PREFACE.

THE advantages that have been found to result from the publication of the First Book of the Hitopadesa, and the Selections from the Mahábhárata, as Class-books for the East-India College, have induced Professor Johnson to prepare an edition of the Megha Dúta, or Cloud Messenger, for the same purpose, on a similar plan.

The Text of the Megha Dúta was printed in the year 1813, at Calcutta. It has the faults of most of the early-printed Sanskrit books;—the words are altogether unseparated, and the Text is not always accurate. In the present edition, these defects have been remedied; the faulty passages have been corrected; and the words have been detached wherever their separation was consistent with an observance of the laws that regulate euphonic combination. A Glossary, intended to serve at once as a Lexicon and a Grammar to the Text, compiled by Professor Johnson, is added to the publication.

As the style of the poem is more difficult than that of the preceding Class-books, Professor Johnson has considered it desirable to reprint the Translation in English Verse, which was the principal object of the original publication in Calcutta; for, as considerable freedom, or, it may sometimes be thought, license, was taken in that Translation, its use will not, it is to be expected, preclude the necessity of mental effort on the part of the Student, in order to develop the sense of the Sanskrit Text, whilst it may not unallowably lighten his labour, by furnishing him with a general notion of its purport. I have acquiesced in the republication, in the hope that it will afford no greater help than it is designed to render; for experience has satisfied me that the aid of Translations, in the study of any language, except for a short time, perhaps, in the earliest stage of it, is exceedingly mischievous and deceptive. It induces carelessness, encourages indolence, exercises no faculty but the memory, and employs that faculty with so little energy of application, that the impressions received are faint and superficial, and fade and are effaced almost as soon as they are made. The progress effected with such assistance is a mere waste of even the scant expenditure of time and trouble with which it has been attained; for it is unreal—a mere mockery—as the learner will soon discover, to his surprise, and, if he feel rightly, to his mortification, when he tries his strength upon passages unprovided with such illusory aid, and finds that he is as little able to understand them as if his studies were yet to be begun. It has been with some reluctance, therefore, that I have assented to the proposition; and have done so only in the trust that the verse translation will by no means obviate the necessity of independent exertion.

The Translation of the Megha Dúta was the first attempt made by me to interest European readers in the results of my Sanskrit studies. It has the imperfections of a juvenile work; and the Translator has no doubt sometimes not only departed from his original further than was necessary, but further than was justifiable; and has occasionally mistaken its meaning. Some of the mistakes I have corrected; and in some instances have altered the arrangement of the lines, so as to adhere more nearly to the order of the original. I have not cared, however, to render the version much closer or more faithful; as even had I been inclined to take the trouble, the circumstance of the book becoming a class-book would have deterred me from the attempt: but it is very possible, that whatever poetical fidelity the version may possess, might have been injured by verbal approximation, and that the attempt to give a more literal likeness of the poem of Kálidása would only have impaired the similitude of its expression.

I have gone over the Notes with more attention, and have continued the information they convey to the present time. I have added some, and omitted some, especially those which were designed to place the parallel passages of European poets in contiguity with the language and sentiments of the Indian bard. Such analogies will readily suggest themselves to well-educated minds; and it cannot be necessary to endeavour to prove to them, that Imagination, Feeling, and Taste, are not exclusively the products of the Western Hemisphere.

The Megha Dúta, or Cloud Messenger, is recommended to a Student of Sanskrit by its style and by its subject. The style is somewhat difficult, but the difficulty arises from no faults of conception or construction. There must, of course, be some unfamiliar imagery, some figures of purely local associations, in every foreign—in every Oriental composition; but, with a few possible exceptions, the Megha Dúta contains no ideas that may not be readily apprehended by European intellect. It has no miserable conceits, no enigmatical puzzles, which bewilder a poetic reader, and overwhelm a prosaic one with despair; and which, when the riddle is solved, offer no compensation for the labour of solution. The language, although remarkable for the richness of its compounds, is not disfigured by their extravagance: the order of the sentences is in general the natural one, with no more violent inversion than is indispensable for the convenience of the rhythm. The metre combines melody and dignity in a very extraordinary manner; and will bear an advantageous comparison, in both respects, with the best specimens of uniform verse in the poetry of any language, living or dead.

The subject of the poem is simple and ingenious: a Yaksha, a divinity of an inferior order, an attendant upon the god of riches, Kuvera, and one of a class which, as it appears from the poem, is characterized by a benevolent spirit, a gentle temper, and an affectionate disposition, has incurred the displeasure of his sovereign, and has been condemned by him to a twelvemonths' exile from his home. In the solitary but sacred forest in which he spends the period of his banishment, the Yaksha's most urgent care is to find an opportunity of conveying intelligence and consolation to his wife; and, in the wildness of his grief, he fancies that he discovers a friendly messenger in a cloud—one of those noble masses which seem almost instinct with life, as they traverse a tropical sky in the commencement of the Monsoon, and move with slow and solemn progression from the equatorial ocean to the snows of the Himálaya. In the spirit of this bold but not unnatural personification, the Yaksha addresses the Cloud, and entrusts to it the message he yearns to despatch to the absent object of his attachment. He describes the direction in which the Cloud is to travel—one marked out for it, indeed, by the eternal laws of nature; and takes this opportunity of alluding to the most important scenes of Hindu mythology and tradition;—not with the dullness of prosaic detail, but with that true poetic pencil which, by a few happy touches, brings the subject of the description vividly before the mind's eye. Arrived at the end of the journey, the condition of his beloved wife is the theme of the exile's anticipations, and is dwelt upon with equal delicacy and truth; and the poem terminates with the message that is intended to assuage her grief and animate her hopes. The whole of this part of the composition is distinguished by the graceful expression of natural and amiable feelings, and cannot fail to leave a favourable impression of the national character; whilst the merely descriptive portion introduces the student to a knowledge of a variety of objects of local, traditional, and mythological value, with which it is his duty to become familiar; and which he will, when in India, contemplate with additional interest and pleasure, from his previous acquaintance with the verses of Kálidása.

Little is known of the literary history of the Megha Dúta. It is, by common assent, attributed to Kálidása, a celebrated poet, who is reputed to have been one of the ornaments of the Court of Vikramáditya, king of Ujayin, whose reign, used as a chronological epoch by the Hindus, is placed 56 years before the Christian æra. There is no reason to dispute the truth of these traditions. The poem undoubtedly belongs to a classical period of Hindu Literature; and that period, there is reason to believe, did not long survive the first centuries of Christianity. At a later date, the Poets were men of more scholarship than imagination, and substituted an overwrought display of the powers of the language for the unforced utterance of the dictates of the feeling or the fancy. This is not the case with the Megha Dúta; and although it is rather of a more sustained elevation of language than other works attributed to the same author, particularly his dramatic compositions, Sakuntalá, and Vikramá and Urvasí, yet there is a community of character in them, a similar fidelity to nature, a like delicacy and tenderness of feeling, and the same felicity of description, gracefulness of imagery, and elegance of expression, which leave it sufficiently probable that they are the works of the same master-hand. There are, indeed, in the Vikramá and Urvasí especially, passages which call the Megha Dúta to recollection; and in one place, where the deserted monarch inquires of the passing Cloud whither Urvasí has fled, we have the germ of the perhaps later poem, the Cloud Messenger. Of the other works attributed to Kálidása, the Ritu-sanhára, Raghuvansa, Málavikágnimitra, Kumára-sambhava, Sringára-tilaka, Prasnottara-málá, Hásyárnavá, and Sruta-bodha, some of them are certainly not of his composition.

The Text of the Megha Dúta has been the subject of very industrious illustration, and, as noticed in the Preface to the first edition, the copy then consulted comprehended no fewer than six commentaries. This Manuscript, the property of Mr. Colebrooke, is now in the Library at the India House, and has been made use of by Professor Johnson in the present edition. The text of the poem has been also printed at Bonn, from Manuscripts in the Royal Libraries of Paris and Copenhagen, by Mr. Gildemeister, with Notes of various readings, and a useful Glossary.

CLOUD MESSENGER.

कश्चित् कान्ताविरहगुरुणा स्वाधिकारप्रमत्तः
शापेनास्तं गमितमहिमा वर्षभोग्येन भक्तुः ॥

WHERE Rámagiri's cool, dark woods extend,
And those pure streams, where Síta bathed, descend ;

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 1. Rámagiri] Is a compound term signifying The mountain of Ráma, and may be applied to any of those hills in which the hero resided during his exile or peregrinations. His first and most celebrated residence was the mountain Chitrakúta in Bundelcund, now known by the name of Comptah, and still a place of sanctity and pilgrimage. We find that tradition has assigned to another mountain, a part of the Kimoor range, the honour of affording him, and his companions, Sítá and Lakshmana, a temporary asylum, upon his progress to the south ; and it is consequently held in veneration by the neighbouring villagers : see Capt. Blunt's journey from Chunarghur to Yertnagoodum, Asiatic Researches, vii. 60. An account of a journey from Mirzapore to Nagpore, however, in the Asiatic Annual Register for 1806, has determined the situation of the scene of the present poem to be in the vicinity of the latter city. The modern name of the mountain is there stated to be Ramtéc : it is marked in the maps, Ramtege ; but I understand the proper word is Ráminki, which, in the Marhatta language, has probably the same import as Rámagiri, The hill of Ráma. It is situated but a short distance to the north of Nagpore ; and is covered with buildings consecrated to Ráma and his associates, which receive the periodical visits of numerous and devout pilgrims.

Verse 2. Where Síta bathed.] In his exile, Ráma was accompanied by his younger brother, Lakshmana, and his faithful consort Sítá, or, as she is called in the original, the daughter of

यक्षश्चक्रे जनकतनयास्नानपुरयोदकेषु

Spoiled of his glories, severed from his wife,

ANNOTATIONS.

Janaka, until the latter was carried off by the demon or giant Rávana: see the Rámáyana. The performance of her ablutions in the springs of the mountain is here stated to have rendered their water the object of religious veneration.

Verse 4. A Yaksha] Is a demigod, of which there exists a Gaña or class. They have few peculiar attributes, and are regarded only as the companions or attendants of Kuvera, the god of wealth. The word is derived from यक्ष 'to worship'; either, because they minister to Kuvera, are revered themselves by men, or are beloved by the Apsaras, the courtezans of Indra's heaven. They have, however, their own female companions, or wives; as appears by the poem. One writer, cited and censured by a Commentator on the Amara Kosha, derives the name from जक्ष 'to eat,' because he says they devour children. Occasionally, indeed, the Yakshas appear as imps of evil; but, in general, their character is perfectly inoffensive.

Verse 5.] The lord of the Yakshas is Kuvera, who, in Hindu mythology, performs the functions of the Grecian Plutus. He is the god of wealth, and master of nine inestimable treasures. His capital is situated on mount Kailása, and inhabited by Yakshas, Kinnaras, and other inferior deities. He has a variety of appellations alluding to these circumstances, but is most commonly designated by the one here employed. The term is expressive of his deformity, being derived from कु 'vile,' and वेर 'body'; and he is described as having three legs, and but eight teeth. No images of him occur, nor is any particular worship paid to him; and in these respects there is a considerable analogy between him and his Grecian parallel. Plutus is described as blind, malignant, and cowardly; and seems to have received but very slender homage from Greek or Roman devotion. The term "sentence," here used, is, more literally, 'curse.' The text also states that it was incurred by a neglect of duty, the Yaksha having been heedless in his office, स्वाधिकारप्रसक्तः. According to the Commentators, he was the warder of the gate of Kuvera's garden; and, quitting his post for a season, allowed Indra's elephant to commit a trespass, and trample down the flower-beds.

तस्मिन्नद्रौ कतिचिदबलाविप्रयुक्तः स कामी

आषाढस्य प्रथमदिवसे मेघमाश्लिष्टसानुं
वप्रक्रीडापरिणतगजप्रेक्षणीयं ददर्श ॥ २ ॥

To these drear hills through circling days confined,
In dull unvaried grief, the god repined ; 8
And sorrow, withering every youthful charm,
Had slipped the golden bracelet from his arm ;
When with Áshárha's glooms the air was hung,
And one dark Cloud around the mountain clung ; 12
In form, some elephant, whose sportive rage,
Ramparts, scarce equal to his might, engage.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 10. Had slipped the golden bracelet from his arm.] This is a favourite idea with Hindu poets, and repeatedly occurs : thus, in the elegant drama of Sakuntalá, Dushmanta says :

इदमग्निशिरैरन्तस्तापाद्विवर्णमयीकृतं
निशि निशि भुजन्वस्तापाङ्गप्रसारिभिरश्रुभिः ।
अनभिलुलितज्याघाताङ्गान्मुहुर्मेशिबन्धनात्
कनकवलयं सस्तं सस्तं मया प्रतिसार्यते ॥

or, in Sir William Jones's version, "This golden bracelet, sullied by the flame which preys on me, and which no dew mitigates, but the tears gushing nightly from my eyes, has fallen again and again on my wrist, and has been replaced on my emaciated arm."

Verse 11. When with Áshárha's glooms.] The month Áshád'ha or Áshár'ha comprehends the latter part of June and the commencement of July, and is the period about which the south-west monsoon, or rainy season, usually sets in.

Verse 13. In form, some elephant.] Thus, in the Purána Sarvaswa, clouds are described as महिषाश्च वराहाश्च मत्स्यमातङ्गरूपिणः 'Shaped like buffaloes, boars, and wild elephants.' In Chapman's Bussy D'Ambois, they are said to assume,

In our faulty apprehensions,
The forms of dragons, lions, elephants.

तस्य स्थित्वा कथमपि पुरः केतकाधानहेतो-
 रन्तर्वाष्पश्चिरमनुचरो राजराजस्य दध्यौ ॥
 मेघालोके भवति सुखिनोऽप्यन्यथावृत्ति चेतः
 कण्ठाश्लेषप्रणयिनि जने किम्पुनदूरसंस्थे ॥ ३ ॥

Long on the mass of mead-reviving dew
 The heavenly exile fixed his eager view ; 16
 And still the melancholy tear suppressed,
 Though bitterest sorrow wrung his heaving breast.
 For e'en the happy husband, as he folds
 His cherished partner in his arms, beholds 20
 This gathering darkness with a troubled heart :
 What must they feel, whom fate and distance part !
 Such were the Yaksha's thoughts ; but fancy found
 Some solace in the glooms that deepened round ; 24

ANNOTATIONS.

And Shakspeare, although he omits the elephant, gives them, with his usual overflow of imagery, a great variety of shapes :—

Sometimes we see a cloud that's dragonish,
 A vapour sometimes like a bear or lion,
 A towered citadel, a pendant rock,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory,
 With trees upon 't, that nod unto the world,
 And mock our eyes with air.

ANTHONY & CLEOPATRA.

Verse 20. For e'en the happy husband.] The commencement of the rainy season being peculiarly delightful in Hindustan, from the contrast it affords to the sultry weather immediately preceding it, and the refreshing sensations it excites, becomes, to the lover and the poet, the same source of love and tenderness, as the season of Spring is to the young and poetical, in Europe.

And bade him hail amidst the labouring air,
 A friendly envoy to his distant fair ;
 Who, charged with grateful tidings, might impart
 New life and pleasure to her drooping heart. 28

Cheered with the thought, he culled each budding flower,
 And wildly wooed the fertilizing power ;
 (For who, a prey to agonizing grief,
 Explores not idlest sources for relief ; 32
 And, as to creatures sensible of pain,
 To lifeless nature loves not to complain ?)
 Due homage offered, and oblations made,
 The Yaksha thus the Cloud majestic prayed :— 36

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 35. And oblations made.] The oblation of the blossoms of the Kutāja, 'a small tree,' (Wrightea antidysenterica) is called Argha (अर्घ्ये) in the original, a religious rite, which seems to be analogous to the libation of the earlier periods of the Grecian ritual. अर्घ्ये, in the Amara Kosha, is described as a species of worship, and is perhaps more properly the act of offering

जातं वंशे भुवनविदिते पुष्करावत्तैकानां
जानामि त्वां प्रकृतिपुरुषं कामरूपं मघोनः ॥

Hail, friend of Indra, counsellor divine,
Illustrious offspring of a glorious line !

38

ANNOTATIONS.

offering a libation to a venerable person, or to a deity; although it also implies the oblation itself, otherwise denominated अर्घ्ये. This oblation, of which water forms the basis, is presented in a cup, a shell, or any metallic oblong and boat-shaped vessel. The vessel in the spoken dialects is called by a similar name (अर्घ) 'Argha.' Indeed, Mr. Wilford states, Asiatic Researches, iii. 364, and viii. 274, that Argha, in Sanskrit, means 'a boat;' whence he deduces the ship Argo, &c.; and whence, with Mr. Bryant's assistance, we may deduce the Ark of Scripture. The Sanskrit word, however, has not been found in any of the vocabularies of the language, with the import Mr. Wilford has assigned to it.

The oblation called Argha or Arghya, generally considered, comprises eight articles, thus enumerated :

आपः क्षीरं कुशाम्याणि दधि सर्पिश्च तण्डुलाः ।
यवाः सिद्धार्थकं चैव अष्टाङ्गार्घ्ये प्रकीर्तितम् ॥

"The eight-fold Arghya is formed of water, milk, the points of Kuśa-grass, curds, clarified "butter, rice, barley, and white mustard." In the Áchára Darśa of Śrīdatta, in a passage quoted from the Déví Purána, they are stated somewhat differently; thus,

रक्तचित्वाक्षतैः पुष्पैर्देहिदूर्वाकुशैस्त्रिलैः ।
सामान्यः स्रष्टेदेवानामर्घ्योऽयं परिकीर्तितः ॥

"The general Argha, proper for any of the gods, consists of saffron, the Bél, unbroken grain, "flowers, curds, Dúrba-grass, Kuśa-grass, and Sesamum." Water is not mentioned here, being considered as the vehicle of the whole: the same author adds, that should any of these not be procurable, they may be supplied by the imagination :

सभावे दधिदूर्वादेर्मानसं वा प्रकल्पयेत् ॥

Besides the Argha common to all the gods, there are peculiar ones for separate deities: thus we find a few new-blown buds are sufficient for a cloud; and in the Sarvaswa Purána, the Argha for the Sun is thus enumerated,

चन्दनोदकसम्मिश्रं दक्षार्घ्यं कुसुमं रवेः ॥

"Having presented an Arghya to the Sun, of water mixed with sandal, and flowers:" and an oblation to the same planet, as given by Mr. Colebrooke, Asiatic Researches, ch. v. 357, is said to consist consist of Tila, flowers, barley, water and red sanders. Water alone is also sufficient to constitute the Argha. In the articles which form the Argha of the Hindus, as well as in the mode of presentation, that of pouring it out, or libating, we trace its analogy with the ancient libation. Of course, wine could never enter into Hindu offerings of this kind; but we find that the Greeks had their νηφάλια ἱερά or 'sober sacrifices,' from which wine was excluded. These were of four kinds: τὰ ὑδρόσπονδα, 'libations of water,' τὰ μελίσπονδα 'of honey,' τὰ γαλακτόσπονδα 'of milk,' and τὰ ἐλαιόσπονδα 'of oil;' which liquors were sometimes mixed with one another. According to Porphyry, most of the libations in the primitive times were νηφάλιοι. See Potter's Antiquities of Greece. We have here, then, three of the four fluid substances of an Argha, as first enumerated above, if we may compare the clarified butter with the oil: honey would, of course, be omitted on the same account as wine, being a prohibited article in Hindu law. With respect to the solid parts of the offering, a reference to the same authority will shew that they consisted of green herbs, grains, fruits, flowers, and frankincense; analogous to the grasses, rice, barley, flowers, sandal, &c. of the Sanskrit formulæ.

And bold entrust thee with my fated woe :

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 37. Hail, friend of Indra!] Indra is the sovereign deity of Swarga, or the Hindu Olympus. The cloud is here considered as his friend or counsellor, in allusion to his functions as regent of the atmosphere, where he appears in the character of the Jupiter Tonans, or Νεφεληγερέτα Ζεύς. The appellative मघवन्, used in the original, is considered, by Etymologists, as irregularly derived from the passive form of मह, 'to adore,' 'to worship.'

Verse 38. Illustrious offspring of a glorious line.] According to the original, "Descended from the celebrated line of the Pushkarāvarttakas," translated, in a prose version of this passage, "Diluvian Clouds:" see Colebrooke on Sanskrit and Prakrit Prosody, Asiatic Researches, Vol. X. Clouds, agreeably to the Brahmānda Purāna, are divided into three classes, according to their origin from fire, the breath of Brahmā, or the wings of the mountains, which were cut off by Indra (पद्म). These latter are also called पुष्करवर्त्तक, being especially the receptacles of water. Thus, in the Purāna Sarvaswa,

पुष्कर नाम ते मेघा वृहत्स्तोयमत्सयः
पुष्करवर्त्तकास्तेन कारणेनेह शब्दिताः ॥

"The clouds called Pushkara are those large clouds which are insatiable of water; and,
on

 With high desert, than with the base prevail.
 Thou art the wretch's aid, affliction's friend ;
 To me, unfortunate, thy succour lend :
 My lonely state compassionate behold,
 Who mourn the vengeance of the god of gold ;

44

ANNOTATIONS.

“ on that account, they are called in this world, Pushkarāvarttakas.” So also it is said, upon the authority of the Váyu, Linga, and Matsya Puráñas, “ The third class of clouds is that of the Pakshaja, or those which were originally the wings of the mountains that were cut off by Indra. These are also termed Pushkarāvarttakas, from their including water in their vortices. They are the largest and most formidable of all ; and those which, at the end of the Yugas and Kalpas, pour down the waters of the Deluge.” Vishnú Puráña, p. 231, note.

Verse 39. Wearer of shapes at will ;] Or Kámarúpa ; from काम ‘ desire,’ and रूप ‘ form,’ ‘ shape’: thus Socrates, in the “ Clouds :”

Σω. Γίνονται πανθ' ὅτι ἂν βώλωνται.

Soc. Why, then,

Clouds can assume what shapes they will, believe me!

CUMBERLAND'S Translation.

Verse 40. For, better far, solicitation fail &c.] This is a sentiment of rather an original strain, and indicates considerable elevation of mind. Something of the same kind occurs in Massinger's play of the “ Bondman ;” where Pisander says,

I'd rather fall under so just a judge,
 Than be acquitted by a judge corrupt
 And partial in his censure.

Verse 46. The god of gold,] Kuvera. See above.

There shalt thou find the partner of my woes,
True to her faith, and stranger to repose ;

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 50. Where Śiva's crescent realms surrounding gilds.] The crest of Śiva is the new moon, which is sometimes described as forming a third eye in his forehead. The Himálaya mountains, amongst which we shall hereafter find Kailása to be situated, are Śiva's favourite haunts. He also resides occasionally on that mountain, and is represented as the particular friend and frequent guest of Kuvera.

Verse 52. I have here taken a liberty with the order of the original, and brought the description of the Yaksha's wife a little in advance, in order to preserve the description which follows, of the Cloud's progress, more connected. The Hindu poets are not very solicitous in general about arrangement; but it is possible that in this case I may not have improved upon that of Kálidás. The 10th stanza of the Sanskrit corresponds with these lines.

Verse 53. Alaká is the capital of Kuvera, and the residence of his dependent deities.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 70. Valáká (बलाका) is said, in Mr. Colebrooke's Amara Kosha, to mean a 'small crane.' The word is always feminine, and perhaps therefore means the female bird only. Indeed, some of the Commentators on this poem call it the female of the Vaka (वक), Ardea Torra and Putea. The rainy season is that of their gestation ; which explains their attachment to the Cloud, and the allusion to its impregnating faculty mentioned in the text of the original, गभाधानक्षमपरिचयम्.—The periodical journeys and orderly flight of this kind of bird have long furnished classical poetry with embellishments : they are frequently alluded to by Homer, as are the wild geese, of which mention is also made below :—thus, in the Iliad, Book ii. 459 :

Τῶν δ', ὡστ' ὀρνίθων πεπενηῶν ἔθνεα πολλὰ,
Χηνῶν, ἢ γεράνων, ἢ κύκνων δουλιχοδείρων,
'Ἀσίῳ ἐν λειμῶνι, Καῦστρίου ἀμφὶ ἔεθρα.

Not less their number than th' embodied cranes,
Or milk-white swans in Asia's watery plains,
That o'er the windings of Cayster's springs
Stretch their long necks and clap their rustling wings. POPE.

The translator has omitted the geese. Milton also describes the flight of these birds :

So steers the prudent Crane
Her annual voyage, borne on winds. PARADISE LOST, vii. 436.

And again, line 442 :

Others on silver lakes and rivers bathed
Their downy breast.—
—Yet oft they quit
The dank, and, rising on stiff penons, tower
The mid aërial sky.

Verse 71. The Chátaka is a bird supposed to drink no water but rain-water : of course he always always makes a prominent figure in the description of wet or cloudy weather. Thus in the rainy season of our author's (चतुसंहार) 'Rītu Sanhára,' or Assemblage of Seasons :

तृषाकुलैश्चातकपक्षिणां कुलैः
प्रयाचितास्तोयभरावलच्चिनः ।
प्रयान्ति मन्दं नववारिधारिणो
बलाहकाः श्रोत्रमनोहरस्वनाः ॥

The thirsty Chátaka impatient eyes
The promised waters of the labouring skies ;
Where heavy Clouds, with low but pleasing song,
In slow procession murmuring move along.

The Chátaka is the Cuculus Melanoleucus. The term चाम is rendered by the Commentators in general 'left,' on the left side ; but Rámanát'h Tarkalankára interprets it 'beautiful' ; and maintains that the cry of birds, to be auspicious, should be upon the right side, not upon the left. Bharata Mallika, however, cites astrological writers to prove that the Chátaka is one of the exceptions to this rule :

वर्हिणश्चातकाश्चापि ये च पुंसङ्गिताः स्वगाः ।
मृगा वा वामगा दृष्टाः सैन्यसम्पन्नप्रदाः ॥

"Peacocks, Chátakas, Cháshas (blue jays), and other male birds, occasionally also antelopes, "going cheerfully along the left, give good fortune to the host." The Greek notions agreed with those of Rámanát'h, and considered the flight of birds upon the right side to be auspicious : the Romans made it the left ; but this difference arose from the situation of the observer, as in both cases the auspicious quarter was the east ; the οἰωνοπóλος facing the north, and Aruspex the south. In general, according to the Hindus, those omens which occur upon the left side are unpropitious.

Verse 75. "The Rájahansas, desirous of going to the lake Mánasa, shall accompany thee "as far as Kailása, having laid in their provisions from the new shoots of the filaments of the "stalk of the lotus." This is the closer reading of the text. Kailása is, properly speaking, a mytho-a mythological mountain ; but the name is also applied to the lofty range that runs parallel with the Himálaya, on the north of that chain. The lake Mánasa lies between the two ranges : and it is quite true, that it is the especial resort of the wild grey goose at the beginning of the rainy season ; "Those birds finding in the rocks bordering on the lake an agreeable and safe asylum, when the swell of the rivers in the rains and the inundation of the plains conceal their usual food." Moorcroft's Journey to Mánasarovara : Asiatic Researches, xii. 466. The Rájahansa is described as a kind of goose with white body and red legs and bill ; whence Mr. Ellis affirms that it is properly applicable to the Phœnicopteros or flamingo. Asiatic Researches, xiv. 28, note.

Verse 78. With Ráma's holy feet imprest.] In the original text we have, "marked with the steps of Raghupati, venerated of men." This appellation is given to Ráma, as the most distinguished, guished, the lord or master as it were, of the line of Raghu, an ancestor of that warrior, and himself a celebrated hero and sovereign. Ráma is hence also termed Rághava (रघव), a regular derivative from Raghu, implying family descent. The exploits of the two heroes form the chief subject of another poem by our author, entitled Raghuvanśa (रघुवंश), or The race of Raghu.

Verse 85. We now begin the geographical part of the poem ; which, as far as it can be made out through the difference of ancient and modern appellations, seems to be very accurately conceived. The two extreme points of the Cloud's progress are, the vicinity of Nagpore, as mentioned in the note on Verse 1, and the mountain Kailása, or rather the Himálaya range. During this course, the poet notices some of the most celebrated places, with the greater number of which we are still acquainted. In the first instance, we have here his direction due north from the mountain of Rámagiri ; and we shall notice the other points as they occur.

Verse 87. Literally, the wives of the Siddhas. The Siddhas are originally human beings, but who, by devout abstraction, have attained superhuman powers, and a station apparently intermediate between men and gods. They tenat the upper regions of the air.

Verse 91. Each of the four quarters, and the four intermediate points of the compass, has, according to the Hindus, a regent or presiding deity. Each of these deities also has his male and female elephant. The names of them all are enumerated in the following verse of the Amara Kosha :

Verse 95. A reference to the map will shew that it was necessary for the Cloud to begin the tour by travelling towards the east, in order to get round the lofty hills which in a manner form the eastern boundary of the Vindhya chain. It would otherwise have been requisite to have taken it across the most inaccessible part of those mountains, where the poet could not have accompanied it ; and which would also have offended some peculiar notions entertained by the Hindus of the Vindhya hills, as we shall again have occasion to remark.

Verse 96. Indra's bow is the rainbow.

places enumerated in the poem before us. The easterly progress of the Cloud, and the subsequent direction by which he is to reach the mountain Ámrakúta, prove that the place here mentioned must be somewhere in the immediate vicinity of Ruttunpoor, the chief town of the northern half of the province of Cheteesger'h, and described in Captain Blunt's tour, Asiatic Researches, Vol. vii., and also in that of Mr. Colebrooke, published in the Asiatic Annual Register for 1806. The only modern traces that can be found of it are in a place called Malda, a little to the north of Ruttunpoor. In Ptolemy's map, there is a town called Maleta; and situated, with respect to the Vindhya mountains, similarly with the Mála of our poet. I should have supposed that the Mála mentioned from the geography of the Puráñas by Mr. Wilford (Asiatic Researches, viii. 336) was the same with the place alluded to in the text of Kálidása: if, however, that gentleman is correct in applying the name to the Malbhoom of Midnapoor, it will be much further to the east than will do for our present purpose, and must be an entirely different place. There is little reason to think that either of these Málas are the country of the Malli, who are mentioned by Pliny; and who are more probably the same with the Μαλλοὶ of Arrian, and the inhabitants, as is stated by Major Rennell, of the province of Multan.

Verse 104. The course pointed out to the Cloud, and an allusion which follows to the vicinity of the Narmadá river, furnish us with reasons for supposing that the mountain here mentioned is that more commonly designated by the name of Omerkuntuk. The change of sound is not more violent than it is in a number of evident corruptions from the Sanskrit language, now current in the dialects of India. The term Ámrakúta means the Mango Peak, and refers to the abundance of mango-trees in the incumbent and surrounding forests. Should this this conjecture be correct, it will invalidate the derivation assigned with some ingenuity to the word Omerkuntuk, in a prefatory note to a pleasing little oriental poem published in England, called the Metamorphosis of Sona. The author of that note imagines the proper name to be Omer Khandaka; and he is happy in the affinity of the sound, though not in his definition of the sense, as "the district of Omer" is exceedingly unmeaning, and erroneous. Amara Khandaka might mean the "immortal portion," but I do not know of any reason for assigning such an epithet to the mountain in question.

Verse 107. The Hindus have been the object of much idle panegyric, and equally idle detraction. Some writers have invested them with every amiable attribute, and they have been deprived by others of the common virtues of humanity. Amongst the excellencies denied to them, gratitude has been always particularized; and there are many of the European residents in India who scarcely imagine that the natives of the country ever heard of such a sentiment. To them, and to all detractors on this head, the above verse is a satisfactory reply; and that no doubt of its tenor may remain, I add the literal translation of the original passage. "Even a low man, when his friend comes to him for assistance, will not turn away his face, in consideration of former kindness;—how, therefore, should the exalted act thus?"

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 123. The Vindhya range of mountains holds a very distinguished station both in the mythology and geography of Hindustan : these points are both discussed at some length in the tour from Mirzapore to Nagpore, already cited ; and, as in those passages which I have been able to investigate I find a perfectly accurate statement, I shall here transcribe the words of its author.

“ Bind'h, in Sanskrit named Vind'hya, constitutes the limit between Hindustan and the Deccan. The most ancient Hindu authors assign it as the southern boundary of the region which they denominate Áryabhúma or Áryaverta. Modern authors, in like manner, make this the line which discriminates the northern from the southern nations of India. It reaches almost from the eastern to the western sea ; and the highest part of the range deviates little from the line of the tropic. The mountainous tract, however, which retains the appellation, spreads much more widely : it meets the Ganges in several places towards the north ; and the Godáveri is held to be its southern limit.

“ Sanskrit etymologists deduce its name from a circumstance to which I have just now alluded : it is called Bind'hya, says the author of a Commentary on the Amersosh, because people think (ध्यायन्ति) the progress of the sun is obstructed (वेन्ध) by it. Suitably to this notion, the most elevated ridge of this tropical range of mountains is found to run from a point that lies between Chhota Nagpore and Palamu, to another that is situated in the vicinity of Ougein. But the course of the Nermadá river better indicates the direction of the principal range of the Vind'h hills. From Amracúta, where this river has its source, on the same spot with the Sone and the Hatsu, to the gulf of Cambaya, where it disembogues itself into the sea, the channel of the Nermadá is confined by a range of hills, or by a tract of elevated ground, in which numerous rivers take their rise ; and by their subsequent course towards the Sone and Jamuna on one side, and towards the Tapti and Oodaver on the other, sufficiently indicate the superior elevation of that tract through which the Nermadá has forced its way.

The vast extent of this mountainous tract, contrasted with the small elevation of these hills, viewed from the plains of Hindustan, has furnished grounds for a legend to which the mythological writings of the Hindus often allude. Vind'hya having once prostrated himself before his spiritual guide, Agastya, still remains in that posture, by command of the holy personage. This humiliation is the punishment of his presumption, in emulating the lofty height of Himálaya and Meru. According to this legend, Vind'hya has one foot at Chunar; and hence the real name of that fortress is said to be Charanáádri (चरणादि): his other foot is, I think, placed by the same legend in the vicinity of Gayá: the vulgar, very inconsistently, suppose the head of the prostrate mountain near the temple of Vind'hya Vasini, four miles from Mirzapore."

Verse 124. The Revá is a name of the Narmadá river, which, as we have seen in the preceding note, rises from the mountain Ámrakúta or Omerkuntuk. It may be here observed, that the rivers are always personified by the Hindus, and are, in general, female personifications. Thus we have Gangá, the daughter of Jāhnu; Yamuná, the daughter of the Sun; and Revá, or Narmadá, the daughter of Himála, as is said in the hymn translated from the Váyu Purána, and given by Captain Blunt, Asiatic Researches vii. 103. The names of the Narmadá river are thus stated in the Amara Kosha,

रेवा तु नर्मदा सोमोद्भवा मेकलकन्यका

"Revá, Nermadá, Sómódbhavá, and Mekala-Kanyaká;" which are explained by the best Commentators thus, "who flows, who delights, who is descended from the line of the moon, and who is the daughter of Mekala." The last term is applied either to the Vindhya mountain, or is considered to be the name of a Rishi or saint, and progenitor of the river-goddess. Tradition has assigned to this river a very Ovidian kind of tale; which is related in Captain Blunt's tour, and which has been repeated in verse, with much elegance and spirit, by the author of the Metamorphosis of Sona.

जम्बूकुञ्जप्रतिहतरयं तोयमादाय गच्छेः ॥

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 131. The juice exuding fragrant from his head.] It is rather extraordinary that this juice which exudes from the temples of the elephant, especially in the season of rut, should have been unnoticed by modern writers on natural history, until the time of Cuvier (Regne animal), although mention of it is made by Strabo, from Megasthenes. The author of the Wild Sports of the East states, that "on each side of the elephant's temples there is an aperture about the size of a pin's head, whence an ichor exudes;" but he does not appear to have been aware of its nature. Indeed his descriptions, though entertaining, are frequently defective, owing to his extreme ignorance of the languages, the literature of which he so liberally devotes to the flames. In the Amara Kosha, this fluid is termed मदः and दानम् ; and the elephant, while it flows, is distinguished by the terms प्रभिन्नः, गर्जितः मत्तः from the animal out of rut, or after the juice has ceased to exude, and which is then called उद्धान्तः or निर्मदः. All these names are expressive of the circumstances. The exudation and fragrance of this fluid is frequently alluded to in Sanskrit poetry. Its scent is commonly compared to the odour of the sweetest flowers, and is then supposed to deceive and attract the bees. These circumstances occur in this passage from a work already referred to, the Ritu Sanhāra :—

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 151. Or can the Peacock's animated hail?] The wild peacock is exceedingly abundant in many parts of Hindustan, and is especially found in marshy places. The habits of this bird are, in a great measure, aquatic; and the setting in of the rains is the season in which they pair. The peacock is therefore always introduced in the description of cloudy or rainy weather, together with the Cranes and, Chátakas, whom we have already had occasion to notice. Thus, in a little poem descriptive of the rainy season &c., entitled Ghatakarpara (घटकर्पर), the author says, addressing his mistress—

नवासुमन्नाः शिखिनो नदन्ति मेघागमे कुन्दसमानदन्ति ॥
 O thou, whose teeth enamelled vie
 With smiling Kunda's pearly ray,
 Hear how the Peacock's amorous cry
 Salutes the dark and cloudy day!

And again, in one of the Śatakas or Centos of Bharṭṛi Hari, where he is describing the same season—

शिखिकुलकलकेका एव रम्या वनान्ताः
 सुखिनमसुखिनं वा सञ्चैमुक्त्वावदन्ति ।

156

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 154. Daśárna's fields await the coming shower.] No traces of this name are to be found in modern maps: it is enumerated in Major Wilford's lists from the Puráñas, Asiatic Researches, vol. viii. amongst the countries situated behind the Vindhya mountains; and corresponds, according to him, with the Dosarene of Ptolemy and the Periplus. Ptolemy's map has also a Dosara and Dosaronis Fluvium; and in the Pauránik list of rivers, there is also a Dosarna river, which is said to rise from the mountain Chitrakúta. It may possibly correspond, at least in part, with the modern district of Cheteesger'h, as the etymology of both words refers to similar circumstances. Cheteesger'h is so named from its being supposed to comprise Thirty-six forts; and according to Bharata, the Commentator on our text, Daśárna is derived from Daśa (दश) Ten, and Rīna (रिण), a strong hold or Durga, the Droog of the Peninsula, and thence means the district of the Ten citadels.

Verse 157. Then shall the ancient tree, &c.] A number of trees receive particular veneration from the Hindus; as the Indian fig, the Holy fig-tree, the Myrobalan trees, &c. In most villages there is at least one of these, which is considered particularly sacred, and is carefully kept and watered by the villagers, is hung occasionally with garlands, and receives the Prañám or veneratory inclination of the head, or even offerings and libations. The birds mentioned in the text by the epithet गृहबलिभुज् are the Vakas or Cranes. The term signifies "who eats the food of his female;" गृह commonly a house, meaning, in this compound, a wife. At the season of pairing, it is said that the female of this bird assists in feeding the male; and the same circumstance is stated with respect to the crow and the sparrow, whence the same epithet is applied to them also.

Verse 161. Where royal Vidiśa confers renown.] Vidiśa is described as the capital of the district of Daśārṇa. It appears to be the modern Bhilsah, in the province of Malwa. It is still a place of some note ; and is well known in India for the superior quality of the tobacco raised in its vicinity.

Verse 163. The Vetravati is the modern Betwah. It rises on the north side of the Vindhya chain ; and, pursuing a north-easterly course of 340 miles, traverses the province of Malwa and the south-west corner of Allahabad, and falls into the Jumna below Kalpee. In the early part of its course, it passes through Bhilsa or Vidiśa.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 167. Next o'er the lesser hills thy flight suspend.] The term in the text, नीचिराख्यं गिरिं, is explained by the Commentators, to signify either the hill named Níchais, a mountainous range, of little note, or of little elevation. It is of no great moment ; but perhaps the latter, which meaning we select, is the most satisfactory.

Verse 168. And growth erect to drooping flowerets lend.] This passage, more literally rendered, is, "That hill which with upright flowers is like the body with its hair on end." The erection of the hairs of the body is, with the Hindus, constantly supposed to be the effect of pleasure or delight.

Verse 171. On Naga Nadi's banks.] Some of the Commentators notice various readings of the name of this river ; which occurs as given in the translation, Naga Nadí (नगनदी), 'the mountain stream ;' Nava Nadí (नवनदी), 'the new river ;' and Vana Nadí (वननदी), 'the forest river.' It is probably one amongst a number of small streams falling from the Vindhya range of hills ; and, indeed, the whole province of Malwa abounds in water ; so that, as is stated in the Ayeen Akbery, "you cannot travel two or three cose without meeting with streams of good water, whose banks are shaded by the wild-willow and other trees, and decorated with the hyacinth and other beautiful and odoriferous flowers." Gladwin's Translation, vol. ii.—I have given the preference to the Naga Nadí as above, from finding a river west of the Betwah, which we have crossed, named the Parbatty ; and which, rising in the Vindhya chain, runs north-west, till it joins another called, in Arrowsmith's Map, the Sepra ; and the two together fall into the Chumbul. The word Parbatty, or Párvatí, means, 'sprung from the mountains ;' and Naga Nadí, as I have mentioned, bears a similar import ; so that they possibly are synonyms of the same stream.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 175. As, while the garland's flowery stores they seek.] The use of garlands in the decoration of the houses and temples of the Hindus, and of flowers in their offerings and festivals, furnishes employment to a particular tribe or caste, the Málakáras or wreath-makers. The females of this class are here alluded to.

Verse 181. Ujjayiní, or the modern Oujein, is supposed to have been the residence of our poet, and the capital of his celebrated patron, Vikramáditya. Few cities, perhaps, can boast of a more continuous reputation ; as it has been a place of great note, from the earliest periods of Hindu tradition down to the present day. It is now in the possession of the family of Scindiah, and is the capital of his territories. A full and highly-interesting account of it is to be found in the Sixth Volume of the Asiatic Researches, in the Narrative of a Journey from Agra to this city, by the late Dr. Hunter,—a gentleman, the activity of whose mind was only equalled by the accuracy of his judgment, and the extensiveness of whose acquirements was only paralleled by the unwearied continuance of his exertions.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 184. Dark are thy days.] The expression of the poet is simply, "If you do not enjoy "the glances, &c., you are defrauded" (वञ्चितो ऽसि), and the Commentators explain it by adding, "of the object of your life." That is, if you have not seen these beauties, you might as well have been blind, or not have existed at all. This compliment is rather hyperbolic; but we are acquainted with it in Europe: and the Italian proverb, "He who has not seen Rome has not seen any thing," conveys a similar idea.

Verse 186. Fair Nirvindhya leads.] This stream has not been found by name in the maps; but a number of small rivers occur between the Parbatty and the river mentioned below, the Sipra, one of which must be the Nirvindhya of the poet. The four following lines, descriptive of the female personification of the current, are englished rather with respect to the sense than the words, the plainness of which might perhaps offend European fastidiousness. There is not, however, any one of Kálidása's river-ladies who behaves so indecorously as several of Drayton's similar personifications; and there is not one of them possessed of speech at all, to say nothing of such speech as is made use of by the HAYLE, and other like "lusty nymphs," of that author's Poly-olbion.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 191. Behold the Sindhu glide.] This is a stream also, with which the maps are not acquainted by name. As, however, it is the nearest river to Oujein, it may probably be the same with that now called Ságurmuttee. The river having been diminished by the preceding hot weather, the poet compares it to a long single braid of hair ; and, conformably to the personification of it as a female, he supposes the braid to have been bound, in consequence of the absence of the Cloud, after the fashion in which the hair is worn by those women whose husbands are absent ;—a custom we shall again be called upon to notice.

Verse 196. The synonyms of Oujein are thus enumerated in the Vocabulary of Hemachandra :

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 199. Renowned for deeds &c.] I have here taken some liberty with the text, the literal translation of which is "famous for the story of Udayana, and the number of its learned men." The story of Udayana, or Vatsarája, as he is also named, is thus told concisely, by the Commentators on the poem:—Pradyota was a sovereign of Ujjein, who had a daughter named Vāsavadattá, and whom he intended to bestow in marriage upon a king of the name of Sanjaya. In the mean time, the princess sees the figure of Vatsarája, sovereign of Kusha Dwípa, in a dream, and becomes enamoured of him. She contrives to inform him of her love, and he carries her off from her father and his rival. The same story is alluded to in the Málati Mádhava, a drama by Bhavabhúti; but neither in that, nor in the Commentary on the Megha Dúta, is mention made of the author, or of the work in which it is related. Mr. Colebrooke, in his learned Essay on Sanskrit and Prákrit Prosody, in the Tenth Volume of the Asiatic Researches, has stated, that the allusion by Bhavabhúti was unsupported by other authority; not having, perhaps, noticed the similar allusion in this poem. He has also given an abstract of the Vāsavadattá of Subandhu; a tale which corresponds, in many points, with that of Udayana, as here explained. Udayana is also the hero of part of the Kathá Sarit Ságara; and his marriage with Vāsavadattá is there related in nearly a similar manner as that just described. The story was evidently popular; and the text might be rendered Ujjayin, "great or illustrious by the number of those skilled in the tale of Udayana."

Verse 204. The only recompence then left to Heaven.] To understand this properly, it is necessary to be acquainted with some of the Hindu notions regarding a future state. The highest highest kind of happiness is absorption into the divine essence, or the return of that portion of spirit which is combined with the attributes of humanity, to its original source. This happiness, according to the philosopher, is to be attained only by the most perfect abstraction from the world, and freedom from passion, even while in a state of terrestrial existence : but there are certain places, which, in the popular creed, are invested with so much sanctity, as to entitle all who die within their precincts to final absorption or annihilation. One of these is Oujein, or Avantí ; and they are all enumerated in this verse :

अयोध्या मथुरा माया काशी काञ्ची अवन्तिका ।
पुरी द्वारवती चैव सप्तैता मोक्षदायिकाः ॥

“ Ayodhyá, Mathurá, Máyá, Káśí, Káñchí, Avantiká, and the city Dwárávatí, are the seven “ places which grant eternal happiness.”

Besides this ultimate felicity, the Hindus have several minor degrees of happiness ; amongst which is the enjoyment of Indra’s Swarga, or, in fact, of a Muhammadan paradise. The degree and duration of the pleasures of this paradise are proportioned to the merits of those admitted to it ; and “ they, who have enjoyed this lofty region of Swarga, but whose virtue is exhausted, revisit the habitation of mortals.” The case now alluded to seems, however, to be something different from that so described by Sir William Jones. It appears, by the explanation of the Commentators, that the exhausted pleasures of Swarga had proved insufficient for the recompence of certain acts of austerity, which, however, were not such as to merit final emancipation : the divine persons had therefore to seek elsewhere for the balance of their reward ; and for that purpose they returned to Earth, bringing with them the fairest portion of Swarga, in which they continued to live in the discharge of pious duties till the whole account was settled, and their liberated spirits were re-united with the great, uniform, and primeval essence. The portion of Swarga thus brought to Earth was the city Avantí ; whose superior sanctity and divine privileges are here alluded to, and thus explained by the poet.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 211. The Siprá is the river upon the banks of which Oujein stands, and which is called Sipparah in the maps. In Arrowsmith, however, there is another stream with a similar name, the Siprá, which appears to be a continuation of the Sagarmuttee, considerably to the north-east of Oujein. There can be no doubt of the position of the river mentioned by the poet.

Verse 216. The painted footstep.] Staining the soles of the feet with a red colour, derived from the Mehndee, the Lac, &c., is a favourite practice of the Hindu toilet. It is thus elegantly alluded to in the Ode to one of the Female Personifications of Music, the Ráginí Asauveree :

And lent them all its bloom.

Verse 223. The Commentators have thought proper, in explaining this verse and the preceding, to transpose the order of the explanations ;—I do not see for what reason, and have therefore conformed to the text.

Verse 224. The god whom earth and hell and heaven obey.] “ Lord of the three worlds ” is the expression of the original text : the worlds are, Swarga or heaven, Pátála or hell, and Bhúmi or the earth.

Verse 226. With awe, in thee, his neck's celestial blue.] The dark blue of the Cloud is compared to the colour of the neck of Śiva, which became of this hue upon his swallowing the poison produced at the churning of the ocean. The story is thus related in Wilkins's Translation of an Episode of the Mahábhárat, affixed to his Bhagavad Gítá :—“ As they continued to churn the ocean more than enough, that deadly poison issued from its bed, burning like a raging fire ; whose dreadful fumes in a moment spread throughout the world, confounding the three regions of the universe with its mortal stench, until Seev, at the word of Brahmá, swallowed the Verse 232. Till evening brings its sacred ritual, rest.] There are three daily and essential ceremonies performed by the Brahmans, termed Sandhyás (सन्ध्या), either from the word Sandhi (सन्धि), 'junction,' because they take place at the joinings of the day as it were, that is, at dawn, noon, and twilight: or as the term is otherwise derived from सम् 'with,' and ध्यै, 'to meditate religiously.' When the ceremonies of the Sandhyá are of a public nature, they comprehend the ringing of bells, blowing the conch, beating a tabor, &c.; and this kind of sound the Cloud is directed by the Yaksha to excite, as an act of devotion.

As from thy presence, showers benign and sweet

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 238. The gorgeous chowrie.] The Chowrie, or more properly Chounri (چونری), is a brush of Peacock's feathers, or the tail of a particular kind of cow, &c., set in a handle of such materials as suit the fancy or the means of the proprietor. It is used for a fan, or to whisk off flies and other insects; and this piece of attention is always paid by the Hindus to the figures of their gods.

Verse 240. Whose glances gleam, like bees, along the sky.] Although this allusion may be new to European imagery, it is just and pleasing. The consequence of the glance is well conveyed by the sting of the bee, while its poetically radiating nature is not unaptly compared to the long flight of a line of these insects. The lengthened light of a glance is familiar to us; for Shakspeare speaks of "eyes streaming through the airy region": and the continuous flight of bees was noticed so long back as the time of Homer, who describes them as proceeding in branches, a circumstance which his translator, Pope, has omitted:—

Βοτρυδὸν δὲ πέτονται ἐπ' ἀνθεσιν εἰαρινοῖσιν.

Branching, they fly abroad o'er vernal flowers;

Or, as in Pope,

Clust'ring, in heaps on heaps, the driving bees &c.

Verse 242. And soothe their tender feet.] It is to be recollected that these ladies are dancing bare-footed: divesting the feet of the shoes is a mark of reverence or respect paid to sacred places, such as the interior or vestibule of a temple, which has been from the remotest times practised in the East, as we know from the authority of Scripture.

वेश्यास्त्वत्तो नखपदमुखान् प्राप्य वर्षायविन्दू-

Nay, more,—Bhaváni shall herself approve,
And pay thy services with looks of love ;

244

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 243. Bhaváni shall herself approve.] Bhaváni is one of the many names of the consort of Śiva. The reason of her satisfaction, and indeed the whole of this passage, although familiar to a Hindu, and although much amplified in the translation, requires a little explanation, to be rendered intelligible to the English reader. Śiva is supposed to be dancing at the performance of the evening Sandhyá, and to have assumed as his cloak the bloody skin of an elephant formerly belonging to an Asura destroyed by him. As this is no very seemly ornament, Bhaváni is delighted to find it supplied by the Cloud ; which being of a dusky red, through the reflexion of the China roses now abundant, and being skirted, as it overhangs a forest, by the projecting branches of trees, resembles the elephant hide in colour, and its dangling limbs as well as in its bulk, and is mistaken for it by Śiva in his religious enthusiasm. The office performed by the Cloud has often been assigned to it in the West : thus, Horace, Ode II. Book I. :

Nube candentes humeros amictus,
Augur Apollo.—

Or come Apollo, versed in fate, and shroud
Thy shining shoulders with a veiling cloud.

So Milton, in his Penseroso, speaking of the Morning, describes it as Kerchief'd in a comely cloud.

Lee invests sentiments of the mind with a similar garb, and has—

For true Repentance never comes to late ;
As soon as born, she makes herself a shroud,
The weeping mantle of a fleecy cloud.

And a Poet of later day, but of no inferior name, has made a very fine use of this figure :

I've known her long, of worth most excellent ;
But in the day of woe she ever rose
Upon the mind with added majesty ;
As the dark mountain more sublimely towers,
Mantled in clouds and storm.

The action, the elephant skin, and other attributes of Śiva, are well described in a passage cited by Mr. Colebrooke, in his Essay on Sanskrit Prosody, from the Drama of Bhavabhūti, though there assigned to a form of his consort Durgā :

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 281. Which glistening Sapharas.] The Saphara is described as a small white glistening fish; which darting rapidly through the water, is not unaptly compared to the twinkling glances of a sparkling eye. Assigning the attributes of female beauty to a stream, ceases to be incongruous when we advert to its constant personification by the Hindus: and it is as philosophical as it is poetical, to affianc a River and a Cloud. The smiles of rivers, nay, of the Ocean itself, have often been distributed by poetical imagination: thus Lucretius, invoking Venus, says,

Tibi rident æquora ponti.

The ocean waves laugh on you:

for his late translator, Mr. Good, is very angry at the conversion of this laugh into a smile, as effected by less daring of his predecessors. Milton again gives to the Ocean, nose, as well as dimples:

Cheered with the grateful smell, old Ocean smiles,

And Metastasio, in his beautiful Ode to Venus, has,

E i flutti ridono

Nel mar placati.

The waves now placid play,

And laugh amidst the deep.

All these, however, as well as our author, are far surpassed by Drayton, in his Poly-olbion; where hill and dale, forest and river, are constantly described with male or female attributes. With respect to the streams, he is not satisfied with wedding them to various objects, but fairly subjects them to the pains of parturition. The instances are frequent; but we may be content with the following, especially as it is explained and defended by his very learned illustrator:—

When

 Great Albion to this nymph an earnest suitor was,
 And bare himself so well, and so in favour came,
 That he in little time upon this lovely dame
 Begot three maiden Isles, his darlings and delight.

“As Albion (son of Neptune), from whom that first name of this Britain was supposed, is well fitted to the fruitful bed of this Pool, thus personated as a sea-nymph, the plain truth (as words may certify your eyes, saving all impropriety of object) is, that in the Pool are seated three isles, Bruntsey, Fursey, and St. Helen's, in situation and magnitude as I name them. Nor is the fiction of begetting the Isles improper, seeing Greek antiquities tell us of divers in the Mediterranean and the Archipelagus ; as, Rhodes, Delus, Hiera, the Echinades, and others which have been, as it were, brought forth out of the salt womb of Amphitrite.” SELDEN'S Illustrations.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 294. Devagiri is the mountain of the deity, and may perhaps be the same with a place called, in the map, Dewagur, situated south of the Chumbul, in the centre of the province of Malwa, and precisely in the line of the Cloud's progress ; which, as we shall hereafter find, has been continued nearly due north from Oujein. This hill is the site of a temple of Kártikeya ; which, as well as that of Śiva described above, we must suppose to have enjoyed, in the days of antiquity, considerable reputation, or they would not have been so particularly specified in the poem.

Verse 296. Bathed in the dews of heaven.] "Moistened with the waters of the Mandákini," the celestial Ganges. Skanda, or Kártikeya, is the son of Śiva and Párvatí, and the Mars of Hindu mythology. There are various legends respecting his birth, one of which is presently noticed by the poet.

Verse 297. Several instances of the solitary production of offspring occur in the Hindu as well as in the Grecian mythology. Thus, as Pallas sprang from the brow of Jupiter, we have Skanda generated solely by the deity Śiva : Gangá springs from the head of the same deity, and Ganeśa is the self-born son of the goddess Párvatí. The miraculous birth of the warrior deity, deity, Skanda, was for the purpose of destroying Táraka, an Asur or demon, who, by the performance of continued and severe austerities, had acquired powers formidable to the gods. The eccentric genius of Southey has rendered it unnecessary, by his poem, 'The Curse of Keháma,' for me to explain the nature or results of these acts of devotion. The germ of Skanda was cast by Síva into the flame of Agni, the god of fire ; who, being unable to sustain the increasing burden, transferred it to the goddess Gangá : she accordingly was delivered of the deity, Skanda ; who was afterwards received and reared, among thickets of the Śara reed (Saccharum Sara), by the six daughters of a king, named Krittiká ; or, according to other legends, by the wives of seven great Rishis or Saints. In either case, they form in astronomy the asterism of the Pleiades. Upon his coming to maturity, Skanda encountered and killed the demon, who had filled the region of Indra with dismay :—

 And a fair river through the regions spread. 312

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 305 &c. Whose moulting plumes, to love maternal dear.] Skanda, or Kártikeya, is represented mounted upon a peacock; and Bhaváni we have already seen is the wife of Śiva, and half-mother to this deity. We have also noticed the frequency of the allusion to the delight the peacock is supposed to feel upon the appearance of cloudy and rainy weather.

Verse 310. Rantideva is the son of Sankriti, and sixth in descent from Bharata. Vishnú Purána, p. 450.

Verse 311. Sprung from the blood of countless oxen shed.] The sacrifice of the horse or of the cow, the गोमेषा or अश्वमेषा, appears to have been common in the earliest periods of the Hindu ritual. It has been conceived that the sacrifice was not real, but typical; and that the form of sacrificing only was performed upon the victim, after which it was set at liberty. The text of this passage, however, is unfavourable to such a notion, as the metamorphosis of the blood of the kine into a river certainly implies that blood was diffused. The expression of the original, literally rendered, is, "sprung from the blood of the daughters of Surabhi," that is, 'kine;' Surabhi being a celebrated cow produced at the churning of the ocean, and famed for granting to her votaries whatever they desired. "Daughter of Surabhi" is an expression of common occurrence, to denote the cow.

Verse 312. And a fair river through the regions spread.] The name of this river is not mentioned in the text of the poem, but is said by the Commentators to be the Charmanvatí; and such a name occurs in Major Wilford's lists, from the Puránas, amongst those streams which seem to arise from the north-west portion of the Vindhya mountains. The modern appellation

त्वय्यादातुं जलमवनते शार्ङ्गिणो वर्णचौरै

 To rob the river's scanty stores intent ;
 As clothed in sacred darkness not thine own,
 Thine is the azure of the costly stone, 320

ANNOTATIONS.

appellation of the Charmanvatí is generally conceived to be the Chumbul, which corresponds with it in source and situation ; and which, as it must have been traversed by the Cloud in its northerly course, would most probably have been described by the poet. It may be curious to trace the change of Charmanvatí into Chumbul ; which seems very practicable, notwithstanding their present dissimilarity. Tavernier, describing the route from Surat to Agra by way of Brampore, calls this river the Chammelnadi ; the possessive termination Vati (वती) having been confounded with the Nadí (नदी) 'a river' : Chammelnadi is, therefore, the Chammel river. Again, the addition Nadí being regarded as superfluous, it has been dropped altogether, and we have the Chammel, or Chambel. The word Chammel may readily be deduced from Charman ; as, in the dialects of Hindustan, the letters N and L are constantly interchangeable, and careless pronunciation may easily convert Chammel into Chammel, or Chambel.

Verse 314. These two lines occur a little earlier in the Sanskrit ; but as they seemed more connected with the two following, and to be rather awkward in their original position, they have been introduced here.

Verse 319. In sacred darkness not thine own.] Being of the same dark blue colour as Krishná ; a hue the poet charges the Cloud with having stolen.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 321. A central sapphire &c.] This comparison, when understood, is happily imagined ; but to understand it, we must suppose ourselves above the Cloud, and to be looking obliquely downwards upon its dark body ; as shining drops of rain form a continuous line on either side of it, and connect it with the earth.

Verse 324. Daśapura, according to its etymology, should mean a district ; that of the ten cities. It is said however, by the Commentators, to be the name of a city ; and by one of them, Mallináth, to be that of the city of Rantideva : if he is correct, it may possibly be the modern Rintimpore or Rantampore ; especially as that town, lying a little to the north of the Chumbul, and in the line from Oujein to Tahnesar, is consequently in the course of the Cloud's progress, and the probable position of Daśapura.

Verse 329. Such contrast as the lovely Kunda shews.] The Kunda (Jasminum pubescens) bears a beautiful white flower ; and the large black bee being seated in the centre of its cup, they they afford a very delicate and truly poetical resemblance to the dark iris, and white ball of a full black eye.

Verse 331. Hence to the land of Brahmá's favoured sons.] Brahmávartha (ब्रह्मावर्त्त) is the abode of Brahmá, or the holy land of the Hindus. It is thus described by Menu, ii. 17 :

सरस्वतीद्वयद्वयोर्देवद्वयोर्देवद्वयम् ।
 तं देवनिर्मितं देशं ब्रह्मावर्त्तं प्रचक्षते ॥

“Between the two divine rivers, Saraswatí and Drishadwatí, lies the tract of land which the sages have named Brahmávartha, because it was frequented by the gods.”

Verse 332. Kuru-Kshetra (कुरुक्षेत्र), the Field of the Kurus, is the scene of the celebrated battle between them and the Pándus, which forms the subject of the Mahábhárata. It lies a little to the south-east of Tahnesar, and is still a place of note and pilgrimage. It is not far from Panniput, the seat of another celebrated engagement, that between the assembled Princes of Hindustan, and the combined strength of the Marhattas. This part of the country, indeed, presenting few obstacles to the movement of large armies, has in every period of the history of Hindustan been the theatre of contention.

Verse 335. Arjun was the friend and pupil of Kṛishna, and the third of the Pándava Princes. He has been long ago introduced to European readers, especially in Sir Charles Wilkins's able translation of the Bhagavad-Gítá; and appears, in the opening of that poem, in a very amiable light :

Verse 336. As the horses and swords of chivalry received particular names, so the weapons of the Hindu knights have been similarly honoured. Gándíva is the bow of Arjuna.

Verse 339. The Saraswatí, or, as it is corruptedly called, the Sursooty, falls from the southern portion of the Himálaya mountains, and runs into the great desert, where it is lost in the sands. It flows a little to the north-west of Kuru-kshetra ; and though rather out of the line of the Cloud's progress, not sufficiently so to prevent the introduction into the poem of a stream so celebrated and so holy.

Verse 342. We have here the reason why the waters of the Saraswatí are objects of religious veneration. Balaráma is the eldest brother of Kṛishná. He is called (लाङ्गली) Lángalí, (हलभृत्) Halabhṛit, &c., from his being armed with a ploughshare ; which he is said to have employed employed as bills were formerly used, for pulling his enemies down from their horses, &c., which enabled him then to dispatch them with his club. Although Kṛishná took an active part in the warfare between the Kurus and Páñdus, Balaráma refused to join either party; and retired into voluntary seclusion, filled with grief at the nature of the contest: 'deserting,' the poet says, 'his favourite liquor marked by the eyes of Revatí;'—that is, emulating their brightness as she shared the revels of her husband. Vishnú Purána, p. 510, 604.

Verse 345. The name is Kalakhala in the original, but it more properly is as given above. The meaning of the word, agreeably to a forced etymology, is thus explained in the Gangá-dwára Máhátmya section of the Skanda Purána :

खलः को नात्र मुक्तिं वै भजते तत्र मञ्जनात् ।

षतः कनखलं तीर्थे नाम्ना चक्रुर्मुनीश्वरः ॥

"What man (कः) so wicked (खलः) as not to obtain (न) future happiness from bathing there? Thence the holy sages have called this Tírtha, by the name of Kanakhala."

It also occurs in this passage of the Hari Vansa portion of the Mahábhárata :

गङ्गाद्वारं कनखलं सोमो वै यत्र संस्थितः ॥

"Gangádwára, Kanakhala, and where the moon impends:"

and, in both instances, is applied to the place where the Ganges descends into the low ground of Hindustán. The name is still retained; as appears from the testimony of an impartial witness, Lieut. Webb, in his Survey of the Sources of the Ganges; a survey which has essentially improved the geography of those regions:—"The party arrived at Haridwára, and encamped at the village of Kanakhala" (Kankhal), on the west bank of the Ganges, at the distance of about two miles from the fair." Asiatic Researches, xi. 449. The Ganges does not now descend at Kankhal; and it is a question for geologists to solve, whether the Ganges has, in the course of nineteen centuries, so corroded the skirts of the mountain, as to have thrown back the gorge through which she passes, a distance of two miles. See note on a view of Kankhal, Oriental Portfolio.

Verse 346. Where Jahnu's daughter from the hills descends.] Jahnu's daughter is Gangá, or the Ganges; which river, "after forcing its way through an extensive tract of mountainous country, here first enters on the plains." It is rather extraordinary that Kálidása should have omitted the name of Haridwára (Hurdwár), and preferred Kanakhala, especially as the former occurs in the Puráñas, in the Skanda Puráña, as mentioned in the note, page 450, vol. xi. of the Researches; and in this passage from the Matsya Puráña, cited in the Puráña Sarvaswa :

सर्वत्र सुलभा गङ्गा त्रिषु स्थानेषु दुर्लभा ।
हृदिहारे प्रयागे च गङ्गासागरसङ्गमे ॥

"The Ganges is everywhere easy of access, except in three places, Haridwára, Prayága, and her junction with the sea." Jahnu is the name of a sage, who, upon being disturbed in his devotions by the passage of the river, drank up its waters. Upon relenting, however, he allowed the stream to re-issue from his ear; and the affinity of Gangá to the saint arises from this second birth.

Verse 348. Conveyed the sons of Sagara to heaven.] The Ganges, according to the legend, was brought from heaven, by the religious rites of Bhagírátha, the great-grandson of Sagar; who, as well as that king, had engaged in a long series of acts of austerity, for the purpose of procuring the descent of the river to wash the ashes of Sagar's 60,000 sons. The youths had been reduced to this state by the indignation of Kapila, a saint, whose devotions they had disturbed in their eager quest of the horse that was to be the victim of an Aśwamedha by their father. Their misfortunes did not, however, cease with their existence; as their admission to Swarga depended, according to the instructions of Garuda, upon the use of the water of the Ganges in the administration of their funeral rites. At this period the Ganges watered the plains of heaven alone; and it was no easy undertaking to induce her to resign those for an humble and earthly course. Sagara, his son Ansuman, and grandson Dilípa, died without being able to effect the descent of the heavenly stream: but his great-grandson, Bhagírátha, was more fortunate; and his long-continued austerities were rewarded by the fall of the Ganges, the bathing of the ashes of his ancestors with the holy water, and the establishment of them in the enjoyments of Swarga. The whole story is told in the First Book of the Rámáyana, from the 32d to the 35th section.

Verse 349. She, who with smiling waves disportive strayed.] The earth being unable to bear the sudden descent of so great a river as the Ganges, Śiva was induced, at the intercession of Bhagíratha, to interpose his sacred head. Accordingly, Gangá first alighted on the head of the deity, and remained for a considerable period wandering amongst the tresses of his long and entangled hair, to the extreme jealousy and displeasure, according to Kálidása, of the goddess Gauri or Párvatí, Śiva's consort.

Verse 355. Thy form, like Indra's Elephant.] We have already noticed that presiding deities are attached to the various points of the compass, and that each of these deities is furnished with a male and female Elephant. Amongst these, the most distinguished is Airá-vata, the Elephant of Indra, in his capacity of Regent of the East.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 358. As where the Jumna mingles with the tide.] The waters of the Jumna, or Yamuná, are described as much darker than those of the Ganges at the point of their confluence, from the circumstances of the stream being less shallow and less discoloured with clay or sand. Occasionally, indeed, the waters of the Ganges there are so white from the diffusion of earthy particles, that, according to the creed of the natives, the river flows with milk. The confluence of rivers always forms a sacred spot in India : but the meeting of the Ganges and Jumna at Prayága or Allahabad, from the sanctity of both the currents, and from the supposed subterraneous addition of the Saraswatí, is a place of distinguished holiness.

Verse 359. As Śiva's Bull upon his sacred neck.] The Bull is the vehicle of Śiva, and the animal of the god is always painted of a milk-white colour.

Verse 364. And the Musk Deer spring frequent from the caves.] This animal is what is called the Thibet Musk ; “ but its favourite residence is among the lofty Himalley (Himálaya) mountains, which divide Tartary from Hindustán.” See the best account of the Musk Deer yet published, in Gladwin's Oriental Miscellany, Calcutta 1798, accompanied with accurate drawings by Mr. Home, of the figure, teeth, hoofs, &c.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 365. Should forest flames arise.] The conflagration of the woods in India is of frequent occurrence; and the causes of it are here described by the poet. The intertwining branches of the Saral (Pinus longifolia), of the Bambu, and other trees, being set in motion by the wind, their mutual friction engenders flame. This spread abroad by the air, and, according to the poet, by the thick tails of the Yak of Tartary or Bos Grunniens (from which Chowries are made), readily communicates to the surrounding foliage, dried up by the heat of the sun, and exceedingly inflammable. The burning of a forest is so well described in the Ritu Sanhára, that I cannot avoid citing the passage, although its length perhaps requires an apology :

Brighter than blooming Safflower's vermil glow ;
Brighter than Minium's fierceness, as they wind

Play through the leaves, along the trunk ascend,
And o'er the top in tapering radiance end.
The crackling Bambu rushing flames surround,
Roar through the rocks, and through the caves resound.
The dry blade fuel to their rage supplies,
And instant flame along the herbage flies,
Involves the forest tenants in its sphere,

Like palest gold the towering ray aspires,
And wafting gusts diffuse the wasting fires :
Wide fly the sparks, the burning branches fall,
And one relentless blaze envelopes all.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 373. The Śarabha is a fabulous animal, described as possessing eight legs, and of a fierce untractable nature. It is supposed to haunt these mountains especially.

Verse 376. White as a brilliant smile.] It is remarkable that a laugh or smile is always compared to objects of a white colour, by Hindu writers.

Verse 377. Next to the mountain, with the foot imprest.] The fancied or artificial print of some saint or deity on hills or detached stones is a common occurrence in the creeds of the East. The idea is not confined to the inhabitants of Hindustán ; but is asserted similarly by those of Nepal, Ceylon, and Ava ; as may be seen in Turner's Journey to Nepal, Symes's Embassy to Ava, &c. The Mussulmans also have the same notion with respect to many of the Prophets ; for they believe that the marks of Adam's feet remain on a mountain in the centre of Ceylon ; and that those of Abraham were impressed upon a stone which was formerly at Mecca, and which he had used as a temporary scaffold in constructing the upper part of the primary Kaaba. A number of similar stories may be found in Mirkhond, and other Mohammedan authors. The Himálaya mountains are the scene of most of Śiva's adventures, his religious abstraction, his love, marriage, &c. ; and the place here mentioned may have some connexion with the Ghát, and neighbouring hill at Haridwára, mentioned in Capt. Raper's account of the survey of the Ganges, by the name of Haraka Pairi, ' the foot of Hara or Śiva.'

And there eternal offerings have blazed,
And blest the faithful worshippers ; for they
The stain of sin with life shall cast away, 384
And, after death, a glad admittance gain
To Śiva's glorious and immortal train.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 380. Around the spot in pious circles go.] Circumambulating a venerable object, or person, is a usual mark of profound respect. Thus, in Sakuntalá, Kanwa thus addresses his foster-daughter, on the eve of her departure :

वत्से इतः सद्यो हुताग्नीन् प्रदक्षिणीकुरुष्व ।

“ My best beloved, come and walk with me round the sacrificial fire.”

And again, in the Rámáyana, we have the same ceremony described thus :

जनकस्य वचः श्रुत्वा पाणीन् पाणिभिरस्सृशन् ।

चत्वारस्ते चतसृणां वशिष्ठस्य मते स्थिताः ॥

अग्निं प्रदक्षिणं कृत्वा वेदिं यजानमेव च ।

चुषीश्चापि महात्मानः सहभार्या रघूद्वहाः ॥

“ Hearing the words of Janaka, the four supporters of Raghu's race, previously placed according to the direction of Vasiṣṭha, took the hands of the four damsels within theirs, and, with their spouses, circumambulated the fire, the altar, the king, and the sages.”

Rámáyana, with Translation, 1, 60, 37.

A somewhat similar practice seems to have been in use amongst the Celtic nations. The Highland leech, who is called to the aid of Waverley, “ would not proceed to any operation until he had perambulated his couch three times, moving from east to west, according to the course of the sun.” And Sir Walter Scott observes, in a Note, that “ the Highlanders will still make the ‘ deasil ’ ” (the circumambulation, or ‘ pra-dakṣiṇa ’) “ around those whom they wish well to.”

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 391. The lovely songsters of the skies] are the females of the Kinnaras, or demigods, attendant upon Kuvera, and the musicians of Swarga.

Verse 392. Hymns to the victor of Tripura rise.] Tripura is the name of a city, or rather, as its etymology implies, three cities collectively: these formed the domain of a celebrated Demon, or Asur, destroyed by Śiva, and were reduced to ashes by that Deity. According to the Commentators, we have here a full and complete concert in honour of Mahādeva.

Verse 394. And Krauncha's celebrated pass select.] I have not been able to make any thing of this pass or hole (क्रीचरन्ध्र). The original text states it to be on the very skirt (उपतट) of the snowy mountain; and calls it also हंसद्वार, 'The gate of the geese,' who fly annually this way to the Mānasarovara lake. Krauncha is described as a mountain, in the Mahābhārat; and, being personified, is there called the son of Maināka. A mountain also called Krauncha Meru occurs in Mr. Wilford's lists, amongst those mountains situated in the north. It must lie at some distance from the plains; and perhaps the Poet, by using the term उपतट, implies its relative situation with the loftiest part of the range or proper snow-clad mountains.

 A god triumphant o'er creation spread. 400

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 396. And erst a Hero's mighty arrows tore.] The Krauncha pass, or defile, in the Krauncha mountain, is said to have been made by the arrows of Bhṛigupati, or Paraśurāma, who was educated by Śiva on Mount Kailāsa, and who thus opened himself a passage from the mountains upon the occasion of his travelling southwards to destroy the Kshatriya or military race. Paraśurāma is an Avatār, or descent of Vishnú, in the person of the son of the Saint Jamadagni; and this Saint being also descended from the celebrated sage Bhṛigu, his son is named Bhṛigupati, or, Chief of that race. See Legend of Paraśurāma, Vishnú Purāna, p. 401. The fissure in the Krauncha mountain is, in the Vāyu and Vāmana Purānas, ascribed to Kārtikeya. Ibid, p. 169, note 10.

Verse 399. The sable foot that Bali marked with dread.] The story of Bali and the Vāmana, or dwarf Avatār, was first told by Sonnerat, and has since been frequently repeated. As the former is a good specimen of the style in which Hindu legends were narrated by European travellers in the last century, it may be here inserted. "The fifth incarnation was in a Bramin dwarf, under the name of Vamen: it was wrought to restrain the pride of the giant Bely. The latter, after having conquered the gods, expelled them from Sorgon: he was generous, true to his word, compassionate, and charitable. Vichenou, under the form of a very little Bramin, presented himself before him while he was sacrificing, and asked him for three paces of land to build a hut. Bely ridiculed the apparent imbecility of the dwarf, in telling him that he ought not to limit his demand to a bequest so trifling;—that his generosity could bestow a much larger donation of land. Vamen answered, that being of so small a stature, what he asked was more than sufficient. The prince immediately granted his request; and,

and, to ratify his donation, poured water into his right hand ; which was no sooner done, than the dwarf grew so prodigiously, that his body filled the universe ! He measured the earth with one pace, and the heavens with another ; and then summoned Bely to give him his word for the third. The prince then recognised Vichenou, adored him, and presented his head to him : but the god, satisfied with his submission, sent him to govern the Pandalon ; and permitted him to return every year to the earth, the day of the full moon, in the month of November."

SONNERAT'S Voyages in the East Indies, Calcutta edition, vol. I. p. 22.

Verse 402. Kailása's venerated guest.] Kailása, as it here appears, a part of the Himálaya range, is in fable a mountain of costly gems or of crystal, the site of Kuvera's capital, and the favourite haunt of Śiva. I shall borrow, from the notes to Southey's 'Curse of Keliáma,' a description of it from Baldæus, curious enough in itself, but still more so for its strange medley of accuracy and incorrectness, and its uncouth transformation and commixture of the Sanskrit names. "The residence of Ixora (Iśwara or ईश्वर) is upon the silver mount Kalaja (Kailása or कैलास), to the south of the famous mountain Mahameru, being a most delicious place, planted with all sorts of trees, that bear fruit all the year round. The roses and other flowers send forth a most odoriferous scent ; and the pond at the foot of the mount is enclosed with pleasant walks of trees, that afford an agreeable shade ; whilst the peacocks and divers other birds entertain the ear with their harmonious noise, as the beautiful women do the eyes. The circumjacent woods are inhabited by a certain people called Munis or Rixis (Rishis or ऋषि), who, avoiding the conversation of others, spend their time in offering daily sacrifices to their god.

"It is observable, that though these Pagans are generally black themselves, they do represent these Rixis to be of a fair complexion, with long white beards, and long garments hanging cross-ways, from about the neck down over the breast. They are in such high esteem among them, that they believe whom they bless are blessed, and whom they curse are cursed.

"Within the mountain lives another generation, called Jexaquinnera (Yaksha or यक्ष, and Kinnara or किन्नर), and Quendra (Indra or इन्द्र), who are free from all trouble, and spend their days in continual contemplation, praises, and prayers to god. Round about the mountain stand seven ladders, by which you ascend to a spacious plain, in the middle whereof is a bell of

 Whose base a Rávan from its centre wrung,

ANNOTATIONS.

of silver and a square table, surrounded with nine precious stones of divers colours: upon this table lies a silver rose, called Tamarapua (?), which contains two women as bright and fair as a pearl: one is called Brigasiri (?), i.e. 'The lady of the mouth;' the other Tarasiri (?), i.e. 'The lady of the tongue:' because they praise God with the mouth and tongue. In the centre of this rose is the triangle of Quivelinga (Siva-linga); which, they say, is the permanent residence of God." BALDEUS. The latter part of this description is quite new to the Pandits, and I suspect is rather Mohammedan than Hindu. Little is said of Kailása in authentic Hindu legend. See Vishnú Purána, p. 172.

Verse 406. Shaken, not sundered, stable though unstrung.] This alludes to a legend of Rávana's having attempted to remove the mountain from its situation; although he did not succeed as well as Satan and his compeers, when,

"From their foundations loosening to and fro,
 They plucked the seated hills."

He considerably unhinged its foundations. The story perhaps originates with the curious vibrating rock at Mahábalipuram; of which it may be said, as is observed by Selden of Main-amber, i.e. Ambrose's stone in Cornwall, not far from Penzance, that "it is so great, that many men's united strength cannot remove it, yet with one finger you may wag it."

Verse 407. Whose lofty peaks to distant realms in sight.] The lofty peaks of the Himálaya range of mountains are very justly stated by the poet to be visible to surrounding regions (प्रतिदिशम्). They are seen, in the south, from situations more remote than those in which any other peaks have been discerned; and the supposition of their exceeding even the Andes in elevation has been confirmed by recent inquiries.

And lo! those peaks, than ivory more clear,
 When yet unstained the parted tusks appear,
 Beam with new lustre, as around their head
 Thy glossy glooms metallic darkness spread ; 412
 As shews a Halabhṛita's sable vest,
 More fair the pallid beauty of his breast.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 412. Thy glossy glooms metallic darkness spread.] The expression in the original (स्निग्धभिन्नाञ्जनाभे) may be rendered, "shining like glossy powdered antimony," a preparation used for darkening the eye-lashes or the edges of the eye-lids, a practice common to the females of the East. It is also explained to mean merely, "black divided antimony;" and the shining greyish-blue of the sulphuret of antimony, the substance alluded to, may often be observed in the hue of heavy clouds.

Verse 413. Halabhṛita is a name of Balarāma ; and implies, as has been before explained, his use of a ploughshare as a weapon. He is represented of a white colour, clothed in a dark-blue vest ; and is thus alluded to in the introduction to the Gīta Govinda of Jayadeva :

वहसि वपुषि विशदे वसनं जलदाभं हलहतिभीतिमिलितयमुनाभम् ॥
 केशव धृतहलधररूप जय जगदीश हरे ॥

Thus translated by Sir William Jones, in his Essay on the Chronology of the Hindus: "Thou bearest on thy bright body a mantle shining like a blue Cloud, or like the water of the Yamuna tripping towards thee through fear of thy furrowing ploughshare, O Cesava ! assuming the form of Balarāma, be victorious O Heri ! Lord of the Universe."

Verse 416. In sport may Gaurī with her Śiva stray.] I have already noticed that these mountains are the scene of Śiva's loves and sports : they may still be considered as his favourite haunts, for some traces of him seem to start up in every direction amongst them. See the late Travels to the Source of the Ganges, and Col. Hardwicke's Tour to Sirinagur.

 Then shall the nymphs of heaven, a giddy train,
 Thy form an instrument of sport detain ; 424
 And with the lightning, round each wrist that gleams,
 Shall set at liberty thy cooling streams.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 424. Thy form an instrument of sport.] Literally, "They shall take thee as being the abode of an artificial water-work"—a jet-d'eau, or shower-bath; or, according to some of the Commentators, a vessel for sprinkling water, either a common syringe or squirt, or the more elegant Asiatic apparatus in use for sprinkling perfumed waters, especially rose-water—a Gooláb-pásh.

Verse 425. And with the lightning, round each wrist that gleams.] The diamond and thunderbolt, according to Hindu notions, are of one substance, and are called by the same appellation (वज्र). As the fall of the thunderbolt is usually followed by rain, and may thus be be considered as its cause ; the propinquity and the mutual friction of the same substance upon the wrists of our young ladies is, in like manner, supposed to occasion the dispersion of the fluid treasures of the Cloud.

Verse 433. Mánasa, Mánasarovara, or commonly Man-sarour, is a celebrated lake situated in the centre of the Himálaya mountains, and was long said to be the source of the Ganges and Brahmaputra rivers : with respect to the first of these, the statement has been found to be erroneous ; and we have no positive proofs of its accuracy with regard to the latter. When the passage in the text was translated, the chief information regarding the latter was derived from the vague reports of Hindu Pilgrims. Since then, Mánasarovara was visited by that enterprising traveller, Moorcroft. He has not yet had a successor.

We here take leave of the geographical part of the poem, which is highly creditable to Kálidása's accuracy ; and now come to the region of unmixed fable, the residence of Kuvera and his attendant demigods.

Dress all their care, and all their labour play ;
One while, the fluttering Lotus fans the fair,
Or Kunda top-knots crown the jetty hair. 452

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 449. I have availed myself of the aid of the Commentators to make out this passage rather more fully than it occurs in the original, and consequently more intelligibly to the English reader. The poet describes the toilet of the Yakshinis, or female Yakshas, through the six seasons of the year, by mentioning as the selected flowers, those peculiar to each period. Thus the Lotus blooms in Sarat or the sultry season, two months of our autumn ; the Kunda (Jasminum pubescens) in Śísira or the dewy season ; the Lodh, a species of tree (Symplocos racemosa, Rox.), is in blossom in Hemanta or winter ; the Kuruvaka (Gomphræna globosa) in Vasanta or spring ; the Śírisha (Mimosa Śírisha) in the hot months, or Gríshma ; and the Nípa or Kadamba (Nauclea Kadamba) at the setting in of the rains. It is to the Commentators also that I am indebted for the sole occupation of the goddesses being pleasure and dress. The fact is,

—To sing, to dance,

To dress, and troll the tongue, and roll the eye, constitutes a very well-educated female, according to the customs of Hindustan. We cannot help, however, being pleased with the simplicity and propriety of taste which gives to the graceful ornaments of nature so prominent a part in the decoration of feminine beauty.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 470. Speak of fond maids, and wanderers from home.] I have already mentioned that the Hindus always send the lady to seek her lover, and they usually add a very reasonable degree of ardour and impatience. Our poet, in another place, compares the female so engaged to a rapid current. Thus, in the Rītu Sanhāra :

निपातयन्तः पयितस्तदुभान्
 प्रवृद्धवेगैस्सलिलैर्निर्मलैः ।
 स्त्रियः प्रकामा इव जातविभ्रमाः

Fast flow the turbid torrents, as they sweep
 The shelving valleys to rejoin the deep :
 Impetuous as the maid whom passion warms,
 And drives impatient to her lover's arms,
 Along they bound with unresisted force,
 And banks and trees demolish in their course.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 486. Some painted floor.] It is customary amongst the Hindus, upon festival occasions, to smooth and paint the ground on which worship is to be performed, or the assembly to be held. As this spot is generally in an open area within the walls of the house, a shower of rain is of course very hostile to such decoration.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 495. The Lord of Love, remembering former woe.] This alludes to the fate which befel the Hindu Cupid upon his assailing Śiva, whom, at the desire of the gods, he inflamed with the love of Párvatí. Śiva, in his wrath, reduced the little deity to ashes, by a flame from the eye in his forehead ; and, although he was subsequently restored to animation, he is here supposed to remain in dread of his former enemy. The whole story is spiritedly told in Sir William Jones's Hymns to Camdeo and to Durgá.

Verse 499. And wanton glances emulate the dart.] The eye-darting arrows is an idea familiar to English poetry ; as in these instances :

Her eye darted contagious fire. MILTON.

Her eyes carried darts of fire,

Feathered all with swift desire. GREENE'S " Never too late."

I mote perceive how in her glancing sight

Legions of loves with little wings did fly,

Darting their deadly arrows fiery bright. SPENSER. Sonnet 16.

And those love-darting eyes shall roll no more. POPE'S Elegy.

Verse 504. The tall Mandára.] The Coral-tree, Erythrina Indica.

Verse 506. And nurtures like a child.] Tender attachment to natural objects is one of the most pleasing features in the poetical compositions of the Hindus. It is very frequently expressed, and perhaps in few places with more beauty than in the drama of Sakuntalá, where, upon departing from the bower of her foster-father, she bids adieu to the plants she had carefully tended, and the orphan fawn she had reared. The whole of this scene must be read with pleasure; and may be classed with the departure of Goldsmith's village family from Auburn, and the farewell of Eve to the bowers of Paradise.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 517. The MádHAVI entwines.] This Creeper (Gærtnera racemosa, or Banisteria Bengalensis) is often alluded to by the Poets, for its superior elegance, and the beauty of its red blossoms.

Verse 518. KURUVAKA is the crimson Amaranth. The Sanskrit name is also applied to a blue species of Barleria.

Verse 519. Profuse, AśOKA sheds its radiant flower.] Jonesia Aśoka ; speaking of which, Sir William Jones says, "The vegetable world scarcely exhibits a richer sight than an Aśoka-tree in full bloom.

Verse 520. And budding KeśARA.] A tree yielding a strong-smelling flower (Mimusops elengi).

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 521. These are my rivals, &c.] These allusions refer to some particular notions of the Hindus respecting the Keśara and Aśoka, which plants are said to blossom upon being touched respectively by the face or foot of a female : the story is, probably, originally poetical.

Verse 528. The blue-necked Peacock to the summit flies.] The wild Peacock, although it lays its nest upon the ground, is said, by Captain Williamson, to roost constantly on the loftiest trees.

Verse 530. My fair awakens from her tinkling zone.] A girdle of small bells (सुद्वयष्टिका) is a favourite Hindu ornament ; also silver circles at the ankles and wrists, which emit a ringing noise as the wearer moves.

ANNOTATIONS.

Ver. 534. Kuvera's treasures.] Thick with sparkling oriental gems.

Paradise Lost, B. iii. 507.

For such Kuvera's nine treasures are sometimes supposed to be. Rámásrama, commenting upon Amara, thus enumerates them, from the Śabdárñava :

पद्मो -स्त्रियां महापद्मः शङ्खो मकरकच्छपौ ।

मुकुन्दनन्दनीलाश्च खर्वश्च निधयो नव ॥

“The Padma, Mahápadma, Śankha, Makara, Kachhapa, Mukunda, Nanda, Níla, and Kharva, are the nine Nidhis.” The Śabda Ratnávali also has the same reading. In Hemachandra, and the Śabda Málá, कुन्द is substituted for नन्द. Nidhi (निधि) is the generic name; but how it should be rendered into English, I am not prepared to say. Mr. Colebrooke calls the particular Nidhis, ‘auriferous gems.’ See his translation of the Amara Kosha. Some of the words bear the meanings of precious or holy things : thus, Padma is the Lotus; Śankha the shell or conch. Again, some of them imply large numbers; thus, Padma is 10,000 millions, and Mahápadma is 100,000 millions, &c.; but all of them are not received in either the one or the other acceptance. We may translate almost all into things: thus, a lotus, a large lotus, a shell, a certain fish, a tortoise, a crest, a mathematical figure used by the Jainas. Níla refers only to colour; but Kharva, the ninth, means a dwarf. Mr. Kindersley, translating through the medium of the Tamul, has called eight of Kuvera's gems, the coral, pearl, cat's-eye, emerald, diamond, sapphire, ruby, and topaz. The ninth he leaves undetermined. In Dr. Hunter's Dictionary, I find one only of the nine in the Hindoostanee Language, نیلم or نیل من Neelum or Neelmun, derived from नीलमणि ‘a blue gem,’ and interpreted the Sapphire. पद्मरग, Padma-colour, means a Ruby; and possibly the Padma may be the same: perhaps कच्छप, the tortoise, means tortoise-shell; and Makara may be an error for Maraka or Marakata, an Emerald, or it may imply the same stone from the green colour of a fish: these, however, are mere conjectures. Agreeably to the system of the Tantrikas, the Nidhis are personified,

Verse 546. Where the bright fire-fly wings his glittering way.] The fire-fly presents a very beautiful appearance, as its soft and twinkling light is contrasted with the deep shade of the bushes, in which it may be seen in great numbers during the wet season. The phenomenon is common to the East and the West Indies; and it may be amusing to see the effect produced produced by it on different persons and at different periods. Moore, meeting with it in America, writes some elegant stanzas on the subject ; and adds to the lightness of his verse, the solidity of prose in the authority of this note :—"The lively and varying illumination with which these fire-flies light up the woods at night gives quite an idea of enchantment. Puis ces mouches se developpant de l'obscurité de ces arbres, et s'approchant de nous, nous les voyions sur les orangers voisins, qu'ils mettoient tout en feu, nous rendant la vue de leurs beaux fruits, que la nuit avoit ravie, &c.—L'Histoire Des Antilles." See Moore's Odes and Epistles. We have now to hear the description of a Traveller of 1672, the learned and very devout Johannes Fryer, M.D.

"The next day, at twelve o'clock at noon, we struck into our old road at Moorbar, from whence, before, we were misguided : we packed hence by five in the afternoon, and left our burnt wood on the right-hand ; but entered another, which made us better sport, deluding us with false flashes, that you would have thought the trees on a flame, and presently, as if untouched by fire, they retained their wonted verdure. The Coolies beheld the sight with horror and amazement, and were consulting to set me down and shift for themselves ; whereof being informed, I cut two or three with my sword, and, by breathing a vein, let Shitan (the Devil) out, who was crept into their fancies ; and led them, as they do a startling jade, to smell to what their wall-eyes represented amiss ; where we found an host of flies, the subject both of our fear and wonder, which the sultry heat and moisture had generated into being, the certain prodromus of the ensuing rain, which followed us from the hills. This gave my thoughts the contemplation of that miraculous bush crowned with innocent flames that gave to Moses so pleasant and awful a prospect ; the fire, that consumes every thing, seeming rather to dress than offend it."

Verse 548. The first best work of the Creator's hands.] Literally, the first creation of Brahmá : and 'first' may refer to time, or to degree : it most probably here means 'best.' So Milton, speaking of Eve :

"Oh, Fairest of creation ! last and best

Of all God's works."——

Paradise Lost, B. ix. 896.

We now enter upon perhaps the most pleasing part of this elegant little poem, the description of the Yaksha's wife. I may perhaps come under the denomination of those who, according to the illiberal and arrogant criticism of such a writer as a Mr. Pinkerton, prove, "That the climate of India, while it inflames the imagination, impairs the judgment;" when, standing in very little awe of such a poetical censor, I advance an opinion, that we have few specimens, either in classical or modern poetry, of more genuine tenderness or delicate feeling.

Verse 551. Whose lips like Bimbas show.] The Bimba (Bryonia grandis) bears a red fruit, to which the lip is very commonly compared.

Verse 553. The Chakraváki is the ruddy goose (Anas Casarca), more commonly known in India by the appellation, Brahmany Duck or Goose. These birds are always observed to fly in pairs during the day, but are supposed to remain separate during the night. In the Hindoostanee Philology of Messrs. Gilchrist and Roebuck, an amusing account of the popular belief on this subject is thus given: "This bird, in the poetry of the Hindus, is their turtle-dove, for constancy and connubial affection; with the singular circumstance of the pair being doomed for ever to nocturnal separation, for having offended one of the Hindu divinities (Munis or Saints), whence,

" Chukwa chukuee do june in mut maro ko,e

ANNOTATIONS.

“ If we believe popular tradition and assertions, the cause is so far confirmed by the effect “ observable in the conduct of these birds to the present day, who are said to occupy the “ opposite banks of a water or stream regularly every evening, and exclaim the live-long night “ to each other, thus :

“ Chuku,ee muen a,oon? Nuheen nuheen chukwa.—

“ Chukwa muen a,oon? Nuheen nuheen chuku,ee,

“ Say, shall I come, my dear, to thee?

“ Ah no, indeed, that cannot be.—

“ But may I wing my love to you?

“ Nay chuck, alas! this will not do.”

Verse 556. Half of my soul, and partner of my life.] So MILTON :

Part of my soul, I seek thee; and thee claim,

My other half.—

जीवितं मे द्वितीयम्, “ My second existence,” are the words of the original; and the other expression, “ my half,” is not more uncommon in Sanskrit than in Western poetry. Thus these tender, and, as Mrs. Malaprop thinks, profane expressions of endearment seem to have obtained a very extensive circulation. ‘ My life,’ ‘ my soul,’ are common to most of the European languages; and the most frequent epithet by which a mistress<sup>o</sup> is addressed in Persian or Hindoostanee, جان, is of a similar import. Amongst the Romans, ‘ vita’ and ‘ anima’ were used in the same manner, or even in the temperate warmth of friendship; as Horace calls Virgil :

Animæ dimidium meæ!

Half of my soul!

And

 And those dear lips are dried by parching sighs. 560
 Sad on her hand her pallid cheek declines,
 And half unseen through veiling tresses shines;

 A few faint rays break straggling through the Clouds. 564
 Now at thy sight I mark fresh sorrows flow,
 And sacred sacrifice augments her woe.

And Propertius, addressing his Mistress, calls her his Life:

I'll burst, my Life, the brazen chains.

We may suppose the Romans derived these pretty words from the Greeks; and indeed, as we learn from Juvenal, vi. 194, they were very fond of employing, though not in the most becoming manner, the original terms Zωη και ψυχη, the English translation of which has been given at some length by Mrs. Tighe, in her poem of Psyche; and, with some addition, by Lord Byron, in his Anglo-Greek song, the burthen of which is the old sentiment in a modern antique shape, or 'My Life, I love you,' in the Zωη μου, σ̄ας αγαπω, of the Greek of the Morea.

Verse 566. And sacred sacrifice augments her woe.] Thus Laodameia to Protesilaus, in Ovid:

We offer incense up, and add our tears.

 Now from her favourite bird she seeks relief,
 And tells the tuneful Sáríká her grief ;
 Mourns o'er the feather'd prisoner's kindred fate,
 And fondly questions of its absent mate. 572

ANNOTATIONS.

The Commentators, however, are not agreed how to interpret this passage in the original text, बलिष्याकुला nor the expression निपतति पुरे, "She falls before thee": they seem, however, to conceive it means, that the approach of the Cloud reminding her of its being the period at which absent husbands usually return home, she recollects that the return of her own lord is proscribed; and therefore either falls in a swoon, or with excess of affliction. The sacrifice is to be performed to render the gods propitious, or it is a sacrifice called काकबलि, usually performed by women at the beginning of the rainy season. Some interpret पुरे "In the city," not "Before, in front."

Verse 570. The Sáríká (Grakula religiosa) is a small bird, better known by the name of Mainá. It is represented as a female, while the parrot is described as a male bird: and as these two have, in all Hindu tales, the faculty of human speech, they are constantly introduced, the one inveighing against the faults of the male sex, and the other exposing the defects of the female. They are thus represented in the fourth story of that entertaining collection, the Bueta! Pucheesee:

मैना बोली कि पुरुष अर्धर्मी पापी दगाबाज स्त्रीहत्या करने वाले होते है। यह सुनकर तोते ने कहा कि नारी भी दगाबाज झूठी बेचकुम लालची हत्यारी होती है ॥

Ladies have always been distinguished for maintaining pet animals; and the fancy seems to have been equally prevalent in the East and West, and in ancient or modern times. The Swallow of Lesbia, 'Passer deliciæ meæ puellæ,' may rival the Sáríká of the wife of the Yaksha, and Bullfinch of Mrs. Throckmorton. See Cowper's Poems.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 573. In vain the lute for harmony is strung.] The lute is here put for the Víná or Been, a stringed instrument of sacred origin, and high celebrity amongst the Hindus. In Bengal, however, players on this instrument are very rarely met with ; and amongst the natives of this province, the English fiddle is its substitute. In the Játras, or dramatic performances still current amongst them, I have seen the entrance of Nárada, the traditionary inventor of the Víná, bearing, in its stead, a violin. The Víná is much the most harmonious and scientific of all the Hindu instruments of music. A description of it may be found in the First Volume of the Asiatic Researches.

Verse 574. "Robe-neglected" is here put for मलिनवसने, 'dirty clothes.' So Laodameia says :

Et quâ possum squalore tuos imitare labores, &c.

And with my squalid vesture ape thy toils.

Verse 576. Our race's old commemorative strain.] "The verse made in honour of my kindred" : a circumstance that points out some affinity to the songs of the ancient minstrels and family bards.

ANNOTATIONS.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 631. O'er her left limbs shall glad pulsations play.] Palpitations in the left limbs, and a throbbing in the left eye, are here described as auspicious omens, when occurring in the female: in the male, the right side is the auspicious side, corresponding with the ideas of the Greeks, thus described by Potter:—

“The third sort of internal omens were the Παλμοὶ or Παλμικὰ οἰωνίσματα, so called ἀπὸ τοῦ πάλλειν, ‘from palpitating.’ Such were the palpitations of the heart, the eye, or any of the muscles, called, in Latin, ‘saltationes,’ and βόμβος, or ‘a ringing in the ears,’ which in the right ear was a lucky omen: so also was the palpitation of the right eye, as Theocritus telleth us:

‘Ἀλλέται ὄφθαλμός μοι ὁ δεξιός.

My right eye twinkles.”

Verse 668. Scarce less than mutual meeting to the heart.] They have a proverb similar to this in the Hindustanee language, "A letter is half a meeting." The expression is common in the poetry of the Rekhta, and occurs thus in a Ghazal by Jirat :

کہتی ہیں کہ مکتوب یہی نصف ملاقات

It also exists in the Arabic language ; and is thus given in one of the Exercises of Captain Lockett's Translation of the Mi'at Ámil, and the Sharah Mi'at Ámil, or an Arabic Grammar and Commentary :

المُرَاسَلَاتُ كَمَا قِيلَ نِصْفُ الْمَلَقَاتِ

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 695. Mild as thy cheeks, the moon’s new beams appear.] Comparing a beautiful face to the moon has been supposed peculiar to Oriental Poets. Instances, however, may be found in English verse: perhaps that passage in Pope, where, speaking of an amiable female and the moon, he says, “Serene in virgin modesty she shines,” may not be exactly in point, although the general idea is similar. Spenser, however, is sufficiently precise:

Her spacious forehead, like the clearest moon,
Whose full-grown orb begins now to be spent,
Largely displayed in native silver shone,
Giving wide room to beauty’s regiment.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 698. But only view combined these charms in thee.] This turn of the compliment, closely faithful to the original, conveys a high idea of the gallantry of a Hindu Bard; and as this gallantry cannot be the ten times repeated retail of romantic folly or chivalrous phrensy, it may be considered as the natural expression of unsophisticated tenderness. We have in these lines a complete description of beauty, agreeably to Hindu fancy; and I do not think the series of comparisons will much suffer by being contrasted with any similar series in classical or modern writers.

Verse 701. When, with the colours that the rock supplies.] “Having painted you with mineral colours” (धातुरागैः), that is, according to the Commentators, with ‘red chalk,’ &c. Our very limited acquaintance with the high land which is the scene of the Yaksha’s exile prevents our specifying the mineral substances which he may be supposed to have employed. The expression in the text, however, is one of many circumstances that render it probable that the mountains which run across the northernmost part of the Peninsula are rich in the objects of mineralogical inquiry. We know that copper mines have been discovered in the eastern extremity of them, the ore of which is very productive. The Sálagrám stones, or Ammonites, are found in the Narmadá; and the several kinds of Makshicas, a class of ores not yet yet investigated, are usually called नदीज and तपोज, or ‘River-born,’ and ‘Tapti-born,’ in reference to their being found in the course of the Tapti river.

Verse 707. Why should the god who wields the five-fold dart.] Kámadeva, the Hindu Cupid, is represented as the Eros of the Greeks, armed with a bow and arrows. These weapons are of peculiar construction, and most poetically formed. The bow is of sugar-cane; the bow-string consists of a line of bees; and the arrows are tipped each with a separate flower. The weapons and application of the allegory will be best explained by a verse in Sir William Jones’s Hymn to this deity :

He bends the luscious cane, and twists the string,
 With bees how sweet, but, ah! how keen their sting!
 He with five flowrets tips the ruthless darts,
 Which through five senses pierce enraptured hearts.
 Strong Chumpa, rich in odorous gold ;
 Warm Arka, nursed in heavenly mould ;
 Dry Nagesar, in silver smiling ;
 Hot Kriticum, our sense beguiling ;
 And last, to kindle fierce the scorching flame,
 Love shaft, which gods bright Bela name.

In the Romaunt of the Rose there is something of a similar allegory: Cupid is armed with “ten brode arrows;” of which, “five were shaven well and dight,” and of a nature to produce virtuous attachment; while the other five, “also black as fiend in hell,” were ‘Pride,’ ‘Villaine,’ &c., and of pernicious properties.

Verse 733. Let then my firmness save thee from despair.] We are scarcely prepared for this sudden fortitude of the Yaksha ; but it is not by any means unnatural. The task of consoling partners in affliction necessarily diverts the mind from its own distress.

ANNOTATIONS.

Reference to the principle is very frequent in the writings of the Hindus. The Átmana Bodha, or ‘Knowledge of Spirit,’ a small treatise which contains the ethical part of the Vedanta philosophy, and which has been translated and published by Dr. Taylor, concludes with this stanza :—

दिग्देशकालाद्यनपेक्ष्य सर्व्वगं

A fine passage inculcating the same feeling occurs in Menu ; ch. viii. 84, where the legislator exhorts a witness to speak the truth :—

आत्मैव ह्यात्मनः साक्षी गतिरात्मा तथात्मनः ।
मा -यमस्याः स्वमात्मानं नृणां साक्षिणमुत्तमम् ॥

“ The soul itself is its own witness ; the soul itself is its own refuge : offend not thy conscious soul, the supreme internal witness of men.” Sir WILLIAM JONES’S Translation.

Verse 737.] Plutarch, in his ‘Consolation to Apollonius,’ has a similar idea, in similar words :

Τροχού [γὰρ] περιστείχοντος, ἄλλοθ’ ἢ τέρα
‘Ἄψις ὑπερθε γίγνεται’, ἄλλοθ’ ἢ τέρα.

The wheel of Life is ever on the round,
While one side’s up, the other’s on the ground.

ANNOTATIONS.

Verse 740. The serpent couch is the great snake Ananta, upon which Vishnú, or, as he is here called, the Holder of the bow Śárngá (the horn-bow), reclines, during four months, from the 11th of Aśhárha to the 11th of Kartik ; or, as it has occurred in 1813 (the year in which the first edition was printed), from the 23d of June to the 26th of October. The sleep of Vishnú, during the four months of the periodical rains in Hindustan, seems to bear an emblematical relation to that season. It has been compared to the Egyptian Hieroglyphical account of the sleep of Horus, typical of the annual overflow of the Nile, by the late Mr. Paterson, in his ingenious Essay on the Origin of the Hindu Religion. Asiatic Researches, vol. viii.

THE metre in which the Megha Dúta is written is called Mandákrántá; referring probably to the slow and stately movement of the measure. It is a variety of the order termed Atyashítí; which, as a class, denotes a stanza of four equal lines, each containing seventeen syllables, variously divided and disposed. In the Mandákrántá species, each line consists of a Molossus, a Dactyl, a Tribrah, two Antibacchics, and two long syllables, or a spondee; as,

कश्चित् कान्ताविरहगुरुणा स्वाधिकारप्रमत्तः
Kāschit kántá-viraha-guruṇá swádhikára-pramattah, and a cæsura or pause occurs after the fourth, tenth, and seventeenth syllables—

शापेनास्तं गमितमहिमा वर्षभोग्येन भर्तुः
Śápenástang gamita-mahimá varsha-bhogyena bharttuh.

The following verse from the Śruta bodha defines and exemplifies the Mandákrántá stanza :—

मन्दाक्रान्ता तदनु नियतं वश्यतामेति बाला
Mandákrántá, tad anu niyatam, vaśyatám eti bálá.
