealed there at the time Mompesson required all the clothing of the village to be burned; and that they might, therefore, contain some invisible seeds of the dreadful pest. Holms, although he had been an active soldier during the whole of the last war with France, had, as one of the British infantry, sustained with undaunted courage the fierce and terrible charges of Napoleon's cavalry at Waterloo, where he lost his left leg, felt his heart sink within him as he held in his hand these relics of female vestment. The stays were buried with hurried precipitation.

Eham, in the Peak of Derbyshire ; being brought thither, by means of a box sent from London to a taylor in that village, containing some materials relating to his trade. A servant who opened the foresaid box, complaining that the goods were damp, was ordered to dry them by the fire ; but in so doing it was seized with the plague and died ; the same misfortune extended itself to the rest of the family, except the taylor's wife, who alone survived. From hence the distemper spread about, and destroyed in that village, and the rest of the parish, though a small one, between two and three hundred persons. But notwithstanding this so great violence of the disease, it was restrained from reaching beyond that parish by the care of the Rector ; from whose son, and another worthy gentleman, I have the relation. The clergyman advised that the sick should be removed into huts, or barracks, built upon the common ; and procuring, by the interest of the then Earl of Devonshire, that the people should be well furnished with provisions, he took effectual care that no one should go out of the parish, and by this means he protected his neighbourhood from infection with complete success." *

According to Dr. Mead's account, the box containing the infected materials came from London to a tailor at Eyam ; and this is corroborated by the concurrent statement of the villagers of Eyam ever since the plague ; and it must be observed that Mead had his relation in part, from Mompesson's son George, who, when very young was sent away from Eyam during the plague, and who, without doubt, had heard his father relate many times the sad particulars of the direful occurrence. The people of Eyam have, ever since the time of the pestilence, uniformly and pertinaciously insisted that the fatal box came to, and the disease broke out in, the house before-mentioned, known and particularised for a long time after as "The Plague House." That the box came to the house in question, and that a tailor resided, as owner or tenant, in the said house at that time, cannot be quite satisfactorily substantiated : for from documents, in the possession of the present owner of the house, it appears that an Edward Cooper purchased the house in 1662 ; and that he died, according to the probate of his will, in 1664. In both documents the same Edward Cooper is described as a miner. In his will he leaves his property to his two sons, Jonathan and Edward ; his widow, however, having a life interest therein, for the better ordering and bringing up of the said Jonathan and Edward. The Register makes the first victim of the plague to be George Vicars, the second Edward Cooper, son of Edward Cooper, defunct ; and some time after there is the burial of a Jonathan Cooper, supposed to be the eldest son of Edward Cooper, although the register only says, " Bur. Oct. 28, 1665, Jonathan Cooper." Mead states that the first who died was a servant ; but, if we can suppose a lodger was meant, it would remove the seeming perplexity. George Vicars might be a a tailor, lodging and boarding with the widow of Edward Cooper; and, as the name, Vicars, does not occur again in the lists of those who died of the plague, he might have been a sort of stranger in Eyam. In Mead's relation, it is said that the whole of the family where the box came to, died, except the mother; and, we find from documents connected with the said Coopers and the said house, that the widow, Mary Cooper, survived the plague, and was married a second time to a John Coe. This construction of Mead's statement, and the unvarying assertions of the inhabitants of Eyam ever since the fatal time, would reconcile all seeming disagreements as to the persons, place, and other circumstances in connection with the commencement of the plague at Eyam. It may be still further observed that all the family died except one (the mother) where the plague commenced; and this circumstance agrees with all that has ever been said or written on the subject; but as George Vicars was buried September 7, and Jonathan Cooper October 28, 1665, it might appear that the plague, if confined solely that time in Cooper's house where it commenced, was not very malignant and destructive at first. This, however, was not the case, for between the death of George Vicars and Jonathan Cooper, the distemper had spread and carried off in the interim twenty-six other persons.

* Mead's Medical Works, vol. i., p. 290.

In all probability then, George Vicars opened the terrible box. In removing the contents he observed in a sort of exclamation, how very damp they were; and he therefore hung them to the fire to dry. While Vicars was superintending them he was seized with violent sickness and other symptoms of a disease, which greatly alarmed the family and neighbourhood. During his (no doubt) short illness what was afterwards considered the fatal token, a round purple place—the plague spot—appeared on his breast; he died, and was buried in the church-yard, September the seventh, 1665. Thus began, in Eyam, the plague,—the most awful of all diseases, which, after being in some measure checked, as supposed, by the following winter, spread amazingly, and eventually left the village nearly desolate.

It has been generally believed that the plague carried off its first victims very quickly; such, however, is a mistake, for Edward Cooper, the second who died, was buried, September the twenty-second, an interval, from the interment of George Vicars, of fifteen days.

SEPTEMBER, 1665.

(Names of those who died and dates of their burial.)

George Vicars	Sept. 7	Thomas Thorpe	Sept. 26
Edward Cooper	... 22	Sarah Sydall	... 30
Peter Halksworth	... 23	Mary Thorpe	... 30

OCTOBER commenced with two deaths, and on the third two more, and to the end of the month, sometimes one and two in a day; and it was at this juncture that the terrified villagers ascertained the fatal disease to be the plague. Then!

“Out it burst, a dreadful cry of death;

‘The Plague! the Plague!’ the withering language flew.”

OCTOBER, 1665.

(Names of those who died, and the respective dates of their interments.)

Matthew Bands	Oct. 1	Martha Bands	Oct. 17
Elizabeth Thorpe	... 1	Jonathan Ragge	... 18
Margret Bands	... 3	Humphrey Torre	... 19
Mary Thorpe	... 3	Thomas Thorpe	... 19
Sythe Torre	... 6	Mary Bands	... 20
William Thorpe	... 7	Elizabeth Sydall	... 22
Richard Sydall	... 11	Alice Ragge	... 23
William Torre	... 13	Alice Sydall	... 24
Alice Torre (his wife)...	13	George Ragge	... 26
John Sydall	... 14	Jonathan Cooper	... 28
Ellen Sydall	... 15	Humphrey Torre	... 30
Humphrey Hawksworth	17

In NOVEMBER the pest visited five fresh families, and the distress of the inhabitants began to assume an aggravated form and aspect; few would visit the families infected; they were avoided in the street; they were glanced at with fearful apprehension; and their consequent privations cannot be described.

NOVEMBER, 1665.

(Mortality, names, and dates of burials.)

Hugh Stubbs	Nov. 1	Ann Stubbs (his wife)	19
Alice Teylor	... 3	Elizabeth Warrington	29
Hannah Rowland	... 5	Randoll Daniel	... 30
John Stubbs	... 15

DECEMBER witnessed the still wide-spreading disease; fresh habitations poured forth lamentations.

DECEMBER, 1665.

(Names of victims and dates of their burials.)

Mary Rowland	Dec. 1	William Rowe	Dec. 19
Richard Coyle	... 2	Thomas Willson	... 22
John Rowbottom	... 9	William Rowbotham...	24
— Rowe (an infant)...	14	Anthony Blackwell	... 24
Mary Rowe	... 15

Some idea may be formed of the extreme virulence of the plague at Eyam, even at its commencement, by observing, that even in large cities the plague has been known to cease in winter. In the first summer of the great plague at Genoa, 10,000 died, in the winter scarcely any; but in the following summer, 60,000. The great plague in London appeared in the latter end of 1664, but was checked by winter until the ensuing spring; while at Eyam, where the effects of winter would be considerably greater than in cities, the plague continued its ravages without ceasing. Still it did not attain the height of its destruction and malignancy, until the summer of 1666.

During the last four months the sufferings of the villagers were truly dreadful; and, though they had become familiar with death, yet they were doomed, in the following summer, to behold the pest assume a far more deadly and fatal aspect. Though the survivors had seen, in the above time, forty-five of their relatives and friends snatched from among them by the terrific hand of pestilential death, yet some few of them were destined to see near double that number swept away in the short space of one month. Fated beings! shall not

“The bard preserve your names

And send them down to future times?”—OSSIAN.

JANUARY exhibited, to the great joy of the villagers, some slight apparent abatement of the malignant disease.

JANUARY, 1665-6.

(Names of victims and dates of their interment.)

Robert Rowbottom	Jan. 1	John Thornley	Jan. 28
Samuel Rowbottom	... 1	Isaac Willson	... 28
Abell Rowland	... 15*

FEBRUARY cast a saddening gloom around the hearts of the now terror-stricken inhabitants, the number of deaths increased, and their cup of hope was now dashed to the ground.

FEBRUARY, 1665-6.

(Mortality, names, and dates of burials.)

Peter Mortin, Bretton,		Alice Willson	Feb. 18
	Feb. 4	Adam Hawksworth	... 18
Thomas Rowland	... 13	Anthony Blackwell	... 21
John Willson	... 15	Elizabeth Abell	... 27
Deborah Willson	... 17

It may be necessary, in this place, to notice some few particulars respecting the two unrivalled characters, who may be justly said to have been by their joint exertions, the principal instruments by which Derbyshire and the neighbouring counties were delivered from the desolating plague,—the Rev. Thomas Stanley and the Rev. William Mompesson.

It will be manifest that at the time of the greatest fury of the plague, the salvation of the surrounding country originated in the wisdom of these two worthy divines. Their magnanimous conduct on this awful occasion can only be exceeded by the obedience of the sufferers over whom they exercised such heavenly influence.

* A headstone to the memory of Abell Rowland, stands near the Chancel door of the Church.

The Rev. Thomas Stanley was born at Duckmanton, near Chesterfield. His public ministry was exercised at Handsworth, Dore, and eight years at Ashford, whence, by those in power, he was translated, in 1644, to the Rectory of Eyam, where he continued to reside, respected and esteemed, until Bartholomew-day, 1662. He continued to preach, however, in private houses at Eyam, Hazleford, and other places, until his death in 1670. This very worthy man was succeeded by his predecessor, the Rev. Shoreland Adams, who died in 1664.* The successor of this litigious divine, was the Rev. William Mompesson, chaplain to Sir George Saville. Before his coming to Eyam, in April, 1664, he had married a beautiful young lady, Catherine, the daughter of Ralph Carr, Esq., of Cocken, in the county of Durham. She was young, and possessed good parts, with exquisitely tender feelings. These two illustrious characters (Stanley and Mompesson,) throughout the fury of the pestilence, as we shall see hereafter, forsook not their flocks, but visited, counselled, and exhorted them in their sufferings; alleviated their miseries, and held fast to their duties on the very threshold of death.

* The Rev. Shoreland Adams was suspended as Rector of Eyam in 1644; he regained his living in 1662.

MARCH commenced, and the pestilence still alarmingly prevailed in various parts of the village, although the number of deaths did not reach that of the preceding month.

MARCH, 1665-6.

(Names of persons who died,—no dates of burials given in the register.)

Jon. Thos. Willson	Mar. —		Mary Buxton, Foolow,	Mar—
John Talbot	... —		Ann Blackwell	... —
John Wood	... —		Alice Halksworth	... —

APRIL, with its increasing number of victims, threw a deep and sorrowful gloom over the heart-sickened villagers.

APRIL, 1666.

(Names of victims, and days of interment.)

Thomas Allen	April 6		Samuel Hadfield	April 18
Joan Blackwell	... 6		Margaret Gregory	... 21
Alice Thorpe	... 15		— Allen (an infant)	... 28
Edward Bainsley	... 16		Emmot Sydal	... 20
Margaret Blackwell	... 16

MAY brought forth a cheering relaxation in the chilly touch of this insatiable messenger of death.

MAY, 1666.

(Persons who died, and dates of their burial.)

Robert Thorpe	May 2		James Taylor	May 11
William Thorpe	... 2		Ellen Charlesworth	... 24

JUNE awoke the deadly monster from his seeming slumber in the preceding month, and with desolating steps he stalked forth from house to house breathing on the trembling inhabitants the vapour of death. The irresistible rage of the pest filled the hearts of all with dreadful forebodings : despair seized every soul ; loud and bitter lamentations burst forth from every infected house ! Fear and apprehension prevented ingress to these abodes of distress. Horror and dismay enveloped the village ; and many persons were led to practise numerous weak and absurd expedients, to prevent infection. Numberless were the imagined omens and presages which the terrified inhabitants could now call to mind of their dreadful calamities. Some said that the desolation of the village had been at various times prognosticated. Many could recollect having seen the white cricket, and heard it sound the death-knell on their hearths. Others remembered having heard for three successive nights the invisible "death-watch" in the dead of night. And some called to mind how often, during a few preceding winters, they had listened to the doleful howlings of the Gabriel-hounds.*

These, with numerous other fanciful tokens of death, the simple and horrified villagers imagined, at this awful time, they had seen and heard. Would it, indeed, have been marvellous, had they fancied they had seen, with Ossian's Melilcoma, "the awful faces of other times looking from the clouds ?"

* Gabriel-hounds are believed to be the spirits of unbaptized infants which are destined to hover about in the air, and by a faint dog-like howling announce the death of individuals of their respective families.

As June advanced, the pestilence spread from house to house with dreadful rapidity :

“ Health, strength, and infancy, and age,
In vain the ruthless foe engage.”—HOLLAND.”

The unexampled mortality of the plague during the summer of 1666, is, as before stated, unequalled in history. Some have supposed that this destructive scourge was aggravated to its unparalleled fury at Eyam by the ignorance and destitution of the inhabitants; and their consequent maltreatment of the distemper. But the proximate cause of this unheard of mortality was undoubtedly the courageous determination of the villagers to confine themselves within a certain boundary; for if those who fell a sacrifice in July, August, September, and October, had fled in the spring, they would most probably have escaped; but then there was this danger—the infected would have fled with the non-infected, and thereby have carried desolation wherever they went. Hence may be traced the principal and evident cause of that dreadful mortality among the meritorious villagers of Eyam.

Up to the beginning of June, seventy-seven had perished from the commencement of the pest; this number of deaths, from a population of three hundred and fifty, was very great in so short a time; but how incomparable to the dreadful havoc of the ensuing months of June, July, August, September, and October! It was, however, about the middle of June that the plague began to assume so terrible an aspect. Terror overwhelmed the hearts of the villagers. Mrs. Mompesson threw herself and two children, George and Elizabeth, (said to have been about three and four years old,) at the feet of her husband, imploring their immediate departure from the devoted place! Her entreaties and tears sensibly moved the feelings of her husband, whose eyes were suffused with tears at this energetic and truly pathetic appeal. He raised her from his feet, and in the most affectionate manner told her, that his duty to his suffering and diminishing flock—that the indelible stain that would rest on his memory by deserting them in the hour of danger—and that the awful responsibility to his Maker for the charge he had undertaken, were considerations with him of more weight and importance than life itself! He then again, in the most persuasive manner, endeavoured to prevail on his weeping partner to take their two lovely children, and flee to some place of refuge until the plague was stayed. She, however, steadfastly resisted his entreaties, and emphatically declared her determination that nothing should induce her to leave him amidst that destructive and terrible whirlpool of death! This affecting contest ended in their mutual consent to send the children away to a relative in Yorkshire (supposed to be J. Beilby, Esq.,) until the pestilence ceased. Imagination may paint the mournful parting of the children and parents on this occasion. Mompesson would call them aside, and, suppressing the bitterness of his feelings, give each a parting kiss, and fervently admonish them to be obedient and good ! Their tender and loving mother would grasp each in her arms, and, in the intervals of heartbursting sighs, kiss them again and again ! When they departed, she would haste to the highest window of their dwelling and watch them leave the village. As she caught the last glance of them, a sudden and startling thought would cross her mind that she should behold them no more. She might utter a shrill and piercing scream ! Mompesson would be by her side, and endeavour to console her in the most soothing language imaginable ! In the first paroxysm of her grief she would intently gaze towards the spot where they last met her view, and refuse to be removed from the place, until the streaming tears

"Rush from her clouded brain,
Like mountain mists at length dissolved to rain."

BYRON.

Alas ! alas ! her forebodings were realised : in this world she beheld her children no more : she took the infection, and died, as will be hereafter seen, blessing her children with her last parting breath.

It was at this period of the calamity, that the inhabitants began to think of escaping from death by flight. Indeed, the most wealthy of them, who were but few in number, fled early in the spring with the greatest precipitation. Some few others, having means, fled to the neighbouring hills and delis, and there erected huts, where they remained until the approach of winter. But it was the visible manifestation of a determination in the whole mass to flee, that aroused Mompesson; he energetically remonstrated with them on the danger of flight; he told them of the fearful consequences that would ensue; that the safety of the surrounding country was in their hands; that it was impossible for them to escape death by flight; that many of them were infected; that the invisible seeds of the disease lay concealed in their clothing and other articles which they were preparing to take with them; and that, if they would relinquish their fatal and terrible purpose, he would write to all the influential persons in the vicinity for aid; he would, by every possible means in his power, endeavour to alleviate their sufferings; and he would remain with them, and sacrifice his life rather than be instrumental in desolating the surrounding country. Thus spoke this wonderful man!

The inhabitants, with a superhuman courage, gave up all thoughts of flight. Mompesson immediately wrote to the Earl of Devonshire, then at Chatsworth, a few miles from Eyam, stating the particulars of the calamity, and adding that he was certain that he could prevail on his suffering and hourly diminishing flock to confine themselves within the precincts of the village, if they could be supplied with victuals and other necessary articles, and thereby prevent the pestilence from spreading. The noble Earl expressed in his answer deep commiseration for the sufferers; and he further assured Mompesson, that nothing should be spared on his part to mitigate the calamitous sufferings of the inhabitants —provided they kept themselves within a specified bound. This worthy nobleman generously ordered the sufferers to be supplied with all kinds of necessaries, agreeably to the following plan :—

A kind of circle was drawn round the village, marked by particular and well-known stones and hills; beyond which it was solemnly agreed that no one of the villagers should proceed, whether infected or not. This circle extended about half-a-mile around the village; and to two or three places or points on this boundary provisions were brought. A well, or rivulet, northward of Eyam, called to this day, “Mompesson’s Well,” or “Mompesson’s Brook,” was one of the places where articles were deposited. These articles were brought very early in the morning, by persons from the adjoining villages, who, when they had delivered them beside the well, fled with the precipitation of panic. Individuals appointed by Mompesson and Stanley fetched the articles left; and when they took money it was placed in the well or certain stone troughs, to be purified, thus preventing contagion by passing from hand to hand. The persons who brought the articles were careful to wash the money well before they took it away. When money was sent, it was only for some extra or particular articles: the provisions and many other necessaries were supplied, it is supposed, by the Earl of Devonshire. The Cliffe, between Stony Middleton and Eyam, was another place on the circle appointed for this purpose. A large stone trough stood there, in which money and other things were deposited for purification. There are other places pointed out, but these were the principal.*

It is said that no one ever crossed this cordon sanitaire from within or without, during the awful calamity; this however is not precisely correct. One person, as will be hereafter seen, crossed it from without at the almost sacrifice of life; and, in a subsequent part, some interesting particulars will be given of one or two who crossed it from within. It must be admitted that it was to the prescribing of this boundary and other precautions attendant thereon, that the country around was saved from the pestilence. The wisdom of Mompesson, who is said to have originated the plan, can only be surpassed in degree by the courage of the inhabitants in not trespassing beyond the bounds marked out, whom as Miss Seward justly observes, "a cordon of soldiers could not have prevented against their will, much less could any watch which might have been set by the neighbourhood have effected that important purpose." The annals of mankind afford no instance of such magnanimous conduct in a joint number of persons; and ages pass away without being honoured by such an immortal character as Mompesson, who, while the black sword of pestilence was dealing death around him, voluntarily "put his life in his hand," from an exalted sense of duty, for the salvation of the country. Towards the middle and latter end of June, the plague began to rage more fearfully. Nothing but lamentations were heard in the village. The passing-bell ceased, the church-yard was no longer resorted to for interment, and the church-door closed.

* An ancestor of Abraham and William Cooper, Farmers, now residing in Eyam, brought bread to Eyam from Hazleford, during the plague. It was left on a certain stone on the top of "Wet Withins," on Eyam Moor. Another person from the neighbourhood of Little Common, a few miles west of Sheffield, brought articles of food (bread principally) on this calamitous occasion.

"Contagion closed the portal of the fane :

He then a temple sought, not made with hands,
But reared by Him amidst whose works it stood,
Rudely magnificent."

ROBERTS.

At this period, Mompesson, deeming it dangerous to assemble in the church during the hot weather, proposed to meet his daily diminishing flock in the Delf, a secluded dingle, a little south of Eyam, and there read prayers twice a week, and deliver his customary sermons on the Sabbath, from a perforated arch in an ivy-mantled rock. The ghastly hearers seated themselves at some distance from each other, on the grassy slope opposite the rocky pulpit. Thither they repaired one by one on these awful occasions, leaving at their mournful homes, some a father, some a mother, some a brother, and some a child, struggling with death. They glanced at each other with looks of unutterable woe, asking in silence "whom Fate would next demand." Mompesson, standing on the verge of the arch, lifted up his voice to heaven and called aloud on the God of mercy to stay the deadly pest, while the fervent responses of the shuddering hearers dolefully echoed from the caverns around. Thus they assembled in the sacred dell, while each succeeding Sabbath told the tale of death. "Do you see," says Miss Seward, "this dauntless minister of God stretching forth his hand from the rock, instructing and consoling his distressed flock in that little wilderness? How solemn, how affecting, must have been the pious exhortations of these terrible hours!" Rhodes observes, "that Paul preaching at Athens, or John the Baptist in the wilderness, scarcely excites a more powerful and solemn interest than this minister of God, this 'legate of the skies,' when contemplated on this trying occasion, 'when he stood between the dead and the living, and the plague was stayed.'" This romantic arch has, from that terrible time, been invariably designated "Cucklett Church."* How insensible to the awfulness of that horrible season must he be who can tread this hallowed dell and not hear

"Amidst the rocks an awful sound
 In deep reverberation sigh,
 And all the echoing caverns round
 With mournful voices far reply,
 As if, in those sepulchral caves,
 The dead were speaking from their graves."

BRETTELL.

* Cucklett or Cuckletts is the name of certain fields or plot of land west of the rock or arch where Mompesson preached; the name is said to be a corruption of the words Cook's Lot,—that is land that once belonged to a family named Cook.

During June, and more especially the three following months, the terrific suffering of the inhabitants almost defy description. Parents beheld their children fall in direful succession by the hand of the insatiable and purple-visaged pest. Children turned aside with fearful dread at the distorted features of their parents in death. Every family, while any survived, buried its own dead; and one hapless woman, in the space of a few days, as we shall afterwards see, dug the graves for, and buried with her own hands, her husband and six children. Appalling as such a circumstance must be, it is, however, only one out of very many of that eventful time.

The period was now approaching when the fury of the pestilence attained its maximum: when it threatened the wretched villagers with utter extermination. Fear and dismay overwhelmed their souls; they shrunk back with terror at the increasing ravages of this most capricious, indescribable, and horrid disease; which in the beautiful language of the poet,— “Darts in the whirlwind—floats upon the breeze—

Creeps down the vales, and hangs upon the trees—
Strikes in a sunbeam—in the evening cool—
Flags on the fog, and stagnates on the pool—
In films ætherial, taints the vital air—
Steals through a pore, and creeps along a hair—
Invades the eye in light—the ear in sounds—
Kills with a touch, and at a distance wounds.”

FURNESS.

It was during the latter part of June or the beginning of July, that the church-yard closed its gates against the dead. Funeral rights were no longer read; coffins and shrouds no longer thought of; an old door or chair was the bier on which the dead were borne; and a shallow grave or hole hastily dug in the fields or gardens round the cottages, received each putrid corpse ere life was scarce extinct. This was more particularly the case in the two following months, July and August.

JUNE, 1666.

(Names of victims, and dates of burial.)

Isaac Thornley	June 2	Sarah Lowe	June 17
Anna Thornley	... 12	Mary Mellow	... 18
Jonathan Thornley	... 12	Anna Townsend	... 19
Anthony Skidmore	... 12	Abel Archdale	... 20
Elizabeth Thornley	... 15	Edward Thornley	... 22
James Mower	... 15	Ann Skidmore	... 25
Elizabeth Buxton	... 15	Jane Townsend	... 25
Mary Heald	... 16	Emmot Heald	... 26
Francis Thornley	... 17	John Swanna	... 29
Mary Skidmore	... 17

JULY saw the rage of the pest in a form really terrific. Dreadful wailings burst forth from every side; and the countenances of the few who ventured abroad were deeply impressed with the visible signs of inward horror. The village was unfrequented; it stood, as it were out of the world; none came to sympathise with its suffering inhabitants: no traveller passed through the lonely street during that awful time: it was regarded and avoided as the valley of death! Horror and Destruction rode, and marked the boundary of the dreadful place. On the clouds that hung gloomily over the village—imagination might see written “Pestilence and Death;” at which terrific inscription the approaching stranger turned aside and precipitately fled. Thus, helpless and alone, perished the villagers of Eyam :

“ Struck by turns, in solitary pangs
They fell, unblest, untended, and unmourned.”

THOMSON.

It is impossible for pen to describe, or imagination to conceive, the unspeakable distress of those who resided in that part of the village, and in those houses, where the plague raged with the greatest violence. Some dwellings, in July, and especially in August, contained at the same moment both the dying and the dead. In one house a victim was struggling with death, while they were hurrying another therefrom to a grave in the fields. In the next a few were anxiously watching for the last convulsive gasp, that the body might be instantly interred, and that “so much of the disease might be buried, and its influence destroyed.” The open day witnessed the putrid bodies of the victims pass along the street; and sable night was startled at the frequent footsteps of the buriers of the dead. The horrid symptom of the last stage of the disease in almost every victim, was the signal for digging a grave, or rather hole, to which the diseased, placed on the first thing at hand, or more frequently dragged along the ground, was speedily hurried and buried with inconceivable precipitation; “even while the limbs were yet warm, and almost palpitating with life." So anxious were they for immediate interment, that some were buried close by their cottage doors, and it is said, some close behind the very houses in which they died. In this state of things passed day after day, and week after week. The terrified villagers had for some time past forsaken their wonted occupations; the untended cattle lowed mournfully on the neighbouring hills; the fields and gardens became a wilderness; and family feuds and personal animosities sank into oblivion!

Every family up to July or perhaps the latter end of June, had been, from dire necessity, compelled to bury its own dead; for no one would touch or even glance at a corpse that did not belong to his own house or family. But when, as was now frequently the case, the last of a family died, or when one died in a house and others were dying, some person was necessitated, however dangerous the task, to undertake the removal of the unsightly corpse, and immediately bury it. For this hazardous but necessary purpose, the All-wise Providence had endowed with sufficient nerve, hardihood and indifference, the person of Marshall Howe, a native of the village, a man of gigantic stature, and of the most undaunted courage. The daring conduct of this individual in that terrible time, has rendered his name familiar with the villagers of Eyam to the present day. During the greatest fury of the plague, he filled the fearful office of burier of the dead. It appears however, that he took the distemper nearly at the time of its first appearance, but recovered; and to the belief that a person was never attacked twice, much of his intrepidity may be ascribed. Covetousness or avarice seems to have instigated him in part, to undertake his perilous vocation. When he learnt that a person was dying without relatives to take charge of interment, he immediately proceeded to a garden or adjoining field, and opened a grave; then hastened to the house where the victim lay, perhaps warm with life, and tying one end of a cord round the neck or feet of the corpse, he dragged the body to the grave and with an "unhallowed haste" lightly covering it with earth. The money, furniture, clothes, and other effects of the deceased were his unenviable remuneration. For nearly three months he was thus employed. Through burying the last victims of the pest houses, he claimed and took whatever he found therein; and, in alluding to the quantity of small clothes he had thus obtained, he jocularly observed, that "he had pinders and napkins sufficient to kindle his pipe with while he lived." Such was the awful occupation of Marshall Howe, during the most horrible ravages of the plague; he however, tasted the bitter draught, by burying with his own hands, his wife on the twenty-seventh, and his son on the thirtieth of August of the fatal 1666. For a generation or two after the plague, parents in Eyam endeavoured to bring their children to rule and obedience by telling them that they would send for Marshall Howe.

JULY, 1666.

(Dates of interments and names of sufferers.)

Elizabeth Heald	July	2	Thomas Ashe	July	18
William Lowe	...	2	William Thornley	...	19
Eleanor Lowe (his wife)		3	Francis Wood	...	22
Deborah Ealott	...	3	Thomas Thorpe	...	22
George Darby	...	4	Robert Thorpe	...	22
Anna Coyle	...	5	Robert Talbot	...	24
Briget Talbot, Riley	...	5	Joan Nealor	...	25
Mary Talbot, ditto	...	5	Thomas Healley	...	25
John Dannyel	...	5	Richard Talbot	...	25
Elizabeth Swanna	...	6	John Nealor	...	26
Mary Thornley	...	6	Joan Talbot	...	26
John Townsend	...	7	Ruth Talbot	...	26
Ann Talbot, Riley	...	7	Anna Chapman	...	26
Francis Wragge	...	8	Lydia Chapman	...	26
Elizabeth Thorpe	...	8	Margret Allen	...	29
Elizabeth Lowe	...	9	John Torre	...	29
Edytha Torre	...	9	Samuel Ealott	...	29
Anne Lowe	...	13	Rowland Mower	...	29
Margret Teylor	...	14	Thomas Barking	...	30
Alice Thornley	...	16	Nicholas Whitby	...	30
Jane Naylor	...	16	Jonathan Talbot	...	30
Edytha Barking	...	17	Mary Whitby	...	30
Elizabeth Thornley	...	17	Rowland Mower	...	30
Jane Talbot	...	17	Sarah Ealott	...	31
Robert Whyteley	...	18	Joseph Allen	...	31
Catherine Talbot	...	18	Ann Mortin, Bretton...		31
Thomas Heald	...	18	Robert Kempe, Shep-
Robert Torre	...	18	herds' Flat	...	30
George Short	...	18

August, however, was the month in which the pest bared his arm for the most deadly slaughter. Distraction overwhelmed the hourly diminishing villagers; some lay in a death-like stupor, anticipating their doom; others ran about the streets in a state of madness, until they suddenly dropped down dead. From every house that was not empty, loud and dismal cries issued forth mixed with violent exclamations of pain; and as Ossian sings, "the groan of the people spread over the hills." The swellings in the neck and groin of the patient became insufferable when they would not burst, and the torment was unspeakably excruciating. All now expected death; no one cherished a hope of escape; and a mournful gloom settled on the features of the few who ventured to pace the lonely street. Those who fetched the victuals and other articles from the stated places, were marked on the brow by sullen despair; and even

"The very children had imbibed a look
Of such unutterable woe, as told
A tale of sorrows indescribable." ROBERTS.

As this fatal month advanced, the mortality increased with inconceivable violence. The wakes or feast came on again, but alas! alas! how awful the change! The remaining few thought not of their wonted joy; they breathed not its name, for all their thoughts were full of death! The festive Sunday passed away, with all the stillness of the grave; none watched for the arrival of relations and friends; no village choristers assembled at the church; nor did the cheerful bells call aloud to the hills to be merry and glad. Nearly all who had danced upon the village-green at the last anniversary of this, till then, happy time, were now laid, uncoffined, in their graves.

Towards the latter end of August, near four-fifths of the inhabitants had been swept away. Mompesson, during the whole time, unremittingly went from house to house, comforting, as much as possible, his dying flock. He, however, was an "ailing man," and had an issue in his leg. One day his beloved wife observed a green ichor issuing from the wound, which she conceived to be the result of his having taken the distemper, and its having found vent that way. Great was her joy on this occasion; and although Mompesson thought she was mistaken, yet he, as we shall see in his letter to his children, fully and duly appreciated her extreme anxiety for his welfare. This admirable and worthy man was now destined to drink deep of the sickening cup which had been passing round the village. Catherine, his beloved partner, had for some time, shewn symptoms of pulmonary consumption. She is represented to have been exceedingly beautiful though very delicate. There is a very current tradition in the village, that on, or a little before the twenty-second of August, 1666, Mompesson and his wife were walking arm-in-arm, in the fields adjoining the Rectory, as had been their custom in the morning during some months in the spring, hoping that the air would restore her to convalescence. During this walk she had been dwelling on her usual theme—their two absent children, when, just as they were leaving the last field for their habitation, she suddenly exclaimed : " Oh ! Mompesson ! the air ! how sweet it smells ! " These words went through the very soul of Mompesson, and his heart sank within him. He made some evasive reply, and they entered their dwelling. The lapse of a few hours confirmed his fearful anticipation from her remark in the fields : she had taken the distemper.* Mompesson seemed for awhile unable to stand the terrible shock ; he stood at her bedside a statue of despair. He however, after the first paroxysm of grief was past, began, with a fortitude unexampled, to use every means imaginable to arrest the progress of the disease. Cordials and chemical antidotes were administered by his own hand ; but, alas ! in vain. She struggled with the invincible pest for a few days, when, her spirit took its flight to the regions of bliss. Mompesson cast himself beside her putrid corpse ; and in the agony of despair bathed her cold and pallid face with burning tears. The domestics came and led him faltering away ; yet, ere he left the room he turned, and sobbing, cried " farewell ! farewell !

* There is a current tradition in the little hamlet of Curbar, (two miles south-east of Eyam,) that when the plague raged there in 1632, a woman named Sheldon, on leaving a house where some person was suffering of the plague, said to her husband who was accompanying her home, " Oh ! my dear, how sweet the air smells ! " She took the distemper and died. This sensation and exclamation compared with Mrs. Mompesson's, afford a most striking coincidence.

all happy days !” He repaired to his closet, and on his bended knees lifted up his voice to heaven ; while

“ One lightning-winged cry
 Shot through the hamlet ; and a wailing grew,
 Wilder than when the plague-fiend first drew nigh,
 One troublous hour,—and from all quarters fly
 The wretched remnant, who had ceased to weep ;
 But sorrow, which had drained their bosoms dry,
 Found yet fresh fountains in the spirit-deep,
 Wringing out burning tears that loved one’s couch to steep.”

WILLIAM AND MARY HOWITT.

She, who a few days past, had been so lovely and beautiful was now a livid corpse ; she who had been the object of every attention, now lay lone and still, guarded from every eye by dreadful apprehension.

“ Ah ! then Mompesson felt
 What human tongue nor poet’s pen must feign—
 Quick to the grave the kindred earth was given
 With e’en affection’s last sad pledge forgone,
 The mortal kiss—for round those blighted lips,
 Exhaled the lingering spirit of the pest,
 As if in triumph o’er all that was once
 So lovely and beloved.”

HOLLAND.

Thus, this lovely and amiable woman fell a victim to the plague in the twenty-seventh year of her age. Her resolution to abide with her husband in defiance of death, is a striking instance of the strength and purity of female affection. She was interred, August the twenty-fifth, 1666, in the church-yard at Eyam.

Over her ashes her loving and truly affectionate husband erected a splendid tomb, which, with its inscription and devices, will be hereafter described.

Great as was the calamity that had visited and was still visiting almost every family in the fated village; terrible as was the devastation of the pestilence in August, yet the very few inhabitants who were left, nearly forgot their own sufferings and distress in the death of Mrs. Mompesson. They had witnessed in her worthy husband, so much sympathy and benevolence, so much attention and humane feeling, that they regarded him as their counsellor, physician, and friend; and hence their participation in his sorrow for the loss of his lovely and amiable wife. The trying situation, the lacerated feelings of this incomparable man, will be best shewn by the two following letters, written with his own hand a few days after the interment of his affectionate spouse.

To his dear children he thus announces the death of their mother :—

“To my dear children, George and Elizabeth Mompesson, these present with my blessing.

“Eyam, August 31, 1666.

“DEAR HEARTS,—This brings you the doleful news of your dear mother’s death—the greatest loss which ever befel you! I am not only deprived of a kind and loving comfort, but you also are bereavèd of the most indulgent mother that ever dear children had. But we must comfort ourselves in God with this consideration, that the loss is only ours, and that what is our sorrow is her gain. The consideration of her joys, which

I do assure myself are unutterable, should refresh our drooping spirits.

“My dear hearts, your blessed mother lived a most holy life, and made a most comfortable and happy end, and is now invested with a crown of righteousness. I think it may be useful to you to have a narrative of your dear mother’s virtues, that the knowledge thereof may teach you to imitate her excellent qualities. In the first place, let me recommend to you her piety and devotion, which were according to the exact principles of the Church of England. In the next place, I can assure you, she was composed of modesty and humility, which virtues did possess her dear soul in a most extraordinary manner. Her discourse was ever grave and meek, yet pleasant withal; a vaunting immodest word was never heard to come from her mouth. Again, I can set out in her two other virtues, i.e., charity and frugality. She never valued anything she had, when the necessities of a poor neighbour required it; but had a bountiful heart to all indigent and distressed persons. And, again, she was never lavish, but commendably frugal. She never liked tattling women, and abhorred the custom of going from house to house, thus wastefully spending precious time. She was ever busied in useful work, yet, though prudent, she was affable and kind. She avoided those whose company could not benefit her, and would not unbosom herself to such, still she dismissed them with civility. I could tell you of her many other excellent virtues. I do believe, my dear hearts, upon sufficient grounds that she was the kindest wife in the world, and think, from my soul, that she loved me ten times better than herself; for she not only resisted my entreaties, that she should fly with you, dear children, from this place of death; but some few days before it pleased God to visit my house, she perceived a green matter to come from the issue in my leg, which she fancied a symptom that the distemper had found vent that way, whence she assured herself that I was past the malignity of the disorder, whereat she rejoiced exceedingly, not considering her own danger thereby. I think, however, that she was mistaken in the nature of the discharge she saw: certainly it was the salve that made it look so green; yet her rejoicing on that account was a strong testimony of her love to me: for I am clear that she cared not (if I were safe) though her own dear self was in ever so much pain and jeopardy.

“Further, I can assure you, my sweet babes, that her love to you was little inferior than to me; since why should she so ardently desire my continuance in this world of sorrows, but that you might have the protection and comfort of my life? You little imagine with what delight she talked of you both, and the pains she took when you sucked the milk from her breasts. She gave strong testimony of her love for you when she lay on her death-bed. A few hours before she expired I wished her to take some cordials, which she told me plainly she could not take. I entreated she would attempt for your dear sakes. At the mention of your names, she with difficulty lifted up her head and took them; which was to let me understand that whilst she had any strength left she would embrace any opportunity she had of testifying her affection to you.

“Now I will give you an exact account of the manner of her death. For some time she had shown symptoms of a consumption, and was wasted thereby. Being surrounded by infected families, she doubtless got the infection from them; and her natural strength being impaired, she could not struggle with the disease, which made her illness so very short. She showed much contrition for the errors of her past life, and often cried out, ‘One drop of my Saviour’s blood, to save my soul!’ At the beginning of her sickness she entreated me not to come near her, lest I should receive harm thereby; but, thank God, I did not desert her, but stood to my resolution not to leave her in her sickness, who had been so tender a nurse to me in her health. Blessed be God, that He enabled me to be so helpful and consoling to her, for which she was not a little thankful. During her illness she was not disturbed by worldly business—she only minded making her calling and election sure; and she asked pardon of her maid for having sometimes given her an angry word. I gave her some sweating antidotes, which rather inflamed her more, whereupon her dear head was distempered, which put her upon many incoherencies. I was troubled thereat, and propounded to her questions in divinity; as, by whom and on what account she expected salvation, and what assurances she had of the certainty thereof. Though in all other things she talked at random, yet to these religious questions she gave me as rational answers as could be desired. And at these times I bade her repeat after me certain prayers and ejaculations, which she did with great devotion,—it gave me comfort that God was so gracious to her.

“A little before her dear soul departed (I was gone to bed) she sent for me to pray with her. I got up, and went to her, and asked her how she did. The answer was, that she was looking when the good hour should come. Thereupon I prayed, and she made her responses from the Common Prayer Book, as perfectly as in her health, and an ‘Amen’ to every pathetic expression. When we had ended the prayers for the sick, we used those from the Whole duty of Man! and when I heard her say nothing, I said, ‘My dear, dost thou mind?’ She answered, ‘Yes,’ and it was the last word she spoke.

“My dear babes, the reading of this account will cause many a salt tear to spring from your eyes; yet let this comfort you,—your mother is a saint in heaven. I could have told you of many more of your dear mother’s excellent virtues; but I hope that you will not in the least question my testimony, if in a few words I tell you that she was pious and upright in her demeanour and conversation.

“Now, to that blessed God, who bestowed upon her all ‘those graces,’ be ascribed all honour, glory, and dominion, the just tribute of all created beings, for evermore.—Amen!

“WILLIAM MOMPESSEON.”

Is there not in this truly pathetic letter, the visible manifestation of a truly Christian spirit,—the bright effulgence of a heavenly mind, which ought to command the admiration of succeeding generations to the end of time? On the same melancholy event, the following letter was written by Mompesson, to his friend and patron, Sir George Saville:—

“Eyam, September 1, 1666.

HONOURED AND DEAR SIR,—This is the saddest news that ever my pen could write. The destroying Angel having taken up his quarters within my habitation, my dearest wife is gone to her eternal rest, and is invested with a crown of righteousness, having made a happy end. Indeed had she loved herself as well as me, she had fled from the pit of destruction with the sweet babes, and might have prolonged her days; but she was resolved to die a martyr to my interests. My drooping spirits are much refreshed with her joys, which I think are unutterable.

“Sir, this paper is to bid you a hearty farewell for ever, and to bring you my humble thanks for all your noble favours; and I hope you will believe a dying man, I have as much love as honour for you, and I will bend my feeble knees to the God of Heaven, that you, my dear lady, and your children, may be blessed with external and eternal happiness, and that the same blessing may fall upon Lady Sunderland and her relations.

“Dear Sir, let your dying Chaplain recommend this truth to you and your family, that no happiness or solid comfort can be found in this vale of tears, like living a pious life; and pray ever remember this rule, never do anything upon which you dare not first ask the blessing of God upon the success thereof.

“Sir, I have made bold in my will with your name for executor, and I hope you will not take it ill. I have joined two others with you, who will take from you the trouble. Your favourable aspect, will I know, be a great comfort to my distressed orphans. I am not desirous that they should be great, but good; and my next request is that they be brought up in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

“Sir, I thank God I am contented to shake hands with all the world; and have many comfortable assurances that God will accept me through His Son. I find the goodness of God greater than I ever thought or imagined: and I wish from my soul that it were not so much abused and contemned. I desire, Sir. that you will be pleased to make choice of a humble pious man, to succeed me in my parsonage; and could I see your face before my departure hence, I would inform you in what manner I think he may live comfortable amongst his people, which would be some satisfaction to me before I die.

“Dear Sir, I beg the prayers of all about you that I may not be daunted at the powers of hell; and that I may have dying graces: with tears I beg that when you are praying for fatherless orphans, you will remember my two pretty babes.

“Pardon the rude style of this paper, and be pleased to believe that I am, Dear Sir, &c.

“WILLIAM MOMPESON.”

“In the whole range of literature,” say William and Mary Howitt, "we know of nothing more pathetic than these letters;" alluding to another, besides these two, dated Eyam, Nov. 20, 1666, which will be found hereafter.

It is singular indeed, that Mompesson enjoyed such remarkable good health during the whole time of the calamitous visitation; he, in the language of the poet,

"Drew like Marseilles' good bishop, purer breath,
When Nature sickened, and each gale was death."

From house to house he went, and prayed with the dying victims:—

"Beside the bed where parting life was laid,
And sorrow, guilt, pain, by turns dismayed,
The reverend champion stood." GOLDSMITH.

From the interment of Mrs. Mompesson (August the twenty-fifth) to the end of the month, although four-fifths of the population were swept away, the pestilence raged with unabated fury. On the twenty-sixth of this terrible month, Marshall Howe, who had been daily employed in hurrying the dead to their unhallowed graves, was doomed to experience a loss equal in his own estimation, to that of his pastor. Joan, his wife, who had often remonstrated with him to desist from his perilous avocation, was seized with the distemper: and the virulence of the attack threatened almost immediate dissolution. Though he had been, for full two months, moving in the whirlwind of death, yet up to this time he had deemed himself invulnerable to the pest; but the infection of his wife brought conviction to his mind, that he had been the means of bringing the disease across his own threshold; and he wept bitterly. The direful symptom appeared on the sun-browned bosom of his beloved Joan; and early on the morning of the twenty-seventh, she breathed her last. Marshall wept aloud over her stiffening limbs; but ere the sun had tipped with gold the orient hills of Eyam, he had wound her up, and carried her in his brawny arms to a neighbouring field, where he dug a grave and buried her silently therein. A sullen sadness overspread his mein, while over her remains he patted the earth with an unusual and unconscious circumspection. Filled with gloomy sensations he returned to his home, but, alas! there he found his only son William, struggling with the pest. Despair "whirled his brain to madness;" he cast himself on a couch and uttered doleful lamentations. William, his beloved son, who had inherited something of his father's iron constitution, wrestled with the horrid and deadly disease until the morning of the third day of his sickness, when he yielded to his direful and mortal antagonist. His disconsolate father bore his warm but lifeless corpse to the grave of his wife, beside which he buried it, while floods of tears bespoke his inconceivable agony. Marshall Howe, however, continued his unenviable office; but the recklessness and levity which he had exhibited, were no longer observable after the bereavement of his wife and son. The terrified and fast dwindling villagers were no longer startled, when he returned from the interment of a victim in the Cussy-dell, by the following observations, which on these occasions he sometimes made:—"Ah! I saw Old Nick grinning on the ivied rock as I dragged such-a-one along the dell!" Marshall Howe was buried April 20th, 1698.

The sixth, twenty-sixth, and the last day of August, were the only days in that awful month on which no one died: while the whole number who perished in the other twenty-eight days were seventy-seven. This number of deaths must be considered really appalling especially when it is taken into estimation that the population of the village on the first of August was considerably under two hundred. The havoc in this month was dreadful beyond all description. The houses eastward, from the middle of the village, were nearly all empty. The inhabitants of the extreme western part of the village, who were at that time very few, shut themselves close up in their houses; nor would they, on any occasion whatever, cross a small rivulet eastward, which runs under the street in that part of Eyam. That portion of the street which crosses this small stream is called to this day "Fiddler's Bridge;" and it is very commonly asserted that the plague never crossed it westward. This assertion is not correct; but as there were but very few inhabitants in that direction, not many deaths could occur. Indeed, those who fled at the breaking out of the disease, were principally if not exclusively, inhabitants of that part, and consequently, there would be but few left. One man, however, is said to have taken the distemper by intending to visit his sister, a widow, who dwelt in the Lydgate, or the eastern part of Eyam, whom he found dead and her habitation empty. Thus, like leaves in Autumn, fell the villagers of Eyam, in that terrible and fatal month, August, 1666.

AUGUST, 1666.

(Names and dates of persons buried.)

George Ashe	Aug. 1	John Hancock	Aug. 7
Mary Nealor	... 1	William Hancock	... 7
John Hadfield	... 2	Abraham Swinnerton	8
Robert Buuton	... 2	Alice Hancock	... 9
Ann Naylor	... 2	Ann Hancock	... 10
Jonathan Naylor	... 2	Frances Frith	... 10
Elizabeth Glover	... 2	Elizabeth Kempe	... 11
Alexander Hadfield	... 3	William Halksworth	... 12
Jane Nealor	... 3	Thomas Kempe	... 12
Godfrey Torre	... 3	Francis Bocking	... 13
John Hancock, jun.	... 3	Richard Bocking	... 13
Elizabeth Hancock	... 3	Mary Bocking	... 13
Margaret Buxton	... 3	John Tricket	... 13
Robert Barkinge	... 3	Ann Tricket (his wife)	13
Margaret Percival	... 4	Mary Whitbey	... 13
Anne Swinnerton	... 4	Sarah Blackwall, Bretton	13
Rebecca Mortin, Shepherds' Flat	... 4	Briget Naylor	... 13
Robert French	... 6	Robert Hadfield	... 14
Richard Thorpe	... 6	Margaret Swinnerton	14
Thomas Frith	... 6	Alice Coyle	... 14
John Yealot	... 7	Thurston Whitbey	... 15
Oner Hancock	... 7	Alice Bocking	... 15
		Briget Talbot	... 15

Michael Kempe	Aug. 15	Frances Frith	Aug. 21
Ann Wilson	... 15	Ruth Mortin	... 21
Thomas Bilston	... 16	— Frith (an infant)	... 22
Thomas Frith	... 17	Lydia Kempe	... 22
Joan French	... 17	Peter Hall, Bretton	... 23
Mary Yealot	... 17	— Mortin (an infant)	24
Sarah Mortin, Shep-		Catherine Mompesson	25
herds' Flat	... 18	Samuel Chapman	... 25
Elizabeth Frith	... 18	Ann Frith	... 25
Ann Yealot	... 18	Joan Howe	... 27
Thomas Ragge	... 18	Thomas Ashmore	... 27
Ann Halksworth	... 19	Thomas Wood	... 28
Joan Ashmore	... 19	William Howe	... 30
Elizabeth Frith	... 20	Mary Abell	... 30
Margaret Mortin	... 20	Catherine Talbot*	... 30
Ann Rowland	... 20	Francis Willson	... 30
Joan Buxton	... 20

SEPTEMBER came with little abatement of the destructiveness of the horrid malady. A dreamy stillness reigned around the nearly desolate village; it was canopied by a dark and deepening gloom, which fancy might imagine to have been formed by the incessant accumulation of sorrowful respirations. The last day of September was one of the few days, during that month, unattended by death. Although the inhabitants, at the beginning of September, were reduced to a very few, still the insatiated pest carried away, as hereafter shewn, twenty-four during that month.

* Of the Talbot family thirteen died.

SEPTEMBER, 1666.

(Names of victims and dates of interments.)

Elizabeth Frith	Sept. 1	Sarah Wilson	Sept. 10
William Percival	... 1	Thomas Mozley	... 16
Robert Tricket	... 2	Joan Wood	... 16
Henry Frith	... 3	Mary Percival	... 18
John Wilson	... 4	Francis Mortin	... 20
Mary Darby	... 4	George Butterworth	... 21
William Abell	... 7	Ann Townsend, Bretton	22
George Frith	... 7	Ann Glover	... 33
Godfrey Ashe	... 8	Ann Hall	... 23
William Halksworth	... 9	Francis Halksworth*	23
Robert Wood	... 9	— Townsend, an infant	29
Humphrey Merril	... 9	Susanna Mortin	... 29

OCTOBER came, the month in which the plague ceased; yet, up to the eleventh, it still carried on the work of destruction, with but little relaxation of fury. On the eleventh of October, 1666, this awful minister of death, after having from the first day of the same month, destroyed fourteen out of about forty-five,—and having carried away full five-sixths of the inhabitants of the village,—was exhausted with excessive slaughter, and in its last conflict, worsted and destroyed.

OCTOBER, 1666.

(Names of those who died, the dates of their burials are only partially given.)

James Parsley	Oct. 1	Abram Mortin	Oct. 5
Grace Mortin	... 2	Thomas Torre	... —
Peter Ashe	... 4	Benjamin Mortin	... —

* The Halksworths lived next house to that where the plague broke out. The third person who died of the plague was a Peter Halksworth.

Elizabeth Mortin	Oct.	—	Mary Mortin	...	—
Alice Teylor	...	—	Samuel Hall	...	—
Ann Parsley	...	—	Peter Hall	...	—
Agnes Sheldon	...	—	Joseph Mortin	...	—

The winter which succeeded the cessation of the pestilence was, by the very few who were left, wholly spent in burning the furniture of the pest houses, and likewise nearly all the bedding and clothing found in the village: reserving scarcely anything to cover their nakedness. The necessary articles of apparel were fumigated and purified; and every means that could be suggested, were taken to prevent the resurrection of the horrid pest. But, the awful dread of this deadly monster, the condition of the village, at the termination of its ravages, will be best shown by giving, after the following letter of Mompesson, a few very popular and authentic traditions of that unspeakable and agonizing time:—

“To John Beilby, Esq.,——, Yorkshire.

“Eyam, Nov. 20, 1666.

“DEAR SIR,—I suppose this letter will seem to you no less than a miracle, that my habitation is inter vivos. I have got these lines transcribed by a friend, being loth to affright you with a letter from my hands. You are sensible of my state, the loss of the kindest wife in the world, whose life was amiable, and end most comfortable. She was in an excellent posture when death came, which fills me with assurance that she is now invested with a crown of righteousness. I find this maxim verified by too sad experience: Bonum magis carendo quam fruendo cernitur. Had I been as thankful as my condition did deserve, I might have had my dearest dear in my bosom. But now farewell all happy days, and God grant that I may repent my sad ingratitude !

“The condition of the place has been so sad, that I persuade myself it did exceed all history and example. Our town has become a Golgotha, the place of a skull ; and had there not been a small remnant left, we had been as Sodom, and like to Gomorrah. My ears never heard such doleful lamentations—my nose never smelled such horrid smells, and my eyes never beheld such ghastly spectacles. There have been 76 families visited within my parish, out of which 259 persons died. Now (blessed be God) all our fears are over, for none have died of the plague since the eleventh of October, and the pest houses have been long empty. I intend (God willing) to spend this week in seeing all woollen clothes fumed and purified, as well for the satisfaction as for the safety of the country. Here have been such burning of goods that the like, I think, was never known. For my part, I have scarcely apparel to shelter my body, having wasted more than I needed merely for example. During this dreadful visitation, I have not had the least symptom of disease, nor had I ever better health. My man had the distemper, and upon the appearance of a tumour I gave him some chemical antidotes, which operated, and after the rising broke, he was very well. My maid continued in health, which was a blessing ; for had she quailed, I should have been ill set to have washed and gotten my provisions. I know I have had your prayers ; and I conclude that the prayers of good people have rescued me from the jaws of death. Certainly I had been in the dust, had not Omnipotence itself been conquered by holy violence.

“I have largely tasted of the goodness of the Creator, and the grim looks of death did never yet affright me. I always had a firm faith that my babes would do well, which made me willing to shake hands with the unkind, froward world ; yet I shall esteem it a mercy if I am frustrated in the hopes

I had of a translation to a better place, and God grant that with patience I may wait for my change, and that I may make a right use of His mercies : as the one hath been tart, so the other hath been sweet and comfortable.

“I perceive by a letter from Mr. Newby, of your concern for my welfare. I make no question but I have your unfeigned love and affection. I assure you that during my troubles you have had a great deal of room in my thoughts. Be pleased, dear Sir, to accept of the presentments of my kind respects, and impart them to your good wife and all my dear relations. I can assure you that a line from your hand will be welcome to your sorrowful and affectionate nephew,

WILLIAM MOMPESON.”*

Thus wrote this affectionate spirit—thus he describes the sufferings of his flock, which sufferings, however, will be further and more fully detailed in the following

TRADITIONS OF THE PLAGUE.

ROWLAND AND EMMOT.

When the plague broke out in the latter end of the summer of 1665, there lived in a humble straw-thatched cottage, a little west of the church, a very happy and contented family, named Sydall : consisting of husband, wife, five daughters, and one son. The father, son, and four daughters took the infection, and died in the space of twenty-five days, in October, 1665 ; leaving the hap-

* In the second volume of Anecdotes, published by W. Seward, Esq., are some letters of Mompesson's ; but the writer not having seen the work, is not aware that the three printed in this work are of the number alluded to.

less mother and one daughter. The mother had now nothing to render her disconsolate case bearable but her only surviving daughter Emmot, a modest and pretty village maiden. Emmot had for some time received the fervent addresses of a youth named Rowland, who resided in Middleton Dale, about a mile south-east of Eyam. He had daily visited her and sympathised with her on the death of her father, brother, and four young sisters. Often had she anxiously remonstrated with him on his visits ; but nothing could deter him from nightly pacing the devoted village, until the death-breathing pest threatened total desolation to the surrounding country, if intercourse were allowed. The happy scene when Rowland and Emmot were to cast their lots together, had been appointed to take place at the ensuing wakes ; and fervently did they pray that the pestilence would cease. The ring, the emblem of endless and unchanging love, had been presented by Rowland to his beloved Emmot ; and by her it was treasured as the certain pledge of his sincerity and affection. Frequently would she retire into her chamber, and bring it forth from its sanctuary and place it on her finger ; while her eyes sparkled with meaning, — while through those bright portals of her mind came forth her thoughts, in language more eloquent than words. Rowland was seen each morn hastening along the dale to his occupation. Light-some where his steps ; his whistling echoed from rock to rock ; and his soul glowed with all the charms of anticipated bliss. Thus this loving pair indulged in dreams of future happiness ; thus they cherished the fond hope of connubial joy, on the very eve of separation !

Towards the end of April, 1666, the lovely Emmot was seized by the terrific pest, and hurried to her grave on the thirtieth of the same month. Rowland heard a brief rumour of the dreadful tidings and his hopes were scattered. The brand of general abhorrence with which he would be marked if he, at that period of the pestilence, attempted to venture into the dreadful village, debarred him from ascertaining the fate of his Emmot. Often, however, would his love and dreadful anxiety urge him to pass the circle of death. But, to bring the pestilence home to his own family, to incur the everlasting infamy of spreading a disease so terrible, with the almost certainty of death on his own part, happily deterred him on each attempt, from entering the poisonous "Upas vale."

On one occasion, indeed, Rowland ascended a hill contiguous to Eyam ; and thence he looked over the silent village for hours. It was sabbath eve ;

"But yet no sabbath sound
Came from the village ; no rejoicing bells
Were heard ; no groups of strolling youths were found,
Nor lovers loitering on the distant fells,
No laugh, no shout of infancy, which tells
Where radiant health and happiness repair ;
But silence, such as with the lifeless dwells,
Fell on his shuddering heart and fixed him there,
Frozen with dreams of death and bodings of despair."

WILLIAM AND MARY HOWITT.

It was some time after the plague had ceased that Rowland summoned up sufficient courage to enter the village, and to learn the fate of his Emmot. Glimmering hope and fearful apprehension alternately possessed his mind, as his faltering steps brought him to the verge of the village. He stood on a little eminence at the eastern entrance of the place, and glanced for a few moments around ; but he saw no smoke ascend from the ivy adorned chimnies,—nothing but the sighing breeze broke the still expanse, and he felt chained to the spot by terror and dismay. At length he ventured into the silent village, but he suddenly stopped, looking as much aghast as if he had seen the portentous inscription which met the eye of Dante when the shade of Virgil led him to the porch of Erebus. He then passed slowly on, gazing intensely on the desolate blank. A noiseless gloom pervaded the lonely street ; no human form appeared, nor sound of life was heard. Filled with unspeakable amazement he looked on each lonely cottage ; a hollow stillness reigned within ; and

“ Horror round

Waved her triumphant wings o'er the untrodden ground.”

WILLIAM AND MARY HOWITT.

Then towards the cot of his Emmot he bent his way. His direful forebodings increased with every step. As he approached the dwelling his heart swelled and beat with painful emotion ; but ere he reached the place a solitary boy appeared and thus the sorrowful tidings told :—“ Ah ! Rowland, thy Emmot’s dead and buried in the Cussy Dell ! ” This sudden disclosure struck Rowland with unutterable grief ; he clung to an adjoining wall, and there stood awhile combating with feelings keen and unspeakable. At the death of Emmot, her mother, frantic with despair, fled to the Cussy Dell, and there dwelt with some fugitive relatives. Rowland after some time, approached the abode of his Emmot ; the once happy place where he had spent so many happy hours. He reached the threshold, over which the grass grew profusely ; the half-open door yielded to his hand, and he entered the silent dwelling filled with unimaginable sensations. On the hearth and floor the grass grew up from every chink ; the tables and chairs stood in their usual places ; the pewter plates and pans were flecked with rust ; and the once sweet warbling linnet lay dead in its cage. Rowland wept as he left the tenantless dwelling ; his dreadful apprehensions were verified ; and until death closed his eyes at a great age, he frequently dropped a tear to the memory of his once lovely Emmot.

MARGARET BLACKWELL.

Some few who had the plague, in Eyam, recovered : one was a Margaret Blackwell. Tradition says that she was about eighteen years of age when she took the distemper, and that her father and whole family, excepting one brother, were dead, at the time of her sickness. Her brother was one morning obliged to go some distance for coals ;—he arose very early, cooked himself some bacon, and started, being certain, in his mind, that he should find his sister dead when he returned. Margaret, almost dying with excessive thirst, got out of bed for something to drink, and finding a small wooden piggin with something in it, which she thought was water, but which was the fat from the bacon which her brother had just cooked, she drank it all off, returned to bed again, and found herself soon after rather better. She, however, had not the least hope of surviving :—

“But nature rallied, and her flame still burn’d—
 Sunk in the socket, glimmer’d and return’d ;
 The golden bowl and silver cord were sound :
 The cistern’s wheel revolved its steady round ;
 Fire—vital fire—evolved the living steam,
 And life’s fine engine pump’d the purple stream.”

FURNESS.

On her brother’s return, he found her, to his great surprise, much better : she eventually recovered, and lived to a good old age. Drinking adventitiously the contents of the wooden piggin, has generally been considered the cause of her unexpected resuscitation.

UNWIN, OF THE TOWNHEAD.

During the time the plague was at its maximum, a few rather audacious circumstances are traditionally recorded. One in particular was, that the services of Marshall Howe were required at a house at the western extremity of the village, where it was stated a man, named Unwin, was dying or just dead of the plague. Very soon the sexton of the plague was on the place, and after digging on the premises a shallow grave, he ascended the chamber where the corpse lay, which he soon had on his back, and was leisurely descending the stone-steps-stairs, when lo! the supposed dead man, in a kind of half smothering rattle in the throat, said: "I want a posset!" Marshall Howe, in high dudgeon disburthened himself and departed. Unwin got a posset and recovered.*

MERRIL, OF HOLLINS-HOUSE.

Towards the latter end of the summer of the dreadful pest, a man of the name of Merrill, of the Hollins-house, Eyam, erected a hut near the summit of Sir William, wherein he dwelt to escape the plague, having only a cock with him, which he had taken for a companion. In this solitary retreat they lived together for about a month, with nothing to cheer them but the wild bee wandering with merry song. Merrill would frequently, during this solitary sojourn, descend to a point of the hill from which he could overlook the fated place; but nothing could he perceive in the distance save the direful havoc of the awful scourge, as exhibited in the increasing number of graves in the fields of the village. One morning, however, his companion, the cock, strutted from a corner of the hut into the heath, and after glancing about, sprang from the ground with flapping wings, nor stopped in its airy course until it arrived at its former residence, Hollins-house. Merrill pondered a day or two over the meaning of his companion's abrupt desertion, and at last he thus soliloquized :—"Noah knew when the dove went forth and returned not again that the waters had subsided, and that the face of the earth was dry." He, therefore, took up the other articles he had brought, and returned to his former residence, where he found his cock. The plague had abated; and Merrill and his cock lived many years together at the Hollins-house after the pestilence had totally ceased.

* Posset is a beverage of boiled milk with bread, intermixed with ale, &c. It is currently believed, from the haste in burying a many who took the plague, that instances may have occurred of some being buried alive.

MORTINS, OF SHEPHERDS' FLAT.

A little west of Eyam, at a house called Shepherds' Hall, or Shepherds' Flat, resided a family named Mortin, who suffered greatly during the plague. This family consisted of husband, wife, and one child; the wife being, at the time the plague broke out so fiercely in 1666, in an advanced state of pregnancy. There was another house very near to Mortin's, inhabited by a widow named Kempe, whose children, after playing with the children of Eyam, brought the infection to the Shepherds' Flat. When the time of Mortin's wife's pregnancy was expired no one would come near to assist in giving birth to her child. She was very ill, and declared that without assistance she should die.

Mortin, in the last extremity of despair, was compelled to assist in the act of parturition. The eldest child was, during, this time shut up in a room, where it screamed incessantly, being almost petrified with fear. Very soon after, both children and mother took the distemper and died, and Mortin buried them successively with his own hands at the end of his habitation. The other family of Kempe's all died; Mortin being then the only human being left at Shepherds' Flat, where he lived in solitude for some years after the plague. A greyhound and four cows were his companions; one of the cows he milked to keep the greyhound and himself. To such an extent did this horrible pest carry on human desolation, that hares, rabbits and other kinds of game multiplied and overran the vicinity of Eyam: Mortin's greyhound could have gone out and brought in a hare in a few minutes, at any time of the day.

AN ADVENTURE DURING THE PLAGUE.

At the period of this dreadful malady, Tideswell, about five miles west of Eyam, was one of the principal market towns in the Peak, and it was frequented on the market days by great numbers from the wide-scattered villages. Those who regularly attended, as well as the inhabitants of the place, were thrown into great consternation by the appalling reports of the pestilence at Eyam; and a watch was appointed at the eastern entrance of Tideswell, to question all who came that way, and to prevent any one from Eyam entering the place on any business whatever. A woman who resided in that part of Eyam called Orchard Bank, was, during the plague, compelled by some pressing exigency to go to the market at Tideswell; knowing, however, that it would be almost impossible to pass the watch if she told whence she came, she therefore had recourse to the following stratagem:—the watch, on her arrival, thus authoritatively addressed her:—“Whence comest thou?” “From Orchard Bank,” she replied. “And where is that?” the watch asked again.” “Why verily,” said the woman, “it is in the land of the living.” The watch, not knowing the place, allowed her to pass; but she had scarcely reached the market when some person knew her, and whence she came. “The plague! the plague! a woman from Eyam! the plague! a woman from Eyam!” immediately resounded from all sides; and the poor creature terrified almost to death, fled as fast as she possibly could. The infuriated multitude followed her some distance out of the market-place, pelting her with stones, mud, sods, and other missiles. She returned to Orchard Bank, Eyam, bruised and otherwise worse for her daring and prevarication.

THE BUBNELL CARTER.

During the plague, a man who lived at Bubnell, near Chatsworth, an ancestor of Mr. W. Howard, Barlow, had either to come to, or pass through, Eyam, with a load of wood, which he was in the habit of carrying from the woods at Chatsworth to the surrounding villages. His neighbours strongly remonstrated with him before his departure, on the impropriety and danger of going near Eyam ; being, however, a fine, robust man, he disregarded their admonitions, and proceeded through Eyam with the wood. The day turned out very wet and boisterous ; and as no one would accompany him to assist in unloading the wood, great delay was thereby occasioned. A severe cold was the result, and shortly after his arrival at home he was attacked with a slight fever. The neighbours having ascertained his route, became alarmed at his indisposition ; they naturally concluded that he had taken the infection, and they were so incensed at his daring and dangerous conduct, that they threatened to shoot him if he attempted to leave his house. A man was appointed to watch and give the alarm if he crossed his own threshold. The consternation of the inhabitants of Bubnell and neighbouring places, excited the notice of the Earl of Devonshire, who had, either at his own request or otherwise, the particulars of the case laid before him. The noble Earl, being anxious that no unnecessary alarm should be created, reasoned with the persons who waited on him from Bubnell, on the impropriety of rashly judging because the man was ill, it was necessarily the plague. He told them to go back, and he would send his doctor at a certain hour the next day to investigate the nature of the man's illness. The interview, either at the suggestion of the Earl, or from the doctor's fear, was appointed to take place across the river Derwent, which is at e m id

to
of y
it s f f r o l
s

L. JEWITT, SC.

flows close by Bubnell. At the appointed time, the doctor took his station on the eastern, and the invalid on the western side of the river. The affrighted neighbours looked on from a distance, while the doctor interrogated the sick man at great length. The doctor at last pronounced him free from the disorder; prescribed him some medicine; and the man, who was much better, soon recovered.*

TALBOTS AND HANCOCKS OF RILEY ; AND RILEY GRAVES.

TALBOTS and HANCOCKS of RILEY, the rapid extinction of whom almost defies description:—these two families were carried off by the plague with horrid dispatch; their brief transition from health to sickness, and from sickness to death, was attended with circumstances perhaps never before experienced.

RILEY GRAVES are about a quarter of a mile eastward of Eyam, on the top or rather on the slope of a hill, the base of which partially terminates in Eyam.† These mountain tumuli are generally known to be the burial places of the Hancock and Talbot families, during the plague. Perhaps there is no place capable of producing such peculiar and serious impressions. These insulated memorials of the hapless sufferers, viewed in conjunction with the surrounding scenery, give a tone to the feelings as pathetic as inexpressible. We feel as if we were holding communion with spirits who murmur a saddening requiem to pleasure and frolicsome gaiety. All seems so hallowed, so over-shadowed, and so deeply imbued with solemnity.

* The doctor's prescription was in the hands of the late Dr. Nicholson, son-in-law of Mr. W. Howard, Barlow.

† Riley or Roylee, is the name of a plot of land, on the top and slope of a hill, adjoining the eastern verge of Eyam.

Those who have visited Riley Grave Stones have unavoidably noticed, about fifty yards from the enclosed cemetery, a small ash tree, standing in a north-east direction of the stones, and it was a few yards south of this tree where once stood the habitation of the Hancocks. There is not the least remains of that dwelling to be seen at this day; the disconsolate mother, after burying her husband and six children, as hereafter described, deserted it; and it was sometime after carried away to repair the neighbouring fences. The house in which the Talbots lived was about two hundred and fifty yards west or rather north-west of that of the Hancocks; the present Riley farm house is built on its site. The road from Manchester to Sheffield passed, in those days, close by this house, and Talbots, being blacksmiths, had a smithy adjoining the house, and close to the road. Besides this occupation they farmed one part of Riley old land, and Hancocks the other. The Talbot family consisted of Richard, his wife, three sons, and three daughters; one son, however, had left Riley, and lived at some distance, before the commencement of the plague in his own family, and therefore escaped. The high and airy situation of Riley, one would imagine, ought to have operated against the distemper ; and being besides a full quarter of a mile from Eyam, the two families were not compelled to have any particular or continued communication with its inhabitants. How or by what means this subtle agent of death found its way to Riley is not now known ; most probably some of the Talbot family brought it from Eyam, as they all perished before the infection, or at least the death, of any one of the Hancocks. The pestilence had raged full ten months in Eyam, before the Talbots of Riley were visited by this dreadful messenger.

On the fifth of July, 1666, died Bridget and Mary, daughters of Richard and Catherine Talbot, of Riley. They were young and beautiful: they had sported with innocence and mirth on the flowery heath only a few days before death came and laid his cold, chilly hand on their lovely bosoms. Often had they roved on the neighbouring moors, with hearts swelling with joy ; they had spent full many a sunny day, in chasing the many-hued butterfly, amidst the busy hum of the wild and toilsome bees ; and then, like two sweet roses bursting into bloom, they were suddenly plucked from their lonely parent bed. These two lovely girls fell victims to the horrid pest in one sad, direful day. Their weeping, and terrified father immediately committed them to the earth beside his mournful home. On the seventh of the same month, he performed the sad but imperative task on Ann, the last of his daughters ; and on the eighteenth, on his wife,

Catherine. Robert, his son, died, and was buried on the twenty-fourth, and on the ensuing day, the father himself died, and was buried, leaving one son, who on the thirtieth died also, and was buried, probably by the Hancocks, on the same day. Thus, from the fifth to thirtieth of July, perished the whole of the household of the fated Talbots, of Riley. They were interred nearly together, close by their habitation; and in the orchard of the present Riley-house, a dilapidated tabular monument, with the following very nearly erased inscription, records their memories:—"Richard Talbot, Catherine, his wife, two sons, and three daughters, buried July, 1666."

The pest now passed on to the habitation of the Hancocks, where the work of death commenced by the infection of John and Elizabeth Hancock. On the third of August, only three days from the death of the last of the Talbots, they both died, and were buried a short distance from their cottage, by the hands of their distracted mother. Although her husband and two other sons survived four days after the first victims, yet tradition insists that the mother of this family buried them herself, altogether unassisted. John, her husband, and two sons, William and Oner, now sickened of this virulent malady. She became frantic; she saw that the whole family were destined to the same fate as the Talbots, and she wrung her hands in bitter despair. During the night of the sixth, Oner died, and her husband a few minutes after, and before morning, William gave his last struggling gasp.

Can imagination conceive anything so appalling as the case of this suffering woman : on the third she buried a son and daughter, and in the night of the following sixth, she closed the eyes of her husband and two other sons. How awful her situation ; being far from any other dwelling ; not a soul to cheer her sinking spirits ; not a being to cast her sorrowing eyes upon, save her two surviving children, whose lamentations were carried afar on the startled morning breeze. Such was the terrible night of the sixth of August, to this woful woman ; often she ran to the door and called out in agony for help ; then turning in again she fell on her knees, and

“ With hands to heaven outspread,
Her frequent, fervent, orisons she said,
In loud response her children’s voices rise,
And midnight’s echo to their prayer replies.”

CHARLEMAGNE.

The beams of the following morning’s sun fell on the shallow graves which she had made for her husband and two sons. Dreading to touch the putrid bodies, she—as she had done by the other—tied a towel to their feet, and dragged them on the ground in succession to their graves. Hapless woman ! surely no greater woe ever crushed a female heart.

The end of two short days, from the seventh to the ninth, saw her again digging another grave among the blooming heath for her daughter Alice. On the morning of the next day, the tenth, Ann, her only child left at home, died and was buried. Thus “each morn that rose,

Her grief redoubled, and renewed her woes.”

CHARLEMAGNE.

A few days after the death of her last daughter, she left her habitation at Riley, and went to her only surviving son, who had been, some years previously, bound an apprentice, in Alsop-fields, Sheffield, with whom she spent the remainder of her sorrowful days. It was this son who erected the tomb and stones to the awful memory of his fated family; and it was one of his descendants, a Mr. Joseph Hancock, who about the year 1750, discovered, “or rather, recovered,” in Sheffield, the art of plating goods.*

The houses on the top part of Stony Middleton are nearly on a level with Riley Graves, divided by two narrow dales. The inhabitants of these houses, according to a very popular tradition, watched with profound awe the mother of the Hancocks, morning after morning, digging the graves for her husband and children. Awful

* Although tradition says all the Hancocks perished, except the mother and the son apprenticed at Sheffield, still it appears from the Register, that there was at least one besides, probably living from home at the fatal time. The discovering or “recovering” the art of plating goods in Sheffield, is said to belong more justly to a late Mr. Thomas Bolsover, of Whiteley Wood, Sheffield, an ancestor of the Mitchell and Silcock families.

and terrible scene! Did they not in imagination hear her audibly exclaim with the holy prophet, "Oh! that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night!"

It has been observed by some writers that Riley, or Riley Graves, was the general burial place of those who died of the plague; this is, however, a mistake: the Talbots and Hancocks only were interred there. The Talbots have never been noticed by any writer. Six head-stones and a tabular tomb record the memories of the Hancocks. The site of the graves was originally on the common or moor, on the verge of which was the dwelling of the Hancocks. That part of the common was afterwards enclosed, and the stones, which lay horizontally and marked precisely the places of the graves, were placed in an upright position, and somewhat nearer together; and are now surrounded by a circular stone fence or wall. The late Thomas Birds, Esq., Eyam, of antiquarian notoriety, caused these memorials to be put in a better state of preservation. It is to be hoped that the present owner of the stones and land will see that these relics are not destroyed nor further disturbed. On the top of the tomb there is the following inscription and quaint rhymes:—

"John Hancock, sen, Buried August 7, 1666.

Remember man
As thou goest by,
As thou art now,
Even once was I;

As I doe now
 So must I lie,
 Remember man
 That thou must die."

On the two sides and two ends of the tomb are the words—"Horam, Nescitis, Orate, Vigilate." On the head-stones the inscriptions are as follows :—

Elizabeth Hancock, Buried Aug. 3, 1666.
 John Hancock, Buried Aug. 3, 1666.
 Oner Hancock, Buried Aug. 7, 1666.
 William Hancock, Buried Aug. 7, 1666.
 Alice Hancock, Buried Aug. 9, 1666.
 Ann Hancock, Buried Aug. 10, 1666.

It is impossible for the tourist to describe his feelings, fully and minutely, when he visits this hallowed and lonely place: he beholds, in the language of Ossian, "green tombs with their rank whistling grass; with their stones and mossy heads;" and his soul becomes suddenly overcharged with grave and solemn emotions. The scenery around these rude and simple monuments of eventful mortality, is highly picturesque; adding greatly to the impressiveness of the sensations which a visit to this place invariably creates. Standing within the sepulchral paling we behold to the left a long range of sable rocks sheltering the ancient villages of Curbar and Calver. Farther on, Chatsworth meets our view, and forms a conspicuous object in the prospect. Proud Masson is seen in the dim distance, holding imperial sway over a thousand lesser hills. To the right we glance on the plain tower of Eyam Church rising above the ivy-adorned cottages in rural magnificence. Still farther on we see the peaks of endless hills, where the winding classic Cressbrook flows,—the Minstrel Newton's Arethuse. Looking behind we see plantations of young trees richly commingled with purple-blooming heather. Such are a few of the most prominent objects viewed from Riley Graves—"The Mountain Tumuli," where heath-bells bloom—where nestling fern and rank grass grow—where lone and still,

"Their green and dewy graves the unconscious sufferers fill."

WILLIAM AND MARY HOWITT.

MEMORIALS OF THE PLAGUE,

PAST AND PRESENT.

Two centuries, in September next, (1865) will have transpired since the commencement of the plague; and as may be expected, many of the stones which told of the calamity of Eyam, have been destroyed. In order that the future inhabitants of Eyam may be enabled to point out to the tourist some of the places where the ashes of the sufferers repose, the places will be here noted where stones have been known to exist; where bones and other human remains have been found; and where the still-existing few memorials may be seen. Besides Riley Graves, already described, Mrs. Mompesson's tomb, and a few other stones in the church-yard, there were in the Cussy Dell about a century ago, two or three grave-stones to the memory of a portion of a family named Ragge ; and the Register mentions four persons of that name who died of the plague. The stones have either been broken or carried away. It was the last of these memorials which is the theme of the short and beautiful poem, entitled "The Tomb of the Valley ;" written some years since by the late Richard Furness. At the Shepherds' Flat some stones existed until very lately, to the memories of the Mortins and Kempes ; two families who perished by the plague, with the solitary exception, as we have before seen, of one individual. These memorials, after having marked for more than a century and a half the precise places where the mortal remains of the sufferers of Shepherds' Flat were interred, have been destroyed by some late barbarian occupants of that secluded place. Bretton, about a mile north of Eyam, was visited by the plague, and many grave-stones or other memorials once recorded the names of those who died. The victims were of the families of Martin, Hall, and Townsend. One of these sufferers was buried in Bretton Clough, and a round stone without any inscription still marks the grave. Behind, or rather at the west end of some dwellings, once known as the Poor-houses, one or two of these stones, which are said to have recorded the deaths of some persons of the name of Whiteley, have been of late demolished. In a field adjoining the back part of the house occupied by Mr. J. Rippon, Eyam, one of these "melancholy tablets of mortality" once existed. That part of Eyam called the Townend was, about one hundred and twenty years back, bestrewed with these calamitous memoranda. Some have served for the flooring of houses and barns ; while others have been broken up for numerous purposes. The house and barn contiguous to the Foresters Arms' Inn was built on a small plot of ground which contained the unconsecrated graves of a whole family at least. The stones which commemorated the untimely fate of these sufferers were sacrilegiously broken when the present building was erected. A piece of waste land at the east end of the village, now forming a part of the Miners Arms' Croft, must, from the number of monumental stones it once contained, have been the general place of interment for many families. Some of these humble tablets were inscribed with a single H. ; probably the initial of Heald : the name of a family of whom many perished. This brief and simple inscription is, however, applicable to two other families, named Hawksworth and Hadfield, who might inter their deceased members in this place. These mournful memorials, with their serious and impressive records, are no longer seen. A want of becoming veneration for the remains of those unparalleled sufferers : an utter absence of proper feeling, marks most peculiarly that degraded being who could be the means of destroying these simple monuments of the greatest moral heroes that ever honoured and dignified mankind ! The inhabitants of Eyam ought to have vied with each other in the preservation of every relic of the eventful fate of the victims of the plague ; the ground in which their ashes are laid, ought to have been for ever undisturbed; and the tablets which told the story of their calamities guarded as much as possible, even from the defacing hand of time. Alas! Alas! such has not been the case; nearly all the humble stones which were laid to perpetuate their memories have been demolished.

“ Ah! There no more
The green graves of the pestilence are seen;
O'er them the plough hath pass'd; and harvests wave,
Where haste and horror flung th' infectious corse.”

ELLIOTT.

“ Yet still the wild flowers o'er their ashes creep.”

FURNESS.

In a field behind the Church, known as Blackwell's Edge-field, there are two stones with the following inscriptions:—“Margaret Teylor, 1666;” “Alies Teylor, 1666.” According to the register Margaret was buried July 14, 1666; and Alies was one of the last who perished by the hand of the pest. Nearly the whole of this family died of the distemper, although there is no mention of any other on the present existing stones.

In a field adjoining Froggatt's factory, there is an old dilapidated tabular tomb, with H. M. inscribed on one end. These letters are the initials of Humphrey Merril, who was buried there on the 9th of September, 1666. In the parson's field, in the Lydgate, Eyam Townend, two grave-stones are laid nearly parallel to each other, containing the following records:—" Here lye buried George Darby, who dyed July 4th, 1666 ;" " Mary, the daughter of George Darby, dyed September 4th, 1666." The house which this family occupied is supposed to have been contiguous to their graves. There is a tradition that this lovely young maiden was extremely beautiful and engaging : that she was frequently seen in the adjoining fields ; that she was suddenly seized by the terrific pest while gathering flowers in the field of her father's sepulchre ; and that she lingered only one short day before she was laid beneath the daisy-sods, beside her father's grave. How sudden the change. Homer's beautiful simile on the death of Euphorbus, may be applied with equal felicity to the fate of this young maiden :—

" As the young olive, in some sylvan scene,
Crown'd by fresh fountains with eternal green,
Lifts the gay head, in snowy flowrets fair,
And plays and dances to the gentle air ;
When lo ! a whirlwind from high heaven invades
The tender plant, and withers all its shades ;
It lies uprooted from its genial bed,
A lovely ruin, now defaced and dead."

A stone once in the possession of the late Mr. John Slinn, Eyam, and now in a cabinet of curiosities at or near Derby, has the following inscription : " Bridget Talbot, Ano. Dom, 1666." She was buried on the fifteenth of August, 1666. The stone was found in a small piece of ground, now forming, as before mentioned, part of the Miners Arms' Croft. A stone lies under the parlour floor of a house opposite the church, now occupied by Mr. P. Furness, it was found in a back room when the house was rebuilt, about forty years ago. It was probably brought there from the garden and used as a flag. It contains an inscription to the memory of a person of the name of Ragg. These calamitous tablets, with those in the church-yard and at Riley, still bear testimony of the plague at Eyam. Many have been destroyed, and probably many more are buried beneath the surface of gardens and fields of the village.

Within the present generation several human skeletons and other remains of the victims of the plague, have been discovered in various parts of the village. In making some alterations in some buildings opposite the school, about thirty-five years ago, three skulls and other bones were found. From the position of the bones, the bodies appeared to have been laid side by side, and what was most particularly observed was, that the skulls were extremely sound and perfect. The jaws of all the skulls had the requisite number of teeth, which were most remarkably sound. On making the new road from the Dale to the Townend, thirty-five years ago, a human skeleton, lying at full length, was found in a garden. It measured nearly six feet, and the teeth, as in the above case, were quite perfect. The skeleton, was supposed to be that of a young man, and the whiteness and soundness of his teeth, were most probably owing to his being at the time of death in the vigour of life. In a cleft of the rocks in the Dale side, some bones were found many years since, by Mr. Samuel Hall, Eyam. There is some probability that these bones were not human. In the Dale, very near the Hanging Flat, some bones were once dug up. In the Register there is this entry :—“ Buried March 3rd, 1774, three scopes and other human bones found in a cavern in Eyam Dale, by a person trying for a lead mine.” Probably they were the remains of some who died of the plague, or otherwise of those families who fled out of the village and erected huts in the Dale. There is no doubt whatever that the remains of the victims of the plague are scattered far and wide in and around the village. By way of concluding this doleful subject, it may be proper to notice a few particulars respecting the still existing difference of opinion concerning the respective merits of Mompesson and Stanley, in the happy influence exercised over the villagers of Eyam, during their awful calamity.

It is insisted by a few, that Stanley exerted himself in mitigating the sufferings of the inhabitants of Eyam during the plague, to a degree equal to that of Mompesson; that the fame of Mompesson has cast an undue shade over the lofty virtues of his pious predecessor; and that, for this and other reasons, the venerable and conscientious Stanley has not had justice done to his memory. Without wishing to detract anything from the merits of Mompesson, it must be confessed that there are grounds for suspecting that Stanley has not had that justice done him which he so deservedly merited. It is lamentable that such should have been the case ; yet it is believed, although there is no particular clue to the motives of the persons by whom his name has been kept back, that it will scarcely admit of doubt. The following extract from Bagshaw's Spiritualibus Pecci, quoted by Calamy, in his Lives of the Nonconformists, sufficiently corroborates what is here advanced :—“ When he (Stanley) could not serve his people publicly, he was helpful to them in private. Some persons yet alive will testify how helpful he was to his people when the pestilence prevailed in Eyam, that he continued with em when, AS IT IS WRITTEN, 259 persons of ripe age and 58 children were cut off thereby. When some who might have been better employed moved the then Noble Earl of Devonshire, Lord Lieutenant, to remove him out of the town, I am told by the creditable that he said, ‘ It was more reasonable that the whole country should in more than words testify their thankfulness to him, who, together with the care of the town, had taken such care AS NO ONE ELSE DID, to prevent the infection of the towns adjacent.’ ”* The well-known veracity of the venerable Apostle of the Peak gives to his testimony the weight of indubitable truth. And it may be here added that the memory of Stanley among the inhabitants of Eyam is, to the present day, greatly revered and deservedly cherished. By some he is invariably designated THE GREAT GOOD MAN. He died at Eyam in the year 1670, "satisfied to the last in the cause of Nonconformity." The house in which he lived was, until it was pulled down, called Stanley's House. Tradition gives to this honourable character all the glowing virtues of the MAN OF ROSS :

* The author, notwithstanding his appeal to some written testimony, is certainly mistaken as to the number who died of the plague.

"And what! no monument, inscription, stone?"

This highly exalted character of Stanley must not be supposed to detract in the least from that of the benevolent Mompesson. No: Mompesson's memory is richly worthy of all the admiration with which it has been honoured. The living of Eyam was presented to him on the death of Shoreland Adams, in 1664; only one year before the first breaking out of the plague. From the following passage in his letter to his uncle, J. Beilby, Esq., —, Yorkshire, he appears to have been dissatisfied with his situation at Eyam:—"Had I been so thankful as my situation did deserve, I might have had my dearest dear in my bosom—God grant that I may repent my sad ingratitude!"—He seems, however, to have known with Seneca, that "Virtue is that perfect good, which is the complement of a happy life; the only immortal thing that belongs to mortality." His virtue was not contemplative, but active: and it must be remembered that this divine property is never so glorious as when exhibited in extremities. What a sublime sentiment he gave to the world in the following words in his letter to Sir George Saville: "I am not desirous that they (his children) should be great, but good;" and he then adds, "my next request is, that they may be brought up in the fear and admonition of the Lord." When he considered himself on the verge of eternity, he thus in the purest spirit of philanthropy, addresses his patron:—"I desire, Sir, that you will make choice of a humble, pious man to succeed me in my parsonage; and could I see your face before my departure hence, I would inform you in which manner I think he may live comfortably amongst his people, which would be some satisfaction to me before I die." In another part he says:—"Never do anything upon which you dare not first ask the blessing of God." Such were the requisitions and holy admonitions of this admirable minister of Christ. His high sense of duty was made strikingly manifest on the following occasion: the Deanery of Lincoln was generously offered him; but he humbly declined accepting it, in favour of Dr. Fuller, whom he sincerely esteemed.* How noble! how disinterested! was this Christian-like act of friendship. He, however in addition to the Rectory of Eakring, accepted the Prebends of York and Southwell. He married for his second wife, Mrs. Newby, relict of Charles Newby, Esq., who bore him two daughters.

*This Dr. Fuller is often erroneously confounded with Dr. Fuller, author of "The British Worthies."

He died at Eakring, the 7th of March, 1708, in the seventieth year of his age. A brass plate, marks the place in the church at Eakring where his ashes repose.*

Of this man, Miss Seward thus emphatically observes : —“ His memory ought never to die ! it should be immortal as the spirit that made it worthy to live.”

And is it not gratifying to the villagers of Eyam, to know that the place of their humble residence has been honoured by the deeds of such a disinterested, benevolent, and exalted character as Mompesson? The conduct of this ever-to-be-admired man was a pure emanation from the heart of a Christian in spirit and in truth. And while France glories in the name of the good Bishop of Marseilles, while Milan sounds the praises of Cardinal Bonower, England shall exult in her transcendant rival—Mompesson, the village pastor of Eyam.

Much and indefatigable research has been made to trace the ancestors and descendants of this worthy and dignified character ; but not with requisite and desired success. The name—Mompesson—is French, and there is a great probability that the Mompessons came over with the Norman Conqueror, and settled in Wiltshire. Robert Mompesson, of Bathampton, Wiltshire, married

* In the Chancel of the Church at Eakring, Nottinghamshire, on a brass shield, is the following inscription : “ Reliquia Guilielmi Mompesson Ecc. B. Virg. de Southwell canonica et hujus Excelsiæ per Ano 38 Rectoris dignanissimi obiit 7 die Martii 1708 Ætatis 70. In Spem Beato Resurrectionis.”

Alice the heiress of William Godwin; and John Mompesson his only son, was sheriff of Wiltshire in the 18th of Edward the Fourth. This John had seven sons. Drewe, Robert, John, Thomas, Henry, William, and Samuel. Richard, the son of Drewe, had five sons, John, Vincent, Edward, William, and Christopher, four of whom married and had a numerous progeny; whose descendants, according to Sir Richard Colt Hoare's Wiltshire, were dispersed over the west of England. In 1607, a Sir Thomas Mompesson was one of the commissioners of the privy seal; and, other members of this family held important offices in the reigns of James the First and the First and Second Charles, John Mompesson of Bathampton, was sheriff, 24th of Henry the Seventh; and his son Edmund, 32nd of Henry the Eighth. The pedigree of the Bathampton Mompessons, as given by Sir Richard Colt Hoare does not come down to the time when Mompesson, Rector of Eyam was born, in 1637 or 1638. It gives dates of births and deaths in 1599, 1601, 1612, 1623, and 1635, but none more recent. From some branch of the Bathampton Mompessons, sprang William Mompesson, whose immortal memory ought to be cherished to the end of time. Of the descendants of this great man, very little is known. In Miller's "History of Doncaster," his son George Mompesson, is mentioned as witness to an indenture, connected with the establishment of a library, in 1736, at Doncaster church, The said George Mompesson was Rector of Barnborough, Yorkshire; he married Alice, daughter of John Broomhead, schoolmaster of Laughton-en-le-Morthen. She is buried in Barnborough church; and a Latin inscription distinguishes her grave: she died on the 16th of October, 1716, aged forty-seven years.

Alice Mompesson's monumental inscription, Barnborough church:—

H. S. E.

Alicia

uxor charissima Georgii Mompesson

rectoris hujus ecclesiæ:

prudens plane fœmina

juxta ac pia;

æternitati matura.

Effare

inctum istius diei memorabilem, quo, procedente funere, longævus parens octogenario major

maritus, undecim liberi

(Omnes quos pepererat) certatim plangebant obsequentissimam filiam, fidissimam conjugem,

æquissimam matrem

Obiit 16 Octob. Anno æt. 47

ac conjugii 27: Dm 1716.

Another inscription records the death of John, the son of George and Alice Mompesson, Rector of Hassingham; he died on the 2nd of January, 1722, aged thirty-two years. William, another son of George and Alice Mompesson, was vicar of Mansfield, from whom is descended George Mompesson Heathcote, Esq., of Newbold, near Chesterfield.* Catherine, the beloved wife of Mompesson, was the daughter of Ralph Carr, Esq., of Cocken, Durham, which family was lately, or is now, represented by William Standish Carr, Esq., of Cocken, and Dewsbury.

“In the summer of 1757,” writes Miss Seward, “five cottagers were digging on the heathy mountain above Eyam, which was the place of graves after the churchyard became too narrow a repository. The men came to something which had the appearance of having once been linen. Conscious of their situation, they instantly buried it again. In a few days, they all sickened of a putrid fever, and three of the five died. The disorder was contagious and proved mortal to numbers of the inhabitants. My father, who was the Canon of Lichfield, resided in that city with his family, at the period when the subtle, unextinguished, though much-abated power of the most dreadful of all diseases awakened from the dust, in which it had slumbered ninety-one years.” Notwithstanding this authority, there could not have happened such a circumstance without other corroborative evidence. Tradition knows nothing of the matter, and the mortality of that year was only ordinary. Miss

*The arms of the Bathampton Mompessons are “Argent a Lion rampant sable charged on the shoulder with a martlet of the field. Crest, a jug or with a string azure, tasselled of the first.” Motto, “Ma joy en dieu senlement.”—For a more particular account of the pedigree of Mompessons, see article by the author, “Reliquary,” vol. iii. No. 13.

Seward was undoubtedly misinformed. In the summer of 1779 a putrid fever prevailed in Eyam, and the following individuals died in a short time of the malignant epidemic: William Baxter, Elias Vicars, Robert Dooley, Elizabeth Unwin, Robert Unwin, Mary Benson, George Bradley, Ann Sheldon, Samuel Brittlebank, Elizabeth Benson, Isaac Benson, Thomas Bradshaw, George Chapman, Mary Wyatt, James Mortin, Ann Timperley, and Ann Rowbotham. Those who died swelled in the neck and groin; and the villagers apprehended that the ghost of the plague had risen from the dust. On this occasion, the desolation of Eyam, in 1666, was the theme of the whole village. It is singular that even to this day, the villagers express their disapprobation of one another in the following phrases: "The plague on thee!" "The plague take thee!" etc.

That the surrounding country was greatly alarmed at the devastation of the pest at Eyam, the following accounts are sufficient evidence:—

Mompesson left Eyam in 1669, three years after the plague; but the horror which it had disseminated, extended even to Eakring, in Nottinghamshire, up to the very time of his leaving Eyam for the living of that place. This benefice was presented to him by his friend and patron, Sir George Saville. On his going to take possession of the living of Eakring, the inhabitants refused him admission into the village, in consequence of their terrors of "the cloud and whirlwind of death," in which he had walked. A small house or hut was, therefore, erected for him in Rufford Park, where he resided in seclusion until their fears died away. Such was the horror of that desolating infection ; such were the dreadful impressions which it created even in more distant places. In the accounts of the constables of Sheffield, there is the following item :—“ Charges about keeping people from Fullwood Spring (ten miles from Eyam) at the time the plague was at Eyam.” Fuel was an article which the inhabitants had to encounter great difficulties in obtaining ; those who fetched it from the coal-pits had to make circuitous routes, and represent themselves as coming from other places. One man on his journey unthinkingly let it slip that he came from Eyam, on which he was greatly abused and driven back with his horses unladen.

The following highly interesting Will and Inventory of the Goods of Rowland Mower, of Eyam, is copied from the original, now in the possession of Thomas Fentem, Esq., Eyam. The will was made during the time when that awful visitation, the Plague, which desolated the entire village, was raging, and was even in the very house of the testator. The testator was carried off by the pestilence, and so was his son, and their burials are recorded in July, 1666.

On referring to the list of burials it appears that no less than seven of the persons named in the will are recorded as having died of the plague. These are Rowland Mower, the testator ; Rowland Mower, his son ; John Torre ; Francis Bockigne ; James Mower ; Thomas Wragg; and Willam Abell. The Inventory was attested at Chesterfield, April 24th, 1670.

THE WILL.

IN THE NAME OF GOD AMEN. The sixe & twentieth day of June Anō dnj 1666 I Rowland Mower of Eyam in the county of Darby, Cooper, beinge of good & pfect memory and vnderstandinge. (blessed be God for it) but consideringe God Almighty's heavy visitation vpon this Towne of Eyam, & vpon my owne Family at this psent: Doe make & ordaine this my last will & Testam^t in maner & forme following: viz^t First & principally I doe bequeath & resigne vp my soule into the hands of Almighty God: hopeing through the merits of Jesus Christ my Saviour & Redeemer to inherit eternall life: And my body to the earth: when it shall please the Lord to call me hence: to be interred accordinge to the discretion of my friends: And as for such Worldly Estate as well Real as Psonall as it hath pleased the Lord to endowe me withall, I doe give, bequeath & dispose thereof as followeth. viz^t Inpr. I doe give & bequeath vnto John Torre of Eyam aforesayd my brother in Law the sume of tenne shillings of Lawful English money: Item. I doe give & bequeath vnto Robt. Masland my naturall brother tweluepence: Item. I doe give & bequeath vnto Elizabeth the wife of Henry Clarke my naturall Sister the sume of tenne shillings of like lawfull English money: Ite. I doe give, bequeath, & leave the sume of fforty shillings of like lawful English money, to be putt forth shortly after my decease, into safe hands for the use & behalfe of the poore of the towne of Eyam: And the yearly Interest & Pfit therof to be distributed at the Feast of the Nativity of our Lord yearly to the most necessitous poore of Eyam towne accordinge te the discretion of the Minister & Overseer of the poore of Eyam aforesayd for ever. Ite. I doe give & bequeath vnto Thomas Bockinge, Robert Bockinge & Edyth Bockinge the children of Francis Bockinge of Eyam aforesayd each of them ffive shillings. Ite. I doe give & bequeath vnto each of the children of James Mower, Thomas Ragge, & William Abell of Eyam aforesayd twelue pence a piece. Ite. I doe give & bequeath vnto Thomas Stanley of Eyam aforesayd Clerke the sume of fforty shillings of like lawfull English money : Ite. My will & minde is & I doe by these p^esents devise, order, & appoynt That Jane French my Tenant shall have & enjoy the house wherein she now dwelleth, payinge to my heys & Assignes at the Feast of Pentecost the yearly rent of twopence (if it be lawfully demanded) for & duringe the terme of her naturall life. The rest of all my worldly goods & chattels whatsoever moueable and vnmoueable, quicke and dead, together with all my houses lands & Real Estate (my debts Legacies & funeral expenses first payed and discharged). I doe give, bequeath, & leave vnto Elizabeth my beloved wife, & Rowland my naturall son, & to the longer liuer of them two : That is to say : If it Please the Lord to take away my sayd son Rowland, & my wife to live : Then my will & minde is that she shall haue & enjoy not only my goods & chattels but alsoe all my houses & lands for & duringe the terme of her naturall Life : And if she be now with childe then I doe leave & appoynt the sayd childe, be it son or daughter, to be my lawfull heyre to all my Real estate : And if she bringe forth a man-childe & both it & my son Rowland doe live : Then I doe leave & appoynt them to be co-heys to all my houses & lands : And my sayd wife to have the moity or one halfe thereof duringe her life as aforesayd : And my sayd son or sons to enter vpon & have the other moity or halfe thereof, when he or they shall accomplish his or their age or ages of one & twenty yeares : But if my sayd wife depart this life & leave behinde her any Issue by me, vnder the age of one & twenty yeares : Then I doe hereby nominate & appoynt

Henry Clarke my brother in Law, & Elizabeth his wife my naturall Sister, Guardians over & for such my Issue to manage my Estate for their Education, till they come to age. But if it shall please the Lord to take away both my sayd son Rowland, & my sayd wife without any of my Issue left behinde her: Then my will & minde is, & I doe hereby give, bequeath & dispose of all my worldly Estate both Reall & Psonall (besides the Legacies afore bequeathed) as followeth. That is to say. Inpr. I doe give & bequeath the sume of sixe pounds, over & besides the afore bequeathed sume of fforty shillings (that is to say, eight pounds in the whole) to be putt forth shortly after the longer liver of my sayd wife and son by my heyr's Execut^{es} & Assignes to be employed, improved & distributed to & for the poore of the towne of Eyam, accordinge as is before herein mentioned & expressed for ever. Ite. I doe give & bequeath vnto George Cowper my true & lawfull Apprentice the sume of Four pounds beinge the sume which his father Abraham Cowper gave me with him to be returned to him together with his indentures for his best Advantage frome & after the decease of my sayd wife & son. Ite. I do give & bequeath unto Hannah Cocker my Niece the Tenant-right of my house with the Appt^{nces} in Froggatt. Ite. I doe give & bequeath vnto John Torre my brother in Law aforesayd all my cowper-wares wood & tooles whatsoever: And alsoe all that my Close or pcel of land enclosed, comonly called & knowne by the name of Shinging-cliffe in Eyam aforesayd, for & during only the terme of the naturall life of him the sayd John Torre: And the rest of all my worldly Estate as well Reall as Psonall together with the Reversion, Inheritance & Remainder of the sayd close called Shinging-cliffe I doe give bequeath & leave vnto my naturall Sister Elizabeth Clarke aforenamed, for and duringe the terme of her naturall life: And afterwards vnto Jonathan Cocker, George & John Clarke her three sons equally amongst them, & their heyr's for ever.

And lastly I doe nominate & appoynt Elizabeth my sayd wife & Henry Clarke my brother in Law Joyntly & Severally Executes of this my last will & Testam. to Pforme all things herein mentioned to my intente : And I doe hereby revoke & make void all former wills : And this only to be my last Will & Testam. In witness I have putt my hand & Seale y^e day & yeare first above written.

ROWLAND MOWER

his X marke.

Sealed, signed & delivered in the presence of us

Tho: Stanley,

Jo: Stanley,

William Ainsworth.

THE INVENTORY.

A full & true Inventory of all the Goods & Chattles Moveable & Unmoveable, Quick & Dead of Rowland Mower of Eyam in the County of Derby, Cooper, Deceased the 29th day of July, 1666.

	£	s.	d.
His Purse & aparell	5	0	0
Two Horses	2	10	0
Two Cows & heyfer	5	0	0
Five Sheep	1	0	0
Cooper Wood made & unmade	22	8	6
Corne & hay	3	0	0
Cart & Husbandry Ware	0	10	0
Pewter & Brass	2	0	0
Table, Cubbard & 2 Buffet forms	2	0	0
Coffers & Chesses	1	0	0
3 pair Bed Stocks	0	13	4
Bed, Clothes & linen	3	0	0
A selting Cinnell with looms tubs & Rits	0	13	4

	£	s.	d.
Chairs, Stooles & Cusheons	0	12	0
Dish bord a Dish Cradle & dishes ...	0	5	0
Hand Iron, toasting do., pair of Rackets & tongs	0	5	4
For anything forgotten	0	2	6
	<hr/>
	£50	0	0
	<hr/>

Praysers Names. { GODFREY TORR,
NICHOLAS DANIEL,
JAMES MOWER.

Of the number who perished at Eyam by the hand of this direful plague, there are different accounts. The Register, which is undoubtedly as correct as can be expected from the confusion of the time, states the number of victims to be 259; while there is another account as follows: "259 of ripe age, and 58 children."* This account is incorrect. The Register account contains children. Mompesson in his letter of Nov. 20, 1666, mentions the number of families infected as being 76, and the number of deaths 259. The population of Eyam at the breaking out of the plague would be probably about 350 or perhaps a few more. 259 deducted from 350 would leave 91. But some fled at the commencement of the distemper. The Bradshaws, the then most wealthy family in the village, left it with precipitation, and only occasionally, if ever came back. A family of the name of Furness, took refuge at Farns-

* De Spiritualibus Pecci.

ley, or Foundley, a farm-house, about a mile from Eyam. The Sheldons, a family of some substance, went to a farm of their own at Hazleford, two miles from Eyam.* A man of the name of Merrill, as before noticed, who lived at the Hollins-house, Eyam, built a hut on Eyam Moor, and resided therein until the plague abated. A hut was built a little beyond Riley by a family named Cotes, who dwelt there during that terrible time. The little dale that runs up to Foundley was nearly full of huts, built under the projecting rocks. There were others in the Cussy Dell; and on various parts of the moor, the remains of these fugitive residences are recollected. Mompesson's children were sent away, and a few others, undoubtedly, who would not return for some time after the plague. Hence we may conclude that there would be but very few left of those who tarried within the precincts of the village; indeed, it is a very current tradition, that in case of a death, two dozen funeral cakes, were, for some years subsequent to the plague, sufficient for the whole village, inclusive of the few distant relatives of the deceased. And it may be here added, that all the desolating traces of that destructive malady, there is none which, to the present day, has been more generally talked of, than that the main street, from one end to the other, was grown over with grass; and it is said, that kingcups and other flowers grew in the very middle of the road. This, however, one would imagine, could hardly be the case in 1666; but more probably in 1667, and a few succeeding years. That the village was almost desolate there is no doubt; and in the following sublime language of Ossian, it may be said:—"There the thistle shook its lonely head: the moss whistled to the wind. The fox looked out from the windows, the rank grass of the wall waved round its head."

* The Sheldons on taking refuge at Hazleford, took some ducks with them from Eyam. These domestic animals having no instinctive knowledge of the plague, wandered back to Eyam, crossing a moor three miles in extent.

Monthly summary of burials during the plague:—

1665	September	6
"	October	23
"	November	7
"	December	9
"	January	5
"	February	8
1865-6	March	6
1666	April	9
"	May	4
"	June	19
"	July	56
"	August	77
"	September	24
"	October	14

267

The number of these suffering victims is 267; but as Mompesson states the precise number of the all-glorious self-martyrs to be 259, it is thought that eight out of the 267 died during the plague, but not of the plague. Tradition mentions this to be the case in two or three instances. The Register gives no date from the fifth to the fifteenth of October; therefore it cannot be ascertained which of the two or three last mentioned deaths occurred on the eleventh of October : the date of the last death of the plague. There appears to have been, from the fifteenth to the last of October, six deaths out of the small remnant left ; but the authority of Mompesson, for the cessation of the pestilence on the eleventh of October, must be conclusive and satisfactory.

In the year 1766, the Rev. Thomas Seward preached a centenary sermon in the church of Eyam, in commemoration of the plague. The sermon was written with great descriptive power : it drew forth abundant tears from the sobbing auditors. It is hoped that in the year 1866, a second, or bicentenary sermon will be preached at the same place and on the same event.

Little notice must be taken of the several causes which the few survivors believed had brought down the plague on the village as a judgment. At the wakes, preceding the first appearance of the pest, some few wanton youths are said to have driven a young cow into the church during divine service ; and to this profane act that dreadful visitation was, by some, ascribed. This with other presumed causes of the awful scourge, must be considered fanciful. The great omniscient Disposer of events, in his wisdom permitted it ; and we poor worms of creation must not pretend to know for what wise end it was intended; nor must we more presumptuously attempt “To teach eternal wisdom how to rule.”—POPE. *

Ought not a monument to have been erected by the nation, to the memory of all those who fell victims, and a liberal national annuity to have been granted to each of the heroic survivors?†

* Two catholic priests, Thomas Ludlam, of Whirlow, and Nicholas Garlick, of Glossop, taken prisoners at Padley Hall, in the reign of Elizabeth, were it is said, much reviled on passing through Eyam to Derby, when one or both should have made some remark, which bigotry has construed into a prediction of the plague.

† A monument was erected in 1802, in commemoration of the meritorious deaths of 150 priests, and a great number of medical men, who, during the plague at Marseilles, in 1720, lost their lives in preventing the pestilence from spreading. Among other matters on the monument is this inscription: “Hommage au Dey Trauison, qui respecta ce dou qu’un pape (Clements XI.) faisoit au malheur.”

The Church.

T appears that at the time of the compilation of Domesday book there was no church at Eyam; but in all probability one was erected soon after, for it is recorded that A.D. 1284, Williame de Morteyne was owner of the living or benefice, the value of which A.D. 1291, was £13 6s. 8d. In an old deed without date, but witnessed by Serlo de Beleggh (Beeley) who was dead in the early part of the reign of Henry the Third, Eustace de Moretien, Lord of Eium, grants to Richard de Stafforde, for his homage and services, three oxgangs of land with other priviliges “in villa de Eium,” namely one oxgang which Richard, father of the said Richard had held; another which Adam de Hilbourne had held; and another which the grantor had given him of his own demesne to be held by the free service of finding “a lamp burning before the alter of Saint Helen the Virgin in the Church of Eium by the year whilst there should be divine service in the said Church.” This Eustace de Moretien’s son Eustace confirms his father's grants in "Ahium" by deed without date, but also attested by Serlo de Belegb and others. An inquisition taken after the death of William de Morteayne, 12 Ed. 1, mentions his having been possessed of the Manor and Church at Eyam, and tenements at Foulowe (Foolow.)

In 1382, the living belonged to William Lord Furnival; in 1535, to George Earl of Shrewsbury, Sir Patrick Cheney was Rector, and the particulars of the then yearly value of the benefice as follows :

	£	s.	d.
Mansion and Glebe	0	12	0
Tythe, Corn and Hay	4	10	0
Wool and Lamb	6	13	0
Small Tythes	0	6	8
Offerings and Easter Roll	2	4	4
	<hr/>
	14	6	0
Synodals and procurations	0	10	7
	<hr/>
Clear proceeds	15	15	5

A few vestiges of the old Church, built in all probability by one of the Morteynes, only now remain. Some of the relics of the old edifice consist of the garguiles or grotesque figures projecting from the top part of the present tower, almost all the door and window casings, the beadings round the top and bottom of the present tower, and many remnants of a variety of crosses, in the facings of modern erections on the south side. Almost every part of the building is comparatively modern ; the north part is of the reign of Henry the Second ; the south, or front part, of Elizabeth ; the chancel and tower were re-erected about the commencement of the seventeenth century. At the east end of the north aisle, there is a window of the fourteenth century, still containing a few squares of painted glass. The tower is square, nearly sixty feet high, surmounted with a small battlement and four ornamented pinnacles, about five feet in length. Four bells occupy the top part of the tower, where ten might be hung conveniently. They have the following inscriptions :

- 1st. JESVS BEE OVR SPEED. 1619. c. o.
- 2nd. GOD SAVE HJS CHVRCH. 1618. c. o.
- 3rd. JESVS BE OVR SPEDE. 1618. c. o.
- 4th. JESWS BE OVR SPEDE. 1628.

Nearly in the middle of the west side of the tower there is a stone something less than the adjoining stones, with the following letters, and something like the following figures inscribed thereon :—

C·W
T B· W C· T C· P T
C H· I C· I 1615 M B T

This stone, among the Solons of the village, has been the subject of numberless conjectures. The letters are evidently modern in style—not much more than two centuries and a half old ; the probable date of the erection of the tower. They are most probably the initials of the then church-wardens ; this is almost certain from the C. W. at the head of the other letters.*

Notwithstanding the architectural defects of the church, it has, however, one classical ornament that would add to the splendour of some of our magnificent cathedrals. It is the sun-dial, placed immediately over the principal doorway of the church. This complex piece of mathematical ingenuity, which is one of the finest of the kind in the kingdom, was delineated by Mr. Duffin, clerk to — Simpson, Esq., formerly a worthy magistrate, of Stoke Hall, near Eyam. The churchwardens under whose superintendance it was carried out, were Messrs. Froggatt and Mettem, in 1772. The workmanship was executed by the late Mr. William Shore, of Eyam, an ingenious stone-mason, the following is a brief description of its admirable contents, by an able hand at gnomonics :—
“ It is a vertical plane declining west-ward, and from certain mathematical principles connected with conic sections, the parallels of the sun’s declination for every month in the year, and a scale of the sun’s meridian altitude—an azimuthal scale—the points of the compass, and a number of meridians are well delineated on the plane from the stereographic projection of the sphere.

“ The plane being large, the horary scale is well divided ; the upper, or fiducial edge of the style is of brass and an indentation therein representing the centre of the projection, casts the light or shade of its point on the hyperbolic curves and other furniture of the dial."

* In the British Magazine for 1832, vol. 2, there is a fac-simile of the inscription.

The interior of the church consists of nave, chancel, and north and south aisles. The erection of three galleries, have lamentably destroyed the original architectural beauty of the church. Eight pointed arches,—three on the north side, three on the south side, and one at each end,—supported by plain, octagonal, and clustered pillars, once adorned the interior of this edifice. Two only now visibly remain. How deplorable that the whims and fancies of some persons should be allowed to destroy the ornaments and designs of our pious and venerable forefathers.

An ancient stone font, lined with lead, still in its wonted place, strongly reminds us of past times. There are also a few relics of catholic times. At the north-east extremity of the north aisle, are the remains of a confessional. An aperture in the wall is still seen, through which, it is said, were whispered the confession of sins: or rather an opening through which the Host was viewed at a distance. From an adjoining wall there projects a half-circular stone with a hollow or cavity in the top, which was once a receptacle for holy water. There are but few monuments or other things of interest in the interior. On one of the wood cross-beams of the roof of the chancel there is a rough carving of a talbot or dog: the crest of the arms of the Earls of Shrewsbury, formerly lords of the Manor of Eyam, and patrons of the benefice or living. Another of these beams contains the letters J. H. S. the initials of Jesus Hominum Salvator. The style or form of the letters is peculiarly antique. The inscription, "J. B., 1595, F. B.," may be seen on the front of what is called the manorial seat: the letters are the initials of John or Joan Bray and Francis Bray; the panels containing these letters, and intervening date, were removed to their present position when the church was new-seated in 1822. These initials are often erroneously said to be those of John Bradshaw and Francis Bradshaw: a family who succeeded to the mansion and part of the estate of the Staffords, who are supposed to be interred in this part of the church. There is no monument, however, of this once influential family, which may be accounted for, by the church having been, in this and other parts, so frequently altered. The Stafford pew or quire was remodelled and repaired by the Bradshaws.

In the chancel there is a mural monument, to the memory of John Wright, gentleman, who was buried January 2nd, 1694; and Elizabeth, his wife, buried August 22nd, 1700. The inscription is surmounted by the family arms. Two others, to the ancestors and other relatives of Athorpe Middleton, Esq., of Dinnington Hall, Yorkshire. One to Ralph Rigby, curate of Eyam twenty-two years, buried April 22nd, 1740.* A brass

* The night of the funeral of this gentleman was attended with the following singular occurrence:—three clergymen, from Yorkshire, returning from the funeral, were lost on the plate, to the memory of A. Hamilton, Rector of Eyam, who was buried October 21st, 1717. The inscription is in Latin. Another brass plate commemorates the memory of Bernard, son of Bernard Wells, who died March 16th, 1648. An alabaster monument of great beauty perpetuates the memory of Mary, daughter of Smithson Green, Esq., Brosterfield, who died in May, 1777. Another, of Carrara marble, a little east of the chancel door, very recently erected, is rich in beauty, taste, and design. The tablet contains the names of the Brightmore family, Stony Middleton, and is surmounted by a recumbent figure of Resignation. This monument was erected by Barbara, wife of Peter Furness, of Stony Middleton, (now Eyam,) the last representative of one branch of the famous Brightmore family, of Whirlow, near Sheffield. She died at Eyam, deservedly esteemed, November 1st, 1861. Underneath the monument, a brass plate contains the dates of her birth and death, and the names of her immediate ancestors.

On the same side of the chancel, another white marble mural monument records the deaths of Helen Rodgers, (one of the daughters of Charles Hargrave, Rector of Eyam,) and her daughter Clarissa Kelly, both died at Demerara,—the former May 26, 1850, the latter, August Eastmoor in a snow, which fell after the setting of the sun. A shepherd found one on the following morning, and with difficulty animation was restored; the other two were dead when found.

21, 1861. The eastward side of the arch, between the chancel and nave, has a small monument to the memory of Colin Watson, grandson of the above Charles Hargrave, he died at Sydney, April 16, 1855, aged 27 years.

In the vestry there is a brass plate to the memories of Charles Hargrave, who died Nov. 18, 1822 ; his son William Charles, who departed this life Nov. 1, 1816 ; and his wife Mary, who died May 9, 1827. A stone in an obscure corner records the death of Joseph Hunt, Rector of Eyam, who was buried Dec. 16, 1709 ; and Ann his wife, buried Dec. 18, 1703. In the manorial pew there is a brass plate to the memory of John Galliard, who died April 29, 1745. On the opposite side of the pillar is another, adorned with a death's head and cross bones, to the memory of John Willson, who died Dec. 21, 1716. On the reading desk there is a plate to the memory of the Rev. Edmund Fletcher, who died Oct. 7, 1745. These, with a few other inscribed slabs on the floor, are all of any interest in the church :

“The unimpressive marks of earthly state
And vain distinction.” WORDSWORTH.

In the floor of the chancel there is a stone inscribed with T. B., the initials of Thomas Birds, of antiquarian notoriety : he died, deeply revered, May 25, 1828.

The national arms ; full length figures of Moses and Aaron, painted in oil in the reign of Queen Anne ; a table of benefactions, the Lord's Prayer, and Apostles'

Creed, are, with the exception of an organ, all the principal ornaments of the interior of this humble churchwarden-mutilated, and whitewash-desecrated edifice.*

It has been often and justly observed, that if a number of persons in succession, had, during the lapse of a few generations past, put their heads together to destroy and ransack a village church, they could not have produced a greater wreck of vandal desecration than the interior of Eyam church presents at the present day. It is, however, some consolation to add that a thorough and complete restoration, interiorly and exteriorly, is at the present moment in more than active contemplation; an estimate of the cost has been named, and above half the sum already subscribed, and before this work comes from the press, the required amount will, no doubt, be forthcoming. The Rev. J. Green merits great praise for his industry and zeal in this worthy undertaking; other influential residents lend a willing hand in furtherance of this object. Thus, then, it may be anticipated that ere long this village will have a church in greater unison with a place of such a far-and-wide acknowledged historical interest. The restoration of the church, A. D.

* August, 1864, was the periodical occasion of be-daubing the interior of the Church, with white and yellow wash, when Moses and Aaron were removed from the places they had occupied over 150 years, to a place in the Bellhouse, as a more fit place for relics of popery. A figure of death with his scythe, at the west end of the nave, suffered ejectionment a many years since.

1865-6, will be a fitting and most appropriate bicentennial commemoration of Eyam's awful calamity—the plague,—in 1665-6; and, no doubt, some portion of the restored interior will be set apart and dedicated to the time-honoured memory of Mompesson.

The Churchyard.

 HIS place of village sepulture, has invariably and deeply excited the notice of tourists.

“ Green is the churchyard, beautiful and green,
Ridge rising gently by the side of ridge :
A heaving surface.” WORDSWORTH.

The towering, leafy, linden trees which encompass this churchyard, were planted at the suggestion of one of the Wright family, Eyam. They have, however, been deemed a nuisance, and one half were felled about thirty years ago, to the great regret of the parishioners in general. Notwithstanding this regard, it must be admitted that the lopping down of every other tree has greatly improved the church as a striking feature in the landscape, besides adding much to the rural beauty of the churchyard.

Among the most prominently interesting objects of this place of village graves is the tomb of Mrs. Mompesson,

“ Where tears have rained, nor yet shall cease to flow.”
WILLIAM AND MARY HOWITT.

1120

1121

1122

1123

1124

1125

1126

1127

1128

1129

1130

1131

1132

1133

1134

The tomb, which is in front of the east end of the Chancel, is somewhat antique in appearance, having at the several corners chamfered stone pillars; the top of the tomb bears this inscription :

Catherina uxor
 Gulielmus Mompesson
 Hvius Ecclesiæ Rect^r
 Filia Randolphi Carr
 Nuper de Cocken in Comitati Dvrelmensis
 Armigeri
 Sepulta Vicessimo
 Quinto die Mansis Augti
 Ano Dni 1666.

On the west-end of the tomb is an hour glass, between two expanded wings, intended to represent the rapid flight of time ; underneath is inscribed—

· CAVE IE
 NESCITAS
 HORAM.

On the other end of the tomb, is a death's head, resting on a plain projecting tablet, below which are the words, nearly obliterated—

MORS MIHI
 LUCRUM.

This tomb has recently been partly restored. Miss Seward mentions its once being encompassed with metal palisading, now believed to be a mistake, for the stone pillars at the corners of the tomb have no indication of such a monumental adjunct.

A little west of Mrs. Mompesson's tomb stands the richly ornamented stone Cross, which has been, and still is, the subject of much conjecture. Of the origin and antiquity of Crosses there are a variety of opinions. This splendid and richly embellished relic of antiquity is about eight feet high, although about a foot of the top of the shaft is broken and lost. A variety of figures are embossed thereon, with many singular symbolical devices. On the arms are figures blowing trumpets, others are holding crosses, one is holding a book, and on the western side of the shaft is a figure representing the Virgin and Child. Runic and Scandinavian knots liberally adorn its sides. In a word it is considered to be the most splendid Cross in England, and it has therefore found a place in the sketch-book of almost every lover of the antique. Rhodes, in the Peak Scenery, states that the top part of this Cross lay in the church-yard, covered with docks and thistles, when Howard, the philanthropist, visited Eyam; and that he caused it to be placed on the dilapidated shaft. This is a mistake: the top part may have been some time from its proper place, but it was before Howard's time. This venerable relic of antiquity was, a few years ago, raised up and placed upon a kind of pedestal for its better preservation and appearance.

Whether this Cross has stood in the church-yard always is very doubtful. Tradition mentions two other places of its former occupation, on the old Manchester and Sheffield road-side, Eyam Edge, and on the open space of ground in the middle of the village, still called "The Cross." Miss Seward, in a letter of reply to Mrs. Blore, of Edensor, Derbyshire, has the following remark respecting this Cross: "It is from this letter that I first learn that it was my beloved father who discovered the curious antique cross, and placed it in the churchyard of that village," Eyam.

On the north side of the churchyard, under the shade of linden trees, stands the very neat and appropriate monument in memory of the late Richard Furness, the poet, his wife, and two of their infant children. The monument was originally erected in memory of his wife, but since his death it has been renewed, elevated, and enclosed with metal palisading. The upper stone, with four polished sides for inscriptions, is surmounted by a wreathed urn, capped with a small piece of wavy stone work, representing a flame,—emblematical of love. On the east side of the stone (intended for inscriptions) is the following from the pen of the poet, in sweet remembrance of his dear wife:

"Love like a pilgrim came
With Hope, and raised this urn
Where Elegy's sad muse
Long lingering shall mourn,—
Shall pour ambrosial dews
T'embalm the virtuous name

Of Frances the wife of Richard Furness, who died Aug. 12, 1844.
Aged 52."

The front, or south side of the monument, contains a record of the birth and death of the poet, and the following stanza, selected from "The Tomb of the Valley," a short poem by the deceased poet :

"Richard Furness, Born at Eyam, August 2nd, 1791, Died at Dore, December 13th, 1857.

"Land of my fathers! how I love to dwell
On all thy scenery! barren as thou art,
Still hast thou genuine charms, or some sweet spell,
That binds thy beauties to my ravished heart;
That spell shall never break, till death's sure dart,
Shall reckless strike this penetrable crust,
And oh! 'tis sweet to think my baser part,
Shall then be mingled with my mountain dust,
Rocks, hills, my monuments to be—no chiselled bust."

After the stanza there is this inscription :—

"This MONUMENT, originally erected by the Poet to the memory of his wife, was elevated and enclosed by numerous attached friends, in order that they might record their high opinion of the genius of the Poet, and the worth of the Man, whose remains rest here."

This churchyard has often and justly been styled poetic ground; "scarcely a stone but has its distich commemorative of the virtues of the deceased, and the sorrows of surviving relatives." The following epitaph to the memory of Dorothy White, a celebrated sick-nurse, is from the pen of Furness :—

"Of honest memory this worthy wife,
In nature's sorrows, smoothed the way to life;
Peace to her ashes! When the labouring earth,
Shall groaning heave her millions into birth,

May she with all the children of her hand,
Receive a portion of the heavenly land."

The following was written by the highly accomplished
Cunningham, Curate of Eyam, from 1772 to 1790.

"Edward, the Son of Thomas and Mary Froggatt, who died Dec. 4, 1779.

Aged 18 Years.

How eloquent the monumental stone,
Where blooming modest virtues prostrate lie ;
Where pure religion from her hallowed throne,
Tells man it is an awful thing to die.
Is happiness thy aim, or death thy fear ?
Learn how their paths with glory may be trod,
From the lamented youth who slumbers here,
Who gave the flower of his days to God."

Near the tomb of Mrs. Mompesson, and close by the chancel door, there is a humble upright stone, with the following quaint inscription :

"Here lieth the body of Anne Sellars, Buried by this stone—who Died on Jan. 15th day, 1731.
Likewise here lise dear Isaac
Sellars, my husband and my right,
Who was buried on that same day come
Seven years, 1738. In seven years
Time there comes a change—
Observe and here you'll see,
On that same day come
Seven years my husband's Laid by me.

(WRITTEN BY ISAAC SELLARS.)"

Close adjoining the south side of the tower, is the burial-place of the Sheldons, Eyam, the maternal ancestors of Thomas Fentem, Esq., Surgeon, Eyam Terrace. Their tombs, under which is the vault, are palied off with metal palisading, very neatly. Affixed to the tower, just over the tombs, is a stone, containing the following lines, partly from Shakspeare's Cymbeline :

“Elizth. Laugher, Ob. Feb. 4th, 1741, Æt. 24.

Fear no more the heat o' th' sun,
 Nor the furious winter's rages,
 Thou thy worldly task hast done,
 Home art gone and ta'en thy wages.
 I weep thee now, but I too must,
 Here end with thee and turn to dust ;
 In Christ may endless union prove,
 The consummation of our love.

Erected by Thos. Sheldon. (Her Lover.)”

The following epitaph, written by him whom it commemorates, will be recognised as a mutilated quotation from a fine passage in Homer's Iliad. The sense is reversed and in every respect spoiled :—

“William Talbot, died April 16, 1817, aged 79 years.

Cold death o'ertook him in his aged years,
 And left no parents unavailing tears ;
Relations now enjoy his worldly store—
 The race forgotten and the name no more.”

“A cemetery,” says Dr. S. T. Hall, in his “Rambles in the Country,” “more indicative of local history and character than this, it would be difficult to find in the whole of England ; and I never read a more interesting chapter of village biography than here; let me quote one of its apt illustrations. It is from an upright stone on the northern side, and furnishes an interesting theme for a whole evening's musing :

‘George Benson
in the Dale Interred here May 17, 1781,
Aged 50,

Mary, his daughter, 18 Sep. 1779, aged 3 years.

Elizabeth, his daughter, 27 Sep. 1779, aged 1 year.

Martha, his daughter, 30 Sep. 1779, aged 3 years.’

How simple and how much in keeping with the spirit and manners of the locality is this good man's distinction from others. ‘George Benson in the Dale interred here,’ and that so soon after his three darlings—two of them twins—all had died within a few days of each other. He had lived on two years, brooding on the loss of his prattling ones, and when spring brought the flowers to the Dale he could bear the unhappy reminiscence no longer, so was taken at last to them in the green churchyard. Peace to the gentle memory of George Benson in the Dale !”

The present existing tombs and stones in this churchyard, afford no particular instances of longevity, such as are sometimes met with in country places. Two may be noticed as verging near a century :

Robert Broomhead, Bretton Clough,
Buried August 9th, 1764, aged 95.

Elizabeth Gregory, of Riley, died May 6, 1770,
Aged 92. She was a widow 50 years.

A head-stone north-east of the church, has this inscription and epitaph :

In memory of Elizabeth and Mary Wood,
Daughters of William and Sarah Wood,
Elizabeth, died April 8th, 1863. Aged 21 years.
Mary, died July 25th, 1864. Aged 27 years.
Deservedly lamented !

Like two young olives in some sylvan scene,
Clad in the loveliest garb of Summer green,
Were these two sisters, whose endearing love
Hath consummation gained in realms above ;
Death's whirlwind came and swept the first away,
Drooping alone the other—could not stay.*

“ All flesh is grass ! ”

On an old tabular tomb north of the church, there is this inscription and remonstrative epitaph :—

“ Here was interred the body of Henry Merrill, of Eyam, who died August 6th, 1753.

My Husband's mind as signified by will,
His brother would make void and not fulfil.
Why doest thou judge thy brother? Why dost Thou set at nought thy brother? We shall
All stand before the judgment seat of Christ.

This —— record of his memory was erected by his surviving wife, Mary Merrill.”

A stone at the east end of the chancel contains the

* Only a few who visit this churchyard will know that these two young females were the only daughters of the author of this work. Their early doom was to him a source of great grief. This inscription and epitaph are given here, anticipatory of the stone being put up before this work appears.

following inscription and snobbish epitaph, the latter is where it should remain,—underneath the green-sward :

“To the memory of John Brushfield, who died March, 1752.

The faults you see in me take care to shun,
Just look at home, there's enough to be done.”

How quiet and serene is this lone churchyard ; how fitting a place for meditation ; how peacefully the dead seem to sleep !

“No titled madmen slumber here,
* * * *

No! these were nature's children, drest
In unpolluted guise,
Who never wandered far from home,
Nor sighed for brighter skies.”

FURNESS.

In this churchyard, as in other places, it was formerly the custom to bury the dead, occasionally, without coffins. On the last occasion a corpse, wrapped around with some textile material, was brought crosswise on the back of a horse, from Grindleford-bridge to Eyam, for interment. The then incumbent declared he would not, from that time, bury anymore without coffins, a circumstance which was deemed by some of his parishioners as trenching, in the matter of expence, on their wonted customs and privileges.—Here may now be seen almost every kind of monument of mortality, from the rude cope-stone to the most fashionable and modern monuments of the day. The churchyard as well as the village are fast losing their Stoke Pogis characteristics. Increase of population and the introduction of different trades, will soon obliterate every trace of the old English village.

An addition to the churchyard of one acre, adjoining the northern part, is only now waiting of fencing, draining, and consecration ; a long and very much needed accommodation.

Rectors.

THE following list of names of Rectors of Eyam, with the respective dates of their resignation or death, is as complete as the parish Register affords, excepting the four first named.

	Died.	Died or resigned	Sus-pended.	Re-signed.
Colyn Richard, Rector.....	1481
Mockson Robert, Chaplain,	1481
Cheney Patrick, Rector.....	1584
Middleton Thomas, do.....	1613
Rev. Robert Talbot,	1630
Rev. Shorland Adams,			1664
Rev. Thomas Stanley,				1662
Rev. Shorland Adams, (again)...	1664
Rev. William Mompesson,				1669
Rev. William Adams or Oldham,		1675
Rev. — Ferns,		1679
Rev. — Carver,
Rev. Joseph Hunt,.....	1709
Rev. — Hawkins,				1711
Rev. Alexander Hamilton,	1717
Rev. Dr. Edmund Finch,	1737
Rev. — Bruce,	1739
Rev. Thomas Seward,	1790
Rev. Charles Hargrave,	1822
Hon. and Rev. Robert Eden, ...				1826
Rev. E. B. Bagshawe,				1862
Rev. J. Green, present rector,...

TALBOT.—The Rev. Robert Talbot, whose name is the first in the oldest Register, was of the family of the Talbots, Earls of Shrewsbury. The Talbots, of Eyam, of whom the last of the name died in 1817, were descended from this Rector, and were consequently of the same aristocratic blood. *

ADAMS.—The Rev. Shorland Adams, was Rector of Eyam, and also of Treeton, in Yorkshire. His numerous and vexatious suits at law with the parishioners of Eyam, rendered him extremely hated; and his conduct at Treeton, where he chiefly resided, was no less disreputable. When the war broke out between King Charles and the Parliament, his intolerance and party spirit became ungovernable; and his furious loyalty assumed such an aspect, that he was regarded with disgust. The measures he took in favour of the royal cause excited the notice of the partizans of the Parliament, and he was seized, deprived of his livings and cast into prison. The charges preferred against him are embodied in a pamphlet, written by one Nicholas Ardron, of Treeton, the only copy of which now known, is in the British Museum. One of the accusations is as follows:—

“Further it is charged against him, that he is a man much given to much trouble and suits at law, as is well known at Eyam, in Derbyshire, where he was Rector, where they tasted this his turbulent spirit; that he gave tythe of lead ore to the King against the Parliament, delivered a man and musket against them, and sent a fat ox to the Earl of Newcastle, as a free gift to maintain the war against the Parliament." He was among the number of gentlemen who compounded for their estates. For a small estate at Woodlathes, near Conisbro', he paid £198, where he resided until the Restoration, when he was reinstated in his livings again. That this clergyman was a disgrace to his order, may be satisfactorily seen from the following extra evidence:—when the Rev. — Fowler, Sheffield, gave up his living for non-conformity, Adams said that "Fowler was a fool, for before he would have lost his on that account, he would have sworn a crow was white." * How striking the contrast between this conforming hypocrite and the virtuous non-conformist, Stanley. Adams died April 11, 1664 and was buried in the chancel of the church at Treeton. where a Latin epitaph commemorates his loyalty, virtues, and sufferings. †

* This Robert Talbot was supposed for a time to be the great link wanting in the chain of evidence of one portion or party of the claimants of the estates &c., of the late Earl of Shrewsbury. Vide Article by the Author of this work Vol. 5, No. 19, Reliquary.—“Talbots of Eyam.”

* Vide Hunter's History of Hallamshire.

† Hic jacet Shorland Adams, ecclesiæ hujus de Treeton una et de Eyam in Com. Derb. Rector: qui ex ambobus rectoriis VI et armis amatus, et alia multa ab solam erga regem C. I. fidelitatem immobilem perpessus tandemque in pristina jura resauranto jam D. G. Rege C. II. e postliminio rediente anno abhine IV, in pace Domini placide occubuit, Apr. die XI. A. D. MDCLXIV.

Ps. vii. ii. Deo vindice justii.

STANLEY.—The Rev. Thomas Stanley, whose memory is still cherished in Eyam and its vicinity, with a degree of adoration which rarely falls to the lot of any public man, was translated to the living of Eyam in the year 1644, immediately after the arrest of Shorland Adams, the bona fide Rector. He continued in his office, beloved and respected, until Bartholemew day, 1662. It was in the capacity of curate, however, that he officiated from 1660 to 1662,—Shorland Adams, having obtained possession of his livings at the Restoration, in 1660. After enduring, for a few years, the sneers and bickerings of a few bitter enemies, Stanley laid his head on the pillow of death, encircled with a halo of consolation, arising from an uncorrupted heart and an unviolated conscience.

“Dying he
Deposited upon that unknow shore—
Eternity—images and precious thoughts
That perish not—that cannot die.”—WORDSWORTH.

Stanley was buried at Eyam, where he died, August, 1670, During the time of this holy man's ministry at Eyam, he performed the part of lawyer in the making of wills, and in numerous other matters. In his handwriting there are still extant numerous testamentary documents, and his signature is attached to many important deeds of conveyance, all tending to prove his high esteem, his honour and unimpeachable probity.*

* John Stanley, whose name occurs so often in documents in the time of Thomas Stanley, was his brother, an attorney.

He was supported by the voluntary contributions of two-thirds of the parishioners.*

HUNT.—The Rev. Joseph Hunt has rendered his name somewhat particular, by an ill-judged, and disgraceful act during his ministry at Eyam. A party of miners had assembled at the Miners Arms' Inn, Eyam, the house now occupied by Mr. William Marples, it was then kept by a Matthew Ferns, and an infant child of his being suddenly taken ill, the Rector, Hunt, was sent for to baptize it immediately. Having performed the ceremony, he was invited to sit and regale himself with the boozing bacchanalians—the miners. This, it appears he did until he was inebriated. The landlord had a very handsome daughter, about eighteen, and Hunt inspired by Sir John Barlycorn, began to speak out in commendation of her charms. From one thing to another, it was at last agreed that Hunt should marry her; and the miners, not willing to trust him to fulfil his engagement another time, insisted that the ceremony should take place there and then. To this, after taking another glass or more, he unfortunately consented. The Common Prayer Book was brought out, and one of the miners assuming a solemn aspect, read the whole ceremony: Hunt and the happy damsel performing their respective parts. After the affair had spread round the neighbourhood, it at length reached the ears of the Bishop of the Diocese, who threatened to suspend him if he did not fulfil in earnest what he had done in jest. He was therefore obliged to marry Miss Ferns legally. This, however, was not the last of his misfortunes, arising from the affair : he was under promise of marriage to a young lady, near Derby, who immediately commenced an action against him for breach of promise. Some years passed in litigation, which drained his purse, and estranged his friends ; and eventually he had to take shelter in the vestry (which, some say was built for that purpose,) where he resided the remainder of his life, to keep the law-hounds at bay. He died in this humble appendage to the church, where his bones and those of his wife lie buried. He is represented to have been very social ;—the young men of the village visited him in his solitary abode, where they would sit round the fire, telling alternate tales to while away the dreary winter nights.

* The arms of the Stanleys may be seen on a stone over the front entrance of the house occupied by Mr. Britt, of Duckmanton, near Chesterfield, whose family are descendants of the Stanleys.

HAWKINS.—The Rev. — Hawkins, succeeded Hunt, who after a year or two exchanged the living with the Rev. Alexander Hamilton. The discovery of a rich vein of lead ore in Eyam Edge, just after the exchange, induced Hawkins to regret his bargain ; and he unsuccessfully attempted to break his engagement with Hamilton.

HAMILTON.—The Rev. Alexander Hamilton, died, 1717.*

* In the Reliquary, of January 1862, under the head of FINCH.—The Rev. Dr. Edmund Finch, brother to Finch, Earl of Nottingham, uncle and guardian to the daughters and co-heiresses of William Saville, Marquis of Halifax, succeeded Hamilton, as Rector of Eyam. He left the great living of Wigan for the then very rich living of Eyam. During the twenty years he was Rector, he resided but little at Eyam. He gave the handsome service of communion plate, and was otherwise a benefactor.*

BRUCE.—The Rev. — Bruce succeeded Finch. The living was presented to him while he was on the continent. He died of brain fever before reaching Eyam to take possession of the living.

SEWARD.—The Rev. Thomas Seward succeeded Bruce; extracts from Great Longstone Register, there is a notice of the marriage of Alexander Hamilton, Rector of Eyam, to Miss Balguy, of Thornhill, near Hope. On the night after the funeral of Hamilton, a terrible gale of wind tore the lead from the roof of the chancel, where he was interred, which circumstance was attributed by the ignorant portion of the villagers as a judgment, for his not altogether proper conduct as a minister of the gospel; for it is stated that while his curate was officiating in the church during the Sabbath, he frequently passed through the churchyard with dogs, gun, and sundry other proceeds of sportsmen.

* The great-great-grandfather of the author of this work, came with Finch from Wigan, as a servant:—he was a young man; he married, had a family, and died in Eyam. Hence the origin of the author's family in Eyam.

he held the living 51 years. During this period he became Canon of Lichfield, where, in 1772, he went to reside. The Rev. Peter Cunningham was his Curate a many years, at Eyam. Seward was highly accomplished, was author and editor of many works. His daughter, Miss Seward, mentions in her letters a visit she paid to a gentleman of the name of Jebb, at Walton, near Chesterfield, then in the 99th year of his age, who, on the young lady being presented to him, said,— “Madam, I am glad to see you. I remember your father, a sprightly bachelor. I travelled down from London with him, when he went to take possession of the living at Eyam. He was a lovely man, a fine person, frank, and communicative in spirit. Soon after that period, he married a beautiful young lady, your mother, madam. Mr. Seward, as you know, had travelled, and spoke admirably of the customs and manners of foreign nations.”

HARGRAVE.—The Rev. Charles Hargrave succeeded Seward, troubles connected with his mode of obtaining the living harrassed him for years. The matter was at length settled: and after living thirty-two years as pastor, respected, beloved, and deservedly esteemed, he died—

“In a moment,
Like a shadow thrown
Softly and lightly from a passing cloud,
Death fell upon him.”

WORDSWORTH.

EDEN.—The Hon. and Rev. Robert Eden, now Bishop of Bath and Wells, succeeded Hargrave, he resigned the living in 1826.

BAGSHAW.—The Rev. E. B. Bagshaw, the successor of Eden, resigned the living in 1862.

GREEN.—The Rev. John Green, present Rector.

THE LIVING, on account of the mines, varies in its annual amount. One penny for every dish of ore is due to the Rector, and two-pence farthing for every load of hillock-stuff. During some part of the last century the living was worth near £1600 a-year; and of late, its value has greatly increased in consequence of successful mining operations. Should the speculations now in progress to liberate the mines from water, be carried into effect, this benefice may become as valuable again, or even more so. It is now worth near £400 per annum, gross.*

The Rectors, Henry Adams or Oldham, Ferns, and Carver, have had no especial notice, except in the list. Carver was, however, an ancestor of the present Athorpe Middleton, Esq., Leam Hall and Dinnington. The fame of Mompesson can receive no accession in his name being enumerated among the remarks made under the head of Rectors.

* Miss Seward in a letter to Mr. Newton, the Peak Minstrel, dated Lichfield, Dec. 17th, 1786, says: "Thank you for your mineral intelligence, unwelcome as in itself it proves. The value of Eyam living to my father, once near £700 per annum, is not now more than £150." It must be taken into consideration the difference of the value of money near a century back.

The Register.

THE REGISTER contains not many matters worth transcribing. The following are the most particular : “ December 30th, 1663, buried old Anna the traveller, who, according to her own account, was 135 years of age.” * “ Old Robert Slinn, died 26th of November, 1692.” How patriarchal ! How natural this old man’s distinction from his neighbours. “ May 1, 1770, buried Humfrey Beneson and his wife, both in one grave. September 24, 1770, baptized and married on the same day, aged 35, Thomas Longfellow. Buried, 1893, Joseph Beneson, who introduced Methodism into Eyam. William the son of a vagrant born in the village street, baptized 1779. Thomas Carnal, killed by falling from the Torrs, Eyam Dale, 28th Feb., 1686. Samuel Ratcliff, shot in the Highlow woods, by Martin Robinson, of Offerton, 12 Sep., 1689. Elizabeth Trout, starved to death in a snow, on Sir William, Feb. 4, 1692, John White found dead in the Dale, Feb. 18, 1694. William Hibbert, killed by a cart, 10th July, 1729. William Ainsworth, killed in Lytton Dale, 26th Jan., 1736. Martin Furness found dead in a barn, at Farnsley. Hannah Milward, killed from a rock in the Dale, 16th May, 1748. Stephen Broomhead starved to death in a snow, Eyam Moor, 5th Feb., 1748. Edward Mortin, drowned in a well, Eyam Edge, 12th July, 1752. Samuel Blackwell, killed from a rock in the Dale, about 1764, Thomas Brettener, burnt to death in a lime kiln, Eyam Dale, 27th June, 1767. James Blackwell, killed from a horse, about 1768. Joseph Bradshaw, killed by a cart, 12th Oct., 1773. Edward Barton, killed by a quoit, on Eyam Green. Sarah Mills, drowned herself, 21st Aug., 1775. William Furness, drowned in a well, 30th Aug., 1775. John Hadfield, found dead in a field, 30th Dec., 1775. William Beeley, killed by a horse, 16th June, 1780. Joseph Archer, drowned in Middleton Mill Dam, 14th Oct., 1784. Joseph Vernon, drowned in Derwent, 26th Jan., 1785. Mary Hall, Bretton, killed by lightning, 24th May, 1787. George Froggatt, died in a ditch, 8th Sept., 1790. James Ridgeway, Bretton Clough, cut his throat, 14 July,

* This old woman’s statement of her age is perhaps of equal authority to those of (saying nothing of Parr and Jenkins) Francis Consist, living in 1766, in Yorkshire, aged 150 ; Col. Thomas Winsloe in 1766 aged 146 ; Martha Waterhouse, Biesley, Yorkshire, aged 140 ; William Evans, Canarvon, 1782, aged 145 ; Mary Yates, Shropshire, 1776, aged 128 ; James Bowels, Killingworth, 1656, aged 152 ; and about 100 others more than a century old, mentioned in a table of longevity in “ Whitehurst’s Theory of the Earth,” pages 265-6.

1792. Thomas Bagshaw, a child, killed from some steps, 2nd Aug., 1792. Edmund Cocker, died in the church, 1st December, 1796. John Ridgway, killed on the New Road, July, 1802. Edward Dooley, Fiddler, died in Eyam Edge, 30th August, 1802.* Mary Brittlebank, burnt to death, 23rd April, 1804.† Jonathan Fullwood, dropped down dead in the Dale, 11th June, 1807. Mrs. Booth, found dead in bed, —. William Shaw, killed by a bull, about 1810. Robert

* In the Obituary Notice of the Gentleman's Magazine for September, 1802, page 887, there is the following notice:—
 “At Eyam, August 28, 1802, in the County of Derby, Edward Dooley, Miner and Musician. An Oratorio had been intended to be performed at Eyam Church on the following Sunday (the wakes) for his benefit, as he was very poor and infirm. Too much anxiety and exertion in preparing for the occasion hastened his end, which unexpectedly took place the evening before the intended performance. Being in company with some young men, who were rehearsing a Morris dance, which was to be held on the following Monday, in Eyam Edge, a mountain top, near Eyam, he suddenly laid down his fiddle, and expired. The Oratorio was performed the next day for the benefit of his mother, an aged widow, with whom he lived.”—Communicated by Miss Seward.

† “April 28, 1804, aged 22, Mary Brittlebank, of Eyam, in the County of Derby, after returning home from work, at a neighbouring Cotton Mill, she sat down near the fire, and fell asleep, during which, her clothes took fire, and she only survived a few hours.”—Gentleman's Magazine for May, 1804, page 484.—Communicated by Miss Seward.

Brushfield, killed by a cart,——. Mr. Longsdon, found dead in the Magclough, about 1808. John Wildgoose, found dead at the Green Lee Barn, June 26, 1812. George Andrew, drowned himself at Attercliffe, 1817. Thomas Unwin, killed by falling down a coal pit. Old Robert, killed by Farnsworth's cart. Ridge Lee, killed at the lime kilns. George Elliott, killed from a rock in the Dale. William Bennett, killed from a rock in the Dale. Isaac Unwin, hanged himself in Furness' Cote. Thomas Cooper, drowned himself. Joseph Wild, found dead in bed. Thomas Frith, found dead in bed. John Andrew, found dead in the Edge. Joseph Wyatt, butcher, killed from a cart, in Eyam Townend, 1855. Edward Dooley, killed from an omnibus, in Eyam, at an election, 1854." Besides the aforesaid accidental deaths, suicides, and the like, there are some others not particularized in the Register; and also the following circumstances of a much darker dye: Mrs. Pillington, killed by her husband, perhaps 200 years ago. William Wood, barbarously murdered July, 1823, near Whaley, while returning from Manchester. Francis Frith, cut his wife's throat and then his own, March 7th, 1836.

The Lead Mines.

THE MINES.—There is, particularly on the south side of Eyam, strong evidence of much mining in past ages. Indeed, the Eyam Mineral Charter, if existing, would prove the antiquity of the lead mines at Eyam. This village and parish is included under the general denomination of the KING'S FIELD, which is subject to the operation of a peculiar system of mineral law. One clause of the law declares, "that by the custom of the mine it is lawful for all the King's leige subjects to dig, delve, search, subvert, and overturn, all manner of grounds, lands, meadows, closes, pastures, mears, and marshes, for ore mines, of whose inheritance soever they be ; dwelling-houses, orchards, and gardens, excepted." From the inconvenient effects of this sweeping clause many of the old freehold tenures of the parish of Eyam, are exempt according to the supposed charter, granted by King John, previously to his being created Duke of Lancaster. What particular tenures are alluded to no person knows. They are, however, supposed to be those contiguous to the village : or what is denominated the old land. With the exception of a little land at Hucklow, and at Grippe, these decreed tenures at Eyam, are the only lands exempted from the arbitrary mineral laws, observed throughout the comprehensive district of a large part of the Peak of Derbyshire. It may, however, be observed that the benefit of the so called Eyam Mineral Charter has been long forfeited, as the tenures alluded to have been long subjected to the operation of the ordinary mineral laws and usages.

Of the ore obtained from the mine in the whole parish of Eyam, the lot, which is every thirteenth dish, is claimed and taken by the Lords of the Mineral Field. One penny a dish belongs to the Rector; and a small exaction call cope, is paid by the purchaser of the ore to the Barmaster : these, with a trifle paid to the Rector, and the Lords of the Field, for what is provincially called hillock-stuff, are the lots and tithes paid by the mines of Eyam. Tithe of mines is of a predial nature, that is by dish. Smitham and other inferior kinds of ores were formerly supposed to be exempt from duty (lot not cope.) It was, however, decided otherwise in an action at law against the miners of the High Peak in 1750.

The Lords of the Mineral Field of Eyam and Stony Middleton hold a yearly court alternately at Eyam and Stony Middleton. This court is denominated the Great Court Barmoot, at which the steward, Joseph Hall, Esq., Castleton, presides, who with twenty-four jurymen, chosen every year, determine all cases in dispute that occur, respecting the working of the mines in the above district. Other matters, independent of the mines, are also adjusted at these periodical courts, of which the whole expenses are paid by the Lords of the Field. The Barmaster, James Longsdon, Esq., of Little Longstone, has also important offices connected with the mines.

The great vein of ore known as the Edge-side Vein, was discovered more than two centuries back ; but it was not worked in the parish of Eyam until some time after its discovery. In the space of fifty or sixty years, it was cut for more than two miles in length ; but dipping very fast eastward, it at length reached the water, and could no longer be successfully worked. A sough or level, known as the Stoke Sough, was brought up to it from the river Derwent, about 120 years ago, but did not answer general expectation. The quantity of metal obtained from this vein may be judged of, from the fact, that it enhanced the annual income of the Rector from £150 to about £1000 a-year, and this for a long time. Other veins in the vicinity have been very productive ; but nearly all have been long shut up by the same almost irresistible element—water.

About a century back, the Morewood Sough was projected, with a view of more effectually clearing the Edge-side Mines of water. It commences at Stony Middleton, near the neat country villa of the Right Hon. Lord Denman. After carrying it about half-a-mile, the project was suspended for some years ; but the work was at length resumed, for awhile, by James Sorby, Esq., Sheffield, who after some time was obliged, on account of the very great expense, to abandon it. The mines and sough were ultimately bought by a company of gentlemen, principally from Sheffield, who have carried it on with great vigour. The sough or adit has been driven more than five-sixths of the distance. Expectations the most sanguine have been long entertained of the riches of the Edge-side Mines, could the water be carried away by a sough or adit.

By far the oldest lead works are of the rake kind, extending over a large tract of land south of the village. Camden thinks that Derbyshire was alluded to by Pliny, when he says, " In Britain, lead is found near the surface of the earth in such abundance, that a law is made to limit the quantity which shall be gotten."

Of the origin of the laws and customs connected with the working of the lead mines in Eyam and the High Peak in general, there is much room for speculation. Some think that they originated with the aboriginal inhabitants of Derbyshire ; but from a passage in Suetonius, it is inferred that the mineral customs and laws of the aborigines were superseded by others introduced by the Romans. Heineccius countenances the supposition, that private adventurers were afterwards permitted to work the mines, which would be productive of multifarious laws and regulations, and hence their anomalous character. It may be here observed that there is every reason to believe that the High Peak of Derbyshire was a penal settlement during the Heptarchy; that is, persons convicted of certain crimes in any of the seven kingdoms were doomed to be sent to the High Peak of Derbyshire, and there work in the lead mines under the superintendence of certain officers denominated captains: a designation still retained by the superintendents of mines in Cornwall and Derbyshire.

Bole-hills are very numerous around Eyam—they are the places where ore was smelted before the introduction of the cupola.

The mines in Eyam Edge are very deep, and the New Engine Mine is often stated to be the deepest in Derbyshire. Among the number in the Edge is the Hay-cliff; a mine distinguished for having contained in great abundance, that extraordinary phenomenon in the mineral world, provincially called SLICKEN-SIDES. It is a species of Galena; and is well known among mineralogists. This mine once had it in singular quantity and quality. The effects of this mineral are terrific: a blow with a hammer, a stroke or scratch with a miner's pick, is sufficient to blast asunder the massive rocks to which it is found attached. Of the nature of this mineral, and its terrible power, there have been many, but quite unsatisfactory solutions. Whitehurst, in his work on the Formation of the Earth, thus mentions its wonderful power:—"In the year 1738, an explosion took place at the Hay-cliffe mine, Eyam, by the power of Slickensides. Two hundred barrels of materials were blown out at one blast—each barrel containing 350lbs. weight. During the explosion the earth shook as by an earthquake.” A person named Higginbotham once narrowly escaped with life, by incautiously striking this substance in the above mine. Experienced miners can, however, work where it most abounds without much danger. It is also known by the name of CRACKING-WHOLE.

In this mine and many others in Eyam Edge, was sensibly felt the earthquake which destroyed Lisbon, on Saturday, November 1st, 1755. Mr. Francis Mason, an intelligent overseer of the mines in Eyam Edge, at the time of its occurrence, wrote a lengthy and minute account of the circumstance, of which the following is the substance:—he states, “that he was sitting near the shaft about eleven o’clock, a.m., the first of November, 1755, when he felt the shock of an earthquake; it raised him up in his chair, and shook plaster and other things from the roof of the place where he was sitting. He observed a chasm in a field three hundred yards distant: it was in the direction of the vein they were working, and about a hundred-and-fifty yards long. Two miners, sixty fathoms deep in the mine, were terrified beyond description at the shock they received. A second, and more terrible shock immediately succeeded. Three other shocks followed each other: altogether occupying twenty minutes. Pieces of mineral fell from the sides and roof of the mine; but the shafts remained uninjured.” A few years before this earthquake, another was very sensibly felt at Eyam. It happened on the wakes Sunday, and the inhabitants were in church when the shock came on. Several had their prayer books forced from their hands by the shock : and the pewter plates tingled on the shelves of the houses in and around Eyam.*

Mining speculation in the Peak has of late years been an almost all-absorbing matter of interest ; and much of this must be attributed to the great mineral wealth of the Dusty-Pit lead mine, situated at the western verge of the village of Eyam. At this famous mine, for near ten years, immense quantities of metal have been obtained. The Eyam Mining Company serves as an example in the mining speculations of the High Peak district ; while their rewards and profits, have hitherto been commensurate to their deservings ; and the country at large has been benefited to an almost unknown extent by their very worthy speculations. This company has been unprecedentedly fortunate in having an agent of such clear foresight, of such judgment, and of such an unmixed life-long experience in mining operations. Doubtless, in a few years, the New Engines and other mines will be in active operation, thus diffusing plenty around the neighbourhood.

*The author's maternal grandmother, a girl about four years of age at the time of the Lisbon earthquake, was thrown by the shock from a stool on which she was sitting at the time on her father's hearthstone, at Bretton, a hamlet in the parish of Eyam.

At the present time a speculation of great interest exists in the attempt to clear the "New Engine Mine" of water, where it is said, there is an abundance of metal. Projects for liberating this mine have been broached at sundry times during the last century.

The hazardous occupation of mining may be ascertained by the following list of persons, who have been killed at the various times and mines here described :—

William Grooves, April 27, 1637.

John Sydall, January 24, 1658.

John Daniel and Robert Berry, May 11, 1690.

Francis Gregory, January 6, 1697.

Edward Torre, killed with plug and wing, June 30, 1699.

Arthur Skidmore, Nov. 27, 1708.

George Knowles, plug and wing, Haycliff, May 12, 1721.

Richard Turner, de Foolow, Stoke Sough, June 23, 1732.

Robert Andrew, Middleton Pasture, April 20, 1734.

Joseph Marsden, Stoke Sough, Nov. 18, 1734.

John Taylor, Stoke Sough, Nov. 18, 1734.

Richard Holms, de Bridge, Stoke Sough, September 20, 1734.

John Barber, Richard Winterbotham, and Henry Merrill, Haycliff, February 13, 1741.

Benjamin Pidcock, (in a mine) February 28, 1734.

Edward Cooper, de Foolow, (in a mine) March 4, 1744.

William Townend, de Bretton, Haycliff, November 5, 1746.

Francis Mower, Haycliff, June 6, 1751.

William Fox, Shaw Engine, October 15, 1763.

Philip Hinch, Shaw Engine, —.

James Drabble, Watergrove, December 19, 1773.

William Hancock, Watergrove, February 14, 1777.

William Syddall, drowned, Stoke Sough, December 21, 1778.

Edward Dooley, Haycliff, May 10, 1791.

Robert Unwin, Haycliff, January 19, 1795.

Michael Walker, Twelve Meers, —.

— Bramwell, Twelve Meers, —.

— Simson, Twelve Meers, —.

— Bennett, New Engine, —.

— Fearest, Stoke Sough, —.

— Stayley, Twelve Meers, —.

George Benson, Pasture Groove, —.

— Middleton, Morewood Engine, —.

Robert Middleton, Slater's Engine, —.

Samuel Heward, Watergrove, —.

Humfrey Rowland, Black Hole, February 3, 1812.

Samuel Bradwell, of Bradwell, Water Groove. —.

William Barker, near Hassop, —.

John Gilbert, of Tideswell, Dusty-Pit, January, 1858.

John Barker, of Foolow, April 18, 1859, Backdale.

William Bradshaw, Pippin Mine, 1858.

The following are the names of some of the most productive and celebrated mines, which have distinguished Eyam in the mineral world, in times past and present:— Lady-wash, Broadlow, Old and New Twelve Meers; Morewood, Middleton and Slater's Engine; Old, New, and Little Pasture, Blackhole, Deep Sitch, Shaw Engine; Haycliff, New Engine, Brookhead, Cliff-stile, Watergrove, Pippin, Dusty-Pit, and many others.

Minstrels, Poets, &c.

NIGHTBRODER.

MINSTRELS.—John Nightbroder, although not known as a minstrel, was a highly celebrated literary character, and a liberal benefactor. He was born at Eyam, and founded the house of Carmelites, or White Friars, at Doncaster, 1350.*

SEWARD.

Miss Anna Seward, the well-known poetess, was born at Eyam ; she was baptized December 23, 1742. In the literary world she is still distinguished not only for her poetical powers, but for her biographical and epistolary talents. Her father, the Rev. Thomas Seward, Rector of Eyam, Prebendary of Salisbury, and Canon Residentiary of Lichfield, was a man of rather extraordinary learning and taste. He wrote and published many works. At the age of three, before she could read, he had taught her to lisp the Allegro and Penseroso of Milton ; and in her ninth year she could repeat from memory, with varied and correct accent, the three first books of Paradise Lost. In her seventh year she left Eyam ; and a few years after she removed from Lichfield to Bishop's Place, where she resided until her death. Miss Seward's intellectual precocity was zealously cherished by her admiring father ; but as she advanced into womanhood, he withdrew that animating welcome which he had given to the first efforts of her muse.

* Vide Hunter's Deanery of Doncaster.

It is unnecessary to enumerate her works—they are well and deservedly known. The "Elegy to Major Andre," the "Death of Captain Cook," the poetic novel "Louisa," the "Epic Ode on the return of General Elliot from Gibraltar," are among the best of her productions. Of her enduring attachment to Eyam, the place of her birth, she often warmly dilated ; and an annual visit to her birthplace, was the invariable testimony of her enthusiastic affection. This highly celebrated lady died at Bishop's Place, 1809, in the sixty-seventh year of her age. Her remains repose at Lichfield. *

* This talented lady's correspondence was various and her distinguished visitants many. Of the latter one was an English Diplomatist who on returning from America was deputed by president Washington to call on the Authoress of the "Elegy to Major Andre," with a view of removing certain impressions on the mind of the poetess, as expressed in her Elegy, respecting his authority or influence in the unfortunate doom of Andre. Proofs were adduced which convinced Miss

CUNNINGHAM.

The Rev. P. Cunningham, curate of Eyam for many years during the latter part of the rectorship of the Rev. T. Seward, was deservedly celebrated as a poet; though his productions were far from voluminous. It was chiefly if not wholly while he resided at Eyam, that his muse, inspired by the romantic grandeur of the surrounding "dells and woodland wild," wandered forth by Derwent's stream, and there enraptured heard,

"The red-breast, hid in golden foliage, pour Slow-warbled requiems o'er the dying year."

Seward that she had laboured to some degree under wrong impressions.—Another visitant of the poetess was the philanthropist Howard, as mentioned in the following extract from a letter by J. S. Lettsom, in the Gent. Magazine, Jan. 1804:—

"Howard never approached a prison without enquiring 'Is it well supplied with good water?' He informed me of an anecdote in some way connected with this idea. He went to Lichfield with the view of visiting the prison there; but previously presented himself at the habitation of the Rev. Mr. Seward, to whom he was then a stranger. The celebrated Poetess, the amiable daughter of the Clergyman, received the visitor till the return of her worthy parent, who had taken an excursion into the city. Intelligent minds soon coalesce in rational conversation; and the enquiries of Howard were so appropriate and minute respecting the prison, and particularly as to the convenience of water, that the lady, soon suspecting the character of this illustrious visitor quickly asked, 'Are you not Mr. Howard, to whom I have the honour of addressing myself?'"

Of the parentage of Cunningham but very little is now known in Eyam. That he had received a highly classical education his poetical works very plainly indicate. In the first of his published poems, "Chatsworth," he thus pays an elegant tribute, "to his favourite river, the Derwent :* —

"The muse,
 She wanders, Derwent ! where, with lingering pride,
 The amber-tressed Naiads of thy stream
 Through bending woods and vales luxuriant glide.
 Fair, when the parting sun's mild golden light
 A mellow radiance on thy bosom throws,
 But fairer when the silver beams of night,
 With trembling lustre on thy stream repose.
 On Latmos thus, as Grecian bards have sung,
 When Night's fair queen forsook her starry road,
 And o'er Endymion's face enamoured hung,
 His sleeping form with silver radiance glow'd."

His next poem was "The Russian Prophecy," written in 1785; it was occasioned by a phenomenon which appeared in the heavens, but was only observed in Russia.† "The Naval Triumph," is one of his happiest efforts, which, with the former two, constitute nearly the whole of his poetical effusions, composed at Eyam.

* "Derwent (Dwr gwent) "fair water." Sir G. Wilkinson. — Query: Derbyshire Derwent poetically described, "Derwent's dark deep bosomed flood."

† Vide Gentleman's Magazine, July, 1785, page 531.

Perhaps no village pastor was ever so loved by the flock committed to his charge, as Cunningham was by the inhabitants of Eyam. On leaving the village where he had spent the flower of his days, "through evil and good report," he was appointed chaplain to the English Factory at Smyrna, where he resided several years. From the time of his leaving Eyam, he was faithfully and unremittingly attended by misfortune: in the Archipelago he narrowly escaped shipwreck; and at Smyrna he was involved in equal peril by fire, in which his papers and manuscripts were wholly consumed.

To Cunningham a residence at Smyrna was banishment, and he resolved to revisit his native land. Without friends or money, desolate and unknown, he returned on foot through Germany, on his way to Paris; suffering from fatigue and privations. During his long journey, he approached one night, after a day's hard travelling, a large town on the borders of Hungary, where he sat down by the way-side to reflect on his forlorn condition. After having pondered awhile over his misfortunes, he took from his pocket, for the first time, a volume of poetry, which had been presented to him by an English lady, on his departure from Smyrna. A particular poem had been recommended for his perusal by his female friend, and he turned to the page, where he found "close nestled within the leaves," a note, or order, for fifty pounds:—"thus delicately," says Rhodes, "did an amiable woman contrive to administer to the necessities of a stranger in a foreign land."

To his own country he now returned, and undertook the duties of a humble curacy in the vicinity of London, but soon after obtained a small living through the influence of the Devonshire family. This he did not long enjoy. "Invited to preach to a society to whom he had become endeared at Islington, he attended, and after delivering his last, and one of his best discourses, he dined with the delighted members. He appeared in high spirits, but as soon as the cloth was drawn, while conversing with a gentleman near him, he fell back in his chair, and expired without a sigh or groan : such was the end of Cunningham."

FURNESS.

Richard Furness, recently deceased, has added much to the classic distinction of his native village. He was born at Eyam, (as before noted) August 2nd, 1791, and died at Dore, Dec. 13th, 1857. This distinguished individual has reached a high niche in the temple of fame, and will be a subject of admiration and honour during the lapse of future generations. Through a chequered life he invariably testified a strong affection and love for the place of his birth, which feelings will be fully reciprocated by those who can duly estimate his great abilities.

In an old house, over the door of which, may be seen this inscription (R 1615 F) cut in bold relief, the poet first saw the light ; and very early in life those traits of genius, which distinguished his maturer years, were perceived and admired. At the age of fourteen he was bound apprentice to a currier, at Chesterfield. His master, Mr. Joseph Graham, gave him an order to obtain books from a subscription library, which favour the young poet duly estimated.

His biographer, G. C. Holland, M.D., thus graphically alludes to the most prominent manifestations of his genius: "The mind of Richard Furness had three tendencies,—mathematics, poetry, and music. This combination, in the degree in which it existed in him, is rarely observed. In the first, he made considerable progress at this time, and greatly extended his knowledge in after life. The science was a deeply interesting study to him, and was seldom neglected. Of his poetical powers, his productions afford ample evidence, and the candid critic will not deny that they contain poems, and numerous passages, happily conceived, and powerfully expressed. They are the productions, not of the mere rhymers, but of genius, and of an order that would, under more favourable influences, have attracted attention, and placed his biography in abler hands than my own." The Rag-Bag, a satirical poem, was his first published production of any length, which was, and is, much read and admired; but from sundry reasons the author refused any re-publication of the work. The Astrologer, (or Medicus Magus) was his next poetical effort, and universal consent pronounces it to be a splendid work of genius. These, with numerous other shorter poems, which he published occasionally, constitute the whole of his poetical works, which have been very recently published in one elegant volume, entitled, "Furness' Poetical Works." G. C. Holland, M.D., has displayed great literary ability in editing the poems, and in his very interesting life of the Author. Of the poetic merits of the work, the public press has given highly satisfactory expression, while criticism has placed the author among the best of one class of poets.

The talented editor has, however, made one omission in the works of this author, namely, a work partly written, entitled, "The Mosaëid," in twelve books, of which the following are passages from Book first :

"Wake, harp of Judah! from the weeping bough
O'er Babylonia's stream by sorrow swept Trembling I take thee down, nor dare essay
To touch thine awful strings, unless the hand
Which tunes the harmonious spheres, which modulates Fair nature's universal voice, and leads Heavn's oratory sublime,—direct the song.

* * * * *

Moses—who in the swarthy land of Ham
Did by Jehovah's arm uplifted, break
From Israel's sons the twisted iron band—
Who from the oppressor's furnace led them forth
To glorious liberty—to wealth and might
Into a land of plenty, corn and wine—
To plant upon the holy hill of Zion
Jehovah's people: let the heavenly muse
In solemn strains devoutly celebrate
And follow in rehearsive numbers sweet
Him, mighty Hebrew! from the sedgy Nile,
Till on the lofty Nebo he expires."

* * * * *

“Such was the advent of the Man I sing
Of Moses whose auspicious natal day
The muse enraptured hails from Zion’s hill.”

The author also left behind him the words of an Oratorio entitled “The Millenium,” partly selected, written, and arranged, with instructions to the composer. The words are considered of the highest order, and specially adapted for music.

In the midst of these literary labours the poet was suffering from asthma and excruciating tic doloieux, which rendered him unfit for any sustained mental effort.

At the age of sixty-six, this distinguished individual passed from the stage of life, and as a philosopher and poet, for he was both, contemplated his end with calmness and dignified composure. Without a murmur he resigned himself to the will of God. He was interred at Eyam Church, Dec. 18th, 1857. Such was the veneration and esteem in which he was held that the hearse was followed a considerable distance along the road by numbers of the parishioners of Dore and neighbourhood, and on arriving at Eyam, a large proportion of its inhabitants had assembled, and forming a procession, walked behind the hearse to the church in mournful silence. The church was filled with anxious spectators, and the choir sang “Vital Spark,” &c., in a most solemn and effective style. The last sad rites performed, the grave closed over the remains of Richard Furness, whose memory will long be cherished and associated with this "Athens of the Peak." Branches of some fine trees overshadow his grave ; these trees, which in childhood had been objects of interest to him, he thus alludes to at the conclusion of "The Rag Bag" :—

•

"Near those tall elms, in that sequestered spot,
There all these rags in quietness shall rot
With their poor bard, who never sung for fame,
(Since rags, and shrouds, and mortals are the same.)"

MARMADUKE MIDDLETON.

Marmaduke Middleton, Esq., Leam Hall, Eyam, was also in his day, a candidate for poetical honours ; he wrote "Sketches of a Poetical Tour," heretofore mentioned. The critics who had just hunted down poor Keats and others, drove the author behind the screen of printing for private circulation.

JOHN FURNESS.

John Furness, controversialist and biographer, was born at Middleton Bank, in the parish of Eyam. He died about thirty years ago, at Eyam, where he lies interred. His controversy with the Bishop of Lincoln, and "Life of Solomon," are the best remembered efforts of his genius. George Furness, a near relative, is the present distinguished engineer of the Thames embankment works, one of the wonders of the world.

WILLIAM NEWTON.

William Newton, known as the Peak Minstrel, was born at an obscure house, called Cockey, near Abney, on the confines, and within the ancient constablewick of Eyam. By trade he was a spinning-wheel maker ; but his genius might be characterized as universal. As a poet, he elicited the notice of some of the poetic celebrities of his time ; and, with (Hayley, Miss Seward, and Cunningham, with whom he was contemporary), he had continued literary correspondence. His poems on the death of Robespierre, Anthony Lingard, (gibbeted for murder) and other pieces, have been, and still are, much admired. He lived a great part of his time at Cressbrook, near Tideswell, where he acquired an ample competency,—brought up a large family,—and now lies buried in Tideswell Churchyard, where a splendid tomb marks his grave. His son, the late William Newton, in supplying good water for Tideswell, at his own expence, has left an imperishable blessing to the inhabitants of that place.

This romantic village has other, if less successful, candidates for poetic honour : and of these, there are a few whose effusions have only been perused by friends.

Families of Distinction.

S before stated Cashin was Lord of Eyam before the Norman Conquest, after which Eyam was vested in the crown, until bestowed by the Earl of Montaine, on (it is said) one Roger de Mortheyne, known afterwards as the Mortheynes, of Risley and Eyam, (Vide Lysons). Not much is known of the Mortheynes; that is as to their residence at Eyam partially or otherwise. Eustachius de Mortheyne married Eyncina Rufus by Isabella daughter of Gilbertus de Arches; William de Mortheyne was issue; Roger son of William married Cecelia, widow of Richard de Rokele, and had issue Nicolas and John. From one of whom descended Robertus de Mortein, temp. 22 Hen. I; Adam de Mortein, his son, temp 22 Hen. II; Eustachius de Mortein, son of Adam de Mortein, 9 of Rich. I; Eustachius de Mortein, son of John de Mortein, 7 Hen. III; William de Mortein, 12 Edw. I; Rogerus de Mortein; Willielmus de Mortein.

The following are extracts of inquisitions taken after the deaths of several of the family of the Mortheynes and others :

Inquisition taken after the death of William de Morteyn, 12 Edw. 1.

“The manor of Eyam, with the Church there, and tenements in Foulowe.”

Inq. 12 Edw. I., Roger de Morteyne had a charter of free warren, in Eyam.

Inq. taken after the death of Thomas de Furnivall, 35 Edw. I.—The manor of Eyam, Braddewell, services to be done there.

Inq. If it were any damage to the king, 1 Edw. II., Roger Morteyne had the manor of Eyam, in the Peak, with the castle of the Peak.

Inq., if it were any damage to the king, 16 Edw. II., Robert, son of William de Middleton, lands in Eyam.

Inq. 17 Edw. II. Alexander de Hegham, lands in Eyam, of the castle of Peak. Alexander, son of Walter Legham or Hegham, paid a fine to the king of one mark, for pardon, for acquiring two bovates and six acres of land, in Eyam, without license.

Fees of knights, held in the counties of Nottingham and Derby, that have no writs of scutage :—

William de Morteyne, 40s. for one knight's fee in Eyam, which he holds of the king in chief. Hen. III. and Edw. I.

William de Morteyne, one knight's fee. This is received of Sir Robert de Hocover, and Sir Robert de Tonk, and Sir Robert de Dun, added with Sir Robert de Tonk, after the death of Sir Robert de Hocover, of the king's scutage.

THE STAFFORDS.

It is not known that the Staffords of Eyam were connected by blood with the Morteynes, although the former seemed to cling close to the latter. Under the head of “The Church” it is stated that the Staffords had grants of land from the Morteynes for services specified. The Staffords, by judicious marriages, acquired much property during the lapse of a many generations. They owned nearly all the property in the townships of Eyam, Foolow, and the hamlet of Bretton, comprising many hundreds of acres. They were also lords and sole owners of the two manors of Calver and Rowland. "John Stafford de Eyham, was one of the Conservators of the Peace for the County of Derby, in the 12 Hen. VI., (1433)." The Hall in which dwelled the Staffords for near four centuries, had a flat roof covered with lead. One room was said to have been very large, the beams ornamented with carvings of shields of arms, and a fine traceried window looking east. In the room was a shovel board of massy oak. Few traces now remain of this habitation. Its site, however, is well known: "the orchard, the Hall-yard, the site of the fish-pan, and the Hall-hill," like "The Findern Flowers," still point out the by-gone residence of the once influential and hospitable Staffords. It is not intended to give here a lengthened pedigree of the now extinct Staffords of Eyam.

Richard de Stafford of Eyam.

Richard de Stafford, temp. John.

Roger de Stafford.

Roger de Stafford, of Eyam, 12 Edw. III.

John de Stafford, of Eyam, 25 and 43 Edw. III.

John de Stafford of Eyam, 19 Rich. and 1 Henry IV., mar. Alice,—and had three sons—

1. John, his successor.
2. Robert, living 1 Henry IV.
3. Roger, living 1 Henry IV.

John de Stafford, of Eyam, living 1 and 4 Henry IV., and 23 Henry VI.; he espoused Margaret, daughter and heiress of Roger de Roland, she was living 4 Nov., 5 Edw. IV., a widow, and had three sons.

1. John.
2. Richard, the successor.
3. Nicholas, living 6 Henry VII.

Richard Stafford 6 of Henry VII., had two illegitimate children, Thomas and Margaret. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Eyre, Esq., of Holme Hall, in the county of Derby; had issue John Stafford, whose son Humphrey, the last of the Eyam Staffords, was living 33 of Henry VIII. Humphrey had two sons, Roland and Humphrey, both died without issue, and four daughters, Alice,—married to John Savage, gent., Castleton. Gertrude married to Rowland Eyre, Esq., Hassop; she died in 1624. A brass plate in Longstone church commemorates her memory. Ann married Francis Bradshaw, of Bradshaw Hall, county of Derby. Katherine married Roland Morewood, the Oaks, Bradfield, Yorkshire. She was buried at Bradfield, July 16, 1595.

From Mitchel's manuscript, it appears that—

William de Stafford de Eyam, had a son William de Stafford living, 28 Edw. III. He married Maud, daughter of Richard, or Roger del Dale, of Eyam, (and Agnes his wife,) 43 Edw. III., and had issue.

1.—Joan, wife of John Meveril, the elder, had (4 Hen. IV.) the moiety of a messuage, and two oxgangs in Riley, which she had by inheritance from William, her father.

2.—A daughter, wife of Nicholas Leghs, of Eyam, held half of William Stafford's property, 6 Hen. IV.

John Stafford married Dionisia Lynford, county of Chester, had issue John Stafford, who had a son Robert Stafford, county of Lincoln.

The immediate descendants of the co-heiresses of Humphrey Stafford quartered the arms of Stafford of Eyam, the same as those of Stafford, of Botham, (Cheshire). Mr. Wolley, of Matlock, had a seal of a Stafford of Eyam, with the following arms :—“ Ermine, on a bend, gules, three roundels.” The Morewoods quartered the arms of Stafford of Eyam, “ Or, a chevron, gules, between three martlets, sable.”

Humphrey Stafford, at his death about 1560, left a widow, Ann, and four daughters ; at the death of his widow, his immense property, valued at that time at near £100,000, was equally divided among his four daughters, his co-heiresses. The portion allotted to Katherine, wife of Rowland Morewood, was sold about 60 years since, by Henry Case Morewood, who had married the widow of a Morewood of Alfreton, to James Furness, Stony Middleton, and a few others.

The portion allotted to Gertrude (consisting of the two hamlets, Rowland and Calver,) wife of Rowland Eyre, Esq., of Hassop, is still possessed by his representative, Col. Leslie; the moiety allotted to John Savage, of Castleton, gent., was sold by Humphrey, his grandson, in 1613, to Thomas Middleton, clerk, Richard Furness, Peter Hawksworth, Peter Pillinge, Hercules Furness, Rodger Wilson, William Chapman, Godfrey Rowland the elder, Ralph Nealer and John Needham of Castleton. The deed is witnessed by Caleb Deane, Thomas John Jeffries, and Martin Hall. The purchase was £1,032 6s. 0d.; the other portion awarded to Ann, married to Francis Bradshaw, of Bradshaw, is still in the possession of her representative, Eaglesfield Bradshaw Smith, Esq., of Blackwood House, Ecclesfeccan, N. B.

The following are extracts from antique rolls and manuscripts relative to the Staffords:—

“This indenture witnesseth that Nicholas Morteyn, Thomas de Brighrichfield (Libanerant,) and John Stafford had the custody of Margaret, daughter and heiress of Roger de Roland, &c., and the manor of Roland dated Aug. 10, Hen. IV. (1409.)”

“Know all men, &c., I Richard Penyston, of Basselowe, son and heir of William de Penyston, demise to John Stafford, junior, de Eyam, and Margaret his wife, all right which I had in all the lands which were Robert de Calfouer (Calver) sometime my great grandfather's in Roland. These being witnesses, Roger Massy de Heghlowe, William Woodrove de Hope, John North, of Bubenhill (Bubnell,) Richard Bradbery de Holerseeh (Ollerset) and others dated at Eyam, 1 Hen. VI., (1423.)”

“Know, &c., that we Robert Mockson, chaplain, and Richard Colyn (Nadidimus, &c., dimisimus) to Richard Stafford, son and heir of Lady Margaret Stafford, widow, and Agnes, his wife, daughter of Roger Eyre, sen., gent., three messuages near to the village of Roland, &c. These being witnesses, Phillip Leeche, Esq., Stephen Eyre, gent., and Robert Shakerley, gent. Dated at Roland 1st October, 21 Edw. IV. (1481.)”

“Know, &c., that I Richard Stafford, son and heir of the lady Margaret Stafford, widow, have given, &c., to Robert Mockson, chaplain, and Richard Colyn 3 messuages in the town of Roland, &c., these being witnesses, Richard Eyre, gent., Robert Shakerley, gent., and Robert Longesdon, and others. Dated at Roland, 20th Oct., 21 Edw. IV. (1481.)”

“This indenture witnesseth that whereas I, Richard Stafford, sonne and heire of John Stafford, late of Eyam, have enfeoffed of trust Robert Eyre, of Padley, y^e younger, Philip Eyre, Parson of the Kirk of Asshowe (Ashover), Roger Eyre, of Hulme (Holme), Nicholas Stafford, my brother, and Roger Eyre, of Plumley, in all my lands in Eyam, Middilton, Caluore, Roland, Yolgreve, Tiddiswall, Longesdon, Hucklowe, Leom, and Bakewell, and elsewhere in co. Derby.—wherein also he mentioneth Thomas, his bastard sonne, and Margrett, his bastard daughter.”

“Know &c., that I Humfrey Stafford, senr. of Eyam, in the county of Derby, Esquire, have given to Roland Stafford, my younger son, tenem. (five tenements), in Roland. Dated, 2 Edw. VI., 1548.”

“A deed, dated at Rowland, 10 Hen. IV., confirms property to the Staffords, viz., the Manors of Roland and Calver, by the marriage of John de Stafford with Margaret, heiress of Roger de Roland.”

“The Staffords acquired possession of lands at Ryley, Eyam, by subinfeudation from Roger de Rous, and others.”

In the “Charte Antique,” (Wolley’s MSS. in the British Museum), there are about seventy original deeds relating to the Staffords, and their connection with Eyam, all of which are said to be highly interesting.

Bradshaw Hall.

THE above is a photographic sketch of what is now known at Eyam as the "Old" or "Bradshaw Hall." It stands on rising ground at the north-west extremity of the village, and was erected at the eastern end of the old Stafford Hall, probably by Francis, great grandson of Francis Bradshaw, who married Ann, the daughter and co-heiress of Humphrey Stafford, some time before the breaking out of the plague; when, or just before, it is said, the Bradshaws left Eyam for Brampton, Yorkshire, and never returned to Eyam to reside permanently. Bradshaw Hall was left unfinished; it was erected in the Tudor or Elizabethan style.

The courses in the walls, are of Moorland sandstone, eight inches in thickness, the masonry extremely good. The windows on the ground floor, which light the principal apartments, are large. There are two in either front—south and east, divided by mullions and transomes. The windows have labelled heads with knees. On a circular stone in the centre of the upper tier of windows in the south-front is carved in bold relief, the crest of the Bradshaws; “a stag at gaze p. p. r. standing under a vine fructured p. p. r.” The interior contains a noble fireplace, the mantles and jambs recessed and enriched with a deeply indented moulding. The whole is now greatly dilapidated and used as a barn. It was erected as a modern appendage to the old Hall of the Staffords. It was intended to be hung with tapestry. Within the recollection of the last generation the tapestry lay in a heap in certain corners where it rotted away.

That portion of the pedigree of the Bradshaws connected especially with Eyam, will be sufficient for the present purpose.* The notorious Judge Bradshaw was of this family; his grandfather went from Bradshaw Hall, Chapel-en-le-Frith, to Wyberslegh, near Marples, Cheshire, where the regecide was born. It may not be generally known that the mother of Judge Bradshaw was related to Milton.

* An ample pedigree of the Bradshaws generally, will be found in an article, “Bradshaw Hall, Eyam,” by P. Furness, Reliquary, Vol. 1.

Francis Bradshaw, of Bradshaw, (eldest son and successor of Godfrey Bradshaw), living in 1611, married Ann, one of the daughters and co-heiresses of Humphrey Stafford, Esq., Eyam, and thereby acquired Stafford Hall, Eyam, and extensive estates in the neighbourhood. He had issue—

1.—Francis, his successor. 2.—Humphrey. 3.—Rowland. 4.—George. 5.—Peter; and several daughters.

Francis, eldest son and heir, was sheriff of Derbyshire 1630. Had issue—

Francis Bradshaw, of Eyam, and Brampton-en-le-Morthen, Yorkshire. Buried at Treeton. Had issue—

1.—Francis, died without issue, buried at Treeton, 1677.
2.—John, died in infancy.
3.—John. 4.—Elizabeth.

John, son and heir, sheriff of Derbyshire, 1717. Had issue—

1.—George. 2.—John. 3.—Margaret. 4.—A second Margaret, all died without issue. 5.—Elizabeth, sister and heiress of George Bradshaw, married 11th January, 1706, to Joshua Galliard, Esq., of Edmonton, in Middlesex, son of John Galliard (by Ann, daughter of William Wakefield, Esq.,) descended from Joshua Galliard, receiver of the revenue, temp., Charles I. Had issue—

1.—Joshua, died an infant. Pierce, his successor. 3.—John, died April 20th, 1745, buried at Eyam. 4.—Elizabeth. 5.—Dorothy.

Pierce Galliard had issue by his first wife:

1.—Bradshaw Galliard, author of some poetical works, died without issue.

2.—Ann. 3.—Mary.

Ann, his daughter and co-heiress, inherited Eyam, Foolow, and Bretton. She married Eaglesfield Smith, Esq., of Longshaw, N. B., and had issue—

1.—Pierce. 2.—Eaglesfield.* 3.—Thomas. 4.—Bradshaw Galliard.

Eaglesfield Smith, (the above) had issue—

Eaglesfield Bradshaw Smith, of Blackwood House, Ecclefeccan, N. B., is the surviving representative of this branch of the Staffords, Bradshaws, and Galliards, and now the owner of their patrimony at Eyam, &c. He married Elizabeth Macdowal Walker, of Liverpool; and has issue.

Mary, daughter and co-heiress of Pierce Galliard, inherited Bradshaw Hall, Chapel-en-le-Frith, with the manor or lordship of Abney. She married Charles Bowles, Esq., of Radcliffe, county Middlesex. The present Rev. Humphrey Bowles, Woking, Surrey, is the representative of this branch of Stafford, Bradshaw, and Galliard.

BRAY.—The Brays of Eyam, were a family of some importance, the first now known was a Thomas Bray, of Eyam, who married early in the seventeenth century, Ellen, daughter of John Alton, M.D., Nottingham. The Altons of Nottingham intermarried with families of great substance. George Alton, probably father of John Alton, married in 1620, Mary, daughter and co-heiress of John Kyme, of Nottingham. Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Bray, and his wife Ellen, the daughter of John Alton, had £10,000 to her fortune. She married the Hon. Francis Pierrepont, third son of Robert Earl of

* This Eaglesfield Smith was the author of a volume of poems, composed principally while a prisoner in France.

Kingston. He died Jan. 30th, 1657, leaving issue Robert Pierrepoint, of Nottingham, who married Ann, daughter of Henry Murray, who had issue—:

Francis died 1674, aged 12 years.

George died 1674, aged 9 years.

William died 1674, aged 4 years.

Anna born 1674.

In the Norton register, there is the following entry of the melancholy death of a Francis Bray of Eyam, but whether brother or son to the above Thomas Bray, is unknown.

“Francisius Braye, de Eyam, generosus interfectus apird Bradway poa de Norton sepultus fout in Ecclea poch de Norton post inquissisem factum in causam lius interfectionis vicisimo octavo de July lin. Jac. Dni Ano Regii Anglie France & Hibernie noro & Scoti ndelt sepultus xx viij mo. de July 1611.”

TRANSLATION.

Francis Braye, of Eyam, gent., was slain at Bradway, in the parish of Norton, and was buried in the parish church of Norton, after inquisition had as to the cause of his being so slain, the 28th day of July, in the year of our Lord, James king of England, France, and Ireland, and of Scotland namely, he was buried the 28th day of July, 1611.

The only allusion to the family of Bray in the Register at Eyam, is the following—

“Mr. Bray buried 1640.”

The old mansion, known as Eyam Hall, was in its original state, the residence of the Brays, of Eyam. It was purchased by the Wrights from the Brays or their representatives about the middle of the seventeenth century. A new front was erected and other alterations made about 1680. In the interior on some wainscotting there are inscribed the initials F. B. and J. B. with the date 1594 or 6. The exterior contains an inverted stone, with the initials M. B., besides other mementoes of the Brays of Eyam.

GREGORY AND OTHERS.—The family of Gregory seems to be one of great antiquity at Eyam. The following extracts are from the inquisition—ad quod damnum 17 Edw. II.

“Henry Gregory, of Eyam, lands thereof of Peak Castle.”

“Henry Gregory, one bovate of land, one messuage, and one and-a-half acre of land there of the honour of Peverell by the service of 8½d paid at the Castle of the Peak.”

“Henry Gregory, of Eyam, paid a fine to the King of half a mark for pardon, for acquiring certain tenements in Eyam.

“Gervase, son of William Rankell, of Hockelowe, paid a fine to the King of one mark, for pardon, for acquiring certain tenements in Eyam without licence.”

“Robert, son of William de Middleton, paid a fine to the King of half a mark, for pardon, for acquiring certain tenements in Eyam without licence.”

“Stephen, son of William de la Doune, lands in Eyam.”

“Gervase Rankell, lands in Eyam of the castle of the Peak.”

Inquisition taken after the deaths of James, son of Robert de Sulby, 14 Edward III.

“James, son of Robert de Sulby, paid a fine to the King of one mark, for pardon, for the transgression of himself and Robert de Sulby in acquiring certain tenements with the appurtenances in Eyam, of Roger de Morteayne without licence.

Ibid 16, Edw. III. William Wyseman, of Eyam, paid a fine to the King of ten shillings for acquiring for him and his heirs one messuage and one bovate of land with the appurtenances of Gervase Rankel without licence.

Inquisition after the death of William Wyseman, of Eyam :

One bovate of land in Eyam.

Ibid, 16 Edw. III. James de Sulby, five bovates of land in Eyam.

Ibid, 17 Edw. III. John, son of Henry Monyasshe and Matilda his wife, two bovates of land in Eyam.

Ibid, 21 Edw. III. William Renneaway and Amabil his wife, one bovate of land with appurtenance in Eyam.

Ibid, 22 Edw. III. Nicholas de Cungesdon for a certain chaplain, Eyam, lands and tenements,—Litton remaining to the said Nicholas.

Ibid, 28 Edw. III. Elizabeth de Montacute, manors,—Eyam, Bradwell, Stoney Middleton, and many others.

Ibid, 6 Rich. II. William de Furnivall, afterwards Thomasine his widow, Eyam Manor, Middleton Manor, Eyam advowson of the church, &c.

Under the head of "The Manor," it was noticed that the lords of the manor had little or no land in Eyam, Sir George Savile having sold it two centuries ago, the following extract is dated Michaelmas term, 25th Nov., 1663. 15 Charles II.

"Fine between William Wilson, Joseph Webster, Humfrey Chapman, Humfrey Torre, Robert Fidler, Rowland Mower, Thomas Howbrooke, Godfrey Torre, Francis Townend, James Mower, Robert Mather, George Sydall, and William Mosely, Plaintiffs, and Sir George Savile, Bart., and Dorothy his wife, Deforciant of 8 messuages, 10 cottages, 14 barns, 11 stables, 15 gardens, 58a. of land, 39a. of meadow, 40a. of pasture and common of pasture, for all cattle and common of Turbary, with the appurtenances in Eyam, Foolow, Bretton, Stony Middleton, and Grindleford Bridge. Of the Savile land, Philip Sheldon, Eyam, purchased some excellent lots.

The Colyns* were a family of distinction at Eyam, in the reign of Henry the Sixth ; but of their descendants and property, nothing is now known. French was the name of another rather important family in the village. A notice of this family is in the register as follows : “ Stephen, the son of Stephen French, baptized Dec. 4th, 1643.” The name occurs also among those who died of the plague. The Willsons of Eyam were once a family of substance. In Glover’s History of Derbyshire, there is this notice : “ Richard Milnes, Chesterfield, married Elizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of the Rev. R. Willson, of Burton, Norfolk, and of Eyam, Derbyshire ; she died, Jan. 17, 1691.” † The Gibels, of Eyam, were a family of distinction—the only remains of whom, in Eyam, is their name as distinguishing a barn and tor : “ Gibel barn,” and “ Gibel tor.” John Hardy, born at Eyam, apprenticed to a flax dresser, enlisted as a private soldier, by merit became the Colonel of the 5th regiment of foot, Governor of Dartmouth Castle, and Master of the Stores at Gibraltar ; was present and greatly assisted in the defence of that place, during the memorable seige under the Governor-General Elliott, afterwards Lord Heathfield. Colonel Hardy was at the taking of the Havannah. He is buried in the Church of St. Ann's, Soho, London. His daughter, Elizabeth, relict of Joshua Gregory, died at the Alley, Eyam, March 3, 1824, aged 80 years.

* Richard Colyn de Eyam, was conservator of the peace for the county of Derby, (1433,) in conjunction with John Stafford de Eyam.

† One of the Wilsons raised some men to fight in the war between the Parliament and Charles ; but his courage evaporated before the time of action, and his wife offered to head them herself.

Singular Events, &c.

FROM the Hundred Rolls. 4 Edw. I. (Of offences by Sheriffs and Bailiffs.)

The jury say that a certain contention arose between Ralph de Calvore (Calver) and Nicholas de Paddeley, and his two sons at Eyam. And the younger son of the said Nicholas, struck the said Ralph on the head with a hatchet, and William Halli, bailiff of Sir Roger Strange, and Henry, the clerk, attached the said Nicholas and his two sons, and dismissed them in peace for one mark, because they hoped the said Ralph would live. But the said Ralph died on the fifth day; and again the said William and Henry attached Nicholas and his eldest son, and took from them a mark for the use of Sir Roger Strange; and his younger son privately fled from the country.—They also say that John de Hally is a homicide, and by favour of his brother William, dimittit in pace in the time of a certain bailiff after the battle of Evesham.

About three centuries back, the inhabitants of Eyam, and other villages surrounding Castleton, were periodically disturbed by an incursion of gipsies, as may be seen from the following extract :

In a work entitled "The Arts of Jugglery and Legerdemain," by S. R., 1612, the following passage occurs :—"The Gipsies, from all parts of England, meet once a-year at a place appointed, oftens at the Devil's Arse in the Peake, in Darbshire, and sometimes at Ketbrook by Blackheath."—Brand, vol. 3, page 96, Pop. Antiq.

Some confusion occurred about the year 1642, in Eyam and the mining districts of the Peak in particular, as may be seen from an original letter of Charles I., in the Harleian Collection, where it is mentioned that Christopher Fulwood, the Royalist of Middleton-by-Youlgrave, was specially employed to raise the Derbyshire miners as a life guard to his Majesty, when the Lord-lieutenant, the Earl of Rutland, declined that service. Fulwood assembled his forces, 1,100 men, principally Derbyshire miners, on Tideswell Moor.

Great commotion was experienced in 1745, the people in the vicinity of Eyam, naturally judged the Scotch rebels would take Chatsworth in their route southwards; but the dread of the mines in the neighbourhood around being treacherously covered for their entrapment, deterred them from taking the palace of the Peak in their way to Derby. The inhabitants of Eyam, however, drove their cattle into a deep dingle or valley called "Bretton Clough," about two miles from Eyam; and all their valuables, as clocks and pewter, were let down into the mines for safety. On the retreat of the rebels, a stray bag-piper got into Eyam, and the carousing miners kept him at work with his "bellows" during a whole night, at a straw-thatched public house, now standing in Eyam townend, and occupied as a private dwelling by William Brown.

PENANCE FOR FORNICATION.—In the year 1728, or thereabouts, one Ellis Oldfield, of Eyam, was compelled by an ecclesiastical injunction issued at Chesterfield, to do penance, by standing in a white sheet, in his stockings, with his hair about his ears, three successive Sundays, in the churches of Eyam, Hathersage, and Castleton, and declare he had been instigated by the devil to commit fornication with one Margaret Bradshaw, of Eyam, for which he asked pardon from his Saviour.

On the restoration of health of George III in 1789, a great jubilee was held at Eyam; one sheep was roasted, half a sheep boiled, bells rang, cannons fired, and other amusements transpired. Jubilees have also been held in commemoration of the following events: peace of Amiens; Bonaparte's deportment to Elba; the coronations of George IV, William IV, and Victoria; and above all the marriage of the Prince of Wales.

Methodism was very early introduced into Eyam; although in no place were the promulgators more roughly abused. The first sermon preached in Eyam by the Methodists, was in 1765, by Matthew Mayer, of Portwood Hall, near Stockport. The preacher stationed himself by Furness' barn side; but so much hostility was exhibited on this and on a subsequent occasion, that he each time narrowly escaped with life. The few friends of the preacher were pelted with brick-bats, mud, stones, and other missiles; and to such a degree did the infatuated multitude carry on their opposition, that the preacher had the ringleaders brought before the magistrates, who bound them in recognizances for their good behaviour in future. Everett, in his History of Methodism, says, that the then inhabitants of Eyam "were employed in the lead mines, and were a most savage race."

The following is ample evidence, of another instance of religious persecution at Eyam:—

Abstract of the Sufferings of the people called Quakers, &c., 1660 to 1666. Published in 1738.

Vol. 2 pp. 116—118. For not paying Steeple House Rates. Taken from Richard Furness of Higham for £0 1s. 4d. demand, Goods Value £0 3s. 4d.

For not paying Easter Offerings Richard Furness of Higham, (Eyam) for Fivepence demanded for Easter Offerings, had Goods taken from him worth £1 6s. 8d.

For Meeting together to Worship God :

“On the 23rd of the same month (4 Month 1661) was a Meeting at Eyam, in the High Peak, wither came the Constable of the Town with Soldiers, and plucked down Elizabeth Deane then praying, dragging her out of Doors, and shamefully tearing her clothes, not suffering her to get on her feet. With like violence they pulled out the Rest, some by the Hair of the Head, others by the Legs, with their Heads on the Ground. Being asked for their warrant, they refused to shew any, but carried the two Friends before a Justice of the Peace, who required of them Sureties for their good Behaviour, which they refusing to give, he made them Mittimus to Derby Gaol. After which they were kept all that night in a Barn, and next day carried to Crich, where they were kept another night in a Room, many of them lying on the Floor, not having so much as a little Straw allowed them: Thus fatigued they were the Day after carried to Derby, being thirty-one Men and ten Women, namely—Cornelius Arnold, Anthony Cullove, Thomas Taylor, William Shaw, John Allen, Henry Gibbing, John Lingard, James Metham, Anthony Waterhouse, John Wilson, Robert Foley, George Shaw, Anthony Bowman, George Lamb, William Charlesworth, Thomas Foulk, John Ridgway, Ralph Sharples, William Brough, John Cope, Richrd Furnis, George Brough, Thomas Lingard, William Yardly, Matthew Glegg, Godfrey Beard, Ralph Bentlift, Thomas Bilstone, Nicholas Swift, Thomas Wilson, Senior Evans, Elizabeth Deane, Francis Adran, Sarah Sleigh, Martha Shaw, Ellen Blith, Anne Haley, Margaret Waterhouse, Ellen Beard, Anne Johnson, and Margaret Marshall.—They were kept prisoners till the 18th of the 5th month when Ralph Sharples, William Yardley, and Elizabeth Deane were sent for before a bench of Justices, who committed the two men to the House of Correction, and ordered Elizabeth to be sent with a pass to Worcester, the place of her abode. In the House of Correction Ralph Sharples and William Yardley were inhumanly used by the cruel Keeper, who put them into a close Hole, where they could not stand upright, nor could they have liberty to come out to ease their Bodies, but must do it in the place. Their Books and Letters were taken away and not restored again; and when in that strait confinement they were praying to the Lord, their Keeper in a rage would come and strike them in the face and attempt to stop their mouths!—nor were their Friends permitted to visit or relieve them!!”

Miscellaneous Subjects.

BENEFACTORS OF EYAM.—Some centuries ago, a person now unknown, left for the poor of Eyam £15, the interest of which to be annually paid on St. Thomas's day. Dr. Edmund Finch, left £15 for the same purpose, the interest to be paid at the same time.

Eyam is also included in the many villiages receiving the well-known Gisborne Charity. Dr. Finch, for the teaching of ten poor Children of the parish of Eyam, bequeathed to the school £100, which with £15 left by another person, was laid out in freehold land, called the Long Meadow, near Bradwell, now let for £7 a-year. Thomas Middleton, Leam, left £5 a-year to the school, for the teaching of ten poor children to read and write ; this benefaction is charged upon two pieces of land, called the Upper and Under Low. His Grace the Duke of Devonshire makes an annual donation of £2 2s. to the school ; and £1 10s. is produced by rental of a small piece of common-land allotted to the school.* James

* There are a few records of other benefactions—one by the Rev. Robert Talbot, Rector, who died in 1630,—but in what form or manner disposed of is now unknown.

Furness, of Middleton Bank, in this parish, by will, dated 2nd of May, 1808, left to poor widows of the Township of Eyam, not in receipt of parish relief, Five Guineas a-year, to be paid on St. Thomas's day for ever. And also two Guineas a-year to the Sunday School. These sums were paid as directed by the testator for several years. Unfortunately, owing to some informality these donations have been latterly discontinued.

The endowed school is a modern building. Mr. Thomas Elliott is the present schoolmaster, who is highly and justly respected.

At the present day, Eyam is the residence of many respectable families, whose houses are distinguished by elegance and taste. The RECTORY, for its commodiousness, situation, gardens, and scenery, is not surpassed by any parsonage-house in England. It was rebuilt, in an improved style of architecture, about ninety years ago, at the expence of the Rev. T. Seward, Rector of Eyam. Since then its exterior has been greatly improved, and very much so by the late Rector, the Rev. E. B. Bagshaw.

EYAM HALL, the residence of J. Wright, Esq., is a large, handsome, and rather antique-looking building. The architecture is of the style of the reign of Elizabeth. It is a very capacious and massive building, with exterior appendages quite in keeping with the design of the structure ; and the owners have been highly commended by one skilled in architecture, for preserving as respects the appendages, the uniformity of the whole. It was erected or rather re-erected about 1680. The Wrights are a very ancient and wealthy family, highly distinguished for equability, consideration, and punctuality. A female of this family married, above a century ago, one of the Traffords of Trafford Hall, Lancashire, who were related to the Booths, Earls of Warrington.*

EYAM FIRS, is a secluded and beautiful villa, a little north of the village. It is the residence of Misses Jane and Mary Wright, daughters of the late John Wright, Esq., the elder brother of the late P. Wright, Esq., Eyam Hall.

EYAM TERRACE, in the east of the village, has been often admired for its picturesque situation. Its contiguity to the Dale, so beautifully romantic, adds infinitely to its delightfulness. It is owned and occupied by Thomas Fentem, Esq., Surgeon, who inherited much of the property of his maternal grandfather, the late Philip Sheldon, Eyam.

DELF VIEW, a little south-west of the church, a substantial and highly-finished house was erected forty years since, by the late M. M. Middleton, Esq., Leam Hall.

* The Wrights of Eyam, are a branch of the Longstone Wrights, who were settled at Longstone Hall, as early as the fourteenth century.

Arms:—Sable, on a chevron, engrailed, between three Unicorns' heads. Or, as many spears heads, Azure. Crest:—A cubit arm vested, Sable, doubled Argent (issuing from a wreath) holding in the hand, Proper, a broken spear, Or headed, Azure.—J. F. Wright, Esq., Surgeon, Sheffield, is the present representative of the Eyam branch.

It is occupied by Mr. John Bromley, a tradesman of enterprising spirit, whose boot and shoe manufactory at Eyam, is the means of affording remunerative employment to hundreds of the inhabitants of Eyam and neighbourhood.

EYAM VIEW, is a very elegant mansion ; it was erected by the late Thomas Burgoine, Esq., Edensor ; and is now owned and occupied by Thomas Gregory, Esq., Solicitor.

INCLOSURES OF LAND. The first enclosure was early in the seventeenth century, and the field still called the "New Close," was the first fenced out. The second was the Pasture Edge, commonly called Eyam Pasture, in 1699, consisting of 152 acres, 2 roods, and 32 perches. The interest of the Marquis of Halifax, then Lord of the Manor of Eyam, were a yearly rent of three pounds and all mineral rights. The third inclosure of the very extensive tract of land called Eyam Moor, was by act of parliament, obtained in 1801.

There are also seven Inns in the village ; the Bull's Head, the principal Inn, by Mr. George Hibbert ; the Foresters' Arms, by Mr. William Bland ; the Bold Rodney, by Mr. Samuel Furness ; the Rose and Crown, by Mr. Matthew Siddall ; the Miners' Arms, by Mr. William Marples ; the Royal Oak, by Mr. Samuel Turner ; and the Townhead Inn, by Mr. George Thorpe.

Eyam, like many other villages in the Peak, was, a century back, distinguished to some degree by the ignorance and child-like simplicity of its inhabitants generally, of which the following are a few instances :—

On the introduction of Methodism into Eyam, one Joseph Benson, known by the sobriquet, "Bishop Benson," was one of its most zealous advocates, and so strong was he in the matter of faith or ridiculous infatuation, that he, on one occasion, persuaded himself and a few silly neighbours that he could, by prayer and faith, convert a dation, a large wooden vessel, full of water into "leven,"—a mixture of meal and water of which oat bread is made; he prayed, sweat, and struggled vehemently, but no "leven" could he get.

In another instance, a clergyman—the rector or curate of Eyam—hearing of the somewhat sudden death of a young woman, one of his parishioners, called on a neighbouring woman who had attended the young woman in her last moments, and inquiring into the case, said, "he was afraid the young woman had died in the dark." "No! no!" replied the woman, "there was a good penny candle burning on th' bed teaster."

The following circumstance, communicated to the Reliquary, recently, by an Eyam worthy, marks great simplicity on a supposed death-bed. A stone in Eyam church-yard has this inscription:—

"Here lieth the Body of John the son of John and Mary Morton of Bradshaw-hall, who departed this life June 18, 1762."

This John Morton was more familiarly known by the sobriquet "Farmer John," and is remembered as one of the celebrities of the village. He was chiefly remarkable for his simple eccentricities and pithy sayings.

He died of a severe fever in the prime of manhood. A day or two before his dissolution the rector of the parish paid him a visit to ascertain his spiritual condition, and after a little conversation discovered John clinging to the world, and exceedingly tenacious of existence, much more so than was proper in dying circumstances. The clergyman then made some remarks on the evanescence and uncertainty of earthly things, and more especially on the vanity and brevity of human life. He then contrasted the miseries of this life with the happiness and enjoyments of the blessed in a future state, and drew a vivid picture of the bliss of that heavenly home where there are many mansions. The poor weary sufferer listened with becoming attention to the worthy pastor. With an effort he raised himself in bed, looked wistfully into his face, and said, "Ah! Mester, it's all fine talking that, but 'Owd England for ever' for me."

Eyam has been the birth-place of a few very eccentric characters; among whom was MICHAEL BARBER, Parish Clark fifty-nine years. He was a very learned man in his time—a profound astrologer; CORNELIUS BRUSHFIELD, the Hanging Flatt anchorite;* JOHN GREGORY, a modern Diogenes; JOHN DOOLEY, a modern Nestor; PHILIP SHELDON, a zealous politician, with the suavity of an Ulysses; and THOMAS BIRDS, a profound antiquary, and a Howard in philanthropy.

* It is said that this Cornelius Brushfield, was never in Eyam, from his childhood to his death only once, and that once was on the occasion of the great contested election between Har-

The WONDER and MERLIN are two large caverns in the Dale, a little south of the village, but, it is to be regretted, that at the present time they cannot always be explored. In the latter, the water appears to have a subterranean source ; hence, those who have read Sir Humphrey Davy's " Last Days of a Philosopher," must, while looking on this water, naturally think of the Proteus anguinus.

Another Cavern in the Dale, called CAELSWARK, is somewhat interesting from the fact of a skeleton having been found there at Whitsuntide, in 1763, which was supposed to be the remains of a Scotch pedlar, who had been murdered at Stony Middleton, at Eyam Wakes, in 1760. The Jew, or Scotch pedlar, refused certain persons selling goods without a license, at Eyam wakes' eve, and they are said to have murdered him on that per and Clarke. The Brushfields of Hanging Flatt, Eyam, were a distinguished family in this locality. Thomas Brushfield, Sen., Esq., Church Street, Spital-Fields, London, and Thomas Nadauld Brushfield, Jun., Govenor and resident Surgeon or Physician, of Chester County Asylum, are the representatives of this highly respected Derbyshire family.—The grandfather of the Author's wife Mr. John Wildgoose, when living often told of his being employed during this election in carrying ale on his head in a milking pail at Taddington while the election lasted. He also told of the first small packet of tea coming to Taddington to an old woman, who brewed or mashed it, threw the water away and proceeded to eat the leaves with bread and salt, very soon, however, tossing the leaves into the ash-hole declaring, "let me have some of my own dear native nettle broth."

account and then carried him into the Caelswark Cave, where he was found. An inquest was held on his body, but nothing satisfactory was elicited, as to the criminals. His bones, clothes, and shoes, were deposited in a box, in Eyam church, a many years before they were buried.

About fifty years ago, the forearm of a female was found in the River Derwent, it was deposited in a small box in Eyam Church, but after some years was buried.

Near the Caelswark is a high rock or tor called Lover's Leap, from which Sappho-like, a love-sick maiden, Hannah Baddaley, a native of Stony-Middleton, about 1750, threw herself; but her petticoats forming a kind of parachute, she sustained little injury.

MECHANICS' INSTITUTION AND LIBRARY.—This institution has placed Eyam in a proud position as a village. Its origin was a Subscription Library, established 1821, under the auspices of the Hon. and Rev. Robert Eden, Charles Fentem, Esq., Mr. F. Cocker, Mr. J. Froggatt, and Mr. P. Furness. The Mechanics' Hall is a most superb structure, opposite the Church, in the centre of Eyam, built by public subscription, under the especial patronage of Thomas Fentem, Esq., Surgeon, the late William Wyatt, Esq., Foolow, the late James Bromley, and John Bromley, Esq., Boot Manufacturers, Eyam.*

* Notwithstanding this great mark of the onward progress of cultivation and knowledge, Eyam still retains mementos of more barbaric times. In the east end of the village the bear-ring is still to be seen, and in the centre of the village the stocks, last used about thirty years ago.

The Institution was opened January 11th, 1859, and the inaugural address, given by Lord G. H. Cavendish, M.P., with whom was W. P. Thornhill, Esq., M.P. Thomas Fenten, Esq., Surgeon, Eyam Tearrace, was Chairman, and on the platform were T. Gregory, Esq., Solicitor, Eyam View, and the whole of the preliminary committee. The proceedings terminated with a concert, and an overflowing audience. May this undertaking yield a harvest of knowledge, and consequent civilization :

“For mind, like a desert in nature,
Without cultivation is mean ;
But knowledge shall bring to full stature,
Shall ennoble each wild evergreen.”

FURNESS.

At the conclusion of the account of the plague, mention was made of the arrest of two Catholic Priests, at Padley Hall, on the verge of the parish of Eyam ; the following has since been supplied to the author :—

NICHOLAS GARLICK, PRIEST, 1588.

“NICHOLAS GARLICK,” says Mr. Bagshaw, “was descended of honest parentage, in a little town called Dinting, in Glossopdale, within the county of Derby ; and was for the space of seven years, Schoolmaster at Tidswell, (in the same county) so well discharging his duty therein, that, by his good and most charitable care he had of his scholars, as if they had been his own children, he caused three of them to take the same course and happy venture that he himself did, viz., to go over to the English College at Rheims ; who were all made priests, and returned to their country with happy success by increasing the servants of God unto their mother the catholic church ; whereof one called Christopher Buxton was martyred, "October 1st, 1588, at that memorable place of our former saints of England, Canterbury."

Mr. Garlick was made priest, as appears by the Douay Journal, in the latter end of March, 1582, and was sent upon the English Mission Jan. 25, 1583. How long he laboured here before his first commitment, I have not found ; but certain it is, that he was a prisoner in 1585, and was one of those priests who were sent into banishment that year. Upon this occasion, he made a short visit to his mother college, where he arrived, Oct. 17th ; but on the 19th of the same month, he set out again for England, in the company of Mr. John Harrison, a priest, who afterwards suffered in the same cause. Mr. Garlick's missionary labours seem to have been in his own country, Derbyshire, where he was apprehended, sometime between the Lent and Summer Assizes, 1588, together with Mr. Robert Ludlam, who was afterwards his companion in death. They were taken in the house of Mr. John Fitzherbert, by George, Earl of Shrewsbury, and committed to Derby gaol, where they found Mr. Richard Simpson, who had been condemned in the Lent assizes before, for being a priest. He also suffered death with them at the Summer assizes, being within one fortnight or a little more, after the imprisonment of the said Mr. Garlick and Mr. Ludlam.

At these assizes, these two glorious men, says Mr. Broughton's MSS., with much constancy and christian magnanimity, without the least sign of fear or dismay, professing themselves to be catholic priests, greatly rejoicing in their sacred calling and functions, were condemned to the terrible death of drawing, hanging, and quartering, for being of that holy religion and profession ; and were thereupon, after many hard usages, cruelly put to death at the said town of Derby, July 24th, 1588.

They were all three drawn together on hurdles, to the place of execution, where, when they arrived at it seems Mr Sympson was to have gone first up the ladder ; but, whether he showed on this occasion some signs of fear, as Dr. Champney's MSS. signifies, or whether it was that Mr. Garlick only apprehended a danger lest his companion's courage should fail him, if he were to be the first in the combat, he hastened to the ladder, and kissing it, went up first, and with remarkable joy and alacrity, finished his course. The Rev. Robert Ludlam, mentioned above, was born near Sheffield, educated in the English college at Rheims ; ordained priest, and sent into England upon the mission, Anno 1582. Of these three priests who died together, the following ode or poem was written by an eye-witness of their deaths.

ODE.

When Garlick did the ladder kiss,
And Sympson after hie, Methought that there St. Andrew was Desirous for to die.

When Ludlam looked smilingly,
And joyful did remain,
It seem'd St. Stephen was standing by,
For to be ston'd again.

And what if Sympson seem'd to yield,
For doubt and dread to die ;
He rose again, and won the field,
And died most constantly.

His watching, fasting, shirt of hair,
His speech, his death, and all,
To record give, do witness bear,
He wail'd his former fall.

NOTE.—Padley Hall was the house in which Mr. Garlick was arrested, and tradition tells of the estate being wholly confiscated ; because, shelter was given to him by the family of Fitzherbert.

A D D E N D A .

Under the head of "Descriptive Characteristics," Eyam is stated to be comprised in the honour of Tutbury,—it should be the honour of High Peak, or Castle of the Peak.

MANOR.

"By inquisition, 35 Edw. I., it was found that Thomas de Furnivall had purchased the manor of Eyam, of Rodger de Morteyn, without license from the Crown, for which offence he was fined, and then pardoned. The inq. states that Thomas held it by the service of ploughing and reaping on the demesne lands of the king at Braddewall, from the bond bovates as well as the free bovates of Eyam, if he who held the land had a suitable plough going." "Bradwell was the property of Peveril at the Doomsday survey, but on the attainder, it had reverted to the crown." We have again an inq., 1st Edw. II., reciting that Roger de Morteyn had held the manor of Eyam, by the service of ploughing and reaping, at the King's Castle of Peak.

Thomasine, the second wife and widow of William de Fernival, had the manor of Eyam in dowry ; she died in 1408, when the manor reverted to Maud de Nevil, wife of John Talbot, first Earl of Shrewsbury, daughter of Sir Thomas Nevil, and heiress of estates held in dower by the said Thomasine.

The manor of Eyam passed from the Mortyns to the Furnivals at least some years before the death of Edw. I., in 1307. The manor of Eyam became the property of the Saviles, not through the Countess of Pembroke, but by the marriage of Mary Talbot, daughter of George, sixth Earl of Shrewsbury, with the Saviles.

MINES.

The Eyam mineral charter is said to have been granted by king John, previously to his being created Duke of Lancaster. This is an unwarrantable statement, often found in works treating of mines in the High Peak. King John was never Duke of Lancaster. Henry Plantagenet (called "tort-col,") was created first Duke of Lancaster. John de Gand, (or Gaunt) was second Duke of Lancaster, on whose son ascending the throne as Henry the fourth, the title and estates merged in the crown. The Eyam mineral charter, according to an excellent authority, could only have existed as a myth. The same authority asks why certain portions of North Derbyshire should be called the "King's field," and insinuates that the "King's fee," is more significant. That lead ore in Eyam and other manors should be subject to tithe is matter of question, seeing that gold, silver, copper, ironstone, coal, and indeed all minerals besides lead, are exempt from such a charge.

w. L. in 18
Saviles, a marriage Shrewsbu

granted Lancas
l in w was or trading Gand ascend s men to an th. I rbyak that am a nestic feed

